MISHNAH. THE CHARACTERISTICS\(^10\) OF CATTLE AND OF WILD ANIMALS ARE STATED IN THE TORAH. THE CHARACTERISTICS OF BIRDS ARE NOT STATED, BUT THE SAGES HAVE SAID, EVERY BIRD THAT SEIZES ITS PREY\(^11\) IS UNCLEAN. EVERY BIRD THAT HAS AN EXTRA TOE,\(^12\) A CROP, AND A GIZZARD THAT CAN BE PEELED,\(^13\) IS CLEAN. R. ELIEZER, SON OF R. ZADOK SAYS, EVERY BIRD THAT PARTS ITS TOES\(^14\) IS UNCLEAN. OF LOCUSTS: ALL THAT HAVE FOUR LEGS, FOUR WINGS, LEAPING LEGS, AND WINGS COVERING THE GREATER PART OF THE BODY, [ARE CLEAN]. R. JOSE SAYS, IT MUST ALSO BEAR THE NAME LOCUST’. OF FISHES: ALL THAT HAVE FINS AND SCALES ARE CLEAN. R. JUDAH SAYS, THERE MUST BE [AT LEAST] TWO SCALES AND ONE FIN. THE SCALES ARE THOSE [THIN DISCS] WHICH ARE ATTACHED TO THE FISH, THE FINS ARE THOSE [WINGS] BY WHICH IT SWIMS. GEMARA, Our Rabbis taught: The following are the characteristics of cattle: Every beast that parteth its hoof etc.\(^15\) If an animal chews the cud one may be certain that it has no upper teeth and it is therefore clean. Is this a general rule? Behold the camel chews the cud and has no upper teeth and yet is unclean! — The camel has canines. But the young camel has not even canines!\(^16\) Furthermore, the rock-badger and the hare chew the cud, nevertheless they have upper teeth and are unclean! Now are teeth mentioned at all in the Torah? — Rather this is the meaning of the passage: If an animal has no upper teeth\(^17\) one may be certain that it chews the cud and parts the hoof, and it is therefore clean. But one can examine its hoofs? — We must suppose that its hoofs were cut off. And this accords with R. Hisda's statement, for R. Hisda said: If a man was walking in the desert and found an animal with its hoofs cut off, he should examine its mouth; if it has no upper teeth he may be certain that it is clean, otherwise he may be certain that it is unclean; provided, however, he recognizes the camel. But the camel has canines! — Read, provided he recognizes the young camel. You admit then that there is the young camel [which is the exception to the rule]. But there might well be other species similar to the young camel? — That should not enter your mind. For a Tanna of the school of R. Ishmael taught: It is written: The camel because it cheweth the cud. The Ruler of the universe knows that there is no other beast that chews the cud and is unclean except the camel; therefore the verse particularly stated ‘it’. R. Hisda further said: If a man was walking in the desert and found an animal with its mouth mutilated, he should examine its hoofs; if they are parted he may be certain that it is clean, but if not he may be certain that it is unclean; provided, however, he recognizes the swine. You admit then that there is the swine [which is the exception to the rule]. But there might well be other species similar to the swine? — That should not enter your mind. For a Tanna of the school of R. Ishmael taught: It is written: And the swine because it parteth the hoof. The Ruler of the universe knows that there is no other beast that parts the hoof and is unclean except the swine; therefore the verse particularly stated ‘it’. R. Hisda further said: If a man was walking in the desert and found an animal with its hoofs cut off and its mouth mutilated, he should examine its flesh; if it runs crosswise he may be certain that it is clean, but if not he may be certain that it is unclean; provided however, he recognizes the ‘arod. You admit then that there is the ‘arod [which is the exception to the rule]. But there might well be other species similar to the ‘arod? — There is a tradition that there are not. Where should he examine the flesh? — Abaye (others say: R. Hisda) said: Under the rump.

THE CHARACTERISTICS OF WILD ANIMALS. Our Rabbis taught: The following are the characteristics of wild animals . . . But surely the wild animal is included under cattle with regard to the characteristics [of cleanness]! — R. Zera said,

(1) A tikla is a weight equal to half a shekel.
(2) In order to cool himself of the fever.
(3) Eccl. VII, 12.
(4) Lit., ‘at the summer solstice’. V. supra 57b, p. 316, n. 2.
(5) It probably means he overtaxes his stomach by such gross excesses in eating.
(6) רוח, the Exilarch.
(7) Or, ‘raw’.
(8) Prov. XII, 21.
(9) Dan. IV, 6.
(10) I.e., the features which distinguish an animal as clean. Throughout this passage until the end of this chapter the terms clean and unclean mean permitted to be eaten and forbidden respectively.
(11) Heb. דרפה, to tread or attack with the claws. Here it has a special and technical meaning and various interpretations have been suggested: (i) a bird which seizes prey in flight without alighting upon the ground (R. Gershom); (ii) a bird which holds down the prey with its claws whilst it pecks away with its beak to eat it (Rashi and Maim.); (iii) a bird which eats its prey whilst it still lives and does not wait until it dies (Tosaf. s.v. דרפה p. 61a).
(12) I.e., a toe behind, the hallux. According to R. Nissim it means that the middle toe in front is longer than the others.
(13) The inner bag or lining of the gizzard can with ease be separated from the outside muscular portion.
(14) I.e., whenever it perches on a bar or rope it divides its toes evenly, two toes on each side.
(16) It should therefore be clean, seeing that it chews the cud and has no upper teeth, not even canines!
(17) Sc. the incisors of the upper jaw. The absence of the upper incisors and canines is a characteristic of all ruminants. The camel forms the exception to this order for it has canines in both jaws.
(18) Lev. XI, 4.
(19) Lit., ‘on the way’.
(20) Lev. XI, 7.
I.e., the muscles at the rump under the tail run in a crisscross fashion, one series of muscles running downward and another running transversely.

(22) נָאֹרָמָה, v. Job XXXIX, 5, where it is translated as the wild ass. It is certainly a forbidden animal.

(23) The same characteristics which distinguish the clean cattle also distinguish the clean wild animals. Indeed, Lev. XI, 2 expressly mentions the wild animal in the same verse with cattle.

Talmud - Mas. Chullin 59b

[It must be distinguished from cattle] in order that its fat be permitted to be eaten. And it should read thus: The following are the characteristics of wild animals whose fat is permitted: All that have horns and [sharp pointed] hoofs. R. Dosa says — Those that have horns need not be examined as to their hoofs, but those that have [sharp pointed] hoofs must still be examined as to their horns. And the Keresh, though it has but one horn, is permitted. But is this a general rule? Behold the goat has horns and [sharp pointed] hoofs, nevertheless its fat is forbidden! — We mean horns that are rounded. But are not the horns of an ox rounded, yet its fat is forbidden? — We mean horns that are notched. But are not the horns of the goat notched, nevertheless its fat is forbidden? — We mean horns that are forked. But the horns of the deer are not forked, nevertheless its fat is permitted! — We mean horns that are pointed. Therefore, if its horns are forked, there is no question at all about it. But if they are not forked, we then require them to be rounded and pointed and also notched, and the notches must run one into the other. This indeed is the doubt in connection with the Karkuz goat.

Once there was taken out of a Karkuz goat belonging to the Resh Galutha a basketful of fat. R. Ahai forbade it, but R. Samuel the son of R. Abbahu ate of it, and applied to himself the verse: A man's belly shall be filled with the fruit of his mouth. They sent word from there saying: The law accords with R. Samuel the son of R. Abbahu, nevertheless give heed to the opinion of R. Ahai for he enlightens the eyes of the exile.

‘And the Keresh, though it has but one horn, is permitted’. Rab Judah said: The Keresh is the deer of Be-Ila'i, the Tigris is the lion of Be-Ila'i. R. Kahana said: There is a distance of nine cubits from one ear to the other ear of the lion of Be-Ila'i. R. Joseph said: The hide of the deer of Be-Ila'i is sixteen cubits long.

The Emperor once said to R. Joshua b. Hananiah, ‘Your God is likened to a lion, for it is written: The lion hath roared, who will not fear? The Lord God hath spoken, who can but prophesy? But what is the greatness of this? A horseman can kill the lion!’ He replied: ‘He has not been likened to the ordinary lion, but to the lion of Be-Ila'i!’ ‘I desire’, said the Emperor, ‘that you show it to me’. He replied: ‘You cannot behold it’. ‘Indeed’, said the Emperor, ‘I will see it’. He [R. Joshua b. Hananiah] prayed and the lion set out from its place. When it was four hundred parasangs distant it roared once, and all pregnant women miscarried and the walls of Rome fell. When it was three hundred parasangs distant it roared again and all the molars and incisors of man fell out; even the Emperor himself fell from his throne to the ground. ‘I beseech you’, he implored, ‘pray that it return to its place’. He prayed and it returned to its place.

Another time the Emperor said to R. Joshua b. Hananiah, ‘I wish to see your God’. He replied: ‘You cannot see him’. ‘Indeed’, said the Emperor,

---

1. The fat of cattle, such as was offered upon the altar in Temple times, is forbidden to be eaten, v. supra 49b, whereas the fat of wild animals is permitted; hence it is essential to distinguish between the two species.
2. a kind of antelope.
3. Horns consisting mainly of tubes which are very close together and near the root are encircled by variable rings, as in the case of the ox. (Rashi and Aruch).
(4) Heb. נִקְרְעָה, in other texts מִקְרְעָה, meaning rough, full of notches.
(5) It must be now assumed that ‘notched’ is the only characteristic feature necessary for the purpose and that roundness is no longer essential.
(6) Heb. מַפְרְשָה, forked and branched like antlers (Rashi); or, bent or hooked at the end (Tosaf.).
(7) Heb. צָמִי, usually translated ‘deer’; according to Rashi, however, it cannot be the deer because the deer has certainly forked horns. Possibly the pronghorn antelope is meant.
(8) Heb. עֵרוֹסֵי, or עֵרוֹסַה, meaning ‘rounded and cylindrical’; in other texts עֵרוֹסֵי, ‘pointed’. The latter reading is adopted by Aruch and preferred by Rashi.
(9) Lit., ‘there is neither judgment nor judge’, i.e., it is certainly a wild animal.
(10) According to Lewysohn, Zoologie des Talmuds, p. 126, it is the gazelle. The Aruch adopts the reading עֵרוֹסֵי, which would be the name of a place, v. Neub. Geog. p. 393. The doubt in connection with this goat is that it has all the characteristics that distinguish the horns of wild animals except that the notches do not run into each other (Tosaf.); it has all the characteristics of wild animals save that it bears the name ‘goat’ (Rashi).
(11) prov. XVIII, 20. By virtue of his learning and the traditions he received from his teachers he was able to enjoy to the full the fat of this animal.
(12) Sc. Palestine.
(13) A forest of this name (Rashi). V. Lewysohn, op. cit. p. 70. According to Jastrow it refers to the mountains of interior Asia, v. Dict. p. 520.
(14) Amos III, 8.

Talmud - Mas. Chullin 60a

‘I will see him’. He went and placed the Emperor facing the sun during the summer solstice and said to him, ‘Look up at it’. He replied: ‘I cannot’. Said R. Joshua, ‘If at the sun which is but one of the ministers that attend the Holy One, blessed be He, you cannot look, how then can you presume to look upon the divine presence’!

On another occasion the Emperor said to R. Joshua b. Hananiah, ‘I wish to prepare a banquet for your God’. He replied: ‘You could not undertake it’. ‘Why’? ‘Because his attendants are too numerous’. ‘Indeed, I will do it’. ‘Then go and prepare it on the spacious banks of Rebitha’.1 He [the Emperor] spent the six months of summer in making preparations when a tempest arose and swept everything into the sea. He then spent the six months of winter in making preparations when rain fell and washed everything into the sea. ‘What is [the meaning of] this’? asked the Emperor. ‘They are but the sweepers and sprinklers that march before him’! ‘In that case’, said the Emperor, ‘I cannot do it’.

The Emperor's daughter once said to R. Joshua b. Hananiah, ‘Your God is a carpenter, for it is written: Who layeth the beams of His upper chambers in the waters.2 Ask him to make for me a spool!’ He replied: ‘Very well’. He prayed for her and she was smitten with leprosy. She was then removed to the open square of Rome and was given a spool. (For so it was the custom in Rome, whoever was smitten with leprosy was given a spool and removed to the open square, and was given skeins to wind, so that people may see them and pray for their recovery). One day as R. Joshua was passing he saw her sitting in the open square of Rome and winding the skeins on to the spool. He remarked: ‘My God has given you a beautiful spool’! She said: ‘I pray you, ask your God to take back what He has given me’. He replied: ‘Our God grants a request, but [when granted] never takes it back’.

Rab Judah said: An ox has a large belly, large hoofs, a large head and a long tail; an ass has just the reverse. What is the point of this? — For commercial transactions.3

Rab Judah further said: The bullock which Adam sacrificed had but one horn in its forehead, as it is said: And it shall please the Lord better than a bullock that hath horns [makrin] and hoofs’.4 But does not mkrn imply two horns? — R. Nahman said: Mkrn is written.5

Rab Judah further said: The bullock which Adam sacrificed had fully developed horns before it had hoofs,6 as it is said: ‘And it shall please the Lord better than a bullock that hath horns and hoofs’; the verse first says: ‘that hath horns’ and then ‘hoofs’. This supports R. Joshua b. Levi, who said: All the animals of the creation were created in their full-grown stature, with their consent, and according to the shape of their own choice, for it is written: And the heaven and the earth were finished, and all the host of them7 read not zeba’am8 but zibyonam.9

R. Hanina b. Papa expounded: May the glory of the Lord endure for ever; let the Lord rejoice in His works!10 This verse was said by the Angel of the Universe.11 For when the Holy One, blessed be He, enjoined after its kind12 upon the trees, the plants applied unto themselves an a fortiori argument, saying: ‘If the Holy One, blessed be He, desired a motley growth, why did He enjoin "after its kind" upon the trees? Moreover, is there not here an a fortiori argument? If upon trees which by nature do not grow up in a motley growth the Holy One, blessed be He, enjoined "after its kind", how much more so does it apply to us’! Immediately each plant came forth after its kind. Thereupon the Angel of the Universe declared: ‘May the glory of the Lord endure for ever: let the Lord rejoice in His works!’

Rabina propounded the question: If a man grafted one plant on to another,

(1) The name of a river; v. however, Neub. Geog. p. 277-8, where it is suggested that the correct text is ‘on the shore of the Great Sea’. V. D.S.
(2) Ps. CIV, 3.
(3) I.e., one who is about to purchase an ox or an ass should look for these particular qualities in the ox and the reverse in the ass.
(4) Ps. LXIX, 32. Heb. מַלְאָלִים; so according to traditional reading. The verse alludes to the sacrifice offered by Adam.
(5) The word is written defectively without the ‘yod’, and this suggests the peculiarity of a single horn, as the word may be read מַלְאָלִים.
(6) Which is just the reverse of the natural development in the bullock. Since the full-grown animal was brought forth from the ground (Gen. I 24) in an upright stature (v. infra) its horns obviously appeared first and then its hoofs.
(7) Gen. II, 1.
(8) ‘the host of them’.
(9) The three ideas of the text are suggested by the slight variations and different meanings of the originals word מַלְאָלִים: (i) from the root מָלַך, meaning upstanding, full-grown; (ii) from מָלַך, meaning desire, consent; and (iii) from מָלַך meaning pleasure, choice. V. R.H. 11a.
(10) Ps. CIV, 31.
(12) Gen. I, 11. This phrase is stated in connection with the trees but not with plants.

Talmud - Mas. Chullin 60b

what would be the law according to the view of R. Hanina b. Papa?1 Since ‘after its kind’ is not expressly stated with regard to plants one should not be liable; or, seeing that the Lord approved of their action, it is regarded as if ‘after its kind’ were expressly stated [and one would be liable]. The question remains undecided.

R. Simeon b. Pazzi pointed out a contradiction [between verses]. One verse says: And God made the two great lights,2 and immediately the verse continues: The greater light . . . and the lesser light. The moon said unto the Holy One, blessed be He, ‘Sovereign of the Universe! Is it possible for two kings to wear one crown’? He answered: ‘Go then and make thyself smaller’. ‘Sovereign of the Universe’! cried the moon, ‘Because I have suggested that which is proper must I then make myself smaller’? He replied: ‘Go and thou wilt rule by day and by night’. ‘But what is the value of this’? cried the moon; ‘Of what use is a lamp in broad daylight’? He replied: ‘Go. Israel shall reckon by thee the days and the years’. ‘But it is impossible’, said the moon, ‘to do without the sun for the reckoning of the seasons, as it is written: And let them be for signs, and for seasons, and for days and years’.

‘Go. The righteous shall be named after thee as we find, Jacob the Small, Samuel the Small, David the Small’, On seeing that it would not be consoled the Holy One, blessed be He, said: ‘Bring an atonement for Me for making the moon smaller’. This is what was meant by R. Simeon b. Lakish when he declared: Why is it that the he-goat offered on the new moon is distinguished in that there is written concerning it unto the Lord? Because the Holy One, blessed be He, said: Let this he-goat be an atonement for Me for making the moon smaller.

R. Assi pointed out a contradiction [between verses]. One verse says: And the earth brought forth grass, referring to the third day, whereas another verse when speaking of the sixth day says: No shrub of the field was yet in the earth. This teaches us that the plants commenced to grow but stopped just as they were about to break through the soil, until Adam came and prayed for rain for them; and when rain fell they sprouted forth. This teaches you that the Holy One, blessed be He, longs for the prayers of the righteous. R. Nahman b. Papa had a garden and he sowed in it seeds but they did not grow. He prayed; immediately rain came and they began to grow. That, he exclaimed, is what R. Assi had taught.

R. Hanan b. Raba said: The shesu'ah is a specific creature that has two backs and two spinal columns. Was Moses a hunter or an archer? This refutes those who maintain that the Torah was not divinely revealed. R. Hisda said to R. Tahlifa b. Abina, ‘Go, write down the words for "hunter" and "archer" in your homiletic note-book and explain them so’.

It is written: The five lords of the Philistines: the Gazite and the Ashdodite, the Ashkelonite, the Gittite and the Ekronite; also the Avvim. The verse says five but enumerates six! — R. Jonathan said: Their overlords were five in number. R. Hisda said to R. Tahlifa b. Abina, ‘Write down the word for "overlord" in your homiletic notebook and explain it so’.

This interpretation differs from Rab's view, for Rab had declared that the Avvim originally came from Teman. There is also a Baraitha in support of this, viz., The Avvim originally came from Teman, and were named Avvim because they laid waste their home. Another interpretation: They were named Avvim because they longed for many gods.

A further interpretation: They were named Avvim because whosoever looked at them was seized with trembling. R. Joseph said: Every one of them had sixteen rows of teeth.

R. Simeon b. Lakish said: There are many verses which to all appearances ought to be burnt but are really essential elements in the Torah. It is written: And the Avvim that dwelt in villages as far as Gaza. In what way does this concern us? Inasmuch as Abimelech adjured Abraham saying: Thou wilt not deal falsely with me, nor with my son, nor with my son's son, the Holy One, blessed be He, said: Let the Kaphtorim come and take away the land from the Avvim, who are philistines, and then Israel may come and take it away from the Kaphtorim. Similarly you must explain the verse: For Heshbon was the city of Sihon the King of the Amorites, who had fought against the former King of Moab. In what way does this concern us? Inasmuch as the Holy One, blessed be He, had commanded Israel: Be not at enmity with Moab, He therefore said: Let Sihon come and take away the land from Moab and then Israel may come and take it from Sihon. This, indeed, explains the saying of R. Papa, ‘Ammon and Moab were rendered clean unto Israel through Sihon’.

Hermon the Sidonians call Sirion and the Amorites call it Senir. A Tanna taught: Senir and Sirion are mountains in the land of Israel; this verse, however, teaches us that every one of the nations of the world went and built for itself a large city naming it after a mountain of the land of Israel, thus teaching you that even the mountains of the land of Israel are dear to the nations of the world.

In another instance it is written: And as for the people, he removed them city by city. In what way does this concern us? — In order that his brothers be not called strangers.

THE CHARACTERISTICS OF BIRDS ARE NOT STATED. Are they not? But it has been taught: [It is written,] The eagle,

(1) The expression ‘after its kind’ suggests separateness and so implies a prohibition against grafting one kind on to another. Since, however, this is not expressly stated with reference to plants, but they acted so merely of their own accord, it is doubtful therefore whether there is with regard to plants an implied prohibition against grafting.

(2) Gen. I, 16.
(3) Ibid. 14.
(4) Righteous men shall be named ‘the Small’ after the moon which was reduced to become the small luminary.
(5) Cf. Amos VII, 2: How shall Jacob stand? for he is small.
(6) A renowned Tanna of the first century, called ‘the Small’ on account of his humility.
(7) Cf. I Sam. XVII, 14: And David was the youngest (smallest).
(8) Num. XXVIII, 15: And a he-goat for a sin-offering unto the Lord. These words, ‘unto the Lord’, are not found in connection with sacrifices on other festive seasons.
(9) Gen. I, 12.
(10) Gen. II, 5.
(11) V. Deut. XIV, 7. According to Rabbinic tradition the word הָדֹּֽבֶּכֶֽת, which in the E.V. is translated as ‘cloven’, is the name of a specific creature with the Peculiarities here stated.
(12) For Moses could not of his own knowledge have described the various animals mentioned in the Torah, nor could he have known so well the nature of them all.
(13) קְנֵי́נִי from Gr. , a hunter.
(14) בָּלַ֫מְַמְרֶר from ‘ballistarius’, one who attends to the catapult, an archer. R. Tahlifa was advised to note these words as foreign words.
(15) Josh. XIII, 3.
(16) מְרֵרִי (there are many variations: MS.M. מָרְדֹּֽכֶּנֶֽקֶן; Aruch מָרְדֹּֽכֶּנֶֽקֶן; Musafia מָרְדֹּֽכֶּנֶֽקֶן) meaning chiefs, overlords. The etymology of the word is doubtful, v. Jast. and Aruch.
(17) They were not indigenous to Philistia but came from Teman (a region in the country of Edom) and settled with the Philistines.
(18) There is here a play upon the words יְהֹוָּא, Avvim, and יְהוָּא or, as in some texts, יְנָוֵי, which means they destroyed or laid waste.
(19) יָנֹּא, they desired.
(20) יָרוּנָי, convulsions.
(21) In many MSS. are added the words ‘like the books of Miram’ or of minim’, i.e., heretics. These words were obviously struck out by the censor from the Present editions. As to ‘Miram’, v. Jastrow Dict. s.v. מִרְאָמָה, p. 355.
(22) Deut. II, 23.
(23) Gen. XXI, 23.
(24) The Israelites, being bound by the oath of Abraham not to molest the Philistines, indirectly, however, gained possession of their land by dispossessing the Kaphtorim who had vanquished the Philistines.
(27) I.e., Israel by defeating Sihon indirectly got possession of the land of Ammon and Moab. V. Git. 38a; Sanh. 94b.
(28) Ibid. III, 9.
(30) For now the Egyptians too were rendered homeless, and were themselves strangers in the cities wherein Joseph had settled them.

(31) Lev. XI, 13 and Deut. XIV, 12. Heb. הנץ, usually translated ‘eagle’, but the griffon vulture or great vulture is probably intended. It must be observed that the identification of the various birds dealt with in this chapter is extremely doubtful and the suggestions made are merely tentative; v. Tosaf. infra 63a, s.v. יב. For the most part the identifications of Lewysohn, discussed in his work, Die Zoologie des Talmuds, have been adopted.

Talmud - Mas. Chullin 61a

which implies, as the eagle is peculiar in that it has neither an extra toe nor a crop, its gizzard cannot be peeled, it seizes prey and eats it, and is unclean, so all that have the like characteristics are unclean.¹ [It is also written,] Turtle doves,² which implies, as the turtle dove has an extra toe and a crop, its gizzard can be peeled, it does not seize prey and eat it, and is clean, so all that have the like characteristics are clean!³ — Abaye answered: They were not expressly stated in the Torah but were inferred by the Scribes.

R. Hiyya taught: A bird that has one characteristic [of cleanness] only, is clean,⁴ since it obviously is not of the same species as the eagle; for you may not eat the eagle as it has no characteristics [of cleanness], but whatsoever has one characteristic you may eat. But let us rather infer [the rule]⁵ from turtle doves thus: As turtle doves have the four [characteristics of cleanness], so all birds must have the four [characteristics]! — If so, why does the Divine Law specify all the other Unclean birds?⁶ But let us infer it⁷ from these [unclean birds specified in the Torah] thus: As these have three [characteristics of cleanness] and yet we may not eat them, so we may not eat all birds that have three [characteristics], (and a fortiori if it has but two [characteristics] or only one [characteristic of cleanness])!⁸ — If so, why does the Divine Law specify the raven?⁹ Surely if we may not eat those that have three [characteristics of cleanness] it goes without saying [that we may not eat] those that have only two [characteristics]!

(1) For they certainly belong to the species of the eagle. Any other bird, however, that has one or more than one characteristic of cleanness is clean, provided it is not one of the other species of unclean birds specified in the Torah.
(2) E.g., Lev. I, 14, as fit for sacrifice.
(3) The propositions in this Baraitha are inferred from the interpretation of words in the Torah and are regarded as implicit in the Torah, thus contradicting our Mishnah which declares that the characteristics of birds are not stated in the Torah.
(4) A fortiori if it has more than one characteristic of cleanness; provided, however, it is not one of the other species of unclean birds specified in the Torah.
(5) Sc. R. Hiyya's.
(6) For not one of them has all the four characteristics of cleanness, and it would be obvious that they are unclean.
(7) That one characteristic of cleanness alone is not sufficient.
(8) The bracketed passage is rightly omitted in MS.M.
(9) Heb. בָּרֶנִי. It has only two characteristics of cleanness, and according to the foregoing argument it would most certainly be unclean. For the specific two characteristics v. Tosaf. infra 62a, s.v. מַעַנְיֵי.

Talmud - Mas. Chullin 61b

But let us infer [the rule]¹ from the raven thus: As it has two [characteristics of cleanness] and yet may not be eaten, so all that have two [characteristics] may not be eaten! — If so, why does the Divine Law specify the peres² and the ‘ozniah?³ Surely if we may not eat those that have two [characteristics of cleanness] it goes without saying [that we may not eat] those that have only one [characteristic]! Then let us infer [the rule] from the peres and the ‘ozniah! — If so, why does the Divine Law specify the eagle? For if we may not eat those that have one [characteristic of cleanness] it goes without saying that we may not eat those that have none [of the characteristics of cleanness]! The inference must therefore be: You may not eat the eagle because it has none [of the characteristics of cleanness], but whatsoever has one [characteristic] you may eat.

Now this is the result only because the Divine Law specified the eagle, but had it not done so we should have inferred it from the peres and the ‘ozniah. But they, the peres and the ‘ozniah, are two texts, separately stated, which teach the same thing, and one may not draw any conclusions from two verses which teach the same thing! — There is a tradition that the characteristic [of cleanness] of the one is not that of the other. But consider. There are twenty-four species of unclean birds [mentioned in the Torah]. Now it is inconceivable that the one characteristic of cleanness of each of these two species does not recur among the others, so that it is a case of two verses which teach the same thing! — There is a tradition that there are twenty four species of unclean birds and that there are four characteristics of cleanness. The same three characteristics circulate among all. Twenty [species] have each these three characteristics, the raven has two [of these characteristics], and the peres and the ‘ozniah have each one characteristic, but the characteristic of one is not that of the other. You might then have said: Let us infer the rule from that one; the Divine Law therefore specified the eagle to teach you that you may not eat the eagle as it has none of the characteristics of cleanness, but whatsoever has one characteristic you may eat. Why then does the Divine Law specify turtle doves? — R. ‘Ukba b. Hama answered: Only with regard to sacrifices.

R. Nahman said,

(1) As to the required number of characteristics to stamp the bird clean.
(2) Heb. חֵזֶק, ‘the gier eagle’ or ‘the bearded vulture’. This and the osprey (v. next note) have each one characteristic of cleanness only.
(3) Heb. עַלְגִּילָה, ‘the osprey’ or ‘the sea eagle’.
(4) That one characteristic of cleanness alone is not sufficient.
(5) For if these were intended as specimens only, and that all others with similar characteristics were to be inferred therefrom, the Torah need only have stated one of them. The fact that two verses are stated, or two specimens given, suggests that the rule is limited to the particular specimens given.
(6) So that these two do not teach quite the same thing for they each have a different characteristic of cleanness.
(7) V. infra 63a.
(8) So that we could not have inferred from either of them that a bird with only one characteristic of cleanness was unclean; hence the specification of the eagle in the Torah becomes superfluous.
(9) One of these two, either peres or the ‘ozniah, is unique in that it alone possesses the fourth characteristic of cleanness.
(10) With the result that every bird that has one characteristic of cleanness — whichever characteristic that may be, for we do not know what is this unique fourth characteristic — would be forbidden.
(11) Since it has been concluded that a bird with only one characteristic of cleanness is permitted the specification of turtle doves in the Torah is rendered superfluous, and indeed contradictory, for it suggests the possession of all the four characteristics of cleanness as the criterion.
(12) Namely, that only doves, of all the clean birds, are allowed for sacrifice. The Tanna in the Baraita, supra 62a, stated turtle doves solely to set forth, by contrast with the eagle, the four characteristics of cleanness.
To one who is familiar with these birds and their nomenclature any bird that has one characteristic [of cleanness] is clean; but to one who is not familiar with these birds and their nomenclature any bird that has one characteristic [of cleanness is unclean], but that which has two characteristics [of cleanness] is clean; provided he recognizes the raven. The raven only, and no other! Surely it has been taught: It is written: Raven, that is the actual raven; after its kind, that, says R. Eliezer, includes the zarzir. They said to R. Eliezer: But the men of Kefar Tamratha in Judah used to eat it, because it has a crop! He replied: They shall indeed have to account for it in the future. Another version reads: ‘After its kind’, that, says R. Eliezer, includes the white senunith. They said to R. Eliezer: But the men of Upper Galilee eat it, because its gizzard can be peeled! He replied: They shall indeed have to account for it in the future! Rather say, [provided he recognizes] the raven and all its kind.

Amemar said: The law is that every bird that has one characteristic [of cleanness] is clean, that is, if it does not seize prey. R. Ashi said to Amemar: But what about the [above] statement of R. Nahman? — He replied: I have not heard of it, by which I mean to say: I do not agree with it. For what is there to fear? That it might be either the peres or the ‘ozniah? But neither of these are found in inhabited regions.

Rab Judah said: A bird which scratches is permitted for use in the purification rite of a leper, and this is the white senunith about which R. Eliezer and the Sages argued. Amemar said: As to the white-bellied [senunith] there is no dispute that it is permitted; they differ only about the green-bellied kind, which R. Eliezer forbids and the Rabbis permit, and the law rests with R. Eliezer. Mar Zutra reports this passage as follows: As to the green-bellied senunith there is no dispute that it is forbidden; they differ only about the white-bellied kind, which R. Eliezer forbids and the Rabbis permit, and the law rests with the Rabbis. Now according to the version which reports the dispute [between R. Eliezer and the Rabbis] about the white-bellied kind it is right that it says above ‘the white senunith’. But according to the other version which reports the dispute about the green-bellied kind, why is ‘the white senunith’ mentioned? — In order to exclude the black kind which nests in [eaves of] houses.

Rehabah said in the name of Rabbi Judah: The tasil is disqualified [for sacrifice] as a turtle dove but is not disqualified as a young pigeon. Dazife and the turtle doves of Rehabah are not disqualified as turtle doves but are disqualified as young pigeons. R. Daniel son of R. Kattina raised an objection. [We have learnt:] All birds

---

(1) I.e., the peres and the ‘ozniah. These are the only unclean birds that have only one characteristic of cleanness.
(2) For it might be of the species of the peres or ‘ozniah.
(3) The raven is the only unclean bird that has two characteristics of cleanness.
(4) Lev. XI, 15.
(5) Heb. רַעֲשָׁנָה, the starling.
(6) And this is not one of the two characteristics of cleanness of the raven. V. Tosaf. ad. loc.
(7) Heb. מְנִיָּה וְיָהָבָנָה, the white-bellied swallow, a species of raven; v. next note.
(8) According to R. Eliezer, therefore, the species ‘raven’ includes other birds as the swallow and starling, consequently in the statement of R. Nahman it should be necessary for a man to recognize all those birds that are included within the species ‘raven’.
(9) According to Rashi the meaning is, so long as it does not seize prey and it has in addition one characteristic of cleanness it is clean. According to Tosaf. (s.v. יָשָׁנָנ) the fact that it does not seize prey is the only characteristic of cleanness that it need Possess.
(10) Cf. Lev. XIV. On the day of his cleansing the leper was required to take two living clean birds for Purification. The type of bird that scratches is not precluded, i.e., it is regarded as clean. The epithet ‘scratch’ is applied to a bird perhaps... by reason of its peculiar beak, possibly the fissirostral birds, i.e., that have the beak broad and deeply cleft.
(11) Supra in the statement of R. Eliezer.
(12) This type of swallow is certainly forbidden.
(14) These are various species of doves; their identification is very doubtful. Cf. Lewysohn, Zoologie des Talmuds, pp. 203-205.
(15) V. supra 22a.

Talmud - Mas. Chullin 62b

render invalid the waters of purification\(^4\) except the dove, because it sucks up the water.\(^2\) Now if it were [as you say], it should read ‘Except the dove and the tasil’? — R. Zera answered: The latter sucks up the water and spits it back,\(^3\) whereas the former sucks up without spitting.

Rab Judah said: Zuzinian\(^6\) doves are fit for the altar; and they are identical with the doves of Rehahbah. An objection was raised. [We have learnt:]\(^5\) Hyssop,\(^6\) but not Greek hyssop, nor Kohalith\(^7\) hyssop, nor Roman hyssop, nor wild hyssop, nor any kind of hyssop which bears a special name!\(^8\) — Abaye said: Everything which prior to the giving of the Torah had various names, and we find that the Torah is particular about it,\(^9\) then those kinds that bear a special name are invalid. These doves, however, did not have various names prior to the giving of the Torah,\(^10\) Raba said: These Zuzinian doves are called simply [‘doves’] in their locality.

Rab Judah said: Karze\(^11\) which are found among the rushes are permitted, but those found among cabbages are forbidden. Rabina added: And we scourge [him that eats them] for [eating] winged creeping things.\(^12\)

Rab Judah further said: Zarda\(^13\) is permitted but barbara\(^13\) is forbidden; and in order to remember this think of the expression, ‘Keep aloof [bar] from it’.\(^14\) As to marda\(^15\) there is a doubt. R. Assi said: There are eight birds regarding which there is a doubt, viz., Huba, huga, suga, harnuga, tushlam, marda, kohilna, and bar nappaka.\(^16\) What is the doubt about them? — [It is this]. One of the characteristics of clean birds is that the gizzard can be peeled, and one of the characteristics of unclean birds is that the gizzard cannot be peeled, but in the case of these [eight] the gizzard can only be peeled with a knife.\(^17\) But was there not a case of a duck belonging to Mar Samuel, the gizzard of which could not be peeled, so it was left in the sun, and as soon as it became soft it peeled easily?\(^18\) — In that case as soon as it became soft it peeled easily with the hand, but here even after it has been softened it can only be peeled with a knife.

Abaye said: The moor-cock is one of the eight cases of doubt, for it is the mardu.\(^19\) R. Papa said: The moor-cock is forbidden but the moor-hen is permitted, and in order to remember this think of the rule, ‘An Ammonite [is debarred] but not an Ammonitess’.\(^20\) Meremar stated in an exposition: The moor-hen is forbidden because it was seen to seize prey and eat it, and this is girutha.\(^21\)

Rab said: Shabur androfata\(^22\) is permitted, piruz androfata\(^22\) is forbidden; and to remember this think of ‘the wicked piruz’.\(^23\) R. Huna said: Bunia\(^24\) is permitted, parwa\(^24\) is forbidden, and to remember this think of ‘Parwa the magician’.\(^25\)

R. Papa said: The mardu which stands erect and eats is permitted, that which bends down and eats is forbidden, and to remember this think of the verse: Thou shalt bow down to no other god.\(^26\)

Samuel said: The ‘wine drinker’\(^27\) is forbidden, and to remember this think of the law ‘Those that have drunk wine are unfit for service’.\(^28\)
Samuel further said: The ‘wine mixer’ is forbidden,

(1) If they had drunk therefrom. All birds, excepting doves, when drinking do not suck up the water but raise it in their beaks, and it is inevitable that some water should not run out of the beak and, in this case, drip back again into the bowl of purification water. This dripping would render the purification water invalid, because the water is thereby disturbed and it is considered as if it were put to some work. V. supra 9b.

(2) And no water drips back into the bowl. Par. IX, 3.

(3) Spitting renders the purification water invalid. V. Par. loc. cit.

(5) Neg. XIV, 6; Par. XI, 7; Suk. 13a.

(6) Num. XIX, 6. Hyssop was required to be used in the rites in connection with the Red Cow.

(7) A species of hyssop from the place Kohalith (so Maim. and Jast.). Others, ‘stibium hyssop’ or ‘blue hyssop’.

(8) Likewise it should be held that doves which bear a special name, as here, should not be allowed upon the altar for sacrifice, contra Rab Judah.

(9) I.e., the Torah nowhere refers to it by its special name.

(10) The various types of doves going under different names were not known before the giving of the Torah, hence the Torah contemplated all doves.

(11) A species of locust, so Rashi: but v. Tosaf. s.v. בֵּר, according to whom birds and not locusts are spoken of here.
V. Lewysohn, op. cit., p. 297.

(12) Lev. XI, 23.

(13) This and the following names are all names of birds. For suggested identifications v. Lewysohn, op. cit., p. 187:
הַנַּת, the linnet, מַרְדִּיָּה, the white jay, and מַדְרֵדַה, the moor-cock, respectively.

(14) בְּר, the first syllable of the name מַרְדִּיָּה, means ‘keep aloof’, thus hinting that one must keep away, from мַרְדִּיָּה, for it is forbidden.

(16) Possibly the crested lark, the lark, the wren, the mountain chaffinch, the wood lark, the moor-hen, the black woodpecker, and the partridge respectively. V. Lewysohn. It must be pointed out that these identifications are extremely doubtful. The suggestions can hardly be more than guesses.

(17) They posses, however, the other three characteristics of cleanness.

(18) It is thus seen that even in the case of permitted birds it is sometimes difficult to peel the gizzard.

(19) A variant of marda mentioned supra.

(20) Is precluded from entering the community of Israel; cf. Deut. XXIII, 4. V. Yeb. 69a. The implication here is that the moor-cock is a forbidden species, whilst the moor-hen is not. V. Tosaf. s.v. מַרְדִּיָּה.

(21) V. infra 109b.

(22) The parrot, according to Lewysohn; androfata being the Gk. term , ‘talking like a man’. Shabur might be the domesticated kind מַרְדִּיָּה, broken in), and piruz the wild kind (from מַרְדִּיָּה to break through).

(23) Possibly a reference to the Sassanide king piruz (457-484) under whom the Jews suffered terrible persecutions.

(24) The penguin and the sea mew respectively.

(25) V. Yoma 35a.

(26) Ex. XXXIV, 14. The kind that bends down to eat is forbidden.

(27) מַרְדִּיָּה possibly the redwing thrush.

(28) V. Sanh. 22b and 83a.

(29) V. next note.

Talmud - Mas. Chullin 63a

the ‘daughter of the wine mixer’ is permitted, and to remember this think of the saying: ‘The position of the son is better than that of the father’.

Rab Judah said: The shakitna with the long legs and red body is permitted, and to remember this think of murzama; that with the short legs and red body is forbidden, and to remember this think of the law, ‘The dwarf is unfit’; and that with the long legs and green body is forbidden, and to Rab Judah said: The shalak⁷ is the bird that catches fish out of the sea; the dukifath⁸ is so called because its crown appears double. There is also [a Baraitha] taught to this effect: The dukifath is so called because its crown appears double, and it was this bird that brought the shamir to the Temple.⁹ Whenever R. Johanan used to see the shalak he would exclaim: Thy judgments are like the great deep,¹⁰ and whenever he used to see an ant he would exclaim: Thy righteousness is like the mighty mountains.¹⁰ Amemar said: Lakni¹¹ and batni¹¹ are permitted; as for shaknai¹¹ and batnai,¹¹ wherever it is the custom to eat them they are permitted, and wherever it is not the custom to eat them they are forbidden. But is it a matter of custom?¹² — Indeed it is; nevertheless, there is no difficulty. The former custom obtains in that place where the peres and the ‘ozniah are not found,¹³ whereas the latter custom obtains in that place where the peres and the ‘ozniah are found.

Abaye said: Kua,¹⁴ and kakuai¹⁴ are forbidden, but kaku'atha¹⁴ is permitted; in the West [palestine], however, one would incur stripes [for eating it], and it is called by them tahwatha.

Our Rabbis taught: The tinshemeth,¹⁵ is the bawath among the birds. You say: ‘the bawath among the birds’, but perhaps it is not so but rather ‘the bawath among the reptiles’? — You can reply: Go and derive it by one of the thirteen exegetical principles by which the Torah is interpreted, namely, ‘The meaning of a passage is to be deduced from its context’. Now what does the passage deal with? Birds; then this too is a bird.

It was likewise taught with regard to reptiles: The tinshemeth is the bawath among reptiles.¹⁷ You say: ‘the bawath among reptiles’, but perhaps it is not so but rather ‘the bawath among the birds’? — You can reply: Go and derive it by one of the thirteen exegetical principles by which the Torah is interpreted, namely, ‘The meaning of a passage is to be deduced from its context’. Now what does the passage deal with? Reptiles; then this too is a reptile. Abaye said: The bawath among the birds is the bat, and the bawath among the reptiles is the mole.

Rab Judah said: Ka'ath¹⁸ is the sea crow, raham¹⁹ the sherakrak [vulture]. R. Johanan said: Why is it called raham? Because when the raham comes mercy [rahamim] comes to the world. R. Bibi b. Abaye said, provided it perches upon something and cries ‘sherak-rak’. There is a tradition that if it settles upon the ground and hisses, the Messiah will come at once, for it is said: I will hiss for them and gather them.²² R. Adda b. Shimi said to Mar the son of R. Iddi: Did not [a raham] once settle upon a ploughed field and commence to hiss when a stone fell upon it and broke its head? That one was a liar,²³ he replied.

Our Rabbis taught: Raven²⁴ signifies the raven, every raven includes the raven of the valley, after its kind includes the raven that moves ahead of the doves.

The Master said: Raven signifies the raven. But is it here before us?²⁵ — Render, Raven signifies the black raven, as it is said: His locks are curled and black as a raven.²⁶ ‘The raven of the valley’ is the white spotted raven,²⁷ as it is said: And the appearance thereof is deeper than the skin that is, as the sunlight that appears deeper than the shadow. ‘The raven that moves ahead of the doves’. R. Papa said: Read not ‘that moves ahead of the doves’, but ‘whose head resembles that of a dove’.²⁹

Our Rabbis taught: The nez²⁰ is the hawk, after its kind includes the bar hiria. What is the bar hiria? — Abaye said: It is the falcon.

R. Hisda said: The hasidah²¹ is the white stork. And why is it called hasidah? Because it shows kindness [hasiduth] to its companions. The anafah²² is the heron. And why is it called anafah? Because it quarrels [mean'efeth] with its companions.
R. Hanan, son of R. Hisda, stated in the name of R. Hisda, who reported in the name of R. Hanan, son of Raba, on the authority of Rab, There are twenty-four unclean birds [enumerated in the Torah]. Where? In Leviticus there are only twenty enumerated, and in Deuteronomy there are but twenty-one! And should you say that the da'ah mentioned in Leviticus, but not in Deuteronomy, should be added to the list, even then there would only be twenty-two! — He replied: Thus did your mother's father report in the name of Rab, The words ‘after its kind’, stated four times, represent four more birds. Then there would be twenty-six? — Abaye answered: The da'ah and the ra'ah are one and the same.

(1) and possibly the lapwing and the stock pigeon respectively.
(2) supra 49b.
(3) The flamingo.
(4), a kind of flamingo which was known to be permitted.
(5) Bek. 45b.
(6) supra 56a.
(7) XI, 27. Heb. , the cormorant.
(8) Heb. התוּת, ‘its crown’ and ‘tied together, doubled’. In the versions it is translated as the hoopoe; most probably it is the wood grouse.
(9) Git. 68b. a minute worm which tradition relates could cut through the hardest stone.
(10) XXXVI, 7. God's righteousness extends to the tiny ant so that its food is always ready and constant as the mighty mountains; whereas his judgments reach the rapacious cormorant so that it must search for its food out of the depths of the sea (Rashi).
(11) The pelican, the gannet, the bustard and the black gannet respectively. Lewysohn, op. cit. pp. 184-5.
(12) It is surely a matter of law; they are either permitted or forbidden.
(13) As shaknai and batnai are birds each possessing only one sign of cleanness they are permitted so long as there is no fear of any confusion with the peres or the ‘ozniah; cf. supra 62a.
(14) According to Lewysohn: the large screech owl, the small screech owl, and the owl respectively.
(15) XI, 18. Heb. , listed among the forbidden birds. The tinshemeth is also mentioned as one of the forbidden creeping things in v. 30.
(16) , the night-bird (noctua), the owl, from the root , to pass the night’ Others , ‘ugly, repulsive’. According to Rashi it is the bat. V. infra dictum of Abaye.
(17) probably the mole.
(19) Heb. מַכָּר.
(20) i.e., rain.
(21) , onomatopoeic word in imitation of sound sherakrak.
(22) X, 8.
(23) It should not thus have prematurely indicated the coming of the Messiah, and so it was punished. Aliter: ‘it was an impostor’, i.e., it was not a raham (R. Gershom).
(24) XI, 15.
(25) The fact that the Tanna speaks of the raven without adding any descriptive epithet suggests that he was alluding to a particular kind. Which then did he mean?
(26) Cant. V, 11.
(27) The magpie.
(28) XIII, 25. The descriptive phrase ‘in the valley’ is appropriately applied to the white spotted raven, for whatsoever is bright always appears to be deeper, ‘in the valley’, than that which is dark.
(29) The cuckoo.
(31) Heb. דָּרַד.
(32) XIII, 19. Heb. , from root ‘to be angry, to quarrel’.
(33) XI, 13ff.
Deut. XIV, 12ff.
Heb. הָדָא, הָדָא, הָדָא, and הָדָא are all different appellations of one bird. Generally identified with the vulture, v. Lewysohn op. cit. p. 167.
Lev. XI, 24, 15, 16, and 19.
Heb. הָדָא, Deut. XIV, 13.

Talmud - Mas. Chullin 63b

then consider this: seeing that the purport of Deuteronomy is to add to the laws, why is it that here [in Leviticus] it mentions the da'ah but there [in Deuteronomy] only the ra'ah and not the da'ah? You must therefore hold that the ra'ah and the da'ah are one and the same. But for all that there are still twenty-five? — Abaye answered: Just as the ra'ah and the da'ah are one and the same, so, too, are the dayyah and the ayyah.¹ For should you say that they are two distinct birds then consider this: seeing that the purport of Deuteronomy is to add to the laws, why is it that here [in Leviticus] the words ‘after its kind’ are appended to the ayyah but there [in Deuteronomy] these words are appended to the dayyah? You must therefore hold that the ayyah and the dayyah are one and the same. But since the ayyah and the dayyah are one and the same why are they both stated? — For the reason given in the following Baraitha: Rabbi says: It is sufficient when I read the ayyah, why then is the dayyah mentioned? So as not to give skeptics cause for criticism, for you might call it the ayyah and they the dayyah, or you the dayyah and they the ayyah; therefore it is written in Deuteronomy, The ra'ah, the ayyah and the dayyah after its kind.²

An objection was raised. It was taught: Why was the list repeated [in Deuteronomy]? Cattle because of the shesu'ah,³ and birds because of the ra'ah.³ Now presumably, just as in the case of cattle a new species is added to the list, so too in the case of birds a new species is added!⁴ — No, in the former case a new species is added, but in the latter the addition is merely explanatory.⁵

This view⁶ [of R. Hisda] differs from that of R. Abbahu,⁷ for R. Abbahu taught. The ra'ah is the same as the ayyah: wherefore is it called ra'ah? Because it can see [roah] very keenly, for so it is said: That path no bird of prey knoweth, neither hath the eye of the ayyah seen it.⁸ And a Tanna [has also] taught: It [the ayyah] stands in Babylon and espies carrion in the land of Israel. But since [according to R. Abbahu] the ra'ah and the ayyah are one and the same, it would follow then that the da'ah is not the same as the ra'ah and [this being so] why is it that here [in Leviticus] the da'ah is mentioned but there [in Deuteronomy], the purport of which is to add to the laws, the da'ah is not mentioned? You must therefore hold that the da'ah, the ra'ah and the ayyah are all one and the same. But then since the ra'ah and the ayyah are one and the same, it would follow that the dayyah is not the same as the ayyah, and [this being so] why is it that here [in Leviticus] the words ‘after its kind’ are appended to the ayyah whereas there [in Deuteronomy] these words are not added to the ayyah but to the dayyah? It must therefore be said that the da'ah, the ra'ah, the ayyah and the dayyah are all one and the same.⁹

It was taught: Issi b. Judah says: In the East there are one hundred unclean birds all of the species of ayyah.

Abimi the son of R. Abbahu learnt: There are seven hundred species of [unclean]¹⁰ fishes, eight hundred species of [unclean] locusts, but the species of [unclean] birds are innumerable. But there are only twenty-four species of [unclean] birds! — Rather [say], The species of clean birds are innumerable.

It was taught: Rabbi says. It is well known to Him who spake and the world came into being that the unclean animals are more numerous than the clean, therefore did Scripture enumerate the clean. It is also well known to Him who spake and the world came into being that the clean birds are more numerous than the unclean, therefore did Scripture enumerate the unclean. What is the point of this teaching? — It sets forth the idea, also expressed by R. Huna in the name of Rab (others say: R. Huna in the name of Rab on the authority of R. Meir), viz., A teacher should always teach his pupil succinctly.\textsuperscript{11}

R. Isaac said: For the eating of clean birds we rely upon tradition.\textsuperscript{12} A hunter is believed when he says, ‘My master transmitted to me that this bird is clean’. R. Johanan added, provided he was familiar with birds and their nomenclature. R. Zera enquired: Does ‘master’ mean a master in learning or in hunting? — Come and hear, for R. Johanan added: ‘provided he was familiar with birds and their nomenclature’. Now if it means a master in learning it is well, but if it means a master in learning, I grant you that he would have learnt their nomenclature, but would he actually know them [so as to recognize them]? You must therefore say it means a master in hunting; this is proved.

Our Rabbis taught: One may buy eggs from gentiles in any place and need have no fear lest they are of birds that were nebela or trefah. But perhaps they are of unclean birds? — Samuel's father answered. [We must suppose the case to be that] he says, ‘It is of such and such a bird’, which is clean.\textsuperscript{13} Why is it not sufficient [for the gentile] to say, ‘It is of a clean bird?’ — In that case he might be evasive.\textsuperscript{14} And why not test [the egg] by the characteristics [stated by the Rabbis]? For it has been taught: ‘Characteristics which distinguish the eggs [of clean birds] are the same as those which distinguish [clean] fish’. (But how can you say ‘as those which distinguish [clean] fish’, since the Divine law states fins and scales? — Say rather: As those which distinguish

\begin{itemize}
\item[(1)] Both the הָדוֹן and the תֶּבֶן are mentioned in Deut. XIV, 13, but in Lev. only the former is mentioned.
\item[(2)] Deut. XIV, 13. The Torah thus stated all the appellations whereby the bird is known.
\item[(3)] Which is not mentioned in Lev. For shesu'ah, v. supra 60b.
\item[(4)] So that the ra'ah is a bird quite distinct from the da'ah.
\item[(5)] The Torah merely indicates the various names by which this bird is designated.
\item[(6)] That there are only twenty-four unclean birds.
\item[(7)] For since he (R. Abbahu) says that the ra'ah is identical with the ayyah, and in the conclusion he holds that all four — ayyah, dayyah, ra'ah and da'ah — are different names of one and the same bird, it is evident that according to him there are not twenty-four birds enumerated in the Torah. The argument in the Gemara at the outset presupposes the acceptance by R. Abbahu of R. Hisda's view, but the conclusion shows that he cannot agree with it.
\item[(8)] Job XXVIII, 7.
\item[(9)] And R. Abbahu consequently does not accept the statement reported by R. Hisda.
\item[(10)] In the MS.M. ‘unclean’ is actually in the text. Cf. Tosaf. s.v. פֹּנַי נֵס. V. Bah's note on Rashi a.l.
\item[(11)] Lit., ‘in a short way’.
\item[(12)] We may rely upon a tradition, handed down from generation to generation through reliable channels, that any particular bird is clean.
\item[(13)] Read הָדוֹן i.e., the gentile names a bird which is known to be clean; v. D.S. a.l. and infra 64a.
\item[(14)] For when questioned about it the gentile could always evade the issue by naming other clean birds unfamiliar to the Jew.
\end{itemize}

\textbf{Talmud - Mas. Chullin 64a}

fish roe.) And these are the characteristics which distinguish the eggs [of clean birds]: All that are arched and rounded, with one end broad and the other end narrow, are clean. Those that are broad at both ends or narrow at both ends are unclean. Those with the white outside and the yolk in the center are clean, those with the yolk outside and the white in the center are unclean; if the white and the yolk are mixed up, one may be certain that it is a reptile's egg? — This\textsuperscript{1} must be resorted to only where the eggs were broken.\textsuperscript{2} But they can still be examined by the position of the yolk and white? — They were beaten up in a dish. But is it then permissible to purchase such from them [gentiles]? Surely it has been taught: One may not sell to a gentile the egg of a bird that was trefah,\textsuperscript{3} unless it was beaten up in a dish. For this reason one may not buy from them eggs beaten up in a dish! — Rather, said R. Zera: The distinguishing characteristics [of the eggs of clean birds] do not rest on Biblical authority. For should you not hold this, then when R. Assi stated ‘There are eight birds about which there is a doubt’, it could rightly be asked: Why not examine their eggs? you must therefore say that the characteristics do not rest on Biblical authority. To what purpose then were they stated above? To teach the following: If both ends [of the egg] were broad, or both narrow, or if the yolk was outside and the white in the center, it is certainly unclean; if, however, one end was broad and the other narrow, and the white outside and the yolk in the center, and if, in addition, the gentile says. ‘It is of such and such a bird’, which is clean, he may be relied upon, but without this express statement he may not be relied upon, for there is the raven's egg which resembles that of a dove.

The Master said: ‘If the white and the yolk are mixed up, one may be certain that it is a reptile's egg’. For what reason is this stated so? — R. ‘Ukba b. Hama answered: To teach that if [the embryo within was] developed and [the shell] perforated, then a lentil's bulk thereof would convey uncleanness. Rabina demurred, saying: Perhaps it is a serpent's egg! — Rather, said Raba, It is to teach that if [the embryo within was] developed, whosoever eats it would incur stripes for [eating] creeping things that crawl upon the earth. If so, why [do we argue about the egg] of an unclean bird? Even of a clean bird [there is also this prohibition]! For it has been taught: [The verse,] And every creeping thing that creepeth upon the earth, includes [in its prohibition] chicks that have not yet opened their eyes! — This [latter] prohibition is only Rabbinic and the verse adduced is merely a support.

Our Rabbis taught: The exudation of eggs is permitted. Addled eggs may be eaten by those who are not squeamish. If there was found on it a spot of blood, the blood must be thrown away and rest of the egg may be eaten. R. Jeremiah said: This is so, provided it was found upon the knot. Dosthai, the father of Aptoriki, taught: This rule applies only if [the spot of blood was] found on the white, but if found on the yolk the whole egg is forbidden, for the decay has spread over the entire egg. R. Gebiha of Be-Kathil said to R. Ashi, A Tanna once recited this statement before Abaye in just the reverse form, but Abaye corrected him so as to make it agree with the above.

Hezekiah said: Whence do we know that the egg of an unclean bird is prohibited by the Torah? Because it is written: And the bath ha-ya'anah. Now has the ya'anah a daughter? It can only mean the egg of an unclean bird. But perhaps this is its actual name? — This cannot be, for it is

---

(1) The necessity that the gentile name the bird.
(2) And it is no longer possible to examine the egg by the external characteristics.
(3) For fear that he will re-sell it to a Jew.
(4) For in all probability the eggs were of a bird that was rendered trefah and were sold by a Jew to this gentile.
(5) And we may not rely upon them.
(6) Supra p. 340.
(7) And the shape of the egg of each bird would decide whether the bird was clean or not, according to the above-mentioned distinguishing signs.
(8) And the egg is unclean, for the characteristics by themselves are not absolutely reliable.
(9) I.e., why does it not say simply ‘it is unclean’.
(10) Which does not convey uncleanness at all.
(11) Cf. Lev. XI, 41. The Baraitha therefore stated ‘it is a reptile's egg’ to inform us of the appropriate prohibition that must be declared to the transgressor as a warning before he commits the offence, in order to render him liable to stripes.
(12) Ibid.

Talmud - Mas. Chullin 64b
written: The daughter of my people is become cruel, like the ye'ennim [ostriches] in the wilderness. But on the other hand it is written: I will make a wailing like the jackals, and a mourning like the benoth ya'anah [ostriches]. — There it means, as the ya'anah mourns for its young. But there is also written: And benoth ya'anah [ostriches] shall dwell there! — It means as the ya'anah dwells with its young. But there is also written: The beasts of the field shall honour Me, the jackals and the benoth ya'anah [ostriches], and if you were to say that it refers to the egg, [it will be asked.] Can an egg sing hymns [unto the Lord]? — Indeed both ya'anah and bath ya'anah are [found] written, but in this particular instance it is different, since the scribe has divided the word into two; (and since the scribe has divided it into two words it proves that it is two distinct terms). But according to this will you also say that Chedarlaomer. seeing that the scribe has divided it into two, is two distinct names? — I reply, in the latter case it is true that he has divided the word into two but he has not separated them on two lines, but here he has even separated them on two lines.

BUT THE SAGES HAVE SAID, EVERY BIRD [THAT SEIZES ITS PREY IS UNCLEAN]. It was taught: Rabban Gamaliel says, [If a bird] seizes prey and eats it, one may be certain that it is unclean; if it has an extra toe, and a crop, and its gizzard can be peeled, one may be certain that it is clean. R. Eleazar son of R. Zadok says: A cord is stretched out for it, and if [when perched on it] it divides its toes evenly, two on each side, it is a clean bird, but if it places three toes on one side and one on the other, it is an Unclean bird. R. Simeon b. Eleazar says: Every bird which catches food [thrown to it] in the air is unclean. (But does not the zipparta catch food in the air? — Abaye answered: It means, catches food and eats it in the air.) Others say: Those that dwell with unclean birds are unclean, those that dwell with clean birds are clean. According to whom is this rule? Is it only according to R. Eliezer? For it was taught: R. Eliezer said: Not for nothing did the zarrir follow the raven but because it is of its kind! — It might even be according to the Rabbis too, for we speak here of those that dwell with and also resemble [unclean birds].

OF LOCUSTS: ALL THAT HAVE . . . [AND WINGS COVERING THE GREATER PART OF THE BODY]. What is meant by THE GREATER PART? — Rab Judah said in the name of Rab. It means the greater part of the length [of the body]. Others say [in the name of Rab]. The greater part of the girth [of the body]. R. Papa said: We therefore require the [wings to cover the] greater part of the length, as well as the greater part of the girth of the body.

Our Rabbis taught: If it has no [leaping legs] now but will grow them later on, as in the case of the zahal, it is permitted. R. Eliezer son of R. Jose says. [The verse], Which have leaping legs, includes those that have none now but will grow them later on. What is the zahal? — Abaye answered: It is the iskera. Our Rabbis taught: Even those of them ye may eat, the arbeh after its kind, etc. The ‘arbeh’ is the gobai, the ‘sol’am’ is the vashon, the ‘hargol’ is the nippol, and the ‘hagab’ is the gadian. Wherefore does the verse add ‘after its kind’ to each? To include the zipporeth keramim, the Jerusalem yohana, the ‘arzubia and the razbonith respectively. In the school of R. Ishmael it was taught: [In this verse] we have a number of general propositions and a number of particular instances. Thus, the arbeh is the gobai, ‘after its kind’ includes

(1) The bracketed passage is omitted in MS.M.
(2) Gen. XIV. 1. In many texts of the Torah, particularly those based on Occidental or Palestinian tradition, this name is written as two words, thus .
(3) I.e., it is not permissible to end one line with and commence the next line with .
(4) Ending one line with , and commencing the next with . Evidently these words have each a specific connotation, and refers to the egg.
(5) Rashi adds, provided it does not seize prey, so that the bird has all the four characteristics of cleanness.
(6) a small bird supposed to be the humming bird. It was generally recognized as permitted.
(7) Whereas the humming-birds, although they catch food thrown to them in the air, eat it only after they have put it upon the ground (Rashi).
(8) Species associate with species, and according to R. Eliezer the zarrir (the starling) is unclean because it is found always in the company of ravens.
(9) And this criterion would be accepted by the Rabbis too.
(10) A species of locust born without leaping legs but these grow in the course of time.
(11) Lev. XI. 21. There is in this verse a vital difference between the Kethib (the actual written text) and the Kere (the traditional reading). According to the former the rendering of the verse is, ‘Which have no leaping legs’, and according to the latter, ‘which have leaping legs’. R. Eliezer b. Jose interprets the verse on the basis of the were and the Kethib, viz., those that have none (Kethib) now but have them (Kere) later on are permitted.
(12) Lev. XI, 22. This verse specifies four varieties of locusts that are clean, viz., arbeh, sol'am, hargol, and hagab, and each is identified here by a more popular name. In the verse each is followed by the phrase ‘after its kind’, which serves to include the various types of each particular species. The identifications suggested are purely tentative and for the most part are based on Lewysohn, Zoologie des Talmuds, p. 286ff.
(13) These have been identified as the migratory locust, the bald locust, the green grasshopper, and the cricket respectively.
(14) Each ‘after its kind’ is regarded as a general proposition, and each named variety a specification; moreover at the head of the verse there is also a general proposition (‘These ye may eat’, Lev. XI, 21) which serves as such for each of the specifications. Hence we may argue on the principle of ‘generalisation and specification’ for each of the four the zipporeth keramim. Now from this I know to include all types that are not bald, but whence would I learn to include even those that are bald? The verse therefore states the ‘sol'am’ which is the nippol [the bald locust], and ‘after its kind’ [stated with it] includes the ushkaf. I would now include all types whether they are bald or not, provided they are tailless, but whence would I learn to include even those that have a tail? The verse therefore adds the hargol which is the rashon, and ‘after its kind’ [stated with it] includes the karsefeth and the shahlanith. I would now include all types, whether bald or not, and whether tailless or not, provided they are not long-headed, but whence would I learn to include even those that are long-headed? I say, you can derive them from the general principle underlying these three classes. Thus, the distinctive feature of the arbeh is not that of the hargol, neither is the distinctive feature of the hargol that of the arbeh, and the distinctive feature of each of these two is not that of the sol'am, neither is the distinctive feature of the sol'am that of either of these two. The characteristics, however, which are common to all are: each have four legs, four wings, leaping legs, and wings covering the greater part of the body; hence we may include all types that have four legs, four wings, leaping legs, and wings covering the greater part of the body. But has not the zarzur also four legs, four wings, leaping legs, and wings covering the greater part of its body? Will you also say that it is permitted? The verse therefore adds the ‘hagab’, that is to say, all must go by the name of hagab. Then will you say that if it goes by the name of hagab [it is permitted] even though it has none of the abovementioned characteristics? The Verse therefore states ‘after its kind’, to teach that every one must have all the abovementioned characteristics.

R. Ahai asked: But in the case of those [mentioned in the verse] none are long-headed. Should you, however, suggest that as long as they are all alike in that they each have the four abovementioned characteristics, an analogy may be drawn and no objection can be raised, in that case the hargol need not have been mentioned, for since it has these four characteristics it could have been derived from the arbeh and the sol'am. But you would certainly object to this on the ground that they are tailless [and the hargol is not]; then here also you must object on the ground that none of them are long-headed. — Rather said R. Ahai [argue thus]: The Divine Law need not have stated ‘sol'am’ for it could be derived from the ‘arbeh’ and the ‘hargol’. Indeed, what objection could you raise? That the arbeh is not bald [and the sol'am is]? But the hargol is [also] bald. Or, that the hargol has a tail [and the sol'am has not]? But the arbeh is [also] tailless. Why then did the Divine Law state sol'am? Since it is of no purpose unto itself it can serve [to include all] those that are long-headed.

(1) Lit., ‘that comes and has no baldness’. The class of locust comprehended under arbeh and its kind is distinctive in that none of them have any baldness at the top of the head. According to Aruch: ‘they have no protuberance above the head’.

(2) Which is likewise bald.

(3) For the varieties of arbeh and sol'am are peculiar in that they have no tails.

(4) Which has a tail.

(5) Which also have tails.

(6) All types mentioned until now have short heads.

(7) The arbeh, it must be remembered, is not bald and has no tail, the hargol is bald and has a tail, and the sol'am is bald but has no tail.

(8) The zarzur was known as an unclean species.

(9) This qualification excludes the zarzur which is not known as a hagab.

(10) After the term hagab.

(11) How than can we include those that have long heads?
Wherein is there a difference between the Tanna of the school of Rab and the Tanna of the school of R. Ishmael? — In the long-headed species. The Tanna of the school of Rab maintains, [The verse] Which have leaping legs is a general proposition, ‘arbeh’, ‘sol'am’, ‘hargol’, and ‘hagab’, are specifications; we thus have a general proposition followed by several specifications, in which case the scope of the general proposition is limited to the particulars specified. Accordingly, those of the same kind [as those specified] are [included], but those not of the same kind are not [included], that is, we include all those that resemble those specified in every respect. The Tanna of the school of R. Ishmael on the other hand, maintains, Which have leaping legs is a general proposition; ‘arbeh’, ‘sol'am’, ‘hargol’, and ‘hagab’, are specifications; ‘after its kind’ is a further general proposition; we thus have two general propositions separated from each other by several specifications, which include such things as are similar to the particulars specified; accordingly we include all that are similar to those specified even in one respect only.

But the first general proposition is not analogous in scope with the other general proposition! For the first general proposition — ‘which have leaping legs’ — implies, if it has [leaping legs] one may eat it, but otherwise one may not eat it; whereas the second general proposition — ‘after its kind’ — implies that only those that have the four characteristics [are permitted]! — The Tanna of the school of R. Ishmael nevertheless interprets texts of this kind by the principle of ‘general propositions and specifications’. Indeed, the dictum which is expressed frequently, that the Tanna of the school of R. Ishmael interprets texts of this kind by the principle of ‘general propositions and specifications’, emanates from here.

The Master said: ‘Will you say that if it goes by the name of hagab [it is permitted] even though it has none of the abovementioned characteristics? The verse therefore states: ‘after its kind’, to teach that every one must have all the abovementioned characteristics’. But if it has not all the characteristics, whence could it have been inferred [that it is permitted]? Does not the Divine Law specify arbeh and hargol? — It would indeed be as you say had not sol'am been stated, but now that sol'am is actually stated, and serves to include all that are long-headed, it might also be suggested that it shall include every variety, [even those that have but the slightest resemblance to those specified]; he therefore teaches us [that this is not so].

Why is it that there [in the first Baraitha] the sol'am is identified with the rashon, and the hargol with the nippol, and here [in the Baraitha of the Tanna of the school of R. Ishmael] the sol'am is identified with the nippol, and the hargol with the rashon? — Each Tanna states the appellation by which each is recognized in his locality.

OF FISHES: ALL THAT HAVE FINS AND SCALES. Our Rabbis taught: If it has no [fins and scales] now but grows them later on, as the sultanith and the ‘afian, it is permitted; if it has them now but sheds them when drawn out of the water, as

---

(1) I.e., the author of the first Baraitha, supra p. 352. The Baraitha is a quotation from the Sifra debe Rab, hence the author of it is called a Tanna of the school of Rab.
(2) According to the Tanna of the school of R. Ishmael, whose process of interpretation is set forth in the text below, the result is that sol'am and hagab are each rendered superfluous for their own sakes, i.e., the varieties they represent would have been inferred by the principle of ‘two general propositions separated from each other by specifications’. These terms are therefore utilized for the following purposes: the former to permit the long-headed species, and the latter to forbid the zarzur, v. supra 65b. According to the Tanna of the school of Rab, however, each particular specification can include only those equal to it in every respect, and as none of the specified types are long-headed the result is that the long-headed species of locusts are forbidden.
(3) Lev. XI, 21.
We have learnt elsewhere: All [fishes] that have scales have also fins, but there are some that have fins but no scales. Those that have fins and scales are clean, but those that have fins and no scales are unclean. But consider, we rely upon scales, the Divine Law then should have stated scales only [as the distinguishing mark] and not fins! — Had the Divine Law only stated scales and not fins I might have said that the word for scales [Kaskasim] meant fins, and even unclean fishes [would have been permitted]; the Divine Law therefore stated fins as well as scales. But even now that the Divine Law states fins as well as scales, whence do we know that the term Kaskasim means [the scales that cover the fish like] a garment? — Because it is written: And he was clad with kaskasim [a coat of mail]. This being so, the Divine Law need not have stated fins at all but only scales! — R. Abbahu said, and so it was taught in the school of R. Ishmael, [It is stated in order] to make the teaching great and glorious.

Our Rabbis taught: Since the verse stated that you may eat that which has fins and scales, I would have inferred that you may not eat that which has not; and since the verse stated that you may not eat that which has not fins and scales, I would have inferred that you may eat that which has. Why then are both verses stated? To teach that he infringes a positive as well as a negative command.

Why does Scripture state, These ye may eat of all that are in the waters? Because [without this verse] I should have argued thus: since Scripture has permitted [to eat the creeping things of the water in two verses], in one verse expressly and in the other impliedly, then just as when it expressly permitted them it referred only to those that were in [the water of] vessels, so, too, when it impliedly permitted them it permitted only those that were in vessels. Whence should I have known that one may bend down and swallow without any hesitation even those found in cisterns, ditches, or caverns? It is therefore written: These ye may eat of all that are in the waters.

Where does Scripture permit those [creeping things] found in [the water of] vessels? In the verse: These ye may eat of all that are in the waters . . . [in the seas and in the rivers], which signifies that [those creeping things found] in the seas and in the rivers, if they have [fins and scales] you may eat, and if they have not [fins and scales] you may not eat, whereas all those found in [the water of] vessels you may eat, even though they have not [fins and scales]. But perhaps [I ought to say that] those found in vessels you may not eat at all, even though they have [fins and scales]! — You cannot say so, for it is written: And all that have not fins and scales in the seas and in the rivers, of all that swarm in the waters . . . [they are a detestable thing unto you!], which signifies that [those found] in the seas and in the rivers, if they have not [fins and scales], you may not eat, whereas [those found] in vessels, even though they have not [fins and scales], you may eat. Perhaps [I ought to argue thus], ‘In the waters’ is a general proposition in the seas and in the rivers is a specification; we thus have a general proposition followed by a specification, in which case the scope of the general proposition is limited to the particulars specified; hence only with regard to those found in the seas and in the rivers [are the distinguishing marks of fins and scales essential], but not with regard to those found in gutters and trenches!\(^\text{16}\) — ‘In the waters’, is repeated thus stating another general proposition. But here these two general propositions follow one another!\(^\text{17}\) — Rabina said, [It is to be interpreted] as said in the West, viz., Wherever you find two general propositions that follow one another

---

(1) Nid. 51a.
(2) Heb. קוסם ריב.
(3) I Sam. XVII, 5. The same word Kaskasim is here used to describe the coat of mail as being made of scales or thin plates of metal.
(4) For there is now no longer any room for doubt since the verse from Sam. clearly indicates the true meaning of kaskasim, namely scales.
(5) Isa. XLII, 21. Strictly then ‘fins’ need not have been stated in the verse at all but was written only in order to remove any possible doubt or misunderstanding regarding kaskasim.
(6) Lev. XI, 9.
(7) Ibid. 10.
(8) Who eats a fish that has no fins and scales.
(9) I.e., the express prohibition of Lev. XI, 10, and the implied prohibition of v. 9, which has the force of a positive precept.
(10) Ibid. 9. As this verse concludes with ‘them ye may eat’, the opening words are indeed superfluous.
(11) Even though they have not fins and scales.
(12) V. infra 67a the dispute between R. Aha and Rabina.
(13) Ibid. 10.
(14) Ibid. 9.
(15) Implying that all that are in the waters require fins and scales.
(16) So that all creeping things found in gutters and in trenches, and a fortiori those found in standing water as e.g. in cisterns, are permitted. This being so, the previous exposition of v. 9 which establishes that all creeping things found in cisterns etc. are permitted is rendered superfluous.
(17) And are not separated by any specified particulars.

Talmud - Mas. Chullin 67a

you insert the subsequent specification between them and treat the whole as if it were two general propositions separated by the specification. [Now the argument here will run as follows:] ‘In the waters’ is a general proposition, ‘in the seas and in the rivers’ is a specification, ‘in the waters is another general proposition; we thus have two general propositions separated by the specification, in which case they include such things as are similar to the particulars specified. Therefore, as the particulars specified clearly indicate running water, so everything to be included must be found in running water. What does it include? It includes gutters and trenches, namely, that [all creeping things found therein] are subject to the restriction.\(^1\) And what does it exclude? It excludes cisterns, ditches and caverns, namely, that [ whatsoever found therein] is free from all restriction. But perhaps [I ought to say], as the particulars specified clearly refer to water contained in the ground, so everything to be included must be found in water contained in the ground! What does it include? It includes cisterns, ditches and caverns, namely, that [ whatsoever found therein] is subject to the restriction. And what does it exclude? It excludes vessels, [namely, that whatsoever found therein is free from all restriction]. — If this were right, then what does the previous exposition of the verse: These ye may eat [of all that are in the waters], teach us?\(^2\)

A Tanna of the school of R. Ishmael taught: Since there is written in this verse: In the waters . . . in the waters [without any specification of particulars between them], it must not be interpreted by the principle of ‘general proposition and specification’ but rather by the principle of ‘amplification and limitation’.\(^3\) Thus, ‘In the waters’ is an amplifying proposition, ‘in the seas and in the rivers’ is a limitation, ‘in the waters’ is another amplifying proposition; we thus have two amplifying propositions separated by a limitation, in which case [well-nigh] everything is to be included. What does it include? It includes gutters and trenches, namely, that [whatsoever found therein] is subject to the restriction. And what does it exclude? It excludes cisterns, ditches and caverns, namely, that [whatsoever found therein] is free from all restriction. But perhaps I ought to say: What does it include? It includes cisterns, ditches and caverns, namely, that [whatsoever found therein] is subject to the restriction. And what does it exclude? It excludes vessels [namely, that whatsoever found therein is free from all restriction]! — If this were right, then what does the previous exposition of the verse: These ye mat eat [of all that are in the waters], teach us?2 And why should I not accept the reverse argument?4 — Because of the view expressed by R. Mattithiah. For R. Mattithiah b. Judah taught: Why do you prefer to conclude that [creeping things found in] cisterns, ditches and caverns, are free from all restriction, but [those found in] gutters and trenches are under the restriction? I say that [those found in] cisterns, ditches and caverns, are free from all restriction because the water therein is as it were, enclosed as in vessels, whereas [those found in] gutters and trenches are under the restriction since the water thereof can in no wise be regarded as enclosed in vessels.

In which verse is it5 implied and in which express? — R. Aha and Rabina differ. One says: The verse which treats of those that have [fins and scales]6 indicates the express permission, but that which treats of those that have not [fins and scales]7 indicates the implied permission. The other says: The verse which treats of those that have not [fins and scales] indicates the express permission, but that which treats of those that have [fins and scales] indicates the implied permission. What is the reason of him who holds that the verse which treats of those that have [fins and scales] indicates the express permission? — He would say: It is from this verse that we derive the permission [for the creeping things found] in vessels.6 And what is the reason of him who holds that the verse which treats of those that have not [fins and scales] indicates the express permission? — He would say: It is this verse which suggests the true interpretation of the other, for from the other verse alone I might have argued [that those found] in vessels, even though they have [fins and scales], you must not eat.9

R. Huna said: A man should not pour beer [into a vessel] at night, and strain it through twigs, for fear that a worm [from the beer] might drop on to the twigs and thence fall into the vessel, and he would [if he swallowed the worm with the beer] infringe the law of Every creeping thing that creepeth upon the earth.10 If so, even [when he pours it directly] into the vessel we should apprehend lest the worm drop on to the side of the vessel and then fall into the vessel! — That would be the natural way of things.11 Whence do you know [to make such a distinction]? — From [the following Baraitha] which was taught: Whence should I have known that one may bend down and swallow without any hesitation even those found in cisterns, ditches and caverns? It is therefore written:
‘These ye may eat of all that are in the waters’. Now perhaps these creeping things had at some time previously crawled to the edge [of the cistern] and had fallen back [into the cistern] .You must therefore say that that would be the natural way of things; then here, too, we say that that is the natural way of things. R. Hisda said to R. Huna, There is [a Baraitha] taught that supports your contention: [The verse,] ‘And every creeping thing that creepeth upon the earth [is a detestable thing; it shall not be eaten]’, includes insects found in liquids that have been passed through a strainer. The reason [then that they are forbidden] is because they had passed through a strainer, but had they not passed through a strainer they would be permitted.12

Samuel said: A cucumber which became wormy

---

1. That is, they must have fins and scales in order to be permitted.
2. For even without the exposition of this verse, it is now suggested that the creeping things found in the water of vessels are free from the restriction of fins and scales. This verse therefore serves to indicate the line of argument that is to be adopted in the interpretation of the general propositions and specifications, namely, that only the creeping things found in running water, e.g. in gutters and trenches, are restricted to the qualification of fins and scales, but those found in cisterns, ditches and caverns, are permitted in all circumstances.
For the logical basis of interpretation of these two principles and the differences between them, v. Rashi s.v. הלכה וברכה and Shebu., Sonc. ed., p. 12, n. 3, and Sanh., p. 301, n. 1.

For the argument by the principle of amplification and limitation is to a certain extent arbitrary, for on what ground should one thing be excluded rather than the other? Consequently the last argument raised in the text by way of objection could well be adopted, and as for the rejoinder, ‘what does the verse: These ye may eat of all that are in the waters, teach us?’ it would refer to creeping things found in gutters and trenches, and would reach us that even these would be free from the restriction of fins and scales. On the other hand, it would be said that the scope of the amplification would be extended to bring creeping things found in cisterns etc. under the restriction! This hypothetical reasoning is, however, nullified by the analytic argument of R. Mattithiah below.

Sc. the permission to eat all creeping things found in the water of vessels even though they have not fins and scales.

For there is nothing to suggest that the insects had crawled upon the earth.

Talmud - Mas. Chullin 67b

during its growth is forbidden because of the prohibition of Every creeping thing that creepeth upon the earth.1 Shall we say that there is [a Baraitha] that supports his view? For one [Baraitha] teaches: [The verse,] ‘[Every creeping thing that creepeth] upon the earth’, excludes mites found in lentils, bugs in pea pods, and insects in dates and dried figs.2 Another [Baraitha], however, teaches: The verse: ‘Every creeping thing that creepeth upon the earth’, includes insects found in the roots of the olive and of the vine.3 Now presumably each [Baraitha] speaks of [insects found in] the fruit, and [yet there is no contradiction between them, for] the latter [Baraitha] refers to fruit during growth, whereas the former to fruit no longer growing!4 No. In either case the fruit was in the course of growth, nevertheless there is no contradiction, for the former [Baraitha] refers to [insects found in] the actual fruit5 whereas the latter to [insects found in] the stock of the tree. Indeed there is proof [for this distinction], for it reads [in the latter Baraitha], ‘Insects found in the roots of the olive and of the vine’. This is conclusive.

R. Joseph raised the following questions: What is the law if the insect left the fruit6 and immediately died?7 or if part of the insect left the fruit?8 or if it was in mid-air?9 These questions remain undecided.

R. Ashi raised these questions, What if the insect moved [from the inside of a date] to the outside? or to the top of the datestone? or if it moved from one date to another [that was sticking to it]? These questions also remain undecided.10 R. Shesheth11 the son of R. Idi said: Parasites12 are forbidden, because they come from outside.13 R. Ashi demurred, saying: If they come from the outside then they should surely be found in the excretory passages!14 Others report this passage thus: R. Shisha the son of R. Idi said: Parasites are permitted, because they are generated within. R. Ashi said: Of course this is so, for if they come from the outside they should surely be found in the excretory passages! The law is: Parasites are forbidden because they might enter through the nostril whilst the animal is asleep.15

Maggots16 [found under the skin] of animals are forbidden, of fish are permitted. Rabina once said to his mother, ‘Let me swallow these [maggots with the fish] and I shall eat them’. R. Mesharsheya, son of R. Aha, asked Rabina, Why is this case different from what was taught [in the following Baraita]: [The verse], And their carcasses ye shall have in detestation,17 includes maggots of cattle?18 — He replied: There is no comparison between the two. Cattle are [in a forbidden state until] rendered permitted by slaughtering, and since these maggots had not been rendered fit by slaughtering, they always remain in the forbidden state. Fish, on the other hand, are [always in a permitted state, for they are] permitted by the mere taking up; the maggots therefore generated in a permitted state.

Our Rabbis taught: Goeth upon the belly19 means the snake, ‘whatsoever’ includes the earthworm, and all that are like unto it. ‘Upon all fours’ means the scorpion, ‘whatsoever’ includes the beetle and all that are like unto it. ‘Hath many feet’ means the centipede, ‘whatsoever’ includes all that are like unto it and all that resemble the latter.

It was taught: R. Jose, son of the Damascene, says: The leviathan20 is a clean fish,21 for it is written: His scales are his pride,22 and it is also written: ‘Sharpest potsherds are under him’.23 ‘Scales’, these are the scales that cover him; ‘sharpest potsherds are under him’, these are the fins wherewith he propels himself.

C H A P T E R   I V

(1) Lev. XI, 41. V. supra 58a.
(2) I.e., these insects may be eaten together with the fruit.
(3) And they are forbidden.
(4) I.e., worms found in fruit while still upon the tree are forbidden, but those found in plucked fruit are permitted. This distinction supports Samuel's view.
(5) And these would not he regarded as crawling upon the ground even though the fruit is still in the course of its growth, contra Samuel.
(6) That had already been plucked off the tree.
(7) But it did not actually crawl upon the ground. May it be eaten or not? The question is, Is movement an essential in this prohibition or not?
(8) E.g., the head of the insect had already touched the ground and actually moved upon it although the body was still in the fruit.
(9) I.e., the insect fell out of the fruit and was swallowed before it reached the ground.
(10) It must be assumed in these and in the preceding questions that the insect generated spontaneously in the fruit itself and that it had never before been outside the fruit.
(12) Found in the lungs and in the liver of cattle (Rash), or found in fish (Tosaf).
(13) They had previously crawled upon the earth but were swallowed by the animal with its food.
(14) I.e., in one of the organs of the alimentary canal.
(15) And thus found their way through the respiratory passages into the lungs.
(17) Lev. XI, 11.
(18) Presumably the same prohibition should also apply to maggots found in fish.
(19) Ibid. 42. The verse, which is here interpreted part by Part, reads as follows: Whatsoever goeth upon the belly, and whatsoever goeth upon all fours, or whatsoever hath many feet, even all creeping things that creep upon the earth, then, ye shall not eat.
(21) For it has fins and scales, the marks of a clean fish, although Biblically it is referred to as a serpent, cf. Isa. XXVII, 1.
(22) Job XLI, 7.
(23) Ibid. 22.

Talmud - Mas. Chullin 68a

GEMARA. Rab Judah said in the name of Rab: The actual limb [that was put forth] is forbidden. Why? Because the verse says. Ye shall not eat any flesh in the field torn of beasts [trefah], which implies that any flesh that had got beyond its bound is forbidden. [An objection was raised.] We have learnt: IF AN ANIMAL WAS IN DIFFICULT LABOUR AND THE FOETUS PUT FORTH ITS FORE-LIMB AND WITHDREW IT WITHIN, IT MAY BE EATEN. Presumably [IT MAY BE EATEN] refers to the actual limb! — No, it refers to the foetus [that is within]. If it refers to the foetus, why does [the Tanna] say AND WITHDREW IT? Even if it did not withdraw it [the foetus would be permitted]! — Indeed the law is the same even though it did not withdraw it within, but because he stated in the second clause. IF IT PUT FORTH ITS HEAD, THOUGH IT WITHDREW IT WITHIN, IT IS CONSIDERED AS BORN, he says also in the first clause AND WITHDREW IT. But what does the second clause teach us? That as soon as the head emerged it is considered as born? But we have learnt it elsewhere: ‘Who is considered a firstborn for the right of inheritance and not for the priest?’ He that was born after a premature child the head of which had even emerged alive, or after a nine-months child the head of which had emerged dead’. Now this is so because the head [of the nine-months child] had emerged dead, but had it emerged alive then the child that was born after this would not be considered a firstborn, even for the right of inheritance! Should you, however, say that [there] it was taught with regard to man, and [here] it is taught with regard to beasts, because we could not apply the principle as established in the case of beasts to man, inasmuch as there is no ante-chamber in beasts, neither could we apply the principle as established in the case of man to beasts, inasmuch as the face of a human being is a principal feature; surely we have expressly learnt it [even with regard to beasts], viz., If part of the afterbirth emerged [before slaughtering the dam] it may not be eaten, for it is a token of birth in the case of woman and also a token of birth in the case of beasts. Now if you were to say that the withdrawal of the limb within, which is stated in the first clause [of our Mishnah], is to be particularly stressed, it is well; for then we could say that the second clause was stated on account of the first clause. But if you say that neither the first nor the second clause is to be particularly stressed [for any special teaching], then why are they stated at all? — It is not so, for, in point of fact, [IT MAY BE EATEN] refers to the actual foetus [and not to the limb], but as R. Nahman b. Isaac had said [elsewhere]: It would not have been necessary to mention [the withdrawal of the limb within] except in so far as it affects the part where it is cut off, likewise we may say here. It was only stated in so far as it affects the part where it is cut off.

Come and hear: If an animal was in difficult labour and the foetus put forth its fore-limb and withdrew it within, and then the dam was slaughtered, it may be eaten. If the dam was slaughtered, and then it withdrew it within, it may not be eaten. If it put forth its fore-limb and it was immediately cut off, and then the dam was slaughtered, that which is outside is unclean, and also forbidden [to be eaten], but that which is inside is clean and permitted. If the dam was slaughtered and then [the limb] was cut off,

(1) Before the slaughtering of the animal. The animal, however, was slaughtered before the foetus was born.
(2) V. Gemara. The general principle is that with the slaughtering of an animal everything that is within it, e.g., a foetus, is rendered permitted. The Gemara, however, argues as to the effect of the slaughtering upon the limb which was put out of the womb prior to the slaughtering.

(3) And is not rendered permitted by the slaughtering of the animal.

(4) V. supra 55a. The spleen and the kidneys are specifically mentioned since a lesion of these organs does not render the animal trefah.

(5) Ex. XXII, 30.

(6) The implication is in the phrase in the field, i.e., any flesh that had gone out of its precincts or bounds, e.g., consecrated meat of a sin-offering outside the sanctuary, or meat of a peace-offering outside the walls of Jerusalem, or, as here, an embryo outside the womb, is forbidden like trefah.

(7) Bek. 46a, where this principle is established. It is therefore inappropriate to say that the first clause is stated on account of a second clause which is itself unnecessary.

(8) To be entitled to a portion in the inheritance twice as much as any one of his brothers. Deut. XXI, 17.

(9) I.e., that the father is not obliged to redeem this child from the priest by payment of five shekels, the prescribed money of redemption; cf. Num. XVIII, 16.

(10) The distinction is this: with regard to the law of inheritance the Torah contemplates a viable firstborn child, a child on whose death the parent would have to go into mourning (derived by the Rabbis by interpreting רָאשׁוֹת אֵין טֶרֶף, Deut. XXI, 17, ‘the beginning of his strength’, as ‘the beginning of his mourning’). With regard to the law of the redemption of the firstborn, however, it was intended to apply to ‘whatsoever openeth the womb’, Ex. XIII, 2, whether the child born was living or not.

(11) Thus establishing the principle that with the emergence of the head the child is deemed born.

(12) I.e., the forepart of the female genitals. So that as soon as the head emerges from the womb of the beast and sees the light of day it is forthwith regarded as born.

(13) And therefore with the emergence of the head the human being is deemed born.

(14) V. infra 77a. For it may be that the head of the foetus was contained in that part of the afterbirth which emerged, in which case the foetus would be regarded as born and would not be rendered permitted by the subsequent slaughtering of the dam, and the afterbirth which belongs to it would likewise be forbidden.

(15) The emergence of the afterbirth.

(16) To teach that in such circumstances even the limb which had emerged is rendered permitted by the slaughtering of the dam.

(17) Thus: if the limb had been withdrawn into the womb, then only that part which had actually emerged would have to be cut off as forbidden meat; but if it had not been withdrawn, then the limb which had emerged plus a little more of that which is within would have to be cut away as forbidden meat.

(18) I.e., the dam was slaughtered whilst the limb of the foetus protruded from its womb, but immediately after the slaughtering the limb was withdrawn into the womb.

(19) I.e., the limb that had been cut off.

(20) For a limb cut off from the living animal is a source of uncleanness like nebelah; v. infra 128b.

(21) The rest of the foetus is rendered permitted by the slaughtering of its dam and likewise free from uncleanness, and it does not suffer any uncleanness by reason of its contact with this limb, because it is a living animal, and a living animal cannot contract uncleanness.

Talmud - Mas. Chullin 68b

the flesh\(^1\) is [unclean] like that which had touched nebelah:* so R. Meir. But the Sages say: It is unclean like that which had touched a slaughtered trefah animal.\(^3\) Now it says in the first clause, ‘If the foetus put forth its fore-limb and withdrew it within, and then the dam was slaughtered, it may be eaten. Presumably [‘it may be eaten’] refers to the actual limb! — No, it refers to the foetus. But if it refers to the foetus, [how can we explain] the next clause which reads: ‘If the dam was slaughtered and then it withdrew it within, it may not be eaten’? If it refers to the foetus, why is it forbidden? — As R. Nahman b. Isaac had said [elsewhere]: It would not have been necessary to mention it except in so far as it affects the part where it is cut off; we may say the same here: It was only stated in so far as it affects the part where it is cut off.\(^4\) But surely this is not so. For when Abimi came from Be Huzai\(^5\) he brought with him the following teaching: ‘If [the foetus] withdrew the hoof\(^6\) within, you may eat, and if it withdrew two hoofs within, you may eat’. Presumably this means, if it withdrew the hoof within, you may eat the hoof! — No, it means, if it withdrew the hoof within, you may eat the foetus. But if it refers to the foetus, why does it state ‘if it withdrew [the hoof]’? Even if it did not withdraw it [the foetus would be permitted]! — R. Nahman b. Isaac said: It would not have been necessary to mention [the withdrawal of the hoof within] except in so far as it affects the part where it is cut off. But since two texts are adduced here, presumably one teaches that the actual limb [is permitted] and the other the rule with regard to the place where [the limb is] cut off. — No. One teaches the rule with regard to the place where it is cut off and the other teaches that a foetus with uncloven hoofs that is in the womb of the cow [is permitted] even according to the view of R. Simeon. For the ruling of R. Simeon, that an animal with uncloven hoofs that was brought forth by a cow is forbidden, applies only to the case where it came forth into the world, but where it was still within the womb of the dam it is permitted.

Ulla said in the name of R. Johanan: The actual limb is permitted. Whereupon Rab Judah said to Ulla: ‘But both Rab and Samuel have said that the actual limb is forbidden!’ He replied: ‘Would that I had of the dust of Rab and Samuel! I would fill my eyes with it!’ Nevertheless thus said R. Johanan: Everything was included in the general rule of the verse: Ye shall not eat any flesh in the field torn of beasts [trefah]. But since Scripture expressly mentioned the case of the sin-offering namely that if it was taken out of its bounds and also brought in again it is forbidden, it is clear that only in the case of a sin-offering is this so, but in all other cases if they got back within their bounds they would be permitted.

An objection was raised. It is written: Ye shall not eat any flesh in the field torn of beasts [trefah]. Why does the verse add [trefah]? [for this reason.] Since we find that Second Tithe or Firstfruits, if they were taken out of their bounds, and were brought in again they are permitted; now we might have thought that in this case, too, that is also the law, the verse therefore adds, trefah. How is this derived from the verse? Rabbah said: It is like trefah; just as a trefah animal, once it has been rendered trefah, can never be permitted, so also flesh which had got out of its bounds can never be permitted again! This is indeed a refutation of Ulla's view. The Master said: ‘Since we find that Second Tithe or Firstfruits, if they were taken out of their bounds, etc.' Where do we find this? From the following verse: Thou mayest not eat within thy gates the tithe of thy corn, etc., that is to say, only within thy gates thou mayest not eat them, but if they were taken out [of Jerusalem] and brought in again, they are permitted.

Those in the West report it in this version: Rab says: The emergence of a limb is regarded as the birth of that limb; R. Johanan says: The emergence of a limb is not regarded as the birth of that limb. What is the actual difference between them? — Whether to render forbidden the lesser portion of the limb that was within or not.

The question was raised: According to him who says that the emergence of a limb is not regarded as the birth of that limb, what would be the law if the foetus first put forth one fore-limb and withdrew it within, and then the other fore-limb and withdrew it within, and so on until, all in all, the greater portion of the foetus had emerged? Are we to say that here it is obvious that the greater portion of the foetus has emerged [and it is deemed fully born], or since each part had been withdrawn within it remains withdrawn? And if you were to accept the view that since each part had been withdrawn within it remains withdrawn, it will further be asked, what would be the position if the foetus put forth a fore-limb and it was cut off, then another fore-limb and it was cut off [and so with the other limbs] until the greater portion of the foetus had been cut off? Are we to say that it is obvious that the greater portion has emerged [and it is deemed fully born], or perhaps we should say [it is deemed born] only when the greater portion of the foetus emerged at one time? — Come and hear. [We have learnt:]

____________________
(1) Of the foetus and of the dam.

(2) As the limb that protruded was not affected by the slaughtering of the dam, it is unclean like nebelah, and renders unclean by contact the rest of the foetus as well as the flesh of the dam.

(3) The Sages hold that the limb that protruded is to this extent affected by the slaughtering that it has thereby been rendered clean and is not a source of uncleanness like nebelah. This is on all fours with the case of a trefah animal which, if slaughtered, is thereby rendered clean and is not regarded as nebelah. Nevertheless according to Rabbinic decree, the flesh of a slaughtered trefah animal would render consecrated things unclean by contact, v. infra 73a.

(4) So that the ruling in the second clause ‘It may not be eaten’ only means that a little more than the part which protruded may not be eaten but the rest of the foetus may.

(5) The modern Khuzistan.

(6) These words are in Deut. XIV, 6: And every beast that parteth the hoof, and cleaveth the cleft into two hoofs . . . in the beast, ye may eat, from which is derived the general law that the foetus within the dam is rendered permitted by the slaughtering of the dam. The interpretation is: And every beast . . . in the beast, ye may eat; the hoof . . . in the beast, ye may eat; and two hoofs . . . in the beast ye may eat. That is, if the foetus put forth two hoofs (i.e., two legs) and then withdrew one within, the latter would be permitted by the slaughtering of the dam but not the other which remained protruding. If, however, both hoofs were withdrawn within, both would be permitted.

(7) And the Baraita reported by Abimi informs us that if the foetus withdrew the hoof within, one may even eat the part where the hoof was subsequently cut off, though, of course, not the hoof itself. Likewise, if the foetus withdrew its two hoofs within, one may even eat the part where each hoof was cut off.

(8) The expressions ‘the hoof’ and ‘two hoofs’: v. p. 368, n. 9.

(9) I.e., if the limb was withdrawn within, even the limb itself would be permitted; and if the limb was not withdrawn within, then the part where it was subsequently cut off would be permitted. As far as the part where the limb is cut off is concerned there should be no difference in law whether it put forth one or two hoofs, so that there would be no need of two texts to permit it in both cases.

(10) I.e., only if the limb was withdrawn within would the part where it was subsequently cut off be permitted.

(11) V. Bek. 6b.

(12) Such was his veneration for these two scholars.

(13) Ex. XXII, 30. The general proposition is that anything that gets out of its prescribed bounds (i.e., into the field) is forbidden. V. supra p. 365 n. 6.

(14) The verse in Lev. X, 18 clearly demonstrates that the flesh of a sin-offering if taken out beyond the Temple precincts is rendered unfit and must be burnt, whether or not it was once again brought into the Temple precincts. Now it must be remembered that the case of the sin-offering is just one of the instances implied in Ex. XXII, 30, so that it need not have been expressly mentioned (v. supra p. 365, n. 6). The fact that it is stated suggests that in a particular respect it is different from other cases of ‘out of bounds’, and that is, that in this case even if it were brought back within its bounds it would be of no avail and the flesh would still have to be burnt. On the other hand, in all other cases of this class, the fact that it has been brought in again within bounds would be an effective remedy.

(15) The case of the limb of a foetus which protruded from the womb.

(16) Even though it had been brought back within bounds.

(17) Deut. XII, 17.

(18) The dispute between Rab and R. Johanan as to whether or not the actual limb which had emerged but which is now withdrawn is rendered permitted by the slaughtering of the dam.

(19) Lit., ‘there is birth to limbs’. And the slaughtering of the dam would not render this limb permitted even through it was drawn in within the womb at the time of the slaughtering.

(20) So that if the limb was within the womb at the time of the slaughtering it would be rendered permitted.

(21) Between the first version of the dispute and the second version (Rashi). According to the Alfasi the question is: What is the practical issue between Rab and R. Johanan? For according to the version in the West, even R. Johanan agrees that the part of the limb which had emerged is forbidden. V. Asheria.l.

(22) I.e., the greater portion of a limb emerged but a little of it remained inside. There will in this case be a difference of view as to the opinion expressed by Rab according to the first or second version. According to the second version Rab maintains that the emergence of a limb is regarded as the birth of that limb, similarly be would hold that the emergence of the greater portion of a limb is reckoned as the birth of that entire limb, hence even the lesser portion of the limb which had never emerged would not be rendered permitted by the slaughtering of the dam. According to the first version this lesser portion would be rendered permitted, for it is only the actual part of the limb which had emerged that is forbidden. According to Alfasi, the law as to the lesser portion of the limb that remained within is the issue between Rab and R. Johanan.

(23) And this even according to him who maintains that the emergence of a limb is deemed to be the birth of that limb.

Talmud - Mas. Chullin 69a

THIS IS THE RULE: WHAT IS FROM THE BODY OF THE ANIMAL IS FORBIDDEN, BUT WHAT IS NOT FROM THE BODY OF THE ANIMAL IS PERMITTED. Now what does the term NOT FROM THE BODY include? Surely it includes such a case as the above!— No. It includes a foetus with uncloven hoofs which is in the womb of the cow. And [it is permitted even] according to R. Simeon. For although R. Simeon ruled that an animal with uncloven hoofs which was brought forth by a cow is forbidden, that is so only where it came forth into the world, but where it was still in the womb of the dam it is permitted.

R. Hanania propounded the question: What if the foetus [in the womb of an animal consecrated as a peace-offering] put forth its fore-limb into the Temple court? For [it might be argued,] since the Temple court is the bounds for consecrated animals it would also be the bounds for this [sc. the foetus]; or it is not the bounds for this [foetus], for the bounds of the foetus are the womb of its dam! Whereupon Abaye said to him: But you might have raised this question with regard to consecrated animals which are holy in a minor degree in Jerusalem. Nevertheless you did not raise the question with regard to consecrated animals which are holy in a minor degree, because it is clear that the bounds of the foetus are the womb of its dam; then in the previous question too we must say that the bounds of the foetus are the womb of the dam.

Ilfa raised this question: What is the law if a foetus put forth its fore-limb [out of the womb of its dam] after the first [throat] organ but before the second organ [was cut]? Is the first organ to be reckoned together with the second in order to render it [the fore-limb] clean so that it be not nebelah or not?— Raba answered: Certainly it must be so reckoned; for if the [cutting of the] first organ followed by the [cutting of the] second organ has the effect of rendering [the animal] permitted to be eaten, then surely it has the effect of rendering [the limb] clean so that it be not nebelah!

R. Jeremiah raised the question: Are we concerned at all about its offspring? What are the circumstances of the case? If we say that it covered a normal cow, then why is this question raised only with regard to this animal which has a limb forbidden on account of its protrusion [prior to the slaughtering of the dam]? Indeed it might be raised with regard to the more general case of an animal that was taken out [alive from the womb of the slaughtered dam]. For R. Mesharsheya said: According to him who maintains that we must take into account the seed of the male if an animal that had been taken out [alive from the womb of the slaughtered dam] covered a normal cow there is no remedy for the offspring?— The question can be considered only in the case where it covered a cow which, like itself, had been taken out [alive from the womb of the slaughtered dam]. What then is the position of the offspring? Do we say that each limb [of the progenitors] produces the identical limb [in the offspring], so that here it must be cut off but the rest is permitted; or do we hold that the seed is mixed up? Subsequently he [R. Jeremiah] said: It is obvious that the seed is mixed up, for otherwise the blind should produce a blind offspring, and the crippled a crippled offspring. We therefore must say that the seed is mixed up, but the question that was raised was really this: an ordinary animal is the product of the forbidden fat and of the blood [of the sire], nevertheless it is permitted, then here also it should be permitted; or perhaps we only permit the product of two prohibited substances but not of three? But according to whom is it? According to R. Meir there are the prohibitions of the forbidden fat and of the blood but not of the protruded limb, and according to R. Judah there is indeed the prohibition of the protruded limb but not of the forbidden fat. For it was taught: The law of the sciatic nerve applies also to a foetus, and the fat [of the foetus] is forbidden. So R. Meir. R. Judah says: It does not apply to a foetus, and the fat [of the foetus] is permitted! — We must therefore say that the outcome [of prohibited causes] is to be disregarded, and it is certainly permitted; and the question put, was really this: May one drink the milk [of this particular animal]?

After all the milk of all animals is very much like a limb taken away from the living animal, nevertheless it is permitted, likewise in this case [it should be permitted]; or perhaps [we ought to distinguish this case, for] in all other cases the prohibition can be remedied by slaughtering, but in this case it cannot. This must remain undecided.

WHATSOEVER IS CUT OFF, etc. Whence do we know this? — For it is written: And every beast that parteth the hoof . . . in the beast, [it ye may eat]; this includes the foetus. If so, one ought to be able to make it a substitute for a consecrated animal. How is it then that we have learnt: ‘One cannot make a limb a substitute for a consecrated foetus, or a foetus for a consecrated limb, or a limb or a foetus for a whole [consecrated animal], or a whole animal for either of these’? Rather it is derived from the expression: And every . . . in the beast, which includes the foetus. If so, even if part of the spleen or of the kidneys of the animal was cut away [and left inside] it should also be permitted, wherefore have we learnt, ‘WHATSOEVER IS CUT OFF FROM THE FOETUS IN THE WOMB [AND LEFT INSIDE] MAY BE EATEN, BUT WHATSOEVER IS CUT OFF FROM THE SPLEEN OR THE KIDNEYS [OF THE ANIMAL AND LEFT INSIDE] MAY NOT BE EATEN’? — The verse adds: It [ye may eat], that is, when ‘it’ is whole [ye may eat everything found therein] but not when part is wanting. But then according to this, if one slaughtered an animal and found therein a sort of dove the latter should be permitted, wherefore has R. Johanan stated: ‘If one slaughtered an animal and found therein a sort of dove it is forbidden to be eaten’?

(1) For it cannot apply only to the case where a limb of the foetus was cut off, as that case is expressly stated earlier in the Mishnah.

(2) I.e., where a small portion only of the foetus remained within the womb, although the greater part of the foetus had been cut off limb by limb as each emerged, it is still permitted.

(3) I.e., while the sacrifice was being slaughtered within the precincts of the Temple court the foetus put forth a limb out of the womb into the space of the Temple court.

(4) And therefore even the limb that protruded would be rendered permitted by the slaughtering of the dam for it had not gone out beyond the bounds of the Temple court.

(5) E.g., where the foetus in the womb of an animal consecrated for a peace-offering put forth a limb out of the womb in Jerusalem, and withdrew it within, and subsequently the dam was slaughtered in the Temple court. Now according to him who maintains that even though the limb was withdrawn within at the time of the slaughtering the limb is nevertheless forbidden, the question here is, would the slaughtering of the dam render permitted even the limb that had emerged previously, since the limb had not got beyond the bounds prescribed for the eating of the flesh of a peace-offering, or not?

(6) So that the limb would not be rendered permitted by the slaughtering of the dam.

(7) For when cutting the first organ, at which time the limb had not yet protruded, the effect of that cutting was twofold, (a) to render the limb of the foetus clean, and (b) to render it permitted to be eaten; but at the cutting of the second organ, at which time the limb had already protruded, the only possible effect of that cutting was to render the limb clean (v. infra 72a). Since the effects produced by the cutting of each organ are not equal, the question arises whether the first organ can be reckoned together with the second in order to produce the effect common to both, viz., that the limb be rendered clean. V. supra p. 176, n. 1.

(8) The answer is this: if only the question of rendering the limb clean is considered it is immaterial whether the foetus put forth its limb before or after or in the course of the slaughtering. Therefore the effect of cutting both organs must be to render the limb clean. The fact that at the time of the cutting of the first organ it was possible that the entire foetus, including this limb, might have been rendered permitted to be eaten, and that this became impossible because of the putting forth of the limb, can be ignored. The argument is an a fortiori argument because it is well established that less is required to render an animal clean than is required to render it permitted to be eaten.

(9) This foetus, which had put forth a limb during the slaughtering of its dam, was taken out of the womb alive. Consequently the whole of it is permitted to be eaten, and strictly without first being slaughtered as it has already been rendered permitted by the slaughtering of its dam, except for that limb which would remain forbidden always. In the course of time it was mated with a cow and begot a calf. The question therefore is, whether the limb of the calf corresponding to the forbidden limb of its sire is also forbidden or not.

(10) v. infra 79a. The meaning is that the creation of each offspring is directly attributable half to the female dam and half to the male sire.

(11) Because from the maternal side it requires to be slaughtered, but from the paternal side it does not; hence the offspring is considered, notionally, as half slaughtered, and nothing now can be done to it to remedy this state.

(12) The cow, too, had one limb forbidden on account of it having protruded at the time of the slaughtering of its dam (Tosaf.).

(13) I.e., the limb which corresponds to the forbidden limb of the male sire; or, according to Tosaf., of its progenitors, v. Maharam.

(14) I.e., the seed represents all the organs of the male as one whole, and cannot be distributed into separate parts, each part to represent a distinct organ; consequently the offspring being the product of a sire which has a forbidden limb is entirely forbidden.

(15) For it is held that every part of the body is a contributory factor in the act of procreation, including also the two forbidden substances in the animal body, viz., the blood and the fat.

(16) Even though in the case of this offspring there is an additional prohibited factor, viz., the forbidden limb of the male sire.

(17) Namely, that in a foetus taken out alive from the womb of its slaughtered dam after it had protruded a limb, there are inherent three prohibitions, viz., that of the blood, of the forbidden fat, and of the protruded limb.

(18) I.e., according to whom are there three prohibitions.

(19) For according to R. Meir, v. infra 74a, even the foetus that was within the womb at the time of the slaughtering of its dam is not rendered permitted thereby, consequently there is no particular prohibition attached to it on account of the limb that protruded.

(20) V. infra 89b, Cf. Gen, XXXII, 33.

(21) Infra 74b, 94b, Tos. Hul. VII.

(22) Which as a foetus had put forth a limb out of the womb during the slaughtering of its dam and was afterwards extracted from the womb.

(23) For the prohibition of the protruded limb can in no manner be removed.

(24) Deut. XIV, 6. The interpretation is, every beast in a beast, i.e., the foetus in the womb of its dam, is permitted by the slaughtering of the dam.

(25) That the foetus is referred to biblically as a ‘beast’.

(26) Tem. 10a. Cf. Lev. XXVII, 10, where the term ‘beast’ is also used and on this account the law is established that a foetus or a limb is precluded from the law of substitution.

(27) Deut. ibid. The implication is that everything found in the beast is permitted.

(28) Sc. the slaughtered animal.

Talmud - Mas. Chullin 69b

--- That [which is found within the animal] must have cloven hoofs [in order to be permitted], but this is not the case here. But then according to this, an animal with uncloven hoofs found in the womb of a cow should be forbidden.¹ — Surely the following teaching of the school of R. Ishmael was taught in the school of R. Simeon b. Yohai,² viz. The verse states: The hoof . . . in the beast, ye may eat.³

R. Shimi b. Ashi said: In truth it is as was suggested originally,⁴ and as for your difficulty from [the Mishnah], ‘One cannot make a limb a substitute etc.’, [the answer is that] that is the opinion of R. Simeon who compares the law of Substitution to the law of Cattle Tithe,⁵ so that just as the law of cattle tithe does not apply to limbs or a foetus⁶ so also the law of substitution does not apply to limbs or a foetus. Whence do you know this?⁷ — Because we have learnt,⁸ R. Jose said,⁹ Is it not the case that, in connection with animal offerings, if one said: ‘Let the foot of this animal be a burnt-offering’, the whole is a burnt-offering? Similarly, if one said: ‘Let the foot of this animal be a substitute for that [consecrated animal], the whole animal should become consecrated as a substitute. Now with whom does R. Jose argue thus? Do you say with R. Meir and R. Judah? But they do not hold this view. Surely it was taught: I might have thought that if one said: ‘Let the foot of this animal be a burnt-offering’, the whole would become a burnt-offering, it is therefore written: All that any man giveth of such unto the Lord shall be holy, that is, of such’ shall be holy, but not the whole of it. But I might have thought that the whole animal is unconsecrated, it therefore says: ‘shall be’, that is, it shall remain in its former status. What is to be done? The animal must be sold for the purpose of burnt-offerings and the money realised is ordinary unconsecrated money except for the value of this limb. So R. Meir and R. Judah. R. Jose and R. Simeon, however, say: Whence do we know that if one said: ‘Let the foot of this animal be a burnt-offering’, the whole is a burnt-offering? Because it is written, shall be, which suggests that the whole of it is holy. With whom then does R. Jose argue [in the first case]? Is it with R. Meir and R. Judah? But they do not hold this view. It therefore can only be with R. Simeon. — It need not be so, for R. Jose argues on the basis of his own independent view.

MISHNAH. IF AN ANIMAL WAS IN DIFFICULT LABOUR WITH ITS FIRST YOUNG, ONE MAY CUT OFF EACH LIMB [AS IT COMES OUT] AND THROW IT TO THE DOGS. IF THE GREATER PORTION CAME FORTH IT MUST BE BURIED, AND THE DAM IS EXEMPT FROM THE LAW OF THE FIRSTLING.

GEMARA. It was stated: If a third [of the firstling] came forth and was [immediately] sold to a gentile, and then another third came forth, R. Huna says: It is holy. Rabbah says: It is not holy. R. Huna says it is holy, because he maintains that the holiness is retrospective, so that as soon as the greater portion has come forth it becomes evident that it was holy from the first, and he who purchased has purchased nothing at all. Rabbah, however, says it is not holy, because he maintains that the holiness is prospective, so that he who purchased has made a valid purchase. They are indeed consistent in their views, for it was also stated: If a third [of the firstling] was extracted from the side and two thirds came forth normally through the womb, R. Huna says. It is not holy, Rabbah says: It is holy. R. Huna says it is not holy, for he maintains his principle that the holiness is retrospective, and here when the greater part first came forth, it had not entirely passed through the womb. Rabbah, however, says it is holy, because he maintains his principle too, that the holiness is prospective, and here the greater part had come forth through the womb. Now both disputes had to be [reported]. For if we had learnt only this dispute, we might have said that only here does R. Huna hold [that the holiness is retrospective], for [if he were to hold otherwise] he would be tending to leniency, whereas in the other dispute since [he would by such a view] be tending to stringency, I might say that he would agree with Rabbah.

(1) But this is permitted according to all opinions, even according to R. Simeon, v. supra 68b.
(2) This is probably the correct meaning of the line which involves a slight alteration of the text, but the emendation is supported by MS. M. V. Yoma 59a, Zeb. 53b, 119b. Cur. edd.: A Tanna of the school of R. Ishmael taught like R. Simeon b. Yohai.
(3) In this verse Deut. Xlv, 6, the terms ‘hoof’ and ‘hoofs’ are both employed, and the interpretation suggested is that an animal with one hoof, i.e., which has uncloven hoofs, or an animal with hoofs, i.e., which has cloven hoofs, if found in the beast, may be eaten.
(4) That the term ‘beast’ includes the foetus also.
(5) Cf. Lev. XXVII, 32. According to those Rabbis, however, who do not agree with R. Simeon, the law is clear that a foetus can be rendered a substitute for a consecrated animal.
(6) Since the verse: Lev. ibid. ‘whatsoever passeth under the rod’ cannot apply to these.
(7) That the opinion expressed in the Mishnah quoted from Tem. 10a, ‘One cannot render a limb a substitute etc.’ is that of R. Simeon.
(8) Tem. 10a.
(9) R. Jose is of the opinion that a limb can be made a substitute for a consecrated animal and supports his view by the
The argument he sets forth in the text.

(10) The opinion preceding R. Jose's with which R. Jose differs is expressed anonymously.

(11) I.e., the view stated in the premise of R. Jose's argument. It is evident from the form of his argument that his disputant would concede the law assumed in the premise.

(12) Lev. XXVII, 9.

(13) Save that the owner must redeem the limb by paying into the Temple treasury a sum of money equal to the value of the limb.

(14) Heb. לְהִще, ‘shall be’, a term redundant in the verse. The exposition is that even where part only of the animal was consecrated, the whole ‘shall be holy’.

(15) And it is not to be assumed that his premise was conceded by others. R. Jose merely bases his argument upon his own interpretation of verses.

(16) For it is not holy as a firstling until it has been born, i.e., when at least the greater portion of it had emerged.

(17) I.e., at the same time, v. Gemara.

(18) And may not be put to any use.

(19) I.e., the young which she bears hereafter will not be considered a firstling. This rule, according to Rashi, refers to both clauses of the Mishnah, but according to Maim. only to the second.

(20) So that now the greater portion of the firstling has been born.

(21) I.e., at the beginning of the delivery it was holy, so that the gentile purchaser could acquire no rights therein.

(22) I.e., at the beginning of the delivery no holiness attached to it, and the gentile purchaser of the first third has made a valid purchase. Consequently this firstling even when it is fully born is not holy because of the share which the gentile has in it. Cf. Num. III, 13, and Bek. I, 2.

(23) According to R. Huna it is simultaneous with the birth of the greater part of the young that the holiness attaches. If therefore at this moment there is some cause which prevents the holiness from attaching, the young will never be deemed holy. In this case the holiness does not attach because the first part of the young was extracted from the side and did not pass normally through the womb. Cf. Ex. XIII, 2 ‘Whatsoever openeth the womb’.

(24) Even though this occurred only at the end of delivery, the firstling is holy.

(25) Sc. that the holiness is prospective.

(26) Since the young would not be deemed holy as a firstling.

Talmud - Mas. Chullin 70a

And if we had Garnet only the other dispute, we might have said that only there does Rabbah hold [that the holiness is prospective], whereas in this dispute I might say that he would agree with R. Huna. Therefore both [disputes] had to be [reported].

[An objection was raised]. We have learnt: IF AN ANIMAL WAS IN DIFFICULT LABOUR WITH ITS FIRST YOUNG, ONE MAY CUT OFF EACH LIMB [AS IT COMES OUT] AND THROW IT TO THE DOGS. Presumably this means, each limb is cut off and left where it is.¹ Now if you hold that the holiness is retrospective then it [sc. each limb] ought to be buried!² — No, the meaning is that each limb is cut off and thrown [to dogs]. But where each limb was cut off and left there, you would hold, would you not, that it must be buried? If so, why does the Tanna state in the second clause, IF THE GREATER PORTION CAME FORTH³ IT MUST BE BURIED? He should have made a distinction in the first case, thus: This holds good only where each limb was cut off and thrown [to the dogs], but where each limb was cut off and left there, it must be buried!⁴ — This is actually what is meant: This holds good only where each limb was cut off and thrown [to the dogs], but where each limb was cut off and left there, it is considered as if the greater portion came forth [at the same time], and must be buried. Raba raised the question: Do we apply the principle of ‘the greater part’ to limbs or not?⁵ What are the circumstances of the case? Should you suggest the following case, namely, that the greater part [of the young] came out [of the womb] and this included the lesser part of a limb, the question therefore being: Are we to reckon this lesser part of the limb, which is outside, together with the greater part of its limb,⁶ or with the greater part of the young?⁷ — But it is obvious that we do not ignore the greater part of the young and take into consideration the greater part of the limb! Rather the case must be as follows: half of the young came out and this included the greater part of a limb; the question therefore is: Are we to reckon the lesser part of the limb which is inside together with the greater part of the limb, or not? — Come and hear. [We have learnt:] IF THE GREATER PORTION CAME FORTH IT MUST BE BURIED. Now what is meant by ‘the greater portion’? Does it mean actually the greater portion [of the young]? But surely we have learnt before now the principle that the greater part is like the whole! It would mean therefore that only half came out but it included the greater part of a limb — No, the fact was, that the greater part [of the young] came out and it included the lesser part of a limb, and [the Mishnah] teaches us that we must not ignore the greater part of the young and consider the greater part of the limb. Raba raised these questions: What is the law if one wrapped it up in bast, or in a garment, or in its afterbirth? [You ask] ‘In its afterbirth’? But that is the normal condition! — Render, In the afterbirth of another animal. What if She wrapped it up and got hold of it and brought it out? But what are the circumstances? If [you say] it came out with the head first, then it has thereby ‘opened the womb’. Rather it must be that it came out with the legs first. What if a weasel [inserted its head into the womb and] took the foetus into its mouth and thus extracted it? [You ask] ‘And thus extracted it’? Then it has brought it forth — Render thus: What if the weasel took the foetus into its mouth, extracted it thus, inserted its head again into the womb and spewed it out therein, and then the foetus came forth of its own? What is the law if one joined two wombs [of two animals] to each other and the foetus issued from the one womb and entered the other? Shall we say that it exempts only its own [dam from the law of the firstling] but it does not exempt another [animal] or perhaps it exempts also another animal? — These questions remain undecided.

R. Aha raised this question: What is the law if the walls of the womb opened wide [and the foetus fell out if it]? Is it the air space of the womb that renders the firstling holy, — a condition which exists in our case, or is it the contact with the womb that renders the firstling holy — a condition which is absent in our case? Mar son of R. Ashi raised this question: What if the walls of the womb were torn away? [You ask] Torn away? Then there is no womb here at all! It means: What if the walls of the womb were torn away and it now rested on the neck of the young? Can [the womb only] render holy when it is in its natural place and not when it is out of its place, or even when out of its place it can also render holy? R. Jeremiah put this question to R. Zera: What if the walls of the womb were peeled? He replied: You are touching upon a question which we have already discussed. For R. Zera had raised this question (others say: R. Zera had put this question to R. Assi): What is the law if what was left [of the womb] was more than what was gone, but the young passed through the part that was gone; or if what was gone was more than what was left but the young passed through that part that was left of it? Now I was in doubt only in such a case as where what was gone [of the womb] was more than what was left, for there at least something was left of it. But in the case where the walls of the wombs were entirely peeled I have no doubt at all.

(1) And even though there may be before us a number of limbs which together would make up the greater part of the young, each may nevertheless be thrown to the dogs, apparently because the holiness is not retrospective, contra R. Huna.

(2) For as soon as the greater part is collected together it appears retrospectively that this firstling was holy from the beginning, and, being dead, it must therefore be buried.

(3) Which implies at the same time.

(4) And it would not have been necessary to teach us that where the greater part of the young came forth in one mass it must be buried.

(5) Is the lesser part of a limb always to be reckoned with the greater part thereof or not?

(6) In which case, when we subtract this lesser part of a limb from that which has come out and reckon it together with the rest of that limb which is within the womb, the result is that the greater portion of the young has in law not emerged and is not deemed fully born; consequently it may be cut up for dogs, for there is no holiness upon it.

(7) And the young would be regarded now as fully born, and would at once be holy as a firstling.

(8) So that it would be regarded as if the greater part of the young had emerged and would therefore be deemed fully
And the Mishnah teaches us that in such a case the lesser part of the limb, which is inside, is to be counted with the rest of the limb, and thus render the young fully born.

Even though the greater portion of the limb is still within the womb, the lesser portion, however, having emerged, is reckoned with the rest of the young that has emerged, so that the young is now deemed fully born.

The foetus was wrapped up in one of these articles and was thus extracted from the womb of its dam but no part of the foetus came into direct contact with the womb. Now it is the womb that renders the firstling holy, for throughout the Torah the firstling is described as that which 'openeth the womb' (e.g., Ex. XIII, 2). The question raised by Raba is this: must there be actual contact between the foetus and the womb when the foetus is being delivered, and otherwise it would not be regarded holy as a firstling, or is it sufficient that it passes through the womb although it makes no direct contact?

The subject of the verb used is feminine whereas in the first question of Raba it is masculine. According to Rashi it refers to the woman who assists the delivery. She wrapped her hands around the foetus and thus extracted it so that there was no contact between the foetus and the womb of its dam. Tosaf. report a textual variant on the authority of R. Hananel; instead of הֶזְרָה 'she got hold of it' the reading is הֶזְרָה 'his sister'. The interpretation, accordingly, is this: there were twins within the womb, one male and the other female, and at the time of delivery it so happened that the female wrapped around and covered the male, so that there was no actual contact between the male twin and the womb.

V. next note.

The question 'What are the circumstances?' refers, according to Rashi, to all the cases raised by Raba, and the exposition is as follows: It certainly cannot be thought of that the garment etc. was wrapped around the foetus whilst it was still in the womb of its dam, as it is hardly possible to do so; some part therefore of the foetus must have emerged. Now it cannot be the head, for then the question could not arise, since by the emergence of the head it is deemed fully born, and so holy as a firstling. It can only be, therefore, that the legs of the foetus had emerged and then the whole of it was wrapped up. According to the variant text adopted by Tosaf. (v. n. 2) and the interpretation suggested, this question of the Gemara refers only to the last question of Raba, and the exposition is as follows: If the head of the female twin came out first, then the male cannot in any circumstance be deemed holy as a firstling, for it had not 'opened the womb' but was born second. It must be, therefore, that the legs of the female twin came out first, and these were wrapped around the head of the male, so that, were it not for the question of direct contact with the womb, the male twin, being born first, by virtue of the emergence of its head, would he deemed a firstling.

Since it was not brought forth naturally but was extracted by the weasel it would not be holy as a firstling (R. Gershom). According to Rashi the position is identical with the first case stated by Raba.

And the question is whether it would be holy as firstling when later it is delivered naturally from the womb of its dam.

When the foetus leaves the womb of the second animal, would the latter thereby be exempt from the law of the firstling, so that what it next bears would not be deemed holy as a firstling, or not?

A firstling emerging from a womb.

It being assumed that the womb was gone before the young emerged, in which case there is no doubt at all that it is not holy as a firstling.

During a difficult delivery the young had wrenched away the entire womb of its dam and had emerged with it upon its neck.

The meaning of this is very doubtful. Rashi suggests two interpretations: (i) the inner membrane of the womb had peeled away. i.e., the whole of the womb was intact except that it had been reduced in thickness by the removal of a layer of its substance; (ii) the whole of the womb within had been destroyed but the external edges remained intact. The Aruch suggests, (iii) the whole of the womb was intact but the external edges were cut away.

In each case the young was located in the forepart of the womb which constitutes but the smaller part of the womb; in the first case, however, only the forepart was gone but the rest remained intact, whereas in the second case only the forepart remained intact but the rest was gone.

That the firstling which passed through this mutilated womb is not holy. It must be pointed out that with regard to these questions the Rabbis of old already recognised that they were purely of academic interest and in no wise did they consider the actual occurrence of such cases as probable or even possible. V. Tosaf. Ketub. 4b s.v. תַחַל, and also Tosaf. Yeb. 102b s.v. נֵבֶל.

Talmud - Mas. Chullin 70b
MISHNAH. IF A FOETUS HAD DIED WITHIN THE WOMB OF ITS DAM AND THE SHEPHERD PUT IN HIS HAND AND TOUCHED IT, HE IS CLEAN, WHETHER IT WAS A CLEAN OR UNCLEAN ANIMAL. R. JOSE THE GALILEAN SAYS, IF IT WAS AN UNCLEAN ANIMAL HE WOULD BE UNCLEAN, AND IF IT WAS A CLEAN ANIMAL HE WOULD BE CLEAN.

GEMARA. What is the reason of the first Tanna's view? — R. Hisda said: It is an a fortiori argument; for if the dam [when slaughtered] has the effect of rendering [the foetus] permitted to be eaten then surely [whilst alive] it will at least have the effect of rendering it clean so that it be not nebelah. We find that this is so of clean animals; whence do we know it of unclean animals? — From the verse: And if any beast die, that is, an unclean animal, of which ye may eat, that is, a clean animal. The unclean animal is equated with the clean: as the foetus within a clean animal is clean so the foetus within an unclean animal is also clean.

And what is the reason for the view of R. Jose the Galilean? — R. Isaac said: It is written: And whatsoever goeth upon its paws among all beasts that go on all fours, [ . . . whoso toucheth their carcass shall be unclean],4 that is, whatsoever goeth upon unparted hoofs within the living beast I have declared to be unclean unto you. This being so, even an animal with unparted hoofs [found dead] in the womb of a [living] cow should also be unclean, for it is of those that go upon unparted hoofs within the beast! — [The verse refers to those] that go upon unparted hoofs within the beasts that go on four [hoofs], but this is a case of one that goes upon unparted hoofs within a beast that goes on eight5 [hoofs]. Then a cow found in the womb of a camel should not be unclean,6 for it is a case of one that goes upon eight [hoofs] within a beast that goes on four! — ‘Goeth’ [might have been written, but there is actually written], whatsoever goeth, thus including the case of a cow found in the womb of a camel.7 Then an animal with unparted hoofs found in the womb of an animal also with unparted hoofs8 should be unclean,9 for it is a case of one that goes upon four [hoofs] within a beast that goes on four! — For this purpose R. Hisda's a fortiori argument might be applied.10 To this R. Ahadboi b. Ammi demurred: Then the pig within the womb of a sow should not be unclean,11 for it is a case of one that goes upon eight hoofs within a beast that also goes upon eight! — R. Nahman b. Isaac therefore said, [R. Jose's view is derived] from the following verse: If anyone touch any unclean thing, whether it be the carcass of an unclean beast, or the carcass of unclean cattle, or the carcass of unclean creeping things.12 [Now it will be asked:] Does the carcass of unclean cattle alone render unclean but not that of clean cattle? What is it then?13 It is the young [within the womb]; in unclean animals it is unclean, and in clean animals clean. But since this has been derived from the verse adduced by R. Nahman b. Isaac, to what purpose do I put the verse stated by R. Isaac? — Were it not for the verse stated by R. Isaac, I might have said that the entire verse [adduced by R. Nahman b. Isaac] is employed for the purpose of Rabbi's teaching;14 he therefore teaches us otherwise.15

It was taught: R. Jonathan said: I said to Ben ‘Azzai: We have learnt that the carcass of clean cattle conveys uncleanness, that the carcass of unclean cattle conveys uncleanness, and that the carcass of unclean wild animals conveys uncleanness; but we have not learnt it about the carcass of clean wild animals. Whence do we know it? Said he to me: It is written: Whatsoever goeth upon its paws among all beasts that go on all fours.16 Said I to him: The verse does not say: ‘all beasts’, it says ‘among all beasts’, and this clearly deals with the rule concerning animals that go upon unparted hoofs found within the beasts.17 Said he to me: And what does Ishmael say in this matter? Said I to him: It is written: And if any cattle die,18 that is unclean cattle, ‘of which ye may eat’, that is clean cattle. And we have learnt that wild animals are included under the term ‘cattle’, and cattle are included under the term ‘wild animals’. Hence clean wild animals would come under ‘clean cattle’, unclean wild animals under ‘unclean cattle’, respectively.
(2) For the basis of this a fortiori argument v. supra p. 374, end of n. 1.
(3) Lev. XI, 39.
(4) Ibid. 27. The term ‘goeth upon its paws’ is interpreted by the Rabbis as referring to an animal that has single or undivided hoofs; and ‘among all beasts’ is interpreted literally ‘in the living beast’, thus referring to the unclean foetus in the womb of the living beast.
(5) i.e., four parted hoofs.
(6) And should not render him that touches it unclean. But R. Jose holds that in all cases the foetus within the womb of an unclean animal is unclean.
(7) That it is unclean.
(8) The dam, however, wag a permitted animal as it was born of a clean animal.
(9) I.e., should render unclean.
(10) V. supra; if the slaughtering of the dam renders the foetus permitted to be eaten it surely renders it clean!
(11) Nor render one unclean.
(13) In which there is implied a distinction between the carcass of clean cattle and that of unclean cattle.
(14) V. infra 72a. Since the verse Lev. V, 2, adduced by R. Nahman b. Isaac, is required for Rabbi's exposition, the only guiding rule in the law of uncleanness of beasts is that contained in Lev. XI, 39, where by reason of the analogy implied in that verse clean and unclean cattle are placed on the same footing.
(15) For since R. Isaac has dealt with Lev. XI, 27, whereby he has drawn a distinction between clean and unclean cattle, R. Nahman b. Isaac is now free to employ Lev. V, 2, in order to draw a further distinction between them as regards the foetus, so therefore only a portion of this latter verse is employed for Rabbi's exposition.
(16) Lev. XI, 27. The verse continues: whose toucheth their carcass shall be unclean; hence all beasts even clean beasts convey uncleanness. Throughout this passage the Heb. terms בְּכֵלָה and בְּבָלָה are translated literally and according to their strict meaning, the former connoting undomesticated animals and is translated ‘wild animals’ or ‘beasts’, the latter connoting domesticated animals and is translated ‘cattle’.
(17) V. supra, the exposition of R. Isaac.
(18) Lev. XI, 39.

Talmud - Mas. Chullin 71a

unclean cattle under ‘unclean wild animals’, and clean cattle under ‘clean wild animals’. He then said to me these very words: Alas for Ben ‘Azzai, that he did not attend upon R. Ishmael.

Whence do we infer that wild animals are included under the term ‘cattle’? — For it is written: These are the cattle which we may eat: the ox, the sheep [and the goat,] the hart, and the gazelle, and the roebuck.¹ How is this to be explained? It must be that wild animals are included under the term ‘cattle’. Whence do we infer that wild animals are included under the term ‘wild animals’? — For it is written: These are the wild animals which ye may eat; among all the cattle that are on the earth, whatsoever parteth the hoof.² How is this to be explained? It must be that cattle are included under the term ‘wild animals’. Now,³ clean wild animals come under ‘cattle’ with regard to the characteristics [of cleanness].⁴ Unclean wild animals come under ‘unclean cattle’ with regard to the prohibition of ‘interbreeding’.⁵ Unclean cattle come under ‘unclean wild animals’ with regard to the following teaching of Rabbi. For it was taught: Rabbi says: It is sufficient when I read in the verse, [the carcass of an unclean] beast,⁶ why then are cattle also stated? To deduce the following: It says here unclean cattle,⁷ and there also unclean cattle:⁸ just as there it refers to the eating of holy food while unclean, so here it refers to the eating of holy food while unclean.⁹ Clean cattle come under ‘clean wild animals’ with regard to ‘formation’.¹⁰ For we have learnt: If a woman miscarried [and brought forth] something resembling cattle or a wild animal or a bird, whether it be a clean or unclean species, if it was a male she must observe¹¹ [the periods prescribed] for a male, and if it was a female she must observe [the periods prescribed] for a female; if its sex was not known she must observe [the periods prescribed] both for a male and for a female.¹² So R. Meir. The Sages say:
Whatsoever has not the human form is not considered a child. According to the Rabbis what need is there for that verse? — It serves entirely for Rabbi’s exposition.

MISHNAH. IF THE FOETUS OF A WOMAN DIED WITHIN THE WOMB OF ITS MOTHER AND THE MIDWIFE PUT IN HER HAND AND TOUCHED IT, THE MIDWIFE IS RENDERED UNCLEAN FOR SEVEN DAYS, BUT THE MOTHER IS CLEAN UNTIL THE FOETUS COMES OUT.

GEMARA. Rabbah said: Just as an unclean object that has been swallowed cannot render unclean, so a clean object that has been swallowed cannot be rendered unclean. Whence do I learn that an unclean object that has been swallowed cannot render unclean? — For it is written: And he that eateth of the carcass of it shall wash his clothes. Does this not hold good even though he ate of it a short while before sunset? And yet the Torah says that he becomes clean. Perhaps there it is different, for the reason is that it is no longer fit for a stranger! Now according to R. Johanan it is well for he says: For either purpose it is nebela h until it becomes unfit for a dog. But according to Bar Padda who says, It is nebela h for conveying the graver uncleanness until it becomes unfit for a stranger, and for conveying the lighter uncleanness until it becomes unfit for a dog, the reason might well be that it is no longer fit for a stranger! — Even so, granted that it is not fit for a stranger if it was swallowed in his presence, it is, however, fit for a stranger if swallowed not in his presence.

We have thus learnt that an unclean object that has been swallowed cannot render unclean; whence do we learn that a clean object that has been swallowed cannot be rendered unclean? — By an a fortiori argument. If an earthenware vessel that is covered with a closely fitting lid, which cannot prevent the unclean matter that is in it from conveying uncleanness, (for a Master has stated, uncleanness that is closed up breaks through upwards to the sky), nevertheless protects any clean matter that is within it from becoming unclean, purification, and on the birth of a female fourteen days of uncleanness and sixty-six days of purification.

(11) The stricter aspect of each is applied to the mother, viz., fourteen days of uncleanness (as if it were a female) and only twenty-six days of purification (as if it were a male, and the total of days must not exceed forty).

(12) And the mother is not obliged to observe the laws of uncleanness as after the birth of a human child. V. Nid. 21a.

(13) The Rabbis of our Mishnah who maintain that the dead foetus within the womb, either of a clean or unclean animal, is clean, must apply to some other purpose that verse which R. Nahman b. Isaac adduced (Lev. V, 2: If anyone touch any unclean thing, etc. supra p. 386) in support of the view of R. Jose the Galilean, that the dead foetus within the womb of an unclean animal is unclean.

(14) Since the expression ‘unclean’ as stated of cattle is required for Rabbi's exposition, this same expression is also stated of wild animals for the sake of uniformity. The text, however, of this last question is doubtful. The MS.M. and Tosaf. a.l. have the following reading: יֵתֵנהָ המַעְדוּר אֶלֶּה שֶׁלֹּא לְשָׁנַּנִי מַעְדוּר וְאֵלֶּה צְבָאֹת לְמִימֵר. And the interpretation is this: It is well according to R. Meir (for he has introduced a specific rule in the law of childbirth on the basis of the principle that the term ‘wild animals’ includes cattle). But what can be said from the point of view of the Rabbis who differ from R. Meir? (In which case is this principle applied?)

(15) E.g., the dead foetus (that is ‘swallowed’ or enclosed) in the womb of its mother does not render the mother unclean; v. our Mishnah.

(16) E.g., if a person swallowed a clean ring and subsequently entered a room where a corpse lay, the ring would not become unclean though he himself is rendered unclean; v. infra.

(17) Lev. XI, 40; the verse adds: And be unclean until the even, i.e., until sunset.

(18) He is not rendered unclean again immediately after sunset by reason of the unclean nebelah food that is still undigested within him, because of the rule that unclean food has been swallowed cannot render unclean.

(19) From Deut. XIV, 21: Ye shall not eat nebelah, thou mayest give it to the stranger, is derived the rule that only that is deemed nebelah which is in the condition fit to be eaten by a stranger. Since this food has been swallowed, even if vomited out, it is no more fit for a stranger, hence it is not deemed nebelah and therefore does not render him unclean after sunset.

(20) And the principle that an unclean object that has been swallowed cannot render unclean is indeed to be derived from the above quoted verse.

(21) Whether to convey the graver uncleanness, i.e., to render men and vessels unclean or to convey the lesser uncleanness, i.e., only to render foodstuffs unclean.

(22) And as the undigested food if vomited out would be fit for a dog it should, according to R. Johanan, render the eater unclean immediately after sunset, nevertheless the Divine Law declares him clean obviously because unclean matter that has been swallowed cannot render unclean.

(23) So that what this man has eaten is no longer accounted as nebelah and that is the reason why he is not rendered unclean immediately after sunset, but not because it is unclean matter that has been swallowed.

(24) So where a person swallowed whole a morsel of nebelah without chewing it a moment before sunset and yet he is declared clean immediately after sunset, although the morsel if ejected again is fit to be eaten by a stranger who has not seen it in the mouth of another, the reason can only be that it is swallowed uncleanness and so cannot render unclean.

(25) E.g., if within an earthenware vessel that was covered with a tightly fastened lid there was an olive's bulk of a corpse, whosoever comes under the same roof as this vessel is rendered unclean, for the unclean matter being compressed in a close space bursts, as it were, the sides of the vessel and the uncleanness breaks through upwards and downwards. Cf. Ohol. VII, 1, XIV, 6.

(26) Compressed in a grave or shut up in a box. Provided in all these cases that there was no space to the extent of a cubic handbreadth above the unclean matter.

(27) Cf. Num. XIX, 15; and V. supra 25a.

Talmud - Mas. Chullin 71b

how much more so in the case of a man, who prevents the unclean matter that is in him from rendering him unclean, that he should protect the clean matter that is in him from becoming unclean! But perhaps that is so only in the case of an earthenware vessel, since it cannot render unclean by its outside;¹ will you then say that it is so also in the case of a man who can convey uncleanness from the outside? — Are we dealing with the outside? No, on the contrary, we are dealing with the inside, and [with regard to the inside of] an earthenware vessel [the Jaw] is more strict, since it can convey uncleanness by its air-space.²

We have thus learnt the law regarding uncleanness swallowed from above,³ but whence do we know that it is so even when the uncleanness was swallowed from below?⁴ — From the following a fortiori argument. If in the upper part of the body where no decomposition [of food] takes place [the fact that it is swallowed] prevents [the unclean matter from conveying uncleanness], how much more so In the lower part where the actual decomposition takes place! But decomposition takes place below only if the food comes from above! — Even so, the fact that decomposition takes place below is a stronger point.⁵

We have now learnt the law regarding uncleanness swallowed by man, but whence do we know it with regard to uncleanness swallowed by an animal? — From the following a fortiori argument. If in the case of man, who is capable of conveying uncleanness whilst alive, the fact that it is swallowed prevents [the unclean matter from conveying uncleanness], how much more so is it in the case of animals, which are incapable of conveying uncleanness whilst alive, that the fact that it is swallowed prevents [the unclean matter within from conveying uncleanness]? But perhaps that is so only with regard to man since he must tarry a prescribed period in a house stricken with leprosy;⁶ will you then say that it is so also with regard to animals which need not tarry a prescribed period in a house stricken with leprosy?⁷ — In respect of what things, do you say, that an animal need not tarry within!⁸ For we have learnt: If a person entered a house stricken with leprosy carrying his clothes over his shoulders and his sandals and rings in his hands, he and they become unclean forthwith. If he was clothed in his garments, his sandals on his feet, and his rings on his fingers, he becomes unclean forthwith but they remain clean until he taries there the length of time required for eating half a loaf⁹ of wheaten bread, but not barley bread, reclining and eating it with a condiment.¹⁰

Raba said: But we have learnt both these rules.¹¹ We have learnt the rule concerning swallowed unclean matter, and we have learnt the rule concerning swallowed clean matter. Concerning swallowed unclean matter we have learnt the following Mishnah:¹² If a person swallowed an unclean ring,¹³ he must immerse himself and thereafter may eat terumah;¹⁴ if he vomited it forth [after this immersion], it is still unclean and has rendered him unclean.¹⁵ And concerning swallowed clean matter we have learnt the following Mishnah:¹² If a person swallowed a clean ring, entered a tent wherein lay a corpse, was sprinkled [with purification waters] the first time and the second time, immersed himself, and then vomited it forth, it remains as it was before!¹⁸ — Rabbah had in mind the case where a person swallowed two rings, one clean and the other unclean, [and he teaches that] the unclean ring will not render the clean ring unclean.¹⁹

---

(1) Since with regard to earthenware vessels the laws of uncleanness have in certain respects been relaxed, it is also reasonable to hold that any clean matter that is ‘swallowed up’ or enclosed within an earthenware vessel is protected from uncleanness.
(2) Which is not the case with man. So that the a fortiori argument is of even greater force, for if an earthenware vessel, which can be rendered unclean and also convey uncleanness through its air-space, has the power of protecting the clean object that is enclosed in it from becoming unclean, surely man ought to protect the clean object that he has swallowed from becoming unclean!
(3) I.e., through the mouth.
(4) I.e., the unclean matter was inserted into the body from below via the rectum. It must be, says Rashi, that it was inserted by a tube so that the unclean matter did not come into direct contact with the body of the person. It must further be explained that this action was performed a little before sunset as above.
(5) In the argument; so that the a fortiori reasoning holds good.
(6) In order that the clothes that he is wearing be also rendered unclean. This rule is derived from the fact that Lev. XIV,
And he that goeth into the house . . . shall be unclean until the even, whereas the next verse (Lev. XIV, 47) states: He that lieth in the ‘house shall wash his clothes; and he that eateth in the house shall wash his clothes. This presupposes that a longer stay in the house renders also the clothes worn by the person unclean. Since therefore the law of uncleanness in this respect with regard to man is not so severe, one would reasonably suppose that uncleanness emanating from a swallowed unclean object would not affect man.

(7) For in the case of an animal laden with goods that enters a house stricken with leprosy both the animal and the goods are immediately rendered unclean.

(8) For articles laden upon a person as a burden and not worn as clothes are also rendered unclean forthwith.

(9) i.e., one meal. A loaf equal in size to eight eggs (according to Maim. six eggs) is held to be sufficient for two meals in connection with ‘Erbub.

(10) Neg. XIII, 9. Accordingly the a fortiori argument is valid to prove that an unclean object swallowed by an animal cannot convey uncleanness.

(11) What then is the point of Rabbah’s teaching?

(12) Mik. X, 8.

(13) It was rendered unclean by reason of its having been brought into contact with a corpse in which case the ring, being of metal, assumed the same degree, and not a lesser degree, of uncleanness as the corpse itself, v. supra 3a.

(14) Because he was rendered unclean by contact with the ring before swallowing it.

(15) But he is not rendered unclean by the unclean ring, that is, in his body, thus proving that a swallowed unclean matter cannot render unclean.

(16) For it must have touched his person as it was vomited forth.

(17) On the third and seventh day of his uncleanness respectively. Cf. Num. XIX, 19.

(18) i.e., clean; thus proving that a swallowed clean matter cannot contract uncleanness. For had the ring suffered uncleanness when the man entered under the same roof as the corpse, at which time the ring was swallowed within him, it would not now when vomited forth be clean, for the immersion and purification of the man could be of no avail in regard to the ring.

(19) This is a special case which could not so readily have been inferred from the cases stated in the above quoted Mishnahs. For it might have been suggested that the reason for the ruling in those two cases was that the contact between the ring and the person was made in the secret parts of the body, and such contact is not accounted as contact in order to contract or convey uncleanness. In the case, however, where two rings were swallowed and both now lie in the secret parts, the argument of secret contact cannot apply for it is as though they are together in a chest when one would certainly render the other unclean. Rabbah, however, by stating his view that even in the case of two rings one cannot render the other unclean, strikingly informs us that the ground for the rulings in the Mishnah is that the matter is swallowed and for that reason it cannot contract or convey uncleanness. V. Tosaf. s.v. \[\text{hf}\].

Talmud - Mas. Chullin 72a

But is not the case of the foetus and the midwife [of our Mishnah] similar to two rings,\(^1\) nevertheless the foetus renders the midwife unclean? — Rabbah replied,\(^2\) It is different in the case of the foetus because it must eventually come out!\(^3\) Raba retorted: The foetus, [you say] must eventually come out; and must not the ring also eventually come out? — Raba therefore replied: The ‘Pumbedithans’ (by which R. Joseph is meant) know the reason for it.

For R. Joseph said in the name of Rab Judah who said it in the name of Samuel: This uncleanness [of the midwife] was not imposed by Biblical law but by decree of the Scribes. Why is it said ‘was not imposed by Biblical law but by decree of the Scribes’? — So that you should not say that our Mishnah agrees [only] with R. Akiba who holds that a [dead] foetus whilst yet in the womb of its mother is unclean;\(^4\) for indeed it is even in accordance with R. Ishmael who holds that the [dead] foetus whilst yet in the womb of its mother is clean, yet here the uncleanness [to the midwife] was imposed by Rabbinic decree. Why? — R. Hoshia said: As a precaution lest the foetus protrude its head beyond the ante-chamber.\(^5\) Then this should apply to the mother too!\(^6\) — The mother would feel it.\(^7\) Then she might tell the midwife of it?\(^8\) — She is too distraught.
Where do we find the respective views of R. Ishmael and R. Akiba? — It was taught: The verse: And whosoever toucheth in the open field . . . [a dead body], 9 excludes the dead foetus whilst yet in the womb of its mother: 10 so R. Ishmael. R. Akiba says: It includes the stone that covers the grave and the stones that support it. 11 And R. Ishmael? — The [uncleanness of the] covering stone and supporting stones is established by tradition. 12 And R. Akiba? — He maintains that the [dead] foetus whilst yet in the womb of its mother is unclean. 13 Whence does he [R. Akiba] derive this from the Torah? — R. Oshaia answered: It is written: Whosoever toucheth a dead body in a human body. 15 Now what can a dead body in a human body refer to? You must say it refers to a [dead] foetus in the womb of its mother. And R. Ishmael? 16 — He requires this verse to establish the law that a quarter log of blood that issued from a dead body conveys uncleanness. For it is written: Whosoever toucheth a dead body [or] the life element of man. 17 Now what is the life element of a man that renders unclean? You must say, it is a quarter log of blood. 18 R. Akiba, on the other hand, adheres to his view that a quarter log of blood that issued from two corpses will render unclean [men and vessels that are] in the tent. 19 For it was taught: R. Akiba says: Whence do I know that a quarter log of blood that issued from two corpses renders unclean [men and vessels that are] in the tent? From the verse: He shall not go in to any dead bodies, 20 which suggests one quantity [of blood] from two corpses.

(1) For both the foetus and the hand of the midwife are together ‘swallowed’ within the womb of the mother.
(2) Read with var. lec. ‘Rabbi can reply to you’ v. D.S.
(3) And therefore is not regarded as swallowed.
(4) Accordingly the midwife, is by Biblical law rendered unclean by reason of contact with the foetus, for a swallowed unclean matter can convey uncleanness; the mother, however, remains clean because the uncleanness touches her in her secret parts and this does not render her unclean.
(5) In which case, according to all views, the midwife would become unclean by Biblical law, for the foetus is by the protrusion of its head regarded as born.
(6) I.e., this Rabbinic decree should apply also to the mother, to render her unclean.
(7) Whether the head of the foetus has emerged or not.
(8) She might warn the midwife that the head of the foetus has already emerged into the ante-chamber.
(9) Num. XIX, 16.
(10) The expression in the open field suggests that the uncleanness is exposed and not concealed or shut up as in the case of the foetus.
(11) That these too render a person unclean for these are usually to be seen ‘in the open field’. The Heb. terms are נבאה and אפיים. According to Rashi, the former means the upper board and the latter the side boards of the coffin. The translation in the text follows the interpretation of these terms suggested by Tosaf. V. Keth. 4b s.v. יעלה; and Nazir, Sone. ed., p. 202, n. 5.
(12) The verse (Num. XIX, 15) therefore, according to him, serves to exclude the foetus, since there is a tradition that accounts for the uncleanness of the covering stone and supporting stones.
(13) And as R. Akiba does not regard the uncleanness of the covering stone and supporting stones as established by tradition he derives it expressly from the above verse.
(14) Sc. that the dead foetus whilst yet in the womb of its mother is unclean.
(16) Does not the interpretation of this latter verse contradict his view?
(17) Num. XIX, 13. Such is the translation of the verse according to R. Ishmael. הנפש here means the blood which is the life element in man; cf. Lev. XVII, 14, Deut. XII, 23.

(18) The loss of this quantity of blood is regarded as the loss of vital blood, for this quantity is the minimum necessary for maintaining life in a human being. Log is a liquid measure equal to the capacity of six eggs.

(19) Consequently no verse is required to indicate that a quarter log of blood from one corpse renders unclean.

(20) Lev. XXI, II. The plural תַּחְנוֹן ‘bodies’, indicates at least two, whereas מת ‘dead’, being in the singular, indicates a single quantity of blood equal to the quantity necessary for maintaining life, i.e., a quarter log.

(21) It will not be rendered unclean from contact with the protruded limb because it is in the womb and is part of a living animal and it is established law that a living animal cannot contract uncleanness. V. supra 68a bot.

(22) Of the foetus as well as the animal itself. V. supra 68b top.

(23) Rabbinically and only in respect of consecrated animals.

(24) V. Gemara.

Talmud - Mas. Chullin 72b

FOR JUST AS WE FIND THAT THE SLAUGHTERING OF A TREFAH ANIMAL RENDERS IT CLEAN, SO THE SLAUGHTERING OF THE ANIMAL SHOULD RENDER THE [PROTRUDING] LIMB CLEAN. R. MEIR REPLIED TO THEM, NO, FOR WHEN YOU SAY THAT THE SLAUGHTERING OF A TREFAH [ANIMAL] RENDERS IT CLEAN YOU ARE CONCERNED WITH [THE ANIMAL] ITSELF, BUT CAN YOU SAY THAT IT WILL RENDER CLEAN THE LIMB WHICH IS NOT PART OF [THE ANIMAL] ITSELF? [BUT] WHENCE DO WE LEARN THAT THE SLAUGHTERING OF A TREFAH ANIMAL RENDERS IT CLEAN? [OUTHET WE NOT RATHER TO ARGUE THUS,] AN UNCLEAN ANIMAL MAY NOT BE EATEN, AND TREFAH ALSO MAY NOT BE EATEN; THEN JUST AS SLAUGHTERING DOES NOT RENDER AN UNCLEAN ANIMAL CLEAN? SO SLAUGHTERING SHOULD NOT RENDER A TREFAH ANIMAL CLEAN? NO. YOU MAY STATE THIS OF AN UNCLEAN ANIMAL FOR AT NO TIME WAS IT FIT [FOR SLAUGHTERING]; CAN YOU ALSO STATE THIS OF A TREFAH ANIMAL WHICH HAD A TIME WHEN IT WAS FIT? [FOR SLAUGHTERING]? AWAY WITH THIS ARGUMENT THAT YOU HAVE PUT FORWARD! FOR WHENCE WOULD WE KNOW THIS OF AN ANIMAL THAT WAS BORN TREFAH FROM THE WOMB?3 [SUBSTITUTE THEREFORE THIS ARGUMENT]: NO. YOU MAY STATE THIS OF AN UNCLEAN ANIMAL SINCE IT BELONGS TO THE CLASS TO WHICH SLAUGHTERING DOES NOT APPLY; CAN YOU ALSO STATE THIS OF A TREFAH ANIMAL WHICH BELONGS TO THE CLASS TO WHICH SLAUGHTERING DOES APPLY? [ACCORDINGLY], THE SLAUGHTERING OF A LIVE EIGHT MONTHS’ BIRTH DOES NOT RENDER IT CLEAN, SINCE TO ITS KIND SLAUGHTERING DOES NOT APPLY.4 GEMARA. Wherefore [is the foetus rendered unclean]? It has made covert contact with uncleanness5 and covert contact with uncleanness does not render [that which was clean] unclean. Shall we then say that R. Meir here too asserts his view?6 For we have learnt:7 ‘If a piece of cloth three handbreadths square [that had contracted midras uncleanness] was divided, it is free from midras uncleanness but is unclean by reason of its contact with midras uncleanness. So R. Meir.11 And we have learnt further:12 R. Jose said: What midras uncleanness has it touched? But, [it is admitted,] if one that had an issue touched it, it would now be unclean by reason of its contact with one that had an issue.13 Surely there has been reported in connection with the above the following statement of Ulla viz., They stated their views only in respect of a cloth three handbreadths square that was divided, but if a piece of cloth three finger-breadths square was cut away from a large garment [that had contracted midras uncleanness], [all agree that] it is rendered unclean [by virtue of contact] with the rest [of the garment] at the moment that it was severed from the rest.15 Here too, it will be said that it [sc. the foetus] is rendered unclean [by virtue of contact] with the limb at the moment that it is severed from the limb.16 Rabina said: A garment is not intended for cutting up but a foetus is, and whatsoever is intended for cutting up

(1) This is the conclusion arrived at by the Rabbis from the interpretation of Lev. XI, 26. V. Sifra on this verse.
I.e., before it was rendered trefah.

According to the argument that has been submitted it would follow that an animal that was born trefah is not rendered clean by slaughtering, but this is not the case; hence that argument fails.

An eight months’ birth is not a viable animal and therefore slaughtering does not apply to it, for it is not within the category of cattle or sheep.

Lit., ‘uncleanness in secret parts’. The only contact made by the foetus with the unclean limb is at the point where the two are joined but where subsequently they will be cut away from each other, and that contact is covert and not exposed.

That covert contact with uncleanness does convey the uncleanness. The author of our anonymous Mishnah is R. Meir, hence the introduction of R. Meir into this argument; cf. Sanh. 86a.

Kel. XXVII, 20.

I.e., a person suffering with a discharge from his body had put his full weight upon this cloth, e.g., by sitting or standing upon it or by leaning against it. Cf. Lev. xv, 4. And whatever has been thus rendered unclean by ‘pressure’, provided it was not less than three handbreadths square, will render unclean men and vessels.

(9) Being less than three handbreadths square it can no longer render men or vessels unclean, but it can render foodstuffs or liquids unclean provided it was not reduced in size to less than three finger-breadths square.

An eight months’ birth is not a viable animal and therefore slaughtering does not apply to it, for it is not within the category of cattle or sheep.

Lit., ‘uncleanness in secret parts’. The only contact made by the foetus with the unclean limb is at the point where the two are joined but where subsequently they will be cut away from each other, and that contact is covert and not exposed.

That covert contact with uncleanness does convey the uncleanness. The author of our anonymous Mishnah is R. Meir, hence the introduction of R. Meir into this argument; cf. Sanh. 86a.

Kel. XXVII, 20.

I.e., a person suffering with a discharge from his body had put his full weight upon this cloth, e.g., by sitting or standing upon it or by leaning against it. Cf. Lev. xv, 4. And whatever has been thus rendered unclean by ‘pressure’, provided it was not less than three handbreadths square, will render unclean men and vessels.

An eight months’ birth is not a viable animal and therefore slaughtering does not apply to it, for it is not within the category of cattle or sheep.

Lit., ‘uncleanness in secret parts’. The only contact made by the foetus with the unclean limb is at the point where the two are joined but where subsequently they will be cut away from each other, and that contact is covert and not exposed.

That covert contact with uncleanness does convey the uncleanness. The author of our anonymous Mishnah is R. Meir, hence the introduction of R. Meir into this argument; cf. Sanh. 86a.

Kel. XXVII, 20.

I.e., a person suffering with a discharge from his body had put his full weight upon this cloth, e.g., by sitting or standing upon it or by leaning against it. Cf. Lev. xv, 4. And whatever has been thus rendered unclean by ‘pressure’, provided it was not less than three handbreadths square, will render unclean men and vessels.

An eight months’ birth is not a viable animal and therefore slaughtering does not apply to it, for it is not within the category of cattle or sheep.

Lit., ‘uncleanness in secret parts’. The only contact made by the foetus with the unclean limb is at the point where the two are joined but where subsequently they will be cut away from each other, and that contact is covert and not exposed.

That covert contact with uncleanness does convey the uncleanness. The author of our anonymous Mishnah is R. Meir, hence the introduction of R. Meir into this argument; cf. Sanh. 86a.

Kel. XXVII, 20.

I.e., a person suffering with a discharge from his body had put his full weight upon this cloth, e.g., by sitting or standing upon it or by leaning against it. Cf. Lev. xv, 4. And whatever has been thus rendered unclean by ‘pressure’, provided it was not less than three handbreadths square, will render unclean men and vessels.

An eight months’ birth is not a viable animal and therefore slaughtering does not apply to it, for it is not within the category of cattle or sheep.

Lit., ‘uncleanness in secret parts’. The only contact made by the foetus with the unclean limb is at the point where the two are joined but where subsequently they will be cut away from each other, and that contact is covert and not exposed.

That covert contact with uncleanness does convey the uncleanness. The author of our anonymous Mishnah is R. Meir, hence the introduction of R. Meir into this argument; cf. Sanh. 86a.

Kel. XXVII, 20.

I.e., a person suffering with a discharge from his body had put his full weight upon this cloth, e.g., by sitting or standing upon it or by leaning against it. Cf. Lev. xv, 4. And whatever has been thus rendered unclean by ‘pressure’, provided it was not less than three handbreadths square, will render unclean men and vessels.

An eight months’ birth is not a viable animal and therefore slaughtering does not apply to it, for it is not within the category of cattle or sheep.

Lit., ‘uncleanness in secret parts’. The only contact made by the foetus with the unclean limb is at the point where the two are joined but where subsequently they will be cut away from each other, and that contact is covert and not exposed.

That covert contact with uncleanness does convey the uncleanness. The author of our anonymous Mishnah is R. Meir, hence the introduction of R. Meir into this argument; cf. Sanh. 86a.

Kel. XXVII, 20.

I.e., a person suffering with a discharge from his body had put his full weight upon this cloth, e.g., by sitting or standing upon it or by leaning against it. Cf. Lev. xv, 4. And whatever has been thus rendered unclean by ‘pressure’, provided it was not less than three handbreadths square, will render unclean men and vessels.

An eight months’ birth is not a viable animal and therefore slaughtering does not apply to it, for it is not within the category of cattle or sheep.

Lit., ‘uncleanness in secret parts’. The only contact made by the foetus with the unclean limb is at the point where the two are joined but where subsequently they will be cut away from each other, and that contact is covert and not exposed.

That covert contact with uncleanness does convey the uncleanness. The author of our anonymous Mishnah is R. Meir, hence the introduction of R. Meir into this argument; cf. Sanh. 86a.
Limb Clean. It was taught: R. Meir said to them, But what was it that rendered this limb clean, so that it be not nebelah? Was it not the slaughtering of its dam? Then it should also render it permitted to be eaten! They replied: It is often the case that an act has a greater effect upon that which is not part of itself than upon that which is part of itself; for we have learnt: “Whatsoever is cut off from the foetus within the womb [and left inside] may be eaten, but whatsoever is cut off from the spleen or the kidneys [of the animal and left inside] may not be eaten.” What does this mean? — Raba, others say Kadi, replied: There is an omission here, and this is the real teaching. R. Meir said to them, But what was it that rendered this limb clean so that it be not nebelah? Was it not the slaughtering of its dam? Then it should also render it permitted to be eaten! They replied: The case of a trefah [animal] proves otherwise, for the slaughtering renders it clean, so that it be not nebelah, and yet does not render it permitted to be eaten. He retorted: It is not so. For when you say that the slaughtering of a trefah [animal] renders it clean, you are concerned with [the animal] itself; but can it render clean the limb which is not part of [the animal] itself? They replied: It is often the case that an act has a greater effect upon that which is not part of itself than upon that which is part of itself; for we have learnt: Whatsoever is cut off from the foetus within the womb [and left inside] may be eaten, but whatsoever is cut off from the spleen or the kidneys [of the animal and left inside] may not be eaten.

There is [also a Baraita] taught which expressly states it so. R. Meir said to them, But what was it that rendered this limb clean so that it be not nebelah? They replied: The slaughtering. Then, said he, it should also render it permitted to be eaten. They replied: The case of a trefah [animal] proves otherwise, for the slaughtering renders it clean, so that it be not nebelah, and yet does not render it permitted to be eaten. He retorted: When you say that the slaughtering of a trefah [animal] renders it clean or [that the slaughtering of an animal renders clean] the limb that hangs loose, you are concerned with [the animal] itself; but can it render clean the [limb of the] foetus which is not part of the animal itself? They replied: It is often the case that an act has a greater effect upon that which is not part of itself than upon that which is part of itself; for we have learnt: Whatsoever is cut off from the foetus within the womb [and left inside] may be eaten, but whatsoever is cut off from the spleen or the kidneys [of the animal and left inside] may not be eaten.

R. Simeon b. Lakish said: Just as they differ with regard to the [limb of the] foetus so they differ with regard to loose limbs. R. Johanan said: They differ only with regard to the limb of the foetus, but with regard to a loose limb of the animal all agree that at the slaughtering it is accounted as detached. R. Jose b. Hanina said: What reason does R. Johanan suggest for the view of the Rabbis? — In this case [of the foetus] there is a remedy for it by withdrawal [into the womb], but in that case [of the loose limb] there is no remedy for it by withdrawal.

An objection was raised. R. Meir said to them: It is not so. When you say that the slaughtering of a trefah [animal] renders it clean, or [that the slaughtering of an animal renders clean] the loose limb, you are concerned with [the animal] itself, but can it render clean the [limb of the] foetus which is not part of the animal itself?

(1) So that the contact between the limb and the foetus in our Mishnah cannot be said to be covert.
(2) But that part of the handle which is to be cut away need not be immersed, for it is regarded as already cut away.
(3) The reading in the text, “So R. Meir; but the Sages say” has been corrected so as to correspond with the text in Mikv. X, 5 from where the Mishnah is quoted. It is true, however, that the first opinion, although reported anonymously, is that of R. Meir.
(4) For then only, i.e., at the moment that the limb is being severed from the foetus, does the foetus contract uncleanness by virtue of contact with the unclean limb.
(5) Even though it had not been cut off it is, according to Rabina, considered as already severed and the foetus would be rendered unclean by its contact.
(6) So according to Maim. Yad, Aboth Hatumah, II, 8. According to Rashi (infra 123b) a trefah consecrated animal that was slaughtered still renders unclean.

(7) Supra 68a.

(8) Aliter: ‘as the case may be’, i.e., some introduce other persons.

(9) V. infra 127b where it is established that if an entire limb of an animal was torn away but not completely severed and the animal was subsequently slaughtered, the slaughtering has the effect of rendering this limb clean, so that it be not regarded as a limb detached from a living animal which is, like nebelah, a source of uncleanness that renders men and vessels unclean.

(10) Sc. R. Meir and the Sages in our Mishnah.

(11) According to R. Meir the slaughtering of the animal will not render the hanging limb clean, but according to the Sages it will.

(12) Lit., ‘the slaughtering brings about the falling off’. The slaughtering has no effect upon it, for the limb is regarded as having already become detached or having already fallen away from the animal prior to the slaughtering, and is therefore unclean like nebelah.

(13) I.e., the Sages in the Mishnah.

(14) V. supra 68b where R. Johanan maintains that the limb of a foetus that had been withdrawn into the womb before the slaughtering of the dam is rendered permitted to be eaten by the slaughtering.

Talmud - Mas. Chullin 73b

Now this is all well according to R. Simeon b. Lakish, for then he [R. Meir] would be arguing from their point of view.¹ For according to my view, [says R. Meir] there is no difference between the limb of the foetus and the loose limb of the animal; they are both alike. But according to R. Johanan this is a difficulty!² — We must therefore say that if [the dispute was] reported it was reported as follows: R. Simeon b. Lakish said: Just as they differ with regard to the [limb of the] foetus so they differ with regard to loose limbs. R. Johanan said: They differ only with regard to the limb of the foetus, but with regard to the loose limb of the animal all agree that at the slaughtering it is not accounted as detached.³ R. Jose b. Hanina said: What reason does R. Johanan suggest for R. Meir's view? — One⁴ is part of the animal but the other is not.

R. Isaac b. Joseph said in the name of R. Johanan, All agree that at death [the limb] is accounted as detached,⁵ and that at the slaughtering it is not accounted as detached. What is [the subject that is] spoken of? If you say the limb of the foetus, surely there is a difference of opinion with regard to it!⁶ And if you say the loose limb of the animal, but we have already learnt it both of death and also of slaughtering! We have learnt it of death [in the following Mishnah]: If the animal died, the flesh [that was hanging loose] must be made susceptible [to contract uncleanness],⁷ but the limb [that was hanging loose] conveys uncleanness as the limb of a living animal and not as the limb of a dead animal [nebelah]:⁸ so R. Meir.⁹ We have also learnt it of slaughtering [in the following Mishnah]: If the animal was slaughtered, they¹⁰ have been rendered susceptible [to contract uncleanness] by the blood: so R. Meir. R. Simeon says: They have not been rendered susceptible [to contract uncleanness]!¹⁰ — From this [last Mishnah] I might have thought that ‘rendered susceptible’ referred only to the [loose] flesh.¹¹ But does it not say: ‘They have been rendered susceptible’?¹² — It might have been thought [that ‘they’ refers to] flesh that hangs loose from the animal and also to flesh that is severed from the limb.¹³ And why is one more certain than the other?¹⁴ — I might have argued that, since it conveys the graver uncleanness as long as it is with the whole [limb],¹⁵ it does not require to be rendered susceptible [to uncleanness]. We are therefore taught [that it does].¹⁶

R. Joseph said: Hold fast to the ruling of R. Isaac b. Joseph,¹⁷ for Rabbah b. Bar Hana is in agreement with him. For it was taught: The verse: Ye shall not eat any flesh that is torn of beasts in the field,¹⁸ includes [within its prohibition] any limb or flesh that hangs loose from cattle, wild beasts, or birds at the time of slaughtering. But Rabbah b. Bar Hana added in the name of R. Johanan,
(1) R. Meir contends that even if his opponents’ view, namely, that the slaughtering of the animal renders the limb that hangs loose clean, were right (which he does not admit), the conclusion drawn from it cannot be sustained.

(2) The statement of R. Johanan, namely, that it is agreed by all that the limb that hangs loose is not rendered clean by the slaughtering, is clearly contradicted by the passage quoted.

(3) And the limb is rendered clean by the slaughtering, although it is not thereby permitted to be eaten.

(4) Sc. the loose limb in contrast with the protruding limb of the foetus.

(5) If a limb was hanging loose from an animal and the animal died, this limb is not regarded unclean as nebelah i.e., as part of the carcass, but rather unclean as a limb that had been detached from a living animal. And the difference between the two is this: a portion of nebelah the size of an olive will render unclean, whereas a portion severed from a limb that had become detached from a living animal will not, for only when the limb is complete in its entirely with flesh, bones and veins, will it render unclean, and not otherwise.

(6) Between R. Meir and the sages as to the effect of the slaughtering upon it.

(7) By first being made wet by water or moistened by any of the other liquids specified by the Rabbis (v. Mak. XI, 4). Cf. Lev. XI, 38.

(8) Thus proving that at death the limb is accounted as detached since it is regarded as the limb of a living animal. It will, accordingly, only convey uncleanness when complete; v. supra n 2.

(9) Infra 127b.

(10) I.e., the flesh and the limb that were hanging loose from the animal. The fact that they require to be rendered susceptible to uncleanness clearly proves that they are themselves clean by reason of the slaughtering, hence it is evident that at the slaughtering the loose flesh and limbs are not considered detached.

(11) But not to a complete limb that was hanging loose. In the latter case it might be held by R. Meir that the limb is itself a source of uncleanness, and as such does not require to be rendered susceptible by moistening, inasmuch as at the slaughtering it was accounted as detached; it was therefore necessary for R. Johanan to teach that all agree that the limb is itself clean, for at the slaughtering the limb is not accounted as detached.

(12) In the plural: thus clearly referring to something else besides the loose flesh.

(13) I.e., flesh which was cut away from the limb after the slaughtering, which limb was hanging loose at the time of the slaughtering.

(14) Why was it necessary for the Tanna to refer expressly to flesh that was severed from a limb? In what way is it to be distinguished from flesh that hangs loose from the animal?

(15) Lit., ‘by its father’. For a whole limb renders unclean men and vessels, like nebelah.

(16) For once the flesh has been severed from the limb it can no more convey the graver uncleanness; consequently it must be rendered susceptible to uncleanness in accordance with the principle laid down in Nid. 51a, and infra 121a.

(17) That all agree that at the slaughtering the limb is not accounted as detached; in other words the slaughtering of the animal has an effect upon the loose limb, even to the extent of rendering it permitted to be eaten.

(18) Ex. XXII, 30.

Talmud - Mas. Chullin 74a

In such cases there is only the mere precept to keep aloof.¹

R. Joseph was sitting before R. Huna and recited as follows: Rab Judah said in the name of Rab: He who eats this² incurs a flogging. Thereupon a certain Rabbi said to him [R. Huna], pay no attention to him [R. Joseph], for thus said R. Isaac b. Samuel b. Martha in the name of Rab: He who eats it does not incur a flogging. R. Huna then said, upon whom should we rely? Thereupon R. Joseph turned his face away [in anger] and remarked: What is the difficulty? I was speaking of the death [of the animal] when the limb is accounted as detached,³ but he was speaking of the slaughtering when the limb is not accounted as detached.⁴

Raba said: Whence is derived the rule of the Rabbis that at death a loose limb is accounted as detached and at the slaughtering it is not accounted as detached? From the verse. And upon whatsoever any of them, when they are dead, doth fall, it shall be unclean.⁵ Now what does this verse exclude? Should you say it excludes [creeping things] whilst they are alive, but these are expressly excluded by the words ‘of their carcass’!\(^6\) It clearly teaches that at death the limb is accounted as detached but not at the slaughtering. R. Adda b. Ahaba said to the Raba, But the verse deals with creeping things?\(^7\) — He replied: Since it\(^8\) serves no purpose in the case of creeping things to which slaughtering does not apply, you may refer it to cattle. But it is indeed necessary [with regard to creeping things to teach] that they must be ‘as at death’, that is, they convey uncleanness only when moist but not when dry. — The expression, ‘when they are dead’, occurs twice.\(^9\) R. Hisda said: They differ only with regard to the limb of a live\(^{10}\) foetus, but with regard to the limb of a dead foetus all agree that at the slaughtering the limb is accounted as detached. Rabbah however said: As they differ in the one case so they differ in the other also.

THE SLAUGHTERING OF A LIVE EIGHT MONTHS’ BIRTH . . . [FOR TO ITS KIND SLAUGHTERING DOES NOT APPLY]. But has it not been taught: The slaughtering of a live eight months’ birth could prove [otherwise], for even though slaughtering applies to its kind, the slaughtering does not render it clean? — R. Kahana answered, [It means that] through its dam slaughtering applies to its kind.\(^{11}\) And our Tanna? — He does not consider as a refutation [the fact that slaughtering applies to it] through its dam. But that Tanna who does consider this a refutation, whence does he derive the rule that the slaughtering of a trefah [animal] renders it clean? — He derives it from the exposition of Rab Judah in the name of Rab. For Rab Judah said in the name of Rab, (others say: It was so taught in a Baraitha), It is written: And if there dieth of the beasts, [he that toucheth the carcass thereof shall be unclean.]\(^{12}\) that is to say, some of the beasts convey uncleanness and some do not, and which are they?\(^{13}\) They are trefah [animals] which have been slaughtered.

R. Hishaia raised this question, What is the law if a person put his hand into an animal's womb and slaughtered therein a living nine months’ foetus?\(^{14}\) This can be asked according to R. Meir's view and also according to the Sages' view. According to R. Meir the question is this, perhaps when R. Meir contended that an animal which was extracted [alive from the womb] must itself be slaughtered he referred only to an animal which came forth [alive] into the world, but whilst within the womb of its dam the slaughtering of it would not render it permitted.\(^{15}\) And on the other hand, perhaps [it is permitted] even according to the view of Rabbis, for the Divine Law permits [the foetus] by [the slaughtering of any two out of] four organs!\(^{16}\) — R. Hananiah said: Come and hear. [We have learnt:] WHENCE WOULD WE KNOW THIS OF AN ANIMAL THAT WAS BORN TREFAH FROM THE WOMB?\(^{17}\) Now if it can be said [that the slaughtering of the foetus in its dam's womb renders it valid], then this also had a time when it was fit [for slaughtering], for a man might put his hand into the womb and slaughter it there [before it was rendered trefah]! — Raba said to him, Render: ‘an animal that was formed trefah from the womb’, and this would be the case when, e.g., it has five legs.\(^{19}\)

MISHNAH. IF A MAN SLAUGHTERED AN ANIMAL AND FOUND IN IT AN EIGHT MONTHS FOETUS, EITHER LIVING OR DEAD, OR A DEAD NINE MONTHS FOETUS, HE NEED ONLY TEAR IT OPEN AND LET THE BLOOD FLOW OUT.\(^{20}\) IF HE FOUND IN IT A LIVING NINE MONTHS' FOETUS IT MUST BE SLAUGHTERED,\(^{21}\) AND HE WOULD THEREBY INCUR THE PENALTY FOR [INFRINGEMENT OF THE LAW OF] ‘IT AND ITS YOUNG’;\(^{22}\) SO R. MEIR. BUT THE SAGES SAY, THE SLAUGHTERING OF ITS DAM RENDERS IT PERMITTED.\(^{24}\)

---

(1) But there is no prohibition in the Torah even against the eating of this limb; as the foregoing verse is merely an indirect support for the Rabbinic restriction. It is obvious, therefore, that at the slaughtering the limb is not accounted as detached.

(2) Sc. the limb that was hanging loose at the time of the slaughtering of the animal.

(3) Consequently whosoever eats this limb incurs a flogging provided he was warned beforehand by the appropriate prohibition, namely, against eating a limb detached from a living animal, but not against eating nebelah.

(4) In which case there is merely the precept to keep aloof.
(5) Lev. XI, 32. The particular use of the Heb. יֹהַד, lit., ‘on their death’, suggests the teaching that only death causes the falling off of the limb but not the slaughtering.

(6) Ibid. 37.

(7) To which slaughtering does not apply; how then can the rule about slaughtering be excluded by inference from this verse?

(8) Sc. the expression בָּטָהּ, which is manifestly stated in order to exclude the slaughtering.

(9) Ibid. 31 and 32. One teaches the rule that only creeping things that are moist can convey uncleanness, and the other the exclusion of slaughtering.

(10) Since to its kind, i.e., living animals, slaughtering applies.

(11) For by the slaughtering of the dam the foetus within the womb is rendered permitted to be eaten as if it were itself slaughtered, so that one could say that slaughtering applies to its kind.

(13) That do not convey uncleanness.

(14) It was subsequently delivered by the dam.

(15) And it is all the more so according to the Sages, since they maintain that slaughtering does not apply to a foetus.

(16) I.e., the slaughtering either of its own two organs of the throat or of the two organs of the throat of its dam will render the foetus permitted. And it is all the more so according to R. Meir, since he is generally of the opinion that slaughtering applies to a foetus.

(17) Which was never fit for slaughtering, since from birth is was a trefah.

(18) I.e., from the very beginning of the development of the embryo it was trefah, e.g. it was formed with five legs which renders it trefah, cf. supra 58b.

(19) The additional leg being a hind leg in which case the animal is trefah. Such a defect existed in the animal from the time that it was formed in the womb.

(20) It does not require to be slaughtered ritually for it has already been rendered permitted by the slaughtering of its dam.

(21) The blood is forbidden like the blood of its dam, but, unlike its dam, all its fat is permitted; v. infra 75a.

(22) R. Meir who is the author of this view contends that with the completion of nine months of pregnancy the foetus, if it is living, is deemed a separate being and is not rendered permitted by the slaughtering of the dam. The Sages, however, who dispute with him maintain that the nine months’ living foetus is deemed a separate animal only on birth, but as long as it is within the womb it is part of the dam and is rendered permitted by the slaughtering of the dam.

(23) If he slaughtered it on the same day as its dam. V. Lev. XXII, 28.

(24) Lit., ‘clean’.

Talmud - Mas. Chullin 74b

R. SIMEON SHEZURI SAYS: EVEN IF IT IS FIVE YEARS OLD AND IS PLOUGHING THE FIELD, THE SLAUGHTERING OF ITS DAM RENDERS IT PERMITTED. IF HE RIPPED OPEN THE DAM AND FOUND IN IT A LIVING NINE MONTHS FOETUS, IT MUST BE SLAUGHTERED, SINCE ITS DAM HAS NOT BEEN SLAUGHTERED.

GEMARA. R. Eleazar said in the name of R. Oshaia: They argued about it [the foetus] only with regard to slaughtering. What does this exclude? — It excludes the fat¹ and the [sciatic] nerve.² What fat is meant? Is it the fat of the foetus? But is there not a dispute with regard to it? For it was taught:³ The law of the sciatic nerve applies also to a foetus, and the fat [of the foetus] is forbidden: so R. Meir. R. Judah says: It does not apply to a foetus, and the fat [of the foetus] is permitted. And R. Eleazar had said in the name of R. Oshaia that their dispute referred to a living nine months’ foetus, R. Meir ruling according to his principle⁴ and R. Judah according to his! And if it means the fat of the [sciatic] nerve, but is there not also a dispute about it? For it was taught:³ One must trace the sciatic nerve as far as it goes and must cut away the fat thereof at its roots: so R. Meir. R. Judah says: One need only peel off the [fat at the] top⁵ [of the hip-bone]!⁶ — If indeed it was reported, it must have been reported as follows: R. Eleazar said in the name of R. Oshaia: They argued about it only with regard to the matters that affect the eating thereof,⁷ thus excluding the prohibitions of interbreeding⁸ and ploughing with it.⁹

R. Simeon b. Lakish said: He who permits the fat of the foetus permits its blood, and he who forbids its fat forbids its blood. R. Johanan says: Even he who permits its fat forbids its blood. R. Johanan raised this objection against R. Simeon b. Lakish: We have learnt: HE NEED ONLY TEAR IT OPEN AND LET THE BLOOD FLOW OUT!¹⁰ — R. Zera said: He [R. Simeon b. Lakish] only meant to say that one would not be liable to the penalty of Kareth.¹¹ Whose view are we considering? R. Judah's,¹² are we not? But let it be accounted no more than the blood that oozes out; has it not been taught: With regard to the blood that oozes [out of the animal after the slaughtering] there is only a formal prohibition;¹³ R. Judah says: There is the penalty of Kareth? — R. Joseph, the son of R. Salla the pious, explained it in the presence of R. Papa: R. Judah interprets the expressions, ‘blood’ and no manner of blood;¹⁴ hence, whenever one would be liable [to the penalty of Kareth] for the life blood one would also be liable for the blood that oozes out, and whenever one would not be liable for the life blood¹⁵ one would not be liable for the blood that oozes out.

The question was raised: May one redeem¹⁶ [the firstling of an ass] with a lamb extracted [out of the ewe's womb]?¹⁷ According to R. Meir's view there is no question at all; for since he declares that it must be slaughtered, it is obviously an ordinary lamb. The question only arises according to the view of the Rabbis¹⁸ who maintain that the slaughtering of its dam renders it clean. Now what is the law? Since they maintain that the slaughtering of its dam renders it clean, it is to be regarded as meat in a basket,¹⁹ is it not? Or [shall we say] since it runs to and fro, we apply to it the term lamb?²⁰ — Mar Zutra says: We may not redeem with it; R. Ashi says: We may. R. Ashi said to Mar Zutra, 'How do you arrive at your view? You no doubt deduce it from the word 'lamb' used here²¹ and also in the verse dealing with the paschal lamb;²² then it should follow, just as there the lamb must be a male, without blemish, of the first year,²³ so here too it must be a male, without blemish, of the first year'. [Mar Zutra replied,] ‘The repetition of: Thou shalt redeem,²⁴ extends the scope of the law’.²⁵ [Said R. Ashi] ‘If, as you say, namely, that the repetition of, ‘Thou shalt redeem’, extends the scope of the law, then everything [should be allowed]’.²⁶ [Mar Zutra replied:] ‘If that were so, of what use to you is the inference made by the term lamb’?²⁷

The question was raised: Do we reckon here the first and second degree of uncleanness or not?²⁸ R. Johanan said: We do reckon here the first and second degree of uncleanness;²⁹ R. Simeon b. Lakish said: We do not reckon here the first and second degree of uncleanness,³⁰ for it is regarded as a nut that rattles in its shell.

R. Simeon b. Lakish raised this objection against R. Johanan. We have learnt³¹ The flesh is unclean like that which had touched nebela: so R. Meir. But the Sages say: It is unclean like that which had touched a slaughtered trefah [animal]. Now according to my view that they [the foetus and the dam] are one body, it is clear, for it [the foetus] was rendered susceptible [to contract uncleanness] by the blood of its dam;³² but according to you [it will be asked:] whereby was it rendered susceptible to uncleanness? — He replied: By the slaughtering, and it is in accordance with R. Simeon's view.³³

R. Johanan raised this objection against R. Simeon b. Lakish. If it³⁴ waded through a river it has thereby become susceptible to uncleanness, and if it next passed through a cemetery it has thereby become unclean. Now according to my view that they are two separate beings, it is clear that only if it had thus become susceptible to uncleanness [by passing through a river] it becomes [unclean], but if it had not thus become susceptible to uncleanness it is not [unclean]. But according to your view that they are one body [it is difficult, for surely] it had long ago become susceptible to uncleanness by the blood of its dam³⁵ —

(I) The term ‘fat’ used here denotes that fat (heleb) which is forbidden in an ordinary animal, v. Lev. VII, 25.
(2) I.e., the fat and the sciatic nerve of the foetus are forbidden as in an ordinary animal, and there is no dispute about these (Rashi). According to R. Gershom, all agree that the fat and the nerve of the foetus are permitted.

(3) Infra 92b.

(4) That a living nine months' foetus is deemed an animal proper and must itself be slaughtered.

(5) But the remaining fat in the region of the nerve is permitted.

(6) The text of this passage is undoubtedly corrupt, for the whole argument about the fat-first the question as to what fat is meant, and secondly the dispute about the fat in the region close to the sciatic nerve — is entirely irrelevant to our subject. It is clear that the passage has been inserted here erroneously, and its proper place is infra 92b where it is actually found. Rashi submits the following emendation: Omit 'what fat is meant? Is it the fat of the foetus?' and also the entire passage beginning with 'And if it means . . ..' This emendation is to a large measure supported by MS.M. V. Tosaf s.v. כב יט.

(7) I.e., whether one may or may not eat it without slaughtering, and whether its fat and its sciatic nerve are forbidden or not.

(9) Yoked together with an animal of a different species. Cf. Deut. XXII, 10. These prohibitions, it is agreed by all, apply (so Rashi; according to R. Gershom: do not apply) to an animal that was extracted out of the womb.

(10) This refers to an eight months' foetus whose fat is permitted according to all views and yet the blood is forbidden and must be allowed to flow out.

(11) For eating the blood thereof. Only in this sense did Resh Lakish use the term 'permit'. For Kareth v. Glos.

(12) For it is R. Judah who permits the fat.

(13) Which carries with it the penalty of a flogging only.

(14) Lev. VII, 26. The term 'blood' alone would mean the life blood, but the expression no manner of blood' includes even the blood that oozes out of the animal after the slaughtering.

(15) As none of the blood of a foetus is regarded as life blood, hence none of its blood comes under the prohibition.

(17) It must be assumed that this extracted lamb was of less worth than the firstling ass, for otherwise the question does not arise, since one may always redeem it with anything that is its worth (Rashi).

(18) The Sages in the Mishnah.

(19) And we may not redeem the firstling of an ass with meat of a slaughtered animal (if less than its worth, v. n. 4); v. Bek. 120.

(20) Ex. XIII, 13.

(21) Ibid. XII, 5. And just as a lamb which had been extracted from the ewe's womb is unfit for the paschal offering or any offering, it is likewise not fit for redeeming the firstling of an ass.

(22) To include those that are blemished or female or older than yearlings as fit to redeem with them.

(23) Even the lamb extracted from the ewe's womb.

(24) This inference therefore excludes the lamb extracted from the ewe's womb, whereas the repetition of 'Thou shalt redeem' includes those that are blemished or females or older than yearlings.

(25) I.e., where the dam was slaughtered, carrying in its womb a living nine months' foetus, and the dam was rendered unclean, the question arises: Does the foetus assume the same degree of uncleanness as the dam, or one degree less?

(26) The foetus and dam are two separate entities; the former would therefore be unclean in one degree less than the latter.

(27) The foetus and the dam are one entity so that the foetus assumes the same degree of uncleanness as its dam.

(28) Supra 720.

(29) For when part of a foodstuff has been moistened by one of the prescribed liquids the whole is rendered susceptible to contract uncleanness; here therefore the foetus, as part of its dam, is rendered susceptible to uncleanness by virtue of the moistening of the flesh about the throat of the dam by the blood of the slaughtering.

(30) V. supra 33a. As the slaughtering is also effective for the foetus the latter is thereby rendered susceptible to uncleanness.

(31) An animal extracted alive out of the slaughtered dam's womb.

(32) At the slaughtering of its dam.

_Talmud - Mas. Chullin 75a_
It was a dry slaughtering,¹ and this ruling is not in accordance with R. Simeon's view.

Who is the Tanna that taught: ‘If it waded through a river it has thereby become susceptible to uncleanness and if it next passed through a cemetery it has thereby become unclean’?² — R. Johanan said: It is R. Jose the Galilean. For it was taught: R. Simeon b. Eleazar says in the name of R. Jose the Galilean: It contracts food uncleanness,³ and needs to be rendered susceptible [to contract uncleanness]. The Sages say,⁴ It does not contract food uncleanness, for it is a living being, and whatsoever lives cannot contract food uncleanness.

R. Johanan is indeed consistent in his view, for R. Johanan had also said that R. Jose the Galilean and Beth Shammai held the same view.⁵ R. Jose the Galilean expressed it [in the Baraitha we quoted] above. Beth Shammai expressed it [in the following Mishnah].⁶ For we learnt: When do fish contract uncleanness? Beth Shammai say: As soon as they have been caught.⁷ Beth Hillel say: Only when they are dead. R. Akiba says: From the moment that they cannot live. What is the difference between them?⁸ R. Johanan replied: A fish that is struggling.⁹ R. Hisda raised the question: What is the law if such defects as [render an animal] trefah occurred in fish?¹⁰ This question can be asked both according to him who holds that a trefah animal can continue to live [for twelve months or more] and also according to him who holds that a trefah cannot continue to live. According to him who holds that a trefah can continue to live this question can be asked, for perhaps this is so¹¹ only in the case of animals whose vital force is considerable but not in the case of fishes whose vital force is slender.¹² And according to him who holds that a trefah cannot continue to live this question can also be asked, for perhaps this is so¹³ only in the case of animals, since to its kind slaughtering applies,¹⁴ but not to the case of fishes, since slaughtering does not apply to its kind!¹⁵ — It remains undecided.

If an animal cast forth an abortion, the fat thereof, says R. Johanan, is as the fat of an animal.¹⁶ R. Simeon b. Lakish says: It is as the fat of a wild beast.¹⁷ R. Johanan said: The fat thereof is as the fat of an animal, because [the coming into] the world¹⁸ renders it [an animal].¹⁹ R. Simeon b. Lakish said, [The fat thereof is] as the fat of a wild beast, because [the fulfilment of] the months [of pregnancy] is [also] essential in order to render it [an animal].

Others report it thus: Where the months of pregnancy had not been fulfilled [there is no doubt at all that] it is of no consequence.²⁰ They differ only in the case where a person put his hand into the womb of an animal, tore away some fat from the living nine months' foetus within, and ate it. R. Johanan says: This fat is as the fat of [an animal], because the [fulfilment of the] months [of pregnancy] alone renders it [an animal]. R. Simeon b. Lakish says: It is as the fat of a wild beast, because the [fulfilment of the] months [of pregnancy] coupled with the [coming into the] world renders it [an animal].

R. Johanan raised this objection against R. Simeon b. Lakish. [It was taught:] Just as ‘the fat and the two kidneys’ referred to in the case of the guilt-offering precludes that of a foetus,²¹ so wherever [‘fat’ is stated] it precludes that of a foetus. Now according to my view, [says R. Johanan], it is right that the verse finds it necessary to preclude it;²² but according to you, why is it necessary to preclude it?²³ — He replied: I derive my view from this very passage.²⁴

Others report it as follows: R. Simeon b. Lakish raised this objection against R. Johanan. [It was taught]: Just as ‘the fat and the two kidneys’ referred to in the case of the guilt-offering precludes that of a foetus, so wherever [‘fat’ is stated] it precludes that of a foetus. Now according to my view, [says R. Simeon b. Lakish,] it is right that the Divine Law precluded it;²⁵ but according to you, why should it not be offered [upon the altar]? — He replied: It is like an animal which has not reached the prescribed age.²⁶ R. Ammi said: If a person slaughtered a trefah animal and found in it a nine months’ living foetus, according to him who forbids [the other27 without slaughtering] it is permitted,28 and according to him who permits [the other without slaughtering] it is forbidden.29 Raba said: Even according to him who permits [the other without slaughtering] it is permitted, for the Divine Law permits [the foetus] by [the slaughtering of any two out of] four organs.30

R. Hisda said: If a person slaughtered a trefah animal and found in it a nine months’ living foetus,

(1) No blood flowed out at the time of the slaughtering so that not even the dam was rendered susceptible to contract uncleanness. The act of slaughtering alone, according to this Tanna, does not render the animal susceptible to uncleanness, contra R. Simeon.
(2) In other words, that a living animal can contract uncleanness.
(3) This living animal, extracted out of the slaughtered dam's womb, would be rendered unclean, like an ordinary foodstuff, if it came into contact with uncleanness.
(4) In Tosef. Hul. IV, ‘Rabbi says’.
(5) That living animals can contract uncleanness.
(6) ‘Uk. III, 8.
(7) Even though they still live.
(8) Between R. Akiba and Beth Hillel (R. Gershom), or between R. Akiba and Beth Shammai (Tosaf.).
(9) I.e., in the throes of death and could not live even if put back into the water. According to Beth Hillel it cannot contract uncleanness; according to R. Akiba, it can. (R. Gershom). V. however Tosaf. s.v. [MSN].
(10) Are fish rendered susceptible to contract uncleanness as soon as they have sustained a physical injury which in an animal would render it trefah or not? This question obviously arises only according to R. Akiba's view supra.
(11) Sc. that a trefah can continue to live.
(12) It might therefore be said that a fish, considering its low state of vitality the moment it sustains a physical injury is regarded as dead and is susceptible to contract uncleanness.
(13) Sc. that a trefah cannot continue to live and so might be regarded as dead.
(14) Since slaughtering applies to animals and a trefah cannot be slaughtered it might well be regarded as dead, but this is not so in the case of fishes.
(15) In MS. M. and according to the text before Rashi the reading is: since to its kind the rules of trefah apply . . . since the rules of trefah do not apply to its kind’. Shittah Mekubbezeth.
(16) And is forbidden to be eaten under the penalty of Kareth, v. Lev. VII, 25.
(17) I.e., the fat is as the flesh, and he who eats it is liable for infringing the prohibition of nebelah, (Deut. XIV, 21) which only involves a flogging but not Kareth. The prohibition of fat does not apply to that of a beast of chase.
(18) Lit., ‘air’.
(19) The abortion is therefore regarded as an animal with all the restrictions attached thereto.
(20) I.e., the fat of such foetus is certainly not forbidden as fat.
(21) The guilt-offering had to be a male animal, hence the fat mentioned with regard to it which was to be offered upon the altar (cf. Lev. VII, 3, 4) cannot include that of a foetus found in the womb of the animal offered.
(22) Seeing that the fat thereof is not regarded as the fat of an animal.
(23) Since for all purposes the fat of a nine months’ living foetus is like that of an ordinary animal.
(24) From the fact that the law expressly excludes the fat of the foetus from sacrificial rites R. Simeon b. Lakish concludes that such fat is in no wise deemed fat.
(25) For it is not like ordinary fat.
(26) Which in the first seven days of its life, though in every respect an animal, may not be offered as a sacrifice (cf. Ex. XXII, 29). Likewise with the fat of the foetus, although it is regarded as fat in every respect, it is nevertheless forbidden for sacrificial purposes.
(27) The nine months’ living foetus found in the womb of a slaughtered animal; v. supra, the Mishnah 740.
(28) By its own slaughtering; for it is a separate being, unaffected by its dam.
(29) Even if it was itself slaughtered; for slaughtering does not apply to it. And it is not permitted by its dam since the dam was a trefah.
(30) I.e., either the two organs of its dam or its own two organs, for the foetus is rendered permitted either by its own slaughtering or by the slaughtering of its dam.
it needs to be slaughtered and is subject to the [priests’ dues of the] shoulder, and the two cheeks, and the maw.\(^1\) If it died [without being slaughtered], it is clean and does not convey uncleanness by carrying.\(^2\) Thereupon Rabbah said to him: The ruling ‘it needs to be slaughtered’ obviously follows R. Meir's view, whereas the ruling ‘it is clean and does not convey uncleanness by carrying’ obviously follows the Rabbis’ view! — But according to your argument, you could raise this same objection against R. Hiyya; for R. Hiyya taught: If a person slaughtered a trefah [animal] and found in it a nine months’ living foetus, it needs to be slaughtered and is subject to the [priests’ dues of the] shoulder, and the two cheeks, and the maw. If it died, it is clean and does not convey uncleanness by carrying. The ruling ‘it needs to be slaughtered’, follows R. Meir's view, whereas the ruling ‘it is clean and does not convey uncleanness by carrying’ follows the Rabbis’ view! — This is no difficulty at all, for R. Hiyya deals with the case where it was found dead [in the dam's womb].\(^3\) This is, however, a difficulty for you.\(^4\) — He replied: It is no difficulty for me either, for the Divine Law permits [the foetus] by [the slaughtering of any two out of] four organs.\(^5\)

When R. Zera went up [to Palestine] he found R. Assi sitting and reciting the above statement [of R. Hisda]. ‘Well spoken!’ said R. Zera; ‘R. Johanan also said so’. Are we to infer that R. Simeon b. Lakish disagrees with [R. Johanan]? — Some say: He was waiting and was silent; and others say: He was drinking and was silent.\(^6\)

R. SIMEON SHEZURI SAYS, EVEN IF IT IS FIVE YEARS OLD . . . Is not his view identical with that of the first Tanna? — R. Kahana replied: The difference between them is where it stood upon the ground.\(^7\)

R. Mesharsheya said: According to him who maintains that we must take into account the seed of the male, if an animal which had been extracted alive [out of the womb of its dam] covered a normal cow, there is no remedy for the offspring.\(^8\) Abaye, said: All agree that if the animal which was extracted alive [out of the womb of its dam] had uncloven hoofs it is permitted.\(^9\) Why? Because everything extraordinary people remember very well.\(^10\) Others report it thus: Abaye said: All agree that if this animal with uncloven hoofs was extracted [alive out of the womb of its dam] which also was with uncloven hoofs and had been extracted [out of the womb of its dam], it is permitted. Why? Because a case with two extraordinary conditions people remember very well.

Ze’iri said in the name of R. Hanina: The halachah is in accordance with R. Simeon Shezuri. Indeed R. Simeon Shezuri permitted [without slaughtering] its young and the offspring of its young and so on unto the end of all time. R. Johanan said: It alone is permitted [without slaughtering] but its young is forbidden.

Adda b. Habu had an animal that had been extracted [alive out of the slaughtered dam's womb]. It was attacked by a wolf,\(^11\) so he came to R. Ashi who advised him to slaughter it [immediately]. But, argued Adda, did not Ze’iri say in the name of R. Hanina that the halachah was in accordance with R. Simeon Shezuri? And indeed R. Simeon Shezuri permitted [without slaughtering] its young and the offspring of its young and so on unto the end of all time. Moreover, even R. Johanan disagreed only regarding its young but not regarding itself!\(^12\) — He replied, R. Johanan merely stated [what he thought to be] the view of R. Simeon Shezuri.\(^13\) But did not Rabin, son of R. Hanina, say in the name of Ulla on the authority of R. Hanina that the halachah was in accordance with R. Simeon of Shezuri? Moreover, is it not an established rule that wherever R. Simeon Shezuri stated his view the halachah is in accordance with him? — He replied: I accept the following view. For R. Jonathan said: The halachah accords with R. Simeon Shezuri only in the case of ‘The dangerously ill person’ and in the case of ‘The terumah separated from the tithe of demai produce’. The case about the dangerously ill person is as we have learnt: At first it was held: If a man whilst being led out in chains [to execution] said: ‘Write out a bill of divorce for my wife’, it was to be written and also to be delivered to her.\(^{15}\) Later they laid down that the same rule applied also to one who was leaving on a sea journey or setting out with a caravan.\(^{16}\) R. Simeon Shezuri says: It also applies to a man who was dangerously ill.\(^{16}\) And the case about the terumah separated from the tithe of demai produce is as we have learnt: If the terumah that had been separated from the tithe of demai produce fell back into its place,\(^{17}\) R. Simeon Shezuri says, even on a weekday one need only ask him [sc. the seller] about it and eat it by his word.\(^{18}\)

---

(1) V. Deut. XVIII, 3.
(2) Since it has been rendered clean by the slaughtering of its dam. ‘Carrying’ even without contact is one of the methods by which a carcass can convey uncleanness. It must be observed that the other method of conveying uncleanness, namely, by contact, is not excluded here.
(3) And in this case it is admitted by R. Meir that the slaughtering of the dam renders the foetus that is within it clean. Accordingly the teaching of R. Hiyya is entirely in agreement with R. Meir.
(4) For R. Hisda did not explain that he was dealing with a foetus that had died in the womb.
(5) The ruling therefore entirely follows the Rabbis’ view since they hold that the foetus is permitted either by its own slaughtering or that of its dam.
(6) It is not known whether Resh Lakish disagreed or not, for R. Assi had left the room whilst R. Johanan was lecturing and Resh Lakish had not as yet commenced to argue with R. Johanan either because, as some say: Resh Lakish was in the habit of allowing him to finish his remarks without interruption, or because, as others say: Resh Lakish was drinking water at the time and therefore remained silent.
(7) Lit., ‘it made an impression of its parted feet on the ground’. According to the first Tanna, i.e, ‘The Sages’ in our Mishnah, since this animal goes about the fields like normal animals, it has been decreed by the Rabbis that it must be ritually slaughtered, for not everyone would know of the peculiarity of this animal to distinguish it from normal animals.
(8) V. supra 69a. As the offspring from the maternal side requires to be slaughtered but not from the paternal side, it is regarded as half slaughtered, and to continue the slaughtering now is of no avail because of the long pause between the beginning of the slaughtering, i.e., at birth, and now. This state in the animal could not arise if we accept the rule that the law permits the foetus either by its own slaughtering or by the slaughtering of its dam. V. however, Tosaf. ad loc.
(9) By the slaughtering of its dam even though it walks about in the field, and even according to the view of the Sages in our Mishnah.
(10) All people would take notice of this beast on account of its abnormality, and would remember all the peculiarities in connection with it.
(11) And it was dying (Rashi). There was no question at all whether or not it was to be considered trefah, but only whether it was necessary to have it slaughtered or not; v. Tosaf. ad loc.
(12) Why then was it necessary to have the beast slaughtered?
(13) Though he himself was not in agreement with it.
(14) Cur. edd. add ‘in the Mishnah’, but it is incorrect in view of the passage in Men. 31b. q.v.; v. Marginal Gloss.
(15) Even though he gave no instructions that it was to be delivered to his wife. It is assumed that he intended it to be delivered to her but omitted to say so owing to his perturbed state of mind.
(16) Git. 65b.
(17) I.e., was mixed up with the ordinary ‘common’ produce. The mixture now is permitted to be eaten by priests only, so that the loss to the owner is considerable.
(18) In these special circumstances because of the loss involved, and since we are dealing with demai produce, i.e., produce that had been bought from an ‘am ha-arez or one who was not trusted with regard to the separation of the tithes, the Rabbis permitted the owner to enquire of the seller about it, and if the seller assured him that he separated the various dues he may rely upon his word. If this occurred on the Sabbath it would certainly be permitted to rely upon the seller's word for the honour of the Sabbath, but according to R. Simeon Shezuri this is permitted even on a weekday. V. Dem. IV, 1.

Talmud - Mas. Chullin 76a
MISHNAH. IF THE HIND LEGS OF AN ANIMAL WERE CUT OFF BELOW THE JOINT, IT IS PERMITTED; IF ABOVE THE JOINT, IT IS TREFAH. SO TOO IF THE JUNCTURE OF THE TENDONS WAS GONE, IT IS TREFAH. IF THE BONE WAS BROKEN BUT THE GREATER PART OF THE FLESH [AROUND THE FRACTURE] REMAINED, IT IS RENDERED CLEAN BY THE SLAUGHTERING; OTHERWISE IT IS NOT RENDERED CLEAN BY THE SLAUGHTERING.

GEMARA. Rab Judah said in the name of Rab who reported it in the name of R. Hiyya, BELOW means below the joint, and ABOVE means above the joint, and the joint referred to is the joint which is sold together with the head. Ulla said in the name of R. Oshaia: It is that joint which is clearly distinguishable in the camel. Ulla said to Rab Judah, ‘According to me, holding as I do that it is that joint which is clearly distinguishable in the camel, it is right that the Mishnah also states: SO, TOO, IF THE JUNCTURE OF THE TENDONS WAS GONE.’ But according to you, why does it state, SO, TOO, IF THE JUNCTURE OF THE TENDONS WAS GONE? — He replied: ‘[It teaches that the animal is trefaah] whether the bone was gone and the juncture of the tendons remained, or the juncture of the tendons was gone and the bone remained’. ‘But the Mishnah expressly states WERE CUT OFF’? — He [Rab Judah] was silent [and did not reply]. But when he [Ulla] had left, Rab Judah said to himself, ‘Why did I not answer him thus: BELOW means below the joint, but ABOVE means above the juncture of the tendons?’ Later he said: ‘And did I not suggest an answer to him? but he retorted that the Mishnah expressly states: WERE CUT OFF. Then to this suggestion, too, [he would have retorted, that] the Mishnah expressly states: ABOVE THE JOINT.

R. Papa reported the passage thus: Rab Judah said in the name of Rab who reported it in the name of R. Hiyya, BELOW means below the joint and the juncture of the tendons, and ABOVE means above the joint and the juncture of the tendons. So, too, if the juncture of the tendons was gone [it is trefaah]; and the actual joint meant is that [which was referred to in the statement] of Ulla in the name of R. Oshaia. But is it possible to conceive of such a case, namely, that if the limb were cut off higher up the animal would live [and it would be permitted], and if it were cut off lower down the animal would die? — R. Ashi retorted: Are you comparing defects with one other? Amongst the various defects we do not say that this resembles that; for one may cut the animal in one place and it will die and in another place and it will live.

And this is the extent of the juncture of the tendons — Rabbah said in the name of R. Ashi. That part with is off the bone. Rabbah son of R. Huna said in the name of R. Ashi: That part which is on the bone. Raba the son of Rabbah son of R. Huna said in the name of R. Assi: That part which is above the heel.

A certain Rabbi was sitting before R. Abba and recited: It is that part which is on the heel; whereupon R. Abba said: Pay no attention to him, for thus said Rab Judah: It is that part which the butchers strike; and this corresponds with the view reported by Raba the son of Rabbah son of R. Huna in the name of Rab Judah.

Rab Judah said in the name of Samuel: The juncture of the tendons of which the Rabbis spoke, is the place where the tendons converge. And how far does it extend? — A certain Rabbi, whose name was R. Jacob, said: When I was at the school of Rab Judah, he said to us: Accept from me the following ruling which I heard from a great man, that is Samuel, viz., The juncture of the tendons of which they spoke is the place where the tendons converge, and it extends from the place where the tendons converge up to the place where they part. How much is this? — Abaye said: Four finger-breadths in an ox. What is the extent in small cattle? — Abaye said: Where the tendons bulge it is part of the juncture, but not where they are sunken in; where they are hard it is part of the juncture but not where they are soft; where they are large it is part of the juncture but not where they are small; where they are white it is part of the juncture but not where they are not white.
(1) Lit., ‘from the joint downward’. V. Gemara.
(2) Lit., ‘from the joint upward’.
(3) I.e., the Achilles Tendon, the name given to the aggregated tendons in the distal part of the tibia. V. Gemara.
(4) And is even permitted to be eaten.
(5) The term הקפרה in the Mishnah means ‘joint’, there is however a difference of opinion in the Gemara as to which joint is intended. It must be remembered that the hind limb is made up of four divisions of bones. First there is the hip, the skeleton of which is formed by the innominate bones (הקרבה תאפה or הקרבה תיליה), then the thigh, formed by the femur (הקרבה ילת and patella (הקרבה העלית). Then the leg, formed by the tibia (הקרבה ילת) and fibula (in the ox it is very rudimentary and is represented by a fibrous cord only); and finally the hind foot which corresponds to the human foot and consists of the tarsus (הקרבה ימתמח), metatarsus and four digits. The tendons of the muscles behind the tibia are combined into one, termed the ‘Achilles Tendon’, and are attached to the heel or tuber calcis; this is what is meant by ‘the juncture of the tendons’ or aמשאר בנים מ. According to Rab Judah the הקפרה of our Mishnah is the hind foot, all that part below the tarsus, which is usually sold with the head as offal; v. Diagram at end of Tractate.
(6) V. Bek. 42a. The joint referred to is the patella or knee-joint which lies between the lower extremity of the femur and the upper extremity of the tibia, and not, as Rab Judah says, the tarsus.
(7) Although we are taught that if the leg was cut off below the knee-joint it is permitted, nevertheless if the juncture of the tendons was gone, which is below the knee-joint, it is trefah.
(8) For if the leg was cut off at any point above the tarsus it is trefah, it is certainly so if cut at the juncture of the tendons, which is above the tarsus.
(9) Which obviously means that that part of the limb was absolutely severed, and the bone and the tendons were gone.
(10) And so it was also necessary for the Mishnah to teach the law if the leg was cut at the juncture of the tendons.
(11) Which means immediately above the joint and not above the juncture of the tendons.
(12) I.e., the knee-joint. And the law according to Rab Judah is this: If the leg was cut off at any point below the knee-joint and the tibia, which includes the juncture of the tendons, the animal is permitted; if cut off at any point above the knee-joint, i.e., in the femur, it is trefah. In the tibia it would be trefah only if the leg was cut off at the juncture of the tendons, but if cut off at any point in the tibia above this juncture it would be permitted. Accordingly Rab Judah is in agreement with Ulla’s view.
(13) This position is most illogical.
(14) In MS.M., ‘R. Assi’.
(15) The aggregated tendons of the leg are at their lower extremity attached to the tuber calcis (הקרבה עלית or heel bone), they run upwards along the leg, first adhering to the tibia for a short distance and then separating from the bone and expanding into the muscles of the leg. According to Rabbah the most vital part of the juncture is from the point where it separates from the bone until it expands into the leg muscles. V. Diagram at end of Tractate.
(16) I.e., where it adheres to the tibia. According to Asheri the extent here meant is the whole of the distance that it adheres to the tibia and further also until it expands into the leg muscles.
(17) I.e., from the tuber calcis up to the point where it expands. This is the greatest extent of all.
(18) When commencing to flay the animal, or when about to purge the meat; it is immediately above the tuber calcis.
(19) This amud contains no footnotes.

Talmud - Mas. Chullin 76b

Mar son of R. Ashi said: Where they are transparent though not white [it is part of the juncture of the tendons].

Ameamar said in the name of R. Zebid: It consists of three tendons, one thick and two thin. If the thick one was severed [it is trefah, for] the greater part of its structure has gone; and if the thin ones were severed [it is trefah, for] the greater number [of tendons] has gone. Mar son of R. Ashi reports the above in favour of leniency thus: If the thick one was severed [it is permitted, for] there remains the greater number of tendons, and if the thin ones were severed [it is permitted, for] there remains the greater part of its structure.
In birds the juncture consists of sixteen tendons; if one was severed, it is trefah. Mar son of R. Ashi said: I was once standing before my father when there was brought to him a bird which he examined and found therein only fifteen tendons. One, however, appeared different from the others, so he split it and found that it was composed of two tendons; [he therefore declared it to be permitted.]

Rab Judah said in the name of Rab: With regard to the juncture of the tendons, if the greater part [was severed, it is trefah]. What is meant by ‘the greater part’? The greater part of any one of them. When I stated this in the presence of Samuel he said to me, ‘Consider, there are three [tendons], are there not? Even if one was entirely severed there still remain two’! Now the reason is because there still remain two; but if there did not remain two it would not [be permitted]. This clearly is in conflict with the view of Rabbanai. For Rabbanai stated in the name of Samuel: If of the juncture of the tendons there only remained as much as the thread of a woolen cloak, it is permitted.

Others say: By ‘the greater part’ is meant the greater part of each. [tendon]. When I stated this in the presence of Samuel he said to me, ‘Consider, there are three [tendons], are there not? [Even if the greater part of each was cut] there still remains one third of each one’. This accordingly supports the view of Rabbanai. For Rabbanai stated in the name of Samuel: If of the juncture of the tendons there only remained as much as the thread of a woolen cloak, it is permitted.

IF THE BONE WAS BROKEN etc. Rab said, [Where the fracture was] above the joint, if the greater part of the flesh remained, both are permitted, and if not both are forbidden. [Where the fracture was] below the joint, if the greater part of the flesh remained, both are permitted, and if not the limb is forbidden but the animal is permitted. Samuel: Whether the fracture was above or below the joint, if the greater part of the flesh remained, both are permitted, and if not the limb is forbidden but the animal is permitted. R. Nahman demurred saying: According to Samuel's view people will remark, ‘A limb thereof is thrown on to the dung-heap and yet the animal is permitted!’ Whereupon R. Aba son of R. Huna said to R. Nahman: Even according to Rab's view people will remark, ‘A limb thereof is thrown on to the dung-heap and yet the animal is permitted!’ — He replied. I mean this, people will remark, ‘A vital limb of the animal is thrown on to the dung-heap and yet the animal is permitted’!

They sent word from there [Palestine]: The law agrees with Rab's view. They later sent word: The law agrees with Samuel's view. And yet another time they sent word: The law agrees with Rab's view; moreover, the limb conveys uncleanness by carrying. R. Hisda raised this objection. It was taught: It is not so. When you say that the slaughtering of a trefah animal renders it clean, or [that the slaughtering of an animal] renders the limb that hangs loose clean, you are concerned with [the animal] itself; but can it render clean the [limb of the] foetus which is not part of [the animal] itself? Thereupon Rabbah said to him: Why go searching for objections? You could raise an objection from a Mishnah which we have learnt: If the animal was slaughtered they are rendered susceptible [to contract uncleanness] by the blood [of the slaughtering]: so R. Meir. R. Simeon says: They are not rendered susceptible to uncleanness! — He replied, [The objection from] that Mishnah can be rejected as indeed we rejected it above.

When R. Zera went up [to Palestine] he found R. Jeremiah [b. Abba] sitting and reciting the above statement [of Rab]. R. Zera thereupon remarked: ‘Well spoken! So, too, did Arioch teach it in Babylon’! But who is Arioch? It is Samuel, is it not? But does he not disagree [with Rab]? — Samuel retracted his opinion in favour of Rab's.

Our Rabbis taught: Where the bone was broken and it protruded outside, if the skin and flesh cover the greater part of it, it is permitted; otherwise it is forbidden. What is meant by ‘the greater part of it’? — When R. Dimi came [from Palestine] he reported in the name of R. Johanan that it means, the greater part of its thickness.

Others say: It means, the greater part [of the flesh] that surrounds it.

R. Papa said: We therefore require the greater part of its thickness [to be covered by flesh], as well as the greater part [of the flesh] that surrounds it [to be intact].

Ulla said in the name of R. Johanan: The skin is like the flesh.

R. Nahman said to Ulla: Why does not the Master rather say that the skin is to be reckoned with the flesh [to make up the required amount]?

Does not [the above Baraitha] state ‘skin and flesh’? — He replied: We interpret [that Baraitha] to mean, either skin or flesh.

Others report this as follows: Ulla said in the name of R. Johanan: The skin is to be reckoned together with the flesh [to make up the required amount]. R. Nahman said to Ulla: Why does not the Master rather say that the skin merely complete[s the required amount of] flesh, adopting the stricter interpretation?

He replied: I only know of the following incident. At the house of R. Isaac there was a young pigeon [whose leg was broken], and the skin, if reckoned together with the flesh, [covered up the greater part of the fracture]. The case was brought before R. Johanan and he declared it to be permitted. Thereupon R. Nahman retorted: You are speaking of a young pigeon! but the case of a young pigeon is quite different, because its skin is tender.

[The case of a fracture which was covered for the most part with flesh and] tender sinews came before Raba. Said Raba: What have we to fear? In the first place, R. Johanan has declared that in respect of the sinews which later will become hard

(1) And then only is it trefah.
(2) Which together make up one whole tendon; and so should be permitted.
(3) The joint spoken of in our Mishnah.
(4) Covering the fracture.
(5) I.e., the animal as well as the limb.
(6) Since it hangs loose from the animal it is not rendered permitted by the slaughtering of the animal.
(7) This surely cannot be right.
(8) In the case where the fracture occurred below the joint and the greater part of the surrounding flesh was gone.
(9) That is, where the fracture was above the joint.
(10) It will be seen that the only point of difference between Rab and Samuel is in the case where the fracture was above the joint and the greater part of the flesh around the fracture was gone. According to Rab both the limb and the animal are forbidden, whilst according to Samuel the animal is permitted even though the limb is forbidden.
(11) In this Baraitha it is admitted by all that a limb that hangs loose from the animal is rendered clean by the slaughtering of the animal. How then can it be said that it conveys uncleanness by ‘carrying’?
(12) I.e., the loose limb and the pieces of flesh that hang loose from the animal.
(13) The dispute is only with regard to their being rendered susceptible to contract uncleanness in the future, but both agree that the limb itself does not convey uncleanness. V. infra 127b; supra 73b.
(14) V. supra 73b. It was there suggested that that Mishnah does not deal with a loose limb at all but only with pieces of flesh that hang loose from the limb or from the animal itself.
(15) A title of dignity applied to Samuel, the contemporary of Rab. It is probably a Persian adaptation of ‘judge’ (Jastrow). V. Kid., Sonc. ed., p. 189, n. 11. V. also Rashi here, and in Men. 38b.
(16) Sc. of the bone; i.e., only a small part of the surface of the fracture was exposed whereas the greater part was covered by the flesh and skin.
(17) I.e., the greater part of the flesh around the fracture was whole and not lacerated. Even though the entire surface of the fracture had projected and was exposed, it would be permitted.
(18) The skin is considered an adequate covering over the fracture even though all the flesh underneath the skin was gone.
(19) I.e., that the covering over the fracture shall consist half of skin and half of flesh, but not as was suggested entirely of skin.
(20) I.e., if the greater portion which surrounds the fracture consists for the most part of flesh but there is a little skin which completes the required amount, only then would it be permitted, but not where it consisted half of flesh and half of skin.
people may be counted in to partake thereof in the Passover-offering. Secondly, ‘the Torah doth spare the money of Israel’. Whereupon R. Papa said to Raba: But on the other hand there is the view of R. Simeon b. Lakish, and moreover it is here a question involving a prohibition of the Torah, and you say: What have we to fear? — He [Raba] remained silent. But why did he remain silent? Has not Raba himself declared that the law agrees with R. Simeon b. Lakish only in those three cases? — In this case it is different, for R. Johanan retracted his view in favour of that of R. Simeon b. Lakish, for he said: ‘Do not worry me [with any more of your arguments] for I regard that Mishnah as the opinion of an individual’.

There once came to Abaye the case where the bone was broken and had protruded outside, and a fragment thereof had broken off. He held the case over three Festivals. Thereupon R. Adda b. Mattena said [to the owner of the animal:] Go and put the case to Raba the son of R. Joseph b. Hama, whose knife is sharp. He took it to him and Raba said: Let us see, [the Baraita] taught, ‘If the bone was broken and protruded outside’. What does it matter to me whether a portion had fallen away or it was all there?

Rabina enquired of Raba: What is the law if the [required amount of] flesh was scattered [around the fracture], or was in shreds, or had decomposed? — R. Huna the son of R. Joshua replied: Any flesh [that has decomposed so] that the surgeon must scrape it away [is to be regarded as gone entirely].

The question was raised: What is the law if the flesh [that covered the fracture] was perforated, or had peeled off [the bone], or was slit, or the inner layer [of flesh close to the bone] was gone? — Come and hear. ‘ulla said in the name of R. Johanan: The skin is as good as the flesh!

R. Ashi said: When we were at the school of R. Papi he enquired of us: What is the law if some of the flesh around the fracture was cut away in a circle like a ring? And I suggested an answer from the following statement of Rab Judah in the name of Rab, ‘I enquired about this of scholars and doctors and they said: One should make incisions around the edges of the flesh with a bone and it will then heal up, but [not with] an iron instrument [for it] would cause inflammation’. R. Papa said: Provided the bone was firmly attached to it.

MISHNAH. IF A PERSON SLAUGHTERED AN ANIMAL AND FOUND IN IT AN AFTERBIRTH, HE WHO IS NOT FASTIDIOUS MAY EAT IT. IT DOES NOT CONTRACT UNCLEANNESS, EITHER FOOD UNCLEANNESS OR THE UNCLEANNESS OF NEBELAH. IF HE INTENDED TO EAT IT, IT CAN CONTRACT FOOD UNCLEANNESS BUT NOT THE UNCLEANNESS OF NEBELAH. IF PART OF THE AFTERBIRTH EMERGED [BEFORE THE SLAUGHTERING OF THE DAM], IT MAY NOT BE EATEN; FOR IT IS A SIGN OF BIRTH IN A WOMAN AND ALSO A SIGN OF BIRTH IN AN ANIMAL. IF AN ANIMAL WHICH WAS WITH YOUNG FOR THE FIRST TIME CAST FORTH AN AFTERBIRTH, IT MAY BE THROWN TO DOGS; BUT IN THE CASE OF A CONSECRATED ANIMAL IT MUST BE BURIED. IT MAY NOT BE BURIED AT CROSS-ROADS OR HUNG ON A TREE, FOR THESE ARE AMORITE PRACTICES.

GEMARA. Whence do we know it? — [From the following.] Our Rabbis taught: The verse: ‘Whatsoever . . . in the beast, that shall ye eat’ includes the afterbirth. I might say that even if part of it came forth [out of the womb it is also permitted], the verse therefore states ‘that’, ‘that’ [shall ye eat] but not the afterbirth. But let us consider, [it is accepted that] there can be no afterbirth without young, why then is any verse necessary [to exclude an afterbirth that had come forth]?

Indeed
the verse is merely a support.

IT DOES NOT CONTRACT UNCLEANNESS. R. Isaac b. Nappaha raised this question: What is the position with regard to an ass's skin which was seethed? In what respect [does the question arise]? If in respect of food uncleanness, we have learnt it;

(1) One fulfils one's obligation by eating these sinews of the Passover offering, for being now tender they are regarded as flesh; v. Pes. 84a.
(2) That these sinews are not regarded as flesh since in a short time they will become hard and uneatable.
(3) Whether the animal is trefa or not.
(4) Except in three cases mentioned in Yeb. 36a, where the view of R. Simeon b. Lakish prevails, the law always accords with the opinion of R. Johanan against that of R. Simeon b. Lakish. In this dispute therefore Raba was right in ignoring the view of R. Simeon b. Lakish.
(5) V. Pes. 84a. R. Johanan originally held that whatsoever was edible now was considered flesh, and based his view on the Mishnah infra 122a, ‘The skin of the head of a tender calf is considered flesh’, although when the calf grows up this skin will harden and become inedible. Subsequently R. Johanan changed his view and ruled that the skin of the head of a tender calf does not contract uncleanness since it hardens later on. When confronted by R. Simeon b. Lakish with the above quoted Mishnah he replied that he did not adopt the ruling of that Mishnah since it was merely the opinion of an individual Rabbi. V. supra 55b, and infra 122a.
(6) To discuss the law with those Rabbis who assembled for the purpose of listening to festival discourses. V. Yeb., Sonc. ed., p. 862, n. 12.
(7) I.e., he is capable of acute logical reasoning.
(8) Since the greater part of the fracture is covered up by flesh and skin it is permitted.
(9) Does such flesh afford a sufficient protection over the fracture or not?
(10) Lit., ‘the lower third’.
(11) If the skin itself can serve as a sufficient covering how much more so the skin with two thirds of the thickness of the flesh!
(12) I.e., the skin adheres firmly to the bone so that it is a firm covering, whereas in the last question the flesh was not attached to the bone (Rashi and R. Gershom). According to R. Hananel and R. Tam the text is נַפְרִיָּת, ‘fibers’, and not נַפְרִיָּת, and the meaning is that the skin was attached to the bones by fibrous tissue.
(13) Can such a deficiency heal up or not?
(14) Sc. the flesh. In that case it will eventually heal up.
(15) For it has been rendered permitted by the slaughtering of the animal. Heb. נְפָרָה, lit., ‘a good soul; i.e., one who is not squeamish.
(16) If it came into contact with unclean matter, for it is not regarded as a foodstuff.
(17) I.e., if the animal died the afterbirth is not deemed part of the carcass and will not convey uncleanness as nebelah.
(18) For it may have contained the head of the foetus which would then be regarded as born, and the afterbirth which belongs to it would not be rendered permitted by the slaughtering of the animal.
(19) Sc. the emergence of the afterbirth.
(20) It is in no wise regarded sacred as a firstling for, in the first place, it might have contained a female young which is not sacred; and even if we assume that it did contain a male young, there is the further possibility that it was a male young of a species of animals different from its dam (דֶּמֶּשֶׁהוּ, v. Gemara infra) which also is not sacred. Hence the greater probability is that it was not a sacred young.
(21) For the young, whether male or female, of a consecrated animal is sacred; and being dead, must be buried and not put to ally use.
(22) These were superstitious practices whereby, it was believed, the animal would be prevented from any further miscarriages. Such heathen superstitions are forbidden in Ex. XXIII, 24: Ye shall not do as they do.
(23) That the afterbirth found in an animal is permitted.
(24) Lev. XI, 3.
(25) Since the part of the afterbirth which emerged may have contained the greater part of the foetus, in which case it is deemed fully born, it is obvious that the slaughtering will not render it permitted.
(26) I.e., boiled for a long time. Is it regarded as a foodstuff or not?
and if in respect of the uncleanness of nebelah, we have also learnt it. As to food uncleanness it was taught: A skin or an afterbirth cannot contract food uncleanness; if the skin was seethed or the afterbirth intended to be eaten, it can contract food uncleanness. As to the uncleanness of nebelah it was taught: It is written, [He that toucheth] the carcass thereof,¹ but not its skin or its bones or its sinews or its horns or its hoofs. And Rabban son of R. Hana had said that [the verse] was only necessary [to exclude these] when they were stewed in a pot!² — Indeed [the question was raised] in respect of food uncleanness, but the law might be different in the case of an ass's skin since it is loathsome.

IF PART OF THE AFTERBIRTH EMERGED. R. Eleazar said: The rule [in the Mishnah] applies only to the case where there was no foetus within,³ but where there was a foetus within we have no apprehension that it contained another foetus.⁴ R. Johanan said: Whether there was a foetus within or not, we apprehend another foetus. But this surely is not so, for R. Jeremiah has declared that R. Eleazar adopts a stricter view⁵ [than R. Johanan]! — Indeed if it was reported it must have been reported as follows: R. Eleazar said: The rule [in the Mishnah] applies only to the case where it⁶ was not attached to the foetus,⁷ but where it was attached to the foetus we do not apprehend another foetus. R. Johanan said: We are guided by the rule that there can be no afterbirth without a foetus; but where it⁸ contained a foetus, whether it was attached to the foetus or not, we do not apprehend another foetus. This now accords with the dictum of R. Jeremiah that R. Eleazar adopted a stricter view.⁹

There is [a Baraita] taught in support of R. Eleazar's view,⁹ viz., If a woman brought forth an abortion which resembled a beast or a wild animal or a bird, and there was an afterbirth too, if the afterbirth was attached to it we do not apprehend another foetus;¹⁰ but if it was not attached to it, I must impose upon this woman the restrictions of two births, for I may suppose that the foetus of this afterbirth as well as the afterbirth of this foetus had dissolved.¹¹

IF AN ANIMAL WHICH WAS WITH YOUNG FOR THE FIRST TIME CAST FORTH AN AFTERBIRTH [IT MAY BE THROWN TO DOGS]. Why? — R. Ika the son of R. Ammi said: Because the majority of animals give birth to something which is holy as a firstling whereas a minority of animals give birth to something which is not holy as a firstling, to wit, a nidmeh.¹² Now all animals that bear young bear half males and half females;¹³ add therefore the minority of nidmeh to the half females, with the result that the males constitute a minority.¹⁴

BUT IN THE CASE OF A CONSECRATED ANIMAL IT MUST BE BURIED. Why? — Because the majority [of young born by a consecrated animal] is holy.¹⁵

IT MAY NOT BE BURIED AT CROSS-ROADS. Abaye and Raba both stated: Whatever is done for medicinal purposes is not prohibited as Amorite practices, and whatever is not done for medicinal purposes is prohibited as Amorite practices. But has it not been taught that a tree which casts its fruit may be painted with red paint or laden with stones? Now it may be laden with stones so that

---

(1) Lev. XI, 39.
(2) For otherwise they certainly would not be regarded as foodstuffs.
(3) I.e., in that part of the afterbirth which still remained inside the womb there was not found a foetus or any signs of one; this being so, and because of the principle that there can be no afterbirth without a foetus, the foetus must have been in that part of the afterbirth which had emerged so that it was thereby born; hence the afterbirth is forbidden.
(4) I.e., there is no reasonable ground to assume that in that part of the afterbirth which had come out there was another foetus, and that this afterbirth belonged to it, so that this afterbirth belonging to a born foetus would be forbidden. We assume rather that this afterbirth belongs to the foetus that is found within it, and which has not yet come out of the womb, so that the afterbirth is permitted.

(5) Whereas according to the terms of the above dispute R. Eleazar adopts the more lenient view.

(6) Sc. the afterbirth.

(7) In this case, even though there is a foetus in that part of the afterbirth which is still within the womb, the afterbirth is forbidden, for since this foetus is not attached to the afterbirth, there is the possibility of there having been another foetus in that part of the afterbirth which had come out and had dissolved, and this afterbirth belongs to it.

(8) For where that part of the afterbirth that was still inside the womb contained a foetus but was not attached to it, according to R. Eleazar we must take into consideration the possibility of there having been another foetus within it, whereas according to R. Johanan we do not; hence R. Eleazar adopts the stricter view.

(9) That there is a distinction between an afterbirth that is attached to the foetus and one that is not so attached.

(10) This woman therefore would be clean if no blood issued from her womb, for the bringing forth of these animal-like abortions is not accounted a birth, in accordance with the view of the Rabbis that whatsoever has not the form of man is not accounted a birth (v. Nid. 21a and Tosaf. a.l.). If these animal-like abortions were accounted a birth she would be unclean even though no blood issued from the womb, v. Rashi on Lev. XII, 2.

(11) Because of the possibility of the presence of another foetus, perhaps a female one which had dissolved, in this afterbirth, this woman would have to observe the period of uncleanness as for the birth of a female, i.e., fourteen days; but, on the other hand, there may not have been another foetus at all, and the afterbirth in fact belongs to this animal-like abortion, and inasmuch as an animal-like abortion is not accounted a birth, she therefore would not have the advantage of any period of purity at all. V. Lev. c. XII.

(12) Heb. דָּמוֹת דֹּלֶם 'like, similar to'; e.g. a ewe which gave birth to what looked like a kid, or a goat which gave birth to what looked like a lamb. This is not holy as a firstling, v. Bik. II, 5.

(13) And a female is not holy as a firstling.

(14) And since we do not take the minority into consideration the foetus is not holy and may be thrown to the dogs.

(15) For the young of a consecrated animal, whether male or female, is holy, save for the case of a nidmeh.

Talmud - Mas. Chullin 78a

its [productive] strength be weakened,¹ but why may it be painted with red paint?² — The purpose is that people will observe it and pray for its recovery. As it was taught: [It is written:] And he shall cry: Unclean, unclean,³ that is to say, he shall make known [his affliction] to his fellow men that they may pray for him. Likewise, he upon whom a calamity has befallen should make known [his trouble] to his fellow men that they may pray for him. Rabina said: According to whom is it that we suspend a cluster [of dates] on a tree [which casts its fruit]?⁴ — It is in accordance with the above Tanna.

C H A P T E R V

GEMARA. Our Rabbis taught: Whence do we know that the law of ‘It and its young’ applies to consecrated animals? Because the verse states: When a bullock or a sheep or a goat is brought forth... and there immediately follows the verse: And whether it be an ox or a sheep, ye shall not kill it and its young both in one day, thus indicating that the law of ‘It and its young’ applies to consecrated animals. Perhaps then it applies only to consecrated animals and not to unconsecrated animals! — [This cannot be, for] the word ‘ox’ interrupts the subject matter. Perhaps then it applies to unconsecrated animals only and not to consecrated animals! — Since it is written: ‘And... an ox’, the conjunction ‘and’ connects it with the previous subject. It should then follow, should it not, that as a hybrid cannot be a consecrated animal, so the law of ‘It and its young’ should not apply to a hybrid? Wherefore has it been taught: The law of ‘It and its young’ applies to a hybrid and to a koy? And [there is] also [this difficulty] for it is written here, sheep, and Raba has declared.

(1) For its excessive fertility was no doubt the cause for it casting its fruits. This is therefore not regarded as a superstitious practice.
(2) Is this not an Amorite practice?
(3) Lev. XIII, 45.
(4) And we do not regard it as a superstitious practice.
(5) Lev. XXII, 28; the penalty for the infringement of this prohibition is forty stripes. Whether the prohibition applies only to the cow or ewe and her young or also to the bull or ram and his young, is a question disputed in the Gemara infra.

(6) It is assumed for the sake of clarity that one person slaughtered the dam and another the young. The law would be the same, however, if both animals were slaughtered by the same person; moreover, it is immaterial whether the dam was slaughtered first and then the young or vice versa.

(7) Even though there has been a transgression of the prohibition.

(8) For the infringement of the prohibition of ‘It and its young’.

(9) The penalty prescribed for slaughtering a consecrated animal fit for a sacrifice outside the Temple court, V. Lev. XVII, 4. For Kareth v. Glos. He who slaughtered the second animal is not liable to this penalty for what he slaughtered, though consecrated, was not fit for a sacrifice at the time, since its dam had been slaughtered previously on the same day.

(10) The first for infringing, the law against slaughtering consecrated animals outside the Sanctuary; for, although it has, been said that he is liable to the penalty of Kareth, if he was warned before the commission of the act that he would be liable to the punishment of stripes, he would suffer that punishment (so according to the view of R. Akiba in Mak. 13b); and the second for the infringement of the prohibition of ‘It and its young’.

(11) V. Kid. 57b. Unconsecrated animals slaughtered inside the Sanctuary are thereby rendered invalid, but he who slaughtered them has not incurred the penalty of stripes, for the prohibition thereof is not expressly stated in the Torah, but is deduced from the verse in Deut. XII, 21.

(12) V. p. 433, n. 4.

(13) For it is this day unfit for a sacrifice and comes under the class of מוחמות זmoil, lit., ‘wanting in age’, ‘out of time’, either too young or for some other reason temporarily disqualified.

(14) V. p. 433, n. 6.

(15) V. p. 433, n. 6.

(16) For the infringement of the prohibition of ‘It and its young’.

(17) Lev. XXII, 27. This verse obviously refers to consecrated animals.

(18) Ibid. 28.

(19) If this law referred only to consecrated animals which is the subject matter of the preceding verse: Scripture should not have repeated the words ‘ox or sheep’ since these are mentioned in the preceding verse. The fact that the words ‘ox or sheep’ are repeated indicates that the law applies generally.

(20) The product of a ewe and a he-goat. If one slaughtered this offspring and its dam one would be culpable.

(21) כֵּן a permitted animal, about which the Rabbis were undecided whether it was to be classed in the category of cattle or of wild beasts. Probably a cross between a goat and some species of gazelle. V. infra 79b and 80a.

Talmud - Mas. Chullin 78b

This verse establishes the rule that wherever ‘sheep’ is stated the hybrid is excluded! — Since the verse states ‘or’, it includes the hybrid. But is not ‘or’ necessary to indicate disjunction? For I might have thought that one is not culpable unless one kills an ox and its young and also a sheep and its young, therefore teaches us [that it is not so]! — Disjunction is indicated in the expression ‘its young’. But it is still necessary for the following [teaching]. It was taught: Had Scripture stated: ‘An ox and a sheep and its young [ye shall not kill]’. I would have said that one is not culpable unless one kills an ox and a sheep and the young of any one of them; the text therefore says. And whether it be an ox or a sheep, ye shall not kill it and its young. Now presumably [this teaching] is derived from the expression ‘or’! — No, it is derived from the expression ‘it’ [and its young’]. This is well according to the Rabbis — who regard ‘it’ as superfluous; but according to Hananiah who does not regard ‘it’ as superfluous, whence would he derive the principle of disjunction? — No verse is necessary to indicate disjunction for he concurs with the view of R. Jonathan. For it was taught: For any man that curseth his father and his mother [shall surely be put to death]. From this I know only [that he is liable for cursing] his father and his mother; [if he curses] his father and not his mother, or his father and not his mother, or his father and his mother and not his father, whence do I know [that he is liable]? Because it also says. His father and his mother he hath cursed; that is, he has cursed his father, he has cursed his mother: so R. Josiah. R. Jonathan says. It may imply both together or each separately, unless the verse expressly states ‘together’.
What is this dispute between Hananiah and the Rabbis? — It was taught: The law of ‘It and its young’ applies to the female parent only and not to the male.\(^1\) Hananiah says: It applies both to the male and female parent. What is the reason of the Rabbis? — It was taught: I might have said that the law of ‘It and its young’ applies to both male and female parents; there is, however, an argument against this, viz., there is a prohibition here\(^2\) and there is also a prohibition with regard to ‘The dam with the young’;\(^3\) just as the prohibition of ‘The dam with the young’ applies only to the female parent and not to the male, so the prohibition here applies only to the female parent and not to the male. But [it will be retorted] it is not so; for you may say this\(^4\) of ‘The dam and its young’, since [it has this distinctiveness, in that] the law does not place upon the same footing birds that are at one's disposal and birds that are not at one's disposal;\(^5\) can you then say this of ‘It and its young’, seeing that [it has not this distinctiveness, for] the law places upon the same footing beasts that are at one's disposal and beasts that are not at one's disposal?\(^6\) The verse therefore states ‘it’,\(^7\) that is, it refers to one [parent] and not to both. Since therefore Scripture discriminates [between the parents]. I am justified in applying the above argument, viz., there is a prohibition here and there is also a prohibition with regard to ‘The dam with the young’, just as the prohibition of ‘The dam with the young’ applies only to the female parent and not to the male, so the prohibition here applies only to the female parent and not to the male! And if you desire to say [anything against this, I submit the following]: [The expression] ‘its young’ relates to that parent to whom the young clings;\(^8\) thus excluding the male parent to whom the young does not cling! (What is meant by. ‘But if you desire to say anything against this’? — If you say that ‘it’\(^9\) indicates the male parent. I therefore submit another argument: The expression ‘its young’ relates to that parent to whom the young clings; thus excluding the male parent to whom the young does not cling.)

---

(1) The verse in Deut. XIV, 4 (Rashi); or in Ex. XII, 5 (Tosaf.).
(2) In Lev. XXII, 28. Heb. וְ. This word is shown to be superfluous and it therefore serves to include the hybrid.
(3) That the verse means either the ox and its young or the sheep and its young.
(4) Sc. the word or.
(5) The fact that its young and not their young is stated clearly suggests the young and only one of the aforementioned animals, either the ox or the sheep.
(6) V. infra.
(7) Lev. XX, 9.
(8) For the verse states סָבִיבָה וְתַאֲוָה, and presumably the vav (‘and’) is conjunctive, implying both parents.
(9) For at the beginning of the verse: ‘that curseth’ is in immediate proximity to ‘his father’, and at the end of the verse: ‘he hath cursed’ is in immediate proximity to ‘his mother’; thus showing that he who curses either parent is liable.
(10) I.e., the vav is either disjunctive or conjunctive according to the established law; for when Scripture intends the vav as a conjunction, the word ‘together’, דָּוִד, is added; e.g., Thou shalt not plough with an ox and an ass together (Deut. XXII, 10).
(11) I.e., one may slaughter on the same day the male parent and its young, for we do not regard the seed of the male as of consequence, v. infra.
(12) The prohibition of ‘It and its young’.
(13) Deut. XXI, 6: If a bird's nest chance to be before thee in the way, in any tree or on the ground, with young ones or eggs, and the dam sitting upon the young, or upon the eggs, thou shalt not take the dam with the young.
(14) I.e., you may make this distinction in the law between the male and female parent.
(15) For the law of ‘The dam with the young’ applies only to birds that ‘chance to be’ before one in the way, i.e., free and wild, but not to birds that are at one's disposal, ready at hand, i.e., captive birds; v. infra 138b.
(16) For the law of ‘It and its young’ undoubtedly applies to all beasts whether met with by chance on the way or confined within one's close.
(17) Lev. XXII, 28. It, being in the singular, clearly applies to one parent only.
(18) Sc. the dam.
(19) Heb. יָדוֹ, lit., ‘him’.

Talmud - Mas. Chullin 79a
According to Hananiah, however, [the implication of the verse is this]: It says: ‘it’, which indicates the male parent, and it also says: ‘its young’, which relates to that parent to whom the young clings; hence it is clear that the law applies both to the male and female parent.

R. Huna b. Hiyya said in the name of Samuel: The halachah is in accordance with Hananiah’s view. Moreover, Samuel is consistent in his opinion. For we have learnt: R. Judah says. The offspring of a mare, even though their sire was an ass, are permitted [to interbreed]; but the offspring of a she-ass may not [interbreed] with the offspring of a mare. But Rab Judah had stated in the name of Samuel that this was the view of R. Judah only. who maintained that we do not take into consideration the seed of the male parent, the Sages however say. All mules are one kind. Who is meant by the ‘Sages’? It is Hananiah, who maintains that we must take into consideration the seed of the male parent; accordingly the one is the offspring of a mare and an ass-stallion and the other is the offspring of a she-ass and a horse, but they are both one kind.

The question was raised: Was R. Judah certain that we do not take into consideration the seed of the male parent or was he in doubt about it? What practical difference would this make? — On the question of permitting the offspring to breed with the [species of the] dam. If you say that he [R. Judah] was certain of it, then the offspring is permitted to breed with the [species of the] dam; but if you say that he was in doubt about it, then it is forbidden for the offspring to breed with the [species of the] dam. What [is to be said about this]? — Come and hear. R. Judah says. All the offspring of a mare, even though their sire was an ass, are permitted to interbreed. Now what are the circumstances of the case? If you say that the sire of this offspring was an ass-stallion and of that also an ass-stallion; then was it necessary to state this? You must therefore say that the sire of this offspring was a horse and of that an ass-stallion, and [R. Judah] declares that they may interbreed, hence it is clear that he [R. Judah] was certain about it! — It is not so. I still say that the sire of this offspring was an ass-stallion and of that also an ass-stallion, and as to your retort, ‘Was it necessary to state this?’ [I reply that] you might have argued that the horse in the one copulates with the ass in the other, and the ass in the one copulates with the horse in the other; he therefore teaches us [that it is not so].

Come and hear: R. Judah says: If a mule was on heat it may not be mated with a horse or an ass, but only with one of its own kind. Now if you say that [R. Judah] was certain about it, why may it not be mated with the species of its dam? — Because we know not the species of its dam. But it says ‘Only with one of its own kind’! — It means this: It may not be mated with any kind of horse or any kind of ass, because we do not know its true species. Then let us examine it by the following signs? For Abaye has stated: If its voice is harsh, it is the offspring of a she-ass; if its voice is shrill, it is the offspring of a mare. And R. Papa has stated: If its ears are long and its tail short, it is the offspring of a she-ass; if its ears are short and its tail long, it is the offspring of a mare! — We must suppose here that it was dumb and mutilated.

What has been decided then? — Come and hear: R. Huna the son of R. Joshua said: All agree that the offspring is forbidden to breed with the dam. Hence it is clear that [R. Judah] was in doubt about it. This proves it.

R. Abba said to his servant, ‘When you harness the mules to my carriage see that they are very like each other and then harness them’. This shows that he is of the opinion that we do not take into consideration the seed of the male parent;

(1) So MS.M. Cur. edd., the law is שמות.
(2) Or ‘be yoked together’. V. Kil. VIII, 4.
(3) I.e., it is the female parent only which determines the species of the offspring, irrespective of the species of the sire; therefore, the offspring of a mare may not interbreed with the offspring of a she-ass. For the prohibition, cf. Lev. XIX. 19.

(4) Since each is the offspring of a horse and an ass, whether the one is a mule and the other a hinny, they may interbreed. The fact that Samuel gives this view of Hananiah as that of the Sages proves that he accepts it as the halachah.

(5) Lit., ‘fruit’, Heb. יָרֵד in MS.M. the word is יָרָד, ‘mule’. The question is whether a mule, the offspring of a mare and an ass-stallion, may breed with a mare.

(6) Since from the aspect of the male parent the offspring is an ass, it may not interbreed with a mare.

(7) Since the offspring are alike, in that each is half horse on the maternal side and half ass on the paternal side, they may certainly interbreed, whether we take into consideration the seed of the male parent or not.

(8) In each case, however, the dam was a mare.

(9) That we do not take into consideration the seed of the male parent; that is to say, it is only the female parent that determines the species of the offspring of the ass, and the species of the dam is immaterial.

(10) Since each offspring is half horse and half ass, it might be argued that in copulation the half horse in the one unites with the half ass in the other, and vice versa, hence there is breeding of diverse kinds which would be forbidden.

(11) And if we do not know the species of its dam with what kind can this mule be mated?

(12) Whether thoroughbred or mule.

(13) But if the species of the dam were known this mule could be mated with one of that species.

(14) I.e., it could not utter any sound and its tail and ears were cut off. It is therefore impossible to examine the mule by the abovementioned criteria.

(15) In the matter of ears and tail.

(16) For if we did take into account the seed of the male he would not have been so meticulous about the mules that were to be harnessed since each is part horse and part ass.

Talmud - Mas. Chullin 79b

and also that the [aforementioned] signs are [reliable by] Biblical law.¹

Our Rabbis taught: [The law of] ‘It and its young’ applies to a hybrid and a koy.² R. Eliezer says. To a hybrid, the offspring of a goat and a ewe, the law of ‘It and its young’ applies; to a koy, the law of ‘It and its young’ does not apply. R. Hisda said: What is the koy about which R. Eliezer and the Rabbis differ? It is the offspring of a he-goat and a hind.³

What are the circumstances? If you suggest that a he-goat covered a hind and [the hind] gave birth to a young, and then one slaughtered the dam and its young; but [this cannot be, for] R. Hisda has also stated that all agree that if the dam was a hind and its young [the offspring of] a he-goat, one is not culpable [for slaughtering the dam and its young on the same day], for the Divine Law says: a sheep . . . and its young,⁴ and not ‘a hind and its young’. And if you suggest that a hart covered a she-goat and it gave birth to a young and then one slaughtered the dam and its young; but [this, too] cannot be, for] R. Hisda has further stated that all agree that if the dam was a she-goat and its young [the offspring of] a hart, one is culpable, for the Divine Law says ‘a sheep’; and as for the expression ‘its young’. [it implies any offspring] whatever it is!⁵ — Indeed, the circumstances are these: a he-goat covered a hind and [the hind] gave birth to a female young; this female young also gave birth to a young, and then one slaughtered the female young and its young [on the same day]. Now the Rabbis are of the opinion that we take into consideration the seed of the male parent, and that the term ‘sheep’ includes even that which is a sheep in part only.⁶ R. Eliezer, on the other hand, holds that we do not take into consideration the seed of the male parent, nor do we say that the term ‘sheep’ includes that which is a sheep in part only.⁷ Why not say that they differ on the issue whether or not we take into consideration the seed of the male parent, as is the dispute between Hananiah and the Rabbis?⁸ — If they were to differ on that issue only. I might have said that in the above case even the Rabbis would agree [that the law of ‘It and its young’ does not apply], for we do not say that the term ‘sheep’ includes that which is a sheep in part only; he therefore teaches us [the above dispute].

Consider then the following case. We have learnt: A person may not slaughter a koy on a festival, and if he did slaughter it he may not cover up its blood. Now of what [koy] are we speaking here? If you suggest that a he-goat covered a hind and it gave birth [to the koy], then both according to the Rabbis and R. Eliezer he may slaughter it [on the festival] and cover up its blood, for the law [of covering up the blood] applies to deer and even to that which is deer in part. And if you suggest that a hart covered a she-goat and it gave birth [to the koy], then according to the Rabbis he may slaughter it [on the festival] and cover up its blood, and according to R. Eliezer he may slaughter it [on the festival] and need not cover the blood! — Indeed, the fact was that a hart covered a she-goat, but the Rabbis are undecided whether or not we must take into consideration the seed of the male parent.

It follows, does it not, that since the Rabbis are undecided on this point. R. Eliezer has no doubts at all about it? Consider then the following case. It was taught: The law of The shoulder and the two cheeks and the maw applies to a koy and to a hybrid. R. Eliezer says. A hybrid, the offspring of a goat and a ewe, is subject to these dues; a koy is not subject to these dues. Now of what [koy] are we speaking here? If you suggest that a he-goat covered a hind and it gave birth [to the koy], then the view of R. Eliezer that it is not subject [to these dues] is clear, for he is of the opinion that we do not say that the term ‘sheep’ includes that which is a sheep in part only. But according to the view of the Rabbis, granting that they hold that the term ‘sheep’ includes even that which is a sheep in part only, it is clear therefore that there is certainly no obligation to give him one half [of the dues] and even as regards the other half he could say to him, ‘Bring proof that we take into consideration the seed of the male parent and then you shall have it’. And if you suggest that a hart covered a she-goat, then according to the Rabbis it is perfectly clear, for by ‘subject’ they meant [subject] to half the dues. But according to R. Eliezer it ought to be subject to the whole of the dues! — Indeed the case was that a hart covered a she-goat and it gave birth [to the koy], but R. Eliezer is undecided whether or not we must take into consideration the seed of the male parent. But if the Rabbis are undecided about it and R. Eliezer too is undecided, wherein do they differ? —

(1) I.e., they may be relied upon in a case of doubt which involves a Biblical law. This opinion therefore would solve the question raised in B.M. 27a, whether the identification marks in a lost article are legally valid by Biblical or merely by Rabbinic law (Rashi).
(2) The offspring of a goat and a deer; V. supra p. 436, n. 2. It must be remembered that in connection with the law of ‘It and its young’, the Torah expressly states: Whether it be an ox or a sheep, which includes the goat but excludes the deer and all wild animals.
(3) I.e., it is a hybrid and not a species of animal. Throughout this passage the hind denotes the female deer and the hart the male.
(4) Lev. XXII, 28.
(5) Even though its sire was of a different species.
(6) The female young, therefore, by reason of its sire, is partly a sheep, and the law of ‘It and its young’ applies to it.
(7) The female young is a hind, taking exclusively after its dam and so the law of ‘It and its young’ does not apply to it.
(8) Viz., whether the law of ‘It and its young’ applies to the male parent and its young or not; V. supra 78b. According to R. Eliezer it does not apply and according to the Rabbis it does.
(9) Introducing a second issue, namely, whether or not the term ‘sheep’ includes a sheep in part.
(10) Bez. 8a.
(11) V. Lev. XVII, 13. The law of covering up the blood after slaughtering applies to wild animals and fowls only. A koy, therefore, since it is part goat and part deer, may not be slaughtered on a festival for there is no absolute duty in regard to it to cover up its blood.
(12) For it is undisputed that the seed of the female parent is of vital consideration, and since the dam is a hind the law of covering up the blood will certainly apply to its young, even though its sire might have been a goat. Even according to the Rabbis who maintain that we must take into consideration the seed of the male parent, in this case a goat, there is the obligation to cover up the blood of the offspring. for this law is a positive obligation and will certainly apply to that part of the offspring which represents the deer element in it, and since it applies to part it must apply to the whole too, for the deer and goat elements are indistinguishable in it (v. Tosaf. a.l.).

(13) Since they take into consideration the seed of the male parent this koy has a ‘deer’ element in it, consequently its blood must be covered up.

(14) Since he ignores the seed of the male parent the offspring in this case is entirely a goat and the law of covering up the blood does not apply to it. Both according to the Rabbis and R. Eliezer there is no doubt about the covering up of its blood, hence it may be slaughtered on a festival.

(15) They therefore take the stricter view in every ease where this consideration arises. On the one hand, they say, the law of ‘It and its young’ will apply to it, and on the other hand, it is forbidden to be slaughtered on a festival, because of the doubt as to the covering up of its blood.

(16) R. Eliezer is convinced in his view that the seed of the male is of no consequence.

(17) Deut. XVIII, 3: And this shall be the priests’ due from the people, from them that slaughter any slaughtering, whether it be ox or sheep, that they shall give unto the priest the shoulder, and the two cheeks, and the maw. It is clear that this law does not apply to a wild animal, as a deer.

(18) Moreover, according to R. Eliezer, this koy is entirely a deer for he holds that we ignore the seed of the male parent.

(19) Sc. The priest.

(20) The koy on account of its female parent, which is a hind, is certainly exempt as to half the dues; and by ‘subject to dues’ the Rabbis at most meant, subject to half the dues.

(21) That half of the dues which represents the male parent, i.e., the goat.

(22) For since, according to R. Eliezer, the seed of the male parent is to be ignored, this koy is entirely a goat, and is therefore subject to the whole of the priests dues.

Talmud - Mas. Chullin 80a

They differ in this: whether or not the term ‘sheep’ includes that which is a sheep in part only. The Rabbis maintain that the term ‘sheep’ includes even that which is a sheep in part only, whereas R. Eliezer maintains that the term ‘sheep’ does not include that which is a sheep in part only. Therefore,¹ said R. Papa, with regard to the law of covering up the blood and also with regard to the [priests’] dues [the koy spoken of] can only be [the offspring of such interbreeding] as where a hart covered a she-goat.² — For both the Rabbis and R. Eliezer are undecided whether we must take into consideration the seed of the male parent or not; but they differ as to whether the term ‘sheep’ includes that which is a sheep in part only or not. With regard to the law of ‘It and its young’ the dispute can arise both where a he-goat covered a hind and where a hart covered a she-goat. The dispute in the case where a he-goat covered a hind is as to [whether there is any] prohibition³ [or not], the Rabbis holding that it may be that we ought to take into consideration the seed of the male parent, [in which case it is a part sheep], and since we say that the term ‘sheep’ includes even that which is a sheep in part only, it is therefore forbidden;⁴ whilst R. Eliezer maintains that even though we do take into consideration the seed of the male parent, [in which case it is a part sheep], we do not say that the term ‘sheep’ includes that which is a sheep in part only; [and it is therefore permitted]. In the case where a hart covered a she-goat the dispute is as to [whether] stripes [are inflicted or not]; the Rabbis holding that even though we take into consideration the seed of the male parent, since we say that the term ‘sheep’ includes even that which is a sheep in part only, we therefore inflict stripes upon him; whilst R. Eliezer maintains: There is only a prohibition but stripes cannot be inflicted. ‘There is only a prohibition’, perhaps we do not take into consideration the seed of the male ‘parent and therefore this is a proper sheep; ‘but stripes cannot be inflicted’, for it may be that we ought to take into consideration the seed of the male parent [so that it is only a part sheep], and we do not say that the term ‘sheep’ includes that which is a sheep in part only.

Rab Judah said: A koy is a separate creature⁵ but the Rabbis have not decided whether it belongs to the class of wild animals or cattle. R. Nahman said: A koy is a wild ram. Tannaim also differ about it, for it was taught: A koy is a wild ram. Others say: A koy is the offspring of a he-goat and a hind. R. Jose says. A koy is a separate creature but the Rabbis have not decided whether it belongs to the class of wild animals or cattle. R. Simeon b. Gamaliel says. It is a species of cattle and the house of Dushai used to breed herds and herds of them.

R. Zera said in the name of R. Safra who reported it in the name of R. Hamnuna: Forest goats are fit for the altar. He is of the same view as R. Isaac who said. Scripture has enumerated ten species of animals [that may be eaten], and no more. Now si ence these [forest goats] are not reckoned among the wild animals mentioned, it follows that they are of the species of goats.

R. Aha b. Jacob demurred, [saying]. Perhaps we should say that ‘the hart and the gazelle [etc.]’ are particular terms, and every beast is a general proposition [which includes these particulars]. hence we have an enumeration of particulars followed by a general proposition in which case the scope of the proposition extends beyond the kinds specified. Thus there are many [animals that may be eaten although not enumerated in the Torah]! — If so, what is the purpose of the enumeration of all these particulars?

R. Aha the son of R. Ika demurred, [saying:] Perhaps they [the forest goats] are included within the class Akko. R. Aha the son of Raba said to R. Ashi (others say: R. Aha the son of R. Awia said to R. Ashi). Perhaps they are included within the class Teo or Zemer. R. Hanan said to R. Ashi: Amemar permitted the fat of these [forest goats to be eaten].

Abba the son of R. Minjanim b. Hiyya enquired of R. Huna b. Hiyya. What is the law with regard to [the offering of] these forest goats upon the altar? — He replied. It was only with regard to the wild ox that R. Jose disagreed with the Rabbis, for we have learnt: The ‘wild ox’ is a species of cattle. R. Jose says. It is a species of wild animal. [And their arguments are these:] the Rabbis maintain, since the Targum renders [Teo as] ‘the wild ox’, it is certainly a species of cattle, whereas R. Jose maintains, since it is reckoned together with the other species of wild animals it is a species of wild animal; but these [forest goats], according to all views, belong to the species of goats. R. Aha the son of R. Ika demurred: Perhaps they are included within the class Akko! Rabina said to R. Ashi: Perhaps they are included within the class Teo or Zemer. R. Hanan said to R. Ashi: Amemar permitted the fat of these [to be eaten].

THUS, IF ONE PERSON SLAUGHTERED etc. R. Oshaia said: Our entire Mishnah is not in agreement with R. Simeon. Whence do you gather this? — For it reads: IF BOTH ANIMALS WERE CONSECRATED [AND WERE SLAUGHTERED] OUTSIDE THE SANCTUARY, HE WHO SLAUGHTERED THE FIRST INCURS THE PENALTY OF KARETH, BOTH ANIMALS ARE INVALID, AND EACH INCURS FORTY STRIPES. Now let us consider. We know that according to R. Simeon a slaughtering which does not render [the animal] fit is no slaughtering.

(1) Since they are all undecided whether or not the seed of the male parent is taken into consideration and their point of dispute is as to the significance of the term ‘sheep’ to include, that which is sheep in part only.
(2) Accordingly the aforementioned Baraitha which teaches that a koy may not be slaughtered on a festival agrees with the view of the Rabbis. For the obligation to cover up the blood of this koy, the offspring of a hart and a she-goat, arises only by reason of the male element in it, and since this is a matter of doubt one may not slaughter it on a festival. It is indeed possible to explain that the koy spoken of in that Baraitha is the offspring of a he-goat and a hind, so that the view expressed therein would agree with that of R. Eliezer, since he is of the opinion that what is only part deer is not subject to the law of covering up the blood. It is preferable, however, to establish the Baraitha in accordance with the view of the majority. And so, too, the koy that is the subject of dispute between R. Eliezer and the Rabbis with regard to the priests’ dues is also the offspring of a hart and a he-goat; the Rabbis holding that this koy is subject to half the dues by virtue of the female element in it, but as to the other half, the priest can make no claim to it, for it may be that we should take into consideration the seed of the male parent in which case the priest is not entitled at all to that half. R. Eliezer, on the other hand, holds that this koy is entirely exempt from dues, for it may be that we ought to take into consideration the seed of the male parent, in which case the priest is not entitled at all. Their dispute cannot be explained satisfactorily in any other manner, for if the koy were the offspring of a he-goat and a hind, in that case even the Rabbis would declare it wholly exempt from dues, since it has a ‘sheep’ element in it on account of the male parent, and it may be that we do not take into consideration the seed of the male.

(3) To slaughter the koy and its dam both on the same day.
(4) If a person however, did slaughter both on one day, he would not suffer stripes for it, for the warning which must precede the wrongful act is in this case dubious, since the act might not have been prohibited at all.
(5) I.e., a distinct species of animal and not a hybrid, the offspring of a deer and a goat, as assumed above.
(6) Rashi: goats of the Lebanon.
(7) For a sacrifice, for they belong to the class of cattle and not wild animals. Only cattle were allowed as offerings upon the altar but not wild animals.
(8) Cf. Deut. XIV. 4, 5: These are the beasts which ye may eat: the ox, the sheep and the goat, the hart and the gazelle and the roebuck, and the wild goat (סנה) and the pygarg and the wild ox (גרף) and the chamois (=logging). These verses enumerate all the cattle and wild beasts that may be eaten.
(9) And are therefore fit for sacrifices.
(10) Ibid. 5, 6.
(11) V. p. 446, n. 4.
(12) For he regarded them as a species of wild animal.
(13) This is the traditional identification of סנה.
(14) V. Aramaic version of Onkelos ibid. 5.
(16) Whose view is soon given.
(17) Lit., ‘its name is not slaughtering’. Any act of slaughtering which does not for any reason whatsoever effect the ritual fitness of the animal to be eaten is not considered in the eye of the law a slaughtering. Any such act would not be a transgression of the prohibition of ‘It and its young’, for Scripture speaks of ‘slaughtering’ in this connection.

Talmud - Mas. Chullin 80b

Accordingly as the first [animal] was merely killed¹ the second is acceptable [as an offering] within, and he [who slaughtered it] should also incur the penalty of Kareth. Moreover, it reads: IF BOTH ANIMALS WERE UNCONSECRATED [AND WERE SLAUGHTERED] INSIDE THE SANCTUARY, BOTH ANIMALS ARE INVALID, AND [HE WHO SLAUGHTERED] THE SECOND INCURS FORTY STRIPES. Let us consider. We know that according to R. Simeon a slaughtering which does not render [the animal] fit is no slaughtering. Accordingly the first [animal] was merely killed; why then should [he who slaughtered] the second have incurred forty stripes? Further, it reads: IF BOTH ANIMALS WERE CONSECRATED [AND WERE SLAUGHTERED] INSIDE THE SANCTUARY, THE FIRST IS VALID AND HE [WHO SLAUGHTERED IT IS] NOT CULPABLE, BUT HE WHO SLAUGHTERED THE SECOND INCURS FORTY STRIPES AND IT IS INVALID. Let us consider. We know that according to R. Simeon, a slaughtering which does not render [the animal] fit is no slaughtering. Now the slaughtering of a consecrated animal is [by itself] a slaughtering which does not render [the animal] fit, for so long as the blood has not been sprinkled the flesh is not permitted to be eaten. Why is it then that [he who slaughtered] the second has incurred forty stripes? and why is it invalid?² Indeed you may conclude that it is not in agreement with R. Simeon. Is it not obvious it is so? — It was only necessary [to have said it] on account of the clause dealing with the slaughtering of consecrated animals. For you might have submitted that the slaughtering of a consecrated animal is [by itself] a slaughtering which renders fit, for if one were to stab the animal and sprinkle its blood, the flesh would not thereby be permitted to be eaten, whereas if one were to slaughter it, the flesh would thereby be permitted to be eaten, consequently it is a slaughtering which renders the animal fit. He therefore teaches us [that it is not so].

Should he not have incurred stripes also on account of the prohibition of ‘out of time’? For it was taught: Whence do we know that [the offering of] a bullock or a sheep that has any disqualifying defect is a transgression of the prohibition of ‘It shall not be accepted’? From the verse: Either a bullock or a lamb that hath anything too long or too short . . . it shall not be accepted, implying, that [the offering of] a bullock or a sheep that has a disqualifying defect is a transgression of the prohibition of ‘It shall not be accepted’.

He [the Tanna in our Mishnah] only reckons the prohibition of ‘It and its young’, but not other prohibitions. Surely it is not so! For is not the slaughtering of a consecrated animal outside the Sanctuary another prohibition nevertheless he reckons it? For it says, IF BOTH ANIMALS WERE CONSECRATED [AND WERE SLAUGHTERED] OUTSIDE THE SANCTUARY, [HE WHO SLAUGHTERED] THE FIRST INCURS THE PENALTY OF KARETH, AND EACH INCURS FORTY STRIPES. The second one, I grant you, on account of the prohibition of ‘It and its young’; but why does the first one incur forty stripes if not on account of the prohibition of slaughtering consecrated animals outside the Sanctuary? — Wherever there is no prohibition of ‘It and its young’ he then reckons other prohibitions, but wherever there is a prohibition of ‘It and its young’ he does not reckon other prohibitions. R. Zera answered: Leave alone the prohibition of ‘Out of time’, for Scripture __________________

(1) Since the slaughtering of a consecrated animal outside the Sanctuary, although involving the penalty of Kareth, is not regarded as a slaughtering but a killing, its young may be slaughtered on the same day; consequently the second consecrated animal was fit for a sacrifice, and he who slaughtered it outside the Sanctuary should indeed have incurred Kareth.

(2) As the slaughtering of the first animal was no slaughtering, the second is not under the disability of מחלל וمثال, ‘too young’, and it is valid for sacrifice, and he who slaughters it most certainly does not incur stripes.

(3) The one who slaughtered the second consecrated animal in the Sanctuary.

(4) Since one animal has been slaughtered the second is ‘out of time’ and unfit for a sacrifice on that day, and he who slaughters as a sacrifice that which is unfit for a sacrifice incurs the penalty of stripes. V. Tem. 6b.

(5) Lev. XXII, 23.

(6) For which the penalty of stripes is incurred.

Talmud - Mas. Chullin 81a

has stated it in the form of a positive command. How is this? For the verse says. From the eighth day and henceforth it may be accepted, that is from the eighth day only, but not before; it is therefore a negative precept derived from a positive command which has only the force of a positive command. But is not this verse required for R. Aptoriki's exposition? For R. Aptoriki pointed out a contradiction between verses. The verse says: It shall be seven days under the dam, accordingly on the night [following the seventh day] it is valid; and then it continues: From the eighth day and henceforth it may be accepted, that is only from the eighth day and henceforth but not on the night [following the seventh day]. How is this [to be reconciled]? On the night [following the seventh day] it is fit for consecration, but on the [eighth] day it is acceptable [as an offering]! — There is another verse to the same effect, viz., Likewise shalt thou do with thine oxen and thy sheep; [seven days it shall be with its dam; on the eighth day thou shalt give it Me].

R. Hammuna said: R. Simeon used to say that the law of ‘It and its young’ does not apply to consecrated animals. Why? For since R. Simeon has stated that a slaughtering which does not render [the animal] fit is no slaughtering, the slaughtering of consecrated animals is [by itself] a slaughtering which does not render [the animal] fit. Raba raised the following objection: If two persons slaughtered a dam and its young [on the same day], both being consecrated animals, outside the Sanctuary, [he who slaughtered] the second, says R. Simeon, has transgressed a negative command. For R. Simeon used to say: For [slaughtering outside the Sanctuary] any [consecrated] animal which is fit to be brought [as a sacrifice] at a later time, there is a negative command but not the penalty of Kareth. The Sages, however, say: Where there is no penalty of Kareth there is neither [the transgression of] a negative command. Now upon this was raised the following difficulty: [You say,] Where both were consecrated animals and they were slaughtered outside, [he who slaughtered] the second has transgressed a negative command [and nothing more]? But surely, the first animal is merely regarded as ‘killed’ and the second would therefore be acceptable [as a sacrifice] within; consequently he [who slaughtered it] should also incur the penalty of Kareth! Whereupon Raba (others say: Kadi) answered: There is an omission here, and this is how it should read: If both animals were consecrated and [were slaughtered] outside [the Sanctuary]: according to the Rabbis, [he who slaughtered] the first incurs the penalty of Kareth, and the second [animal] is invalid but he [who slaughtered it] is not culpable; and according to R. Simeon, both incur the penalty of Kareth. If both animals were consecrated and [were slaughtered], the first outside and the second inside [the Sanctuary], — according to the Rabbis, [he who slaughtered] the first has incurred the penalty of Kareth, and the second [animal] is invalid and he [who slaughtered it] is not culpable; according to R. Simeon, both are invalid. If the first [was slaughtered] inside and the second outside [the Sanctuary]: according to the Rabbis the first animal is valid and he [who slaughtered it] is not culpable, and the second is invalid and he [who slaughtered it] is likewise not culpable; according to R. Simeon, he who slaughtered the second has transgressed a negative command. Now if you are to assume that [according to R. Simeon] the law of ‘It and its young’ does not apply to consecrated animals, then why [is it stated that] he who slaughtered the second has transgressed a negative command and no more? He should also have incurred the penalty of Kareth! — Rather, said Raba. This is what R. Hammuna meant to say. The punishment of stripes for the [transgression of the] law of ‘It and its young’ does not apply to consecrated animals. Why? For in as much as the flesh is not permitted to be eaten so long as the blood has not been sprinkled, [the warning that is given to the slaughterer] while he is slaughtering is a dubious warning, and a dubious warning is no warning.

Raba is consistent in this view of his. For Raba said: If the dam was an unconsecrated animal and the young a peace-offering, and a man slaughtered first the unconsecrated animal and later [on the same day] the peace-offering, he is not culpable. If he first slaughtered the peace-offering and then the unconsecrated animal, he is culpable. Raba also said: If the dam was an Unconsecrated animal and the young a burnt-offering, it goes without saying that if a man first slaughtered the unconsecrated animal and later [on the same day] the burnt-offering, he is not culpable;

(1) Lev. XXII, 27.
(2) The prohibition of ‘out of time’, e.g., where the animal is not eight days old or where its dam was slaughtered on this same day, is modified in the Torah by the remedy stated, namely, keep it until it is eight days old, or slaughter it on the following day; hence the usual penalty for the transgression of a prohibition does not apply here (Rashi); v. infra 141a. Tosaf. interprets thus: the Torah has expressly singled out the disqualification of ‘out of time’ from all the other disqualifications stated in Scripture for which the usual penalty of stripes is in force, and has declared that the transgression of this prohibition is accounted as the non-fulfilment of a positive precept.
(3) Ex. XXII, 29
(4) V. supra p. 448.
(5) At present, however, it is ‘out of time’ or temporarily unfit, e.g., by reason of the slaughtering of the dam this same day. The negative command is indicated in Deut. XII. 8. V. Zeb. 114a.
(6) For according to R. Simeon the slaughtering of the dam in this case, in as much as it does not render the flesh thereof permitted to be eaten, is no slaughtering; consequently the young is fit for sacrifice and he who slaughters it outside the Sanctuary incurs the penalty of Kareth.
(7) Aliter: ‘as the case may be’; i.e., introducing respectively other persons.
(8) He has not incurred Kareth since it could not have been offered this day in the Sanctuary.
(9) Since the slaughtering of the first animal was no slaughtering the second was fit to be offered this day in the Sanctuary, accordingly the penalty of Kareth is incurred even in respect of the second animal.

(10) He is not liable for slaughtering it outside the Sanctuary since it was not fit to be offered within on the same day. It must he observed that the Tanna of this Baraitha does not take into consideration the transgression of the law of ‘It and its young’.

(11) For the slaughtering of the first animal was no slaughtering and the second animal was thus permitted to be slaughtered this day in the Sanctuary.

(12) V. p. 451, n. 4.

(13) Kareth, however, is not incurred, for since the slaughtering of the first was a valid and proper slaughtering the second was not fit to be offered this day within the Sanctuary.

(14) The reason being that the slaughtering of the first animal, having been performed according to all its rites, renders the second animal ‘out of time’, so that the slaughtering of the latter is no slaughtering and the punishment of stripes not incurred thereby (Rashi).

(15) Rashi suggests the deletion from the text of the last passage (from ‘Why’ to ‘warning’) on the ground that the argument is misleading and erroneous. For the reason why stripes are not incurred is not because of the dubious warning but simply because the slaughtering is no slaughtering (v. prec. n.). V. however Tosaf. supra 80b, s.v. שרו

(16) For slaughtering ‘it and its young’, as the warning at the time of the commission of the wrongful act, i.e., when slaughtering the peace-offering, is a dubious warning, for if the blood of this sacrifice will not later be sprinkled upon the altar, the slaughtering is no slaughtering and no wrongful act will have been committed. This statement is obviously only in accordance with R. Simeon's view.

(17) The warning in this case before the slaughtering of the unconsecrated animal is a certain warning, for by the act of slaughtering alone the law is transgressed.

Talmud - Mas. Chullin 81b

but even if he first slaughtered the burnt-offering and later [on the same day] the unconsecrated animal, he also is not culpable, because the first slaughtering was not a slaughtering such as renders the animal fit for food. R. Jacob, however, said in the name of R. Johanan. The consumption [of sacrifices] upon the altar is deemed ‘eating’. Why? Because it is written: And if any of the flesh of the sacrifice of his peace-offerings be at all eaten; the verse speaks of two ‘eatings’, the eating by man and the ‘eating’ by the altar.

MISHNAH. IF A PERSON SLAUGHTERED [AN ANIMAL] AND IT WAS FOUND TO BE TREFAH, OR IF HE SLAUGHTERED [IT AS AN OFFERING] TO IDOLS, OR IF HE SLAUGHTERED THE RED COW, OR AN OX WHICH WAS CONDEMNED TO BE STONED, OR A HEIFER WHOSE NECK WAS TO BE BROKEN, R. SIMEON SAYS. HE DOES NOT THEREBY TRANSGRESS [THE LAW OF ‘IT AND ITS YOUNG’], BUT THE SAGES SAY, HE DOES. IF A PERSON SLAUGHTERED [AN ANIMAL] AND IT BECAME NEBELAH UNDER HIS HAND, OR IF HE STABBED IT, OR TORE AWAY [THE ORGANS OF THE THROAT]. HE DOES NOT THEREBY TRANSGRESS THE LAW OF IT AND ITS YOUNG.

GEMARA. R. Simeon b. Lakish said: They said so only where the person slaughtered the first animal to idols and the second for his table [needs], but if he slaughtered the first animal for his table [needs] and the second to idols he is [certainly] not culpable [on the ground of ‘It and its young’] for he suffers the heavier penalty. Whereupon R. Johanan said to him: Why, even school children know that! But [I say that] sometimes even where he slaughtered the first animal for his table [needs] and the second to idols he is culpable [on the ground of ‘It and its young’], if, for example, he was warned of the prohibition of ‘It and its young but not of idolatry.

R. Simeon b. Lakish, however, maintains, since if he had been warned [of idolatry] he would not be culpable [on account of ‘It and its young’], then even if he had not been warned of idolatry he is likewise not culpable [on account of ‘It and its young’].

They are indeed consistent in their views. For when R. Dimi came [from Palestine] he reported as follows:

He who committed inadvertently an act which, if he had committed it wilfully, would have been punishable with death or with stripes, and [the act committed is punishable also with] something else,

R. Johanan says, he is liable, but R. Simeon b. Lakish says, he is not liable.

‘R. Johanan says, he is liable’, for he had not been warned [of the major penalty];

‘R. Simeon b. Lakish says, he is not liable’, for since if he had been warned [of the major penalty] he would not be liable, so, too, if he had not been warned of it he is also not liable. Now both [disputes] are required.

For if only this [dispute] were reported I might have said that only here does R. Simeon b. Lakish assert his view, but there I should have said that he is in agreement with R. Johanan. And if the other dispute only were reported I might have said that only there does R. Johanan assert his view, but here I should have said that he is in agreement with R. Simeon b. Lakish. Both disputes therefore had to be reported.

[Do you say that according to R. Simeon the slaughtering of] the Red Cow is a slaughtering which does not render it fit [for food]? Surely it has been taught: R. Simeon says. The Red Cow contracts food uncleanness since it had a period of fitness [to be used for food].

---

1. For a burnt-offering must be entirely burnt upon the altar, consequently according to R. Simeon the slaughtering of a burnt-offering is no slaughtering for it does not render the flesh permitted to be eaten.
2. Lev. VII, 18. Lit., the verse reads: And if eaten there shall be eaten of the flesh, etc. The repetition of the word ‘eaten’ indicates the two modes of consumption of a sacrifice, one by man and the other by the altar. Hence the slaughtering of a burnt-offering is a slaughtering, inasmuch as it renders the flesh fit to be eaten’, i.e., burnt, by the altar.
3. Lit., ‘the cow of purification’. V. Num. XIX.
4. For goring a human being. V. Ex. XXI, 28.
5. V. Deut. XXI, 4.
6. The slaughtering in any of the above cases is no slaughtering since the animal is not thereby rendered permitted to be eaten, consequently he does not transgress the law of ‘It and its young’.
7. At the throat.
8. This is admitted by the Sages for in these cases there was either no slaughtering at all or the slaughtering was defective.
9. I.e., the statement of the Sages that he who slaughters an animal to idols can thereby transgress the law of It and its young.
10. In which case he suffers stripes for transgressing the law of It and its young and is also put to death for sacrificing unto idols; for these two penalties are incurred by him by different acts, death for slaughtering the first animal, and stripes for the second.
11. Since he incurs both penalties by the one act, viz., the slaughtering of the second animal to idols, he would only suffer the heavier penalty, namely, death.
12. In this case he would not suffer the death penalty since he had not been warned of the prohibition of idolatry; he therefore suffers stripes by virtue of the law of It and its young.
13. For then he would suffer the major penalty, namely, death.
15. V. Keth. 34b.
16. I.e., he had not been warned beforehand of the wrongful act he was about to commit.
17. E.g., the payment of money.
18. To make the money payment.
19. And so there is no death penalty, and therefore he pays.
20. Both the dispute here which involves the consideration of the death penalty (by virtue of slaughtering to idols) and stripes (by virtue of the law of ‘It and its young’), and the dispute in Keth. l.c., where the death penalty or stripes and a money payment are considered.
21. That stripes are not inflicted. For since there arises out of the act of slaughtering a consideration of the death penalty, the penalty of stripes, being a minor penalty and of the same character as the major penalty in that they are both corporal punishments, is set aside absolutely, even though in the circumstances for want of the requisite warning the death penalty cannot be inflicted. In the other case however where the penalties involved are of two distinct characters, the one being corporal, i.e., death or stripes, and the other a monetary payment, even R. Simeon b. Lakish would agree that if the major penalty of death or stripes did not apply for want of the necessary warning, the minor penalty of payment would apply.

(22) I.e., its flesh will become unclean by contact with a carcass, for it is regarded as a permissible foodstuff. Rashi raises the interesting question. Why is there any consideration here about the flesh of the Red Cow contracting uncleanness? Surely it conveys uncleanness without having first come into contact with a carcass, cf. Num. XIX, 7, 8, 10. He suggests therefore the following circumstances: A morsel of the flesh of the Red Cow was covered over on all sides by less than an egg’s bulk of dough, but together the flesh and the dough make up an egg’s bulk, which is the minimum quantity for a foodstuff to contract or to convey uncleanness (v. however Tosaf. B.K. 77a, s.v. בַּעַר). If then it is held that the flesh of the Red Cow is deemed a foodstuff, then the entire bulk will be rendered unclean by contact, say, with a carcass, and will convey uncleanness to other foodstuffs. If, on the other hand, it is not deemed a foodstuff this built cannot suffer uncleanness, and whatever foodstuffs come into contact with it will likewise not be rendered unclean, since they did not make any direct contact with the flesh of the Red Cow which is covered up on all sides with dough; v. Ker. 21b. V. however, Tosaf. supra 81b, s.v. בַּעַר.

Talmud - Mas. Chullin 82a

And R. Simeon b. Lakish said: R. Simeon Used to say that the Red Cow may be redeemed even on its woodpile! — R. Shamman b. Abba therefore suggested in the name of R. Johanan. ‘The Red Cow’ is not [part] of our Mishnah.

[Do you also say that the slaughtering of] the heifer whose neck was to be broken is a slaughtering which does not render it fit for food? Surely we have learnt: If the murderer was found before the heifer's neck was broken, it is set free to pasture among the herd! — R. Simeon b. Lakish therefore said in the name of R. Jannai. ‘The heifer whose neck was to be broken’ is not [part] of our Mishnah. But could R. Jannai have said so? Did not R. Jannai say, ‘I have heard a time limit for it, but have forgotten it; but our colleagues maintain: Its descent to the rugged valley renders it forbidden’? Now if this is so, it can be answered that there it was before it was taken down to the rugged valley and here after it was taken down! — R. Phinehas the son of R. Ammi replied. We report the statement in the name of R. Simeon b. Lakish.

R. Ashi said. When we were at R. Papi's this difficulty was raised. Did R. Simeon b. Lakish really say so? But it has been reported: From what time are a leper's birds forbidden? R. Johanan said: From the moment of the slaughtering. R. Simeon b. Lakish said: From the moment they are taken. And we explained that the reason for the view of R. Simeon b. Lakish was that he derived it by analogy from the word ‘taking’, used here and also in connection with the heifer whose neck was to be broken! — Rather [say thus]: R. Hyya b. Abba said in the name of R. Johanan. ‘The heifer whose neck was to be broken’ is not [part] of our Mishnah.

MISHNAH. IF TWO PERSONS BOUGHT A COW AND ITS YOUNG, HE WHO BOUGHT FIRST SHALL SLAUGHTER FIRST; BUT IF THE SECOND FORESTALLED HIM HE HOLDS HIS ADVANTAGE. GEMARA. R. Joseph said: What we have learnt is with regard to the rights [of each]. A Tanna taught: If the second forestalled him he is sharp and gains an advantage; sharp in that he cannot now transgress the law, and gains an advantage in that he eats meat [to-day].

MISHNAH. IF A PERSON SLAUGHTERED A COW AND THEN TWO OF ITS CALVES, HE INCURS EIGHTY STRIPES. IF HE SLAUGHTERED ITS TWO CALVES AND THEN THE COW, HE INCURS FORTY STRIPES. IF HE SLAUGHTERED IT AND THEN ITS CALF AND THEN THE CALF'S OFFSPRING, HE INCURS EIGHTY STRIPES. IF HE SLAUGHTERED IT AND THEN ITS CALF'S OFFSPRING AND THEN THE CALF, HE INCURS FORTY STRIPES. SYMMACHOS, IN THE NAME OF R. MEIR, SAYS, HE INCURS EIGHTY STRIPES.
GEMARA. Why is this so? Does not the Divine Law say: ‘It and its young’, but not ‘its young and it’? — You cannot hold this, for it was taught: [It is written.] ‘It and its young’; from this I only know it and its young, whence would I know that [the slaughtering of] the young and [then] its dam [is also prohibited]? From the fact that the verse says: Ye shall not slaughter, two persons are indicated; thus, if one slaughtered the cow, another its dam, and a third its young, the last two are culpable.

(1) I.e., even after it had been slaughtered upon the specially erected woodpile and is ready for burning (cf. Num. XIX, 5), it may be redeemed if e.g. a finer animal can be obtained. It would then be permitted to be eaten; hence it is always deemed fit for food, for R. Simeon is of the opinion that whatsoever is capable of being redeemed is counted as if it were redeemed.

(2) V. Tosef. Par. VI. The slaughtering of the Red Cow is therefore deemed a slaughtering which renders it fit for food.

(3) And when slaughtered is permitted to be eaten. V. Sot. 470.

(4) As to what time in its rites does it become forbidden.

(5) V. Deut. XXI, 4. Before its descent, however, it is permitted.

(6) The Mishnah in Sotah 47a where it is permitted to pasture among the herd.

(7) Our Mishnah where it is held that the slaughtering thereof does not render it fit for food.

(8) That ‘the heifer whose neck was to be broken’ does not form part of our Mishnah.

(9) But he did not say it in the name of R. Jannai; hence the difficulty is removed.

(10) That ‘the heifer’ was not to be included in our Mishnah since the slaughtering thereof renders it fit for food.

(11) The birds prescribed for the purification rites of a leper, v. Lev. XIV, 4, one of which was to be slaughtered and the other to be set free. It is established that these birds are forbidden for every use; V. Kid. 56b.

(12) The slaughtered bird then becomes forbidden for all time. The other that is set free also becomes forbidden from that moment until the time that it is set free (cf. Lev. XIV, 7)’ so Tosaf. Kid. 57a, s.v. 'משייע'.

(13) I.e., set aside for the purpose.

(14) Lev. XIV, 4: יְשָׁכֵל. יְשָׁכֵל. The analogy is, just as the heifer, as soon as it was taken for the purpose, is rendered forbidden for all uses, so it is, too, with the birds of the leper. It is clear therefore that R. Simeon b. Lakish is of the opinion that the slaughtering of the heifer will not render it permitted for food.

(15) Deut. XXI, 3. יְשָׁכֵל. יְשָׁכֵל. The analogy is, just as the heifer, as soon as it was taken for the purpose, is rendered forbidden for all uses, so it is, too, with the birds of the leper. It is clear therefore that R. Simeon b. Lakish is of the opinion that the slaughtering of the heifer will not render it permitted for food.

(16) It was R. Johanan who made the statement originally and not R. Simeon b. Lakish.

(17) But from the religious point of view it is immaterial who slaughters first or which animal is slaughtered first.

(18) Whereas the other may not slaughter his animal until the next day.

(19) For the prohibition of ‘It and its young’ has been infringed twice, for the slaughtering of each calf is an infringement of the law.

(20) It is only by the slaughtering of the cow that the law is infringed, and that is only one forbidden act.

(21) The prohibition has in this case been infringed twice.

(22) With the slaughtering of the cow and its calf's offspring no law has as yet been infringed, but when the calf itself is slaughtered there is an infringement from two aspects, for it is the young of the cow and also the dam of its offspring. The Rabbis however maintain that for this one act, for which there was but one warning, he incurs the penalty of stripes once only. For the view of Symmachos v. Gemara.

(23) That the law is infringed even where the young was slaughtered first and then the dam.

(24) Lev. XXII, 28. The plural of the verb indicates that two persons are culpable, one for slaughtering the dam and the other for slaughtering the young. Now this is of significance only where three animals were slaughtered and where the young was slaughtered first (V. Rashi). The Torah thereupon rules that both he who slaughtered its dam and he who slaughtered its offspring have transgressed the prohibition.

Talmud - Mas. Chullin 82b

But is not this verse required for its own purpose? — For that, it might have said: ‘Thou shalt not slaughter’; why. ‘Ye shall not slaughter’? But this too is required for its own purpose, is it not? For if the Divine Law said: ‘Thou shalt not slaughter’. I might have thought that only one person [if he slaughtered both, is culpable], but not two.\(^1\) The Divine Law therefore says. Ye shall not slaughter, even two may not slaughter. — If so, the Law might have said: ‘They shall not be slaughtered’;\(^2\) why. Ye shall not slaughter? To teach you two things.\(^3\)

IF HE SLAUGHTERED IT AND THEN ITS CALF’S OFFSPRING etc. Abaye enquired of R. Joseph: What is the reason of Symmachos? [Is it that] he holds that if a man during a spell of forgetfulness ate two olives’ bulk of forbidden fat he is liable to two sin-offerings?\(^4\) And by right this view [of Symmachos] should have been recorded elsewhere,\(^5\) but it is recorded here\(^6\) to show you to what length the Rabbis will go, for the Rabbis exempt him [from an additional penalty] even in a case of separate prohibitions?\(^7\) Or is it that he holds that if a man during a spell of forgetfulness ate two olives’ bulk of forbidden fat he is only liable to one sin-offering, but here\(^8\) the reason is that there are two separate prohibitions?\(^9\) — He replied: Yes. He holds that if a man ate two olives’ bulk of forbidden fat during a spell of forgetfulness he is liable to two sin-offerings. Whence [do you gather this]? — From the following: It was taught: If a person sowed diverse kinds, diverse kinds, he incurs stripes.\(^10\) Now what is meant by ‘he incurs stripes’? Should you say it means, he incurs the penalty of stripes once, but this is obvious; moreover, why does it repeat ‘diverse kinds, diverse kinds’? It must therefore mean, he incurs stripes twice. And what would be the circumstances of the case? Should you say [he sowed diverse kinds twice] one after the other, and there were two warnings, but we have already learnt this elsewhere: If a nazir\(^11\) drinks wine the whole day long, he incurs only one penalty; if he is warned, ‘Do not drink’, ‘Do not drink’, and he drinks, he is liable for each [warning].\(^12\) Clearly, then, [he sowed diverse kinds twice but] simultaneously and there was only one warning.\(^13\) Now who is the author of this statement? Should you say it is the Rabbis who differ with Symmachos, but surely, if in that case [in our Mishnah] where there are separate prohibitions the Rabbis exempt [the wrongdoer from an additional penalty], how much more so in this case. Hence it is, no doubt, Symmachos!\(^14\) — No. I maintain it is the Rabbis,\(^15\) but they incidentally teach us something else, that there are two sorts of ‘diverse kinds’. They thus reject the view of R. Josiah, who said: [A man is not guilty] until he sows wheat, barley and grape kernels with one throw of the hand; for they teach us that if a man sowed wheat and grape kernels or barley and grape kernels he is also guilty.\(^16\)

Come and hear: If a person ate an olive’s bulk [of the sciatic nerve] of this [thigh] and another olive’s bulk of the other [thigh],\(^17\) he has incurred eighty stripes. R. Judah says: He has only incurred forty stripes.\(^18\) Now what are the circumstances of the case? If you say [that he ate them] one after the other and there were two warnings, then what is R. Judah’s reason [for saying that he has incurred forty stripes]? Is not the warning [with regard to each] dubious?\(^19\) And we have learnt that according to R. Judah a dubious warning is no warning. For it was taught: If he struck one and then struck the other,\(^20\) or if he cursed one and then cursed the other, or if he struck then, both simultaneously,\(^21\) or if he cursed them both simultaneously, he is liable. R. Judah Says. If simultaneously, he is liable;\(^22\) if one after the other, he is not liable.\(^23\) Obviously then the case is [that he ate them] together and there was only one warning. Now whose view is expressed by the first Tanna? Should you say that of the Rabbis who differ with Symmachos, but Surely if there [in our Mishnah] where there are separate prohibitions the Rabbis exempt [the wrongdoer from an additional penalty], how much more so in this case.\(^24\) Hence it is, no doubt, that of Symmachos!\(^25\) — No. I maintain [that he ate them] one after the other [and that there were two warnings], and [that the view expressed by the first Tanna is that of] the Rabbis. [The statement however expressed above by] the Tanna [in the name of R. Judah] agrees with the view of another Tanna who declares, also in the name of R. Judah, that a dubious warning is a warning. For it was taught: And he shall let nothing of it remain until the morning; and that which remaineth of it until the morning ye shall burn with fire.\(^26\)

\(^1\) I.e., if one slaughtered the dam and another its young the law has not been infringed.
\(^2\) שנָתַן יְהוֹעֵד; neither by one person nor two persons.
(3) First that the prohibition applies where the animals were slaughtered by two persons, and secondly that whichever was slaughtered first, with the slaughtering of the second the law is infringed.

(4) Similarly, had be been warned beforehand of the prohibition of forbidden fat, so that he acted deliberately, he would incur the penalty of stripes twice. Accordingly, Symmachos would hold that even in the first clause of our Mishnah where a man slaughtered two calves (a permitted act) and then its dam, he would incur the penalty of stripes twice. And even though a distinction might be drawn between the above cases cited and the last clause of our Mishnah where Symmachos’ opinion is actually recorded, viz., in the latter case the one act of slaughtering involves the transgression of two distinct prohibitions, namely ‘It and its young’. ‘It and its dam’, each entailing the penalty of stripes, whereas in the above cases cited the act that is repeated involves the transgression of one prohibition only, namely, the prohibition of forbidden fat or in the first clause of our Mishnah the prohibition of ‘It and its dam’ — this distinction Symmachos does not regard as vital.

(5) In those cases where there is a transgression of one prohibition only, as in the case of the forbidden fat supra, or in in the case of the first clause of our Mishnah.

(6) Sc. in the final clause of the Mishnah.

(7) Lit., ‘separate bodies’. i.e., there are two separate animals and in respect of each a distinct prohibition is transgressed.

(8) And therefore here he incurs the penalty of stripes twice.

(9) V. Lev. XIX, 19. Apparently he sowed diverse kinds of seeds on two occasions.

(10) One who has taken a nazirite vow to abstain from wine, to avoid contact with a corpse and to allow the hair to grow long; v. Num. VI.

(11) Naz. 420. We thus see there is a separate liability for the same act, however much repeated, provided there was a warning each time.

(12) I.e., sowing diverse kinds with his right hand and also with his left hand.

(13) Or even successively if there was only one warning (Tosaf.).

(14) We learn from this the view of Symmachos that if a person ate two olives’ bulk of forbidden fat in one spell of forgetfulness he is liable to two sin-offerings.

(15) And there were two warnings. Although the case is obvious it was stated for a special purpose.

(16) I.e., that wheat and grape kernels alone constitute ‘diverse kinds’ and so also barley and grape kernels, contra R.
Josiah.

(17) V. infra 92a and 96a. Each olive's bulk of the sciatic nerve was taken from the same animal, but one from the right thigh and the other from the left.

(18) He is of the opinion that the prohibition applies only to one thigh.

(19) For R. Judah is in doubt as to which thigh the prohibition applies; hence the warning with regard to the eating of each of them is dubious, for each one may be the one that is permitted, consequently he should be exempt entirely from stripes.

(20) If a woman did not wait three months after separation from her husband by divorce, immediately married again, and after seven months gave birth to a son, there is always a doubt as to the paternity of the child. It may be a nine-months’ child by the first husband or a seven-months’ child by the second. This child, when grown up, struck one of his mother's husbands and then struck the other. The warning at the time of striking each one is a doubtful one, for when considering each one individually there is a doubt as to whether he is his father or not; it is nevertheless regarded as a proper warning and the son would be liable to the death penalty for striking or cursing his father (cf. Ex. XXI, 15, 17).

(21) Striking one with his right hand and the other with his left.

(22) Here the warning at the time of striking is a certain warning, for he is certainly striking one who is his father.

(23) For the warning at each striking is a dubious one and R. Judah is of the opinion that such is no warning.

(24) I.e., the sciatic nerve of each thigh. In this case the warning is certain for one is the prohibited nerve.

(25) That he should not be liable to eighty stripes.

(26) Thus establishing the opinion of Symmachos as interpreted by R. Joseph.

(27) Ex. XII, 10. This law refers to the Passover offering.

Talmud - Mas. Chullin 83a

Scripture here came and provided a positive precept as a remedy for the [disregarded] prohibition to indicate that the prohibition is not punishable by stripes: so R. Judah. R. Jacob says. This is not the Come and hear: If a person ate two sciatic nerves from the two [right] thighs of two animals, he has incurred eighty stripes. R. Judah says: He has only incurred forty stripes. Now what are the circumstances of the case? If you say [that he ate them] one after the other and that there were two warnings, then what is the reason of R. Judah who says that he has incurred forty stripes and no more? Obviously then [that he ate them] together and there was only one warning. Now whose view is expressed by the first Tanna? If you say that of the Rabbis who differ with Symmachos, but surely if there [in our Mishnah] where there are separate prohibitions the Rabbis exempt [the wrongdoer from an additional penalty], how much more so in this case. Hence it is, no doubt, that of Symmachos! — No. I maintain [that he ate them] one after the other; but when you ask, ‘Then what is R. Judah's reason?’ [I reply that] in this case one was not as much as an olive's bulk. For it has been taught: If a person ate [the whole of] it but it was not as much as an olive's bulk, he is liable. R. Judah says, [He is not liable] unless it was as much as an olive's bulk.

MISHNAH. AT FOUR PERIODS IN THE YEAR HE WHO SELLS A BEAST TO ANOTHER MUST INFORM HIM, I SOLD TO-DAY ITS DAM TO BE SLAUGHTERED’, OR, ‘I SOLD TO-DAY ITS YOUNG TO BE SLAUGHTERED’,\(^6\) NAMELY, ON THE EVE OF THE LAST DAY\(^9\) OF THE FEAST [OF TABERNACLES], ON THE EVE OF THE FIRST DAY OF PASSOVER, ON THE EVE OF PENTECOST, AND ON THE EVE OF THE NEW YEAR; ACCORDING TO R. JOSE THE GALILEAN, ALSO ON THE EVE OF THE DAY OF ATONEMENT, IN GALILEE.\(^{10}\) R. JUDAH SAYS, THIS IS SO, ONLY WHEN THERE WAS NO INTERVAL,\(^{11}\) BUT IF THERE WAS AN INTERVAL, HE NEED NOT INFORM HIM. YET R. JUDAH AGREES THAT IF HE SOLD THE DAM TO THE BRIDEGROOM AND THE YOUNG TO THE BRIDE, HE MUST INFORM THEM OF IT, FOR IT IS CERTAIN THAT THEY WILL EACH SLAUGHTER [THEIR BEAST] ON THE SAME DAY. AT THESE FOUR PERIODS A BUTCHER CAN BE COMPELLED TO SLAUGHTER A BEAST AGAINST HIS WILL; EVEN IF THE OX WAS WORTH A THOUSAND DENARS\(^{12}\) AND THE PURCHASER HAS ONLY [PAID] A DENAR,\(^{13}\) THE BUTCHER IS COMPELLED TO SLAUGHTER IT. THEREFORE IF THE ANIMAL DIED, THE LOSS FALLS UPON THE PURCHASER.\(^{14}\) AT OTHER TIMES OF THE YEAR IT IS NOT SO,\(^{15}\) THEREFORE IF THE ANIMAL DIED, THE LOSS FALLS UPON THE SELLER.

GEMARA. A Tanna taught: If he did not inform him, he [the Purchaser] may go and slaughter it without any hesitation whatsoever.

R. JUDAH SAYS, THIS IS SO . . . [IF HE SOLD THE DAM TO THE BRIDEGROOM], etc. Why does he particularly state THE DAM TO THE BRIDEGROOM and THE YOUNG TO THE BRIDE? — He incidentally tells us that it is the proper thing for the bridegroom's family to make [greater festivities] than the bride's family.

AT THESE FOUR PERIODS, etc. But he [the purchaser] has not drawn it into his possession?\(^{17}\) — R. Huna answered: We must assume that he had done so. If so, why [does it say] in the last clause, AT OTHER TIMES OF THE YEAR IT IS NOT SO; THEREFORE IF THE ANIMAL DIED THE LOSS FALLS UPON THE SELLER? But he has already drawn [the animal] into his possession?\(^{18}\) — R. Samuel son of R. Isaac answered: In fact he had not drawn it into his possession, but here the case was that the seller had transferred [a portion to the purchaser] through a third party. Now at these four periods it is an advantage for him [to have meat],\(^{19}\) and it is an established rule\(^{20}\) that one may act to another's advantage in his absence; whereas at other times of the year it is a disadvantage for him\(^{21}\) and one may not act to another's disadvantage save in his presence. R. Eliezer answered in the name of R. Johanan that at these four periods the Rabbis adopted the Biblical law.
For R. Johanan has said: By Biblical law, [the payment of] money confers title. Why then was it decreed that only meshikah\textsuperscript{22} confers title? As a precautionary measure, lest he [the vendor] say to him [the purchaser]. ‘Your wheat was burnt in the loft’.\textsuperscript{23}

GEMARA. Our Rabbis taught: This was expounded by R. Simeon b. Zoma: Since the whole passage deals only with the laws concerning consecrated animals,\textsuperscript{27} and with regard to consecrated matters [a day means] the day and the night following it.\textsuperscript{28} I might have thought that here also it is the same, it is therefore written here ‘one day’ and also ‘one day’ in connection with the Creation, as the ‘one day’ mentioned in connection with the Creation means the day and the night preceding it, so, too, the ‘one day’ mentioned in connection with the law of ‘It and its young’ means the day and the night preceding it.

---

(1) Lit., ‘after’.
(2) But were it not for the remedial act provided for by Scripture the infringement of this prohibition would entail stripes, even though the warning in this case is a dubious one, for whenever warned the offender could reply. ‘It is still night and I have yet time to eat it’.
(3) Lit., ‘not of the same denomination’. That is not the reason why the transgression of this prohibition is not punishable by stripes.
(4) V. Mak. 4b, 16a, and elsewhere.
(5) That he only incurs forty stripes.
(6) The sciatic nerve of one animal was as much as an olive's bulk but not that of the other. (See Rashi.) According to R. Judah, therefore, he only incurs forty stripes. According to the Rabbis, however, if a man ate the entire sciatic nerve, even though in all it was not as much as an olive's bulk, being a distinct entity, he is liable. The Rabbis therefore hold that in the above case he incurs eighty stripes.
(7) Tosef. Hul. VII; Tosef. Mak. III.
(8) It is presumed that on these special days animals would be slaughtered on the day that they are bought, so as to have meat prepared for the Festival that is on the following day. This information is necessary in order to avoid the slaughtering of the dam and its young on the same day.
(9) The last day of the Feast of Tabernacles was regarded as a festival by itself and was observed with special celebrations and feasting. On the eve of the commencement of the Feast of Tabernacles, Israelites are usually preoccupied with the erection of ‘booths’ and would not find time for purchasing and slaughtering animals.
(10) Where it was the custom to indulge in much feasting, including meat dishes, before the Fast.
(11) Of a day between the sale of one animal and the other; i.e., both were sold on the same day.
(12) A coin. V. Glos.
(13) The purchaser had already paid a denar to buy a denar's worth of meat.
(14) Lit., ‘it has died to the purchaser’. He cannot demand the return of his denar or claim meat to that value.
(15) For the mere payment of money does not, according to Rabbinic enactment, effect an irrevocable sale.
(16) Lit., ‘to trouble’. Accordingly the larger animal, the dam, is sold to the bridegroom's family.
(17) Why should the purchaser bear any of the loss since he has not become the legal owner of his portion? V. n. 7.
(18) So that the purchaser has acquired legal ownership of his portion; consequently he must bear any loss.
(19) In honour of the Festival.
(20) Kid. 23a and elsewhere.
(21) To spend money on meat.
(22) mishbah, lit., ‘drawing’ into one's possession, thereby obtaining ownership.

(23) Were the purchaser to be regarded as the owner of the goods upon the payment of the purchase money even though the goods had not left the vendor's possession, the latter would not trouble to save them if they caught fire. The Rabbin therefore decreed that the ownership should not pass until there had been a meshikah by the purchaser, for then the purchaser would usually carry away the goods with him.

(24) Lev. XXII, 28.

(25) If therefore a man slaughtered the dam at night, he may not slaughter its young the whole of the following day. On the other hand, if he slaughtered the dam during the day, he may as soon as the night sets in slaughter the young.

(26) Gen. I, 5; where it reads: And there was evening and there was morning, one day.

(27) For in the preceding verse (Lev. XXII, 27) it reads: And thenceforth it may be accepted for an offering made by fire unto the Lord.

(28) For in connection with the eating of sacrificial meat it is written (ibid. VII, 15). It shall be eaten on the day of his offering; he shall not leave any of it until the morning. Thus it may be eaten the whole of the night following the day.

Talmud - Mas. Chullin 83b

Rabbi says: One day means a special day, on which an announcement [with regard to 'It and its young'] must be made. Hence [the Rabbis] have said: At four periods of the year he who sells a beast to another must inform him [of the sale of its dam or of its young].

CHAPTER VI

GEMARA. Why does it not apply to consecrated [birds]? Is it because of R. Zera's teaching? For R. Zera said: He who slaughters [a bird or a wild animal] must place dust underneath [the blood] and dust above it, for it is written: He shall pour out the blood thereof, and cover it with dust [be-'afar]; it does not say ‘’afar’ but ‘be-'afar’; this is to indicate that he who slaughters must place dust underneath [the blood] and dust above it. And here [in the case of consecrated birds] this is not possible; for how should he do it? If he were to place [dust upon the altar] and decide to leave it there, he is thereby adding to the structure [of the altar], and it is written: All this, (said David, do I give thee) in writing, as the Lord hath made me wise by His hand upon me! And if he does not decide to leave it there, then it is an interposition! But granted that it is not possible [to place dust] underneath [the blood], surely it is possible [to place dust] above it, why then should he not cover it up? Has it not been taught: R. Jonathan b. Joseph says: If a man slaughtered a wild animal and then he slaughtered cattle, he is exempt from covering up the blood; if he slaughtered cattle and then a wild animal he must cover up the blood? — [The reason is] because of R. Zera's principle. For R. Zera stated: Wherever proper mingling is possible the mingling is not dispensable, but wherever proper mingling is not possible the mingling is indispensable. And why should he not scrape away the blood [from off the altar] and cover it up? Have we not learnt: The blood which spurted out and that which is upon the knife must also be covered up? It is clear therefore that he must scrape it away and cover it up; here too he should scrape it away [from off the altar] and cover it up? — If it was [a bird] consecrated for sacrifice it would indeed be so, but here [in our Mishnah] we are speaking of a bird consecrated for the Temple treasury.

__________________
Talmud - Mas. Chullin 84a

And why should he not redeem it¹ and then cover up [its blood]? — Because [in order to redeem a consecrated living thing] it must be stood up and appraised [by the priest].² According to whom is this teaching? If according to R. Meir, who said that all³ [consecrated living things] are subject to the law of standing up whilst being appraised, but he holds, does he not, that a slaughtering which does not render fit [for food] is a proper slaughtering?⁴ And if according to R. Simeon, who said that a slaughtering which does not render fit for food is no slaughtering, but he holds, does he not, that not all⁵ are subject to the law of standing up whilst being appraised? — R. Joseph answered: The Tanna of our Mishnah is Rabbi who incorporates the views of both these Tanna'im: with regard to a slaughtering which does not render fit [for food] he adopts the view of R. Simeon, and with regard to the law of standing up whilst being appraised he adopts the view of R. Meir. Alternatively, you may say, the entire Mishnah is in conformity with the views of R. Simeon, but it is different here, for the verse reads: And he shall pour out . . . and cover it,⁶ implying that the law [of 'covering up'] applies only to that case which requires pouring out and covering up, but not to this case which requires pouring out, redeeming and covering up. And now that you have adopted this argument, you might even say that our Mishnah refers also to birds consecrated for sacrifice,⁷ for the law [of 'covering up'] applies only to those that require pouring out and covering up, but not to those that require pouring out, scraping away [from off the altar] and covering up.

Mar son of R. Ashi said, [The reason⁸ is because] Scripture says. Any wild animal or bird,⁹ and just as it cannot refer to a consecrated wild animal¹⁰ so it cannot refer to a consecrated bird. But [I might say] just as the law refers to wild animals none of which can be consecrated,¹¹ so it only refers to those birds which cannot be consecrated, hence I would exclude turtle doves and young pigeons

---

¹ V. Men. 103b. It has been taught that one may not bring a meal offering consisting of sixty-one 'esronim (plural of 'issaron, the tenth part of an ephah) in one vessel for it cannot be mingled thoroughly with the prescribed log of oil. Now although it is established that the meal-offering is valid even though the flour and oil had not been mixed, it must, declared R. Zera, be in the condition in which it could be mixed if so desired, but if it cannot be mixed the meal-offering, is invalid. This principle of R. Zera is applied here: the requirement of placing dust underneath the blood can be dispensed with so long as it is possible to do so if desired, but in the case of a consecrated bird, where it is not permissible to place dust upon the altar underneath the blood, this requirement becomes indispensable.
² Infra 87b.
³ Lit., consecrated for the altar’. E.g., a sin-offering of a bird, which may be eaten by priests after the sacrificial rites had been performed with it. In this case the blood of the sacrifice, after it has been drained out on the altar, must be scraped away and covered up.
⁴ Lit., ‘for the repair of the House’, i.e., for the general purposes of the Temple. As the slaughtering of this bird does not render it fit to be eaten, for it is forbidden for all purposes, the slaughtering is no slaughtering (v. supra 80a bot., the opinion of R. Simeon), consequently the law of covering up the blood does not apply.
⁵ Talmud - Mas. Chullin 84a

---

1. V. Lev. XVII, 13.
2. I.e., the sin- or burnt-offerings of birds.
3. I.e., whether they are wild or domesticated. This is in contradistinction from the law of ‘Letting the mother bird go’ (Deut. XXII, 7). V. infra 138b.
4. Whether it is a kind of cattle or a kind of wild animal. V. supra p. 436, n. 2.
5. Because of its doubt one may not desecrate the festival by covering up its blood if it had been slaughtered.
7. Lit., ‘renounce it’, so that it becomes part of the altar.
8. I Chron. XXVIII, 19.
9. Interposing between the blood of the bird sacrifice and the altar, and this would disqualify the service.
10. Although in this case there is no dust beneath the blood of the wild animal, for it lies above the blood of the cattle, it must nevertheless be covered up on top. Likewise the blood of a bird sacrifice upon the altar should have to be covered up on top.
11. V. Men. 103b. It has been taught that one may not bring a meal offering consisting of sixty-one ‘esronim (plural of ‘issaron, the tenth part of an ephah) in one vessel for it cannot be mingled thoroughly with the prescribed log of oil. Now although it is established that the meal-offering is valid even though the flour and oil had not been mixed, it must, declared R. Zera, be in the condition in which it could be mixed if so desired, but if it cannot be mixed the meal-offering, is invalid. This principle of R. Zera is applied here: the requirement of placing dust underneath the blood can be dispensed with so long as it is possible to do so if desired, but in the case of a consecrated bird, where it is not permissible to place dust upon the altar underneath the blood, this requirement becomes indispensable.
12. Infra 87b.
13. Lit., consecrated for the altar’. E.g., a sin-offering of a bird, which may be eaten by priests after the sacrificial rites had been performed with it. In this case the blood of the sacrifice, after it has been drained out on the altar, must be scraped away and covered up.
14. Lit., ‘for the repair of the House’, i.e., for the general purposes of the Temple. As the slaughtering of this bird does not render it fit to be eaten, for it is forbidden for all purposes, the slaughtering is no slaughtering (v. supra 80a bot., the opinion of R. Simeon), consequently the law of covering up the blood does not apply.
since they can be consecrated! — This cannot be, for it is likened to the wild animal, and just as in the case of wild animals you make no distinctions, so in the case of birds you ought not to make any distinctions.13

Jacob the Min14 said to Raba: It is established that the term ‘cattle’ includes wild animals with regard to the characteristics [of cleanness];15 should I not say then that the term ‘wild animal’ includes cattle with regard to the law of covering up [the blood]? — He replied. To [confute] such as you the verse says: Thou shalt pour it out upon the earth as water,16 and as water does not require to be covered up, so [the blood of] cattle does not require to be covered up. If so, one should be allowed to immerse [unclean things] in it!17 — Scripture says. Nevertheless a fountain or a cistern, any gathering of water shall be clean;18 only these [render clean], but any other [liquid] does not. Perhaps this [verse] only excludes other liquids which are not described as water, but blood, since it is described as water, should be allowed [for purposes of immersion]! — There are two limiting qualifications, viz., ‘a fountain’ of water and ‘a cistern’ of water.19 Perhaps both [these limitations] serve to exclude other liquids, one excluding liquids in a running state and the other liquids when collected! — There are three limiting qualifications, viz., ‘a fountain’ of water, ‘a cistern’ of water, and ‘any gathering of water’.20

Our Rabbis taught: [It is written,] who taketh in hunting.21 I only know from this [that the law applies to] that which is taken in hunting, whence would I know that it also applies to such as are always taken hunting, e.g., geese and fowl? The text therefore adds a hunting; the law thus applies to all cases. Why then does Scripture say. ‘Who taketh in hunting’? The Torah teaches a rule of conduct, that a person should not eat meat except after such preparation as this.23

Our Rabbis taught: When the Lord thy God shall enlarge thy border, as He hath promised thee, and thou shalt say: I will eat flesh.24 The Torah here teaches a rule of conduct, that a person should not eat meat unless he has a special appetite for it. I might think that this means that a person should buy [meat] in the market and eat it, the text therefore states: Then thou shalt kill of thy herd and of thy flock.25 I might then think that this means that he should kill all his herd and eat all his flock and eat, the text therefore states: ‘Of thy herd’, and not all thy herd; ‘of thy flock’ and not all thy flock. Hence R. Eleazar b. ‘Azariah said: A man who has a maneh26 may buy for his stew a litra27 of vegetables; if he has ten maneh he may buy for his stew a litra of fish; if he has fifty maneh he may buy for his stew a litra of meat; if he has a hundred maneh he may have a pot set on for him every day. And [how often for] the others?28 From Sabbath eve to Sabbath eve. Said Rab: We must defer to the opinion of the Elder.29 R. Johanan said: Abba30 comes from a healthy family, but as for us,31 whosoever amongst us has a penny in his purse should hasten with it to the shop-keeper. R. Nahman said: As for us,32 we must even borrow to eat.

The lambs are for thy clothing:33 of the fleece of your own lambs should be your clothing. ‘And the goats the price of the field’:35 a person should always sell his field and buy goats rather than sell his goats and buy a field. ‘And there will be goats’ milk enough’:34 it is enough for a person to sustain himself with the milk of the goats and lambs in his home. ‘For thy food, for the food of thy household’:34 your own sustenance comes first, before the sustenance of your household. ‘And life for thy maidens’:34 Mar Zutra the son of R. Nahman said: Discipline your maidens in the way of life; hence the Torah teaches a rule of conduct that a parent should not accustom his son to flesh and wine.

R. Johanan said,

(1) So that it becomes permitted to be eaten.
(2) V. Lev. XXVII, 11, 12. The living thing when being redeemed must be able to stand up while it is being valued by the priest, but here the bird is already dead.
I.e., animals that have been consecrated for sacrifice but have become unfit by reason of a physical blemish as well as those consecrated for the Temple treasury.

Accordingly the blood must be covered up, even though it is not fit for food by virtue of its not having been redeemed.

But only those consecrated for sacrifice.

Lev. XVII, 13.

So that our Mishnah exempts all consecrated birds from the law of covering up the blood.

Why consecrated birds are exempt from the law of ‘covering up’.

Lev. XVII, 13.

For no wild animal of whatever kind or species is fit for sacrifice.

Lit., ‘none of its species can be consecrated’.

I.e., that the law of covering up the blood should not apply to turtle doves and young pigeons even though they are unconsecrated.

All kinds must be alike; nevertheless it is established that the law refers only to those that are unconsecrated.

V. Glo.

By which we distinguish the cattle and the wild animals that are permitted to be eaten; v. supra 71a.

Deut. XII, 24.

In blood, since it is likened to water.

Lev. XI, 36.

The word ‘water’ is to be taken with each of the preceding nouns, and it is to be regarded as if it were expressly stated after each, thus serving to exclude all liquids, even blood.

Two limitations serve to exclude all liquids whether in a running state or collected in a vessel; the third limitation excludes blood.

Lev. XVII, 13. The verse literally reads: Who taketh in hunting a hunting of wild animal or bird.

I.e., which are domesticated and within one's house.

I.e., after toilsome preparation, and only as a rare luxury, for otherwise one would soon be reduced to poverty.

Deut. XII, 20.

Ibid. 21.

A coin equal to one hundred zuz. V. Glo.

A measure of capacity; v. Glo.

I.e., the above mentioned persons of lesser means.

Sc. R. Eleazar b. ‘Azariah. He is termed ‘the Elder’ because on his appointment as head of the Academy he suddenly turned grey-haired, cf. Ber. 282.

Sc. Rab.

Who are not so healthy and strong as those of former generations.

Our generation which is still weaker than that of R. Johanan.

Prov. XXVII, 26.

Ibid. 27.

I.e., the household.

In thrift and moderation, so that they be content with the simple needs of life.

Talmud - Mas. Chullin 84b

Whoso wishes to become rich should engage in [the breeding of] small cattle.¹ R. Hisda said: Why the expression. The young [‘ashteroth] of thy flock?² Because they enrich [me'asheroth] their owners.

R. Johanan also said: Rather [drink] a cupful of witchcraft than a cupful of lukewarm water; that is so only if it is in a metal vessel, but in an earthenware vessel it does no harm. Moreover, even in a metal vessel we say [it is harmful] only if no spice roots were thrown into it, but if some spice roots were thrown into it it does no harm. Moreover, even if no spice roots were thrown into it we say [it is harmful] only if the water had not been boiled, but once it had boiled it can do no harm. R. Johanan also said: If a person is left a fortune\(^3\) by his parents and wishes to dissipate it, let him wear linen garments, use glassware, and engage workmen and not be with them. ‘Let him wear linen garments, especially of Roman linen;\(^4\) ‘use glassware’, especially white glass;\(^5\) ‘and engage workmen and not be with them’, [especially to work with] oxen, which can cause much damage.\(^6\)

R. ‘Awira used to give the following exposition (sometimes quoting it in the name of R. Ammi and sometimes in the name of R. Assi): What is the meaning of the verse: Well is it with the man that dealeth graciously, that ordereth his affairs rightfully?\(^7\) A man should always eat and drink less than his means allow, clothe himself in accordance with means, and honour his wife and children more than his means allow, for they are dependent upon him and he is dependent upon ‘Him who spake and the world came into being’.

R. ‘Ena lectured at the entrance of the Exilarch’s house, viz., If a person slaughtered [a bird] on the Sabbath for an invalid, he must cover up its blood.\(^8\) Whereupon Rabbah said: He is talking nonsense; remove from him his Amora.\(^9\) For it has been taught: R. Jose says. A koy may not be slaughtered on a festival, and if it was slaughtered its blood may not be covered up, by reason of the following a fortiori argument: If circumcision which in a case of certainty overrides the Sabbath\(^10\) yet in a case of doubt does not even override the festival,\(^11\) the covering up of the blood which even in a case of certainty does not override the Sabbath will surely not override the festival in a case of doubt!\(^12\) They said to him: But the sounding of the Shofar in the provinces could prove otherwise,\(^13\) for even though in a case of certainty it does not override the Sabbath yet it does override the festival in a case of doubt.\(^14\) R. Eleazar ha-Kappar Beribbi\(^15\) raised this objection against the argument [of R. Jose]: You may say so of circumcision since it is not allowed on the night of a festival;\(^16\) will you then say the same of the covering up of the blood which is allowed on the night of a festival? (R. Abba said: This is one of the instances about which R. Hiyya had said: ‘I have no objection to raise against it’, but R. Eleazar ha-Kappar Beribbi did find an objection.) Now it actually was stated above, ‘The covering up of the blood which even in a case of certainty does not override the Sabbath’. To what does the ruling that the covering up of the blood even In a case of certainty does not override the Sabbath refer? No doubt, to the case where one slaughtered on the Sabbath for an invalid!\(^17\) But perhaps [it refers to the case] where one transgressed and slaughtered!\(^18\) — It must be under similar conditions as circumcision: as circumcision does not involve the transgression of a precept\(^19\) so the case of the covering up of the blood must not have involved the transgression of a precept.\(^20\)

‘They said to him: But the sounding of the Shofar in the provinces could prove otherwise, for even though in a case of certainty it does not override the Sabbath yet it does override the festival in a case of doubt’. What is this case of doubt? Is it the doubt whether the day is a Holy day or a weekday? But surely, if it [the sounding of the Shofar] overrides a certain Holy day, is there any question about a doubtful Holy day?\(^21\)

---

\(^1\) V. Tosaf. s.v. הָרְזֵה.
\(^2\) Deut. VII, 13. There is here a play upon the words: מְעִישָׁה לְוָתָה and מְעִישָׁה לְוָתָה R. Hisda's interpretation of this expression suggests the reason for this opinion of R. Johanan.
\(^3\) MS.M. adds: Gotten by usury.
\(^4\) Which are very expensive (Rashi); or, which are of inferior quality (R. Gershom).
\(^5\) Which is both expensive and fragile.
\(^6\) Both to the oxen and the crops.
\(^7\) Ps. CXII, 5.
\(^8\) For since it is permitted to slaughter on the Sabbath for a person who is dangerously ill, it is suggested that everything in connection with the slaughtering is permitted, even the covering up of the blood.
\(^9\) Aliter: ‘let his tongue be pulled out. That he shall no more lecture. נָתְתָה תִּשְׁבָּה ‘confusion’, ‘an amazing statement’; cf. Dan. IV, 16. For Amora v. Glos. Another reading, quoted by Rashi and R. Gershom and supported by MS.M., is:
‘If he says so in his own name remove etc.’.

If the eighth day is a Sabbath, the child is circumcised on the Sabbath, for the rite of circumcision overrides the laws of Sabbath. V. Shab. XIX, 5.

If a child was born at twilight there is a doubt as to the correct day for circumcision, and the child is circumcised on the ninth day; should this day happen to be a festival the circumcision is postponed to the tenth day. V. Shab. ibid.

It is established law that if Rosh Hashanah happened to fall on Sabbath the Shofar was blown in the Temple (or, in Jerusalem — Maim.) but not in any other place in the land of Israel. V. R.H. 29b.

For although only males and not females are bound to sound the Shofar it is nevertheless held that a tumtum, i.e., a person of doubtful sex, must sound the Shofar; thus it is seen that a case of doubt overrides the festival restriction.

V. supra p. 52, n. 4.

For the rite of circumcision may not be performed at night, cf. Lev. XII, 3.

Where the Sabbath had already been set aside for the slaughtering which was permitted for the sake of the invalid, nevertheless it is not set aside for covering up the blood. Thus R. ‘Ena stands refuted.

I.e., where the slaughtering was performed on the Sabbath for the sake of a healthy person. In that case only is it forbidden to cover up the blood, but where the slaughtering was permitted it would also be permitted to cover up the blood.

Lit., ‘(is an act) of free choice’.

I.e., the slaughtering was a permissible act, for it was done for an invalid.

Accordingly this is no case of doubt at all, for whether the day be a Holy Day or a weekday one may sound the Shofar thereon. V. Jer. Bez. I, 3.

Rather the case of doubt is whether the person [that is sounding the Shofar] is a man or a woman.¹ R. Jose however [does not regard this as a refutation for he] is of the opinion that even a woman² may sound [the Shofar on the Festival]. For it was taught: The sons of Israel lay on [their hands upon the head of the sacrifice]³ but the daughters of Israel do not lay on their hands. R. Jose and R. Simeon say. Daughters of Israel lay on their hands of free choice.⁴ Rabina said: Even the argument of the Rabbis can be refuted thus: You may say so of the sounding of the Shofar,⁵ since in the Temple in a case of certainty it overrides the Sabbath,⁶ will you say likewise of the covering up of the blood which in no Circumstances [overrides the Sabbath]?

‘R. Eleazar ha-Kappar Beribbi raised this objection against the argument [of R. Jose]. You may say so of circumcision since it is not allowed on the night of a festival.’ Is it only on the night of a festival that it is not allowed but on other nights it is allowed?⁷ — Render thus: You may say so of circumcision since it is not allowed by night as by day,⁸ will you say likewise of the covering up of the blood which is allowed by night as by day? R. Abba said: This is one of the instances about which R. Hiyya had said: ‘I have no objection to raise against it’, but R. Eleazar ha-Kappar Beribbi did find an objection.

MISHNAH. IF A PERSON SLAUGHTERED [A WILD ANIMAL OR A BIRD] AND IT WAS FOUND TO BE TREFAH. OR IF HE SLAUGHTERED IT UNTO IDOLS, OR IF HE SLAUGHTERED THAT WHICH WAS UNCONSECRATED INSIDE THE SANCTUARY OR THAT WHICH WAS CONSECRATED OUTSIDE, OR IF HE SLAUGHTERED A WILD ANIMAL OR A BIRD THAT WAS CONDEMNED TO BE STONED⁹ — R. MEIR SAYS THAT HE IS BOUND [TO COVER UP THE BLOOD], BUT THE SAGES SAY THAT HE IS EXEMPT.¹⁰ IF HE SLAUGHTERED [A WILD ANIMAL OR A BIRD] AND IT BECAME NEBELAH UNDER HIS HAND OR IF HE STABBED¹¹ OR TORE AWAY [THE ORGANS OF ITS THROAT], HE IS EXEMPT FROM COVERING UP [THE BLOOD].

GEMARA. R. Hiyya b. Abba said in the name of R. Johanan. Rabbi approved of R. Meir's view¹² in connection with the law of ‘It and its young’ and stated it in the Mishnah as the view of ‘the Sages’, and he approved of R. Simeon's view in connection with the law of covering up the blood and stated it in our Mishnah as the view of ‘the Sages’. What is the reason for R. Meir's view with regard to the law of ‘It and its young’? — R. Joshua b. Levi answered: He derives it by an inference made from the term ‘slaughtering’, used both here and in connection with the slaughtering of consecrated animals outside [the Sanctuary]; as in the latter case a slaughtering which does not render [the animal] fit for food is deemed a slaughtering, so here [in connection with It and its young] a slaughtering which does not render [the animal] fit for food is deemed a slaughtering. And what is the reason for R. Simeon's view? — R. Mani b. Pattish answered: He derives it by analogy from the verse: And slay the beasts and prepare the meat; as there the slaughtering rendered [the animals] fit for food, so here the slaughtering must render [the animal] fit for food. Why does not R. Meir infer it by analogy from ‘And slay the beasts’? — One may infer ‘slaughtering’ from ‘slaughtering’, but one may not infer ‘slaughtering’ from ‘slaying’. But what does this [variation] matter? Was it not taught in the school of R. Ishmael that in the verse: And the priest shall come again, the priest shall come in, the expression ‘coming again’ and ‘coming in’ have the same import [for purposes of deduction]? — This [variation] is [of no consequence] only where there is no alternative analogy based on identical expressions, but where there is an alternative analogy based on identical expressions we must then make the inference from the identical expressions. And why does not R. Simeon infer it by analogy from the law of consecrated animals slaughtered outside the Sanctuary? — One may infer by analogy unconsecrated animals from unconsecrated animals, but not unconsecrated from consecrated. And [is this not an objection against] R. Meir? — [No, for] does not the law of ‘It and its young’ apply also to consecrated animals? It was on account of this [reply] that R. Hiyya [b. Abba] said that Rabbi approved of R. Meir’s view in connection with the law of covering up the blood and stated it in our Mishnah as the view of ‘the Sages’. What is the reason for R. Meir's view with regard to the law of covering up the blood? — R. Simeon b. Lakish answered: He derives it by an inference made from the term ‘pour out’ used both here and in connection with consecrated animals slaughtered outside the Sanctuary; as in the latter case a slaughtering which does not render [the animal] fit and permitted to be eaten, hence it is no slaughtering (adopting R. Simeon's view), and the law of covering up the blood does not apply.

R. Abba said,

---

(1) I.e., a tumtum; he may nevertheless sound the Shofar on the Festival. V. supra p. 474, n. 3.
(2) To whom the precept of sounding the Shofar does not apply at all.
(3) V. Lev. I, 2, 4.
(4) V. Hag. 16b. They may do so if they so desire, and it would not be deemed as ‘doing work’ with a consecrated beast. Likewise a woman may sound the Shofar on the New Year even though she is not obliged to do so.
(5) That a person of doubtful sex may sound the Shofar on the Festival thus overriding the restrictions of the Festival.
(6) V. supra p. 47, n. 2.
(7) It is written (Lev. XII, 3), ‘And in the eighth day’, that is, during the day but not at night.
(8) As the rite may not be performed at all times it is reasonable that a case of doubt shall not override a festival.
(9) Either because it had killed a human being or because an unnatural crime had been committed upon it; cf. Lev. XX. 15. 16.
(10) In each of these cases the slaughtering does not render the animal or bird fit and permitted to be eaten, hence it is no slaughtering (adopting R. Simeon's view), and the law of covering up the blood does not apply.
(11) At the throat.
That a slaughtering which does not render fit for food is deemed a slaughtering.

V. Mishnah supra 81b.

V. Lev. XXII, 28: Ye shall not slaughter it and its young, and XVII, 3: That slaughtereth in the camp.

For a consecrated beast slaughtered outside the Sanctuary may not be eaten.

Gen. XLIII, 16.

For the meat was eaten by Joseph and his brethren.

Lev. XIV, 39 and 44. The reference is to the treatment of leprosy in a house.

For the deductions inferred from these expressions v. Sifra on these verses and Rashi 'Erub. 51a s.v. בשרו.

V. Lev. XVII, 13: He shall pour out the blood thereof and cover it with dust; and also v. 4: He hath poured out blood, with reference to a consecrated animal slaughtered outside the Sanctuary.

Ibid. v. 13. This implies that the law of covering up the blood applies only to those that may be eaten.

How does he explain away the foregoing argument?

And so it should be exempt from covering up the blood, a ruling which contradicts R. Meir.

Talmud - Mas. Chullin 85b

Not for all things did R. Meir say that a slaughtering which does not render [the animal] fit for food is deemed a slaughtering. Indeed R. Meir would agree that such a slaughtering does not render [the animal] permitted to be eaten. Similarly, not for all things did R. Simeon say that a slaughtering which does not render [the animal] fit for food is no slaughtering. Indeed R. Simeon would agree that such a slaughtering renders [the animal] clean so that it be not nebelah.

The Master stated: ‘Not for all things did R. Meir say that a slaughtering which does not render [the animal] fit for food is deemed a slaughtering. Indeed R. Meir would agree that such a slaughtering does not render [the animal] permitted to be eaten’. Is not this obvious? Would a trefah [animal] be permitted [to be eaten] by its slaughtering? — It was only necessary to be stated concerning the case where one slaughtered a trefah animal and found in its womb a living nine months’ foetus. Now I might have argued, since R. Meir maintains that a slaughtering which does not render [the animal] fit for food is a slaughtering, that the slaughtering of its dam should serve for it too, and it should not require slaughtering; he therefore teaches us [that it is not so]. How could you have thought so? Does not R. Meir hold that a living animal extracted [out of its slaughtered dam's womb] requires slaughtering? — This was necessary to be stated since Rabbi agrees with R. Meir [in one matter] and with the Rabbis [in another]. He agrees with R. Meir that a slaughtering which does not render [the animal] fit for food is a slaughtering. And he agrees with the Rabbis that the slaughtering of its dam renders it permitted. Now since the Rabbis hold that the slaughtering of its dam renders it permitted, then [in this case, too, where the dam was a trefah I would say that] the slaughtering of the dam should serve for it too and it should not require slaughtering; he therefore teaches us [that it is not so].

‘Not for all things did R. Simeon say that a slaughtering which does not render [the animal] fit for food is no slaughtering. Indeed R. Simeon would agree that such a slaughtering renders the animal clean so that it be not nebelah’. Is not this obvious? For Rab Judah reported in the name of Rab, (others say. It was so taught in a Baraita.) It is written: And if there dieth of the beasts, [he that toucheth the carcass thereof shall be unclean], 4 that is to say, some beasts convey uncleanness and some do not; and which are they [that do not convey uncleanness]? They are trefah animals which have been slaughtered! — It was only necessary to be stated concerning the case where one slaughtered an unconsecrated animal which was a trefah in the Temple Court. For it was taught: If one slaughtered a trefah animal, or if one slaughtered an animal and it was found to be trefah, both being unconsecrated, in the Temple Court, R. Simeon permits to derive benefit therefrom, but the Sages forbid it. Now I might have argued, since R. Simeon holds that one is permitted to derive benefit therefrom, that there was no slaughtering at all, consequently it is not even rendered clean that it be not nebelah; he therefore teaches us [that it is not so].
R. Papa said to Abaye. Is R. Simeon of the opinion that unconsecrated [animals slaughtered] in the Temple Court are [forbidden] Biblically? — He replied: Yes, he is. For we have learnt: R. Simeon says: Unconsecrated [animals which were slaughtered] in the Temple Court must be burned by fire; so, too, a wild animal that was slaughtered in the Temple Court. Now, if you say that they are forbidden Biblically, we therefore forbid wild animals on account of cattle; but if you say that they are forbidden Rabbinically, it is indeed difficult. For was not the reason for [the Rabbis forbidding cattle] that one might not fall into the error of eating consecrated food outside the Sanctuary? This in itself is a precautionary measure; shall we come and superimpose a precautionary measure upon a precautionary measure? The flax of R. Hiyya was infested with worms, and he came to Rabbi [for advice]. Rabbi said to him, ‘Take a bird and slaughter it over the tub of water, so that the worms will smell the blood and depart’. But how was he permitted to do so? Surely it has been taught: If a man slaughtered, even though he requires the blood for use, he must nevertheless cover it up. What then should he do [so that he may use the blood]? He should either stab it or tear away the organs! — When R. Dimi came [from Palestine] he reported that he [Rabbi] said to him [R. Hiyya], ‘Go and make it trefah [and then slaughter it]’. When Rabin came [from Palestine] he reported that he said to him, ‘Go and stab it [at the throat]’. Why does not he who says that he told him ‘Go and make it trefah’, accept the other view that he told him ‘Go and stab it’? If you say because he [Rabbi] is of the opinion that by Biblical law a bird does not require to be slaughtered, and therefore stabbing is all the slaughtering that is required, but [this cannot be, for] it has been taught: Rabbi says. The verse: And thou shalt slaughter . . . as I have commanded thee, teaches us that Moses was instructed concerning the gullet and the windpipe, that the greater part of one of these organs in the case of birds and of both organs in the case of cattle [is required]? —

(1) And if this is so where its dam was permitted to be eaten by the slaughtering, a fortiori where the dam was a trefah.
(2) Sc. the dictum of R. Abba.
(3) Sc. the animal which had been extracted alive out of the slaughtered dam's womb.
(4) Lev. XI, 39.
(5) V. supra 74a.
(6) Since the animal is trefah and the slaughtering thereof does not render it permitted to be eaten there was no ‘slaughtering’ in the Temple Court; hence one may derive a benefit from the carcass.
(7) Kid. 582.
(8) This appears to be R. Simeon's view from the foregoing argument. For if he were to hold that an unconsecrated animal slaughtered in the Sanctuary may be eaten according to Biblical law, but was forbidden by Rabbinic enactment because of the apprehension that people, seeing one eat the flesh of such an animal outside the Sanctuary, might be misled in believing that one may eat consecrated meat outside the Sanctuary — then there is no valid reason to differentiate (v. supra) between the slaughtering that renders the animal fit for food and the one that does not (i.e., the slaughtering of a trefah animal), since even in the latter case there is the apprehension that people will believe that one may derive benefit from a consecrated beast that was unfit (i.e., blemished or trefah).
(9) Tem. 33b.
(10) Although it is clear to all that the wild animal slaughtered in the Sanctuary is unconsecrated for there can be no consecrated wild animals.
(11) A statement made in anticipation of the alternative view which follows, for strictly both kinds are forbidden by the same Biblical text.
(12) To forbid wild animals on account of cattle. Surely not. One must therefore conclude that the prohibition is Biblical.
(13) Wherein the flax was soaking.
(14) To slaughter a bird and not cover up its blood.
(15) V. supra 27b.
(16) Consequently the law of ‘covering up’ applies to stabbing.
(17) Deut. XII, 21.

Talmud - Mas. Chullin 86a
This is a case of ‘it goes without saying’. It goes without saying that [the advice]. ‘Go and stab it’ [is good] for in that case there is no slaughtering at all. But against [the advice]. ‘Go and make it trefah’, one might argue and say that a slaughtering which does not render fit for food is nevertheless deemed a slaughtering, consequently its blood must be covered up; he therefore teaches us as R. Hiyya b. Abba [reported above].

And why does not he who says that Rabbi told him, ‘Go and stab it’, accept the other view that he told him, ‘Go and make it trefah’? Should you say because he [Rabbi] is of the opinion that a slaughtering which does not render fit for food is deemed a slaughtering. [this cannot be, for] R. Hiyya b. Abba reported in the name of R. Johanan that Rabbi approved of R. Simeon's view in connection with the law of covering up the blood and therefore stated it in our Mishnah as the view of ‘the Sages’! This is a case of ‘it goes without saying’. Thus, it goes without saying [that the advice] ‘Go and make it trefah’ [is good], for a slaughtering which does not render the animal fit for food is no slaughtering. But against [the advice] ‘Go and stab it’ one might argue and say that by Biblical law a bird does not require to be slaughtered, and stabbing is all the slaughtering that is required, consequently the blood must be covered up; he therefore teaches us [that this cannot be so because of the verse] ‘As I have commanded thee’.

How came it that his flax was infested with worms? Did not Rabin b. Abba (others say. R. Abin b. Shabba) declare that from the time that the people of the Exile came up [to Palestine] there ceased to be [in Palestine] shooting stars, earthquakes, storms and thunders, their wines never turned sour and their flax was never blighted; and the Rabbis set their eyes upon R. Hiyya and his sons — Their merits benefitted the whole world but not themselves. Even as Rab Judah said in the name of Rab: Every day a Heavenly Voice goes forth and proclaims, ‘The whole world is provided with food only on account of my son Hanina, while my son Hanina is satisfied with one kab of carob fruit from one Sabbath eve to the other’.

MISHNAH. IF A DEAF-MUTE, AN IMBECILE OR A MINOR SLAUGHTERED WHILE OTHERS WATCHED THEM, ONE MUST COVER UP THE BLOOD; BUT IF THEY WERE ALONE. ONE NEED NOT COVER IT UP. SIMILARLY WITH THE LAW OF ‘IT AND ITS YOUNG’: IF THESE SLAUGHTERED WHILE OTHERS WATCHED THEM, IT IS FORBIDDEN TO SLAUGHTER AFTER THEM [THE YOUNG]; BUT IF THEY WERE ALONE. R. MEIR PERMITS TO SLAUGHTER AFTER THEM [THE YOUNG]. BUT THE RABBIS FORBID IT; THEY AGREE, HOWEVER. THAT IF A PERSON DID SLAUGHTER [AFTER THEM], HE HAS NOT INCURRED FORTY STRIPES.

GEMARA. As to the Rabbis why is it that in the first clause they do not dissent and in the second clause they do? — Because in the first clause, if they were to say that the blood must be covered up, people might think that the slaughtering was a valid one and would even eat of what they slaughtered. Then in the second clause too, since the Rabbis say that it is forbidden to slaughter [the young] after them, people might think that the slaughtering was a valid one and would even eat of what they slaughtered! — In the second clause people would say that he does not need any meat. Then in the first clause, too, people might say [that he is covering up the blood] only to keep his yard clean? — Could this be said if he slaughtered on a dunghill? or could this be said if he came to ask for a ruling? — But according to your own argument, even in the case of the second clause, what would you say if he came to ask for a ruling? Rather we must say that the Rabbis differ with the whole teaching [of the Mishnah], but they merely waited until R. Meir had completely stated his case and then they expressed their dissent.

Now as to the view of the Rabbis, it is clear that they apply [in a case of doubt] the stricter rule; but what is the reason for R. Meir's ruling? — R. Jacob stated in the name of R. Johanan that, according to R. Meir, one would be culpable for [eating] nebelah [if one were to eat] of their slaughtering. Why is it? R. Ammi answered: Because in the majority of cases what they do is bungled. R. Papa said to R. Huna the son of R. Joshua (others say: R. Huna the son of R. Joshua said to R. Papa). Why in the majority of cases? The same would be the result if [this were so] only in a minority of cases, for since R. Meir takes into account the minority, by adding the minority to the presumption the majority is shaken? For we have learnt: If a child was found by the side of dough with a piece of dough in his hand, R. Meir declares it clean but the Rabbis declare it unclean, because it is a child's nature to meddle. And we asked. What is R. Meir's reason? [And the answer was given,] He is of the opinion that most children meddle but a minority do not; now this dough is presumed to be clean.

---

(1) And its blood most certainly does not require to be covered up.
(2) That Rabbi is of the opinion that a slaughtering which does not render the animal fit for food is no slaughtering.
(3) V. supra 85a.
(4) From which Rabbi derived the rule that birds require to be slaughtered; hence he holds that the obligation is Biblical.
(5) Babylon.
(6) The reference is not to the return under Ezra as is clear from the context.
(7) I.e., the cessation of these plagues was due to the merit of R. Hiyya and his sons; v. Suk. 20a. How then could it have happened to R. Hiyya himself that his flax was infested with worms?
(9) A measure of capacity, v. Glos.
(10) I.e., any one of those who watched them slaughter.
(11) For the slaughtering by these unfit persons is no slaughtering and therefore the blood need not be covered up.
(12) On the same day; or the dam if the young was slaughtered first.
(13) Since there is a doubt whether the slaughtering by the deaf-mute etc. was a slaughtering or not.
(14) According to the Rabbis one ought to cover up the blood, even though these unfit persons were alone when they slaughtered, because of the doubt as to their slaughtering, just as they rule in the final clause.
(15) And that is why he abstains from slaughtering but not because he is forbidden so to do.
(16) For if Beth din were to rule that he must cover up the blood then clearly he would believe that the slaughtering of the deaf-mute etc. was valid.
(17) Here too, if forbidden by Beth din to slaughter the young after them, he will certainly regard the slaughtering of the first animal valid.
(18) And one would suffer stripes on account of it, because it is not a matter of doubt but a certainty that their slaughtering is bad so that the animal is nebelah.
(19) V. supra 9a: a living animal is presumed to be forbidden until it is definitely ascertained that it has been validly slaughtered. Here, therefore, even if it were held that the majority of children do not bungle what they undertake to do, there is however a minority of some who do, and this, coupled with the presumed prohibition of the animal, would carry more weight than the majority, and their slaughtering would be invalid. The question therefore is: why was it necessary to hold that the majority of children bungle what they do?
(20) Toh. III, 8; Nid. 18b; Kid. 80a. According to Rashi the interpretation is this: it is quite certain that this child has touched the dough, for he holds some in his hand, and since it is the habit of most children to meddle and play about among refuse and unclean things, this child in all probability was unclean and so rendered the rest of the dough unclean. Tosaf. interpret thus: it is quite certain that this child was unclean for he is always being fondled by women and by menstruant women too, and since it is the habit of most children to meddle with dough, this child in all probability touched the dough and so rendered it unclean. The less probable view, by taking the minority into consideration, would be to say that this child did not himself touch the dough but a piece was given to him by some person.
(21) As long as we do not know for certain that it has been rendered unclean.

Talmud - Mas. Chullin 86b

therefore by adding the minority to the presumption the majority is shaken! — If they said in a case of doubt concerning uncleanness that it is clean, will they also say in a case of doubt concerning a prohibition that it is permitted?\(^2\)

Rabbi decided a case according to the view of R. Meir, and Rabbi also decided a case according to the view of the Rabbis. Now which was the later decision?\(^3\) — Come and hear [it from the following incident]. R. Abba the son of R. Hyya b. Abba and R. Zera were standing in the open square in Caesarea at the entrance of the Beth-Hamidrash. R. Ammi came out and found them standing there and said,'Have I not told you that during sessions at the House of Study you shall not stand outside? There may be someone within who is in difficulty about a matter and there might be a disturbance'.\(^4\) Thereupon R. Zera went in [to the House of Study] but R. Abba did not. Now inside they were sitting and considering the question. Which was the later decision? R. Zera said to them, 'What a pity you did not let me ask that old man\(^5\) about this. He might have heard something about this from his father [R. Hyya b. Abba] and his father from R. Johanan, for R. Hyya b. Abba used to revise his study in the presence of R. Johanan every thirty days'. What has been decided about the matter? — Come and hear it from the message which R. Eleazar had sent to the Exile,\(^6\) 'Rabbi decided in accordance with R. Meir'. Now had he not decided according to the Rabbis too? It must be, therefore, that this\(^7\) was the later decision. This proves it.

GEMARA. Our Rabbis taught: [The expression] wild animal\(^8\) includes all wild animals, whether many or few; [the expression] bird\(^9\) includes all birds, whether many or few. Hence they said: If a person slaughtered a hundred wild animals in one place, one covering suffices for all; if [he slaughtered] a hundred birds in one place, one covering suffices for all, if [he slaughtered] a wild animal and a bird in one place one covering suffices for both. R. Judah says: If he slaughtered a wild animal he must [first] cover up its blood and then slaughter the bird, for it is written: Any wild animal or bird.\(^9\) They replied. But it also says. For as to the life of all flesh, the blood thereof is all one with the life thereof.\(^10\) What did they mean by this reply? This is what the Rabbis meant: Is not the particle 'or' required to show disjunction?\(^11\) And R. Judah? — He derives the principle of disjunction from the expression the blood thereof.\(^12\) And the Rabbis? — They say that the expression 'the blood thereof' means [the blood] of many,\(^13\) as it is written: For as to the life of all flesh, the blood thereof is all one with the life thereof.

R. Hanina said: R. Judah agrees that with regard to the Benediction he has only to say one Benediction.\(^14\) Rabina asked R. Aha the son of Raba (others say: R. Aha the son of Raba asked R. Ashi). In what way is this different from the incident concerning Rab's disciples? For R. Berona and R. Hananel, the disciples of Rab, were sitting at a meal and R. Yeba the elder was waiting on them. They said to him, 'Let us say the Grace [after meals]', and immediately after they said to him, 'Pass [the cup of wine] that we may drink'. Thereupon R. Yeba said to them, 'Thus said Rab: As soon as a man says "Let us say the Grace", it is forbidden to drink wine.\(^15\) In this case, too, since he must first attend to the covering up of the blood he is bound to say another Benediction!\(^16\) —

---

(1) Relying on the minority taken in conjunction with the presumption.
(2) Where the doubt involves a prohibition R. Meir would not permit it by the argument of a minority in support of a presumption. In point of fact, however, there is here a majority principle that supports the presumption, since the majority of children bungle what they do.
(3) His later decision would be the more reliable, since it may be assumed that he recognized his error after the first decision and now ruled differently.
Mishnah. If a person slaughtered and did not cover up the blood, and another person saw it, the other must cover it up. If he covered it up and it became uncovered, he need not cover it up again. If the wind covered it up, he must cover it up again. Gemara. Our Rabbis taught: [It is written,] He shall pour out . . . and cover it: that is, he who poured out the blood shall cover it up. If he slaughtered and did not cover it and another person saw it, whence do we know that the other person must cover it up? It therefore says: Therefore I said unto the children of Israel, this is a warning to all the children of Israel.

Another [Baraitha] taught: He shall pour out . . . and cover it: that is, with that with which he poured it out he shall cover it. He must not cover it with his foot, so that precepts be not treated with contempt by him.

Another [Baraitha] taught: ‘He shall pour out . . . and cover it’: that is, he who poured it out shall cover it up. It once happened that a person slaughtered but another anticipated him and covered up the blood, and R. Gamaliel condemned the latter to pay ten gold coins.

The question was raised: Was this the reward for [being deprived of the performance of] the commandment or for [being deprived of] the Benediction? But where would there be any practical difference [between these two views]? In the case of the Grace after meals, if you say that it was the reward for [being deprived of the performance of] the commandment, then here there is also but one [commandment]; but if you say that it was the reward for [being deprived of] the Benediction, then here the reward should be forty gold coins. What is the answer then? — Come and hear from the following incident. A certain min once said to Rabbi, ‘He who formed the mountains did not create the wind, and he who created the wind did not form the mountains, for it is written: For, lo, He that formeth the mountains and createth the wind’. He replied, ‘You fool, turn to the end of the verse: The Lord, [the God] of hosts, is His name’. Said the other: ‘Give me three days’ time and I will bring... back an answer to you’. Rabbi spent those three days in fasting; thereafter, as he was about to partake of food he was told, ‘There is a inn waiting at the door’. Rabbi exclaimed, ‘Yea they put poison into my food.’ Said he [the min], ‘My Master, I bring you good tidings; your opponent could find no answer and so threw himself down from the roof and died’. He said: ‘Would you dine with me?’ He replied, ‘Yes’. After they had eaten and drunk, he [Rabbi] said to him, ‘Will you drink the cup of wine over which the Benedictions of the Grace [after meals] have been said, or would you rather have forty gold coins?’ He replied: ‘I would rather drink the cup of wine’. Thereupon there came forth a Heavenly Voice and said: The cup of wine over [which] the Benedictions [of Grace have been said] is worth forty gold coins. R. Isaac said: The family [of that min] is still to be found amongst the notables of Rome and is named ‘The family of Bar Luianus

IF HE COVERED IT UP AND IT BECAME UNCOVERED [HE NEED NOT COVER IT UP AGAIN]. R. Aha the son of Raba said to R. Ashi: In what way is this different from the obligation to return lost property? For the Master has said, ‘Thou shalt return’ implies even a hundred times! — He replied. In that case there is no limiting qualification, but here there is written a limiting qualification, [namely]: And he shall cover it.

IF THE WIND COVERED IT UP [HE MUST COVER IT UP AGAIN]. Rabbah b. Bar Hana said in the name of R. Johanan: This is the rule only if it had become uncovered, but if it had not become uncovered he need not cover it up. But what should it matter even if it had become uncovered? Has not the precept suffered a disability? — R. Papa answered: This proves that the law of disability does not apply to precepts. And why is it different from the following which was taught: If a person slaughtered and the blood was absorbed in the earth he must nevertheless cover it up?

MISHNAH. IF THE BLOOD BECAME MIXED WITH WATER AND IT STILL HAS THE COLOUR OF BLOOD, IT MUST BE COVERED UP. IF IT BECAME MIXED WITH WINE, [THE WINE] IS TO BE REGARDED AS THOUGH IT WAS WATER. IF IT BECAME MIXED WITH THE BLOOD OF CATTLE

---

(1) Therefore the expressed desire to say the Grace intimates that the meal is definitely at an end, so that if anything more is brought to the table there must be made over it a special Benediction.

(2) And he need not have diverted his mind from the slaughtering at all for both can be done simultaneously.

(3) And it became uncovered. V. Gemara.

(4) Lev. XVII, 13.

(5) Ibid. 14.

(6) I.e., with the hand.

(7) For depriving the slaughterer of the reward that would have been his had he covered the blood.

(8) Which consists of four Benedictions.

(10) Amos IV, 13.

(11) Ps. LXIX, 22. Rabbi thought that it was that same min who had argued with him three days previously. Var. lec. add: ‘At last it was found that it was not the same but another min’.

(12) Deut. XXII, 1.

(13) v. B.M. 31a.

(14) ‘It’ implies once only.

(15) By having been once discharged. For had it not become uncovered there would be no further obligation to cover it up, hence by the first covering up the precept has been fulfilled and so discharged.

(16) V. Suk. 33a.

(17) In other words, the blood was covered up by the earth as by the wind in our Mishnah, yet the Baraitha teaches that he must cover it up.

(18) But where the blood had entirely been absorbed in the ground and no traces were visible there is no obligation to cover it up.
(19) And if there was in the mixture that quantity of wine which, had it been water, would not have changed the appearance of the blood, it must then be covered up.
(20) Which does not require to be covered up.

Talmud - Mas. Chullin 87b

OR WITH THE BLOOD OF A WILD ANIMAL, it is to be regarded as though it was water. R. Judah says, blood cannot neutralize blood. The blood which spurted out and that which is upon the knife must also be covered up. R. Judah says, when is this the case? When there is no other blood but that; but when there is other blood besides this, it need not be covered up.

GEMARA. We have learnt elsewhere: If the blood [of a sacrifice] became mixed with water and it still has the colour of blood, it is valid. If it became mixed with wine, it must be regarded as though it was water. If it became mixed with the blood of [unconsecrated] cattle or of a wild animal, it must be regarded as though it was water. R. Judah says: Blood cannot neutralize blood. R. Hyya said in the name of R. Johanan: This ruling applies only to the case where the water fell into the blood, but where the blood fell into the water each drop became neutralized [as it fell into the water]. R. Papa said: But it is not so with regard to the law of ‘covering up’, for the law of disability does not apply to precepts.

Rab Judah said in the name of Samuel: As long as it is of a reddish colour it makes atonement, it renders susceptible to uncleanness, and it must be covered up. What does he teach us? We have learnt it with regard to its validity for atonement and we have also learnt it with regard to the obligation of covering up! — The statement that it renders susceptible to uncleanness, was necessary. But even that statement [is unnecessary], for if it is blood it renders susceptible to uncleanness, and if it is water it renders susceptible to uncleanness! — It was only necessary to be stated for the case where it [the blood] was mixed with rain water. But even in the case of rain water since it was collected [in a vessel] and poured [into the blood] it was surely intended for the purpose! — It was necessary only in the case where they were mixed without human effort.

R. Assi of Neharbel says. It refers to the thin blood. R. Jeremiah of Difti said: He incurs the penalty of Kareth, but only if there was an olive's bulk. In a Baraitha it was taught: It renders unclean [men and vessels that are] in the tent, but only if there was a quarter [log].

We have learnt elsewhere: All liquids that issue from a corpse are clean excepting blood. As long as it has a reddish colour it will render unclean [men and vessels that are] in the tent. [Do you say then that] the liquids that issue from a corpse are clean? But I can point out a contradiction, for we have learnt: The liquids that issue from a tebul yom are like the liquids which he touches:

(1) Either the blood of a wild animal which had been obtained by the opening of a vein (Rashi) or the blood of a forbidden wild animal (Maim.).
(2) Even if there was only the minutest quantity of the blood of a wild animal mixed with the blood of cattle, the former is not neutralized nor loses its identity in the mixture, but the whole mixture must be covered up; for R. Judah is of the opinion that in a mixture of like kinds one element can never neutralize the other, no matter in what proportion they are to each other.
(3) Zeb. 87b.
(4) For sprinkling upon the altar.
(5) That in a mixture of blood and water, if the appearance of the whole is like blood it is valid.
(6) For then each drop of water as it falls into the blood becomes neutralized and is lost; and only when so much water falls into the blood so that the whole mixture assumes the appearance of water is it rendered invalid.
And even if there fell into the water so large a quantity of blood as to give to the whole the appearance of blood, it is unfit for its purpose; for as each drop fell into the water it became neutralized and immediately lost its validity for the purposes of ritual sprinkling, and it cannot regain it even though the whole mixture has the colour of blood.

The obligation of ‘covering up’ was only suspended but not discharged, consequently if the whole has the appearance of blood the obligation attaches to it.

Blood which was mixed with water.

When sprinkled upon the altar,

I.e., if it fell upon foodstuffs; cf. Lev. XI, 38.

Lit., ‘the tamad (the mixture of water and lees) was made with rain water’, a phrase from the argument in B.B. 97a.

Rain water cannot render foodstuffs susceptible to uncleanness except where it was intended for some purpose or use, a reservation which does not apply to blood.

Sc. the blood and the rain water. In this case, therefore, as the rain water by itself cannot render susceptible to uncleanness, only if the mixture has the colour of blood will it render susceptible to uncleanness.

Nehar Bil, east of Bagdad.

When blood congeals there settles at the base a clear watery liquid. This liquid will only render susceptible to uncleanness if it has the colour of blood.

Who eats of this thin blood.

Of normal blood in addition to this clear blood. So Rashi and Tosaf. The statement however is strangely expressed for the net result is that for drinking this thin watery blood by itself one does not incur the penalty of Kareth. V. Torath Hayyim a.l.; also Responsa of Hatham Sofer, Yoreh Deah 70.

Sc. this thin watery blood if it issued from a corpse.

Cf. n. 4.

This is no Mishnah although it is introduced by the usual Mishnaic expression in. It is found in Tosef. Ohol. IV, and Tosaf. Maksh. III.

E.g., tears and the milk from a woman's breast.

A person who has immersed himself in a mikweh in the daytime but technically does not become clean until after sunset. He is regarded as unclean in the second degree.

neither the one nor the other conveys uncleanness. As for all others that are unclean, whether they suffer light or grave uncleanness, the liquids that issue from them are like the liquids they touch: both are unclean in the first degree, excepting the liquid which is a primary source of uncleanness.¹ Now what is meant by ‘light or grave uncleanness’? Presumably ‘light uncleanness’ means that of a [dead] reptile² or of a man that has a flux, and ‘grave uncleanness’ that of a corpse!³ — No; ‘light uncleanness’ is that of a reptile, and ‘grave uncleanness’ is that of a man that has a flux.⁴ And why is it that [the liquids⁵ that issue from] a man that has a flux the Rabbis decreed [to be unclean] but [the liquids that issue from] a corpse the Rabbis did not decree [to be unclean]? — [The liquids that issue from] a man that has a flux, since people do not keep away from him,⁶ the Rabbis decreed [to be unclean], but [the liquids that issue from] a corpse, since people keep away from it, the Rabbis did not decree [to be unclean].

THE BLOOD THAT SPURTED OUT AND THAT WHICH IS UPON THE KNIFE etc. Our Rabbis taught: The expression. And he shall cover it,⁷ teaches that the blood which spurted out and that which is upon the knife must be covered up. R. Judah said: When is this the case? When there is no other blood but that, but when there is other blood besides this, it need not be covered up. Another Baraitha taught: The expression. ‘And he shall cover it’, teaches that the whole of the blood must be covered up; hence, they said, the blood which spurted out and that which remains about the sides [of the throat] must also be covered up. R. Simeon b. Gamaliel said: This is so only if he did not cover up the life blood, but if he covered up the life blood, this need not be covered. Wherein do they differ? — The Rabbis maintain that ‘the blood thereof’⁷ means the whole of its blood; R. Judah maintains that ‘the blood thereof’ implies even part of its blood; and R. Simeon b. Gamaliel maintains that ‘the blood thereof’ means the vital blood.

MISHNAH. WITH WHAT MAY ONE COVER UP [THE BLOOD] AND WITH WHAT MAY ONE NOT COVER IT UP? ONE MAY COVER IT UP WITH FINE DUNG, WITH FINE SAND, WITH LIME, WITH A POTSherd OR A BRICK OR AN EARTHENWARE STOPPER [OF A CASK] THAT HAVE BEEN GROUND INTO POWDER, BUT ONE MAY NOT COVER IT UP WITH COARSE DUNG OR COARSE SAND, NOR WITH A BRICK OR AN EARTHENWARE STOPPER [OF A CASK] THAT HAVE NOT BEEN GROUND INTO POWDER; NOR MAY ONE TURN A VESSEL OVER IT. R. SIMEON B. GAMALIEL LAID DOWN THE RULE: ONE MAY COVER IT WITH ANYTHING IN WHICH PLANTS WOULD GROW; BUT ONE MAY NOT COVER IT WITH ANYTHING IN WHICH PLANTS WOULD NOT GROW.

GEMARA. What is meant by FINE SAND? — Rabbah b. Bar Hanah said in the name of R. Johanan. Such as the potter does not need to crush. Some there are who apply this statement to the second clause, viz., BUT ONE MAY NOT COVER IT UP WITH COARSE DUNG OR COARSE SAND. What is meant by COARSE SAND? — Rabbah b. Bar Hanah said in the name of R. Johanan. Such as the potter needs to crush. What is the difference between these two versions? — Where it is not absolutely necessary [to crush it], as it crumbles [with the hand].

Our Rabbis taught: ‘And he shall cover it’. I would have thought that he may cover it with stones or turn a vessel over it, the verse therefore adds ‘with dust’. Then I only know dust, whence would I know to include fine dung, fine sand, crushed stones, crushed potsherds, fine scraps of flax,

(1) E.g. the semen of all men as well as the spittle, urine, and the discharge of a man that has a running issue.
(2) E.g., the urine found in a dead reptile.
(3) A corpse is regarded as the gravest form of uncleanness because it is the generator of a primary source of uncleanness, אביו של כל המכליות — ‘the father of a primary source of uncleanness’. Now this Mishnah teaches that the liquid that issues from a corpse is unclean and conveys uncleanness, thus contrary to the previous teaching.
(4) But the liquids (excepting blood) that issue from a corpse are clean.
(5) I.e., those that are not primary sources of uncleanness e.g., tears, blood from a wound, woman's milk.
(6) For he is a living person and people may not know that he is suffering from a discharge.
(8) Lit., ‘special’, ‘distinct’.
(9) In the Mishnah ed. Lowe there is added here: Nor cover it with stones.
(10) Lit., ‘it needs and does not need (to be crushed)’. According to the first version since it does not require to be crushed because it crumbles with the hand, it may be used for covering; according to the second version since it must be crushed even if only with the hand it may not be used for covering.

Talmud - Mas. Chullin 88b

fine sawdust, lime, or a potsherd or a brick or an earthenware stopper [of a cask] that have been ground into powder, The text therefore says: ‘And he shall cover it’. Then I might also include even coarse dung, coarse sand, crushed metal vessels, or a brick or stopper that have not been ground into powder, or flour, bran or coarse bran. The text therefore says, ‘with dust’. And why do you prefer to include the one and exclude the other? Since the verse includes some and excludes others, I include those that are a kind of dust and exclude those that are not a kind of dust. Perhaps I should argue thus, ‘And he shall cover it’ is a general proposition, ‘dust’ is a specified particular, we thus have a general proposition followed by a specified particular, in which case the scope of the proposition is limited by the particular specified, that is, dust only but nothing else! — R. Mari replied. Here it is a general proposition complemented by a specified particular, and a general proposition complemented by a specified particular is not to be interpreted by the same rule as a general
R. Nahman son of R. Hisda expounded. One may only cover up [the blood] with that which if sown would produce growth.\(^4\) Raba remarked: This is an absurdity! Said R. Nahman b. Isaac to Raba: Wherein lies its absurdity? I told it him, and I derived it from the following Baraita: If a person was travelling through a desert and can find no dust wherewith to cover up [the blood], he may grind a golden denar to powder and cover it up therewith.\(^5\) If a person was travelling on a ship and has no dust wherewith to cover up [the blood], he may burn his garment and cover up with the ashes thereof. Now this is clear concerning the burning of a garment and covering up therewith, for we find that ashes are referred to as dust;\(^6\) but whence do we know this of a golden denar? — R. Zera answered: It is written: It hath dust of gold.\(^7\)

Our Rabbis taught: One may cover up [the blood] only with dust: so Beth Shammai. But Beth Hillel say. We find ashes referred to as dust, for it is written: And for the unclean they shall take of the dust of the burning [of the purification from sin].\(^8\) Beth Shammai, however, say. It [sc., ashes] might be referred to as ‘the dust of the burning’ but it is never referred to as ‘dust’ simply.

A Tanna taught: To these they added coal dust,\(^9\) stibium, stone dust.\(^10\) Some add, even orpiment.

Raba said: As a reward for our father Abraham having said: I am but dust and ashes,\(^11\) his descendants were worthy to receive two commandments: the ashes of the [Red] Cow, and the dust [used in the ceremony] of a woman suspected of adultery.\(^12\) Why does he not reckon also the dust used for the covering up of the blood? — Because that is only the perfection of the commandment but it is of no advantage [to the performer].\(^13\)

Raba also said: As a reward for our father Abraham having said,

\(^{(1)}\) For these can in no wise be included within the term ‘dust’.
\(^{(2)}\) For in all the former examples plants can grow, accordingly they are included in the term dust.
\(^{(3)}\) Lit., ‘which needs the specified particular’. The general proposition of the verse is in itself insufficient, for it would even include a covering such as the turning of a vessel over the blood. Hence the specification was required to complement and thereby elucidate the implication of the general proposition by indicating that only such dust was intended for covering as mixes with blood and absorbs it. For another instance of the application of this principle of exegesis v. Bek. 19a.
\(^{(4)}\) This would exclude hard and dry earth which cannot produce any growth.
\(^{(5)}\) The fact that he must resort to such an expedient proves that the hard stony ground of the desert may not be used for covering.
\(^{(6)}\) Cf. Num. XIX, 17. The two Heb. terms רחמים ‘ashes’ and עפר ‘dust’ are similar in sound and might very well be interchanged as in the verse referred to.
\(^{(7)}\) Job. XXVIII, 6.
\(^{(8)}\) V. p. 495, n. 5.
\(^{(9)}\) I.e., slag; or perhaps soot.
\(^{(10)}\) Lit., ‘the scraps from chiselling’.
\(^{(11)}\) Gen. XVIII, 27.
\(^{(13)}\) For the slaughtered animal is permitted even though the blood had not been covered up. In each of the other commandments there is a blessing and benefit bestowed: the dust used in the ceremony of a woman suspected of adultery serves to remove all suspicion and to restore peace and confidence between husband and wife, and the ashes of the Red Cow serve to cleanse the unclean (cf. Num. XIX).

Talmud - Mas. Chullin 89a
I will not take a thread or a shoe-strap,¹ his descendants were worthy to receive two commandments: the thread of blue,² and the strap of the tefillin.³ Now as for the strap of the tefillin, [the blessing bestowed on its account] is clear, for it is written: And all the peoples of the earth shall see that the name of the Lord is called upon thee; and they shall be afraid of thee,⁴ and it has been taught: R. Eliezer the Great says: This refers to the tefillin worn upon the head.⁵ But what [is the blessing bestowed on account] of the thread of blue? — It has been taught:⁶ R. Meir says. Why is blue singled out from all the varieties of colours? Because blue resembles the colour of the sea, and the sea resembles the colour of the sky, and the sky resembles the colour of a sapphire, and a sapphire resembles the colour of the Throne of Glory, as it is said: And they saw the God of Israel and there was under His feet as it were a paved work of sapphire stone;⁷ and it is also written: The likeness of a throne as the appearance of a sapphire stone.⁸

R. Abba said: Grave indeed is theft that has been consumed, for even the perfect righteous cannot make amends for it, as it is said: Save only that which the young men have eaten.⁹

R. Johanan said in the name of R. Eleazar son of R. Simeon. Wherever you find the words of R. Eleazar the son of R. Jose the Galilean in an Aggadah make your ear like a funnel.¹⁰ [For he said: It is written,] It was not because you were greater than any people that the Lord set His love upon you and chose you.¹¹ The Holy One, blessed be He, said to Israel, I love you because even when I bestow greatness upon you, you humble yourselves before me. I bestowed greatness upon Abraham, yet he said to Me, I am but dust and ashes;¹² Upon Moses and Aaron, yet they said: And we are nothing,¹³ upon David, yet he said: But I am a worm and no man.¹⁴ But with the heathens it is not so. I bestowed greatness upon Nimrod, and he said: Come, let us build us a city;¹⁵ upon Pharaoh, and he said: Who is the Lord? Upon Sennacherib, and he said: Who are they among all the gods of the countries?¹⁷ upon Nebuchadnezzar, and he said: I will ascend above the heights of the clouds;¹⁸ upon Hiram king of Tyre, and he said: I sit in the seat of God, in the heart of the seas.¹⁹ Raba, others say R. Johanan: More significant is that which is said of Moses and Aaron than that which is said of Abraham. Of Abraham it is said: I am but dust and ashes, whereas of Moses and Aaron it is said: And we are nothing.²⁰

Raba, others say R. Johanan, also said: The world exists only on account of [the merit of] Moses and Aaron; for it is written here: And we are nothing, and it is written there [of the world]: He hangeth the earth upon nothing.²¹

R. Ilia'a said: The world exists only on account of [the merit of] him who restrains himself in strife, for it is written: He hangeth the earth upon belimah.²² R. Abbahu said: On account of [the merit of] him who abases himself,²³ for it is written: And underneath are the everlasting arms.²⁴

R. Isaac said: What is the meaning of the verse: Indeed in silence speak righteousness; judge uprightly the sons of men?²⁵ What should be a man's pursuit²⁶ in this world? He should be silent. Perhaps he should be so with regard to the words of the Torah? It says therefore, ‘Speak righteousness’. Perhaps then he is to become arrogant? It says therefore, ‘Judge uprightly²⁷ the sons of men.

R. Ze'ira, others say Rabbah b. Jeremiah, said: One may cover up [the blood] with the dust²⁸ of a ‘condemned city’.²⁹ Why is this? Is it not forbidden for all uses?³⁰ — Ze'iri answered: It can only refer to the earth³¹ of its soil; for the verse. And thou shalt gather all the spoil of it into the midst of the broad place thereof and shalt burn with fire,³² applies only to that which requires to be gathered and burned; but that which requires to be dug up and then gathered and burned is excluded.³³ Raba said: The [performance of] precepts is not accounted as a personal benefit.³⁴

Rabina was sitting and reciting the above statement [of Raba]; whereupon R. Rehumi raised this objection against Rabina. [It was taught:]35 A man may not blow [on the New Year] a shofar which has been used for idolatrous purposes. Now presumably if he did blow it he will not have fulfilled his obligation! — No. If he did blow it he has fulfilled his obligation. A man may not take [on the Festival] a lulub36 which has been used for idolatrous purposes. Presumably if he did take it he will not have fulfilled his obligation! — No. If he did take it he has fulfilled his obligation. But it has been taught: If he sounded it he has not fulfilled his obligation; if he took it he has not fulfilled his obligation! — R. Ashi answered: There is no comparison at all. There37

(1) Gen. XIV, 23.
(2) On the fringes of the garments; cf. Num. XV, 38.
(4) Deut. XXVIII, 20.
(5) Men. 35b. Hence the tefillin inspire awe upon all people.
(6) Men. 43b.
(7) Ex. XXIV, 10.
(8) Ezek. I, 26. And whenever God sits upon His Throne of Glory He immediately thinks of the blue thread of the fringes worn by Israel, and bestows upon them blessings.
(9) Gen. XIV, 24. Abraham could not restore or make good that which had been wrongfully eaten by the young men.
(10) To receive the teaching; like the funnel or hopper at the top of the mill to receive the grain.
(12) Gen. XVIII, 35.
(13) Ex. XVI, 8. So according to Rabbinic interpretation. E.V. ‘and what are we’.
(14) Ps. XXII, 7.
(15) Gen. XI, 4.
(16) Ex. V, 2.
(17) II Kings XVIII, 35.
(18) Isa. XIV, 14.
(19) Ezek. XXVIII, 2.
(20) Their humility was greater than that of Abraham.
(21) Job XXVI. 7; Heb. בְּלִימֹת; interpreted as two words: בְּלִי ‘without’ מַה ‘anything’. The world exists because of those who regard themselves as nothing, like Moses and Aaron who said of themselves, בְּלִימֹת מַה. And we are nothing.
(22) ‘Restraint’. בְּלִימֹת is connected with the root בָּלֶם, ‘to close up, to restrain’.
(23) Makes himself as if he were non-existent.
(24) Deut. XXXIII, 27. Those who are underneath (the humble and the lowly) are the arms (support) of the world.
(25) Ps. LVIII, 2.
(26) ‘indeed’, is homiletically associated with מְסָמָה ‘occupation, pursuit’.
(27) ‘uprightly’ is associated with מְשָׁרָה ‘evenness’, i.e., not exalted nor haughty.
(28) It is assumed that the ashes of this city which had (according to the Law) been destroyed by fire is meant.
(29) A city whose citizens were enticed to serve idols. V. Deut. XIII, 23ff.
(30) For it is written: And there shall cleave nought of the devoted thing to thine hand, ibid. 18.
(31) Lit., ‘to the dust of its dust’. But not to the ashes of the holocaust.
(33) And is permitted for use.
(34) Hence the use of a forbidden thing for the purpose of the fulfillment of a precept cannot be deemed an enjoyment or use of that thing. Accordingly one may cover up the blood with the ashes of a condemned city.
(35) R.H. 28a.
(36) The palm branch which together with the citron, myrtle branches and willow branches had to be ‘taken’ on the First of Tabernacles. Cf. Lev. XXIII, 40.
(37) In the case of the lulub and the shofar, if they are not as large as the minimum size fixed, the former four handbreadths and the latter, a little more than a handgrasp, they are invalid.

Talmud - Mas. Chullin 89b
a minimum size is prescribed, and since it has been used for idolatry it is regarded as though the size were diminished,¹ whereas here the more broken up it is the better it is for covering up.²

CHAPTER VII

MISHNAH. [THE PROHIBITION OF] THE SCIA TIC NERVE³ IS IN FORCE BOTH WITHIN THE HOLY LAND AND OUTSIDE IT, BOTH DURING THE EXISTENCE OF THE TEMPLE AND AFTER IT, IN RESPECT OF BOTH UNCONSECRATED AND CONSECRATED [ANIMALS]. IT APPLI ES TO CATTLE AND TO WILD ANIMALS, TO THE RIGHT AND LEFT HIP, BUT IT DOES NOT APPLY TO BIRDS BECAUSE THEY HAVE NO SPOON-SHAPED HIP.⁴ IT ALSO APPLIES TO A FOETUS. R. JUDAH SAYS, IT DOES NOT APPLY TO A FOETUS, AND ITS⁵ FAT IS PERMITTED. BUTCHERS ARE NOT TRUSTWORTHY WITH REGARD TO THE [REMOVAL OF THE] SCIA TIC NERVE.⁶ SO R. MEIR. THE SAGES SAY, THEY ARE TRUSTWORTHY WITH REGARD TO IT AS WELL AS WITH REGARD TO THE [FORBIDDEN] FAT.

GEMARA. IN RESPECT OF . . . CONSECRATED [ANIMALS]. But is not this obvious? Surely because one consecrated the animal the prohibition of the nerve has not thereby vanished!⁷ And if you were to say that [our Tanna] is of the opinion that nerves impart a taste [to the meat], and [he teaches us] that the prohibition of a consecrated animal can be superimposed upon the prohibition of the nerve,⁸ then the Tanna should have said: 'The prohibition of [eating] consecrated meat applies to the nerve too!' — Rather we must say that he is of the opinion that nerves do not impart a taste, [and he thus teaches us]⁹ that in regard to [the sciatic nerve of] a consecrated [animal] there is only the prohibition of the nerve but not the prohibition of consecrated things.¹⁰ But does our Tanna hold that nerves do not impart a taste? Surely we have learnt: If a thigh was cooked together with the sciatic nerve it is forbidden if it imparts a taste¹¹ [into the thigh]! — Rather we must suppose that he is dealing with the young of consecrated animals.¹² And he is of the opinion that it [sc. the prohibition of the sciatic nerve] applies to a foetus, and also that the young of a consecrated animal is holy even when in its dam's womb; accordingly the prohibition of the nerve and the prohibition of consecrated things come into force simultaneously.¹³ But how can you suggest that the Mishnah is dealing with a foetus? Surely since in a subsequent clause it says, IT ALSO APPLIES TO A FOETUS, it is obvious that the first clause is not dealing with a foetus! — This is what he means: This¹⁴ is indeed a matter of dispute between R. Judah and the Rabbis. But how can you say that both [prohibitions] come into force simultaneously? Surely we have learnt:¹⁵ By reason of uncleanness contracted from the following sources the Nazirite must shave [his head]:¹⁶ a corpse, an olive's bulk of [the flesh of] a corpse etc. Now the question was asked: If he must shave [his head] on account of an olive's bulk of [the flesh of] a corpse, then surely he must shave [his head] for the whole corpse! And R. Johanan answered that it was necessary [to mention the corpse itself] only for the case of an abortion whose limbs were not yet knit together by nerves.¹⁷

---

¹ Lit., 'broken up' and reduced below the minimum; this in accordance with the Rabbinic dictum: Whatsoever is to be destroyed is deemed destroyed forthwith.
² And the use of the forbidden ashes for the fulfilment of a precept cannot be considered a use in accordance with Raba's dictum.
³ Gen XXXII, 33. In the whole of this chapter the sciatic nerve is often referred to as 'the nerve'.
⁴ The muscles upon the hip bone (or femur) of a bird lie flat and are not raised and convex like those of cattle. In cattle the entire hip is very much like the back of a spoon or like a club. This feature is expressly specified in the prohibition, וְלָבָבָה, the spoon of the thigh, i.e., 'the convex prominence of the thigh'. Gen. ibid.
⁵ The fat of the foetus; or, according to others, the fat surrounding the sciatic nerve.
⁶ For it entails hard and careful work, and it is doubtful whether the butcher would follow it up in all its ramifications;
consequently one may not rely upon him.

(7) The prohibition of the sciatic nerve attached to the animal the moment it was born.

(8) So that one who eats the sciatic nerve of a consecrated animal would incur stripes on two counts, first for eating the sciatic nerve which is expressly prohibited whether it is edible or not, and secondly for eating ‘flesh’ (for nerves are edible as flesh) of a consecrated animal.

(9) In stating that the law of the sciatic nerve applies to consecrated animals.

(10) For the nerve is inedible and is not accounted as flesh.

(11) i.e., if the thigh that was cooked was not sixty times greater than the forbidden nerve; for the Rabbis have estimated that if there were more than sixty parts of permitted matter as against one part prohibited, the latter cannot impart a flavour unto the former. From this Mishnah, however, it is apparent that nerves do impart a taste; and as it is (infra 96b) in the same chapter as our Mishnah it was taught presumably by the same Tanna.

(12) E.g. the young of a peace-offering which is consecrated the moment it was formed, even while in its dam's womb. At this same moment the prohibition of the sciatic nerve attaches to it.

(13) i.e., the moment the foetus was formed within the dam's womb.

(14) Whether the prohibition of the sciatic nerve applies to a foetus or not.

(15) Naz. 49b.

(16) If he was rendered unclean during the continuance of the Nazirite vow. Cf. Num. VI, 9ff.

(17) In which case the abortion, even though in the whole of it there is not an olive's bulk of flesh, would render the Nazirite unclean.

Talmud - Mas. Chullin 90a

Hence [it is possible for] the prohibition of consecrated things to come into force first! — Notwithstanding that the prohibition of consecrated things comes into force first, the prohibition of the nerve can be superimposed upon it, for its prohibition is binding even upon the sons of Noah. Whom did you hear maintain this view? R. Judah, is it not? But our Mishnah cannot be in agreement with R. Judah, for it reads IT APPLIES TO CATTLE AND TO WILD ANIMALS, TO THE RIGHT AND LEFT HIP! — This Tanna [of our Mishnah] agrees with him [R. Judah] on one point and disagrees on the other point. But perhaps you heard R. Judah apply this argument only to the case of an unclean animal since it is forbidden by a prohibition only; but have you heard him apply it also to consecrated things for which there is a penalty of Kareth? Rather it must be that we are dealing with the case of a firstling which is consecrated only [when it comes forth out of] the womb. Alternatively, you may say that the young of consecrated animals are themselves consecrated only when they come into being.

R. Hiyya b. Joseph said: They taught this only concerning consecrated animals that may be eaten, but with regard to consecrated animals that are not eaten the prohibition of the nerve does not apply. But R. Johanan said: The prohibition of the nerve applies both to consecrated animals that may be eaten and to those that are not eaten. Said R. Papa: There is really no dispute between them, for the one refers to the question of stripes whereas the other refers to the question of offering it. Others report R. Papa's statement thus: There is really no dispute between them, for the one refers to the removal thereof whereas the other refers to the offering up of it. R. Nahman b. Isaac said: They disagree about offering it up. For it was taught: And the Priest shall burn the whole upon the altar, this includes bones, nerves, horns and hoofs. I might think that [it is so] even if they were severed, the text therefore states: And thou shalt offer thy burnt-offerings, the flesh and the blood. But since it is written ‘the flesh and the blood’, I might think that one must first cut away the nerves and bones and then offer the flesh upon the altar, it is therefore written: ‘And the priest shall burn the whole upon the altar’. How [are these verses to be reconciled]? If they are still attached [to the limb], they may be offered up; if they are severed, even if they are already on the top of the altar, they must come down.

Now which Tanna have you heard say that if they were severed [and offered up] they must come down? It is Rabbi. For it has been taught: ‘And the priest shall burn the whole’, this includes bones, nerves, horns and hoofs, even if they are severed. And how do I explain the verse: ‘And thou shalt offer thy burnt-offerings, the flesh and the blood’? With reference to those portions which have jumped off [the altar]; thus, only half-burnt flesh you may replace [if it had jumped off the altar], but you may not replace half-burnt nerves and bones. Rabbi says: One verse reads: ‘And the priest shall burn the whole’, which includes [everything], whilst another verse reads: ‘And thou shalt offer thy burnt-offerings, the flesh and the blood’, which excludes [everything else]. How are the verses to be reconciled? Thus if they are still attached [to the limb], they may be offered up; if they are severed, even if they are on the top of the altar, they must come down. And the Rabbis? — They maintain that when they are still attached [to the limb] no verse is necessary to include them, for they are on the same footing as the head of a burnt-offering; consequently the verse is only necessary to include them when severed. And Rabbi? — [He says,] as regards the permitted parts which are still attached [to the limb, I admit that]

---

(1) For as soon as the embryo is formed it is consecrated by reason of the consecration of its dam whereas the prohibition of the sciatic nerve only comes into force later when the network of nerves is firmly knit together.

(2) Where the later prohibition is comprehensive in that it is binding upon a large class of people it can be superimposed upon an existing prohibition which is less comprehensive in its application.

(3) That the prohibition against eating the sciatic nerve is binding upon the sons of Noah. (V. infra 100b).

(4) Whereas R. Judah holds that only the nerve of one thigh (the right) is prohibited.

(5) V. n. 5. Inasmuch as the existing prohibition (sc. that of an unclean animal) is only punishable by stripes a further prohibition (sc. that of the sciatic nerve) can be superimposed.

(6) In certain circumstances e.g. if consecrated meat is eaten in a state of uncleanness. The penalty therefore being so severe, no further prohibitions can be superimposed.

(7) The prohibition of the sciatic nerve applies only to a firstling since this prohibition and the prohibition of consecrated things attach simultaneously, but it does not apply to other consecrated animals for they are consecrated even while a foetus in the womb, so that the prohibition of the sciatic nerve cannot be superimposed later.

(8) I.e., as soon as they are born, and not as was assumed previously in the embryonic state. The prohibition of the sciatic nerve, however, came into force earlier when it was a foetus in the womb.

(9) E.g., peace-offerings, and sin-offerings.

(10) I.e., burnt-offerings.

(11) R. Johanan meant that the prohibition applies in that he who eats it incurs stripes.

(12) R. Hyya b. Joseph meant that the prohibition does not apply and it may be offered up upon the altar. R. Gershom interprets just the reverse: R. Hyya b. Joseph teaches that he that eats it does not suffer stripes, and R. Johanan teaches that it may not be offered upon the altar.

(13) According to R. Hyya b. Joseph the prohibition does not apply, that is, it need not be removed from the thigh before offering up the animal upon the altar.

(14) According to R. Johanan the prohibition applies, i.e., if the nerve was extracted it may not be offered separately upon the altar.

(15) Even together with the thigh. According to R. Hyya b. Joseph this may be done, and according to R. Johanan it may not. In many MS.S. the reading in the text is: ‘They disagree about the removal of it’; i.e., according to R. Hyya b. Joseph it need not be removed, according to R. Johanan it must. It seems that before Rashi both texts were in the Gemara. V. D.S. a.l.

(17) I.e., even if the nerves and bones were cut away from the flesh they must be offered separately upon the altar.

(18) Deut. XII, 27. The flesh and blood only shall be offered up but not nerves and bones.

(19) Sc. the nerves and bones.

(20) They may not be offered separately, and if offered up they must be taken down from the altar.

(21) The head of a burnt-offering had to be offered up whole upon the altar although it contains many bones; likewise every complete limb may be offered although it contains bones and nerves.

---

Talmud - Mas. Chullin 90b
no verse is necessary to include them, but a verse is necessary to include the [forbidden] sciatic nerve when still attached [to the thigh]. And the Rabbis? — [They say,] It is written: ‘From the liquor of Israel,’ that is, from that which is permitted to Israel. And Rabbi? — [He says,] It is on the same footing as the [forbidden] fat and blood. And the Rabbis? — [They say,] These are on a different footing, since with regard to these there is an express command.

R. Huna said: The sciatic nerve of a burnt-offering must be cut away [and thrown] on to the ash-heap. Said to him R. Hisda: O master of this [teaching]! Is it written: ‘Therefore the altar shall not consume’? It is written: Therefore the children of Israel do not eat. And R. Huna? — [He maintains,] It is written: ‘From the liquor of Israel’, that is, from that which is permitted to Israel.

An objection was raised from the following: The sciatic nerve of a peace-offering must be swept into the channel, that of a burnt-offering must be offered up. Presumably this means, it must be offered up and burnt! — No, it means, it must be offered up and then cut away. But if he must cut it away why is it necessary to offer it up? Because it is written: Present it now unto thy governor. There was taught a Baraitha which supports R. Huna, viz., The sciatic nerve of a peace-offering must be swept into the channel, and that of a burnt-offering must be cut away [and thrown] on to the ash-heap.

We have learnt there: ‘There was an ash-heap in the middle of the altar and sometimes there were on it about three hundred kor [of ashes]’. Said Raba: It is an exaggeration. ‘They gave [the lamb which was to be] the Daily Offering to drink from a cup of gold’. Said Raba: It is an exaggeration. R. Ammi said: The Torah, the prophets, and the Sages sometimes spoke in exaggerated terms. The Sages spoke in exaggerated terms as in the cases we have just quoted. The Torah spoke in exaggerated terms as in the verse: The cities are great and fortified up to heaven. The prophets spoke in exaggerated terms as in the verse: So that the earth rent with the sound of them.

R. Isaac b. Nahmani said in the name of Samuel: In three places the Sages spoke in exaggerated terms, namely, about the ash-heap, the vine, and the curtain. About the ash-heap as we have quoted above. About the vine, we have learnt: A golden vine stood at the entrance to the Temple trained over posts, and whosoever presented a leaf or a berry or a cluster would bring it and hang it thereon. R. Eleazar b. R. Zadok said: It once happened that three hundred priests were appointed to clear it. About the curtain we have learnt: R. Simeon b. Gamaliel said in the name of R. Simeon the Deputy [High-priest]: The curtain was a handbreadth thick and was woven on seventy-two strands, and each strand consisted of twenty-four threads; ‘its length was forty cubits and its breadth twenty cubits, and was made up out of eighty-two myriads [of threads]. They used to make two every year; and three hundred priests were required to immerse it.

TO THE RIGHT AND LEFT HIP. Our Mishnah does not agree with R. Judah, for it was taught: R. Judah says: It only applies to one [hip], and reason decides in favour of the right [hip]. It was asked: Was R. Judah certain about it and by ‘reason’ he meant the reasoned interpretation of the Torah, or was he in doubt about it and by ‘reason’ he meant the probable meaning? — Come and hear: It was taught: The bones and nerves [of the Paschal lamb] and also [the flesh] that was left over must be burnt on the sixteenth day. And we argued upon it as follows: What nerves are meant? If you say, the nerves in the flesh, then why does he not eat them? And if they happened to be left over, then they came under the heading of [flesh] ‘that was left over’? And if you say, the nerves of the throat, but surely since they are not like flesh he may throw them away. And R. Hisda suggested: It can only refer to the sciatic nerve, and the Tanna adopts the view of R. Judah who said that it only applies to the one hip. Now if you say that he was in doubt about it, it is well; but if you say that he was certain about it, then he should eat the permitted one and throw away the forbidden one! — R. Ika b. Hanina said: Indeed I maintain that he was certain about it, but here we must suppose that they were first distinguished but subsequently were mixed up.\

(1) Ezek. XLV. 15; with reference to the drink-offering. The inference is that whatsoever is forbidden to Israel may not be offered upon the altar, hence under no circumstances can the forbidden sciatic nerve be offered upon the altar.

(2) Which though forbidden to an Israelite are offered upon the altar; so it is, too, with the forbidden nerve.

(3) For the essential part of the sacrifice is the offering of the fat and the blood upon the altar.

(4) Which was in the middle of the altar on to which the priest used to pile up the ashes of the burned sacrifices.

(5) Gen. XXXII, 33.

(6) It is obvious that the Tanna is referring to the nerve of such consecrated meat as was eaten within the Temple precincts; the peace-offering, however, could be eaten anywhere within the city of Jerusalem. Accordingly Rashi prefers to strike out, ‘peace-offering’ and substitute ‘sin-offering or guilt-offering’, for the meat of these could only be eaten by the priests within the Sanctuary. If ‘peace-offering’ is to be retained, Rashi and Tosaf. offer the suggestion that it refers to the eating by the priests either of their own peace-offerings or of the priestly dues of the ‘breast and thigh’ portions, and these the priests usually ate within the Sanctuary. MS.M. reads: ‘Peace-offering or sin-offering or guilt-offering’.

(7) The water-channel which ran through the Temple courtyard; v. Mid. III, 2.

(8) Mal. I, 8. An expression generally used whenever it is considered improper to offer any particular thing upon the altar. A limb which has been cut up for the removal of the sciatic nerve does not present a fine appearance, and it is therefore suggested that the limb must first be brought up whole upon the altar and while on the altar the nerve must be removed from it.

(9) Tam. II, 2, 28b.

(10) A measure of capacity equal to 30 se'ah.

(11) Tam. III, 4, 30a.

(13) I Kings I, 40.

(14) Mid. III, 8; 36a.

(15) I.e., gold in any of these shapes.

(16) Of the enormous amount of gold that had accumulated on the vine.

(17) Shek. VIII, 5; Tam. 29a and b.

(18) Var. lec. ‘it was made by eighty-two maidens’; or ‘the cost of it was eighty-two myriads of denars’.

(19) If it became unclean. The number three hundred, here as well as in the previous cases, is clearly an exaggeration.

(20) Tosef. Hul. VII; Pes. 83b.

(21) Of the month of Nisan; i.e., it must be burnt after the Festival and not on the Festival (cf. Shab. 24b).

(22) Which are tender like flesh.

(23) And it is not necessary to burn them.

(24) As to which hip contains the forbidden sciatic nerve.

(25) That both must be left over and both burnt because of the doubt, for one (sc. the permitted one) must certainly be burnt as nothar i.e., consecrated flesh kept longer than the period prescribed for its consumption.

(26) The sciatic nerves of the right and left hips.

(27) So that the doubt arose through their having been mixed up but not because R. Judah was in doubt which one was forbidden and which permitted.

Talmud - Mas. Chullin 91a

R. Ashi said: It can only refer to the fat thereof.¹ For it was taught: The fat thereof is permitted, but Israel being a holy people have treated it as forbidden.² Rabina said: It can only be explained according to the statement of Rab Judah in the name of Samuel. For Rab Judah said in the name of Samuel: It³ consists of two nerves, the inner, next the bone is forbidden and one is liable⁴ on account of it; the outer next to the flesh is forbidden but one is not liable on account of it.⁵

Come and hear: If a person ate an olive's bulk [of the sciatic nerve] of this [thigh] and another olive's bulk [of the sciatic nerve] of the other [thigh],⁶ he has incurred eighty stripes. R. Judah says: He has only incurred forty stripes. Now if you say that he was certain about it, then it is well;⁷ but if you say that he was in doubt about it, then the warning [with regard to each] was dubious, and we have heard that according to R. Judah a dubious warning is no warning. For it was taught: If he8 struck one and then struck the other, or if he cursed one and then cursed the other, or if he struck them both simultaneously, or if he cursed them both simultaneously, he is liable [to the death penalty]. R. Judah says: If simultaneously he is liable; if one after the other, he is not liable!9 — This Tanna [who expressed the view of R. Judah] is in agreement with that other Tanna who declares, also in the name of R. Judah, that a dubious warning is a warning. For it was taught: And ye shall let nothing of it remain until the morning; [and that which remaineth of it until the morning ye shall burn with fire].10 Scripture here came and provided a positive precept as a remedy for the [disregarded] prohibition to indicate that the prohibition is not punishable by stripes: so R. Judah.11 R. Jacob says: This is not the reason for it, but because it is a prohibition which involves no action [in the contravention thereof], and any prohibition which involves no action [in the contravention thereof] is not punishable by stripes.

Come and hear! If a person ate two [sciatic] nerves from two thighs of two animals, he has incurred eighty stripes. R. Judah says: He has only incurred forty stripes. Now since it says: ‘From two thighs of two animals’ it is obvious that the prohibited one of each is intended;12 and the case was necessary to be stated in order to set forth R. Judah's view;13 it follows therefore that he was certain about it.14 This stands proved. But if he [R. Judah] was certain about it why does he incur forty stripes and no more? Surely he should incur eighty! — We must suppose here that [in one alone] there was not as much as an olive's bulk. As it has been taught: If a person ate it and [the whole of] it was not as much as an olive's bulk, he is nevertheless liable [to stripes]. R. Judah says, [He is not liable] unless there is as much as an olive's bulk of it.

And what is the reason?15 — Raba said: The verse says: The thigh,16 this implies the right thigh. And the Rabbis? — [They would say.] That [verse indicates that the prohibited nerve] is the one that is spread over the whole of the thigh, [namely, the inner one] but not the outer one.17 R. Joshua b. Levi said. [The reason18 is this.] The verse says. As he wrestled with him,19 [which suggests] as when a person locks another [in his arms] and his [right] hand reaches the hollow of that other's right thigh.20

R. Samuel b. Nahmani said: He appeared to him21 as a heathen, and the Master has said: If an Israelite is joined by a heathen on the way he should let him walk on his right.22 R. Samuel b. Aha said in the name of Raba b. Ulla in the presence of R. Papa: He appeared to him as one of the wise, and the Master has said: Whosoever walks at the right hand of his teacher is uncultured.23 And the Rabbis? [They say,] He [the angel] came from behind and dislocated both [thighs]. And how do these Rabbis interpret the verse: ‘As he wrestled with him’? — They interpret it as in the other statement of R. Joshua b. Levi. For R. Joshua b. Levi said, [This verse] teaches that they threw up the dust of their feet to the Throne of Glory, for it is written here, ‘As he wrestled [behe'abko] with him’ and it is written there. And, the clouds are the dust ['abak] of his feet.24

R. Joshua b. Levi also said: Why is it [the sciatic nerve] called gid ha-nasheh?25 Because it slipped away [nashah] from its place and rose up; for so it is said: Their strength hath slipped away, they are become as women.26

R. Jose b. R. Hanina said: What is the meaning of the verse: The Lord sent a word unto Jacob and it hath lighted upon Israel?27 ‘The Lord sent a word unto Jacob’, that is the [injury to his] sciatic nerve; ‘and it hath lighted upon Israel’, for the prohibition thereof has spread throughout Israel.

R. Jose b. R. Hanina also said: What is the meaning of the verse: And slaughter the animals and prepare the meat?28 ‘And slaughter the animals’, that is, uncover for them the place that has been slaughtered;29 ‘and prepare the meat’, that is, remove the sciatic nerve in their presence: this is in accordance with the view that the sciatic nerve was prohibited to the sons of Noah.

And Jacob was left alone. Said R. Eleazar: He remained behind for the sake of some small jars. Hence [it is learnt] that to the righteous their money is dearer than their body; and why is this? Because they do not stretch out their hands to robbery.

And there wrestled a man with him until the breaking of the day. Said R. Isaac: Hence [it is learnt] that a scholar should not go out alone at night. Abba b. Kahana said, [You can derive it] from the verse,

(1) i.e., the fat around the sciatic nerve. In the Baraitha the term ‘nerves’ means this fat.
(2) Consequently it is left over from the Paschal lamb, but since by the law of the Torah it may be eaten it must therefore be burnt as nothar.
(3) Sc. the sciatic nerve.
(4) To stripes.
(5) The outer one therefore must be left over; yet it must also be burnt as nothar, since according to Biblical Law it is permitted.
(6) i.e., he was warned against eating the nerve of the right thigh and was also separately warned against eating the nerve of the left thigh of the same animal (v. supra 82b).
(7) He has incurred stripes for eating the nerve of the right thigh and the warning with regard to it was a warning against a certain prohibition.
(8) One in doubt as to which of two men is his father struck first one and then the other. V. supra 82b and notes thereon, p. 461.
(9) For the warning with regard to each one when taken separately is a dubious warning, which is no warning, hence he is not liable.
(10) Ex. XII. 10. V. supra p. 462.
(11) It is evident from this that R. Judah is of the opinion that a dubious warning — as here, for the offender can always render the warning futile by replying, ‘I have yet time to eat’ — is a proper warning, for the only reason here why the punishment of stripes is not inflicted is that the remedial measure provided by the Torah weakens the force of the prohibition.
(12) i.e., the right thigh of each animal, for otherwise it would have been sufficient to speak of the two thighs of the one animal.
(13) That even though both are prohibited, for each is the nerve of the right thigh, he has incurred only forty stripes and no more. V. infra.
(14) For if R. Judah were in doubt as to which was the prohibited thigh the punishment of stripes could not be inflicted at all.
(15) For R. Judah's view that only that of the right thigh is prohibited.
(16) Gen. XXXII, 33.
(17) V. supra, the statement of Rab Judah in the name of Samuel, p. 000.
(18) V. p. 509, n. 6.
(20) So it was with Jacob, and it was his right thigh only that was injured.
(21) The angel appeared to Jacob.
(22) A.Z. 25b. The Israelite should have his right hand nearest to the heathen so as to protect himself the more easily against a sudden attack from the heathen. So did Jacob act too; and the angel injured that thigh of Jacob which was nearest to him, i.e., the right thigh.
(23) Jacob regarding the angel as a scholar took his place at the left hand of the other and so was injured in his right thigh, the side nearest to the angel.
(24) Nahum I, 3.
(25) וַיְכַשְּׁל הָעִלָּא (5)
(26) Jer. LI, 30. The verb used is וַיִּשְׁלַח, to slip away, to fail.
(27) Isa. IX, 7.
(28) Gen. XLIII. 16.
(29) To convince the sons of Jacob that the slaughtering was according to ritual.
(30) Ibid. XXXII. 25.
(31) He had already taken across that which he had (ibid. 24), but he must have returned for some small vessels.
(32) And whatever they acquire by their toil and honest dealing is therefore very dear to them.
(33) Ibid. XXXII. 25.
(34) For Jacob was in danger only during the night, but with the break of day the danger was past.

Talmud - Mas. Chullin 91b

Behold he winnoweth barley tonight in the threshing floor.¹ R. Abbahu said, [You can derive it] from the verse: And Abraham rose early in the morning, and saddled his ass.² The Rabbis say, [You can derive it] from the verse: Go now, see whether it is well with thy brethren, and well with the flock.³ Rab says, [You can derive it] from the verse: And the sun rose upon him.⁴

R. Akiba said: I once asked R. Gamaliel and R. Joshua in the meatmarket of Emmaus where they had gone to buy a beast for the wedding feast of R. Gamaliel's son: It is written: And the sun rose upon him. Did the sun rise upon him only? Did it not rise upon the whole world? R. Isaac said: It means that the sun which had set for his sake now rose for him. For it is written: And Jacob went out from Beer-Sheba, and went toward Haran,⁵ And it is further written: And he lighted upon the place.⁶ When he reached Haran he said [to himself], ‘Shall I have passed through the place where my fathers prayed and not have prayed too?’ He immediately resolved to return, but no sooner had he thought of this than the earth contracted and he immediately lighted upon the place. After he prayed he wished to return [to where he was], but the Holy One, blessed be He said: ‘This righteous man has come to my habitation; shall he depart without a night's rest?’ Thereupon the sun set.

It is written: And he took of the stones of the place;⁶ but it is also written: And he took the stone!⁷ — R. Isaac said: This tells us that all the stones gathered themselves together into one place and each one said: ‘Upon me shall this righteous man rest his head’. Thereupon all [the stones], a Tanna taught, were merged into one.

And he dreamed, and behold a ladder set up on the earth.⁸ A Tanna taught: What was the width of the ladder? Eight thousand parasangs. For it is written: And behold the angels of God ascending and descending on it.⁸ At least two were ascending and two descending, and when they met each other [on the ladder] there were four; and of an angel it is written: His body was like the Tarshish,⁹ and we have a tradition that the Tarshish is two thousand parasangs long.¹⁰ A Tanna taught: They ascended to look at the image above and descended to look at the image below. They wished to hurt him, when Behold, the Lord stood beside him.¹² R. Simeon b. Lakish said: Were it not expressly stated in the Scripture, we would not dare to say it. [God is made to appear] like a man who is fanning his son.¹³

The land whereon thou liest, [to thee will I give it, and to thy seed].¹² What is the greatness of this?¹⁴ — Said R. Isaac: This teaches us that the Holy One, blessed be He, rolled up the whole of the land of Israel and put it under our father Jacob, [to indicate to him] that it would be very easily conquered by his descendants.¹⁵

And he said: Let me go, for the day breaketh.¹⁶ [Jacob] said to him, ‘Are you a thief or a rogue that you are afraid of the morning?’ He replied: ‘I am an angel, and from the day that I was created my time to sing praises [to the Lord] had not come until now’. This¹⁸ supports the statement of R. Hananel in the name of Rab. For R. Hananel said in the name of Rab: Three divisions of ministering angels sing praises [to the Lord] daily; one proclaims: Holy, the other proclaims: Holy, and the third proclaims: Holy is the Lord of hosts.¹⁹ An objection was raised: Israel are dearer to the Holy One, blessed be He, than the ministering angels, for Israel sing praises to the Lord every hour, whereas the ministering angels sing praises but once a day. (Others say: Once a week; and others say: Once a month; and others say: Once a year; and others say: Once in seven years; and others say: Once in a jubilee; and others say: Once in eternity.) And whereas Israel mention the name of God after two words, as it is said: Hear, Israel, the Lord etc., the ministering angels only mention the name of God after three words, as it is written: Holy, holy, holy, the Lord of hosts. Moreover, the ministering angels do not begin to sing praises in heaven until Israel have sung below on earth, for it is said: When the morning stars sang together, then all the sons of God shouted for joy! — It must be this: One [division of angels] says: Holy; the other says: Holy, holy; and the third says: Holy, holy, holy, the Lord of hosts. But is there not the praise of ‘Blessed’?

(1) Ruth III, 2. Naomi was certain that Boaz would not leave the threshing floor that night, for since he was working late into the night he would not go out alone at night on his homeward journey.
(2) Gen. XXII, 3. Abraham did not set out at night even though in this case he was accompanied by Isaac and two young men.
(3) Ibid. XXXVII, 14. ‘And see’, i.e., at a time when one can see, namely, during the day.
(4) Ibid. XXXII, 32. Only then did Jacob go on his way but not earlier.
(5) Gen. XXVIII, 10.
(6) Ibid. 11.
(7) Ibid. 18. The contradiction is that one verse speaks of ‘stones’ in the plural, whereas the other speaks of ‘the stone’.
(8) Ibid. 12.
(9) Dan. X, 6. מַעֲרָבִים usually translated ‘beryl’ or some other precious stone. According to Rabbinic tradition it is the name of a sea which extends for two thousand parasangs (Persian miles). V. Jonah I, 3. Rashi (on Dan. ibid.) identifies it with the sea of Africa; probably the Mediterranean Sea.
(10) So that if four angels were to be at the same time on one rung of the ladder it would have to be eight thousand parasangs wide.
(11) V. Ezek. I, 10. Around the Throne of Glory was the likeness of four living creatures, one being the likeness of a man, and according to Rabbinic tradition the likeness of man was the image of Jacob.
(12) Gen. XXXII, 27.
(13) To protect him from the heat of the sun; so God stood over Jacob to protect him from the envy of the angels.
(14) Of the promise to give Jacob the land on which he lay, which would be four cubits at most!
(15) As the four cubits of ground upon which he lay.
(17) קְנָבֵי אָדָם, a kidnapper (Rashi); a gambler (Tosaf.).
(18) That angels sing praises, or that they are limited to an allotted time for song (Tosaf.).
(19) Isa. VI, 3.
(20) Deut. VI, 4.
(21) Job XXXVIII, 7. The morning stars are Israel who are likened to the stars, and the sons of God are the angels. The objection therefore is: How then can it be said above that a division of ministering angels sing: Holy (is) the Lord of hosts, thus mentioning the name of God after one word?
(22) Blessed-be the-glory-of the-Lord Ezek. III, 12. In this song of praise by the angels the name of God is mentioned after two words.
— ‘Blessed’ is recited by the Ophanim.¹ Or you may say: Since permission has once been granted it is granted.²

Yea, he strove with an angel, and prevailed; he wept, and made supplication unto him.³ I know not, who prevailed over whom. But when it says. For thou hast striven with God and with men and hast prevailed,⁴ I know that Jacob became master over the angel. He wept and made supplication unto him!⁵ I know not who wept unto whom. But when it says: And he said: Let me go,⁶ I know that the angel wept unto Jacob. ‘For thou hast striven with God and with men’: Said Rabbah: He intimated to him that two princes were destined to come from him: the Exilarch in Babylon and the Prince in the Land of Israel;⁷ this was also an intimation to him of the exile.

And in the vine were three branches.⁸ R. Hiyya b. Abba said in the name of Rab: These are the three men of excellence that come forth in Israel in every generation; sometimes two are here [in Babylon] and one is in the land of Israel, and sometimes two are in the land of Israel and one is here. And the Rabbis set their eyes upon Rabbana ‘Ukba and Rabbana Nehemiah, the sons of Rab's daughter. Raba said: These are the three princes⁹ of the nations who plead in Israel's favour in every generation.

It was taught: R. Eliezer says: The ‘vine’ is the world, the ‘three branches’ are [the patriarchs] Abraham, Isaac and Jacob; ‘and as it was budding its blossoms shot forth’,¹⁰ these are the patriarchs; ‘and as it was budding its blossoms shot forth ripe grapes’,¹⁰ these are the tribes. Thereupon R. Joshua said to him: Is a man shown [in a dream] what has happened? Surely he is only shown what is to happen! Therefore, I say: The ‘vine’ is the Torah, the ‘three branches’ are Moses, Aaron and Miriam; ‘and as it was budding its blossoms shot forth’, these are [the members of] the Sanhedrin;¹¹ ‘and the clusters thereof brought forth ripe grapes’, are the righteous people of every generation. R. Gamaliel said: We still stand in need of the Modiite, for he explains the verse as referring to one place.¹² For R. Eleazar the Modiite¹³ says. The ‘vine’ is Jerusalem, the ‘three branches’ are the Temple, the King and the High priest; ‘and as it was budding its blossoms shot forth’, these are the young priests; ‘and the clusters thereof brought forth ripe grapes’, these are the drink-offerings. R. Joshua b. Levi interprets it in regard to the gifts [bestowed by God upon Israel]. For R. Joshua b. Levi said: The ‘vine’ is the Torah, the ‘three branches’ are the well, the pillar of smoke, and the manna;¹⁴ ‘and as it was budding its blossoms shot forth’, these are the first fruits;¹⁵ ‘and the clusters thereof brought forth ripe grapes’, these are the drink-offerings.

R. Jeremiah b. Abba said: The ‘vine’ is Israel, for so it is written: Thou didst pluck up a vine out of Egypt.¹⁶ The ‘three branches’ are the three Festivals on which Israel go up [to the Temple] every year. ‘And as it was budding’: the time is come for Israel to be fruitful and to multiply, for so it is written: And the children of Israel were fruitful, and increased abundantly.¹⁷ ‘Its blossoms shot forth’: the time is come for Israel to be redeemed. for so it is written: And their lifeblood is dashed against My garments, and I have stained all My raiment.¹⁸ ‘And the clusters thereof brought forth ripe grapes’: the time is come for Egypt to drink the cup of staggering. And this is in accordance with what Raba had said: Why are three cups mentioned in connection with Egypt?¹⁹ One [refers to the cup] which she drank in the days of Moses; the other to that which she drank in the days of Pharaoh-Necho;²⁰ and the third to that which she is destined to drink together with all the nations. R. Abba said to R. Jeremiah b. Abba: When Rab expounded [this verse] in an Aggadic lecture he expounded it as you have done.

R. Simeon b. Lakish said: This people [Israel] is like unto a vine: its branches are the aristocracy, its clusters the scholars, its leaves the common people, its twigs those in Israel that are void of learning. This is what was meant when word was sent from there [Palestine]. ‘Let the clusters pray for the leaves, for were it not for the leaves the clusters could not exist’.21

So I bought her [wa-ekreha] to me for fifteen pieces of silver [and a homer of barley, and a half-homer of barley].22 Said R. Johanan in the name of R. Simeon b. Jehozadak: The word ‘Kirah’23 must mean ‘buying’,24 for so it is written: In my grave which I bought [karithi] for me.25 ‘For fifteen’: that is the fifteenth day of Nisan when Israel was redeemed out of Egypt. ‘Pieces of silver’: these are the righteous, for so it is written: He has taken the bag of silver with him.26 ‘And a homer of barley and a half-homer of barley;’27 these are the forty-five righteous men on account of whom the world continues to exist. But I know not whether thirty of them are here [in Babylon] and fifteen in the land of Israel, or thirty in the land of Israel and fifteen here [in Babylon]; but when the verse says. And I took the thirty pieces of silver and cast them into the treasury, in the house of the Lord,28 I know that thirty [righteous men] are in the land of Israel and fifteen here. Said Abaye: Most of them are to be found in the synagogue under the side chamber.29 And I said to them: If ye think good, give me my hire; and if not, forbear. So they weighed out for my hire thirty pieces of silver.30 Said Rab Judah: These are the thirty righteous men among the nations of the world31 by whose virtue the nations of the world continue to exist. Ulla said: These are the thirty commandments32 which the sons of Noah took upon themselves but they observe three of them, namely,

(1) Not by the ministering angels but by the Ophanim, a higher rank of angels forming part of the Throne of Glory; cf. Ezek. I.
(2) I.e., once they have mentioned the name of God after three words they may thereafter mention it as often as it occurs, even when it occurs after two words or even after one word.
(3) Hosea XII, 5.
(4) Gen. XXXII, 29.
(5) Hosea XII, 5.
(6) Gen. XXXII, 27.
(7) The heads of Jewry in Babylon and Palestine, the latter being designated as ‘Gods’ for they were ordained as judges and leaders, the former as men.
(8) Ibid. XL, 10.
(9) Angels (Rashi).
(10) Gen XL, 10.
(11) The supreme council of Israel.
(12) I.e., to the various institutions in Jerusalem.
(13) Of Modiim, near Jerusalem, the ancient home of the Maccabean family.
(14) These gifts of water (cf. Num. XXI, 16ff), protection by clouds, and food were bestowed by God upon Israel during their wanderings in the wilderness because of the merits of Miriam, Aaron and Moses respectively.
(15) The reference is to the gift of a fertile land which yielded abundant fruits from which the first ripe fruits were offered.
(16) Ps. LXXX, 9.
(17) Ex. I, 7.
(18) Isa. LXIII, 3. The word נַעֲרָה, ‘its blossom’ is interpreted as נַעֲרָה, ‘their strength, lifeblood’.
(19) The word cup occurs three times in the one verse: Gen. XL, 11. For the cup as a symbol of calamity, cf. Isa. LI, 17: The cup of staggering.
(20) When Egypt was defeated by the Babylonians, cf. Jer. XLVI, 2, 13.
(21) Every class is essential to the well-being of the community.
(22) Hos. III. 2. The entire verse is here homiletically expounded, phrase by phrase. בֶּרֶה הַמִּיתָרָה from the root בַּרֵא, to buy.
(23) ברֵא the noun formed from the above root.
(24) Lit., ‘selling, sale’; here it means a transaction by buying and selling.
(25) Gen. L, 5: ברֵא also from the root ברֵא.
(26) Prov. VII, 20. V. Sanh. 96b where this verse is interpreted as referring to the righteous in Israel.
(27) A homer (in Talmud Kor) consisted of thirty se’ah; so that the verse speaks of thirty units (se’ah) plus fifteen units.
Zech. XI, 13. Thus the thirty righteous are always to be found in the house of the Lord, sc. Palestine.

I.e., most of the righteous men in Palestine. The reference is unknown.

[MS.M. omits ‘among the nations of the world’.]

[These are comprised in the seven Noahide precepts. For reference v. Ronsberg Glosses.]

Talmud - Mas. Chullin 92b

(i) they do not draw up a kethubah document for males, (ii) they do not weigh flesh of the dead in the market, and (iii) they respect the Torah.

IT DOES NOT APPLY TO BIRDS. [BECAUSE THEY HAVE NO SPOON-SHAPED HIP]. But we see that they have it? — They have it indeed, but it is not convex. R. Jeremiah raised the question. What if a bird happened to have it convex, or if an animal happened to have it [flat and] not convex? Do we consider the particular creature by itself, or do we consider the class to which it belongs? — It is undecided.

IT ALSO APPLIES TO A FOETUS. Samuel said: The ruling: ITS FAT IS PERMITTED, is agreed to by all. What fat? Should you say, that of a foetus, but this is a matter of dispute. For it has been taught: If it applies to a foetus, and its fat is forbidden: so R. Meir. R. Judah says: It does not apply to a foetus, and its fat is permitted. And R. Eleazar said in the name of R. Oshaia: They differ in the case of a nine months’ fetus which was [extracted] alive [from its dam's womb]; R. Meir therefore ruling according to his principle and R. Judah according to his. And should you say, the fat of the nerve, but there too there is a dispute about it. For it has been taught: As to the sciatic nerve, one must follow it up as far as it goes and must cut away the fat thereof at its source; so R. Meir. R. Judah says: One merely cuts it away from off the cap of the bone! — In truth, it refers to the fat of the nerve; Samuel however agrees that according to R. Meir it is forbidden by Rabbinic decree. For it has been taught: Its fat is permitted, but Israel being a holy people have regarded it as forbidden. And presumably the author [of this Baraita] is R. Meir who maintains that by the law of the Torah it is permitted but is forbidden by Rabbinic decree! But whence this? Perhaps it is R. Judah, but according to R. Meir it is forbidden even by the law of the Torah! — You cannot think of this; for it has been taught: As to the sciatic nerve, one must follow it up as far as it goes, and its fat is permitted. Now whom have you heard say that it is necessary to ‘follow it up?’ R. Meir; and here it expressly says, its fat is permitted.

R. Isaac b. Samuel b. Martha said in the name of Rab: The Torah forbade only the branch nerves of it. Ulla said, [Although] it is like wood the Torah makes one liable for it. Abaye said: The view of Ulla is the more probable, for R. Shesheth said in the name of R. Assi. The veins in fat are forbidden but one is not liable [to the penalty of Kareth] on account of them. It is evident therefore that the Divine Law forbade the fat but not the veins, likewise the Divine Law forbade the nerve but not the branch nerves.

[To turn to] the main text. ‘R. Shesheth said in the name of R. Assi: The veins in fat are forbidden but one is not liable on account of them’. The veins in the kidney are forbidden but one is not liable on account of them. As to the white substance of the kidney there is a difference of opinion between Rabbi and R. Hyya, one forbids it and the other permits it. Rabbah used to scrape it all away. R. Johanan also used to scrape it all away. R. Assi used to cut away only the surface thereof. Abaye said: The view of R. Assi is the more probable, for R. Abba said in the name of Rab Judah on the authority of Samuel,
XI, n. 1.
(2) Although they eat human flesh they do not sell it openly in the market. Rashi also suggests: They do not sell the flesh of an animal that had not been slain but had died a natural death.
(3) The muscles around the upper part of the hip bone of a bird are flat and not rounded and raised like a ball. V. supra p. 500, n. 2.
(4) V. supra 74b; Tosef. Hul. VII.
(5) Sc. the prohibition of the sciatic nerve.
(6) Sc. of a foetus.
(7) R. Meir holds that a nine months’ foetus which was extracted alive out of the womb is not rendered permitted by the slaughtering of its dam but must be slaughtered itself and is in every respect like an ordinary animal, hence its fat is forbidden and also the sciatic nerve.
(8) R. Judah maintains that this foetus is permitted by the slaughtering of its dam, and the whole of it may be eaten, the fat as well as the sciatic nerve.
(9) Wherever the fat is found, in all its ramifications.
(10) I.e., only that fat which is in close proximity to the nerve must be cut away, and this only for appearance sake, since strictly the whole of the fat is permitted.
(11) Pes. 83b and supra 91a.
(12) Accordingly R. Meir's view is that strictly by the law of the Torah it is permitted, but it is only forbidden by Rabbinic decree. This then was the purport of Samuel's teaching.
(13) Only the nerves that branch off the main sciatic nerve are prohibited, for these are tender and could impart a flavour into the substance that is cooked with it, but the actual sciatic nerve is hard like wood and is not forbidden.
(14) But the branch nerves are permitted. As to whether or not they are prohibited Rabbinically v. Tosaf. s.v. קתרין.
(15) Which is in the middle of the kidney but goes deep into the actual kidney.
(16) Even that which is deep in the kidney.
(17) I.e., only that portion which is in the middle of the kidney but not that which is covered up by the kidney.

Talmud - Mas. Chullin 93a

Fat that is covered with flesh is permitted. It is evident therefore that the Divine Law spoke of that which is ‘upon the loins’ and not of that which is in the loins; likewise here, the Divine Law spoke of that which is ‘above the kidneys’ and not of that which is in the kidneys.

[To revert to] the above text. ‘R. Abba said in the name of Rab Judah on the authority of Samuel: Fat that is covered with flesh is permitted’. But this cannot be, for has not R. Abba also said in the name of Rab Judah on the authority of Samuel that the fat which is under the loins is forbidden? Abaye answered: An animal whilst alive has its limbs dislocated. Even as R. Johanan said: ‘I am no butcher nor the son of a butcher, but I remember this statement that was generally quoted in the Beth-Hamidrash, "An animal whilst alive has its limbs dislocated"’.

R. Abba said in the name of Rab Judah who said it in the name of Samuel: The fat which is upon the oasmus and reticulum is forbidden and one is liable to the penalty of Kareth on account of it; this is the fat that is ‘upon the in wards’.

R. Abba further said in the name of Rab Judah who said it in the name of Samuel: The fat which is upon the innominate bone is forbidden and one is liable to the penalty of Kareth on account of it; this is the ‘fat which is upon the loins’.

R. Abba also said in the name of Rab Judah who said it in the name of Samuel: The small veins in the fore-limb are forbidden. Said R. Safra: You Moses! Does the Divine Law forbid the eating of meat? — Raba replied: You Moses! Does the Divine Law allow the eating of blood? But if it [the fore-limb] was cut and salted it may even [be cooked] in a pot.
Rab Judah said in the name of Samuel: [The fat upon] the first cubit of the intestines must be scraped away; this is the fat upon the intestines. Rab Judah said: The veins in the rump are forbidden.

There are five veins in the loins, three on the right side and two on the left. Each one of the three veins branches into two, and each one of the two veins branches into three. The practical importance of this is that if one removes them, while the flesh is still warm they will slip out easily, otherwise one must follow them up [to this number].

Abaye (others say: Rab Judah) said: There are five veins, three are forbidden on account of fat and two on account of blood. The veins in the spleen, in the loins and in the kidneys are forbidden on account of fat; those in the fore-limb and in the cheeks on account of blood. What is the practical difference here? — Those forbidden on account of blood, if cut up and salted may be eaten; but the others have no remedy at all.

R. Kahana (others say: Rab Judah) said: There are five membranes, three are forbidden on account of fat, and two on account of blood; that of the spleen, the loins, and the kidneys is forbidden on account of fat; that of the testicles and of the brain on account of blood.

R. Judah b. Oshaia was once scraping the spleen for Levi the son of R. Huna b. Hyya, and was cutting away [the fat] only at the upper end, whereupon the latter said to him, ‘Go lower down too’. When his father came and found him doing this, he said: Thus said your mother's father (that is, R. Jeremiah b. Abba) in the name of Rab: The Torah forbade only [the fat] at the top. But this surely cannot be, for R. Hamnuna reported that a Tanna taught: The membrane which is upon the spleen is forbidden but one is not liable on account of it. Now what can this mean? If it means, [the fat] which is at the top, then why is one not liable on account of it? It must therefore mean the fat over the whole [of the spleen]! — He replied: If it was so taught then it was taught.

[To revert to] the main text. ‘R. Hamnuna reported, that a Tanna taught: The membrane which is upon the spleen is forbidden but one is not liable on account of it’. The membrane which is upon the kidney is forbidden but one is not liable on account of it’. The membrane which is upon the spleen is forbidden but one is not liable on account of it. But it has been taught: One is liable on account of it! — With regard to the spleen there is no contradiction because the latter ruling refers to the fat which is at the top and the former to that which is not at the top. And with regard to the kidney there is no contradiction because the latter ruling refers to the upper membrane and the former to the lower membrane.

As to crushed testicles [there is a dispute between] R. Ammi and R. Assi, one forbids them and the other permits them. He who forbids them [argues thus]:

---

(1) In connection with sacrifices, e.g., Lev. III, 4. The prohibition of fat applies only to such fat as was burnt in a sacrifice on the altar.
(2) Although this fat is covered by the loins.
(3) When the animal is in motion its limbs and muscles slip away from their normal positions and are temporarily dislocated. Consequently the fat under the loins is not always covered with flesh, and it is therefore forbidden.
(4) Referred to frequently in Scripture in connection with sacrifices, e.g., Lev. III, 3.
(5) I.e., the hip-bone. According to Rashi the text refers to the sacrum. V. Katzenelsohn, p. 269, n. 2.
(6) A title of honour; or a form of oath, ‘By Moses’! Cf. Bezah 38b.
(7) The veins in the fore-limb are forbidden only on account of the blood contained in them; if therefore the meat was cut up and the veins cut too, it is permitted for all purposes.
(8) About which there was a dispute between R. Akiba and R. Ishmael, v. supra 49b.
(9) These ‘veins’ or stringy fibers are forbidden as fat and are included in the prohibition of fat.
(10) I.e., there are five places where the veins are prohibited, either because of fat or of blood.
The arteries of the neck, i.e., the carotid arteries, are certainly forbidden because of their blood; here however only the minor veins are reckoned.

At the thick part, i.e., the area of attachment to the rumen.

Lit., 'on the breast'; i.e., the membrane which lies over the thick part of the spleen.

But I shall not alter my opinion on account of it. V. Rashi Nid. 23b s.v. תַּחַטָּה תַחְפַּס.

Both with regard to the spleen and the kidney.

This is absolutely forbidden and entails the penalty of kareth.

According to others, the testicles had been torn away and were lying loose in the scrotum.

---

Talmud - Mas. Chullin 93b

since they will never recover, they are to be considered as a limb torn loose from the living animal. And he who permits them [argues thus]: since they do not rot there is obviously vitality in them. And the former? — He maintains that they do not rot only because the outside air does not penetrate into them. And the latter? — He maintains that they do not recover only because emaciation has set in. R. Johanan said to R. Shaman b. Abba: Crushed testicles are permitted, but you must not eat them for it is written: Forsake not the teaching of thy mother.¹

Mar son of R. Ashi said: The testicles of a kid² that is not yet thirty days old, are permitted without having to peel off the membrane; thereafter, if they contain semen they are forbidden,³ if they do not contain semen they are permitted. How does one know this? — If there are red streaks [in the membrane], they are forbidden;⁴ if there are no red streaks, they are permitted.

As to [dark red] meat, testicles, and the arteries [of the neck], there is a dispute between R. Aha and Rabina. (In any law of the Torah [whenever there is a dispute between them], Rabina always adopts the lenient view and R. Aha the strict view, and the law is always in accordance with Rabina's view thus tending towards leniency; excepting in these three cases, where R. Aha adopts the lenient view and Rabina the strict view, and, the law is in accordance with R. Aha's view and thus tending towards leniency.) As to dark red meat⁵ if it was cut up and salted, it is even permitted [to be cooked] in a pot; if it was thrust on a spit [and held over the fire], the blood would easily flow out; if it was placed on the coals, in this there is a dispute between R. Aha and Rabina: one says that they [the coals] would draw out the blood, and the other says that they would cause [the meat] to contract.⁶ The same rules apply to the testicles, and also to the arteries [of the neck].

If a head was put on hot ashes⁷ and it was made to stand up upon the open cut of the neck, the blood would then flow out and it is permitted; if it was placed upon its side, the blood would become clotted and it is forbidden; if it was made to stand up upon its nostrils and something was thrust into them,⁸ it is permitted; otherwise it is forbidden. Some there are who say, [If it was made to stand up] upon its nostrils or upon the cut of the neck, the blood would flow out; if it was placed upon its side and it was pierced with something it is permitted, otherwise it is forbidden.

[To revert to] the above text:⁹ Rab Judah said in the name of Samuel, ‘It¹⁰ consists of two nerves, the inner,¹¹ next to the bone, is forbidden, and one is liable on account of it, the outer,¹¹ next to the flesh, is forbidden, but one is not liable on account of it’. But it was taught that the inner is nearer the flesh! — R. Aha explained in the name of R. Kahana, [That is so further on] where it is embedded in the flesh. But it was taught that the outer is nearer the bone! — Rab Judah answered: That is so only [at the part] where the butchers cut it open.¹²

It was stated: If a butcher was found to have overlooked forbidden fat, even only as much as a barley grain, says Rab Judah, [he is punishable]. R. Johanan says, [Only if he overlooked] as much as an olive's bulk. R. Papa said: They do not disagree, for here it is a question of punishing him with stripes,¹³ and there of removing him.¹⁴ Mar Zutra said, [If there was found] as much as a barley grain in one place or as much as an olive's bulk scattered in two or three places [he is punishable]. The law is: in order to punish him with stripes [he must have overlooked] as much as an olive's bulk, and in order to remove him even if [he overlooked] only as much as a barley grain.

BUTCHERS ARE NOT TRUSTWORTHY etc. R. Hiyya b. Abba said in the name of R. Johanan. Later they held that they were to be trusted. R. Nahman exclaimed: Have the generations become more virtuous? — At first they [the Sages] held the view of R. Meir and so they were not to be trusted, but later they held the view of R. Judah.

Others report this with reference to the last clause, THE SAGES SAY, THEY ARE TRUSTWORTHY WITH REGARD TO IT AS WELL AS WITH REGARD TO THE [FORBIDDEN] FAT. R. Hiyya b. Abba said in the name of R. Johanan: Later they held that they were not to be trusted. R. Nahman said: Today they are to be trusted. Have the generations then become more virtuous? — At first they [the Sages] held the view of R. Judah, and later they held the view of R. Meir; and as long as people still remembered the view of R. Judah, they were not to be trusted, but now that R. Judah's view has been forgotten they are to be trusted.

AS WELL AS WITH REGARD TO THE [FORBIDDEN] FAT. But who has mentioned the forbidden fat at all? — This is what he [R. Meir] said: They are not trustworthy with regard to it nor with regard to the forbidden fat. But the Sages say: They are trustworthy with regard to it as well as with regard to the forbidden fat.

MISHNAH. ONE MAY SEND TO A GENTILE A THIGH IN WHICH THERE IS YET THE SCIATIC NERVE, BECAUSE ITS PLACE IS KNOWN.

GEMARA. Only a whole thigh one may [send] but not if it was cut up. But what are the circumstances? If we are speaking of a place where they do not proclaim it.

(1) Prov. I, 8. R. Shaman came from Babylon where the rule was not to eat them because of the difference of opinion between R. Ammi and R. Assi.
(2) Or any other young animal.
(3) If the membrane has not been removed because of the blood it contains.
(4) V. p. 522, n. 7.
(5) Caused by a blow which the animal received while alive and the blood was congested in this spot; v. Marginal note. [Alter: meat pickled in vinegar.]
(6) So that the blood would not flow out and it is therefore forbidden.
(7) In order to remove the hair the more easily.
(8) To keep clear the passage in the nostrils so as to allow the blood to run out freely.
(9) Inserted by Bah. V. Supra 91a.
(10) Sc. the sciatic nerve.
(11) The great sciatic nerve is derived from the lumbosacral plexus and as it emerges from the pelvis it descends first behind the hip joint and then behind the femur in the thigh. It gives off branches to the muscles behind the femur, but its longest branch is the common peroneal. The ‘inner’ is probably the great sciatic nerve, and the ‘outer’ the common peroneal.
(12) When they are about to ‘porge’ the meat. There the outer nerve is near to the bone.
(13) In that case he must have overlooked at least an olive's bulk of fat. In addition to stripes he is barred from trading as a butcher (R. Nissim). ‘Stripes’ here is not that ordained by the Torah but corporal punishment inflicted for disobeying a Rabbinic law, i.e., Makkath Marduth, stripes for rebellion. (cf. Yoreh Deah, LXIV, 21).
(14) From trading as a butcher. This is so even though he only overlooked as much as a barley grain of fat.
(15) It is not clear what is to be his punishment, removal from his trade or stripes. V. however Rashal. a.l.
(16) [He is however reinstated on undertaking never to repeat the offence. V. דְּבַּרְיָם מַמְּדוּרִי on Asheri a.l.]
(17) With regard to the sciatic nerve (Tosaf.).
(18) That the sciatic nerve must be removed with all its roots; and as this entailed much trouble the butchers were not be trusted for it.

(19) That only the upper surface of the nerve must be removed; for this all butchers were trustworthy.

(20) This paragraph is not found in MS.M.

(21) We need not apprehend lest another Jew, seeing the gentile receiving the thigh from this Jew, will assume that the nerve had been removed and will buy it from the gentile, because it can easily be seen whether the nerve has been removed or not.

(22) I.e., a portion of the thigh. This is the inference from our Mishnah which states A THIGH, implying a whole thigh.

(23) Sc. that an animal was found to be trefah. This is the custom where all the butchers are Jews. Where the practice of announcing it is not in vogue, there Jews are not allowed to buy meat from gentiles under any circumstances, for the Jewish butchers may have disposed of the trefah animal to a gentile and did not trouble to make this fact known.

Talmud - Mas. Chullin 94a

then one should be allowed to send it even though it was cut up, for no [Jew] would buy it from him. And if we are speaking of a place where they do proclaim it,¹ then one should not be allowed to send even an entire thigh,² for he [the gentile] will cut it up and sell it! — If you wish I can say that it is a place where they do proclaim it, and if you wish I can say that it is a place where they do not proclaim it. If you wish, I can say that it is a place where they do proclaim it, [and yet there is nothing to fear] because the cutting up [of the thigh] by a gentile is recognizable.³ And if you wish, I can say that it is a place where they do not proclaim it, [and yet it is forbidden to send a portion] lest he should give it to the gentile in the presence of another Israelite.⁴ Alternatively, I can say, [it is forbidden] because he thereby deceives him,⁵ and Samuel holds that it is forbidden to deceive people even gentiles.

This view of Samuel was not expressly stated but was inferred from the following incident. Samuel was once crossing on a ferryboat and he said to his attendant, ‘Reward the ferryman’. He rewarded him, but [Samuel] became angry. Why was he angry? — Abaye said: Because he [the attendant] had a trefah hen and he gave it to the ferryman representing it as one that was ritually slaughtered. Raba said: Because he [Samuel] told him to give him [the gentile] anpaka⁶ to drink, and he gave him mixed wine to drink.⁷ And if what it was only inferred? — Because according to him who says that he gave him a trefah hen, it can be said [that Samuel was angry with his attendant] for keeping with him [a forbidden thing].⁸ And according to him who says that he told him to give him anpaka, it can be said [that Samuel was angry] because anpaka really means unmixed wine.⁹

It was taught: R. Meir used to say: A man should not urge his friend to dine with him when he knows that his friend will not do so.¹⁰ And he should not offer him many gifts when he knows that his friend will not accept them. And he should not open [for a guest] casks of wine which are to be sold by the shopkeeper,¹¹ unless he informs [the guest] of it. And he should not invite him to anoint himself with oil¹² if the jar is empty. If, however, the purpose is to show the guest great respect, it is permitted. But surely this cannot be right. For Ulla once came to Rab Judah's house and the latter opened up for him casks that were later to be sold by the shopkeeper! — He must have informed him of this fact. Or if you wish, I can say that the case of Ulla is different, for he was so dear to Rab Judah that he would have opened for him even those that were not [to be sold by the shopkeeper].

Our Rabbis taught: A man should not go to the house of a mourner with a bottle in which the wine shakes about;¹⁴ neither should he fill it with water because he thereby deceives him. If, however, there is a large assembly¹⁵ present, it is permitted.

Our Rabbis taught: A man should not sell to his neighbour shoes made of the hide of an animal which died, [representing them] as made of the hide of a living animal which was slaughtered, for two reasons: first, because he is deceiving him, and secondly, because of the danger.¹⁶ A man should not send to his neighbour a barrel of wine with oil floating at the mouth of it.\textsuperscript{17} It once happened that a man sent his friend a barrel of wine, and there was oil floating at the mouth of the barrel. He went and invited some guests to partake of it. When they came and he found that it was only wine he went and hanged himself.\textsuperscript{18} The guests may not give from what is set before them to the son or daughter of the host, unless they have the host's permission to, do so. It once happened that a man in a time of scarcity invited three guests to his house and he only had three eggs\textsuperscript{19} to set before them. When the child of the host entered, one of the guests took his portion and gave it to him, the second guest did likewise, and so did the third. When the father of the child came and saw him stuffing one egg in his mouth and holding two in his hands, he [in rage] knocked him to the ground so that he died. When the child's mother saw this she went up to the roof and threw herself down and died. He too went up to the roof and threw himself down and died. R. Eliezer b. Jacob said: Because of this three souls in Israel perished. What does he [R. Eliezer b. Jacob] tell us? — It means that the whole story was related by R. Eliezer b. Jacob.

Our Rabbis taught: If a man sends to his friend a whole thigh he need not remove beforehand the sciatic nerve; if [he sends it] cut up he must remove beforehand the sciatic nerve. To a gentile, however, whether he sends it cut up or whole, he need not remove beforehand the sciatic nerve. And for two reasons they said, a man should not sell to a gentile animals that have become nebelah or trefah:\textsuperscript{20} first because he is deceiving him,\textsuperscript{21} and secondly because he in turn might sell it to another Israelite. A man should not say to a gentile. ‘Buy for me meat with this denar’, for two reasons:

\footnotesize{(1)} So that on any day when no proclamation about trefah has been made Jews may buy meat without hesitation from gentiles.
\footnotesize{(2)} Unless the nerve had been removed beforehand, for the gentile might cut it up in portions and sell it to Jews, and when cut up it is no longer easy to ascertain whether the nerve has been removed or not.
\footnotesize{(3)} A whole thigh, therefore, may be sent but not a portion of one.
\footnotesize{(4)} Although in this place it is not the practice for Jews to buy meat from gentiles, in this particular case where the Jew sees the gentile receiving the meat, even if only a portion, from his fellow Jew, he might buy it and assume that the nerve had been removed.
\footnotesize{(5)} Lit., ‘steals his mind’, i.e., creates a false impression upon him. The gentile would be delighted in the thought that his Jewish friend is sending him meat fit for his own table, and would be the more grateful to him, whereas in reality the meat sent was not fit for his own table as the nerve had not been removed therefrom, and so the gratitude of the gentile will have been falsely earned.
\footnotesize{(6)} שְׁנִים, a form of the word מְבָה (v. Jast. s.v.), strictly, a small cup the capacity of one fourth of a log, cf. B.B. 58b. A popular term also for strong, unmixed wine.
\footnotesize{(7)} And the gentile thought it was unmixed wine.
\footnotesize{(8)} And not because he deceived the gentile.
\footnotesize{(9)} And by giving mixed wine he disregarded the orders of Samuel. Hence his anger.
\footnotesize{(10)} He is merely gaining the gratitude of his friend through something which he had no intention of doing. This is the reason in all the cases mentioned.
\footnotesize{(11)} It was not unusual for a private person when about to open a barrel of wine for his table to make arrangements with a shopkeeper to dispose of that which is left after the meal; a necessary arrangement, for once the barrel has been opened the wine will in a very short time turn sour. To open up a barrel of wine for a guest without informing him of the arrangement with the shopkeeper is taking credit for something one has not merited.
\footnotesize{(12)} Knowing full well that his friend will not do so.
\footnotesize{(13)} It was the custom to drink wine at the house of a mourner, and over each cup of wine certain Benedictions and appropriate words of consolation to the mourners were recited; v. Keth. 8b. The visitors would come bringing with them bottles of wine; and one must not deceive people by coming with a bottle filled with water or only half-filled with wine.
\footnotesize{(14)} I.e., it contains only a little wine and therefore shakes about in the bottle.
\footnotesize{(15)} זָנְבָּר, Lit., ‘an assembly of the city’. If this man also wishes to show his respect to the mourners among the large gathering of people and he cannot afford to bring wine he may adopt this deception, for the motive justifies the means. [Aliter: a town scholar, vocalizing זָנְבָּר; i.e., if there is a scholar among the visitors and the man wishes to show his respect to the scholar present, cf. Meg. (Sonc. ed.) p. 164, n. 1.]

(16) As the animal may have died through the bit of a serpent and the hide of the animal may thereby have become contaminated.

(17) Leading him to believe that the whole barrel contains oil.

(18) Because of shame, for he had nothing else prepared to set before his guests.

(19) So Bah. Cur. edd. as (the size of) three eggs.

(20) Without informing him of this fact.

(21) For a gentile when buying meat of a Jew believes that he is buying the meat of an animal that has been ritually slaughtered, and it is forbidden to take advantage of his ignorance and to pass on to him trefah meat.

Talmud - Mas. Chullin 94b

first because of the violent ones among them,\(^1\) and secondly because they might sell him meat of a nebelah or trefah animal.

The Master said: ‘To a gentile, however, whether [he sends it] cut up or whole, he need not remove beforehand the sciatic nerve’. But what are the circumstances? If we are dealing with a place where they do proclaim it,\(^2\) then in the case where it has been cut up why [do you say,] he need not remove beforehand the sciatic nerve? [Is it not to be feared that,] since no proclamation was made, people will buy from him? Obviously then we are dealing with a place where they do not proclaim it. Consider now the middle clause which reads: ‘For two reasons, they said, a man should not sell to a gentile animals that have become nebelah or trefah: first because he is deceiving him, and secondly because he in turn might sell it to another Israelite’. If, as you say, we are dealing with a place where they do not proclaim it, then surely no one would buy from him. Obviously then we are dealing with the place where they do proclaim it.\(^3\) Consider now the final clause which reads: ‘A man should not say to a gentile. “Buy for me meat with this denar”, for two reasons: first because of the violent ones among them, and secondly because they might sell him meat of a nebelah or trefah animal’. Now if, as you say, it is a place where they do proclaim it, then surely if there happened a trefah it would have been proclaimed.\(^4\) Obviously then we are dealing with the place where they do not proclaim it; so that the position is: The first and last clauses deal with a place where they do not proclaim it, whilst the middle clause deals with a place where they do proclaim it. Raba answered: The whole [Baraitha] deals with a place where they do proclaim it; and in the first and last clauses the case was that a proclamation had been made [this day],\(^5\) but in the middle clause the case was that no proclamation had been made.\(^6\) R. Ashi answered: The whole [Baraitha] deals with a place where they do not proclaim it;\(^7\) but the ruling in the middle clause is merely a precautionary measure lest he sell it to the gentile in the presence of another Israelite.\(^8\) What is the form of the proclamation? — R. Isaac b. Joseph said: ‘Meat has fallen into our hands for the army’.\(^9\) And why not proclaim, ‘Trefah meat has fallen into our hands for the army’? — They are deceiving themselves. As in the following incident. Mar Zutra the son of R. Nahman was once going from Sikara to Mahuza, while Raba and R. Safra were going to Sikara; and they met on the way. Believing that they had come to meet him he said: ‘Why did the Rabbis take this trouble to come so far [to meet me]?’ R. Safra replied: ‘We did not know that the Master was coming; had we known of it we should have put ourselves out more than this’. Raba said to him, ‘Why did you tell him this; you have now upset him’? He replied: ‘But we would be deceiving him otherwise’. ‘No. He would be deceiving himself’.\(^10\)

A butcher once said to his fellow,

(1) Who would keep the denar for themselves and at the same time force the butcher to supply them with meat to the value of a denar without payment.
That this day a trefah animal was supplied to the gentile. On that day Jews would refrain from buying meat from the gentile. For the form of the proclamation v. infra.

But for some unaccountable reason no proclamation was made on this day, so that there is the danger of Jews buying trefah meat from the gentiles without being aware of the fact.

Since there was no proclamation on this day then the Jew should have no hesitation in sending the gentile to buy meat for him.

So that all know that this day the gentile has been supplied with trefah meat.

Although such a proclamation should have been made.

So that generally Jews would not buy meat from gentiles for they are supplied with trefah meat and no announcement is made of this fact.

Sc. that it is forbidden to sell to a gentile nebelah or trefah.

Who, on seeing the gentile receiving it from the Jew and not knowing that it is trefah, would permit himself to buy it from the gentile. In the first clause, however, we do not apprehend this, for there it refers to a private transaction, where a Jew sends a thigh to the gentile, and it is not likely that any other Jew would know of this; hence there is no reasonable ground for imposing a precautionary measure. On the other hand, the Tanna of our Mishnah does feel the necessity for such a measure. V. Rashi.

Sc. the gentiles. In towns where Jews mainly settled, it was not unusual to find that the only gentiles in the town were the soldiers of the army who were stationed there.

For they do not take the trouble to enquire whether the meat is trefah or not.

Near Mahuza.

Thinking that they had specially come to meet him.

‘If only you had been on good terms with me, I would have given you a portion of the fatted ox which I had prepared yesterday!’ He replied: ‘I did eat of the choicest meat’. ‘Where did you get it?’ asked the other. ‘That gentile who bought [the animal from you] gave me a portion’, he replied. Said the other, ‘I did indeed prepare two, but that one became trefah’. Said Rabbi, Are we to prohibit all the meat stalls [today] because of that fool who acted improperly?1 Rabbi here is consistent with his principle, for he said: Where the meat stalls [kept by gentiles are supplied with meat by] Israelite butchers, any meat found in the possession of the gentile2 is permitted. Some there are who give this version: Rabbi said: ‘Are we to prohibit all the meat stalls because of that fool who wanted to annoy his fellow’?3 Now the only reason is because he wanted to annoy his fellow, but where there was no such intention [all the meat stalls would be] forbidden. Surely it was taught: Rabbi says: Where the meat stalls [kept by gentiles are supplied with meat by] Israelite butchers, any meat found in the possession of the gentile is permitted! — Here it is different, for the forbidden meat is clearly established.4

Rab said: Meat which had disappeared from sight5 is forbidden.6 An objection was raised. Rabbi says: Where the meat stalls [kept by gentiles are supplied with meat by] Israelite butchers, any meat found in the possession of the gentile is permitted!7 — It is different where it is found in the possession of the gentile.8

Come and hear: If there were nine meat shops, all of them selling ritually slaughtered meat and one shop selling carrion, and a man bought meat from one of them but he does not know from which of them he bought, it is forbidden because of the doubt;9 but if meat was found,10 one goes after the majority.11 — Here too [we must suppose] that it was found in the hand of a gentile.

Come and hear: We have learnt: If one found10 [raw] meat in the city one must determine [the meat] according to the majority of butchers; if it was cooked meat one must determine it according to the majority of the people that eat meat.12 And should you say that here too [we must suppose] that it was found in the hand of a gentile, [then why is it said.] ‘If it was cooked one must determine it according to the majority of the people that eat meat’? Let us see whether the gentile has it in his possession or the Israelite! Here we must suppose that he [the finder] was standing by and kept his eye on it all the time.

Talmud - Mas. Chullin 95a

Come and hear: [We have learnt:] If meat was found within the borders, if it was an entire limb it is deemed to be nebelah, but if it was a cut from a limb it is permitted. And should you say that here too we must suppose that he [the finder] stood by keeping his eye on it all the time, then why is it deemed to be nebelah in the case of an entire limb? — Is not this intended [as an objection] against Rab’s teaching? But with regard to it there has been reported: Rab said: It is permitted only in so far as it is not deemed to be nebelah, Levi however said, it is permitted to be eaten.

This rule of Rab was not expressly stated but was inferred from the following incident. Rab was once sitting by the ford of the Ishtatith Canal when he saw a man

(1) Since the meat sold in all the stalls, even those kept by gentiles, is supplied by Jewish butchers, the Jews have accustomed themselves to buying meat from gentile stalls without hesitation. The improper act of this man surely will not have the effect of altering the status quo so as to place a restriction upon all stalls kept by gentiles!
(2) I.e., on his stall.
(3) We assume therefore that he lied to his fellow merely in order to annoy him, but that he did not actually sell the gentile trefah meat.
(4) He had definitely sold trefah meat to this gentile, and he might have done so to others too, therefore all the meat on the stalls kept by the gentiles is forbidden.
(5) Even if one lost sight of it or turned one's back on it for a moment.
(6) For it might have been exchanged for trefah meat.
(7) Here the meat was not kept in sight by the Jew the whole time, nevertheless it is permitted.
(8) The gentile has had this meat in his care all the time, and since all the meat supplied to him is ritually slaughtered, for no Jew would supply him with trefah meat to sell in the market, it is permitted. Where, however, nobody was in charge of it, it is forbidden, for a raven might have carried it away and brought back trefah meat from elsewhere.
(9) Because of the principle that everything prohibited which has a fixed place (kabua’) among things permitted, is not deemed as a minority among the majority, but rather as in the proportion of half to half. In this case therefore the meat, bought from one of the shops amongst which that shop which sells carrion has its place fixed and determined, is forbidden, for the doubt with regard to this meat is even.
(10) Presumably in the market place, and evidently it had disappeared from sight.
(11) And the meat is permitted for the majority of shops sell ritually slaughtered meat.
(12) Shek. VII, 6. It is to be assumed, of course, that the majority of butchers in the town are Jews. Nevertheless it is permitted even though it was lost and presumably out of sight.
(13) From the moment that it fell from the owner.
(14) Of the Land of Israel but outside Jerusalem.
(15) For whenever an animal becomes nebelah it is usually cut up into limbs and thrown away.
(16) Maksh. II, 9. If the majority of butchers, or in the case of cooked meat if the majority of people that eat meat, are Jews, the meat found may be eaten.
(17) And this would easily determine the doubt, for if the gentile has it then it is forbidden for presumably he has cooked it. The case must therefore be that the meat was found on the ground and not in the possession of anyone, nevertheless it is permitted, contra Rab.
(18) From the moment that it fell from the owner and was not thrown away as nebelah.
(19) I.e., it does not defile, but on no account may it be eaten since it had not been kept in sight the whole time.
(20) That meat which had even for one moment disappeared from sight is forbidden.
(21) [Near Sura, v. Obermeyer, p. 300.]
washing the head [of an animal in the water]. It fell out of his hand, so he went and fetched a basket, threw it [into the water] and brought up two heads. Said Rab, ‘Is this what usually happens?’ And he forbade him both [heads]. Thereupon R. Kahana and R. Assi said to Rab, ‘Are only forbidden [heads] found here and not permitted ones?’ He replied, ‘The forbidden ones are more frequently found’. But what if it was only inferred? — It was a jetty frequented mostly by gentiles. Indeed you may be certain of this from his reply: ‘The forbidden ones are more frequently found [here].’

According to this how could Rab eat meat? — You may say [that he ate meat] soon [after the slaughtering], so that he did not lose sight of it; or only if it was wrapped up and sealed, or if it bore some distinguishing mark. Thus Rabbah son of R. Huna used to cut up [the meat] in the shape of a triangle.

Rab was once going to his son-in-law R. Hanan when he saw a ferry-boat coming towards him. Said he to himself: When the ferry-boat comes to meet one it is a good omen. As he came to the door he looked through the crack of the door and he saw the meat of an animal hanging up. He then knocked at the door and everybody came out to meet him, even the butchers too. Rab however did not take his eyes off [the meat] and said to them: ‘If that is how [you look after things], then you are giving my daughter's children forbidden meat to eat’. And Rab did not eat of that meat. But why? If because of meat that had disappeared from sight, but here he did not lose sight of it; and if because of the omen, but Rab himself has said: An omen which is not after the form pronounced by Eliezer, Abraham's servant, or by Jonathan the son of Saul, is not considered a divination! — [The reason is that] it was a meal of free choice and Rab would not partake of a meal of free choice.

Rab used to regard a ferry-boat as a sign. Samuel a [passage in a] book, and R. Johanan [a verse quoted] by a child. During the lifetime of Rab, R. Johanan used to address him thus in his letters: Greetings to our Master in Babylon! After Rab's death R. Johanan used to address Samuel thus: Greetings to our colleague in Babylon! Said Samuel to himself, ‘Is there nothing in which I am his master’? He thereupon sent [to R. Johanan] the calculations for the intercalation of months for sixty years. Said [R. Johanan], ‘He only knows mere calculations’. So he [Samuel] wrote out and sent [R. Johanan] thirteen camel loads of questions concerning doubtful cases of trefah. Said [R. Johanan], ‘It is clear that I have a Master in Babylon; I must go and see him’. So he said to a child, ‘Tell me the [last] verse you have learnt’. He answered: ‘Now Samuel was dead’. Said [R. Johanan], ‘This means that Samuel has died’. But it was not the case; Samuel was not dead then, and [this happened] only that R. Johanan should not trouble himself.

It was taught: R. Simeon b. Eleazar says: Although a house or a child or a marriage must not be used for divination, they may be taken as a sign. R. Eleazar added: Provided it was established so on three occasions, for it is written: Joseph is not, and Simeon is not, and ye will take Benjamin away; upon me all these things come.

R. Huna enquired of Rab: What if [pieces of meat were] strung together? — He replied: Don't be a fool; if strung together it is certainly a distinguishing sign. Others report this as follows: R. Huna said in the name of Rab, If pieces of meat were strung together this is regarded as a distinguishing sign.

R. Nahman of Nehardea once came to R. Kahana at Pum Nahara on the eve of the day of Atonement when they saw ravens dropping [from their beaks] pieces of liver and kidneys. Said [R. Kahana] to the other, pick them up and eat them, for to-day that which is permitted is more common.

R. Hiyya b. Abin once lost the large intestine of an animal amongst a stack of barrels [and subsequently found it] and he came to enquire about it of R. Huna. ‘Have you a distinguishing mark on it?” asked [R. Huna]. ‘No’, he replied. ‘Would you be able to recognize it [by general impression]?’ ‘Yes’, he replied. ‘Then you may go and take it.’

R. Hanina Hoza'ah²⁴ once lost a side of meat [and subsequently found it]. He came to R. Nahman who said to him, ‘Have you a distinguishing mark on it?’ He replied: ‘No’. ‘Would you be able to recognize it?’ He replied: ‘Yes’. ‘Then you may go and take it’.

R. Nathan b. Abaye once lost a ball of blue wool.²⁵ He came before R. Hisda who said to him, ‘Have you a distinguishing mark on it?’ He replied: ‘No’. ‘Would you be able to recognize it?’ He replied: ‘Yes’. ‘Then you may use it’.

Raba said: At first I thought that [identification by] a distinguishing mark was more reliable than [identification by] general impression,²⁶ since we must return a lost article [to anyone who mentions] a distinguishing mark on it,

---

(1) On losing one thing to find two.
(2) The second head might very well have been a permitted one which had previously fallen into the river.
(3) This incident clearly shows Rab's view as stated above (p. 533, n. 9).
(4) Which can only be explained by the fact that the place was frequented mostly by gentiles. In other districts, however, both heads might have been permitted, even though they had been out of sight for some time. Thus Rab's principle cannot be definitely inferred from this incident.
(5) Since it would be forbidden if only it was, for one moment, out of sight.
(6) Lit., ‘it will be a good day in there’, i.e., at the place where he proposed to go.
(7) Which he had expressed about the ferry-boat coming towards him.
(9) Cf. I Sam. XIV, 9, 10.
(10) In the sense that is forbidden by Lev. XIX, 26. In the two cases mentioned the action to be taken was entirely dependent upon the happening of a certain event, and this is prohibited. But to interpret a certain event as an omen either for good or evil, is not prohibited.
(11) As opposed to a meal in fulfilment of a religious precept.
(12) If the ferry-boat was coming towards one, or if a passage selected at random from a book or the verse quoted by a child was of a happy nature, — each was regarded as a good omen for a successful venture.
(13) Reading רחלוס. According to R. Han.: רחלוס, ‘parchment scrolls’.
(14) I Sam. XXVIII, 3.
(15) To go to Babylon to visit Samuel.
(16) If a man's first undertaking immediately after a great day in his life, such as the building of a house, the birth of a child or his marriage, proves to be successful, he may regard it as suspicious and as a prognostic of success, and may view cheerfully all future undertakings of a similar nature. If, on the other hand, it proves to be unsuccessful, he should in the future view similar undertakings with apprehension. To place implicit faith and absolute reliance upon the outcome of the first undertaking is forbidden by the Torah as augury and divination (v. Lev. XIX, 26). One may, nevertheless, regard it as an indication of the future.
(17) I.e., he met with a sequence of three successes or three reverses.
(18) Gen. XLII, 36.
(19) And the entire string of meat had disappeared for a moment from sight.
(20) Not as a question put by R. Huna but as a definite statement of the law.
(21) MS.M. R. Hanan.
(22) On the Tigris.
(23) For much meat was eaten on the eve of the Day of Atonement in preparation for the fast, v. supra 83a, and therefore any meat found, or carried away by ravens, would in all probability be meat that was ritually slaughtered.
(24) Of Hozae, the modern Khuzistan.
(25) Which was prepared for use in the Zizith (cf. Num. XV, 38). The blue dye was very scarce and every precaution had to be taken to guard against imitations and spurious kinds.
whereas we do not return it [to anyone who recognizes it] by mere general impressions. But now, having heard the above decisions, I maintain that [identification by] general impression is the more reliable. For should you not say so, how is it that a blind man is permitted [to cohabit] with his wife, or all people with their wives at night? It is only by recognition of the voice; so in all cases general impression [is reliable]. R. Isaac, son of R. Mesharsheya said: You may know it from this too; for if two witnesses were to come and say: ‘So-and-so who has this or that distinguishing mark killed a person’, we should not put him to death, but if they were to say: ‘We recognize him’, we would put him to death. R. Ashi said: You may also know it from this; for if a man were to say to his messenger, ‘Call So-and-so who has this or that distinguishing mark’, there is a doubt whether he would know him or not, but if he [the messenger] is able to recognize him, when he sees him he would certainly know him.

MISHNAH. WHEN A PERSON REMOVES THE SCIATIC NERVE HE MUST REMOVE ALL OF IT. R. JUDAH SAYS, ONLY SO MUCH AS IS NECESSARY TO FULFIL THE PRECEPT OF REMOVING IT. IF A PERSON ATE AN OLIVE'S BULK OF THE SCIATIC NERVE, HE HAS INCURRED FORTY STRIPES. IF HE ATE THE WHOLE OF IT AND IT WAS NOT AS MUCH AS AN OLIVE'S BULK, HE IS NEVERTHELESS LIABLE. IF HE ATE AN OLIVE'S BULK OF IT FROM ONE THIGH AND ANOTHER OLIVE'S BULK OF IT FROM THE OTHER THIGH, HE HAS INCURRED EIGHTY STRIPES. R. JUDAH SAYS, HE HAS INCURRED ONLY FORTY STRIPES.

GEMARA. Bar Piuli was standing in the presence of Samuel and was poring a side of meat. He was only cutting away the surface [of the nerve], so Samuel said to him, ‘Go down deeper; had I not seen you, you might have given me forbidden meat to eat’. He was alarmed at this, and the knife fell out of his hand. Said Samuel to him, ‘Be not alarmed, for he who taught you this taught you according to the view of R. Judah’. R. Shesheth said: That part which Bar Piuli had removed, is according to R. Judah forbidden by the Torah. Then it follows, does it not, that the part which he [Bar Piuli] did not remove, is according to R. Judah forbidden Rabbinically? If so, according to whose view was he [Bar Piuli] taught this? R. Shesheth therefore said: That part which Bar Piuli had removed, is [according to R. Meir] forbidden by the Torah, but that part which he did not remove, is forbidden Rabbinically, only according to R. Meir, for according to R. Judah it is permitted even Rabbinically.

IF A PERSON ATE AN OLIVE'S BULK OF THE SCIATIC NERVE etc. Samuel said: The Torah forbade only that part [of the nerve] which is on the spoon, for it is written: Which is upon the spoon of the thigh. R. Papa said: This [statement of Samuel] is the subject of dispute between Tannaim; for it was taught: If a person ate [the whole of] it and it was not as much as an olive's bulk, he is nevertheless liable. R. Judah Says, [He is not liable] unless it was as much as an olive's bulk. What is the reason of the Rabbis? — Because it is a complete entity in itself.

[2] These witnesses do not claim to know the murderer except that he had certain distinguishing marks.
[3] This is the view of R. Meir, supra 92b, that one must follow up the tracks of the nerve in all its ramifications.
[4] It is sufficient if one removes the upper part of the nerve, i.e., that part which is visible at the hip-joint.
[5] Although the minimum quantity for constituting eating is an olive's bulk, where the thing prohibited by the Torah is in its entirety less than the size of an olive, e.g., an ant, one incurs the penalty for eating the whole of it.
[6] Because the Prohibition according to R. Judah applies only to one thigh, the right thigh.
[7] I.e., removing the sciatic nerve from the thigh.
Lit., ‘he who taught him according to whose view did he teach him’? For it is clear that the whole of the nerve must be removed if only by Rabbinic injunction. The question therefore is: Whose view did Bar Piuli adopt by cutting away only the surface?

(9) So MS.M., and also according to Bah's gloss. This is also the view of R. Judah.

(10) So that Bar Piuli acted entirely in accordance with R. Judah's view.

(11) The muscles at the proximal end of the thigh are rounded and convex like the back of a spoon. Only that part of the sciatic nerve which runs in these muscles, says Samuel, is prohibited.

(12) Gen. XXXII, 33. V. supra, p. 500, n. 2.

(13) And this was prohibited by the Torah even though the whole of it is not as large as an olive.

Talmud - Mas. Chullin 96b

And what does R. Judah [say to this]? — The term ‘eating’ is used in connection therewith.\(^1\) And the Rabbis? — The term ‘eating’ is to teach that if it [the sciatic nerve] consisted of four or five olives’ bulk and he ate thereof the size of one olive, he is liable.\(^2\) And R. Judah? — That is derived from the expression. ‘Which is upon the spoon of the thigh’.\(^3\) And the Rabbis? — This verse is required for Samuel's teaching, for Samuel said: The Torah forbade only that part [of the nerve] which is on the spoon. And R. Judah? — It is written ‘the thigh’, that is, the entire thigh.\(^4\) And the Rabbis? — That is to indicate that the prohibited nerve is the one that is spread over the whole of the thigh, [namely the inner one], and not the outer one;\(^5\) but of course only [so much of it is prohibited as is] upon the spoon. But is not the expression ‘spoon’ required to teach that [the prohibition of the sciatic nerve] does not apply to birds as they have not a spoon-shaped hip? — The word ‘spoon’ is written twice [in the verse].\(^6\)

MISHNAH. IF A THIGH WAS COOKED TOGETHER WITH THE SCIATIC NERVE AND THERE WAS SO MUCH [OF THE NERVE] AS TO IMPART A FLAVOUR [TO THE THIGH], IT IS FORBIDDEN. HOW DOES ONE MEASURE THIS? AS IF IT WERE MEAT [COOKED] WITH TURNIPS.\(^7\) IF THE SCIATIC NERVE WAS COOKED WITH OTHER NERVES\(^8\) [IN A BROTH] AND IT CAN STILL BE RECOGNIZED,\(^9\) THEN IT DEPENDS WHETHER IT IMPARTED A FLAVOUR OR NOT;\(^10\) BUT IF IT CAN NO LONGER [BE RECOGNIZED] THEN ALL [THE NERVES] ARE FORBIDDEN;\(^11\) AND AS FOR THE BROTH IT DEPENDS WHETHER IT [THE SCIATIC NERVE] IMPARTED A FLAVOUR OR NOT. AND SO IT IS WITH A PIECE OF NEBELAH, OR A PIECE OF AN UNCLEAN FISH. THAT WAS COOKED TOGETHER WITH OTHER PIECES OF FLESH [OR FISH]: IF IT CAN STILL BE RECOGNIZED, THEN IT DEPENDS WHETHER IT IMPARTED A FLAVOUR OR NOT; AND IF IT CAN NO LONGER [BE RECOGNIZED], THEN ALL PIECES ARE FORBIDDEN; AND AS FOR THE BROTH IT DEPENDS WHETHER IT\(^12\) IMPARTED A FLAVOUR OR NOT.

GEMARA. Samuel said: This [ruling of our Mishnah] applies only to the case where they were cooked together,\(^13\) but if they were roasted together one may then cut away [the meat] and eat it until one reaches the nerve.\(^14\) But Surely this is not so, for did not R. Huna say that if a kid was roasted together with its forbidden fat it is forbidden to eat even of the tip of its ear?\(^15\) —

---

(1) And the minimum quantity for constituting ‘eating’ is an olive's hulk.
(2) For it might have been thought that only the eating of the whole of it renders one liable to stripes.
(3) I.e., for eating the portion which is upon the spoon of the thigh, even though it is not the whole, one is liable, provided always it consisted of an olive's bulk.
(4) And the prohibition applies even to that part which is not upon the spoon, contra Samuel.
(5) V. supra 93b.
(6) Ibid., XXXII, 33.
(7) If when meat and turnips are cooked together, in the same proportions as here the nerve and the thigh respectively, the meat imparts its flavour to the turnips, then the thigh would be forbidden on account of the taste of the forbidden nerve. It is estimated by the Rabbis that meat cannot impart its taste to any substance that is cooked with it if the latter is sixty times as large in bulk as the meat.

(8) Which are not forbidden.

(9) It must then be removed, and the only consideration is with regard to the flavour thereof that has remained in the pot.

(10) Lit., ‘(it is forbidden only) if it imparted a flavour’. I.e., whether the other nerves were sixty times as large in bulk as the forbidden nerve or not. In the former case they would be permitted, in the latter they would not.

(11) For each nerve might be the forbidden sciatic nerve.

(12) Sc. the forbidden piece.

(13) In cooking the flavour extracted spreads equally in the whole pot.

(14) The heat of the fire dries up and constricts the nerves so that no flavour or essence is spread in the meat, and therefore the entire meat is permitted save for the nerve itself.

(15) It is here evident that by roasting the essence is carried throughout the whole meat.

Talmud - Mas. Chullin 97a

It is different with fat for it spreads [throughout the flesh]. Is it then forbidden in the case of fat? But Surely Rabbah b. Bar Hana has related a case which came before R. Johanan at the synagogue of Ma'on of a kid that was roasted with its fat, and on enquiring of R. Johanan he ruled that one may cut away [the meat] and eat it until one reaches the fat! — That was a lean kid. R. Huna b. Judah suggested that it was the case of a kidney roasted with its fat, and he [R. Johanan] declared it to be permitted. Rabin son of R. Ada said: It was the case of a kilkith that was found in a pot of stew, and on enquiring of R. Johanan he ruled that a gentile cook should taste it.

Raba said: In the past the following was always a difficulty to me. It was taught: In a pot wherein meat had been cooked a person may not boil milk, and if he did boil [milk] therein, it depends whether the pot imparted a flavour [to the milk] or not. [In a pot wherein] terumah food [had been cooked] a person may not cook common food, and if he did cook [common food] therein, it depends whether the pot imparted a flavour [to the common food] or not. Now in the case of terumah it is clear, for a priest could taste the food; but in the case of meat and milk who may taste it?

But now that R. Johanan ruled that we can rely upon a gentile cook, in this case too we could rely upon a gentile cook.

Raba also said, [In certain cases] the Rabbis ruled that the test whether or not it imparts a flavour applies, and [in other cases] the Rabbis ruled that one may rely upon a [gentile] cook,

(1) And it had little fat; or the fat of a lean animal would not spread (Tosaf.).

(2) For the forbidden fat of the kidney could not penetrate the kidney by reason of the strong membrane which separates them.

(3) A small fish that may not be eaten; probably the stickleback.

(4) To ascertain whether the flavour of the fish is discernible in the stew. The cook's opinion, even though he is a gentile, would be relied upon only so long as he is ignorant of the issue that is involved.

(5) V. supra p. 540, n. 4.

(6) V. Glos.

(7) For to a priest both terumah and common food are permitted. He therefore could taste the common food to ascertain whether it contains any flavour of the terumah food which had previously been cooked in this pot.

(8) For if one actually imparts a flavour into the other then it is forbidden to everyone, even only to taste thereof.

Talmud - Mas. Chullin 97b

and yet [in other cases] the Rabbis ruled that the test is sixty [to one]. Therefore we say, where substances of different kinds, each kind being permitted by itself, were mixed together, the test is whether or not one imparts a flavour to the other; and if one of the substances was forbidden then we rely upon the opinion of a gentile cook. Where substances of like kind were mixed together, in which case it is impossible to discern whether one imparts a flavour to the other; or where substances of different kinds, one of which was forbidden, were mixed together, and no [gentile] cook is available, then the test is sixty [to one].

In the house of the Exilarch, sides of meat were once salted with the sciatic nerve in them. Rabina declared them to be forbidden, whilst R. Aha son of R. Ashi declared them to be permitted. When this case was put to Mar son of R. Ashi he said: My father declared them to be permitted. Then said R. Aha son of R. [Ashi] to Rabina: What is the reason for your view? Is it not Samuel's dictum that whatsoever is salted is counted as hot and whatsoever is preserved is counted as cooked? But [remember,] did not Samuel say. This ruling [of our Mishnah] applies only to the case where they were cooked together, but if they were roasted together one may then cut away [the meat] and eat it until one reaches the nerve? And should you say that the term counted as hot’ means hot as when cooked, surely [this cannot be, for] since he said: ‘whatsoever is preserved is counted as cooked’, it follows that [in the first clause ‘counted as hot’ means] hot as when roasted! This is indeed a difficulty.

R. Hanina said: When measuring one should measure the broth, the sediments, the pieces, and the pot. Some say: The actual thickness of the pot must be taken into account, but others say: Only that which is absorbed in the pot is to be taken into account.

R. Abbahu said in the name of R. Johanan. As regards all things prohibited by the Torah one should measure them as though they were onions or leeks. R. Abba said to Abaye: Why not measure as though they were pepper or spices, in which case the flavour would not become neutralized even in a thousand-fold? — He replied: The Rabbis have estimated that among forbidden substances there is none that can impart a stronger flavour than onions or leeks.

R. Nahman said: The [sciatic] nerve [is neutralized] in sixty-fold, but the nerve itself is not to be included to make up this number. The udder is neutralized in sixty-fold, but the udder itself is to be included. An egg is neutralized in sixty-fold, but the egg itself is not to be included. R. Isaac the son of R. Mesharsheya said: But the udder itself is forbidden, and if it fell into another pot it renders [the contents] forbidden.

R. Ashi said: When we were at R. Kahana's the question was put before us: When measuring, should one measure [the prohibited substance] itself or only the essence which exuded from it? It is obvious, surely, that one should measure the substance itself, for if only the essence which exuded from it, [the question arises,] How do we know [how much it is]? — But if so, if it subsequently fell into another, pot it should not render [the contents] forbidden? Since R. Isaac the son of R. Mesharsheya had said that the udder itself was forbidden, the Rabbis declared it to be as a piece of nebelah.

‘An egg is neutralized in sixty-fold, but the egg itself is not to be included [to make up this number']. R. Idi b. Abin said to Abaye. Can it be said that it imparts a flavour? but people usually say: ‘As the mere water of eggs’! — He replied: We are dealing here

---

(1) E.g., where terumah was mixed with common food the mixture is permitted to a priest, and he could taste it and give his opinion as to whether the terumah does impart a flavour in the common food, in which case the mixture is forbidden to all save priests, or does not, in which case the mixture is permitted to all.

(2) E.g., where one of the substances was flesh of an unclean animal, or where both substances separately are permitted but when mixed are forbidden to all, e.g., milk food mixed with meat.

(3) I.e., the flavour of the forbidden substance is neutralized and lost if the bulk of the permitted substance is sixty times as large as the bulk of the forbidden substance.
(4) So in cur. edd. In MS.M.: R. Aha b. Rab. Most probably it should be: R. Aha b. Raba, who was a contemporary of Rabina and R. Ashi.

(5) If two substances, one permitted and the other forbidden, were salted together they are regarded as having been roasted (or cooked? v. infra) together.

(6) If substances were preserved in vinegar and in spices for at least twenty-four hours they are regarded as having been cooked together.

(7) And therefore meat salted together with the sciatic nerve is permitted just as if it was roasted with it; so that Rabina's view cannot be upheld.

(8) To ascertain whether the permitted substance is sixty times as much as the forbidden substance or not.

(9) All these should be included to make up the sixty-fold as against the forbidden substance.

(10) One should reckon the volume of the thickness of the pot as well as the quantity of meat and broth etc. in order to make up the required sixty-fold.

(11) The absorption of the pot is considered to be the difference in the weight between the raw flesh and the flesh when cooked.

(12) Except the sciatic nerve, for which the standard is ‘meat and turnips’, v. our Mishnah.

(13) If by substituting onions or leeks for the amount of the forbidden substance the taste of the onions or leeks could be felt in the rest of the stew of the pot, the contents of the pot would be prohibited on account of the forbidden substance, which evidently imparts its flavour so that it can be felt. This method was resorted to before the standard of sixty-fold was fixed.

(14) I.e., there must be sixty times the volume of the forbidden nerve.

(15) If an udder which was not emptied of its milk was cooked together with meat, the entire contents of the pot would be forbidden unless there was in the pot sixty times as much as the milk of the udder. (The quantity of milk in the udder is regarded as equal to the volume of the udder). Now the udder can also be included to make up this sixty-fold since it is not the udder that is forbidden but only the milk contained in it. In other words, there must be in the pot fifty-nine times the quantity of the udder; v. infra 109a.

(16) Of an unclean bird which was boiled with eggs of clean birds. V. infra.

(17) Even though the pot contained sixty times the quantity of the udder, in which case everything else in the pot is permitted, the udder itself is forbidden, for the meat in the pot imparted its flavour into it.

(18) For the actual forbidden substance has now been removed from the pot, and the question is only with regard to the essence that exuded from it.

(19) Sc. any forbidden substance which was cooked with sixty times as much permitted food and which when taken out subsequently fell into another pot of meat which did not contain the sixty-fold. According to Tosaf. this question deals specifically with the case of the udder mentioned above.

(20) For the essence and flavour of the forbidden substance has entirely exuded and has become neutralized and nullified in the first pot, consequently it cannot render forbidden any other foodstuff.

(21) The neutralization in the first pot only came about gradually, so that before there was the necessary sixty-fold it was forbidden; accordingly the forbidden substance is always regarded as a piece of nebelah which renders forbidden the contents of any and every pot into which it fell.

(22) I.e., an egg when cooked with others imparts a flavour in them.

Talmud - Mas. Chullin 98a

with an egg which contained a chicken,¹ but not with an egg of an unclean bird.

He raised an objection against him. [It was taught:] If clean eggs were cooked with unclean eggs and the latter can impart a flavour in the others, they are all forbidden!² — Here, too, we must suppose that they contained in them chickens. Why then are they called ‘unclean’? — Since they contain chickens they are called ‘unclean’. But surely since the following clause [deals with eggs containing chickens, for it reads]. ‘If eggs were cooked together and in one of them was found a chicken, and this one can impart its flavour into the others, all are forbidden’, it follows that the first clause deals with eggs which do not contain chickens! — The one clause is merely explanatory of the other thus: ‘If clean eggs were cooked with unclean eggs and the latter can impart a flavour in the others, all are forbidden; as for instance, if they were cooked together and in one of them was found a chicken’. This indeed stands to reason. For if you assume that the first clause deals with eggs that have no chickens in them, seeing that the exudation of eggs that have no chickens in them can render forbidden, is it necessary to teach this in the case where they had chickens in them? — This is not a conclusive argument. It may be that the second clause was stated to make clear the first: lest you might think that the first clause deals with eggs that have chickens in them, leaving us to infer that if they had no chickens in them all the eggs would be permitted, he therefore adds the second clause which deals with eggs that have chickens in them, which shows that the first clause speaks of eggs that have no chickens in them, and even so render the others forbidden.

An olive's bulk of [forbidden] fat once fell into a pot of meat. R. Ashi intended to include in the measuring [all the meat] that was absorbed in the [sides of the] pot, whereupon the Rabbis said to R. Ashi: Has it absorbed only that which is permitted and not that which is forbidden?

A half an olive's bulk of [forbidden] fat once fell into a pot of meat. Mar the son of R. Ashi intended to measure it by the standard of thirty-fold, whereupon his father said to him, ‘Have I not told you not to treat lightly the standard measures [even in matters which are forbidden only] by Rabbinic ruling? Moreover, R. Johanan has declared that half the legal quantity [of a forbidden matter] is forbidden by the law of the Torah’.

R. Shaman b. Abba said in the name of R. Idi b. Idi b. Gershom who said it in the name of Levi b. Perata who said it in the name of R. Nahum who said it in the name of R. Biraim who said it in the name of a certain old man whose name was R. Jacob, as follows: Those of the Nasi's house said: A forbidden egg among sixty eggs renders them all forbidden, a forbidden egg among sixty-one eggs renders them all permitted. Thereupon R. Zera said to R. Shaman b. Abba: Look, you are stating a definite point at which they are permitted, whereas the two greatest men of the day did not give a definite ruling on this matter. For R. Jacob b. Idi and R. Samuel b. Nahmani both reported in the name of R. Joshua b. Levi that a forbidden egg among sixty eggs rendered them all forbidden, and a forbidden egg among sixty-one eggs rendered them all permitted. And when the question was put to them: Does ‘sixty-one’ include it [the forbidden egg] or exclude it? they were unable to give a definite answer; and you seem to be so certain of it! It was stated: R. Helbo said in the name of R. Huna: With regard to a [forbidden] egg [cooked with permitted ones], if there were sixty besides this one they are forbidden, but if there were sixty-one besides this one they are permitted.

A certain man once came before R. Gamaliel the son of Rabbi [with his case]. Said [R. Gamaliel]: Did not my father [permit such a case] by the standard of forty-seven-fold? Then I might just as well be satisfied with forty-five-fold.

A certain man once came before R. Simeon the son of Rabbi [with his case]. I said [R. Simeon]: Did not my father [permit such a case] by the standard of forty-five-fold? Then I might just as well be satisfied with forty-three-fold.

A certain man once came before R. Hiyya [with his case]. Said [R. Hiyya]: But there is not here thirty-fold! The reason then [why he declared it forbidden] was because there was not thirty-fold, but if there was thirty-fold could we then adopt this standard? — R. Hanina answered: It was merely an exaggerated expression.

R. Hiyya b. Abba said in the name of R. Joshua b. Levi who said it in the name of Bar Kappara: All prohibited substances of the Torah are [neutralized] in sixty-fold. Thereupon R. Samuel son of R. Isaac said to him: Master, do you say so? But R. Assi stated in the name of R. Joshua b. Levi who said it in the name of Bar Kappara. All prohibited substances of the Torah are [neutralized] in a hundred-fold. Now both derived their views from ‘the cooked shoulder’, as it is written: And the priest shall take the cooked shoulder. And it was taught. ‘Cooked’

(1) The exudation from the egg is of no consequence, it is as mere water, but that of the chicken within the egg is of consequence.
(2) Tosaf. Terum. IX.
(3) Which was cooking on the fire.
(4) For if it is to be assumed that the meat in the pot has been diminished by the absorption in the pot, then the bulk of fat has likewise been diminished. In fact one should not take into consideration the absorption of the pot at all, and the measuring must take into account only the visible contents of the pot.
(5) Since there was not the minimum legal quantity (i.e., an olive's bulk, v. Yoma 73b) of forbidden fat, he was inclined not to insist on the sixty-fold standard, but was prepared to permit the meat in the pot even though it was only thirty times as much as the fat.
(6) The sixty-fold standard must be adhered to even though there was only half an olive's bulk of the forbidden substance, for, according to R. Johanan, even this quantity is forbidden by the Torah, v. Yoma 73b. The minimum legal quantity of an olive's bulk is necessary only to render the offender liable to stripes.
(7) I.e., an egg in which a chicken had developed. So throughout this passage.
(8) All the other eggs being, of course, permitted ones.
(9) Viz., a half-olive's bulk of a forbidden substance was cooked with permitted food.
(10) Since in this and in the following cases the amount of forbidden substance was less than the minimum legal quantity, the standard of sixty-fold is not rigidly adhered to but smaller standards e.g., of forty-seven-fold, forty-five-fold and forty-three-fold would suffice to render the mixture permitted. According to another interpretation in Rashi the reverse decision is arrived at thus: ‘My father did not adopt a standard of forty-seven-fold, shall I then permit by the standard of forty-five-fold’? The case, accordingly, was of an entire olive's bulk that was cooked with permitted food.
(11) Surely not.
(12) What he meant to say was that there was no question of neutralization in this case for there was not even thirty-fold!
(13) Provided the taste of the forbidden substance can no longer be felt in the mixture, for so long as the taste can be felt it will not become neutralized (Rashi). V. however Tosaf. s.v. k.f.
(14) Num. VI, 19. The shoulder of the ram of the Nazirite's sacrifice was given to the priests to be eaten by priests only, but the rest of the sacrifice was consumed by the owners.

Talmud - Mas. Chullin 98b

implies that it must be whole. R. Simeon b. Yohai says. ‘Cooked’ implies that it must have been cooked together with the ram. Now in fact both agree that it must be cooked with the ram, but [they differ in the following]: one holds that it must first be cut away and then cooked, and the other holds that it must first be cooked and then cut away. Alternatively, I can say, all agree that it must first be cut away and then cooked, but [they differ in this]: one holds that it must be cooked together with the ram [in the same pot], and the other holds that it must be cooked in a separate pot. Now according to the first version from either view and according to the second version from the view of R. Simeon b. Yohai [can the required standard be derived]. He who holds the sixty-fold standard maintains that the flesh and bone [of the shoulder] must be measured against the flesh and bone [of the ram], and the latter is sixty times as much as the former. But he who holds the hundred-fold standard maintains that only the flesh [of the shoulder] must be measured against the flesh [of the ram] and the latter is a hundred times as much as the former.

But can one derive the standard from the above? Surely it has been taught: This is a case of a substance being permitted even though it has absorbed a forbidden substance. Now what does ‘this’ exclude? Presumably it excludes every other substance which has absorbed any matter forbidden by the Torah? — Abaye answered, [The exclusion] was necessary only according to R. Judah who maintains that [in all other cases] homogeneous substances cannot neutralize each other; hence we are taught that here they do neutralize each other. But why does he not infer the rule from here? — Because the Divine Law has expressly stated: And he shall take of the blood of the bullock and of the blood of the goat, which shows that though they are both [mixed up] together one does not neutralize the other. But why do you prefer to infer [the rule of non-neutralization of homogeneous substances] from this [verse] rather than from the other? Because that is an anomaly, and one cannot draw any inferences from an anomaly. If so, how may we infer [the rule of neutralization] in hundredfold or in sixty-fold from it? — Forsooth, do we infer leniency from it? We infer a restriction, for according to the rule of the Torah a substance is neutralized in a bare majority [of other substances].

Raba answered: [The exclusion] was necessary with reference to the rule that the taste of a forbidden substance is treated as the substance itself. Now as this [sc. the taste] is forbidden in the case of consecrated matter, we are therefore taught that here it is permitted.

---

(1) The inference from the word ‘cooked’ is obscure (Rashi).
(2) The first Tanna and R. Simeon b. Yohai.
(3) The first Tanna maintains that the shoulder must be cut away from the ram and then cooked in the same pot as the ram. And the term ‘whole’ implies that the shoulder must in no wise be cut up in pieces. So Rashi; according to Tosaf. s.v. יַעֲבֹר, this is the opinion of R. Simeon b. Yohai.
(4) R. Simeon b. Yohai maintains that the shoulder must be cut away only after the whole ram has been cooked. According to Tosaf. this is the opinion of the first Tanna.
(5) R. Simeon b. Yohai.
(6) Either the sixty-fold or hundred-fold standard. It must be observed that in the case of the ram of the Nazirite sacrifice resort must be had to the principle of neutralization and it must be assumed that the essence and flavour of the shoulder, which is forbidden to all but priests, is nullified by the rest of the flesh of the ram, for otherwise the Nazirite, an Israelite, would not be allowed to partake of the flesh of the ram since it must be cooked together with the shoulder according to both views in the first version, or according to the view of R. Simeon b. Yohai in the second version.
(7) For the shoulder consists in the greater part of bone and has but little flesh on it, and the Rabbis have estimated that if taken bulk for bulk the ram would be only sixty times as much as the shoulder, but if only the proportion of the flesh is considered it will be found that the ram is one hundred times as much as the flesh of the shoulder.
(8) Sc. the ram of the Nazirite sacrifice.
(9) I.e., the forbidden shoulder.
(10) I.e., that neutralization does not take place. So that the principle of neutralization either in sixty-fold or in a hundred, fold cannot be derived from here.
(11) Even though the shoulder and the rest of the ram are homogeneous substances. One can however derive from here the principle of neutralization with regard to heterogeneous substances.
(12) Why does not R. Judah infer from the case of the ram of the Nazirite sacrifice that in all cases homogeneous substances can neutralize each other?
(13) Lev. XVI, 18. The blood of the goat, although mixed with the blood of the bullock and though considerably less in quantity than the blood of the bullock, nevertheless retains its identity and is not neutralized by the latter, obviously because they are homogeneous substances and cannot neutralize each other.
(14) I.e., from the case of the ram of the Nazirite sacrifice. The inference from this case would be that even homogeneous substances can neutralize each other.
(15) In that the Torah allows at the outset the neutralization of a forbidden substance, contrary to all Rabbinic dicta. V. Bez. 4b.
(16) In respect of heterogeneous substances according to R. Judah, or in respect of all substances according to the Rabbis. V. supra p. 549, n. 5.
(17) But for the inference from the ram of the Nazirite, we should have acted in accordance with the Biblical principle, ‘Decide the issue according to the majority’, based on Ex. XXIII, 2. One may infer conditions of stringency (namely, that there must be sixty times or a hundred times the quantity of the prohibited substance) even from an anomaly.
(18) In the statement ‘This is a case of a substance etc.’.
(19) Even though the taste is barely perceptible and is certainly less than one sixtieth or one hundredth part of the entire mixture. (Rashi, but see Tosaf. ad loc.).
(20) Sc. in the case of the ram of the Nazirite sacrifice.
Likewise with regard to unconsecrated matter the taste is neutralized either in sixty-fold or in hundred-fold.

Talmud - Mas. Chullin 99a

Why then does he not infer the rule from this? — Because the Divine Law has expressly stated with regard to the sin-offering. Whatsoever shall touch the flesh thereof shall be holy, that is to say, [it shall be] as [the sin-offering] itself. If the latter is ritually unfit to be eaten, the other is also unfit, and if it is permitted, the other is also permitted to be eaten but only under the conditions of stringency as [the sin-offering] itself. But why do you prefer to infer it from this [verse] rather than from the other? — Because that is an anomaly, and one cannot draw any inferences from an anomaly. If so, how may we infer [the rule of neutralization] in hundred-fold or in sixty-fold from it? — Forsooth, do we infer leniency from it? We infer a restriction, for according to the rule of the Torah a substance is neutralized in a bare majority of other substances.

Rabina said: The [exclusion] was necessary only in regard to the side of the cut; for generally it is said that the side of the cut is forbidden but here it is permitted.

R. Dimi was sitting and reciting this statement [of R. Samuel b. R. Isaac] when Abaye said to him: Are then all forbidden substances of the Torah neutralized only in hundred-fold? Surely we have learnt: With regard to what did they say that every [substance of terumah] which leavens, or flavours, or is mixed with [common food], must be treated with stringency? It is with regard to homogeneous substances. [And with regard to what did they say that every substance of terumah which leavens etc.] must be treated with leniency as well as with stringency? It is with regard to heterogeneous substances. And in the next clause it reads: With regard to heterogeneous substances there is leniency as well as stringency — thus if crushed beans [of terumah] were cooked with lentils [of common food] and they impart a flavour [to the lentils], the whole is forbidden, whether there was so little [of the beans] as to be neutralized in a hundred and one or not. If they do not impart a flavour [to the lentils] they are permitted, whether there was so little [of the beans] as to be neutralized in a hundred and one or not. Now in the case where there was not so little [of the beans] as to be neutralized in a hundred and one, is it not to be assumed [that there was little enough to be neutralized] in sixty?

(1) Sc. from the case of the ram of the Nazirite sacrifice which is also consecrated matter; and the inference would be that even consecrated matter is neutralized in sixty-fold or hundred-fold.
(2) Lev. VI, 20. I.e., whatsoever shall have absorbed from the flesh of the sin-offering, however minute, must be treated as the sin-offering itself, for the taste or essence of the sin-offering can never be neutralized.
(3) V. Pes., (Sonc. ed.,) p. 212 and notes.
(4) That which has absorbed from the sin-offering.
(5) V. Zeb. 97b. The sin-offering could be eaten only by the males of the priesthood, within the hangings of the Sanctuary, the same day and the evening following until midnight. With regard to other sacrificial meat less stringent regulations obtained. From this verse, quoted in the text, is derived the rule that a consecrated substance can never be neutralized. Hence an inference from the ram of the Nazirite to the contrary cannot be made.
(6) Sc. the rule that consecrated matter can never be neutralized, for the taste thereof is as the substance itself.
(7) V. supra p. 550, n. 8.
(8) V. supra p. 550, n. 1, 2 and 3.
(9) V. supra 68b. Whenever a matter is partly permitted and partly forbidden and it is necessary to separate these parts, when they are cut away from each other the surface of the cut on the side of the permitted part which was in contact with the forbidden part must be pared off.
(10) So that when the shoulder is cut away from the rest of the ram there is no necessity to pare off the surface of the cut.
(11) Supra p. 548.
(12) V. ‘Orlah II, 6, 7.
(13) This is the standard quantity for neutralizing terumah in any mixture, derived from Num. XVIII, 29; cf. Sifre on that verse. The rule here is one of stringency for even though there were a hundred and one times as much lentils as the beans of terumah, the mixture is forbidden because of the flavour that is still perceptible.

(14) This is a rule of leniency in that the standard of a hundred and one is not insisted upon in the case where the flavour of the terumah substance is not perceptible. This lenient rule applies only to a mixture of heterogeneous substances, but in the case of a mixture of homogeneous substances conditions of stringency always obtain; and in order that a mixture of homogeneous substances be permitted, two conditions are essential, first the absence of any flavour of the terumah substance, and secondly the requisite standard of a hundred and one; v. infra.

(15) And in such a case the mixture would be permitted provided that the flavour of the terumah substance was not perceptible. Hence it is evident that the standard of neutralization where the flavour is not perceptible is sixty-fold, contra R. Dimi who quoted R. Samuel b. R. Isaac.

Talmud - Mas. Chullin 99b

No, [it could be neutralized] in a hundred.¹ But surely since the first clause deals with neutralization in a hundred the second deals with neutralization in sixty!² For it reads in the first [clause as follows]: With regard to homogeneous substances there is always stringency — thus if wheaten leaven [of terumah] fell into wheaten dough [of common food], and there was sufficient of it to leaven the dough,³ it is forbidden, whether there was so little of the leaven as to be neutralized in a hundred and one or not. If there was not so little of the leaven as to be neutralized in a hundred and one, it is forbidden, whether it could leaven the dough or not.⁴ Can it then be said that both the first and second clauses are [alike in that neutralization takes place only] in a hundred?⁵ — No, the first clause deals with neutralization in a hundred and one,⁶ whereas the second clause deals with neutralization in a hundred.⁷ Why is it then, where there were a hundred and one times [the quantity of the forbidden leaven], even though it can still leaven the dough, that it is not neutralized?⁸ He [R. Dimi] remained silent. Said [Abaye] to him: Perhaps it is different with leaven for leaven is very sharp! Said [R. Dimi] to him: You have now reminded me of that statement of R. Jose son of R. Hanina, viz., Not all standards are alike,⁹ for in the case of brine the standard of neutralization is almost two hundred. For we have learnt:¹⁰ [Where unclean fish was pickled together with clean fish, if in a barrel holding two se'ahs there was the weight of ten zuz Judean measure (which is five selas' Galilean measure)] of unclean fish, the brine thereof is forbidden. R. Judah says. [It is forbidden if there was] a quarter log [of unclean brine] in two se'ahs [clean brine]. But has not R. Judah said that homogeneous substances cannot be neutralized? — It is different with brine for it is only the moisture¹² [of the fish].

HOW DOES ONE MEASURE THIS? R. Huna said: As if it were meat [cooked] with turnip-heads.¹³ Our Mishnah is not in agreement with the following Tanna, for it was taught: R. Ishmael the son of R. Johanan b. Beroka says that nerves cannot impart a flavour.¹⁴

When a person [with such a case] came to R. Ammi he would always send him to R. Isaac b. Halob who used to rule that it was permitted on the authority of R. Joshua b. Levi, although he [R. Ammi] himself was not of that opinion.

The law is: Nerves cannot impart a flavour.

IF THE SCIATIC NERVE WAS COOKED WITH OTHER NERVES etc. Why is it not neutralized in the larger quantity [of other nerves]?¹⁶ —
(1) So that in the case of a mixture of heterogeneous substances and in the absence of any flavour from the forbidden substance the standard of neutralization of a hundred (instead of a hundred and one) would be adopted as sufficient.

(2) Since it has been clearly laid down that a mixture of homogeneous substances is always to be treated with stringency, which is not the case with heterogeneous substances, and since in the case of a homogeneous mixture, in the absence of a perceptible flavour, a standard of a hundred would be adopted as sufficient to render the mixture permitted, it follows that with regard to a mixture of heterogeneous substances even this standard would not be required, but a standard of sixty-fold would be regarded as sufficient.

(3) This is identical with the expression ‘and it imparts a flavour in the dough’.

(4) If, however, there was not sufficient of the leaven to serve for the dough, and there was the standard of a hundred and one, the mixture would be permitted even though it consisted of homogeneous substances. It is assumed, for the present, that by ‘the standard of a hundred and one’ is meant a hundred parts of the permitted substance to one part of the forbidden substance.

(5) This cannot be, for neutralization in connection with heterogeneous substance is of a lenient character and presumably a standard of sixty-fold would be sufficient.

(6) In other words the assumption that ‘the standard of a hundred and one’ meant a hundred parts of one to one part of the other was erroneous, for by ‘the standard of a hundred and one’ is meant a hundred and one parts of the permitted substance to one part of the other.

(7) V. supra p. 552, n. 4.

(8) Surely the flavour of the leaven would not be perceptible if there were a hundred and one times as much dough as leaven.

(9) The standard of neutralization varies according to the nature of the forbidden substance.

(10) V. Ter. X, 8. Ten zuz is one part in nine hundred and sixty of two se'ahs (one se'ah is twenty-four logs; one log is two litras; one litra is one hundred zuz).

(11) I.e., a proportion of one in one hundred and ninety-two. (One se'ah is six kabs, and one kab is four logs). If, however, the proportion of the substances was less than this (e.g., if the forbidden substance was one in two hundred), the mixture would be permitted, even though the substances are of like kind.

(12) As it is forbidden only by Rabbinic injunction R. Judah allows neutralization with regard to it.

(13) Or ‘turnip roots’ (Tosaf.). V. supra p. 540, n. 1.

(14) And if cooked with meat it need only be removed and the meat is permitted, for the nerve is as dry as wood and cannot impart a flavour. According to our Mishnah even though the nerve has been removed the meat would be forbidden because of the flavour of the nerve.

(15) With the case where the sciatic nerve was cooked together with meat.

(16) In the case where the sciatic nerve was not recognizable.

Talmud - Mas. Chullin 100a

It is different with the case of a separate entity.¹

AND SO IT IS WITH A PIECE OF NEBELAH etc. Why is it not neutralized in the larger quantity [of the other substances in the mixture]? Now this is well according to him who says that the expression ‘whatsoever one is wont to count’² was used;³ but according to him who says that the expression ‘[only] that which one is wont to count’⁴ was used, what shall we say? — It is different with a whole piece since it is suitable to be offered to guests.⁵ Now both cases were necessary to be stated [in the Mishnah]. For if we were taught only the case of the [sciatic] nerve, [we should have said that it is not neutralized] because it is a specific entity, but this is not so with the case of a piece [of meat]; and if we were taught the case of a piece [of meat we should have said that it is not neutralized] because it is a piece suitable to be offered to guests, but this is not so with the case of the [sciatic] nerve. Therefore both cases were necessary [to be stated].

Rabbah b. Bar Hana stated in a public lecture: A piece of nebelah⁶ or a piece of an unclean fish⁶ will not render forbidden [the mixture in which it is] until it imparts a flavour to the broth, in the sediments and in the pieces [of the stew]. Rab thereupon appointed an Amora who stated as follows: As soon as it [the piece of nebelah] imparted its flavour to one piece that piece itself is rendered [forbidden] like nebelah., and it in turn renders all the other pieces forbidden for they are of like kind. R. Safra said to Abaye. Consider, Rab's ruling agrees, does it not, with the opinion of R. Judah who maintained that homogeneous substances cannot neutralize each other [in a mixture]? Why then [does he declare], 'As soon as it imparted its flavour'? Surely even if it did not impart any flavour to it it would also [render the entire contents of the pot forbidden]?11 — He replied: We are dealing here with the case where he straightway removed it. Raba replied,

(1) Since it is complete in itself it will not be neutralized in any quantity, however large.
(2) In M. ‘Orlah III, 6, 7 in the list of substances which are not neutralized in any quantity, however large.
(3) All things which a man might sell by number, even though this is not the invariable practice with regard to them for a man might sell them by weight or by bulk too, are not neutralized in any quantity. Pieces of meat, too, a man might sell by number, and therefore would come within the category of substances which do not become neutralized in a larger quantity.
(4) Whatevsoever is more comprehensive than that. According to the former teaching neutralization is not permitted in the case of objects which are regarded as of sufficiently high commercial value to be sold in units rather than in bulk. According to the latter teaching neutralization is permitted in all cases except those where the objects are of such high value as not to be sold save by counting single units. Those things, however, which are sold by weight as well as by number would be neutralized in the larger mixture. v. Yeb. (Soc. ed.) p. 551, n. 11. The question therefore remains, why is not the piece of nebelah neutralized in the larger mixture?
(5) Being a piece suitable for presentation it will never lose its identity or be neutralized in any quantity, however large.
(6) Which was recognizable in the mixture and so was removed therefrom. The only consideration being the essence or flavour that exuded from it.
(7) ‘Speaker’, ‘interpreter’; the person who attended upon the lecturer for the purpose of expounding at length and in popular style the main points of the discourse given to him by the latter.
(8) Sc. the piece which was first in the pot together with the piece of nebelah before the other pieces were put in, or the piece which was nearest the piece of nebelah and which therefore absorbed most of the essence of the latter.
(9) Since it was not sixty times as large as the piece of nebelah.
(10) Even though the other pieces in the pot were as much as sixty times the volume of the piece of nebelah plus the one next to it.
(11) For the forbidden substance is of the same kind as the rest of the contents of the pot.
(12) The piece of nebelah as well as the broth in the pot was removed before the other pieces were put in, leaving behind only one piece. If this piece therefore which remained contains the flavour of the nebelah, it is then regarded as nebelah itself and will render forbidden the pieces which are subsequently put in with it.

Talmud - Mas. Chullin 100b

You may even say that he did not remove it at once, but this is a case of one kind being mixed with a like kind and also with a different kind, and wherever one kind is mixed with a like and also with a different kind you must disregard the like kind as if it were not present, and if the different kind is more [than the forbidden substance] it will neutralize it.2

MISHNAH. IT APPLIES TO CLEAN ANIMALS BUT NOT TO UNCLEAN. R. JUDAH SAYS, EVEN TO UNCLEAN ANIMALS. R. JUDAH ARGUED, WAS NOT THE SCIATIC NERVE PROHIBITED FROM THE TIME OF THE SONS OF JACOB, AND AT THAT TIME UNCLEAN ANIMALS WERE STILL PERMITTED TO THEM? THEY REPLIED, THIS LAW WAS ORDAINED AT SINAI BUT WAS WRITTEN IN ITS PROPER PLACE.

GEMARA. Is R. Judah of the opinion that a prohibition can be superimposed upon an existing prohibition? Surely it has been taught: R. Judah says: I might have thought that the carcass of an unclean bird whilst in the gullet should render clothes unclean, the verse therefore reads: That which dieth of itself or is not of beasts he shall not eat to defile himself therewith,\(^9\) that is to say, this\(^10\) applies only to that [carcass] which bears the prohibition of eating nebelah but not to that which does not bear the prohibition of eating nebelah but the prohibition of eating what is unclean!\(^11\) Should you, however, say that he [R. Judah] is of the opinion that nerves do not impart a flavour, so that in the case [where one ate the nerve] of an unclean animal there is only the prohibition of the nerve but not the prohibition of [eating] what is unclean;\(^12\) but are we right in assuming that R. Judah is of the opinion that nerves do not impart a flavour? Behold it has been taught: If a person ate the sciatic nerve of an unclean animal, R. Judah declares that he has incurred guilt twice;\(^13\) but R. Simeon holds that he has not incurred guilt at all?\(^14\) — In truth he [R. Judah] is of the opinion that nerves do impart a flavour, but he also holds that it [sc. the prohibition of the sciatic nerve] applies to a foetus too, so that the prohibition of the nerve and the prohibition on account of uncleanness come into force simultaneously.\(^15\) But how can you assume [that R. Judah holds] it applies to a foetus? Behold we have learnt: It\(^16\) also applies to a foetus; but R. Judah says: It does not apply to a foetus. And its fat is permitted! — That is so only with regard to a clean animal concerning which the Divine Law declares: Everything . . . in the beast ye may eat,\(^17\) but with regard to an unclean animal the prohibition of the nerve applies. But again how can you assume that both [prohibitions] come into force simultaneously? Behold we have learnt: By reason of uncleanness contracted from the following sources the Nazirite must shave [his head]: a corpse, an olive's bulk of [the flesh of] a corpse, etc.] And the question was asked: If he must shave [his head] on account of an olive's bulk of a corpse, then surely he must shave [his head] on account of an entire corpse! But R. Johanan answered that it was only necessary [to mention the corpse itself] for the case of an abortion whose limbs were not yet knit together by nerves. Hence we see that the prohibition of uncleanness comes first!\(^19\) — Notwithstanding the fact that the prohibition of uncleanness comes first the prohibition of the nerve can indeed be superimposed, because this latter prohibition is binding even upon the sons of Noah.\(^20\) And this is precisely implied [in the teaching of the Mishnah]: R. JUDAH ARGUED, WAS NOT THE SCIATIC NERVE PROHIBITED FROM THE TIME OF THE SONS OF JACOB, AND AT THAT TIME UNCLEAN ANIMALS WERE STILL PERMITTED TO THEM?

The [above] text [stated]: ‘If a person ate the sciatic nerve of an unclean animal, R. Judah declares that he has incurred guilt twice;
Lev. XXII, 8. In the Sifra and in Nid. 42b this verse has been interpreted as referring to the carcass of a bird.

I.e., this peculiar and unique form of defilement; v. supra II, 5.

V. Nid. 42b. It is thus evident that the prohibition of nebelah cannot be superimposed upon the pre-existing prohibition of an unclean bird.

The sciatic nerve of an unclean animal is only forbidden qua nerve and not as unclean meat, for the nerve is tasteless and hard as wood.

Obviously because by eating the nerve he has also eaten of the meat of an unclean animal.

Pes. 22a.

I.e., at the time of the formation of the embryo in the womb. As both prohibitions come into force simultaneously one is liable for the transgression of both.

Sc. the prohibition of the sciatic nerve. V. supra folio 89b.

Deut. XIV, 6. Every part of the foetus that is within the womb of the dam may be eaten, the nerve as well as fat: so according to R. Judah. This verse applies only to clean beasts, i.e., those which may be eaten, but not to unclean beasts.

V. supra 89b.

For the abortion is forbidden as an unclean animal before the formation of the nerves.

Where the later prohibition is more stringent in that it applies to a larger number of people than the existing prohibition, it can be superimposed upon the latter. And the sciatic nerve (as stated by R. Judah in the Mishnah) was forbidden to all the sons of Noah, for it was declared forbidden even before the giving of the Torah at Sinai to the sons of Jacob who at that time were deemed sons of Noah.

Talmud - Mas. Chullin 101a

but R. Simeon holds that he has not incurred guilt at all. But whatever you think is the opinion of R. Simeon [there is always a difficulty]! If he holds that one prohibition can be superimposed upon a pre-existing prohibition, then he should have incurred guilt on account of the nerve too; and if he holds that one prohibition cannot be superimposed upon a pre-existing prohibition, then he should have incurred guilt on account of uncleanness, for that came first; and if he holds that nerves do not impart a flavour, then he should have incurred guilt [at least] on account of the nerve! — Raba answered: In truth he holds that nerves do not impart a flavour, but it is different in that case for the verse says: Therefore the children of Israel eat not the sciatic nerves, that is, the nerve is forbidden but the flesh permitted; this case therefore must be excluded since the nerve would be forbidden and the flesh forbidden too. Rab Judah said in the name of Rab: If a person ate the sciatic nerve of a nebelah he has, according to R. Meir, incurred guilt twice; but the Sages hold that he has incurred guilt once only. The Sages, however, agree with R. Meir that if a person ate the sciatic nerve of a burnt-offering or of an ox that was declared to be stoned he would have incurred guilt twice.

Who is this authority who holds that a comprehensive prohibition alone cannot be superimposed upon an existing prohibition whereas a comprehensive prohibition which also imposes a graver penalty can? — Raba said: It is R. Jose the Galilean. For we have learnt: If a person that was unclean ate either unclean or clean consecrated food, he is liable. R. Jose the Galilean says: If a person that was unclean ate clean consecrated food he is liable, but if he ate unclean consecrated food he is not liable, for he has only eaten what was unclean. They replied to him: Even where he that was unclean ate what was clean, as soon as he touched it he has rendered it unclean! [Now it was asked thereon]: The Rabbis have surely replied well to R. Jose the Galilean? And Raba explained that where the person was rendered unclean and only later the meat was rendered unclean, all agree that he is liable, for the prohibition involving the penalty of kareth came first. They differ only where the meat was first rendered unclean and later the person became unclean. The Rabbis adopt the principle of a comprehensive prohibition, arguing thus: Since he would now be liable for [eating] any piece of [consecrated] food that was clean he is also liable for [eating] a piece that was unclean. R. Jose the Galilean does not adopt the principle of a comprehensive prohibition, for he does not accept the argument ‘since’. But according to R. Jose the Galilean, even though he holds that the comprehensive prohibition which involves only a light penalty cannot [be superimposed upon an [1] Namely, while it was still an embryo in the womb before the formation of the nerves; v. supra n. 1.

(2) And consequently he is not liable for eating the meat of an unclean animal.

(3) In the case of an unclean animal.

(4) Gen. XXXII, 33.

(5) And this was not intended by the verse. Hence the sciatic nerve of an unclean animal is not forbidden qua nerve; neither is it forbidden as part of an unclean animal, for R. Simeon is of the opinion that nerves are tasteless and hard as wood.

(6) For the prohibition of nebelah, which only comes into force when the animal has died, cannot be superimposed upon the already existing prohibition of the sciatic nerve, even though the later prohibition is more comprehensive than the first, in that it applies to every part of the animal.

(7) The prohibition of a burnt-offering or of an ox condemned to be stoned (for having killed a human being, cf. Ex. XXI, 28) can be superimposed upon the existing prohibition of the sciatic nerve, for in the first place it is more comprehensive than the existing prohibition in that it applies to every part of the animal, whereas the existing prohibition applied only to the nerve, and secondly, it imposes a graver restriction, for now the sciatic nerve of the animal is forbidden for all purposes (מַעֲלָה בְּדַבָּר) whereas before it was only forbidden to be eaten.

(8) The opinion expressed above as that of ‘the Sages’.

(9) To the penalty of kareth (cf. Lev. VII, 20, 21) if he did so deliberately, or to bring a sin-offering if he did so inadvertently.

(10) And for eating consecrated food that was unclean there is only the penalty of stripes but not kareth.

(11) And yet he is liable. V. Zeb. 106a.

(12) V. p. 60, n. 4.

(13) As soon as a person has become unclean he is precluded from eating consecrated food under the penalty of kareth, and this restriction enforced by the penalty of kareth is not removed even if the consecrated meat has subsequently become unclean.

(14) When consecrated meat is rendered unclean all are precluded from eating it under the penalty of stripes, and if subsequently a person becomes unclean he is still precluded from eating the unclean meat but now under the penalty of kareth; moreover, the restriction in his case now is comprehensive in that he is now precluded from all consecrated food, clean as well as unclean.

(15) Sc. the person that is unclean.

(16) Whereas the unclean person would become clean after immersion in a ritual bath (טּוּבָה). The position therefore is that although R. Jose maintains generally that a comprehensive prohibition cannot be superimposed upon an existing prohibition there is no reason to suppose that he would hold this view in respect of a comprehensive prohibition involving a graver restriction. Thus he is in agreement with the view of ‘the Sages’ supra.

Talmud - Mas. Chullin 101b

And does R. Jose the Galilean hold the view that a comprehensive prohibition cannot [be superimposed upon an existing prohibition]? Behold it has been taught: If the Day of Atonement happened to fall on the Sabbath and a person inadvertently did work thereon, whence do we know that he is guilty for each separately? Because it is written: It is a sabbath, and also: It is the day of atonement, so R. Jose the Galilean. R. Akiba says: He has only incurred guilt once. — Rabin sent [from Palestine the following message] in the name of R. Jose son of R. Hanina: The construction of the teaching is as stated save that the authorities must be reversed. R. Isaac b. Jacob b. Giori sent the following in the name of R. Johanan: According to the view of R. Jose the Galilean, now that we have reversed the authorities, if a person being unaware that it was the Sabbath but knowing full well that it was the Day of Atonement [did work thereon] he is liable, if [he did so] knowing full well that it was the Sabbath but being unaware that it was the Day of Atonement, he is not liable. What is the reason [for this distinction]? — Abaye answered: The Sabbath is fixed and determined from all time, but the Day of Atonement is determined by the Beth Din. Said Raba to him: But in fact both [prohibitions] set in simultaneously! — Rather explained Raba: It was a time of religious persecution, and they sent word from there [Palestine] that the Day of Atonement of that year should be observed on a Sabbath. When Rabin came and also all those who came down [from Palestine to Babylon], they explained it as Raba did.

R. JUDAH ARGUED, WAS NOT THE SCIATIC NERVE FORBIDDEN FROM THE TIME OF THE SONS OF JACOB? etc. It was taught: [The Rabbis] said to R. Judah: Does it say [in the Torah], ‘Therefore the children of Jacob eat not’? Surely it says: Therefore the children of Israel eat not. Now they were first styled the children of Israel only at [the giving of the law at] Sinai; therefore [we must say that] the law [of the sciatic nerve] was given at Sinai, but was written in its present place to indicate the reason why it was prohibited. Raba raised an objection against this. It is written: And the sons of Israel carried Jacob their father! — That was after the incident. R. Aha the son of Raba said to R. Ashi: Then it should be prohibited from that time onwards, should it not? — He replied: Was the Torah given at various times? And that time was neither the time of the incident nor the time of the giving of the Law.

Our Rabbis taught: The [prohibition of eating a] limb [severed] from a living creature applies to cattle, wild beasts and to birds, whether they be clean or unclean: so R. Judah and R. Eleazar; but the Sages say: It applies only to the clean animals. Said R. Johanan: Both views were inferred from the same verse, viz., Only be steadfast in not eating the blood, for the blood is the life;

(1) And must bring two sin-offerings, i.e., for breaking the Sabbath and also for profaning the Day of Atonement.
(2) Lev. XXIII, 3.
(3) Ibid. 27. Here the prohibitions of the Sabbath and of the Day of Atonement come into force simultaneously, i.e., on the Friday evening after sunset; nevertheless R. Jose regards the person guilty for transgressing both prohibitions. Now if R. Jose were to hold that a comprehensive prohibition or one that involves a graver penalty can be superimposed upon an existing prohibition, then it is clear to understand his view here with regard to simultaneous prohibitions; since whichever of the two prohibitions were to set in first the other could be superimposed. For the Sabbath involves a graver penalty than that of the Day of Atonement (the former death and the latter kareth); and, on the other hand, the prohibition of the Day of Atonement is more comprehensive than that of the Sabbath (on the Sabbath only work is prohibited whilst on the Day of Atonement eating is also prohibited). If, however, R. Jose were to hold that a comprehensive prohibition or one that involves a graver penalty cannot be superimposed upon an existing prohibition, what is his reason here for holding that two prohibitions can come into force simultaneously?
(4) Tosef. Ker. II.
(5) And it was R. Jose who said that the offender had only incurred guilt once; for according to R. Jose in no circumstances can a prohibition be superimposed upon another prohibition, whether both come into force simultaneously or the later one is a comprehensive prohibition or one that involves a graver penalty.
(6) To bring a sin-offering for breaking the Sabbath inadvertently.
(7) It is therefore considered as if the Sabbath set in first, so that the prohibition of the Day of Atonement cannot be superimposed upon the existing prohibition of the Sabbath. Consequently the only prohibition that enters into consideration is that of the Sabbath, and if a person did work knowing full well that it was the Sabbath, he is not liable to bring a sin-offering, for no offering may be brought for a deliberate transgression.
(8) The original statement of R. Isaac b. Jacob had no reference to the opinion of R. Jose the Galilean, but dealt with a special ease that arose because of religious persecution.
(9) And the observance of the Day of Atonement in its proper time was proscribed.
(10) Although that day was not the correct date of the Day of Atonement. Consequently any breach of the sanctity of that day can only be considered as a transgression of the Sabbath but not as a transgression of the Day of Atonement.
(11) Gen. XXXII, 33.
(12) Ibid. XLVI,5. The reference is to the children of Jacob carrying their father to Egypt; thus they are styled ‘the children of Israel’ before the giving of the Law at mount Sinai.
(13) When Jacob wrestled with the angel, after which incident God changed his name from Jacob to Israel.
(14) I.e., from the time that they were first designated ‘children of Israel’, that is, when Jacob was taken to Egypt.
(15) V. p. 563, n. 8.
(16) A particular law could have been ordained either generally at the giving of the Law at Sinai, or specially, even before Sinai, at the occurrence of the event that gave rise to that law, but at no other period.

Talmud - Mas. Chullin 102a

and thou shalt not eat the life with the flesh. R. Judah and R. Eleazar hold that where you are forbidden the blood [of an animal] you are also forbidden the limbs severed therefrom, and as you are forbidden the blood of unclean animals² you are also forbidden the limbs severed therefrom. The Sages, however, maintain: It is written: ‘And thou shalt not eat the life with the flesh’, but the flesh alone [you may eat]; therefore, where you are permitted the flesh [of the animal] you are forbidden the limbs severed therefrom, but where you are not permitted the flesh [of the animal] you are not forbidden the limbs severed therefrom.³

Why is the verse necessary to explain R. Judah's view? Surely the prohibition of the ‘limb’ can be superimposed upon the prohibition of uncleanness, since the prohibition of the former applies even to the sons of Noah!⁴ — Indeed this is so, and the verse is necessary only to explain R. Eleazar's view.

It has been taught likewise: The [prohibition of the] limb of a living creature applies to cattle, wild beasts and birds, either clean or unclean, for it is written: ‘Only be steadfast in not eating the blood etc.’, that is to say, where you are forbidden the blood you are also forbidden the limbs severed therefrom, and where you are not forbidden the blood of an animal⁵ you are not forbidden the limbs severed therefrom: so R. Eleazar. The Sages say. It applies only to clean animals, for it is written: ‘Thou shalt not eat the life with the flesh, but the flesh alone [you may eat]; therefore, where you are permitted the flesh you are then forbidden the limbs severed therefrom, but where you are not permitted the flesh you are then not forbidden the limbs severed therefrom. R. Meir says: It applies only to clean cattle. (Mnemonic: Samuel, Shila, Shimi). Rabbah b. Samuel said in the name of R. Hisda or, as some say: R. Joseph; others say. Rabbah b. Shila said in the name of R. Hisda or, as some say. R. Joseph; and others say: Rabbah b. Shimi said in the name of R. Hisda or, as some say. R. Joseph: What is the reason for R. Meir's view? Because the verse reads: Thou shalt kill of thy herd and of thy flock.⁶

R. Giddal said in the name of Rab: The dispute⁷ refers only to an Israelite, but as for a descendant of Noah all agree that he is warned against [eating the limb of] unclean as well as clean animals. It has been taught likewise: As to the limb of a living creature a descendant of Noah is warned against [eating] it, whether it be of a clean or unclean animal, whereas an Israelite is warned only against [eating] the limb of a clean animal. Some read ‘of a clean one’ ⁸ and it is in accordance with R. Meir's view; but others read ‘of clean ones’,⁹ and it is in accordance with the view of the Sages.

R. Shizbi said: We have also learnt it [in the following Mishnah].¹⁰ If a person ate a limb [severed] from it¹¹ whilst alive, he does not suffer forty stripes; and the slaughtering thereof does not render it clean.¹² Of whom is this said? Should you say of an Israelite, but is it not obvious that the slaughtering does not render it clean? It could only have been said of a descendant of Noah,¹³ and this proves that it is forbidden to him. R. Mani b. Pattish pointed out a contradiction between the first clause and the second clause¹⁴ and resolved it thus: The first clause speaks of an Israelite, but the second clause of a descendant of Noah.
Rab [Judah] said [in the name of Rab]: \(^{15}\) The [prohibition of a] limb severed from a living creature requires [at least] an olive's bulk, because the expression ‘eating’\(^{16}\) is used with regard to it. R. ‘Amram raised an objection [against this]. [We have learnt:] If a person ate a limb from it\(^{17}\) whilst alive, he does not suffer forty stripes; and the slaughtering thereof does not render it clean. Now if you were to hold that there must be an olive's bulk, then guilt is established because of eating an olive's bulk [of what is unclean]?\(^{18}\) — As R. Nahman suggested elsewhere that there was only a little flesh but the sinews and bones [combined to make up the olive's bulk], so here too, we must say that there was only a little flesh but the sinews and bones [combined to make up the olive's bulk].\(^{19}\)

Come and hear from the following statement of Rab:

(1) Deut. XII, 23. This verse contains two prohibitions: against eating blood and against eating the limb of a living creature, for the latter part of the verse is interpreted as: Thou shalt not eat the flesh whilst the animal is still alive.
(2) V. M. Ker. V, 1.
(3) But of course there is the prohibition of the flesh of an unclean animal.
(4) V. supra 100b. The sons of Noah were forbidden to eat the limb of a living animal, cf. Gen. IX, 4. This was one of the seven commandments imposed upon them. Cf. Sanh. 56a.
(5) E.g. the blood of fish and of locusts.
(6) Deut. XII, 21. This verse precedes the law of the limb of a living animal (verse 23) and as it expressly mentions herds and flocks wild beasts and birds are excluded.
(7) Between R. Eleazar, the Sages, and R. Meir.
(8) In the feminine singular, which refers to cattle only and excludes wild beasts and birds.
(9) In the masculine plural, so as to include every living creature that is clean.
(10) Toh. I, 3.
(11) Sc. an unclean bird, i.e., one that is forbidden to be eaten.
(12) I.e., does not render it permitted to be eaten. ‘Clean’ cannot mean here ‘free from defilement’ because no uncleanness whatsoever is attached to the carcass of a bird that is forbidden to be eaten.
(13) And the implication is that even after the slaughtering the descendant of Noah is not permitted to eat of it until it is quite dead, for otherwise he would be eating the limb of a living animal and this is forbidden to him.
(14) For the first clause implies that the prohibition of a limb severed from a living creature does not apply to unclean animals since it rules that he who eats it does not suffer stripes, whereas the inference from the second clause is that the limb of an unclean living animal is forbidden. V. prec. n.
(15) So MS.M.
(16) An olive's bulk is the minimum amount to constitute ‘eating’.
(17) Sc. an unclean bird, i.e., one that is forbidden to be eaten.
(18) For which he would incur stripes, quite apart from any consideration regarding the limb of a living creature.
(19) This would not involve the prohibition of flesh of an unclean animal since there must be an olive's bulk of flesh excluding bones and sinews; on the other hand, a limb consisting of flesh, bones and sinews, in all the size of an olive, is subject to the prohibition of a limb severed from a living creature.

Talmud - Mas. Chullin 102b

If a person ate a clean bird whilst it was yet alive, however small it was [he is liable],\(^{1}\) if dead, only if it was as large as an olive's bulk.\(^{2}\) [If he ate] an unclean bird, whether alive or dead, however small it was, [he is liable].\(^{3}\) — Here too we must suppose there was only a little flesh but the sinews and bones [combined to make up the olive's bulk].\(^{4}\)

Come and hear: [It was taught]:\(^{5}\) If a person took a [clean] bird, the whole of which was not as large as an olive's bulk, and ate it, Rabbi holds that he is not liable,\(^{6}\) and R. Eleazar son of R. Simeon declares him liable. R. Eleazar son of R. Simeon said: Is there not here an a fortiori argument? If he is liable for a limb thereof,\(^{7}\) surely he is liable for the whole of it! If he strangled it and ate it, all agree that there must be as much as an olive's bulk [in order to render him liable].\(^{8}\) Now their disagreement is only on this point, viz., one holds that [an animal even] whilst alive stands to be dismembered into limbs, and the other holds that whilst alive it does not stand to be dismembered into limbs; but thus far they are agreed, namely, that [in the case of a limb] the size of an olive's bulk is not necessary! — Said R. Nahman, [it is a case where] there was only a little flesh but the sinews and bones [combined to make up the olive's bulk]. But is there such a creature, the whole of which does not carry an olive's bulk of flesh and yet in one limb there is as much as an olive's bulk made up of a little flesh and sinews and bones? — R. Sherebia replied: Yes, it is the kallanitha. Consider then the final clause. It reads: ‘If he strangled it and ate it, all agree that there must be as much as an olive's bulk [in order to render him liable]’. Is not the kallanitha an unclean bird? and Rab has stated, [If a person ate] an unclean bird, whether alive or dead, however small it was,[he is liable]! — What was meant was a [clean] bird like the kallanitha.

Raba said: If you can find authority for saying that Rabbi holds, an intention with regard to foodstuffs is of consequence, then if a person intended to eat this bird limb by limb but actually ate it whole, he is liable. Said to him Abaye: Is there anything which if another were to eat, that other would not be liable, and if this person were to eat he would be liable? — He replied: Each man is considered according to his intention with regard to it.

Raba also said: If you can find authority for saying that R. Eleazar son of R. Simeon holds, an intention with regard to foodstuffs is of consequence, then if a person intended to eat the bird limb by limb but actually ate it alive, he is not liable. Said to him Abaye: Is there anything which if another were to eat, that other would be liable, and if this person were to eat he would not be liable? — He replied: Each man is considered according to his intention with regard to it.

R. Johanan said: The verse: Thou shalt not eat on the life with the flesh, refers to a limb [severed] from a living creature; and the verse: Ye shall not eat any flesh in the field, that is trefah [torn of beasts], refers to flesh [severed] from a living creature and also to flesh of a trefah animal. R. Simeon b. Lakish said: The verse: ‘Thou shalt not eat the life with the flesh’, refers to a limb [severed] from the living creature and also to flesh [severed] from a living creature; and the verse: ‘Ye shall not eat any flesh in the field, that is trefah [torn of beasts]’, refers to flesh of a trefah animal. If a person ate a limb [severed] from a living creature and also flesh [severed] from a living creature, according to R. Johanan he is liable twice, and according to R. Simeon b. Lakish he is liable but once. If a person ate flesh [severed] from a living creature and also flesh of a trefah animal, according to R. Simeon b. Lakish he is liable twice, and according to R. Johanan he is liable but once. If a person ate a limb [severed] from a living creature and also flesh of a trefah animal, according to both he is liable twice. A contradiction was pointed out from the following:

1. He is liable for transgressing the prohibition of a limb of a living creature, for the eating of the entire bird alive is certainly equivalent to the eating of a limb severed from the living bird. It is apparent, therefore, that Rab does not insist upon the minimum quantity of an olive's bulk with regard to this prohibition, thus contradicting his own previous statement.
2. He is liable for eating nebelah for which there must be the minimum quantity of an olive's bulk.
3. Because it is a complete entity expressly prohibited by the Torah, and one is liable for it no matter how small it is. Cf. Mak. 13a.
4. The expression ‘however small it was’ refers to the amount of flesh, but actually a whole olive's bulk was eaten which included the sinews and bones.
5. Tosef. A.Z. IX.
6. Pot the law concerning the limb of a living animal refers specifically to a limb and does not include the entire living creature.
7. Even though the whole limb was not as large as an olive's bulk. This is not disputed by Rabbi, hence the objection is apparent against Rab.
8. As the prohibition here is that of nebelah, the minimum quantity of an olive's bulk is essential,
So that the prohibition of a limb of a living creature attaches to the animal whilst yet whole, and if a man eats an entire living creature he has certainly eaten a limb of a living creature as comprehended within the prohibition. In fact he has eaten many such limbs, nevertheless he is liable but once since presumably he received only one warning. This is the view of R. Eleazar b. R. Simeon.

The prohibition of a limb of a living creature only comes about when the limb is actually severed from the body; such is the opinion of Rabbi.

The expression ‘the whole of which was not as large as an olive's bulk’ refers to the flesh only, but with the bones and sinews there certainly was as much as an olive's bulk.

A thin and scrapply bird. According to Levysohn, Zoologie des Talmuds, p. 183, a species of gull, probably the blue-footed gull.

Lit., ‘its name is an intention’,

I.e., a bird the whole of which was not as large as an olive's bulk.

Since this person had expressed his intention to eat the bird limb by limb the prohibition of the limb of a living creature attaches forthwith, and he would be liable even though he ate it whole.

So long as that other person had expressed no intention with regard to it.

It is evident from the expressed intention that the bird was not to be dismembered whilst alive; therefore the prohibition of the limb of a living creature does not apply to it.

Deut. XII, 23. I.e., thou shalt not eat a limb whilst there is yet life in the flesh. The word נפש, ‘nephes’ (soul) in the verse refers to an entire limb, for once a limb is gone it cannot return or be replaced just as when the soul is gone.

Ex. XXII, 30. The interpretation is, flesh in the field i.e., cut away from its place in the living animal, or flesh of a trefah animal, ye shall not eat.

At one meal and the offender was only given one warning.

For the transgression of two prohibitions, since each prohibition is derived from separate verses. ‘Liable’ throughout this passage means liable to the penalty of stripes unless expressly stated otherwise.

For both these prohibitions are derived from the same verse.

If a person ate a limb [severed] from a living animal that was trefah, R. Johanan says: He is liable twice; but R. Simeon b. Lakish says: He is liable but once. I grant that this is right according to R. Johanan, but according to R. Simeon b. Lakish this is a difficulty, is it not? — R. Joseph answered, It is no difficulty, for one case deals with one animal and the other case with two animals. In the case of two animals he is liable twice [according to both views], but in the case of one animal they differ.

On what principle do they differ in the case of one animal? — Abaye said: It is a case where the animal was rendered trefah as soon as the greater part of it had come forth [out of the womb]. One [R. Johanan] holds that an animal [even] whilst alive stands to be dismembered into limbs, so that the prohibitions of trefah and of the limb from a living creature come into force simultaneously. The other [R. Simeon b. Lakish] holds that an animal whilst alive does not stand to be dismembered into limbs, so that the prohibition of the ‘limb’ [when it does arise] cannot be superimposed upon the [already existing] prohibition of trefah.

Alternatively, you may say, all agree that an animal whilst alive stands to be dismembered into limbs, but they differ whether or no the prohibition of the limb [severed from a living creature] can be superimposed upon the [existing] prohibition of trefah. One [R. Johanan] holds that the prohibition of the limb can be superimposed upon the [existing] prohibition of trefah; and the other [R. Simeon b. Lakish] holds that the prohibition of the ‘limb’ cannot be superimposed upon the [existing] prohibition of trefah.

Alternatively, you may say, all agree that an animal whilst alive stands to be dismembered into limbs, but in this case the animal was rendered trefah later on [and not at birth], and they differ whether or no the prohibition of trefah can be superimposed upon the [existing] prohibition of the limb. One [R. Johanan] holds that it can be superimposed; and the other [R. Simeon b. Lakish] holds that it cannot.\(^7\)

Raba said: It is a case where the person tore away a limb from the living animal and thereby rendered it trefah.\(^9\) One [R. Johanan] holds that an animal whilst alive does not stand to be dismembered into limbs, so that the prohibitions of trefah and of the ‘limb’ come into force simultaneously. The other [R. Simeon b. Lakish] holds that an animal [even] whilst alive stands to be dismembered into limbs, so that the prohibition of trefah cannot be superimposed upon the [existing] prohibition of the ‘limb’.

R. Hyyya b. Abba said in the name of R. Johanan: If a person ate forbidden fat [which was torn away] from a living animal, which was trefah, he is liable twice.\(^10\) Whereupon R. Ammi said to him: And why do you not say thrice? Indeed I say [in the name of R. Johanan that he is liable] thrice. And it has been reported: R. Abbahu said in the name of R. Johanan: If a person ate forbidden fat [torn away] from a living animal, that was trefah, he is liable thrice.

On what principle do they differ? — The animal in this case was rendered trefah as soon as the greater part of it had come forth [out of the womb]. Now he who says [he is liable] thrice, is of the opinion that an animal [even] whilst alive stands to be dismembered into limbs, so that the prohibitions of the forbidden fat, of the limb [from a living creature], and of trefah come into force simultaneously;\(^11\) but he who says [he is liable] twice, is of the opinion that an animal whilst alive does not stand to be dismembered into limbs, so that there are [present from the time of birth] the prohibitions of the forbidden fat and of trefah, and the prohibition of the limb [from a living creature] cannot be superimposed upon them.

Alternatively, you may say, all agree that an animal whilst alive does not stand to be dismembered into limbs, but they differ whether or no the prohibition of the limb [from a living creature] can be superimposed upon the [existing] prohibitions of the forbidden fat and of trefah. One holds that it can be superimposed upon them, and the other holds that it cannot.

Alternatively, you may say, all agree that an animal [even] whilst alive stands to be dismembered into limbs, but in this case the animal was rendered trefah later on [and not at birth], and they differ whether or no the prohibition of trefah can be superimposed upon the prohibition of the limb [from a living creature]. One holds it can be superimposed,\(^12\) just as it is the case with the forbidden fat, for a Master has said: The Torah has expressly indicated that the prohibition of nebelah can be superimposed upon the prohibition of forbidden fat, and that the prohibition of trefah can be superimposed upon the prohibition of forbidden fat.\(^13\) The other, however, maintains that it [sc. the prohibition of trefah] can indeed be superimposed upon the prohibition of forbidden fat inasmuch as there is an exception

---

\(^{(1)}\) For it is agreed by all that where the two prohibitions are derived from separate verses, as here, the offender is liable twice.

\(^{(2)}\) i.e., he ate a limb severed from a living animal and also flesh taken from another animal which was trefah.

\(^{(3)}\) i.e., he ate a limb severed from a living animal that was trefah.

\(^{(4)}\) i.e., when it was actually dismembered.

\(^{(5)}\) Since the prohibition of the limb severed from a living creature is a grave restriction for it applies to the sons of Noah. V. supra 100b and 102a.

\(^{(6)}\) Consequently the prohibition of the ‘limb’ came into force at the birth of the animal.

\(^{(7)}\) For R. Johanan is of the opinion that a prohibition can always be superimposed upon an existing prohibition.

\(^{(8)}\) The prohibition of trefah can only come into force after the animal has been slaughtered when the prohibition of the limb of a living animal has gone.
E.g., he cut off the leg of a living animal above the knee-joint, v. supra 76a, and he ate it.

Although he has infringed three prohibitions, (i) of forbidden fat, (ii) of fat (i.e., a limb) taken from a living animal, and (iii) of trefah, he is only liable for two; v. infra.

I.e., at the moment of birth these three prohibitions came into force, for whilst a fetus within the womb the whole of its fat was permitted; v. supra 69a. V. however, Tosaf. s.v. דתרעה

And liability is incurred for each of these three prohibitions.

V. supra 37a, and Zeb. 70a.

Talmud - Mas. Chullin 103b
to its general [restriction],¹ but it cannot [be superimposed] upon the prohibition of the ‘limb’ inasmuch as there is no exception to its general [restriction].

When R. Dimi came [from Palestine] he reported that R. Simeon b. Lakish put the following question to R. Johanan: What is the law if he divided it outside?² and he replied: He is not liable. And what if he divided it inside [his mouth]?³ and he replied: He is liable.

When Rabin came [from Palestine] he reported as follows: If he divided it outside he is not liable. If he divided it inside [his mouth], R. Johanan says, he is liable; R. Simeon b. Lakish says, he is not liable. ‘R. Johanan says he is liable’, because his gullet has derived enjoyment from an olive's bulk. ‘R. Simeon b. Lakish says he is not liable’, because there must enter in his stomach [at one time] the full amount that constitutes ‘eating’, and this is not the case here. (But [it will be asked], according to R. Simeon b. Lakish, how can it ever happen that one [who eats an olive's bulk of the limb] should be liable?)⁴ — R. Kahana suggested: In the case [where he ate] a small bone.)⁵ R. Eleazar however said: Even if he divided it outside he is also liable, because the fact that it is not consumed in one whole does not render it an incomplete act.⁶

R. Simeon b. Lakish said: The quantity of an olive's bulk of which they [the Rabbis] have spoken does not include that which is between the teeth.⁷ R. Johanan said: It includes even that which remains between the teeth. Said R. Papa: As to that which remains between the teeth they certainly do not disagree,⁸ they disagree only as to that which remains in the palate and tongue. One [R. Johanan] maintains [that he is liable], since his gullet has derived enjoyment from a whole olive's bulk; the other [R. Simeon b. Lakish] maintains [that he is not liable, because] there must enter his stomach the full amount which constitutes ‘eating’.

R. Assi said in the name of R. Johanan: If a person ate one half-olive's bulk [of a forbidden substance] and vomited it forth, and then ate another half-olive's bulk, he is liable. Why? Because his gullet has derived enjoyment from an olive's bulk.⁹

R. Eleazar enquired of R. Assi: What is the law if a person ate one half-olive's bulk [of a forbidden substance], vomited it forth and then ate it once again? [Let us see], what was his real question? If the question was whether it [sc. what has been vomited forth] is considered as digested food or not, then he might have put the question with regard to a complete olive's bulk;¹⁰ and if the question was whether we regard [eating from the enjoyment of] the gullet or [from the enjoyment of] the stomach, then he might have solved this himself from R. Assi's statement above?¹¹ — R. Assi had forgotten the tradition [he had received from R. Johanan], and R. Eleazar came and reminded him of it in the following manner:¹² 'Why speak of another half-olive's bulk?¹³ The Master could have dealt with the same [half-olive's bulk], by which two results would have been established, viz., we would have learnt from if that it [sc. what is vomited forth] was not considered as digested food, and we would also have learnt from it that [one is liable if only] the gullet had derived enjoyment from an olive's bulk’. He remained silent and made no reply at all. Thereupon he [R. Eleazar] said to him, ‘O wonder of the generation! Did you not often say this¹⁴ before R. Johanan and he agreed with you... saying: "His gullet has in fact derived enjoyment from an olive's bulk"?

C H A P T E R  V I I I

MISHNAH. EVERY KIND OF FLESH IS FORBIDDEN TO BE COOKED IN MILK,6 EXCEPTING THE FLESH OF FISH AND OF LOCUSTS; AND IT IS ALSO FORBIDDEN TO PLACE UPON THE TABLE [FLESH] WITH CHEESE,17 EXCEPTING THE FLESH OF FISH AND OF LOCUSTS.

(1) For the whole of the fat of a wild animal is permitted.
(2) A person took an olive's bulk from a limb that had been severed from a living animal, divided it into halves outside, i.e., before putting it into his mouth, and then swallowed each half separately. In connection with other prohibited substances this raises no doubt at all, for so long as he consumed the required quantity, namely an olive's bulk, within the time it takes to eat a half-loaf, he is deemed to have eaten the requisite amount and he is liable; v. Yoma 80b. With regard to the limb severed from the living animal, however, since it is exceptional in that the required quantity may be made up of bones and sinews to which no prohibition applies elsewhere, it might be said that this whole quantity must be eaten at one time.
(3) And swallowed each half separately.
(4) For one does not usually swallow an olive's bulk in one whole; one cuts it up with the teeth so that it enters the stomach in separate parts, and this according to R. Simeon b. Lakish does not constitute ‘eating’.
(5) According to Rashi, the patella, which has but a moiety of flesh on it, but together with the sinews attached to it is of the size of an olive. This is usually swallowed whole.
(6) Lit., ‘what is lacking as regards being brought together is not lacking as to the act’. I.e., the fact that the olive's bulk was put into the mouth in parts, one following the other, does not exempt the person from liability, for after all he has eaten a complete olive's bulk.
(7) According to R. Simeon b. Lakish a person is liable only if he swallowed a whole olive's bulk, i.e., this quantity entered his stomach, but not if he put an exact olive's bulk into his mouth, for in the process of mastication some of the substance would certainly adhere between the teeth and this cannot be reckoned together with the amount swallowed.
(8) All hold that it cannot be reckoned together with that which has been swallowed, for neither the gullet nor the stomach has derived any enjoyment therefrom.
(9) I.e., within the period of time taken to eat a half-loaf of the size of four (according to Maim. three) ordinary eggs.
(10) [R. Assi does not accept the statement reported (supra) by R. Dimi in the name of R. Johanan exempting from liability where the olive's bulk was divided outside (Rashi).]
(11) I.e., if a person ate an olive's bulk of a forbidden substance, vomited it forth, and swallowed it again, would he be liable twice or once only?
(12) In the preceding passage where R. Assi expressly states that the main factor of eating is the enjoyment of the gullet.
(13) R. Eleazar himself was not in doubt at all about the law, but he put the case before R. Assi in the form of a question in order to remind him in the most respectful manner of the decision given by R. Johanan.
(14) Which the person swallowed after he had vomited forth a half-olive's bulk.
(15) That he is liable even in the case of the same half-olive's bulk.
(16) Including even the flesh of fowls and of wild beasts. The prohibition of ‘flesh cooked in milk’ relating to the cooking, or to the eating, or to the enjoyment of any benefit therefrom, is derived from the thrice-repeated Biblical prohibition: Thou shalt not seethe a kid in its mother's milk (Ex. XXIII, 19; XXXIV, 26; Deut. XIV, 21).
(17) This is a Rabbinic measure as a precaution against eating the two together.

Talmud - Mas. Chullin 104a

IF A PERSON VOWED TO ABSTAIN FROM FLESH. HE MAY PARTAKE OF THE FLESH OF FISH AND OF LOCUSTS.1

GEMARA. It follows [from our Mishnah] that the flesh of fowls is prohibited by the law of the Torah, now in accordance with whose view would this be? It surely is not in accordance with R. Akiba's view, for R. Akiba maintains that the flesh of wild animals and of fowls is not prohibited by the law of the Torah. Consider now the final clause: IF A PERSON VOWED TO ABSTAIN FROM FLESH, HE MAY PARTAKE OF THE FLESH OF FISH AND OF LOCUSTS. It follows however that he is forbidden the flesh of fowl, which is in accordance with R. Akiba's view, namely, that any variation concerning which the agent would ask for special instructions is deemed to be of the same species. For we have learnt: If a person vowed to abstain from vegetables, he is permitted gourds; R. Akiba forbids them. They said to R. Akiba: Is it not a fact that when a man says to his agent, ‘Bring me vegetables’, the other might [come back and] say, ‘I can only obtain gourds’? He replied. Exactly so; for he surely would not come back and say, ‘I can only obtain pulse’. This proves that gourds are included among vegetables and pulse is not included among vegetables. [Must it then be that] the first clause of our Mishnah is in accordance with the view of the Rabbis, and the second clause is in accordance with R. Akiba's view? — R. Joseph said: The author [of our Mishnah] is Rabbi who incorporated the views of various Tanna'im: with regard to vows he adopted the view of R. Akiba, and with regard to flesh [cooked] in milk he adopted the view of the Rabbis. R. Ashi said: The whole of our Mishnah is in accordance with R. Akiba's view, for this is what it means, EVERY KIND OF FLESH IS FORBIDDEN TO BE COOKED IN MILK: some being forbidden by the law of the Torah and others by the enactment of the Scribes, EXCEPTING THE FLESH OF FISH AND OF LOCUSTS, which are neither prohibited by the law of the Torah nor by the enactment of the Scribes. AND IT IS ALSO FORBIDDEN TO PLACE etc. R. Joseph said: You can infer from this that the flesh of fowl [cooked] in milk is prohibited by the law of the Torah, for were it only [prohibited by the enactment] of the Rabbis, seeing that the actual eating thereof is [prohibited only as] a precautionary measure, would we forbid the placing [of them together upon the table] as a safeguard against the eating thereof? And whence do you derive the rule that we do not impose a precautionary measure upon a precautionary measure? — From the following [Mishnah] which we have learnt: The dough-offering of produce grown outside the Land [of Israel]

(1) For the usual connotation of ‘flesh’, as used in ordinary speech, includes all kinds of flesh excepting that of fish and of locusts. The interpretation of expressions used in vows is always in accordance with the general use of the ordinary man.

(2) It is assumed for the present that the prohibition in the first clause of our Mishnah — which includes fowls — is Biblical, otherwise the precautionary measure imposed in the second clause would not be applied to fowls (v. Tosaf.).

(3) Anything which is not quite the same as the original thing requested but about which an agent would consider it proper to consult his principal is regarded as of the same species as the original thing requested; for were it not so, the agent would reject it immediately: without even consulting his principal. In the case of our Mishnah, if a person were to send another to buy flesh, the latter, if unable to obtain flesh of cattle, would certainly return and ask his principle whether or not he may buy fowls. Hence fowl is included in the term ‘flesh’.

(4) Ned. 54a.

(5) Thus proving that gourds are not vegetables since the agent considers it necessary to obtain special authority to buy them.

(6) Since it is common knowledge that pulse is not included among vegetables, an agent sent to buy vegetables and not being able to obtain any would certainly not return to his principle and say: ‘I can only obtain pulse’. He might as well reply, ‘I could only obtain fish or cheese’. Most probably and rightly he would say: ‘I could not obtain any vegetables’. The fact that he replies, ‘I could only obtain gourds’, proves, according to R. Akiba, that they are included among vegetables.

(7) The flesh of cattle.

(8) The flesh of wild beasts and of fowls.

(9) [As to the precautionary measure in the second clause (cf. p. 576, n. 4) R. Ashi accepts the explanation of Abaye infra pp. 578-9; v. Adreth, Hoshen Mishpat.]

(10) This would be imposing a precautionary measure (sc. restriction of placing them together on the table) upon a precautionary measure (sc. the restriction of eating fowls cooked in milk) which is not done.

(11) Hal. IV, 8.
Cf. Num. XV, 20; Of the first of your dough you shall offer up a cake for a heave-offering. This law only applied to Palestine, i.e., to dough made from produce grown in the land of Israel (cf. ibid. 18), but the Rabbis ordained that it be observed outside Palestine, i.e., in respect of dough made from produce grown outside the Land of Israel, as a precautionary measure safeguarding the dough-offering of Palestinian produce. If, therefore, a non-priest ate the dough-offering offered from produce grown outside the Land of Israel he has transgressed a Rabbinic enactment.

Talmud - Mas. Chullin 104b

may be eaten [by a priest] in company with a non-priest at the table, and may be given to any priest one likes. Said Abaye to him, I grant you, if we were told that the dough-offering [of produce grown] outside the Land may be eaten in the Land in company with a non-priest at the table, in which case there would be good cause to enact a precautionary measure on account of the dough-offering [of produce grown] in the Land which is ordained by the Torah, and yet we do not take this precaution, that the inference can be made. But outside the Land of Israel [it is allowed] surely because there is no reason to take any precautionary measure. In the case [of our Mishnah], however, if you permit one to place [upon the table] fowl and cheese, one might even place [upon the table] flesh and cheese, and so come to eat flesh with milk which is prohibited by the law of the Torah.

R. Shesheth demurred saying: Yet after all it is but cold [food] with cold [food]! — Abaye answered: It is prohibited lest it be placed upon the table in a boiling pot. But even in that case it is only in a ‘second vessel’ and a second vessel cannot bring anything to the boil! — It is only prohibited lest it be placed upon the table in the ‘first vessel’.

GEMARA. Is not R. Jose's opinion identical with that of the first Tanna? And should you say that there is a difference between them with regard to the actual eating [of fowl with cheese], the first Tanna maintaining that they differ only with regard to the placing [upon the table] but not with regard to the eating thereof, whereas R. Jose says that they differ even with regard to the eating thereof, Beth Shammai adopting the lenient ruling and Beth Hillel the strict ruling — but surely we have already learnt: R. Jose reports six cases in which Beth Shammai adopt the lenient ruling and Beth Hillel the strict ruling, and this is one of them, viz., A fowl may be placed upon the table together with cheese but may not be eaten with it; so Beth Shammai; but Beth Hillel say: It may neither be placed together with it nor eaten with it. — Rather what the [teacher of our Mishnah] tells us is merely that the first Tanna [whose opinion is expressed anonymously] is R. Jose; for whosoever reports a thing in the name of him that said it brings deliverance into the world, as it is said: And Esther told the king in the name of Mordecai.

Agra, the father-in-law of R. Abba, recited: A fowl and cheese may be eaten without restriction. He recited it and he himself explained it thus: it means without washing the hands or cleaning the mouth [between the eating of the one and the other].

R. Isaac the son of R. Mesharsheya once visited the house of R. Ashi. He was served with cheese which he ate and then was served with meat which he also ate without washing his hands [between the courses]. They said to him: Has not Agra the father-in-law of R. Abba recited that a fowl and cheese may be eaten without restriction? A fowl and cheese, yes; but meat and cheese, no! — He replied: That is the rule only at night, but by day I can see [that my hands are clean].

It was taught: Beth Shammai say. One must clean [the mouth]; Beth Hillel say. One must rinse it. Now what is meant by ‘one must clean’ and ‘one must rinse’?

(1) And we do not apprehend lest the non-priest eat of it. To prohibit this would be to impose a precautionary measure upon a precautionary measure.

(2) Even to a priest an ‘am ha-arez (v. Glos.) i.e., one who does not observe the strict rules of levitical cleanness. With regard to the dough-offering taken from produce grown in the Land of Israel this was not allowed, for only those priests who upheld the laws of the Torah were entitled to receive the priestly dues (cf. II Chron. XXXI, 4).

(3) I.e., it was brought into the Land of Israel.

(4) For outside the Land of Israel there cannot possibly occur any infringement of the law of dough-offering.

(5) There is virtually but one precautionary measure here, namely, the placing of fowl and cheese on the table is declared forbidden as a safeguard against the placing of flesh and cheese on the table, for the placing of the two together on the table will almost certainly lead to the eating thereof, thus involving the transgression of a Biblical prohibition. Cf. Torath Hayyim, a.l.

(6) Even if it is held that fowl with milk is prohibited by the law of the Torah there can still be shown two precautionary measures before one approaches the actual prohibition of the Torah. For it must be remembered that the Torah forbade flesh and milk that had been cooked together in the one pot; but if the flesh and the milk were in the same pot, not cooked together, they would be permitted by the law of the Torah but forbidden by the Rabbis only as a precautionary measure. Now to prohibit the placing together upon the table of these two cold foods as a safeguard against the eating thereof is again superimposing precautionary measures one upon the other.

(7) I.e., a vessel into which boiling food or liquid has been poured, in contradistinction from ‘a first vessel’, i.e., a vessel taken direct from the fire where it has been at the boil. A ‘first vessel’ can bring other foodstuffs to the boil even when removed from the fire, and in the case of ‘flesh and milk’ would involve a transgression of the law of the Torah.

(8) Lit., ‘stew pot’.

(9) In the majority of cases the position is the reverse, i.e., Beth Hillel adopt the lenient ruling and Beth Shammai the strict ruling.

(10) Beth Shammai and Beth Hillel.

(11) For in this case all agree that it is forbidden to eat the two (sc. fowl and cheese) together.

(13) Esther, II, 22.

(14) וְיָרָה meaning ‘freely’, from root יָרָה. V. Alfasi a.l. for the variant יָרָה, explained as referring to the opinion of Beth Shammai or Beth Hillel mentioned in Tosef. Hul. VIII, 3.

(15) Having received it on tradition from his teacher (Rashi).

(16) There is therefore no need to wash the hands between the courses at all.

(17) After eating cheese and before eating meat.

(18) By eating some dry bread, v. infra.

(19) Sc. the mouth; so apparently according to Rashi. R. Nissim, Torath Hayyim, and others, however, refer the rinsing to the hands.

Talmud - Mas. Chullin 105a

Should you say it means this: Beth Shammai say: One must clean [the mouth] and not rinse it, and Beth Hillel Say. One must rinse [the mouth] and not clean it, then the statement of R. Zera viz., Cleaning the mouth must be done with bread only, would agree with the view of Beth Shammai, would it not? And if you say it means this: Beth Shammai say: One must clean [the mouth] and not rinse it, and Beth Hillel Say. One must also rinse it, then it is a case in which Beth Shammai adopt the lenient ruling and Beth Hillel the strict ruling; why then is this not taught among the cases in which Beth Shammai adopt the lenient ruling and Beth Hillel the strict ruling? — Rather this must be the interpretation: Beth Shammai say: One must clean [the mouth], and also rinse it; Beth Hillel say. One must rinse [the mouth], and also clean it. But one [school] mentions one [requirement], the other [school] another, and they do not really differ. The [above] text [stated]: ‘R. Zera said: Cleaning the mouth must be done with bread only’. This means only with wheaten bread but not with barley bread. And even with wheaten bread it is allowed only if it is cold, but not if it is still warm, for it cleaves [to the palate]. And it must be soft and not hard. The law is: Cleaning [the mouth] may be done with everything except flour, dates and vegetables.

R. Assi enquired of R. Johanan: How long must one wait between flesh and cheese? — He replied. Nothing at all. But this cannot be, for R. Hisda said: If a person ate flesh he is forbidden to eat [after it] cheese, if he ate cheese he is permitted to eat [after it] flesh! — This indeed was the question. How long must one wait between cheese and flesh? And he replied. Nothing at all.

The [above] text [stated]: ‘R. Hisda said: If a person ate flesh he is forbidden to eat [after it] cheese, if he ate cheese he is permitted to eat [after it] flesh’. R. Aha b. Joseph asked R. Hisda: What about the flesh that is between the teeth? — He quoted [in reply] the verse: While the flesh was yet between their teeth.

Mar ‘Ukba said: In this matter I am as vinegar is to wine compared with my father. For if my father were to eat flesh now he would not eat cheese until this very hour to-morrow, whereas I do not eat [cheese] in the same meal but I do eat it in my next meal.

Samuel said: In this matter I am as vinegar is to wine compared with my father. For my father used to inspect his property twice a day, but I do so only once a day. Samuel here follows his maxim, for Samuel declared: He who inspects his property daily will find an istira. Abaye used to inspect his property daily. One day he met his farmer-tenant carrying away a bundle of twigs. Said to him [Abaye]. Where is this going to? He replied. To my master's house. Said Abaye. The Rabbis have long ago anticipated you.

R. Assi used to inspect his property daily. He exclaimed: Where are all those istiras of the Master Samuel? One day he saw that a pipe had burst on his land. He took off his coat, rolled it up and stuffed it into the hole. He then raised his voice and people came and stopped it up. He exclaimed: Now I have found all those istiras of the Master Samuel.

R. Idi b. Abin said in the name of R. Isaac b. Ashian: The first washing [of the hands] is a meritorious act, the last washing is a bounden duty. An objection was raised from the following: The first and last washing [of the hands] are bounden duties, the middle washing is a matter of free choice. — A meritorious act as compared with a matter of free choice can well be termed a bounden duty.

[To return to] the main text: ‘The first and last washing [of the hands] are bounden duties, the middle washing is a matter of free choice’. The first washing may be performed either over a vessel or over the ground; the last washing must be performed over a vessel. Others read: The last washing may not be performed over the ground. (What is the real difference between these [two versions]? There is a difference, [where one washes over] twigs.) The first washing may be With either hot or cold water; the last washing must be with cold water only, because hot water softens the hands and does not remove the grease.

‘The first washing may be with either hot or cold water’. R. Isaac b. Joseph said in the name of R. Jannai. They said this only of [hot] water wherein the hand is not

(I) I.e., rinsing the mouth with water would not be sufficient and so would not serve the purpose; so Rashi adopting the
For Beth Hillel do not mention ‘cleaning the mouth’, accordingly R. Zera's statement is based upon Beth Shammai's view.

For they are agreed that both requirements are essential, namely, and cleaning and rinsing the mouth. As for washing the hands v. Asheri a.l. and Tur, Yoreh Deah, LXXXIX.

Because it crumbles in the mouth and does not clean the mouth well.

I.e., after eating flesh how long must one wait before being allowed to eat cheese?

Must it be removed before one is about to eat cheese?

The suggestion is that the particles of flesh between the teeth are still termed ‘flesh’, and therefore must be removed before one may eat cheese.

Lit., ‘vinegar the son of wine’, i.e., ‘I am inferior to my father’, applied both in a religious and secular sense.

A silver coin equal to half a zuz. The meaning is that he who inspects his property daily will derive much profit, for he will be able to see that everything is in proper order, and no workman of his could take advantage of his absence.

By their advice to inspect one's property daily, whereby pilfering and theft is put a stop to.

By being on the spot he was able to repair in time what might have been a serious disaster through inundation.

Lit., ‘the first water’; i.e., the washing of the hands before the meal.

Lit., ‘the last water’; i.e., the washing of the hands after the meal.

Whereas previously it was stated the washing before the meal was merely a meritorious act but not a duty.

Lit., ‘the middle water’; i.e., the washing of the hands during the meal.

The water does not run directly on to the ground, neither can it be said that it runs into a vessel: according to the second version this would be allowed, according to the first version it would not.

Which becomes absorbed all the more in the hands through hot water.

The last washing must be With cold Water only’, and not with hot water. R. Isaac b. Joseph said in the name of R. Jannai. They said this only of [hot] water wherein the hand is scalded, but one may wash the hands with water wherein the hand is not scalded. It follows, however, from this that for the first washing one may use even water wherein the hand is scalded.

The middle washing is a matter of free choice’. R. Nahman said: They said this only [of the washing] between one course and another course,¹ but between a [meat] course and cheese it is a bounden duty to do so.

R. Judah the son of R. Hiyya said: Why did [the Rabbis] say that it was a bounden duty to wash the hands after the meal? Because of a certain salt of Sodom which makes the eyes blind.² Said Abaye. One grain of this is found in a kor of ordinary salt. R. Aha the son of Raba asked R. Ashi: What is the rule if one measured out salt?³ — He replied: Undoubtedly.⁴

Abaye said: At first I thought the reason why the last washing may not be performed over the ground was that it made a mess, but now my Master⁵ has told me: It is because an evil spirit rests upon it.

Abaye also said: At first I thought the reason why one should not remove anything from the table whilst another is holding a cup and drinking was the fear lest there occur a mishap at the table,⁶ but now my Master has told me: It is because it may cause vertigo. This applies, however, only if [the thing is] taken away and not returned, but if taken and returned it does not matter. Moreover, it applies only if the thing is taken away a distance of more than four cubits [from the table], but if it remains within four cubits’ distance it does not matter. Moreover, it applies only to such things as may be required at the table, but if it is not required at the table it does not matter. Mar son of R. Ashi used to be particular even about [the removal of] a pestle and mortar for [pounding] spices, for these are required at the table.

Abaye also said: At first I thought the reason why one collects the crumbs [from the floor] was mere tidiness, but now my Master has told me: It is because it might lead to poverty. Once the angel of poverty was following a certain man but could not prevail over him, because the man was extremely careful about [collecting the] crumbs. One day he ate some bread upon the grass. ‘Now’, [said the angel] ‘he will certainly fall into my hand’. After he had eaten he took a spade, dug up the grass, and threw it all into a river. He then heard [the angel] exclaiming. ‘Alas, he has driven me out of his house’.

Abaye also said: At first I thought the reason why one does not drink froth was that it was nauseous, but now my Master has told me: It is because it may cause catarrh. To drink it may cause catarrh, to blow it away may cause headache, and to skim it [with the hand] may cause poverty. What then should one do? One must let it settle down by itself. For catarrh [contracted from drinking the froth] of wine [one should drink] beer, for that from beer one should drink water, for that from water there is no remedy. This bears out the popular saying, poverty follows the poor.

Abaye also said: At first I thought the reason why one should not eat vegetables from the bunch which was tied up by the gardener was because it had the appearance of gluttony, but now my Master has told me, it is because one lays oneself open thereby to the dangers of magic. R. Hisda and Rabbah b. R. Huna once were travelling on a ship. A certain lady said to them, ‘Take me with you’; but they would not. She then pronounced a spell and the ship was held fast. They [in return] pronounced a spell and it was freed. She said: ‘What power have I over you? seeing that you do not cleanse yourselves with a potsherd. Neither do you crush a louse on your clothes, nor do you eat vegetables from a bunch tied up by the gardener.

Abaye also said: At first I thought that the reason why one does not eat vegetables which had fallen on to the tray was because it was not clean, but now my Master has told me: It is because it causes a foul smell in the mouth.

Abaye also said: At first I thought the reason why one does not sit under a drain pipe was that there was waste water there, but my Master has told me. It is because demons are to be found there. Certain carriers were once carrying a barrel of wine. Wishing to take a rest they put it down under a drain pipe, whereupon the barrel burst, so they came to Mar son of R. Ashi. He brought forth trumpets and exorcised the demon who now stood before him. Said he to the devil, ‘Why did you do such a thing?’ He replied. ‘What else could I do, seeing that they put it down on my ear’? The other [Mar son Of R. Ashi] retorted: ‘What business had you in a public place? It is you that are in the wrong, you must therefore pay for the damage’. Said the devil, ‘Will the Master give me a time wherein to pay’? A date was fixed. When the day arrived he defaulted. He came to court and [Mar b. R. Ashi] said to him, ‘Why did you not keep your time?’ He replied. ‘We have no right to take away anything that is tied up sealed, measured or counted; but only if we find something that has been abandoned’.

Abaye also said: At first I thought the reason why one pours off [a little water] from the mouth of the jug [before drinking therefrom] was the fear of scraps [that may be on the surface], but now my Master has told me: It is because of evil waters. A demon in the service of R. Papa once went to fetch water from the river but was away a long time. When he returned he was asked. ‘Why were you so long?’ He replied. ‘[I waited] until the evil waters had all gone’. In the meantime Both being meat dishes or milk dishes; cf. however, Tosaf. s.v. v. 5.

If one touches the eyes after having handled this salt.

He must certainly wash his hands.

Rabbah b. Nahman.

Lit., ‘at the meal’. He who is drinking may be annoyed at the removal of those things and may choke in his anger.

If one leaves the crumbs strewn on the floor.

Lit., ‘this person’.

The poor man not having anything but water to drink is afflicted by that disease for which there is no remedy.

After an evacuation. V. Shab. 81b.

I.e., water from which demons had drank.

Talmud - Mas. Chullin 106a

he saw them pouring off [a little water] from the mouth of the jug; he exclaimed. ‘Had I known that you were in the habit of doing this I would not have been away so long’.

When R. Dimi came [from Palestine] he reported. The omission to wash the hands before the meal caused one to eat swine’s flesh, and the omission to wash the hands after the meal caused a separation of a wife from her husband. When Rabin came [from Palestine] he reported. The omission to wash before the meal caused one to eat nebelah. and the omission to wash after the meal caused a murder.

R. Nahman b. Isaac said, [In order to remember the statements of each bear in mind] the following mnemonic: ‘R. Dimi came [first] and separated her, and then Rabin came and killed her’. R. Abba reported the graver result in each case.

It was stated: As regards water heated by fire, Hezekiah says: One may not wash the hands therewith; but R. Johanan says: One may wash the hands therewith. R. Johanan related: I enquired of R. Gamaliel the son of Rabbi, who used to eat all his food in conditions of levitical purity, and he told me that all the great men of Galilee did so. As regards the hot springs of Tiberias, Hezekiah says: One may not wash the hands therewith, but one may immerse the hands therein. R. Johanan says. One may immerse the body therein, but not the face, hands or feet. But surely, if one may immerse therein the whole body, how much more so the face, hands or feet! — R. Papa said: At the source there is no dispute at all that it is permitted, moreover, to take some away in a vessel, there is no dispute at all that it is forbidden. They disagree only in the case where the water [from the spring] was run off into a channel; one holds that we must forbid the case of a channel on account of a vessel, the other holds we do not impose this precautionary measure.

Tannaim differ on this point. [It was taught:] Water which is unfit for cattle to drink, if it is in a vessel, is invalid [for the immersion of the hands], but if it is on the ground it is valid. R. Simeon b. Eleazar says: Even if it is on the ground one may immerse therein the whole body, but not the face, hands or feet. But surely, if one may immerse therein the whole body, how much more so the face, hands or feet! This therefore must be a case where the water was run off into a channel, and they differ in this: one is of the opinion that we must forbid a channel on account of a vessel, the other is of the opinion that we do not impose this precautionary measure.

R. Idi b. Abin said in the name of R. Isaac b. Ashian: The washing of the hands for common food was ordained only in order to acquire the habit with regard to terumah; moreover, it is a meritorious act. What is this meritorious act? — Abaye answered: It is a meritorious act to hearken to the words of the Sages. Raba answered: It is a meritorious act to hearken to the words of R. Eleazar b. ‘Arach. [For It was taught:] It is written: And whomsoever he that hath the issue toucheth, without having rinsed his hands in water: herein, said R. Eleazar b. ‘Arach, the Sages found a Biblical support for the law of washing the hands. Raba asked R. Nahman: Wherein is this indicated? For it is written: ‘Without having rinsed his hands in water’. Can this mean that if he had rinsed his hands, [whatsoever he touched] would be clean? Surely he requires immersion, does he not? The meaning must be: And any other person that has not rinsed his hands is unclean.²⁰

R. Eleazar said in the name of R. Oshaia: They enjoined the washing of the hands before eating fruit only for reasons of cleanliness. The disciples understood from this that it was not a duty but that it was nevertheless a meritorious act. Raba, however, said to them: It is neither a duty nor a meritorious act, but is merely an act of free choice. This opinion [of Raba] differs from that of R. Nahman, for R. Nahman said: Whosoever washes his hands for fruit is of those that are haughty in spirit.²¹

Rabbah b. Bar Hana said: I was once standing in the presence of R. Ammi and R. Assi when a basket of fruit was brought before them. They ate without first washing their hands, they gave me none of it, and each said the Grace [after meals] for himself. Draw three conclusions from this: (i) that the law of washing the hands does not apply to fruit; (ii) that the law of Common Grace does not apply to fruit;²² and (iii) that if two ate together, it is a meritorious act on their part to separate.²³ It has also been taught to the same effect: If two ate together, it is a meritorious act on their part to separate. This is so only if both of them are learned,²⁴ but if one is learned and the other illiterate, the former says Grace and the other fulfils his obligation [by listening].

Our Rabbis taught: The washing of the hands for common food [must reach] up to the joint:²⁵ for terumah [it must reach]

(1) A person once entered an inn and sat down to the table without first washing his hands. He was taken for a non-Jew and was served with swine's flesh.
(2) V. Yoma 83b, where it is related that certain Rabbis had entrusted their purses to a certain man who later denied all knowledge of them. They noticed that the man had traces of lentils on his upper lip, so they immediately went off to his home and asked his wife in the name of her husband to hand them the purses. On her asking them to prove their bona fides they told her that her husband had eaten lentils that day. She thereupon handed them the purses. When the husband came home and learnt what his wife had done he immediately divorced her, or as some say, killed her. Now had the husband been particular about washing the hands (and naturally also the lips) after the meal, this tragedy of a divorce or a murder would not have happened.
(3) Cf. n. 2.
(4) R. Dimi came to Palestine before R. Abin and reported what could have occurred only earlier before the murder reported by R. Abin.
(5) With regard to the omission of washing before the meal the graver outcome was the eating of swine's flesh, and with regard to the omission of washing after the meal it was the taking of a life.
(6) Before the meal.
(7) I.e., wash their hands before the meal with hot water.
(8) Provided there was the requisite quantity of water, viz., forty se'ah.
(9) If the hands were unclean and one immersed them in these hot springs they are not thereby rendered clean, neither are they regarded as washed for the meal. The terms ‘face’ and ‘feet’ are quite irrelevant and are added here only on account of the fullness of the expression. ‘face, hands and feet’.
(10) For it established that the immersion of the whole body is accounted as the immersion of the hands and certainly as the washing of the hands before the meal.
(11) For all purposes, immersion as well as washing. For by immersing the hands at the source of the spring it is like an immersion in a fountain or mikweh.
(12) I.e., to fill a vessel with water from these springs and to pour it over the hands would not be deemed a valid ‘washing’ of the hands. For washing the hands by means of a vessel was primarily confined to the use of cold water, and although the Rabbis permitted water that had been heated, the permission did not extend to include the water from hot springs, for, being ever hot, it never came within the scope of the institution.
I.e., the water from the hot springs had been run off in a small channel in which there was not the requisite quantity of water for immersion but which was connected with the source.

Such is the view of Hezekiah, hence his ruling that one may not wash the hands therewith; the following view is that of R. Johanan. V. Asheri a.l. and Alfasi on Ber. VIII, 44b.

Either foul water or water from the hot springs of Tiberias (Rashi).

R. Simeon b. Eleazar.

For hands are accounted unclean in the second degree and so can only impart their uncleanness to consecrated food or terumah but not to common food.

[1.e., apart from the consideration of terumah, the fact that the washing of the hands was instituted by the Sages makes it into a meritorious act, v. Adreth Hiddushim.]

Lev. XV, 11.

It is interpreted as a distinct rule and does not refer to the person that has an issue. Of course it is not intended thereby to convey that the law of washing the hands is of Biblical origin, the Rabbis merely supported their enactment by a Biblical text, i.e., נמייה.

And one should not behave so; Raba however permits it at one's free choice.

V. Ber. 45a: Three who ate together are under the obligation to say the Common Grace (יוסף). This law evidently does not apply to a meal of fruit, for if it did these Rabbis would certainly have offered Rabbah some fruit in order to be enabled to say the Common Grace.

So that each may say the Grace for himself.

Lit., 'scribes, bookmen'.

I.e., only the tips of the fingers need be washed up to the second joint.

Talmud - Mas. Chullin 106b

up to the joint; the sanctification of the hands and feet for Temple service [must reach] up to the joint. Whatsoever is deemed to be an interposition with regard to the immersion of the body is also an interposition with regard to the washing of the hands and the sanctification of the hands and feet for the Temple service.

Rab said: Up to here is [the washing] for common food; up to here for terumah. Samuel said: Up to here both for common food and for terumah, adopting the stricter view. R. Shesheth said, up to here both for common food and for terumah, adopting the lenient view. Bar Hadaya said: I was once standing before R. Ammi and he said: Up to here both for common food and for terumah, adopting the stricter view. And you must not suppose that R. Ammi [said so] because he was a priest, for R. Meyasha, the grandson of R. Joshua b. Levi, who was a Levite also said: Up to here both for common food and for terumah, adopting the stricter view.

Rab said: A person may wash both his hands in the morning and stipulate that it shall serve him the whole day long. R. Abina said to the inhabitants of

---

(1) The third joint of the fingers. i.e., the junction of the phalanges and the metacarpus.
(2) I.e., the washing of hands and feet from the bronze laver, v. Ex. XXX, 17-21.
(3) The joint of the wrist.
(4) Anything that adheres to the body and so prevents the water of the mikweh from penetrating to that part of the body renders the immersion invalid.
(5) From the laver, v. Ex. XXX, 21.
(6) Rab was demonstrating the law to his pupils: for common food up to the second joint, and for terumah up to the third joint.
(7) Up to the third joint of the fingers.
(8) Up to the second joint of the fingers.
(9) And in order to acquire the habit of washing the whole surface of the fingers for terumah he ruled likewise for common food; i.e., it was merely a personal restriction.
And he need not wash them again before his meals; he must however take care that his hands do not become dirty or unclean.
the valley of 'Araboth: People like you that have not much water, may wash the hands in the morning and stipulate that it shall serve the whole day long. Some say: This is allowed only in a time of need\(^1\) but not at ordinary times, hence it is at variance with Rab's view;\(^2\) others say: This is allowed even at ordinary times, and so it corresponds with Rab's view.

R. Papa said: A person may not wash the hands in a dike used for irrigation, because [the water] here does not run directly from the human act;\(^3\) if, however, he is quite close to the bucket he may wash his hands [in the dike], because there it runs directly from the human act. If the bucket was cracked so that liquid could filter in,\(^4\) the waters are then considered as connected\(^5\) and he may immerse the hands [in the dike].

Raba said: A vessel which has a hole in it so that liquid can filter into it, may not be Used for washing the hands.

Raba also said: A vessel in which there is not a quarter [log of water] may not be used for washing the hands. But this surely cannot be, for Raba has said: A vessel which cannot hold a quarter [log] may not be used for washing the hands. Now it follows that if it can hold [a quarter log] even though there is not [that much] in it [it may be used]! — This is no difficulty, for the one passage refers to one person and the other to two persons.\(^6\) and we have learnt: A quarter log of water [is sufficient] for washing the hands of one person or even of two persons.\(^7\)

R. Shesheth asked Amemar: Are you particular about the vessel used?\(^9\) He replied: Yes. About the colour [of the water used]? — He replied. Yes. About the amount [of water used]? He replied: Yes. Others report that he replied thus: We are particular about the vessel and the colour [of the water], but we are not particular about the amount [of water used], for we have learnt: A quarter log of water [is sufficient] for washing the hands of one person or even of two persons. This, however, is not correct, for it is different in that case since it is the residue of [what was the proper amount for] purification.\(^11\)

R. Jacob of Nehar Pekod had a standard washing vessel made that contained a quarter [log]. R. Ashi had a standard jug made in Huzal that contained a quarter [log].

Raba also said: If the stopper of a jar was fashioned [into a vessel], it may be used for washing the hands. It has also been taught to the same effect, viz., If the stopper of a jar was fashioned [into a vessel], it may be used for washing the hands. If a waterskin or a [leather] bottle was fashioned [into a vessel], it may be used for washing the hands. A sack or a basket, even though they were made to hold water, may not be used for washing the hands.\(^13\)

The question was raised: May one eat with a cloth [wrapped round the hand] or not?\(^14\) Must we apprehend lest [the bare hand] touch [the food] or not? — Come and hear: But when they gave R. Zadok less than an egg's bulk of food to eat, the took it with a cloth, ate it outside the Sukkah, and did not say the Grace after it.\(^15\) Now presumably if it was as large as an egg's bulk it would have been necessary to wash the hands!\(^16\) — No, perhaps the only inference is, if it was as large as an egg's bulk it would have been necessary to eat it in the Sukkah and to say the Grace after it.\(^17\)

Come and hear [from the following incident]. Samuel once found Rab eating with a cloth and said to him,

---

(1) E.g., where there is a shortage of water.
(2) For Rab does not qualify his statement and permits this practice at all times.
(3) The water in the dike is supplied by buckets which a man fills from a river and empties into the dike, and thence it runs off in its courses over fields. It is therefore forbidden to dip the hands in the dike because the power of man has already spent itself at the beginning of the dike and the waters run now of their own impetus.

(4) This implies a large hole so that the water would run out through the hole with a spurt.

(5) If he filled this cracked bucket with water from the river and emptied it out into the dike, the water would be running out at both ends, from the crack back into the river and from the mouth into the dike, so that, while the bucket is being emptied out, the water in the dike is actually connected with the water in the river; one may therefore immerse the hands in the dike.

(6) Where one person washes the hands a quarter log of water is necessary, and so also where two persons wash the hands one after the other only a quarter log is necessary; obviously then in the latter case the second person washes his hands with less than a quarter log. This is allowed, however, because of the reason stated infra, that the second person uses the residue of what was the proper amount for washing the hands.

(7) Yad. I, 1.

(8) That it should be whole and not damaged.

(9) That it should have the appearance of water.

(10) That there must be a quarter log.

(11) Cf. p. 592, n. 3.

(12) The stopper is cup-shaped, concave on the inside and convex outside. As the inside was not made to serve as a receptacle it is therefore necessary to hollow it out a little more for this purpose (Rashi). According to Tosaf. it is only necessary to make the outside flat so that it should be able to stand upright without support.

(13) For these do not usually hold water and cannot be regarded as a vessel for washing.

(14) If a person did not wash the hands but wrapped a cloth round them, may he thus eat his food or not?

(15) V. Suk. 26b.

(16) Even though his hands were wrapped in a cloth.

(17) But not to wash the hands since they were covered with a cloth.

Talmud - Mas. Chullin 107b

Is it right to do so? And Rab replied. I am very sensitive. When R. Zera went up [to Palestine] he found R. Ammi and R. Assi eating food with leather rags around their hands; he exclaimed, ‘Two great men like you to be in error about the incident of Rab and Samuel! Did not Rab reply. "I am very sensitive"?’ — In truth he [R. Zera] had forgotten the statement of R. Tahlifa b. Abimi in the name of Samuel, viz., They permitted those that eat terumah the use of a cloth, but they did not permit those that eat [common food] in conditions of cleanness the use of a cloth. And R. Ammi and R. Assi were priests.

The question was raised: Must he that is being fed by another wash his hands or not? — Come and hear. R. Huna b. Sehora once was standing before R. Hamnuna and put some meat into R. Hamnuna's mouth which he ate. Said [R. Huna]. If you were not R. Hamnuna I would not have fed you. Now what was the reason [for the exception in R. Hamnuna's case]? Was it not because he was very careful not to touch [the food]? — No, it was because he was most scrupulous and had certainly washed his hands previously.

Come and hear. R. Zera said in the name of Rab: One should not put a piece [of bread] into the mouth of the waiter unless one knows that he has washed his hands. The waiter must say a Benediction for each cup [of wine that he receives], but does not say a Benediction for each piece [of bread]. R. Johanan said: He must also say a Benediction for each piece [of bread]. And R. Papa said: In fact there is no contradiction [between Rab and R. Johanan], for one refers to the case where a notable person [is sitting at the table] and the other to a case where there was no notable person [at the table]. Nevertheless it expressly says. ‘Unless one knows that he has washed his hands!’ — In the case of a waiter it is different because he is kept busy.
Our Rabbis taught: A man should not give any bread to the waiter while the cup [of wine] is in the hand [of the waiter] or in his host's hand, lest there occur a mishap at the table. If the waiter has not washed his hands, one may not put bread into his mouth.

The question was raised: Must he that feeds another wash his hands or not? — Come and hear: It was taught in the school of Manasseh: R. Simeon b. Gamaliel says. A woman may wash one hand in water and give some bread to her small child. It was said of Shammai the Elder that he would not feed a child even with one hand, and the Sages ordered him that he feed it with both hands! — Abaye answered: There it was on account of evil spirits.

Come and hear [from the following incident]. The father of Samuel once found Samuel crying and asked him, ‘Why are you crying’? ‘Because my teacher beat me’. ‘But why’? ‘Because he said to me, "You were feeding my son and you did not wash your hands before doing so"’. And why did you not wash’? [He replied:] ‘It was he that was eating, so why should I wash’? Said [the father of Samuel:] ‘It is not enough that he [your teacher] is ignorant [of the law], but he must also beat you’!

The law is: He that is fed by another must wash his hands; he that feeds another need not wash his hands.

MISHNAH. A PERSON MAY WRAP UP FLESH AND CHEESE IN ONE CLOTH, PROVIDED THEY DO NOT TOUCH ONE ANOTHER. R. SIMEON B. GAMALIEL SAYS: TWO PEOPLE AT AN INN MAY EAT AT THE SAME TABLE, THE ONE FLESH AND THE OTHER CHEESE, WITHOUT HESITATION.

GEMARA. And what does it matter if they do touch one another? It is only cold [food] with cold [food]? — Abaye answered: I grant you that it is not necessary to scrape away the surface, but surely each must be washed.

R. SIMEON B. GAMALIEL SAYS: TWO PEOPLE AT AN INN MAY EAT AT THE SAME TABLE etc. R. Hanan b. Ammi said in the name of Samuel: This is permitted only if they do not know each other, but if they know each other it is forbidden. It has also been taught to the same effect: R. Simeon b. Gamaliel says. If two guests stay at the same inn, one having come from the north and the other from the south, the one with his piece of flesh and the other with his cheese, they may eat at the same table, the one flesh and the other cheese, without hesitation. They only forbade it where the two eat from one parcel. ‘From one parcel’! You surely cannot mean that! — It means, if it appears as [though they are eating from] one parcel.

R. Yemar b. Shelemya asked Abaye: What is the law in the case of two brothers who are particular with each other! — He replied, Then people will say: All cakes are forbidden but the cakes of Boethius are permitted. Then according to your argument, what of the statement of R. Assi in the name of R. Johanan viz.: One who possesses only one shirt may wash it on the intermediate days of the festival? There, too, people will say:

(1) He assumed that he had not washed his hands.
(2) He had in fact washed his hands yet he would not touch his food with his fingers but always wrapped a cloth around them. It is however apparent that both Rab and Samuel are of the opinion that the use of a cloth does not dispense with the need for washing the hands.
(3) Like gloves.
(4) Without having washed their hands.
(5) I.e., priests, for they are most scrupulous and would avoid touching the food with their hands.
(6) Together with bread (Tosaf.).
(7) Hence where one is careful not to touch the food there is no need to wash the hands.
(8) The waiter can expect to receive from the diners a morsel of bread from time to time, therefore the benediction for the first piece would serve also for the subsequent pieces. He cannot however be certain that he will receive wine from time to time, therefore each time he must make a benediction.

(9) Only in this case, Rab holds that the waiter should not make several benedictions, for he can reasonably expect to receive bread from time to time.

(10) In such circumstances there is a danger that he will actually touch the food that he is eating; but with an ordinary person there is no such apprehension. It must be noted that the serving of food by the waiter with his hands does not impose upon him the duty of washing the hands, v. infra.

(11) The host may be annoyed at it and may choke while drinking, or he may look with anger at the waiter who might get frightened and spill the wine and thus cause an unfortunate incident.

(12) On the Day of Atonement when it is forbidden to wash.

(13) It is evident from these cases that even when feeding another it is necessary to wash the hands!

(14) The washing of the hands referred to on the Day of Atonement is that which has to be performed in the morning on account of the evil spirit that clings to unwashed hands. But once the hands have been washed in the morning there is no further need to wash them when about to feed others; v. Yoma 77b.

(15) Lit., ‘two strangers’.

(16) Of the flesh and cheese where they came into contact.

(17) But this is forbidden even when one is not sitting at the table. V. our Mishnah.

(18) I.e., they are intimate with each other and it appears that what one has is shared by the other.

(19) Not to share each other's food. May they both eat at the same table, the one flesh and the other cheese, as strangers, or not?

(20) Cf. Pes. 37a. It is forbidden to make cakes of fancy shapes on the Passover for, in the time spent in shaping, the dough might become leavened. A certain baker Boethius had moulds of various shapes, and the question was asked: May one eat the cakes of Boethius on the Passover or not? It was resolved that no distinction can be made; all cakes in fancy shapes are forbidden whether made in moulds or not, and the law does not admit of any exceptions. Here, too, the law is clear, that strangers may eat at the same table but friends or brothers may not. It will not alter the law the fact that the brothers are unfriendly or particular with each other.

(21) Ordinarily this is forbidden, cf. M.K. 14a.

Talmud - Mas. Chullin 108a

All cakes are forbidden but the cakes of Boethius are permitted! — Surely Mar son of R. Ashi has explained that his girdle proves his special case.

MISHNAH. IF A DROP OF MILK FELL ON A PIECE OF FLESH AND IT IMPARTED A FLAVOUR INTO THAT PIECE, IT IS FORBIDDEN. IF THE POT WAS STIRRED, THEN IT IS FORBIDDEN ONLY IF [THE DROP OF MILK] IMPARTED A FLAVOUR INTO [ALL THAT WAS IN] THE POT.

GEMARA. Abaye said: In all cases wherever the flavour [of a forbidden substance is perceptible] but not the substance itself, the mixture is forbidden by the law of the Torah. For should you say that it is forbidden by Rabbinic law only, and the reason why we may not draw any conclusions from the case of ‘flesh in milk’ is that it is an anomaly, then by reason of that anomaly the mixture of flesh and milk should be forbidden even though the one does not impart a flavour in the other! — Said Raba to him: The Torah has expressed this prohibition by the term ‘cooking’.

Rab said: As soon as it imparted a flavour to the piece of flesh, that piece becomes forbidden like nebelah, and it in turn renders all the other pieces forbidden, for they are of like kind. Mar Zutra the son of R. Mari said to Rabina: Let us consider: Rab in this statement of his evidently follows the view of R. Judah, who holds that homogeneous substances can never neutralize each other; but must we say that he disagrees with Raba? For Raba said: R. Judah is of the opinion that where one kind is mixed with a like kind and also with a different kind, you disregard the like kind as if it were not there, and if the different kind is more [than the forbidden substance] it will neutralize it!\(^{14}\) — He replied. Had it fallen into thin broth this would have been the case, but here we must suppose that it fell into thick broth.\(^{15}\) Then what is his view? If he holds that when the forbidden essence can be considered\(^{16}\) extracted it becomes permitted,\(^{17}\) why should the piece of flesh be deemed as nebelah?\(^{18}\) One must say that he holds that even when it is considered extracted it is still forbidden. And indeed it was so reported: Rab, R. Hanina and R. Johanan hold that even when it can be considered extracted it is still forbidden; Samuel, R. Simeon b. Rabbi and R. Simeon b. Lakish hold that when it is considered extracted it becomes permitted.

Is Rab then of the opinion that even when it can be considered extracted it is still forbidden? But it has been reported: If an olive's bulk of flesh fell into a pot of milk, the flesh, says Rab, is forbidden\(^ {19}\) but the milk is permitted. Now if you maintain that [Rab holds] even when it is considered extracted it is still forbidden.

---

(1) I.e., all people may not wash their clothes on the intermediate days of the festival but this man may.

(2) Since this man is washing his shirt together with the girdle (which is unusual) it is clear to all that he has no other shirt with which to wear the girdle, for otherwise he would have removed it.

(3) That was in a pot boiling on the fire.

(4) I.e., the piece was not sixty times as much in bulk as the drop of milk.

(5) Sc. the piece of flesh.

(6) As soon as the drop of milk fell into the pot the pot was stirred so that the flavour of the milk was distributed equally among everything that was in the pot.

(7) E.g., where the forbidden substance was, after a time, removed from the mixture, so that there is only the flavour of the forbidden substance under consideration.

(8) The principle is derived from the law of ‘flesh in milk’, for in that case, after the two substances were cooked together, even though they have been removed from each other, they are forbidden because of the flavour of the other which each absorbed.

(9) For each substance separately is permitted but in a mixture each is forbidden; moreover, this law is peculiar for the mere cooking together of these substances is also forbidden.

(10) Whereas our Mishnah forbids the mixture only where the flavour of the milk is perceptible.

(11) The prohibition of ‘flesh in milk’ is thrice expressed in the Torah by the term ‘cooking’, and cooking signifies the imparting of a flavour from one substance to the other.

(12) Even though the other pieces in the pot are together more than sixty times the volume of the piece upon which the milk fell.

(13) The rule IT IS FORBIDDEN in the first clause of our Mishnah accordingly means that all that is in the pot is forbidden; for Rab evidently is in agreement with R. Judah that homogeneous substances cannot neutralize each other.

(14) V. supra 100b. In our Mishnah, therefore, according to this view, even though the one piece is rendered forbidden as nebelah, and the other pieces in the pot are to be disregarded for they are of like kind, the broth, if there is sufficient of it, should neutralize the forbidden piece, for broth and flesh are different kinds.

(15) And this is regarded as being of the same kind as flesh.

(16) Lit., ‘might have been’.

(17) The contention is that when a substance, rendered forbidden because it had absorbed the essence of a forbidden matter, is cooked together with other permitted food, the forbidden essence is considered as extracted from the original substance and distributed equally among the contents of the pot; so that if there is enough in the Pot to neutralize the quantity of forbidden essence it will all be permitted, even the original substance which was rendered forbidden. In other words the substance, which is forbidden because of the forbidden essence that it absorbed, is not regarded as nebelah and forbidden absolutely for all time, but it is even possible for it to become permitted once again when cooked with other substances.

(18) Surely the drop of milk which originally fell on this piece would in the course of further cooking be extracted from it and distributed equally among all the pieces in the pot, so that this piece too should be permitted!

(19) Because of the milk that it absorbed.

---

Talmud - Mas. Chullin 108b
why is the milk permitted? Is not the milk\(^1\) as nebelah?\(^2\) — I still maintain, that Rab holds that even when it can be considered extracted it is still forbidden, but there\(^3\) it is exceptional, for the verse states: Thou shalt not seethe a kid in its mother's milk,\(^4\) whence it is clear that the Torah forbade the kid only and not the milk.\(^5\)

But does Rab hold that the Torah forbade the kid only and not the milk? But it has been reported: If a person cooked half an olive's bulk of flesh with half an olive's bulk of milk,\(^6\) he suffers stripes, says Rab, if he eats it, but does not suffer stripes for cooking it. Now if you maintain that [Rab contends that] the Torah forbade the kid only and not the milk, why should he suffer stripes for eating it? There was only half the [minimum] quantity!\(^7\) Rather we must say that Rab holds the view that the milk is also forbidden, but in this case\(^8\) we must suppose that [the olive's bulk of flesh] fell into a boiling pot, in which case it will absorb all the time and not discharge at all.\(^9\) But eventually when [the boiling] subsides it will discharge [the milk which it had absorbed]! — By then he had already removed it.\(^10\)

The text [stated above]: ‘If a person cooked half an olive's bulk of flesh with half an olive's bulk of milk, he suffers stripes, says Rab, if he eats it, but does not suffer stripes for cooking it’. But say what you will. If the two\(^11\) combine [to make the prohibition], then he should also suffer stripes for cooking it; and if they do not combine, then he should not suffer stripes even if he ate it! — Really they do not combine, but this\(^12\) is a case where each [half an olive's bulk] came from a large pot.\(^13\) Levi, however, said: He also suffers stripes for cooking it. Moreover, Levi taught so in a Baraita: Just as he suffers stripes for eating it he suffers stripes for cooking it. And of what kind of cooking did they speak? Of such cooking as others\(^14\) would eat thereof.

With regard to the law where the forbidden essence is considered extracted,\(^15\) there is a dispute between Tannaim. For it was taught: If a drop of milk fell on a piece of flesh, as soon as it imparted a flavour to the piece, the piece itself is forbidden as nebelah, and it will in turn render all the pieces [in the pot] forbidden, for they are of like kind: so R. Judah. But the Sages say, [It is not forbidden at all] until it imparts a flavour to the broth, the sediments and the pieces. Said Rabbi: The words of R. Judah are acceptable in the case where he\(^16\) neither stirred nor covered [the pot], and the words of the Sages in the case where he either stirred it or covered it.

Now what is meant by ‘neither stirred nor covered’? Should you say it means that he did not stir it at all, or that he did not cover it at all, then this piece will indeed have absorbed [the drop of milk] but will not at any time have given it out; [wherefore then are the other pieces forbidden?] And if it means that he did not stir it straightway but only later on, or that he did not cover it straightway but only later on, wherefore [are any of the pieces forbidden]? True, this piece had absorbed [the drop of milk] but it has also given it out! — He is of the opinion that even when the forbidden substance can be considered extracted it is still forbidden.\(^17\)

---

(1) Sc. that milk which was first absorbed by the flesh and later discharged in the rest of the milk in the pot.
(2) So that when it mixes with the rest of the milk we have here a mixture of homogeneous liquids which, according to Rab can never neutralize each other.
(3) In connection with the prohibition of flesh in milk.
(4) Ex. XXIII, 19.
(5) Rab contends that whenever flesh and milk are cooked together in any proportion whatsoever, it is only the flesh that is forbidden and not the milk.
(6) An olive's bulk of liquid is that amount of liquid displaced from a brimming bowl by an olive.
(7) The minimum quantity of a forbidden substance to render one liable to stripes is an olive's bulk. Here the only forbidden substance is the meat and there is only half an olive's bulk of it.
(8) Namely, where an olive's bulk of flesh fell into a pot of milk.
(9) The milk absorbed by the flesh will not be given out so long as the pot is boiling, consequently it will not affect the rest of the milk in the Pot.
(10) The olive's bulk of flesh.
(11) Sc. the flesh and the milk.
(12) The statement of Rab that he suffers stripes for eating it.
(13) Wherein large quantities of flesh and milk were cooked together. To take out of this Pot half an olive's bulk of flesh and half an olive's bulk of milk and eat them certainly renders one liable to stripes. But to cook half an olive's bulk of meat with half an olive's bulk of milk does not, according to Rab, render one liable to stripes. So that the two rulings given by Rab refer to different cases.
(14) Non-Jews. i.e., sufficiently cooked.
(15) Whether the original piece which contained the forbidden essence becomes now permitted or not.
(16) Sc., the person who was looking after the pot. By stirring or covering the pot the forbidden substance is distributed equally among the entire contents of the pot.
(17) Once a piece of flesh has absorbed a forbidden substance it becomes absolutely forbidden as nebelah and will at once render all the pieces in the pot forbidden, no matter how much there is in the Pot besides this; for it can never be neutralized since this is a case of a forbidden piece among permitted pieces, or a mixture of homogeneous substances.

Talmud - Mas. Chullin 109a

(It follows then from this that R. Judah holds that [the entire contents of the pot] are forbidden even though he stirred it straightway [and continued to do so] till the very end, or covered it straightway [and kept it so] till the very end. But why should this be so? The one [piece] has not absorbed any more [than the others]? — Perhaps he did not stir it so well or he did not cover it so well.)

The Master [further] stated above: ‘And the words of the Sages in the case where he either stirred it or covered it’. What is meant by ‘either stirred it or covered it’? Should you say it means that he stirred it only later on but not at the beginning, or that he covered it only later on but not at the beginning, but in this case you have said that the words of R. Judah are acceptable. It must therefore mean that he stirred it straightway and [continued to do so] till the very end, or that he covered it straightway and [kept it so] till the very end; from which it follows that the Sages maintain [that everything in the pot is] permitted even though he stirred it only later on but not at the beginning, or he covered it only later on but not at the beginning. It is evident then that they hold that when the forbidden substance can be considered extracted it becomes permitted.

R. Aha of Difti said to Rabina: Why say they differ as to the law where the forbidden substance can be extracted? Perhaps all are of the opinion that even when the forbidden substance can be is extracted it is still forbidden, but they differ [about the neutralization of homogeneous substances: R. Judah maintaining his principle that homogeneous substances cannot neutralize each other, and the Rabbis maintain theirs that homogeneous substances can neutralize each other?] — This argument cannot be entertained. If you concede that the Sages in this dispute accept R. Judah’s view concerning homogeneous substances, but they differ only as to the law in the case where the forbidden substance can be considered extracted, then the meaning of Rabbi is clear when he says. ‘The words of R. Judah are acceptable in this case and the words of the Sages in that’. But if you insist that all agree that even where the forbidden substance can be considered extracted it is still forbidden, but they differ concerning the law of homogeneous substances, then surely [Rabbi] should have said. ‘The words of R. Judah are acceptable in this but not in that’! And there is no more to be said about this. MISHNAH. THE UDDER MUST BE CUT OPEN AND EMPTIED OF ITS MILK; IF HE DID NOT CUT IT OPEN HE HAS NOT TRANSGRESSED THE LAW ON ACCOUNT THEREOF.

THE HEART MUST BE CUT OPEN AND EMPTIED OF ITS BLOOD; IF HE DID NOT CUT IT OPEN HE HAS NOT TRANSGRESSED THE LAW ON ACCOUNT THEREOF.
The fact that Rabbi finds R. Judah's view acceptable only where the pot was not stirred immediately but only later on clearly suggests that R. Judah maintains his view (viz., that everything in the pot is forbidden) even where the pot was stirred immediately and kept on so till the end.

The drop of milk, in these circumstances, should be considered as distributed equally among all the pieces in the pot, and surely there is sufficient in the pot to neutralize this drop.

And if the pot was not stirred well or covered properly the very moment the drop of milk fell on a piece, that piece would immediately absorb the milk and would render all the contents of the pot forbidden.

And in this case Rabbi is inclined to accept the lenient view of the Sages that all the pieces in the pot would neutralize the milk, for it has been extracted from the one piece and distributed evenly in the pot.

That the entire contents of the pot are forbidden.

Hence we see that where the forbidden substance can be considered extracted is a matter of dispute between Tannaim.

The position would then be: all bold that the piece upon which the drop of milk fell is wholly forbidden as nebelah, but the dispute is concerning the other pieces in the pot. R. Judah holding that the entire contents of the pot are forbidden because the forbidden piece can never be neutralized amongst other pieces, and the Sages holding that neutralization even in a mixture of homogeneous substances can take place. The attitude of Rabbi who holds, first that when the forbidden substance can be extracted the piece is still forbidden, and secondly that neutralization cannot take place between homogeneous substances, is expressed thus: The words of R. Judah are acceptable to me, namely, that the entire contents of the pot are forbidden, in the case where the pot was not stirred at once but only later on, for then one piece was first rendered forbidden and it would later render the entire pot forbidden. But the words of R. Judah are not acceptable to me in the case where the pot was stirred straightway, for then the drop of milk was immediately evenly distributed among the contents of the pot. In this latter case the words of the Sages are acceptable to me, namely that the entire contents of the pot are permitted, for the apprehension lest the pot was not well stirred or well covered need not be taken into consideration.

Lit., ‘what is this?’

V. supra n. 1. The view expressed there is that Rabbi agrees with R. Judah, that the entire contents are forbidden in the case where the pot was not stirred at once, but does not agree with him in the case where it was stirred at once. If this is Rabbi's true view then he should not have mentioned the Sages at all in his statement. The fact that the Sages are mentioned in Rabbi's statement indicates that they went so far as to permit even that Piece upon which the drop of milk fell, for they hold that when the forbidden substance is extracted the piece itself becomes permitted. The result of all this argument is to show that the law in the case when the forbidden substance can be considered extracted is a matter of dispute between Tannaim.

But cooked it together with all the milk it contained.

And no penalty Is incurred either for cooking or eating the udder. The prohibition of ‘flesh in milk’ applies only to milk drawn off from the living animal but not to milk found in the udder of a slaughtered animal.

And is not liable to the penalty of kareth for eating blood. According to Rashi the Mishnah is referring only to the heart of a fowl and the reason why this penalty is not incurred is because the blood contained in the heart is not as much as an olive's bulk. According to Tosaf. it refers to the heart of any animal and there is no liability because blood that has been cooked is not forbidden by the law of the Torah. V. Ker. 220. The flesh of the heart, says Rashi, is not rendered forbidden, for since it is smooth it does not absorb the blood. V. however Tosaf. s.v. בפירות.

Talmud - Mas. Chullin 109b

GEMARA. R. Zera said in the name of Rab: He has [not only] not transgressed the law on account thereof, but it is even permitted.¹ But have we not learnt: HE HAS NOT TRANSGRESSED THE LAW ON ACCOUNT THEREOF, which implies that there is no transgression of the law but that it is forbidden? Strictly it is not forbidden at all, but only because the second clause reads: THE HEART MUST BE CUT OPEN AND EMPTIED OF ITS BLOOD; IF HE DID NOT CUT IT OPEN HE HAS NOT TRANSGRESSED THE LAW ON ACCOUNT THEREOF, in which case it is true that there is no transgression of the law but clearly it is forbidden,² the Tanna also stated in the first clause, HE HAS NOT TRANSGRESSED THE LAW ON ACCOUNT THEREOF. Shall we say that the following teaching supports him? It was taught: The udder must be cut open and emptied of its milk; if he did not cut it open he has not transgressed the law on account thereof. The heart must be cut open and emptied of its blood; if he did not cut it open he must cut it open after it had been cooked and it is permitted [to be eaten]. Now it is only the heart that must be cut open [after the cooking], but the udder need not be cut open at all! — Perhaps the inference is: only for the heart does the cutting open [after the cooking] suffice, but for the udder the cutting open [after the cooking] would not be sufficient.³

Others report the passage thus: R. Zera said in the name of Rab: He has not transgressed the law on account thereof, but it is forbidden [to be eaten]. Shall we say that [our Mishnah] supports him? It reads: HE HAS NOT TRANSGRESSED THE LAW ON ACCOUNT THEREOF, which implies, no doubt, that there Is no transgression of the law but that it is forbidden! — Strictly it is not even forbidden, but only because the second clause reads: THE HEART MUST BE CUT OPEN AND EMPTIED OF ITS BLOOD; IF HE DID NOT CUT IT OPEN HE HAS NOT TRANSGRESSED THE LAW ON ACCOUNT THEREOF, in which case there is no transgression of the law but clearly it is forbidden, the Tanna also stated in the first clause, HE HAS NOT TRANSGRESSED THE LAW ON ACCOUNT THEREOF.

Come and hear: The udder must be cut open and emptied of its milk; if he did not cut it open he has not transgressed the law on account thereof. The heart must be cut open and emptied of its blood; if he did not cut it open, he must cut it open after it had been cooked and it is permitted [to be eaten]. Now only the heart must be cut open [after the cooking] but the udder need not be cut open at all! — Perhaps the inference is: only for the heart does the cutting open [after the cooking] suffice, but for the udder the cutting open [after the cooking] would not be sufficient.

It was taught in agreement with the first version of Rab's view: If the udder was cooked with its milk it is permitted; if the stomach [of a sucking calf] was cooked with its milk it is forbidden. And wherein lies the distinction between the two? In the one the milk is collected inside, in the other it is not collected inside.⁴

How should one cut it⁵ open? — Rab Judah replied. One must cut it lengthwise and breadthwise and press it against the wall. R. Eleazar once said to his attendant, ‘Cut it up for me⁶ and I will eat it’. What does he teach us? Is it not [a clear statement in] our Mishnah? — He teaches us that it is not necessary to cut it both lengthwise and breadthwise.⁷ Or [he teaches us that this would be sufficient even for cooking] in a pot.⁸

Yaltha⁹ once said to R. Nahman: ‘Observe, for everything that the Divine Law has forbidden us it has permitted us an equivalent: it has forbidden us blood but it has permitted us liver; it has forbidden us intercourse during menstruation but it has permitted us the blood of purification;¹⁰ it has forbidden us the fat of cattle but it has permitted us the fat of wild beasts; it has forbidden us swine's flesh but it has permitted us the brain of the shibbata;¹¹ it has forbidden us the girutha¹² but it has permitted us the tongue of fish;¹³ it has forbidden us the married woman but it has permitted us the divorcee during the lifetime of her former husband; it has forbidden us the brother's wife but it has permitted us the levirate marriage;¹⁴ it has forbidden us the non-Jewess but it has permitted us the beautiful woman¹⁵ [taken in war]. I wish to eat flesh in milk, [where is its equivalent?]’ Thereupon R. Nahman said to the butchers, ‘Give her roasted Udders’.¹⁶ But have we not learnt, [THE UDDER] MUST BE CUT OPEN? — That is only when [it is to be cooked] in a pot.¹⁷ But does it not state [in the Baraitha above]. ‘If [the udder was] cooked’,¹⁸ which implies that only after the act it is permitted but not in the first instance?¹⁹ — Indeed, it is even permitted in the first instance, but only because [the Tanna of the cited Baraitha] desired to state the second clause viz., If the stomach

---

¹ To be eaten; for the milk that was withdrawn from a slaughtered animal is at most forbidden to be cooked with flesh
by the Rabbis only, and here since the milk was absorbed and confined within the udder there is not even a Rabbinic injunction against eating it.

(2) For although there can be no liability to any punishment for eating the blood in the heart of a fowl for the reason stated, namely that it is less than an olive's bulk, there nevertheless lies a prohibition even where there is less than an olive's bulk, and it would certainly not be permitted to be eaten.

(3) And there is good reason for this distinction. As the heart is smooth and hard even in cooking the blood would not penetrate into it; the udder, on the other hand, is soft and spongy, and in cooking, the milk would penetrate into it, and it would be impossible to remove it.

(4) The milk found in the stomach of a calf is regarded as ordinary milk, accumulated in a particular place, to which the prohibition of ‘flesh in milk’ applies, whereas the milk in the udder cannot be said to be collected inside but is absorbed in every part of the udder and therefore the prohibition of ‘flesh in milk’ does not apply.

(5) Sc. the udder.

(6) Before you roast it (Rashi); or, Before you cook it (Tosaf.).

(7) But cutting it in one direction would be sufficient.

(8) I.e., by cutting it lengthwise and breadthwise and by pressing it out against the wall it is permitted to cook it in a pot together with other meat. The text adopted is as found in MS.M., Alfasi, R. Gershom and others. In cur. edd., in place of ‘or in a pot’ are the words ‘and to press it against the wall’. V. Glos. of Bah.

(9) R. Nahman’s wife.

(10) In the period of purification after childbirth (cf. Lev. XII, 4) intercourse is permitted even though the woman may be suffering from a discharge of blood. Moreover, the blood of virginity is permitted which is the equivalent of the blood of menstruation.

(11) A kind of fish the brain of which has the same taste as swine’s flesh. According to some it is the mullet, according to others the sturgeon.

(12) A forbidden bird; v. supra 62b where it is identified with the moor-hen.

(13) Which has the taste of girutha.

(14) Cf. Deut. XXV, 5ff.

(15) Cf. ibid. XXI, II ff.

(16) Lit., ‘give her udders on the spit’. i.e., roasted (Rashi). According to Aruch: ‘Feed her with well-filled udders’.

(17) R. Nahman apparently accepts the view stated in the second version of Rab supra. that the udder is forbidden if cooked without having been cut open.

(18) The expression ‘cooked’, מַכְוָה, in the Baraitha is to be interpreted as roasted and not cooked in a Pot. Cf. the same expression in II Chron. XXXV, 13: And they cooked the passover.

(19) How then did R. Nahman permit his wife to eat the udder roasted, and in the first instance too?

Talmud - Mas. Chullin 110a

was cooked with its milk it is forbidden, in which case it is not permitted even after the act, he stated in the first clause too ‘if it was cooked’.

When R. Eleazar went up [to Palestine] he met Ze'iri to whom he said: Is there to be found here a Tanna who recited to Rab the law of the udder? He immediately pointed out to him R. Isaac b. Abudimi. Thereupon the latter said unto him: I did not recite to him [any prohibition] at all about the udder; Rab however found an open space and put a fence around it. For Rab once happened to be at Tatlefush and overheard a woman asking her neighbour. How much milk is required for cooking a rib'a of meat? Said Rab: Do they not know that meat cooked with milk is forbidden? He therefore stayed there [some time] and declared the udder forbidden to them.

R. Kahana reported the passage as above; but R. Jose b. Abba reported it as follows: [R. Isaac b. Abudimi said.] ‘I taught him [the prohibition only] with regard to the udder of a milch [cow].’ And relying upon the keen perception of R. Hiyya he had stated this law in general about the udder.

Rabin and R. Isaac b. Joseph once happened to be at R. Papi’s, and they were served with a dish of udder. R. Isaac b. Joseph ate of it, but Rabin did not. Said Abaye: Wherefore did not this childless Rabin eat? Consider this, R. Papi's wife was the daughter of R. Isaac Nappaha, and R. Isaac Nappaha was most strict in his actions; now had she not seen this practice in her parents' home she certainly would not have served them with it.

In Sura people did not eat the udder at all, in Pumbeditha they used to eat it.

Rami b. Tamri, also known as Rami b. Dikuli, of Pumbeditha once happened to be in Sura on the eve of the Day of Atonement. When the townspeople took all the udders [of the animals] and threw them away, he immediately went and collected them and ate them. He was then brought before R. Hisda who said to him: ‘Why did you do it?’ He replied: ‘I come from the place of Rab Judah who permits it to be eaten.’ Said R. Hisda to him: ‘But do you not accept the rule: [When a person arrives in a town] he must adopt the restrictions of the town he has left and also the restrictions of the town he has entered?’ — He replied: ‘I ate them outside the [city's] boundary.’ ‘And with what did you roast them?’ He replied. ‘With the kernels [of grapes].’ ‘Perhaps they were [the kernels] of wine used for idolatrous purposes?’ He replied. ‘They had been lying there more than twelve months.’ ‘Perhaps they were stolen goods?’ He replied. ‘The owners must have certainly abandoned all rights to them for lichen was growing amongst them.’ He [R. Hisda] noticed that the other was not wearing the Tefillin and said to him. ‘Why do you not wear the Tefillin?’ He replied. ‘I suffer from the bowels, and Rab Judah has said. One who suffers from the bowels is exempt from wearing the Tefillin.’ He further noticed that the other was not wearing fringes [on his coat] and said to him. ‘Why are you not wearing fringes?’ He replied. ‘The coat [I am wearing] is borrowed, and Rab Judah has said.

---

(1) V. Glos.
(2) I.e., that it is forbidden if cooked without having been cut open.
(3) I.e., he came to a place where the people were negligent in their religious observances and he therefore placed upon them additional restrictions.
(4) In the neighbourhood of Sura; Obermeyer p. 298.
(6) I.e., without however stating so expressly as the Gemara continues to explain, v. supra 18b. Pes. 50a.
(7) Without explaining that it was only the udder of a milch cow that was forbidden. Rab however had heard this statement without making the necessary distinction. This is apparently the interpretation of this difficult passage.
(8) He was bereft of his children, and therefore was always referred to sympathetically as ‘the childless Rabin’; v. Pes. 70b.
(9) Lit., ‘a master of (good) deeds’.
(10) Supra 18b. Pes. 50a.
(11) V. A.Z. 34a; kernels which had been used for idolatry, if dry i.e., after twelve months, are permitted for use.
(12) V. Glos.
(13) For otherwise he would be constantly having to remove them in order to relieve himself.

Talmud - Mas. Chullin 110b

A borrowed coat is, for the first thirty days, exempt from the zizith.’ While this was going on a man was brought in [to the court] for not honouring his father and mother. They bound him [to have him flogged], whereupon [Rami] said to them. ‘Leave him alone, for it has been taught. Every commandment which carries its reward by its side does not fall within the jurisdiction of the Court below.’ Said [R. Hisda] to him. ‘I see that you are very sharp.’ He replied. ‘If only you would come to Rab Judah's school I would show you how sharp I am!’

Abaye said to, R. Safran. When you go up there [to Palestine] enquire of them. How do you deal with the liver?’ When he came up he met R. Zerika who told him [in reply]. ‘I once cooked [the liver] well for R. Ammi and he ate it.’ When he [R. Safr a] returned, Abaye said to him: ‘I had no doubt at all that it, itself, was forbidden; I was only in doubt whether it could render forbidden other [pieces that were in the pot with it or not].’ ‘But why had you no doubt that it, itself, was forbidden? For we have learnt: It is not itself rendered forbidden. Then you should have no more doubts as to whether it renders others forbidden, for we have learnt: The liver renders [other pieces in the pot] forbidden but is not itself rendered forbidden, for it exudes and does not absorb’ — He replied.

Perhaps there it refers to the liver of a forbidden [animal] and the point is about the fat; [what I wish to know is] the law about the blood” When he went up [to Palestine] a second time he met R. Zerika who told him [in reply]. ‘This, too, should not cause you any doubt, for I and Jannai the son of R. Ammi once came to the house of Judah the son of R. Simeon b. Pazzi, and we were served with the windpipe and its appendages and we ate them.’ R. Ashi, others say. R. Samuel of Zerukinia, demurred [at any proof from this] saying. Perhaps there the mouth of the windpipe was outside the pot? Or perhaps it [the liver] was first dipped? For R. Huna used to dip it in vinegar, and R. Nahman used to dip it in boiling hot water. R. Papa once suggested to Raba that the vinegar [in which the liver was dipped] should be forbidden, but Raba answered him thus: If the vinegar is forbidden then it [the liver] too should be forbidden, for just as it exudes [its juice into the vinegar] it will later on absorb it.

Rab b. Shabba once visited R. Nahman's house and was served with well-cooked liver but he would nor eat it. Thereupon they told him [R. Nahman]. ‘There's a young scholar inside, namely Rab b. Shabba, who will not eat it.’ R. Nahman replied. ‘Force Shabba to eat it.’ This indeed is a matter of dispute between Tannaim: R. Eliezer says. The liver renders [other pieces in the pot] forbidden but is not itself rendered forbidden, because it exudes and does not absorb. R. Ishmael the son of R. Johanan b. Berakah says: If it [the liver] was seasoned with spices it renders others forbidden and is itself also rendered forbidden; [and so too] if it was well-cooked it renders others forbidden and is itself also rendered forbidden.

Rabbah son of R. Huna once visited the house of Rabbah son of R. Nahman and was served with three se'ahs of honey-cakes. He said to them, Did you know that I was coming? They replied. You are no more important than it, and it is written. And call the sabbath a delight. In the meantime he noticed a liver and in the artery thereof there was much blood. He said to them: Is it right to do so? They replied. What then should we do? He said. Cut it open lengthwise and breadthwise, and the part cut should be below. This is so only with the liver, but as to the spleen it contains merely a fatty juice. Thus on the day when Samuel was bled they prepared for him spleen broth.

It was stated: [To roast] the liver on top of meat, is permitted, for the blood glides off; the udder on top of meat is forbidden because the milk clings [to and penetrates into the meat]. R. Dimi of Nehardea reports this just the reverse thus, [To roast] the udder on top of meat, is permitted, because the milk of a slaughtered animal is but a Rabbinic prohibition; liver on top of meat is forbidden because the blood is a Biblical prohibition.

Meremar declared in a public exposition: The law is, both with regard to the liver and the udder: under meat, it is permitted; on top of meat, it is permitted only after the act, but one may not do so in the first instance.
R. Ashi once visited the house of Rami b. Abba his father-in-law when he saw the son of Rami b. Abba

(1) So that the liver of a trefah animal, when cooked with other pieces of flesh, will render those pieces forbidden not because of the blood, but because of the fat of the liver which has been absorbed by those pieces. On the other hand, if the liver of a permitted animal was cooked in the same pot with trefah meat, it would not be rendered forbidden, because whilst it is discharging blood it would not be able to absorb anything.

(2) The question is. Will the blood discharged from a liver that is permitted render the other pieces in the pot forbidden or not?

(3) The windpipe and its appendages, i.e., the lungs, liver and heart, had all been cooked together in one Rot.

(4) Near Nehar Azak, east of Tigris; v. Obermeyer, p. 80.

(5) So that whatever blood was discharged from the liver ran off outside the pot and nothing in the pot could have been affected by it.

(6) Either in vinegar or in boiling water to cause contraction of the pores so that nothing at all would exude from it.

(7) So var. lec.; cur. edd. ‘And R. Papa etc.’.

(8) In truth, however, the effect of the vinegar is to harden the liver and close up its pores so that nothing at all can exude from it; this being so, the vinegar is also permitted.

(9) נִטְפָּשׁ V. n. 3.

(10) The spices soften the liver and render it more susceptible to absorb into it other juice.

(11) נְטָפֵשׁ term denoting ‘well-cooked’, cf. n. 3 mut. mut.

(12) [Thus those who ate the liver after cooking it well (supra p. 610) follow the view of R. Eliezer whilst R. Shaba follows the view of R. Ishmael, Adreth Hiddushim.]

(13) Sc. the members of the household.

(14) Sc. the Sabbath.

(15) Isa. L.VIII. 13. The cakes had been prepared for the Sabbath.

(16) When roasting the liver the cut should be turned to the fire so that the blood should flow out directly and not run on to any other part of the liver.

(17) That it must be cut up lengthwise and breadthwise.

(18) It does not contain much blood, and so does not need to be cut up.

(19) The blood that is drawn out of the liver will not be absorbed by the meat but will run of the meat and drip on to the fire, and so the meat is permitted.

Talmud - Mas. Chullin 111b

Putting liver on the spit on top of meat. ‘How presumptuous this young scholar is!’ he exclaimed. ‘The Rabbis may have permitted it after the act, but did they permit it in the first instance?’ But if a vessel was placed below to collect the drippings, even though the meat was on top of the liver, it is forbidden.¹ But in what way is this different from the blood of flesh² — The blood of flesh settles at the bottom of the vessel, whereas the blood of liver floats at the top.³

R. Nahman said in the name of Samuel: The knife with which one slaughtered may not be used for cutting hot food;⁴ as for cold food, some say it must be washed,⁵ whilst others say, it need not be washed.

Rab Judah said in the name of Samuel: The vessel in which one salted meat may not be used for eating therein hot food. This is in accord with Samuel's principle, for Samuel has stated: Whatsoever is salted is counted as hot, and whatsoever is preserved is counted as cooked.⁶ When Rabin came [from Palestine] he reported in the name of R. Johanan. Whatsoever is salted is not counted as hot and whatsoever is preserved is not counted as cooked. Said Abaye. This statement of Rabin cannot be upheld, for it once happened in the house of R. Ammi that an earthenware plate had been used for salting meat thereon and he broke it. Now let us see. Was not R. Ammi a disciple of R. Johanan?
Why then did he break [the plate]? Surely because he had heard the statement from R. Johanan that whatsoever is salted is counted as hot.

R. Kahana, the brother of Rab Judah, was sitting before R. Huna and recited as follows, The vessel in which one salted meat may not be used for eating therein hot food. A radish which was cut with a meat knife may be eaten with a milk sauce. Why the distinction? — Abaye answered: The latter absorbed what is permitted, the former what is forbidden. Said to him Raba. But what difference does it make the fact that it absorbed what is permitted? After all what is permitted now will be forbidden later on, so that he will be eating that which is forbidden! Rather said Raba: [This is the distinction]. The latter can be tasted, the former cannot. R. Papa said to Raba: But could not a gentle cook taste it? Has it not been taught: In a pot wherein meat had been cooked a person may not boil milk, and if he did boil [milk] therein [it is forbidden] if the pot imparts a flavour [to the milk]. In a pot wherein terumah food had been cooked a person may not cook common food, and if he did cook [common food] therein, [it is forbidden] if the pot imparted a flavour [to the common food]. And when we put the question to you. In the case of terumah I grant you that a priest could taste the food; but in the case of meat and milk who may taste it? You replied: A gentile cook could taste it. Now in our case, too, could not a gentle cook taste it? [He replied:] That is so, but I am speaking of a case where there is no gentile cook available.

It was stated: If [hot] fish was served on a [meat] plate: Rab says: It is forbidden to eat it with milk sauce; Samuel says: It is permitted to eat it with milk sauce. ‘Rab says: It is forbidden’, because it imparted a flavour to it; ‘Samuel says: It is permitted’, because it imparted a flavour indirectly.

This ruling of Rab, however, was not expressly stated by him but was inferred from the following incident. Rab once visited the house of R. Shimi b. Hiyya, his grandson. He felt a pain in his eyes and so they prepared for him an ointment on a dish. Later on he was served with stew in this same dish and he detected the taste of the ointment in it. He remarked: ‘Does it impart such a strong flavour?’ — But this does not prove anything; in that case it is different for the bitterness of the ointment is very pungent.

R. Eleazar was once standing before Mar Samuel, who was being served with fish upon a [meat] plate and was eating it with milk sauce. He [Samuel] offered him some but he would not eat it. Samuel said to him, ‘I once offered some to your Master and he ate it, and you won't eat it.’ He [R. Eleazar] then came to Rab and asked him, ‘Has my Master withdrawn his view?’ He replied. Heaven forfend that the son of Abba b. Abba should give me to eat that which I do not hold [to be permitted].

R. Huna and R. Hiyya b. Ashi were once sitting, one on the one side of the ferry of Sura and the other on the other side; one was served with fish on a [meat] plate which he ate with milk sauce; the other was served with figs and grapes in the course of the meal which he ate without reciting a benediction over them. One called out to the other, ‘ignoramus, would your master do so?’ The other called back, ‘Ignoramus, would your master do so?’ The one answered and said: ‘I accept Samuel’s view.’ The other answered: ‘I hold the view of R. Hiyya. For R. Hiyya taught: [The benediction over] bread exempts all other kinds of food, and that over wine exempts all other kinds of drink [from the necessity of another benediction].’

Hezekiah said in the name of Abaye: The law is, fish that was served on a [meat] plate may be eaten with milk sauce, and a radish that was cut with a meat knife may not be eaten with milk sauce. This is so only in the case of a radish,

(1) I.e., the drippings of fat in the vessel are forbidden to be eaten because they are mingled with the blood drippings from the liver.
(2) V. infra 112a, where it is permitted to place a vessel below the roasting meat in order to collect the drippings of fat even though it collects at the same time blood drippings.

(3) In the former case the fat can be poured off into another vessel leaving behind all the blood, in the latter case the blood is intermingled with the fat and the one cannot be separated from the other.

(4) The throat at the time of slaughtering is deemed to be hot so that the knife during the act of cutting will have absorbed blood and will give it out again when used with hot food.

(5) The cold food cut with this knife must be washed, so Rashi. Most commentators, including Maim., R. Gershom, and Tosaf. (supra 8b s.v. הטבל הדם), interpret that the knife must be washed before cutting with it cold food.

(6) supra 97b. The vessel will therefore have absorbed blood by reason of the salting.

(7) Kutah, a preserve consisting of sour milk, breadcrust and salt. Even though the radish because of its pungency absorbed the fat that was congealed upon the knife.

(8) The radish absorbed the fat of meat which is in no wise forbidden, whereas the vessel absorbed blood which is forbidden.

(9) When it is dipped in the milk sauce, for then there is the combination of meat and milk.

(10) The radish can be tasted by any person to ascertain whether or not the flavour of the meat is perceptible; but the food cooked in the vessel wherein meat had been salted, may not be tasted by a Jew, for fear that the flavour of the blood that was absorbed in the vessel will have passed into the food.

(11) Where a gentle cook is available he may taste the food cooked in this vessel, and if he pronounces it to be absolutely free from the taste or flavour of blood it may then be eaten. So that in fact there is no distinction between the two cases cited by R. Kahana.

(12) The meat essence absorbed in the plate imparted its flavour to the fish.

(13) Lit., ‘that which gives a flavour the son of (i.e., derived from) that which gives a flavour’. Here the meat originally imparted a flavour to the plate and the plate to the fish; the fish, therefore, has a secondary or indirect taste of the meat, and this according to Samuel is negligible and of no consequence. However, it is conceded by Samuel that it is forbidden to drink hot milk out of a meat dish, for the dish has the first taste of the meat and this flavour, like the meat itself, is forbidden to eat with milk.

(14) I.e., it is remarkable, thought Rab, that the flavour of the ointment should remain in the dish (which obviously was cleaned well) and be felt also in the food that was subsequently served in it. From this remark the Rabbis inferred that even the secondary or indirect taste is of consequence. This suggested inference is somewhat difficult for the case of the fish and the case of the ointment are not on all fours; v. however R. Nissim a.l.

(15) [Rab therefore must have stated his rule expressly. Tosaf.]

(16) Rab.

(17) I.e., Samuel, whose father was Abba b. Abba.

(18) In other words, such a thing never occurred, for Rab maintains his view that it is forbidden.

(19) These fruits are usually eaten after the meal and therefore when served in the course of the dinner one must recite the benediction over them, and one is not exempt with the benediction recited over the bread at the beginning of the dinner. V. Ber. 41b.

(20) Lit., ‘orphan’. i.e., without knowledge. A term of gentle rebuke.

(21) V. supra, that fish served on a meat plate may be eaten with milk sauce.

(22) Ber. 41b.

Talmud - Mas. Chullin 112a

since on account of its pungency it absorbs [from the knife]; but in the case of a cucumber one need only scrape away the surface of the cut and then one may eat it [with a milk sauce]. Turnip stalks\(^1\) are permitted;\(^2\) beet stalks are forbidden, but if one cut these and turnips alternately,\(^3\) they are permitted.

R. Dimi enquired of R. Nahman: May one place a jar of salt close to a jar of milk sauce?\(^4\) — He replied. It is forbidden. And what about a jar of vinegar?\(^5\) — He replied. It is permitted. What Is the difference between the two? If you will measure out a kor of salt\(^6\) [I will tell you the difference]. And what is it? — In the one case the forbidden substance is discernible, in the other it is not
A young pigeon once fell into a jar of milk sauce, and R. Hinena son of Raba of Pashrunia permitted it. Thereupon Raba remarked: Who, save R. Hinena son of Raba of Pashrunia, is so wise as to permit such a thing? For he [R. Hinena] is of the opinion that — Samuel's dictum, Whatevsoever is salted is counted as hot, applies only to the case [of food salted so much] that it cannot be eaten on account of the salt; but this milk sauce can be eaten together with the salt that is in it. This [was allowed] only in the case of a raw pigeon, but if it was roasted it would require to be pared around; moreover if there were cuts in it it would be wholly forbidden; likewise, if it was seasoned with spices it would be wholly forbidden.

R. Nahman said in the name of Samuel, A loaf of bread upon which one cut [roast] meat may not be eaten, but only if [the meat was] red, and only if [the blood] penetrated through the bread, and only if [the juice which exuded from the meat was] thick, but if it was thin then it does not matter. Samuel would throw that [loaf of bread] to the dogs. R. Huna used to give it his attendant. Say what you will; if it is permitted it is permitted to all, and if it is forbidden it is forbidden to all! — R. Huna's was quite a special case, for he was fastidious [in his food].

R. Nahman again said in the name of Samuel, One may not place a vessel beneath meat [that is roasting] until all the redness [of the meat] has gone. How does one know this? — Mar Zutra answered in the name of R. Papa. When the smoke rises. R. Ashi demurred saying. Perhaps the lower half has been roasted and the upper half has not? R. Ashi therefore said: There is no other remedy but to cast [into the vessel] two lumps of salt to pour off [the fat]. But did Samuel really say so? Has not Samuel stated that a loaf [of bread] upon which one cut [roast] meat may not be eaten — It is different in that case for it [the blood] exudes only by reason of the pressure of the knife.

Talmud - Mas. Chullin 112b
R. Nahman said: If fish and fowl were salted together, they are forbidden. What are the circumstances here? If the vessel [in which they were salted] was not perforated then fowl with other fowl would also be forbidden, and if the vessel was perforated then even fish with fowl should be permitted? — Indeed the vessel was perforated, but fish, having a soft skin, very quickly exude their juice, whereas fowl are constricted and exude [blood] long after the fish have ceased to do so, so that the latter will absorb from [the fowl].

It happened to R. Mari b. Rahel that ritually slaughtered meat had been salted with trefah meat. He came before Raba who said to him, It is written: The unclean, to signify that the juice and the broth and the sediment of these [which are unclean] are forbidden.

Talmud - Mas. Chullin 113a

Why did he not tell him [that it was forbidden] because of Samuel's dictum, ‘Whatsoever is salted is counted as hot, and whatsoever is preserved is counted as cooked’? — As for Samuel's dictum I would have thought that it applies only to the blood but not to the juice and broth; he therefore teaches us [the Baraitha]. An objection was raised: [It was taught:] If a clean fish was salted together with an unclean fish, it is permitted. Presumably this is a case where both were salted, is it not? — No. It is a case where the clean fish was salted but the unclean was not. But surely, since the subsequent clause states: If the clean fish was salted and the unclean was not, [it’ is permitted], it follows that the first clause deals with the case where both were salted. — The [second] clause merely explains the first thus: If a clean fish was salted together with an unclean fish, it is permitted. When is this so? When, for instance, the clean fish was salted but the unclean was not. And indeed this supposition is reasonable, since if we assume the first clause to refer to the case where both were salted, seeing that where both were salted it is permitted, is it necessary [to tell us that it is permitted] where only the clean fish was salted and not the unclean? — This however is not a conclusive argument. It may be that the second clause was put in to make clear the reference in the first: lest you might think that the first clause refers to where the clean fish was salted and the unclean was not, leaving us to infer that where both were salted it would be forbidden, he therefore adds the second clause, where the clean fish was salted and the unclean was not, which shows that the first clause speaks of the case where both were salted, and even so it is permitted.

Come and hear from the very last clause: But if the unclean fish was salted and the clean was not, it is forbidden. Now it is forbidden only where the unclean was salted and the clean was not, from which it follows that where both were salted it would be permitted! — Not at all; but since in the preceding clause it teaches of the case where the clean fish was salted, and the unclean was not, it teaches also in the second clause of the case where the unclean fish was salted and the clean was (Mnemonic: Flesh put [on the] neckbone. Samuel said: Flesh cannot be drained of its blood unless it has been salted very well and rinsed very well. It was stated: R. Huna said: One must salt the flesh and then rinse it. In a Baraitha it was taught: One must rinse it, salt it and then rinse it again. Indeed they are not at variance, for in the one case it was washed down by the butcher and in the other it was not washed by the butcher. R. Dimi of Nehardea used to salt meat with coarse salt and then shake it off.

R. Mesharsheya said: We do not assume that the internal organs contain blood; this is explained as referring specifically to the rectum, the small intestines, and the coil of the colon.

Samuel said: One may not put salted meat except into a perforated vessel. R. Shesheth used to salt each piece of meat separately. But why not two together? Because the blood would run out of one piece and be absorbed by the other? Then in one piece also the blood may run out of one side and be absorbed by the other side! — Indeed there can be no difference.

Samuel said in the name of R. Hiyya: If a man breaks the neck bone of an animal [after it has been slaughtered but] before the life departed from it, he thereby makes the meat heavy, robs mankind, and causes the blood to remain in the limbs. It was asked: What is the true meaning? Is it that he makes the meat heavy and thereby robs mankind by causing the blood to remain in the limbs, but where only he himself is concerned he may do so? Or perhaps even for himself it is forbidden? — This remains undecided.

Mishnah. If a man places upon the table fowl with cheese he does not thereby transgress the law.

Gemara. It follows that if he were to eat [them together] he would transgress the law; you can infer from this that the flesh of fowl [cooked] in milk is prohibited by the law of the Torah! — Render thus. If a man places upon the table fowl with cheese he cannot come to the transgression of the law.

Mishnah. It is forbidden to cook the flesh of a clean animal in the milk of a clean animal or to derive any benefit therefrom; but it is permitted to cook the flesh of a clean animal in the milk of an unclean animal or the flesh of an unclean animal in the milk of a clean animal and to derive benefit therefrom. R. Akiba says, wild animals and fowls are not included in the prohibition of the Torah, for it is written thrice, thou shalt not seethe a kid in its mother’s milk, to exclude wild animals, fowls, and unclean animals. R. Jose the Galilean says, it is written, ye shall not eat of anything that dieth of itself, and in the same verse it is written, thou shalt not see the a kid in its mother’s milk; therefore whatsoever is prohibited, under the law of nebelah it is forbidden to cook in milk. Now it might be inferred that a fowl, since it is prohibited under the law of nebelah, is also forbidden to be cooked in milk; the verse therefore says, in its mother’s milk; thus a fowl is excluded since it has no mother’s milk.

Gemara. Whence do we know this? — R. Eleazar said: Because the verse says: And Judah sent the kid of the goats; roasted) thus, and is forbidden.

(2) Which we would not know to be forbidden at all without the Baraitha quoted, for we would regard them as a mere secretion and of no consequence.

(3) I.e., the clean fish.

(4) Both the clean and unclean fish were salted, and the former is permitted because so long as each fish is exuding juice one will not absorb from the other; similarly in the above case, so long as each piece of meat is exuding blood and juice, the ritually slaughtered meat will not absorb from the trefah meat.

(5) Lit., ‘insipid’, ‘without salt’. The unclean fish not being salted will not exude at all, and therefore the clean fish will not be affected by it.

(6) V. Marginal Gloss.

(7) Actually even if both were salted the clean fish would be forbidden.

(8) A mnemonic of the three statements of Samuel given on this page on the subject of salting meat. The third word in the mnemonic is read as נפכורה ‘neckbone’ which is supported by MS.M.; in cur. edd. the reading is ‘going out, departing’.

(9) In R. Huna’s case.

(10) Because it has absorbed the blood. In the case of fine salt there is no need to shake it off, for it would melt in the blood and run off the meat.

(11) And they are not forbidden if cooked without salting.

(12) Meat that was salted and the salt had not been washed off may not be Put into an unperforated vessel, for fear that the meat will absorb again the blood that was drawn out of it. It is certainly forbidden to salt meat in such a vessel in the first instance (R. Nissim). [Rashi supra 122b, s.v. טבש, seems to have read one may not salt etc. מלחים for מנתונים]

(13) Lit., ‘bone (by) bone’.

(14) One may therefore salt any number of pieces together, for while each is exuding it will not absorb. As to whether all the pieces must be salted simultaneously or not, v. Tosaf. supra 112b, דותים.

(15) For the animal is bereft of its last energy to spurt out the blood, and the blood now settles in the limbs of the animal.

(16) When he sells this meat, for it contains more than the usual amount of blood.

(17) I.e., if he does not sell the meat. And the usual salting of meat would presumably be sufficient for this meat too.

(18) For now no amount of salting will draw out the blood that has settled in the limbs.

(19) For even if he were to eat them together he would not transgress the law of the Torah.

(20) Ex. XXIII, 19; XXXIV, 26; Deut. XIV, 21.

(21) Deut. XIV, 21.

(22) V. Glos.

(23) Accordingly the prohibition is restricted to mammals.

(24) That the prohibition, ‘Thou shall not seethe a kid in its mother’s milk’, is not limited in its application to a kid only but applies to all clean animals.

Talmud - Mas. Chullin 113b

here it was a ‘kid of the goats’, but elsewhere, wherever ‘kid’ is stated, it includes [the young of] the cow and the ewe. And might we not derive the rule from that?1 — There is another verse which says: The skins of the kids of the goats;2 here it was ‘kids of the goats’, but elsewhere, wherever ‘kid’ is stated, it includes [the young of] the cow and the ewe. And might we not derive the rule from the latter?1 — [No, because] we have here two verses which teach the same thing, and one may not draw any conclusions from two verses which teach the same thing.3 This is well according to him who maintains that one may not draw conclusions from such verses, but what can be said according to him who maintains that one may draw conclusions from such verses? — There are here two limiting particles: ‘goats’, ‘the goats’.4

Samuel said: ‘Kid’ includes the forbidden fat;5 ‘kid’ includes that which died of itself;6 ‘kid’ includes the foetus.7 ‘Kid’ excludes the blood; ‘kid’ excludes the afterbirth; ‘kid’ excludes the unclean animal.8 ‘In its mother's milk’, and not in the milk of a male;9 ‘in its mother's milk’, and not in the milk of a slaughtered animal;10 ‘in its mother's milk’ and not in the milk of an unclean animal.11 But is not the term ‘kid’ written only three times,12 yet we give six interpretations to it! — Samuel holds the view that a prohibition can be superimposed upon an existing prohibition, so that the application of the prohibition [of ‘flesh in milk’] to forbidden fat and also to that which died of itself is derived from one verse;13 blood [is excluded because] it does not come under the term ‘kid’;14 the afterbirth also because it is a mere excretion;14 two verses now remain, one to include the foetus and the other to exclude an unclean animal.

Does Samuel then hold that a prohibition can be superimposed upon an existing prohibition? Surely Samuel has said in the name of R. Eliezer: Whence do we know that if a priest who was unclean ate unclean terumah he would not be liable to death?15 From the verse: And die therein if they profane it,16 thus excluding this [unclean terumah], since it already stands profaned!17 — You may say, if you will, that in all cases a prohibition can be superimposed upon an existing prohibition, but it is different there for the Divine Law expressly disallowed it by the expression ‘And die therein if they profane it’. Or you may say, if you will, that in all cases Samuel is of the opinion that a prohibition cannot be superimposed upon an existing prohibition, but it is different here for the Divine Law expressly allowed it by the expression ‘kid’.18 Or further you may also say, if you will, the one is his own opinion, the other is the opinion of his teacher.19

R. Ahadboi b. Ammi enquired of Raba: What is the law if one cooked [flesh] in the milk of a she-goat that had not given suck?20 — He replied: Since it was necessary for Samuel to state, the expression ‘in its mother's milk’, and not in the milk of a male, [it is clear that] only a male [is excluded] for it cannot become a mother, but [in the milk of] this [she-goat], since it can become a mother, it is forbidden.

It was stated: [In the case where] a man cooked forbidden fat in milk, [there is a dispute between] R. Ammi and R. Assi: one says: He incurs stripes;21 the other says: He does not incur stripes. Shall we say that they differ in this: he who says he incurs stripes maintains that a prohibition can be superimposed upon an existing prohibition, and he who says he does not incur stripes maintains that a prohibition cannot be superimposed upon an existing prohibition? — No. All agree that a prohibition cannot be superimposed upon an existing prohibition; and [consequently] there is no dispute at all that for eating this he does not incur stripes.22 They differ only with regard to the cooking thereof: he who says he incurs stripes argues that there is only one prohibition here,23 and he who says he does not incur stripes argues that for this very reason did the Divine Law express the prohibition of eating by the term ‘cooking’,24 [to signify that]

(1) That wherever ‘kid’ is mentioned it means the kid of the goats as in the verse quoted.
(2) Ibid. XXVII, 16.
(3) V. supra 61b.
(4) The definite article I added to the word ‘goats’ in each of the above verses is superfluous and is interpreted as a limitation; thus in these two cases the term ‘kid’ means a goat, but elsewhere ‘kid’ means the young of any clean animal.
(5) I.e., if a man cooked the forbidden fat of an animal, or a piece of nebelah, in milk and ate it, he would be liable twice: for eating forbidden fat or nebelah, and for eating flesh cooked in milk. The special point of this statement of Samuel is that the prohibition of ‘flesh in milk’ can be superimposed upon the existing prohibition of forbidden fat or nebelah. V. infra.
(6) V. p. 622, n. 10.
(7) The flesh of a foetus is accounted as the flesh of an ordinary animal and the prohibition of ‘flesh in milk’ applies to it.
(8) I.e., if a man cooked blood or the afterbirth of an animal or a piece of an unclean animal in milk and ate it he would not be liable for eating flesh cooked in milk. Of course he would be liable for eating blood, or for eating of an unclean animal.
If it so happened that a male had milk.

The milk extracted from a slaughtered animal cannot be said to be ‘mother's milk’, for the slaughtered animal can no more be a ‘mother’.

For only the milk of that species of animal is prohibited whose flesh would be included under the term ‘kid’, and since unclean animals are expressly precluded by the term ‘kid’, their milk is also excluded from the prohibition.

V. supra p. 621, n. 5.

I.e., from that verse which is required for the general statement of the law. See, however, Rashi who emends the text by omitting ‘Samuel is of the view . . . existing prohibition’; for, according to Rashi, Samuel's view as stated is the result of the interpretation here, and not the cause and reason of this interpretation.

And does not require any expression of the verse to exclude it.

Death by the hands of Heaven; v. Sanh. 83a.

V. XXII, 9.

Unclean terumah is already subject to one prohibition viz., a priest may not eat thereof, and a second prohibition arising by reason of the priest's uncleanness cannot be superimposed.

Which includes the forbidden fat and the animal that died of itself; hence in this case the Torah expressly sanctioned one prohibition to be superimposed upon an already existing prohibition.

I.e., R. Eliezer, in whose name Samuel had reported the above ruling. He maintains that a prohibition cannot be superimposed upon an existing prohibition. This is not to imply that R. Eliezer was the teacher of Samuel (Rashi).

I.e., had not yet brought forth young. Does ‘mother’ in the text mean an animal that has brought forth young or not?

Presumably if he ate it, for he has thereby transgressed the prohibition of ‘flesh in milk’. The penalty for eating forbidden fat does not enter into consideration here.

For the prohibition of ‘flesh in milk’ cannot be superimposed upon the existing prohibition of forbidden fat.

Viz., for cooking flesh in milk. The prohibition of forbidden fat is only in respect of the eating thereof.

The Torah has in every instance expressed the prohibition of eating ‘flesh in milk’ by the words: Thou shalt not see thea a kid etc.

Talmud - Mas. Chullin 114a

whenever a man does not incur stripes for the eating he likewise does not incur stripes for the cooking thereof.

Another version runs as follows: There is no dispute at all that for the cooking he certainly incurs stripes; they differ only with regard to the eating thereof: he who says he does not incur stripes contends that a prohibition cannot be superimposed upon an existing prohibition, and he who says he incurs stripes contends that for this very reason did the Divine Law express the prohibition of eating by the term ‘cooking’ [to signify that] whenever a man incurs stripes for the cooking he likewise incurs stripes for the eating thereof. Alternatively you may say: One teaches one thing, the other teaches another thing, but they do not differ at all.

An objection was raised. If a man cooked [flesh] in whey, he is not liable. If he cooked blood in milk, he is not liable. If he cooked bones, nerves, horns or hoofs in milk, he is not liable. If he cooked [consecrated flesh] that was piggul or left over or unclean [flesh] in milk, he is liable! — That Tanna is of the opinion that a prohibition can be superimposed upon an existing prohibition. ‘If a man cooked flesh in whey, he is not liable’. This supports the view of R. Simeon b. Lakish. For we have learnt: Whey is counted as milk, and the sap [of olives] is counted as oil. Said R. Simeon b. Lakish: They taught this only in respect of rendering seeds susceptible to contract uncleanness, but in respect of the prohibition of cooking flesh in milk whey is not counted as milk.

Our Rabbis taught: [It is written: Thou shalt not see thea a kid] in its mother's milk. From this I know [that the kid is forbidden] in its mother's milk, but whence do I know [that it is also forbidden] in cow's milk or in ewe's milk? From the following a fortiori argument: If [in the milk of] its mother, a species with which the kid may be mated, it is forbidden to cook [the kid], how much more [in the milk of] a cow or of a ewe, with which species the kid may not be mated,\(^{(10)}\) is it forbidden to cook [the kid]! And the text also states: In its mother's milk.\(^{(11)}\) But why is this [latter] verse necessary? It has been inferred [from the a fortiori argument], has it not? — R. Ashi answered: Because one can argue that the first proposition of the [a fortiori] argument is unsound: Whence do you adduce the argument? From ‘its mother’! [As against this it may be argued] that is so in the case of its mother,\(^{(12)}\) since it is forbidden to be slaughtered [with the kid on the same day];\(^{(13)}\) will you then say the same in the case of a cow\(^{(12)}\) which is not forbidden to be slaughtered [with the kid on the same day]? The text therefore teaches, ‘In its mother's milk’.

Another [Baraitha] teaches: It is written: ‘In its mother's milk’. From this I know [that the kid is forbidden] in its mother's milk, but where do I know [that it is forbidden] in the milk of its ‘older sister’!\(^{(14)}\) From the following a fortiori argument: If [in the milk of] its mother, which enters the cattle-pen together [with the kid] to be tithed,\(^{(15)}\) it is forbidden to cook [the kid], how much more [in the milk of] its ‘older sister’, which does not enter the cattlepen together [with the kid] to be tithed,\(^{(15)}\) is it forbidden to cook the kid! And the text also teaches, ‘In its mother's milk’. But why is this latter verse necessary? It has been inferred [from the a fortiori argument], has it not? — R. Ashi answered: Because one can argue that the first proposition of the [a fortiori] argument is unsound: Whence do you adduce the argument? From its mother! [As against this it may be argued] that is so in the case of its mother, since it is forbidden to be slaughtered [with the kid on the same day]; will you then say the same in the case of its ‘older sister’ which is not forbidden to be slaughtered [with the kid on the same day]? The text therefore teaches, ‘In its mother's milk’.\(^{(16)}\) We have thus learnt [the prohibition with regard to] ‘the older sister’, but whence do we know it with regard to ‘the younger sister’!\(^{(17)}\) It can be inferred from both together.\(^{(18)}\) But from which do you proceed to make the inference? You may infer it from ‘its mother’. But [if it be objected to that] this is so in the case of ‘its mother’, since it may not be slaughtered [with the kid on the same day].\(^{(19)}\) Then the case of ‘the older sister’ argues otherwise.\(^{(20)}\) And [if it be objected to that] this is so in the case of ‘the older sister’, since it does not enter the cattlepen with the kid to be tithed,\(^{(21)}\) then the case of ‘its mother’ argues otherwise.\(^{(22)}\) The argument thus goes round; the reason given for this does not apply to the other, and the reason given for the other does not apply to this one. What they have in common is that each is flesh,\(^{(23)}\) and in the milk of each [the kid] may not be cooked; thus I will include ‘the younger sister’ too, for since it is flesh,\(^{(23)}\) [the kid] may not be cooked in its milk. But by this argument ‘the older sister’ can also be inferred from both together?\(^{(24)}\) — This is indeed so. Then for what purpose do I require the verse: ‘In its mother's milk’?\(^{(25)}\) — It is required for what has been taught. It is written: ‘In its mother's milk’. We know [that it is forbidden] in its mother's milk,

---

(1) He who says he incurs strips refers to the cooking of forbidden fat in milk, and he who says he does not incur stripes refers to the eating thereof.

(2) V. Glos.

(3) Beyond the prescribed time within which it must be eaten.

(4) Whereas other Tannaim do not hold that view, and R. Ammi and R. Assi are in agreement with those other Tannaim.

(5) Maksh. VI, 5.

(6) V. Lev. XI, 38. Milk and oil are among the liquids that render foodstuffs susceptible to uncleanness; cf. Maksh. VI, 4, 5.

(7) Ex. XXIII, 19.

(8) To be cooked.

(9) I.e., in goats’ milk.

(10) Cf. Lev. XIX, 19.

(11) Ex. XXXIV, 26.

(12) Viz., that the prohibition of cooking the kid in its milk applies.

(14) I.e., cows, in contradistinction from ‘the younger sister’ i.e., sheep. This is the explanation which Rashi says he received from his teachers, but after criticizing it Rashi expresses his preference for the interpretation of R. Joseph...
Bonfils, according to which ‘older sister’ and ‘younger sister’ are both goats, the former, however, being a goat of last year's breeding which had already been counted with other goats for the purposes of tithing, the latter being one which has not been counted with others for tithing.

(15) Cf. Lev. XXVII, 32, and Bek. IX. It has been laid down (a) that cattle may not be counted together with sheep or goats for the purposes of tithing nor vice versa. Moreover (b) an animal which has once been counted with others for the purposes of tithing cannot be counted again. The ‘older sister’ therefore cannot be counted together with kids for tithing either because of (a) or (b), according to whichever interpretation is adopted. V. preceding note.

(16) I.e., third, yet unexplained verse. The Tanna of this Baraitha is assumed to be identical with the Tanna of the first which applies one extra verse to include the cow and ewe, and the third verse he consequently employs for the ‘older sister’.

(17) V. supra p. 626, n. 20.

(18) Lit., ‘from between them’. I.e., the prohibition against cooking the kid in the milk of its younger sister can be inferred from the mother and the older sister.

(19) But the younger sister may.

(20) For it also may be slaughtered with the kid on the same day and nevertheless it is forbidden to cook the kid in its milk.

(21) But the younger sister does.

(22) For it also may be counted with the kids for the purposes of tithing, v. Bek. 20b, and yet it is forbidden to cook the kid in its milk.

(23) According to some MSS. the reading is ‘it is milk and it is forbidden to cook in it’ instead of ‘is flesh etc.’, and so it appears from Rashi too. V. Glos. of Maharam Schiff a.l.

(24) I.e., from an argument drawn from ‘its mother’ and from the cow (since the Tanna of this Baraitha is the identical Tanna of the first Baraitha in which it was shown that there is a verse expressly stated to include the cow and ewe), so that no verse is required to teach the prohibition even in the case of ‘the older sister’ (Rashi).

(25) Since this verse is repeated thrice, one clearly serves for its own purpose, another to include the cow and ewe (the teaching of the first Baraitha q.v.), but the third is indeed superfluous.

Talmud - Mas. Chullin 114b

but whence do we know [that it is forbidden] in its own milk? From the following a fortiori argument: if, where the fruit is not forbidden with the fruit1 — as in the case of slaughtering — the fruit with the dam is forbidden, how much more, therefore, where the fruit is forbidden with the fruit2 — as in the case of cooking — is the fruit forbidden with the dam? And the text also teaches, ‘In its mother's milk’. But why is this latter verse necessary? It has been inferred [from the a fortiori argument], has it not? — R. Ahadboi b. Ammi answered: Because we can refute the argument thus: A colt, the offspring of a mare, and which is also the ‘brother’ of a mule,4 could prove otherwise: for the fruit is forbidden with the fruit, nevertheless the fruit with the dam is permitted.5 But surely [this is no refutation since] that is due to the seed of the sire only;6 for, in truth, the case of a male mule, the offspring of a mare, and which is also the ‘brother’ of a female mule,7 could prove the reverse: for the fruit is permitted with the fruit and the fruit with the dam is forbidden! Rather said Mar the son of Rabina: Because one can refute the argument thus: A slave, the son of a bondwoman, who is also the brother of a freed bondwoman, could prove otherwise: for the fruit is forbidden with the fruit, nevertheless the fruit with the mother is permitted.8 But [this too is no refutation since] that position is due solely to the deed of emancipation; for, in truth, the case of a slave, the son of a freed bondwoman, who is also the brother of a bondwoman, could prove the reverse: for the fruit is permitted with the fruit, and the fruit with the ‘mother’ is forbidden! Rather said R. Idi b. Abin: Because one can refute the argument thus: The case of diverse seeds could prove otherwise: for the fruit is forbidden with the fruit, nevertheless the fruit with the mother is permitted.9 But is not the fruit with the fruit forbidden only by reason of the ‘mother’? For when grains of wheat and barley are together in a vessel they are not forbidden! — Rather said R. Ashi: Because one can refute the argument thus. It is indeed [forbidden] in the case of fruit with fruit for they are two separate bodies;10 will you say the same in the case of the fruit with the dam which is one body?11
Consequently the [extra] verse is necessary.

R. Ashi said: Whence do we know that flesh [cooked] in milk may not be eaten?\textsuperscript{12} From the verse: Thou shalt not eat any abominable thing;\textsuperscript{13} everything which I declared to be abominable to you comes under the law of Thou shalt not eat.\textsuperscript{14} I know from this that it is forbidden to be eaten; whence do I know that it is forbidden to derive any benefit from it? From R. Abbahu's statement. For R. Abbahu stated in the name of R. Eleazar: Wherever Scripture says: ‘It shall not be eaten’, or ‘Thou shalt not eat’, a prohibition both in respect of eating and in respect of deriving benefit is implied, unless Scripture expressly states otherwise as it did in the case of nebela.\textsuperscript{15} For it has been taught:\textsuperscript{16} [The verse.] Ye shall not eat of anything which dieth of itself; unto the stranger that is within thy gates thou mayest give it, that he may eat it,’ or thou mayest sell it unto a gentile,\textsuperscript{17} only tells me that it may be given away [as a gift] to a stranger or sold to a gentile. How do I know that it may be sold to a stranger? Because Scripture says. ‘Unto the stranger . . . thou mayest give it . . . or thou mayest sell it’. How do I know that it may be given away to a gentile? Because Scripture says. ‘Thou mayest give it . . . or thou mayest sell it unto a gentile’. Hence it may be derived that both giving and selling may be applied to a stranger or to a gentile:\textsuperscript{18} so R. Meir. R. Judah says: The words are to be taken literally, viz., giving away to a stranger and selling to a gentile.\textsuperscript{19} What is the reason for R. Judah's view? — He contends thus: Were the words to be interpreted according as R. Meir suggests, the Divine Law should have said: ‘Ye shall not eat of anything that dieth of itself; unto the stranger that is within thy gates thou mayest give it that he may eat it, as well as sell it’. Wherefore does it say ‘or’? To prove that the words are to be taken literally, viz., giving away to a stranger and selling to a gentile. And R. Meir? — He would reply that ‘or’ indicates that it is preferable to give it away [as a gift] to a stranger rather than sell it to a gentile. And R. Judah? — He would say that no Scriptural term is needed to indicate this preference of giving it away to the stranger rather than selling it to a gentile, it stands to reason, since the one\textsuperscript{20} you are bidden to support whereas the other you are not bidden to support.

(Mnemonic: Sabbath; Ploughing; Divers kinds of seeds; It and its young; Letting the mother bird go from the nest). According to this,

\begin{itemize}
  \item[(1)] ‘Fruit’, i.e., ‘offspring’. All the offspring of an animal may be slaughtered on the same day; it is only forbidden to slaughter the dam with the young.
  \item[(2)] The kid and the mother's milk are each the ‘fruit’ of the she-goat.
  \item[(3)] I.e., the kid in its own milk; in this case the milk of the kid is regarded as its fruit.
  \item[(4)] For the mare had also been mated with an ass and bore a mule.
  \item[(5)] Here it would be forbidden to breed the fruit with the fruit, i.e., the colt with the mule, for they are diverse kinds (v. Lev. XIX, 19), although it would be permitted to breed the colt with the mare.
  \item[(6)] It is prohibited to breed the fruit with the fruit, i.e., the colt with the mule, only because of the different sires of each and not because of the general principle that fruit with fruit is forbidden.
  \item[(7)] I.e., a mare had been mated with an ass on several occasions and bore a male and female mule.
  \item[(8)] A slave may not marry a free woman nor a free man a bondwoman. In this case, then, the fruit with the fruit is forbidden, i.e., the slave may not marry the kind of his sister sc. a free woman, but the fruit with the mother is permitted, i.e., the slave may marry the kind of his mother sc. a bondwoman.
  \item[(9)] Cf. Ibid. XIX, 19. Fruit with fruit is forbidden, i.e., diverse seeds may not be sown together, nevertheless the fruit with the mother is permitted, i.e., a seed may be sown in the 'mother' earth, the soil.
  \item[(10)] The kid and the mother's milk, each being separate fruits of the dam.
  \item[(11)] Therefore to cook a kid in its own milk might not be regarded as forbidden.
  \item[(12)] For the prohibition expressly says. Thou shalt not seethe a kid etc. Whence do we know that if one cooked flesh in milk others may not eat it.
  \item[(13)] Deut. XIV, 3.
  \item[(14)] This is a prohibition against eating anything which is produced by or results from a forbidden act, even though the prohibition in any particular case was circumvented by the employment of a minor or a gentile to perform that act. Hence it is forbidden to eat flesh cooked in milk, for the cooking thereof was a forbidden act.
\end{itemize}

(15) Deut. XIV, 21. In cur. edd. are added the words ‘which may be given to a stranger or sold to a gentile’. These words are omitted in MS.M. and also in the parallel passages Pes. 21b and Kid. 56b, although they are found in B.K. 41a. V. Tosaf. s.v. בָּלוּין.

(17) Deut. XIV, 21. The Hebrew word here rendered ‘stranger’ is ger or fully גֵּר חֲמוֹר, lit., ‘a stranger-settler’: a resident alien who has accepted the Seven Commandments of the sons of Noah (cf. Sanh. 56aff). He does not observe the Jewish dietary laws, but enjoys full rights and privileges of citizenship. Such a stranger, if poor, had to be maintained by the state according to the Biblical injunction: A stranger and a settler he shall live with thee (Lev. XXV, 35).

(18) The juxtaposition of the words in this verse, the two verbs in the middle preceded by ‘the stranger’ and followed by ‘the gentile’, suggests that both verbs, i.e., giving away and selling, are to be applied to the former and also to the latter.

(19) But it is forbidden to give it away to a gentile or sell it to a stranger.

(20) Sc. the stranger; v. p. 630, n. 8, note 1.

Talmud - Mas. Chullin 115a

should not what has been [unlawfully] prepared on the Sabbath be forbidden,\(^1\) since I have declared it to be abominable unto you?\(^2\) — Scripture says: For it is holy unto you,\(^3\) that means, ‘it’ is holy, but what has been prepared on it is not holy. Furthermore if a man ploughed with an ox and an ass together, or if he muzzled a cow when it was treading out [the corn], should it\(^4\) not be forbidden, since I have declared these acts to be abominable to you?\(^5\) — Surely if what has been [unlawfully] prepared on the Sabbath, which is a grave matter, is permitted, how much more so these!

Should not [the produce of a field sown with] diverse kinds of seeds be forbidden, since I have declared it to be abominable to you?\(^6\) — From the fact that the Divine Law states with regard to diverse kinds in a vineyard. Lest [the fruit of thy seed which thou hast sown, and the fruit of thy vineyard] be defiled [tikdash],\(^7\) [which has been interpreted as,] ‘lest it be burnt in fire’ [tukad esh], it follows that diverse kinds of seeds [sown in a field] are permitted. But perhaps [the inference is this]: whereas diverse kinds in a vineyard are forbidden to be eaten and also to be made use of, diverse kinds of seeds are forbidden to be eaten but are permitted to be made use of? — These [latter] have been compared with diverse kinds of cattle, for it is written: Thou shalt not let thy cattle gender with a diverse kind; thou shalt not sow thy field with two kinds of seed,\(^8\) and just as the issue [of the mating of diverse kinds] of thy cattle is permitted, so the produce of [diverse kinds of seed sown in] thy field is permitted. And whence do we know that the issue of diverse kinds of cattle is permitted? — From the fact that the Divine Law has prohibited the offering of a cross-breed\(^10\) to the Most High we may infer that to the common person it is permitted.

Should not ‘It and its young’ be forbidden, since I have declared it to be abominable to you?\(^11\) — Since the Divine Law has forbidden an animal that is out of time\(^12\) for an offering to the Most High it follows that such\(^13\) is permitted to the common person.

Should not [the mother-bird] which has been sent away from the nest be forbidden, since I have declared it to be abominable to you?\(^14\) — The Torah would not order to send it away if it would thereby lead to transgression.\(^15\)

R. Simeon b. Lakish said: Whence do we know that flesh [cooked] in milk is forbidden [to be eaten]? From the verse: Eat not of it raw, nor cooked in any cooking with water.\(^16\) Now the verse need not have added ‘in any cooking’; why then does it say ‘in any cooking’? To teach you that there is another cooking which is [also forbidden to be eaten] like this. And which is it? It is flesh [cooked] in milk. Said to him R. Johanan,

\(^{(1)}\) To eat as well as to derive any benefit therefrom. This is the meaning of ‘forbidden’ throughout this passage.
Yet it is established law that if, e.g., a man cooked food on the Sabbath it may be eaten at least by others if not by himself; v. supra 15a, and Ter. II, 3.

I.e., the produce of the field which had been so ploughed and the corn which had been so trodden (Rashi); or, the ox or ass which had committed the trespass (Tosaf.). V. however, Rashi infra s.v. רעמה אב

Cf. Deut. XXII, 10, and XXV, 4.

Ex. XXXI, 14.

I.e., the produce of the field which had been so ploughed and the corn which had been so trodden (Rashi); or, the ox or ass which had committed the trespass (Tosaf.). V. however, Rashi infra s.v. רעמה אב.

Cf. Lev. XIX, 19. Nevertheless the produce of diverse kinds of seeds sown together is permitted to be eaten; v. Kil. VIII, 1.

Deut. XXII, 9. Heb. שמח, interpreted as שמח אמין.

I.e., that it is absolutely forbidden.

Lev. XIX, 19.

I.e., the issue of diverse kinds of cattle. This is prohibited for a sacrifice, derived from Lev. XXII, 27. V. supra 38b.

If the dam and its young were both slaughtered in one day, that which was slaughtered last should be forbidden for all time and for all use; nevertheless it is established law that even though the law has been transgressed both animals are permitted; v. supra 78a.

Cf. Lev. ibid. 28. If the dam and its young were both slaughtered in one day, that which was slaughtered last should be forbidden for all time and for all use; nevertheless it is established law that even though the law has been transgressed both animals are permitted; v. supra 78a.

Cf. Lev. XXII, 27, and Zeb. 112b.

The prohibition of ‘It and its young’ is brought about by its inappropriateness in point of time, for one may slaughter them on different days.

Cf. Deut. XXII, 6, 7.

Lit., ‘for a stumbling-block’. The finder of this mother-bird, ignorant of the fact that it has been sent away from the nest, would eat it, and so be led into sin by another's performance of a precept. It must therefore be permitted.

A literal rendering of the verse.

Talmud - Mas. Chullin 115b

And is the following teaching of Rabbi so unsatisfactory? [For it was taught: The verse,] Thou shalt not eat it, refers to flesh [cooked] in milk. You say it refers to flesh [cooked] in milk; perhaps it refers to some other thing that is forbidden in the Torah? You can reply: Go forth and derive it by one of the thirteen exegetical principles by which the Torah is expounded, namely, ‘The meaning of a verse is to be deduced from its context’. Now what does this context deal with? With that which partakes of the characteristics of two kinds! Then this verse also deals with that which partakes of the characteristics of two kinds! — From that teaching I might have thought that the prohibition was only in respect of eating but not in respect of deriving benefit from it, he therefore teaches us [another teaching].

And whence does Rabbi infer that it is also forbidden to derive any benefit from it? — He infers it from the following argument: It is written here: For thou art a holy people unto the Lord, and it is written there: There shall be no consecrated prostitutes of the sons of Israel; just as there the prohibition refers to the pleasure derived therefrom, so here to the pleasure derived therefrom.

The school of R. Eliezer taught: Ye shall not eat of anything that dieth of itself . . . thou mayest sell it . . . Thou shalt not seethe a kid etc. The Torah here implies that when you sell it you may not first cook it [in milk] and then sell it.

The school of R. Ishmael taught: Thou shalt not seethe a kid in its mother's milk, is stated three times: one is a prohibition against eating it, one a prohibition against deriving benefit from it, and one a prohibition against cooking it.

It was taught: Issi b. Judah says: Whence do we know that flesh cooked in milk is forbidden? It is written here: For thou art a holy people, and it is written there: And ye shall be holy men unto me; therefore ye shall not eat any flesh that is torn of beasts in the field; just as there it is forbidden [as food], so here it is forbidden [as food]. We have thus learnt that it is forbidden as food; how do we know that it is forbidden for all use? I will tell you: it follows a fortiori: If ‘orlah,\textsuperscript{14} which is not produced by transgression, is forbidden for all use, then surely flesh cooked in milk, which is produced by transgression,\textsuperscript{15} is forbidden for all use! But [if you object] this may be true of ‘orlah only, since it had no period of fitness,\textsuperscript{16} [I reply] the law concerning leaven during Passover shows otherwise, namely, that although it had a period of fitness,\textsuperscript{17} it is nevertheless forbidden for all use. And [if you object] this may be true of leaven during Passover only, since it carries with it the penalty of kareth,\textsuperscript{18} [I reply] the law concerning diverse kinds in the vineyard\textsuperscript{19} shows otherwise, namely, that although it does not carry with it the penalty of kareth, nevertheless it is forbidden for all use.

Wherefore is the analogy necessary?\textsuperscript{20} Surely it can all be inferred from the a fortiori argument derived from ‘orlah thus: If ‘orlah which is not produced by transgression, is forbidden both as food and for all use, how much more then is flesh cooked in milk, which is produced by transgression, is forbidden both as food and for all use! — Because one could refute the argument thus: The law in the case where one ploughed with an ox and an ass together, or where one muzzled a cow when it was treading out [the corn], can prove otherwise, namely, although it\textsuperscript{21} was produced by transgression it is nevertheless permitted.\textsuperscript{22}

Wherefore, was it necessary to reply [in the argument], ‘The law concerning diverse kinds in the vineyard shows otherwise’? He could have replied. ‘The law of ‘orlah shows otherwise’; the argument would then have gone round again, with the result that it [sc. the law of flesh cooked in milk] would have been inferred from the common features [of the others]?\textsuperscript{23} — R. Ashi answered: Because one could have refuted the argument thus: The law of nebelah would show otherwise, for although it is forbidden as food, nevertheless it is permitted for all use. Said R. Mordecai to R. Ashi: We have learnt the following on the authority of R. Simeon b. Lakish: An inference drawn from cases with common features can be refuted only by those [cases] and not by other [cases].\textsuperscript{24} If so, it can very well be inferred from the common features, can it not?\textsuperscript{25} — Because one can refute it thus: The cases which present these common features are peculiar in that they are both products of the soil.\textsuperscript{26} But now,\textsuperscript{27} too, the argument can be refuted thus: This\textsuperscript{28} may be so of diverse kinds in the vineyard since it deals with products of the soil! — Said R. Mordecai to R. Ashi: We have learnt the following on the authority of R. Simeon b. Lakish: An inference drawn from cases with common features can be refuted by indicating any peculiarity whatsoever; but an argument which employs the expression ‘No, if you say it in this . . . will you say it in that?’ can only be refuted by adducing a feature in the one which is less or more grave than in the other, and not by any peculiarity whatsoever.\textsuperscript{29} But we may refute all the cases thus: This may be so of all these cases since they all deal with products of the soil!\textsuperscript{30} — R. Mordecai then said to R. Ashi: We have learnt the following on the authority of R. Simeon b. Lakish:

\begin{enumerate}
\item Deut. XII, 25. Which is superfluous in the context, the prohibition having already been stated in the preceding verse.
\item The foregoing verses state the law concerning consecrated animals that were redeemed after being rendered unfit for sacrifice owing to physical blemish. These animals are treated partly as ordinary unconsecrated animals in that the flesh thereof may be eaten even by one unclean, and partly as consecrated animals in that they may not be put to work, neither may one enjoy the milk or wool thereof.
\item I.e., flesh and milk. The teaching of this Mishnah is attributed to Rabbi as the editor of the whole Mishnah.
\item R. Simeon b. Lakish derives the prohibition against making use of flesh cooked in milk from the verse in connection with the paschal lamb. For just as the latter, if cooked and not roasted, would be forbidden for all purposes as all sacrificial flesh which has been rendered unfit so flesh cooked in milk is forbidden for all purposes.
\item Deut. XIV, 21. Heb. ישר, יונ. This verse concludes with the prohibition: Thou shalt not seethe a kid etc.
\item Ibid. XXIII, 18. Heb. ישר, יונ. The analogy is drawn by reason of the similar expression used in both passages, ישר, and יונ.
\item Viz., the act of coition.
\item Hence flesh cooked in milk is forbidden for all purposes.
\end{enumerate}
For as soon as it has been cooked in milk it is forbidden to be sold or used for any purpose.

The fruit of newly planted trees was forbidden for all use during the first three years; cf. Lev. XIX, 23.

The fruit of ‘orlah as soon as it comes into being is forbidden, whereas flesh and milk, before being cooked together, are each separately permitted.

Before the passover.

V. Glos.

Cf. Deut XXII, 9.

To establish the law that flesh cooked in milk is forbidden to be eaten, v.p. 634, n. 10. This prohibition, and that against deriving any benefit, can surely be inferred from the a fortiori argument.

Sc. the produce of the field so ploughed, or the corn which had been so trodden out.

And so, too, with flesh cooked in milk. But now that is it established by the analogy that flesh cooked in milk is forbidden to be eaten, this prohibition of ploughing with an ox and ass together, cannot be brought into this argument.

Thus it was unnecessary to introduce the case of sowing diverse kinds in the vineyard. The argument would then run as follows: Flesh cooked in milk is declared to be forbidden for all purposes by inference from ‘orlah by the a fortiori reasoning; if the objection be taken that ‘orlah is a special case inasmuch as it had no period of fitness, the reply would be that the case of leaven during Passover clearly shows that this distinctive feature (sc. not having a period of fitness) is not the reason for the general prohibition; and if the objection be taken that leaven during Passover is a special case inasmuch as there is a penalty of kareth attached to it, the reply would be that the case of ‘orlah clearly shows that the gravity of the penalty (sc. kareth) is not the reason for the general prohibition; and so the argument would go in a circle: the objection to the case of ‘orlah would be met by the case of leaven during Passover and vice versa. What, however, is common to ‘orlah and leaven during Passover is that each is forbidden as food and also for all use; the inference then follows that flesh cooked in milk, inasmuch as it is forbidden as food, should also be forbidden for all use. This type of argument, namely, an inference from common features of two or more cases, is very frequent in the Gemara; and the result being satisfactory, it was unnecessary to introduce the third case of diverse kinds in the vineyard.

I.e., the refutation must be in the nature of a peculiar characteristic possessed by the cases that determine the common features and which is absent from the case proposed to be inferred from the common features — e.g. the demonstration of a special characteristic peculiar to ‘orlah and to leaven during Passover but absent from flesh cooked in milk would indeed be a valid refutation. It is, however, no refutation of the argument by adducing cases wherein the common features are not found, for such an argument, as here the case of nebelah, is irrelevant.

V. supra n. 1.

I.e., even now when the third case, sc. diverse kinds in a vineyard, is introduced the argument can be refuted on this ground.

That it is forbidden as food and also for use.

Where an inference is made from the common features of two cases all the cases must indeed be alike in every respect, and if one case presents any special characteristic, even though that characteristic does not go down to the root of the matter and is of no significance, the argument is untenable. On the other hand, where the law in one case is inferred from another case, e.g. by an a fortiori argument, an incidental characteristic would not be taken into consideration. Only a characteristic which is of such significance as to suggest the reason for the law in that particular case, would be accepted as a refutation, for then it would be argued thus, ‘No, if you say it in the one case, it is because it has this grave or less grave characteristic; will you say it in the other cases which have not this characteristic’?

It is assumed for the present that an inference from three cases is to be regarded on the same footing as an inference from cases with common features, so that any peculiarity, however insignificant, would be accepted as a refutation.

Talmud - Mas. Chullin 116a

An argument inferring one case from another case can be refuted only by adducing a feature in the one case which is less or more grave than in the other, and not by any peculiarity whatsoever. An argument inferring one case from two cases can be refuted by any peculiarity whatsoever. An argument inferring one case from three cases, the argument from the three cases going round and round, so that the inference is made from the features common to all, can be refuted by any peculiarity whatsoever; but if it is not so,¹ it can only be refuted by adducing in the one case a feature which is less grave or more grave than in the other, and not by any peculiarity whatsoever.

But we may refute it thus: This may be so of diverse kinds in a vineyard since they had no period of fitness!² — R. Adda b. Ahaba said: This⁵ therefore informs us that the original roots of diverse kinds sown in a vineyard are forbidden, so that there was a time when these kinds had a period of fitness, namely, before they took root.

R. Shemaiah b. Ze'ira raised the following objection. [We have learnt:] If a man carried a perforated plant-pot [sown with cereals] through a vineyard and [what was in] it increased by a two-hundredth part,⁴ it is forbidden.⁵ Now only if it increased [by a two-hundredth part] is it [forbidden], but if it had not increased it would not⁶ [be forbidden]. — Abaye answered: There are two texts: It is written: Lest the produce⁷ be forfeited.⁸ and it is also written: The seed [which thou hast sown].⁹ How can we explain this? Thus, if they were sown originally [in the vineyard, they are forbidden] as soon as they have taken root, if sown [elsewhere] and brought [into the vineyard], if they increased [a two-hundredth part] they are [forbidden], but if they had not increased they would not [be forbidden].

Our Mishnah⁹ is not in accordance with the following Tanna. For it has been taught: R. Simeon b. Judah says on behalf of R. Simeon: Flesh cooked in milk is forbidden as food but is permitted for general use, for it is written: For thou art an holy people unto the Lord thy God. [Thou shalt not seethe a kid in its mother's milk];¹⁰ whilst elsewhere it is written: And ye shall be holy men unto me; [therefore ye shall not eat any flesh that is torn of beasts in the field; ye shall cast it to the dogs].¹¹ Just as there it is forbidden as food but is permitted for general use, so here too it is forbidden as food but is permitted for general use.

R. AKIBA SAYS, WILD ANIMALS AND FOWLS etc. But have not these¹² been applied to Samuel's interpretations?¹³ — R. Akiba is of the opinion that a prohibition can be superimposed upon an existing prohibition; therefore no specific verse is necessary [to show that the prohibition of flesh in milk applies to] forbidden fat or [to the flesh of an animal] that died of itself; moreover [the prohibition naturally applies to] an embryo [for it] is as an ordinary kid; consequently all the expressions are Superfluous and serve therefore to exclude wild animals, fowl and unclean animals.

R. JOSE THE GALILEAN SAYS, IT IS WRITTEN, YE SHALL NOT EAT OF ANYTHING etc. What is the difference between the views of R. Jose the Galilean and R. Akiba? — The difference between them is as regards wild animals: R. Jose the Galilean holds that wild animals are prohibited Biblically, whereas R. Akiba holds that wild animals are prohibited Rabbinically. Or, you may say, the difference between them is as regards fowls: R. Akiba maintains that wild animals and fowls are not included In the prohibition of the Torah but are prohibited Rabbinically, whereas R. Jose the Galilean maintains that fowls are not even prohibited by the Rabbis. There is also [a Baraitha] taught to the same effect: In the place of R. Eliezer they used to cut wood [on the Sabbath] to make charcoal in order to forge an iron instrument.¹⁴ In the place of R. Jose the Galilean they used to eat fowl's flesh cooked in milk.
Levi once visited the house of Joseph the fowler, and was served with a peacock's head cooked in milk and said nothing to them about it. When he came to Rabbi and related this. Rabbi said to him: Why did you not lay them under a ban? He replied. Because it was the place of R. Judah b. Bathyra and I imagine that he must have expounded to them the view of R. Jose the Galilean who said: A FOWL IS EXCLUDED SINCE IT HAS NO MOTHER'S MILK.

(1) I.e., the inference is not drawn from the common features, but by placing one case against the other.
(2) For it is assumed that it is not the actual diverse kinds sown in a vineyard that are forbidden but the produce of these diverse kinds; the original roots, however, that were planted or sown, do not come under the prohibition of diverse kinds.
(3) The fact that this objection is not raised.
(4) During the time the plant-pot was in the vineyard. A perforated plant-pot draws sustenance from the soil of the vineyard, and so there is an increase in the plant-pot by reason of the vineyard. Here there were in the pot one hundred and ninety-nine parts of permitted growth to one part forbidden, hence the whole is forbidden. But if they were in the proportion of two hundred to one the entire growth in the pot would be permitted.
(5) Kil. VII. 8.
(6) It is evident from this that the diverse kinds sown (even after they have taken root) are not forbidden, but only if there was an increase in the one by reason of the other.
(7) Lit., ‘the fullness’, i.e., the Increase.
(9) Which states that flesh cooked in milk is forbidden for all use too.
(10) Deut. Xlv. 21.
(11) Ex. XXII. 30.
(12) I.e., the thrice repeated expression ‘kid’.
(13) V. supra 113b.
(14) Sc. the circumcision knife. R. Eliezer is of the opinion that, since the performance of the precept of circumcision supersedes the Sabbath, all the necessary requisites such as the making or preparation of the knife, or the kindling of fire to obtain warm water etc. may also be performed on the Sabbath. V. Shab. 130a.
(15) According to MS.M. ‘And he did not eat it’. So in Shab. l.c.
(16) This is explained in the Gemara.

Talmud - Mas. Chullin 116b

AND IT IMPARTED ITS FLAVOUR [TO THE MILK]. IT IS FORBIDDEN. THE [MILK IN THE] STOMACH OF A VALIDLY SLAUGHTERED ANIMAL WHICH HAD SUCKED FROM A TREFAH ANIMAL. IS FORBIDDEN; THE [MILK IN THE] STOMACH OF A TREFAH ANIMAL WHICH HAD SUCKED FROM A VALID ANIMAL IS PERMITTED, BECAUSE THE MILK REMAINS COLLECTED INSIDE.

GEMARA. But is not the stomach [of an animal] of a gentile nebelah? — R. Huna answered. We are dealing here with the case of a kid that was bought from a gentile and we apprehend that it sucked from a trefah animal. But do we apprehend that it sucked from a trefah animal? Behold it has been taught: One may buy eggs from gentiles and need have no fear lest they are of birds that were nebelah or trefah! — Say, rather, we apprehend lest it sucked from an unclean animal. And why is it that we do not apprehend [sucking] from a trefah animal but we do apprehend [sucking] from an unclean animal? — Because trefah animals are not common whilst unclean animals are. If these are common, then even with regard to our own [kids] we should be apprehensive — With regard to our own, since we keep away from unclean animals, and whenever we see them together we separate them, the Rabbis imposed no restriction as a precaution; with regard to theirs, however, since they do not keep away from unclean animals, and whenever they see them together they do not separate them, the Rabbis imposed a restriction as a precaution.

Samuel answered: They are to be taken as one thus: The [milk in the] stomach of an animal slaughtered by a gentile is nebelah [and therefore forbidden]. But how could Samuel have said so? Behold Samuel has stated. The reason for forbidding the cheese of gentiles is because they curdle it with the skin of the stomach of a nebelah. This implies, does it not, that the [milk in the] stomach is permitted? There is no contradiction here. This [sc. our Mishnah] was taught before he [R. Joshua] retracted, the other after he retracted. THE [MILK IN THE] STOMACH OF A VALIDLY SLAUGHTERED ANIMAL WHICH HAD SUCKED FROM A TREFAH ANIMAL IS FORBIDDEN etc. But does not the first clause state, THE [MILK IN THE] STOMACH OF [AN ANIMAL] OF A GENTILE. OR [IN THE STOMACH OF] A NEBELAH. IS FORBIDDEN? — R. Ashi answered. In the first clause it would appear that one is eating nebelah, but here [in the final clause] the animal has been slaughtered. Said to him Raba. But is this not all the more reason to forbid it? For if in the case of nebelah, which is a loathsome matter, and if you were to permit [the milk in] its stomach one would not come to eat of its flesh, you say it is forbidden; is it not then all the more reason to forbid [the milk in the stomach of] a trefah animal which had been slaughtered, for if you were to permit it one would come to eat of its flesh? — Rather said R. Isaac in the name of R. Johanan. There is no contradiction here. This [the first clause was taught] before he [R. Joshua] retracted; the other [the final clause] after he retracted; [the first clause, however, of] our Mishnah was allowed to stand.

R. Hiyya b. Abba said in the name of R. Johanan: One may curdle [milk] with the [milk in the] stomach of a nebelah, but not — with the [milk in the] stomach of an animal slaughtered by an idolater. Thereupon R. Simeon b. Abba said before him: This is, is it not, in accordance with the view of R. Eliezer who maintains that the thoughts of an idolater are usually directed towards idolatry? — He replied: Of course. According to whom else could it be? When R. Samuel b. R. Isaac came [from Palestine] he reported in the name of R. Johanan: One may curdle [milk] with the [milk in the] stomach both of a nebelah and an animal slaughtered by an idolater for we are not concerned with the view of R. Eliezer. The law is: One may not curdle [milk] with the skin of the stomach of a nebelah, but one may with the [milk in the] stomach of a nebelah, and also with the [milk in the] stomach of an animal slaughtered unto idolatry. ([One may also curdle milk] with the [milk found in the] stomach of a validly slaughtered animal which had sucked from a trefah animal, and certainly with the [milk found in the] stomach of a trefah animal which had sucked from a valid animal, because the milk that is collected within is considered as dung.)

(1) It does not mix with the other fluids in the stomach of the trefah animal, but remains separate and distinct and is therefore permitted.
(2) It is assumed that the meaning is of an animal slaughtered by a gentile.
(3) Which was slaughtered by the Israelite.
(4) And therefore the Mishnah states that the milk found in the stomach of the kid is forbidden.
(5) V. supra p. 63b.
(6) Lest they sucked from an unclean animal.
(7) I.e., clean animals with unclean animals.
(8) In explanation of the two expressions in our Mishnah.
(9) Cf. ‘A.Z. 350 and b. It was R. Joshua who originally suggested that the milk in the stomach of a nebelah animal was forbidden; subsequently he retracted this. Now our Mishnah which, according to Samuel's interpretation, suggests that the milk in the stomach of a nebelah is forbidden is obviously the view of R. Joshua before he retracted; whereas Samuel's statement as regards the cheese of gentiles follows the later view of R. Joshua.

(10) And according to this, the milk in the stomach of a trefah animal which had sucked from a valid animal should also be forbidden. Can there be any distinction between the milk in the stomach of a nebelah and of a trefah?

(11) If one were allowed to eat the milk in the stomach of a nebelah. Strictly, however, it is permitted. For it is not regarded as part of the nebelah but merely collected in its stomach.

(12) V. p. 641, n. 8.

(13) Although it is contradicted by the final clause and does not represent the accepted view.

(14) In cur. edd. the last sentence is in parenthesis and is omitted in many MSS. V. however, R. Nissim, Rashal and other commentators.

Talmud - Mas. Chullin 117a

IS SUBJECT TO THE LAW OF SACRILEGE,¹ AND THE PENALTY FOR PIGGUL,² NOTHAR,² AND UNCLEANNESS IS INCURRED BY IT,³ WHICH IS NOT THE CASE WITH THE BLOOD. AND THE PROHIBITION OF THE BLOOD IS MORE STRICT, FOR IT APPLIES TO CATTLE, WILD ANIMALS AND BIRDS, WHETHER CLEAN OR UNCLEAN; BUT THE PROHIBITION OF THE FAT APPLIES TO CLEAN CATTLE ONLY.⁴

GEMARA. Whence do we know this?⁵ — R. Jannai answered, It is written: As it is taken off from the ox of the sacrifice of peace-offerings.⁶ Now what do we learn from the ox of the sacrifice of peace-offerings?⁷ Indeed, “it comes as a teacher but turns out to be a pupil”,⁸ we must compare the ox of the sacrifice of peace-offerings with the bullock of the anointed High Priest; as the bullock of the anointed High Priest is subject to the law of Sacrilege, so the ox of the sacrifice of peace-offerings is also subject to the law of Sacrilege.⁹ Said R. Hanina to him: And is the following teaching of Rabbi unsatisfactory? ‘The verse: All the fat is the Lord’s,¹⁰ signifies that the sacrificial portions of the less holy sacrifices are also subject to the law of Sacrilege’. — Abaye answered, [Both verses] are necessary [for our purpose]. For had the Divine Law only stated ‘All the fat’. I should have said that only the fat is [subject to the law of Sacrilege] but the caul and the two kidneys are not;¹¹ the Divine Law therefore stated the verse. ‘As it is taken off’. And had the Divine Law only stated the verse: ‘As it is taken off’. I should have said that the fat of the fat tail [of a lamb], which is not found in an ox, is not subject to the law of Sacrilege;¹² the Divine Law therefore stated. ‘All the fat is the Lord’s’.

Said R. Mari to R. Zebid: If the fat tail [of a lamb] is included under the term ‘fat’, should it not then be forbidden to be eaten?¹³ — He replied. It is for your sake that it is written: You shall eat no fat, of ox, or sheep, or goat.¹⁴ [Thus the Torah has forbidden] only such fat as is common to ox, sheep, and goat. R. Ashi answered: It is always referred to as ‘the fat of the fat tail’, but never as ‘fat’ simply. If so, it should not be subject to the law of Sacrilege?¹⁵ Obviouisly then the better answer is that of R. Zebid.

WHICH IS NOT THE CASE WITH THE BLOOD. Whence do we know this?¹⁶ — Ulla answered: Scripture says: To you,¹⁷ that is, it shall be yours. The school of R. Ishmael taught: Scripture says. To make atonement.¹⁷ that is, I have given it to you for an atonement and not that you be liable for Sacrilege on its account. R. Johanan said: Scripture says. It is,¹⁷ that is, it is the same before the atonement as after the atonement: just as after the atonement [the residue of the blood] is not subject to the law of Sacrilege, so before the atonement [the blood] is not subject to the law of Sacrilege. Perhaps I ought to say. It is the same after the atonement as before the atonement: just as before the atonement it is subject to the law of Sacrilege, so after the atonement it is subject to the law of Sacrilege? — There is nothing that is subject to the law of Sacrilege once its rites have been performed. But is there not? Surely there is the case of the removal of the ashes [from the altar], which [ashes] are subject to the law of Sacrilege even though the rites therewith have been performed, for it is written: And he shall put them beside the altar!18 — This case of the removal of the ashes and that of the garments of the High Priest19 are two texts which teach the same thing, and one may not draw any conclusions from two texts which teach the same thing.20 This, however, would be right according to the Rabbis who declare that the verse: And he shall leave them there,21 teaches that they [sc. the garments] must be hidden away; but according to R. Dosa who declares that the verse teaches that [the High Priest] shall not wear them on a subsequent Day of Atonement,22 what is to be said? — Rather [say] that the case of the removal of the ashes and that of the heifer whose neck was to be broken23 are two texts which teach the same thing, and one may not draw any conclusions from two texts which teach the same thing. This is well according to him who maintains that one may not draw conclusions from such texts, but according to him who maintains that one may draw conclusions from such texts, what is to be said?-There are two

(1) Cf. Lev. V, 15. If a person inadvertently makes use of the fat of a sacrifice he commits a trespass and must bring a guilt-offering for atonement. This is not the case with the blood of a sacrifice; v. Gemara.
(2) V. Glos.
(3) If a person ate the fat of a sacrifice which was rendered piggul or nothar (רבעון) i.e., what was left over beyond the prescribed time in which the sacrifice must be eaten, or if the person was unclean at the time he ate the fat, he would, in each alternative, incur guilt twice: for eating fat and also for eating piggul etc.
(4) I.e., to those animals which are fit for sacrifices, for it is written (Lev. VII, 25). Whosoever eateth the fat of the beast, of which men offer an offering made by fire unto the Lord, etc.
(5) That the law of Sacrilege applies to the fat of a sacrifice, whether the sacrifice was of the most holy or less holy kind.
(6) Lev. IV, 10. The sacrificial portions of the bullock brought by the anointed High Priest as his sin-offering are in this verse compared with the ox of the peace-offering.
(7) What is the purpose of the comparison? In fact, with regard to the burning of the sacrificial portions upon the altar, all those portions which are stated in connection with the peace-offering are also expressly stated here.
(8) V. supra p. 143, n. 8.
(9) Although the peace-offering is a sacrifice of the less holy kind, and from the time of the consecration of the animal until the sacrifice thereof it is certainly not subject to the law of Sacrilege- as soon as the sprinkling of the blood of the sacrifice has taken place the sacrificial portions of the animal are subject to the law of Sacrilege.
(10) Lev. III, 16.
(11) For the caul of the liver and the two kidneys, although sacrificial parts, cannot be comprehended with the term ‘all the fat’.
(12) For this verse: As it is taken of speaks of the sacrificial portions of an ox, and therefore cannot include the fat of the fat tail of a lamb.
(13) For all that fat in a sacrifice which is burnt upon the altar is forbidden to be eaten when the animal is slaughtered for ordinary use. Cf. Lev. VII, 25.
(14) Lev. VII, 23.
(15) For the law of Sacrilege in respect of the fat of less holy sacrifices is derived from the verse: All the fat is the Lord's; and if the fat of the fat tail is not included under the term ‘fat’, it cannot then be subject to the law of Sacrilege.
(16) That the blood of a sacrifice is not subject to the law of Sacrilege.
(17) Lev. XVII. 11: And I have given it to you upon the altar to make atonement for your souls: for it is the blood that maketh atonement by reason of the life. Several parts of this verse suggest that the blood is not the Lord's and so is not subject to the law of Sacrilege.
(18) Ibid. VI. 3. Every morning the ashes of the burnt-offering upon the altar were scooped up in a firepan and were deposited on the east side of the incline leading to the altar. It was forbidden to derive any use from them.
(19) Cf. ibid. XVI. 23. The garments worn by the High Priest on the Day of Atonement when he entered the innermost Sanctuary, the Holy of Holies, had to be put away never to be used again, either by an ordinary priest for his regular services or by a High Priest for service on the Day of Atonement of the following year.
(20) These two cases are therefore exceptions to the rule stated above, that after the performance of its rites a thing cannot be subject any more to the law of Sacrilege.
(21) V. p. 645, n. 6.
An ordinary priest, however, may wear these garments during the year. Cf. Deut. XXI, 1ff. The heifer, after the performance of the rites with regard to it, had to be buried in the very place where the ceremony was performed, and it was forbidden to derive any use from it.

Talmud - Mas. Chullin 117b

Limiting particles stated: here it is written: And he shall put them,¹ and there it is written: Whose neck was broken.²

Why are the three different texts with regard to the blood necessary?³ One excludes blood from the law of nothar,⁴ another excludes it from the law of Sacrilege, and the third excludes it from the law of uncleanness.⁵ No text, however, is necessary to exclude it from the law of piggul.⁶ for we have learnt: ‘Whatsoever is rendered permissible, whether for man or for the altar, by a certain rite.’⁷ is subject to the law of piggul’, but the blood is itself that which renders [other parts of the offering] permissible.

CHAPTER IX

Mishnah. The hide,⁸ meat juice, sediment, Alal,⁹ bones, sinews, horns and hoofs are to be included¹⁰ [to make up the minimum quantity in order] to convey food-uncleanness, but not to [make up the minimum quantity in order to] convey Nebelah-uncleanness.¹¹ Similarly, if a man slaughtered an unclean animal for a gentile and it still writhe convulsively, it can convey food-uncleanness,¹² but it can only convey Nebelah-uncleanness after it is dead,¹³ or its head has been chopped off. [Scripture] has [thus] intimated more cases that convey food-uncleanness than those that convey Nebelah-uncleanness. R. Judah says, if so much of Alal was collected together¹⁴ so that there was an olive's bulk in one place, one would thereby become liable.¹⁵

Gemara. We have learnt [here in our Mishnah] what our Rabbis have taught elsewhere: Protections¹⁶ [can be included to make up the quantity required] for a lighter uncleanness,¹⁷ but protections cannot [be included to make up the quantity required] for a graver uncleanness.¹⁸ Whence do we know that protections can be included for a lighter uncleanness? — From the following teaching of a Tanna of the school of R. Ishmael: It is written: Upon any sowing seed which is to be sown,¹⁹ that is to say, in the manner in which men take out the seeds for sowing: wheat in its husk, barley in its husk, lentils in their husks.²⁰ And whence do we know that protections cannot be included for a graver uncleanness? — From the following which our Rabbis taught: [He that toucheth] the carcass thereof [shall be unclean],²¹ but not he that touches the hide which has not an olive's bulk of flesh attached to it.

---

¹ Lev. VI, 3. The express addition of the suffix ‘them’ (in the Heb. ‘it’ in the sing.) in the text serves to exclude others.
² Deut. XXI. 6; lit., ‘the one whose neck was broken’. The redundant particle, the, limits the rule to this case only.
³ Namely. ‘To you’, ‘To make atonement’, and ‘It is’. V. supra p. 645, n. 4.
⁴ If a man ate the blood of a sacrifice which remained over beyond the prescribed time within which the meat there of may be eaten, he is liable only for eating blood, but not, in addition, for eating nothar.
⁵ If a man who was unclean ate the blood of a sacrifice, he is liable only for eating blood, but not, in addition, for eating unthar.
⁶ I.e., if the sacrifice was rendered piggul (v. Glos.) and a man ate of the blood thereof he would not be liable for eating piggul.
⁷ V. Zeb. 43a. By the proper sprinkling of the blood the sacrificial portions are rendered permissible to be burnt upon the altar, and the flesh to be consumed by the priest or owner. Therefore if the sacrifice was rendered piggul and a man...
ate of the flesh or of the sacrificial portions he would be liable; but if he ate of the blood, which is what renders others permissible, he would not be liable.

(8) For the precise meaning of all these substances v. Gemara.

(9) Some kind of offal of meat, as explained in the Gemara.

(10) Each of the substances enumerated would be reckoned together with a piece of meat less than an egg's bulk, so as to make up the quantity of an egg's bulk and, if unclean, would convey uncleanness to other foodstuffs or liquids. With regard to some of the substances, e.g., the meat juice, the sediment and the sinews, the reason why they would be reckoned together with the meat is because, although they are not eaten alone, they would be eaten together with the meat, and are therefore regarded as foodstuffs. And with regard to the other substances, e.g., the hide, bones, horns and hoofs, the reason is because each forms a protection or covering to a foodstuff and is therefore regarded as one with the foodstuff.

(11) If the meat was nebelah these substances would not be included together with the meat in order to make up an olive's bulk, the quantity necessary in order to convey uncleanness to men or vessels.

(12) If it was touched by anything unclean. For although at this moment the animal may not be eaten, either by the Israelite who slaughtered it, for it is an unclean animal, or by the gentile, since by its death only is an animal rendered permitted to a gentile, and not by the slaughtering (v. supra 33a), nevertheless the act of slaughtering performed by the Israelite has the effect that the animal be deemed a foodstuff forthwith, for this could only have been the intention and purpose of the slaughtering.

(13) Only then is it regarded as nebelah; cf. Lev. XI, 39.

(14) Although alal by itself is not a foodstuff, if one collected a number of pieces together so that there was an olive's bulk in one place, this action is significant and renders the bulk a foodstuff.

(15) If this accumulated bulk was taken from a nebelah and a man touched it and later entered the Temple or ate consecrated food, he would be liable to the penalty of kareth.

(16) I.e., that which surrounds and encloses foodstuffs, e.g., the husk of grain, the peel of fruit, the shell of nuts, the hide of an animal, etc.

(17) That condition of uncleanness which can only render unclean foodstuffs and liquids, provided there was an egg's bulk of the unclean matter.

(18) Nebelah-uncleanness. The condition of uncleanness that can even render unclean men and vessels, provided there was an olive's bulk of the uncleann matter.

(19) Lev. XI, 37, with reference to the uncleanness of foodstuffs.

(20) I.e., by seed is meant the grain together with its husk; hence the protection of food is considered as part of the food itself.

(21) Ibid. 39.

Talmud - Mas. Chullin 118a

I might also think that he that touches [the hide] at a part where the flesh is attached on the other side shall not be unclean, Scripture therefore says. ‘Shall be unclean’. What does this mean? — Raba, others say: Kadi, replied. There is something missing fin ‘that passage and it should read as follows: ‘[He that toucheth] the ‘carcass thereof [shall ‘be unclean]’, but not he that touches the hide which has not an olive's bulk of flesh attached to it, even though the hide brings it up to an olive's bulk. I might then also exclude the case of the hide which has an olive's bulk of flesh attached to it. So that if a man were to touch the hide at a part where the flesh is attached on the other side he would not, [I suggest, be unclean, for it [the hide] does not act even as a ‘handle; Scripture therefore says. ‘Shall be unclean’.

We have learnt elsewhere: Whatever serves as a handle [to a bulk] but not as a protection [is a medium whereby the bulk] contracts uncleanness and conveys uncleanness, but is not included [together with the bulk to make up the size of an egg to convey uncleanness]. Whatever serves as a protection, even if it does not serve as a handle, [is a medium whereby the bulk] contracts uncleanness and conveys uncleanness, and is included [together with the bulk]. Whatever serves neither as a handle 'nor as a protection [is no medium so that the bulk] neither contracts uncleanness nor conveys uncleanness thereby.

Where is there any Scriptural authority for the law of ‘handles’? — It is written: But if water be put upon the seed, and aught of their carcass fall thereon, it is unclean unto you.9 ‘Unto you’, that is, everything that you make use of [with regard to the foodstuff]; thus the verse includes handles.10 It is also written: And if any animal, which serves as food unto you, die.11 ‘Unto you’, that is, everything that you make use of [with regard to this carcass conveys uncleanness]; thus the verse includes handles.12 Hence [we see that] a handle can convey uncleanness to [the bulk in the case of foodstuffs] and also that a handle can convey uncleanness from [the bulk in the case of a carcass].

That a protection can convey uncleanness to and from [the bulk] does not require any verse, for it is inferred by an a fortiori argument from a handle thus: If a handle which affords no protection can convey uncleanness to and from [the bulk], how much more that which affords protection! Why then does the Divine Law state a verse with regard to a protection?13 It is, surely, to teach that it14 is to be included together [with the bulk].15 But I might say: A handle can convey uncleanness to [the bulk] but not from it,16 and a protection can convey uncleanness both to and from [the bulk],17 but a handle cannot convey uncleanness from [the bulk], neither is a protection to be included together [with the bulk]? — You surely cannot say that a handle can convey uncleanness to [the bulk] but not from [the bulk], for if it can bring in the uncleanness it certainly can pass it on! Then I might say: A handle can convey uncleanness from [the bulk] but not to [the bulk], and a protection can convey uncleanness both to and from [the bulk], but a handle cannot convey uncleanness to [the bulk], neither is a protection to be included together [with the bulk]? — There is another verse which also teaches the law of handles, for it is written: Whether oven, or range for pots, it shall be broken in pieces: they are unclean, and shall be unclean unto you.18 ‘Unto you’, that is, everything that you make use of [with regard to it is unclean]; thus the verse includes handles.19

Which of these verses is superfluous?20 If the Divine Law had stated [the law of handles] in connection with seeds and it was intended that the others21 be inferred from them, [the objection could be raised thus,] That is so with seeds only, since they have more conditions of uncleanness than the others,22 And if the Divine Law had stated it in connection with the oven and it was intended that the others be inferred from it, [the objection could be raised thus,] That is so with the oven only since it renders foodstuffs unclean by its air-space.23 And if the Divine Law had stated it in connection with nebelah and it was intended that the others be inferred from it, [the objection could be raised thus,] That is so with the nebelah only since it can render man unclean, it can convey uncleanness by carrying,24 and it is its own source of uncleanness.25 — One could not indeed infer one case from the other, but one could infer one case from the other two cases. Which one would you infer? If the Divine Law had not stated it in connection with seeds but you would have inferred it from the other two, [the objection could be raised thus,] That is so with the other cases since they become unclean without first having been rendered susceptible thereto; will you say the same of seeds which become unclean only if first they have been rendered susceptible thereto?26 — Said R. Huna the son of R. Joshua: But surely fruit which has not been rendered susceptible to uncleanness is in the same condition as an oven which is not yet finished27 — Rather you could raise this objection: That is so with the other cases since they both become unclean without contact [with unclean matter],28 will you say the same of seeds which become unclean only by contact? And if the Divine Law had not stated it in connection with the oven but you would have inferred it from the others, [the objection could be raised thus:] That is so with the other cases since each29 is a foodstuff! — The fact is the Divine Law need not have stated it in connection with nebelah, for you could have inferred it from the others.30 For what purpose then is the law of handles stated in connection with nebelah? If then the law of handles serves no purpose in connection with nebelah, you may apply it to other cases.31 Hence [you derive that] a handle can convey uncleanness both to and from [the bulk], and [that] a protection can be included together [with the bulk].32

But still the law of handles stated in connection with nebelah was absolutely necessary; for had not the Divine Law stated it in connection with nebelah I should have said: ‘It is enough if the inferred law is as strict as that from which it is inferred’, and therefore, just as the others cannot render a man unclean so nebelah cannot render a man unclean! In truth the law of handles in connection with nebelah is really necessary, but it is the law of protections in connection with nebelah that is unnecessary. Why did the Divine Law state it? Will you say, [to teach] that it can be included together [with the bulk]? Surely you have already said that it cannot be included! [And to teach] that it can convey the uncleanness from the bulk [is unnecessary], for it is already inferred by an a fortiori argument from the law of handles! If then the law of protections in connection with nebelah serves no purpose, you may apply it to the law of handles in connection with nebelah; and if the law of handles in connection with nebelah also serves no purpose, you may then apply it to the law of handles in connection with other cases. Hence [we derive that] a handle can convey uncleanness both to and from [the bulk] and a protection can be included together [with the bulk].

(1) The two clauses of this Baraita apparently contradict each other: the first clause states that the hide ‘of a carcass does not convey uncleanness, whereas the second clause states that ‘one who touches the hide of a carcass becomes unclean.

(2) Aliter: ‘as the case may be’, i.e., introducing respectively other persons.

(3) For the protection cannot be included together with a morsel of the carcass to make up the olive's bulk in order to convey nebelah-uncleanness.

(4) For although the hide does not serve as a protection so as to be reckoned as part of the carcass itself, it serves nevertheless as a handle or connective by which uncleanness can be conveyed to other matters.

(5) 'Uk. 1, 1.

(6) E.g., the stalks of fruit or a marrowless bone attached to a piece of flesh; each, although not a foodstuff, acts as a handle or connective to convey uncleanness to other foodstuffs if the fruit or the flesh was unclean, or to render the fruit or flesh unclean if the stalk or bone came into contact with unclean matter.

(7) E.g., hide to which is attached an olive's bulk of flesh, or nut shells.

(8) E.g., hair.

(9) Lev. XI, 38.

(10) That in connection with foodstuffs a handle can convey the uncleanness to the bulk; in other words the bulk contracts uncleanness through the medium of the handle, for this verse only speaks of the foodstuff contracting uncleanness.

(12) That through the medium of the handle the carcass conveys uncleanness to everything that comes into contact with the handle.

(13) Cf. supra 117b the teaching of the Tanna of the school of P. Ishmael, where v. 37 is interpreted for this purpose.

(14) Sc. the protection.

(15) To make up the requisite minimum quantity.

(16) For the verse which implies that a handle can convey the uncleanness from the bulk deals solely with nebelah, which is a grave uncleanness, and no other case may be inferred from it.

(17) For a protection is a degree graver than a handle by reason of the a fortiori argument.

(18) Lev. XI, 35.

(19) I.e., that a handle can convey the uncleanness from an external source to the vessel. There being, therefore, two verses each teaching the law that a handle can convey uncleanness to the bulk, one would be utilized to teach the law that handles can convey uncleanness from the bulk. Consequently, now that handles can convey uncleanness to and from the bulk, the verse (ibid. 37) with regard to a protection is entirely superfluous, for it would have been inferred by an a fortiori argument from handles; it must serve therefore to teach the law that the protection is to be included together with the bulk to make up the requisite minimum quantity.

(20) For we have now three verses each stating the law of handles, viz., v. 35 which deals with an oven, v. 38 which deals with seeds, and v. 39 which deals with nebelah.

(21) Sc. the rule of handles in connection with the oven and nebelah.

(22) Seeds, being foodstuffs, can become unclean even from that which is unclean in the first degree, whereas an oven or any vessel can only contract uncleanness from that which is a primary source of uncleanness. Moreover, foodstuffs have more conditions of uncleanness than nebelah, as is expressly stated in our Mishnah as the result of the application of the law of protections.

(23) Which is not the case with foodstuffs and nebelah. The oven, being an earthenware vessel, can render unclean any foodstuffs which come into its air-space even though there was no actual contact. V. supra 24bff

(24) As well as by contact, which is not the case with the others.

(25) Whereas the oven and the foodstuffs were rendered unclean by some unclean matter.

(26) For foodstuffs cannot contract uncleanness unless they have first been rendered susceptible to uncleanness by being moistened by water or any of the other liquids prescribed. Cf. Lev. XI, 38.

(27) From the point of view of the application of uncleanness fruit which has not been moistened by water is considered ‘unfinished’ just as an unfinished article.

(28) The oven contracts uncleanness without any contact, as when a dead reptile is suspended in its air-space; nebelah, too, is unclean without any contact for it is its own source of uncleanness.

(29) Sc. nebelah and seeds.

(30) By drawing the conclusion from the common features of the two cases, for each of those cases has a peculiarity which is not present in the other. Seeds are peculiar in that they have many conditions of uncleanness; the oven is peculiar in that its air-space can render unclean. The features common to both are that they are unclean and that through the medium of a handle they can convey uncleanness to others; the same would apply to nebelah.

(31) Sc. foodstuffs, that through the medium of a handle they can contract uncleanness.

(32) Accordingly, ‘unto you’ stated in connection with seeds teaches that a handle can convey uncleanness from the bulk; ‘unto you’ stated in connection with nebelah teaches that with foodstuffs a handle can convey uncleanness to the bulk, (for it was unnecessary to state this for nebelah itself since nebelah could have been inferred from the other two cases, v. p. 653, n. 6; moreover, it was also unnecessary to teach the rule that a handle can convey uncleanness from the bulk, for this we already know with regard to foodstuffs). ‘Upon any sowing seed’ teaches that a protection can be included together with the bulk to make up the requisite minimum quantity.

(33) I.e., nebelah cannot render a man unclean by means of a handle, e.g., if a man touched a dry bone at the end of which there was a piece of nebelah he would not be unclean. Hence it was necessary that the law of handles be stated in connection with nebelah in order to include this case.

(34) Which is derived from the verse: Shall be unclean, supra 118a top.

(35) Sc. a protection.

(36) Supra p. 650.

(37) Supra p. 651.

(38) For the law of handles is expressly stated in connection with nebelah in the verse: Which serves as food unto you; v. supra p. 651.

Talmud - Mas. Chullin 118b

But I could say this: If the law of protections in connection with nebelah serves no purpose then you may apply it to the law of protections in connection with other cases, with the result [that we learn] that a protection can convey uncleanness to [the bulk] and also [that] a protection can be included together [with the bulk], but a handle [I maintain] cannot convey uncleanness to [the bulk]! — Indeed at the very outset [it must be admitted that] the law of handles stated in connection with foodstuffs refers to the handle as conveying the uncleanness to [the bulk]. Then for what purpose is the law of protections stated in connection with nebelah? For its own purpose. But for what? [Will you say to teach] that it7 can be included together [with the bulk]? Surely you have already said that it cannot be included! And [to teach] that it can convey uncleanness to and from [the bulk is unnecessary], for it can surely be inferred by an a fortiori argument from the law of handles! — Scripture sometimes takes trouble to state a rule even though it could be inferred by an a fortiori argument. But if so, I can say the same of the law of protections in connection with other cases; I can say that it actually teaches that it5 conveys uncleanness to and from [the bulk], for although it could be inferred by an a fortiori argument, Scripture nevertheless troubled to state it expressly! — Wherever it is possible to interpret the verse [as applying to something else] we do so.⁴ R. Habiba said: The law of protections stated in connection with nebelah is exceptional, for since it acts in the same way as a handle \(^5\) [it is only right that] we refer it to the law of handles.\(^6\) R. Judah b. Ishmael demurred, raising an objection from the following Mishnah which we learnt: The point of a pomegranate is included [with the fruit], but its blossom is not included.\(^7\) Wherefore is this? Should not one apply the rule of the verse: Upon any sowing seed which is to be sown?\(^8\) And it is not so here. Moreover we have learnt: THE HIDE, MEAT JUICE, SEDIMENT . . . ARE TO BE INCLUDED TO CONVEY FOOD-UNCLEANNESS; whence do we know it?\(^9\) — The fact is, there are three Scriptural expressions: ‘upon any sowing’, ‘seed’, ‘which is to be sown’; one refers to the protections of seeds, the other to the protections of fruit and the third to the protections of flesh, eggs, and fish.

R. Hiyya b. Ashi said in the name of Rab: A handle serves \([as a connective]\) for the uncleanness\(^{10}\) but a handle does not serve \([as a connective]\) for rendering susceptible to uncleanness.\(^{11}\) R. Johanan says: A handle serves \([as a connective]\) both for the uncleanness and for rendering susceptible to uncleanness. Wherein do they differ?\(^{12}\) — If you wish you may say [that they differ] in the interpretation of a verse, or if you wish you may say [that they differ] in the logical reasoning. ‘If you wish you may say [that they differ] in the interpretation of a verse’\(^{13}\) — one maintains, a Scriptural expression may be interpreted as referring to the immediately preceding subject but not to what is anterior thereto, whilst the other maintains, a Scriptural expression may be interpreted as referring both to the immediately preceding subject and to what is anterior thereto. ‘Or if you wish you may say [that they differ] in the logical reasoning’ one maintains, being rendered susceptible to uncleanness is the first stage of uncleanness,\(^{14}\) whilst the other maintains, being rendered susceptible to uncleanness is not the first stage of uncleanness. There is [a Baraitha] taught which accords with the view of R. Johanan. It was taught: As a handle serves as a connective for the uncleanness so it serves also as a connective for rendering susceptible to uncleanness. And as seeds can contract uncleanness only when they have been plucked up\(^{15}\) so can they be rendered susceptible to uncleanness only when they have been plucked up.

Rab said: A handle cannot serve \([as a connective]\) to anything less than the size of an olive,\(^{16}\) and a protection cannot serve \([as a protection]\) to anything less than the size of a bean.\(^{17}\) R. Johanan said: A handle can serve \([as a connective]\) to anything less than the size of an olive,\(^{18}\) and a protection can serve \([as a protection]\) to anything less than the size of a bean.

An objection was raised: If there were two bones \([of a corpse]\) that bore each a half-olive's bulk of flesh \([at one end]\) and a man brought into a house the other two ends, and the house overshadowed them, the house becomes unclean.\(^{19}\)

Judah b. Nakosa says in the name of R. Jacob: How can two bones \([each bearing only a half olive's bulk of flesh at the other end]\) be reckoned together to make up an olive's bulk?\(^{20}\)

---

(1) Sc. foodstuffs.
(2) The question at the early stages of the argument when it is suggested that a handle can convey uncleanness from the bulk but not to it in the case of foodstuffs is untenable, for the context clearly shows that the handle, which is referred to in that verse, is intended to convey the uncleanness to the bulk.
(3) Sc. a protection.
(4) And here the verse can be interpreted as referring to the rule that the protection can be included together with the rest.
(5) The protection of a nebelah, sc. the hide, is admittedly not part of the nebelah, for it is not included together with the flesh to make up the minimum quantity to convey uncleanness, but it serves to convey uncleanness from the nebelah; in other words it serves in the capacity of a handle.
(6) And not as was suggested supra (p. 655) to the law of protections in regard to other cases.
(7) ‘Uk. II, 3. The point may be regarded as a protection to the pomegranate and as such may be considered as part of the fruit, but the blossoms around it are at most a protection over the point, i.e., a protection to a protection, and as such cannot be considered part of the fruit.
Lev. XI, 37. For the law of protections is derived from this verse, and only that covering is regarded as a protection which is sown together with the seed or is planted with the fruit; thus one must exclude the protuberances of fruit.

Seeing that the law of protections is stated only with regard to seeds.

To convey uncleanness to and from the bulk.

I.e., if the handle was moistened by water the bulk was not thereby rendered susceptible to contract uncleanness.

I.e., what is the ground of their difference.

The law of handles in connection with foodstuffs is deduced from the expression ‘unto you’ stated in the following verse: But if water be put upon the seed, and aught of their carcass fall thereon, it is unclean unto you (Lev. XI, 38). Now this expression certainly refers to the subject of uncleanness which immediately precedes it, but the question is whether it also refers to the subject, ‘If water be put upon’, which is at the beginning of the verse.

And just as a handle serves as a connective for the uncleanness so it also serves as a connective for rendering the rest susceptible to uncleanness.

For otherwise all seed would be unclean because of the dead reptiles found in the soil.

If the handle to a foodstuff less than the size of an olive's bulk (which foodstuff was among other foodstuffs together making up the size of an egg—so adds Rashi, but unnecessarily, v. Tosaf. s.v. ṭḥ) was touched by unclean matter, it does not act as a connective to convey the uncleanness to the foodstuff.

If, for instance, a bone has less than a bean's bulk of marrow in it, it cannot, as a protection, be included together with the marrow to make up the requisite quantity, nor can it convey the uncleanness either to or from the marrow.

But not to anything less than the size of a bean.

For whatsoever overshadows a handle to flesh is regarded as if it overshadows the flesh itself.

For a handle to anything less than the size of an olive's bulk is of no significance.

Talmud - Mas. Chullin 119a

Now how does Rab interpret this teaching [to accord with his view]? If he regards it [the bone] as a handle, then the first opinion conflicts with his; and if he regards it as a protection, then the second opinion conflicts with his! — If you wish, you may say he regards it as a handle, or if you wish you may say he regards it as a protection. ‘If you wish, you may say he regards it as a handle’ — and he is in agreement with Judah b. Nakosa. ‘Or if you wish, you may say he regards it as a protection’ — and he is in agreement with the first Tanna. R. Johanan, however, says that it can only be regarded as a handle, and so he is in agreement with the first Tanna. Come and hear: R. Judah says: If a thighbone has an olive's bulk of flesh attached to it, it brings about the uncleanness to the whole. Others say: Even if it has flesh only the size of a bean attached to it it is sufficient to bring about the uncleanness to the whole. Now how does Rab interpret this teaching? If he regards it [the bone] as a handle, then the second opinion conflicts with his; and if he regards it as a protection, then the first opinion conflicts with his. If you wish, you may say he regards it as a handle and he is then in agreement with R. Judah; or if you wish, you may say he regards it as a protection, and he is in agreement with the ‘others’. R. Johanan, however, says that it can be regarded as a protection and so he is in agreement with the ‘others’. But do not the ‘others expressly mention the size of a bean’? — It is only because the first Tanna [sc. R. Judah] stated a fixed quantity that they also stated a fixed quantity. Raba said: There is indeed a proof that the Baraitha regards it as a protection, for it states ‘a thigh-bone’. This is conclusive. It was stated: R. Hanina said that that was the [minimum] size, but R. Johanan said that that was not the [minimum] size. But does it not expressly say: ‘the size of a bean’? — It was only because the first Tanna stated a fixed quantity that they too stated a fixed quantity.

Come and hear. We have learnt: R. Eleazar b. ‘Azariah declares that of the bean clean but that of [other] pulse unclean, since one is pleased with it when handling them! — As R. Aha the son of Raba had suggested [in another case] that it referred to the stalk which is considered a handle, so here too it refers to the stalk and it is considered here a handle. And what is meant by ‘when handling them’? — It means, when moving them about.
Come and hear from the following teaching of a Tanna of the school of R. Ishmael: It is written: Upon any sowing seed which is to be sown,\(^{20}\) that is to say, in the manner in which men take out the seeds for sowing: wheat in its husk, barley in its husk, lentils in their husks!\(^{21}\) — It is different with a separate entity.\(^{22}\) R. Oshaia raised the question,

(1) I.e., each bone was dry and without marrow but there was a piece of flesh attached to one end of each, in which case the bones can act as handles only.

(2) Since the first Tanna declares the house to be unclean because a handle can serve as a connective even to what is less than the size of an olive's bulk.

(3) I.e., the bones contained marrow at one end but not at the other end, and the ends void of marrow were brought into the house. The bone of a marrow-bone is regarded as a protection to the marrow within.

(4) Since Judah b. Nakosa holds that a protection cannot serve as such to anything less than the size of an olive's bulk, whereas according to Rab it can serve as a protection to anything the size of a bean which is less than half an olive. The same difficulty would arise on the view of R. Johanan, which is apparently in conflict with that of Judah b. Nakosa, whether the bone is treated as a ‘handle’ or ‘protection’; v. n. 9.

(5) For presumably with regard to a protection Judah b. Nakosa would concede that a protection can serve as a protection even to that which is less than the size of an olive's bulk, provided, of course, it was not less than the size of a bean; thus entirely in agreement with Rab's view.

(6) The first Tanna presumably would agree with Rab that a handle cannot serve as a connective unless it was attached to flesh at least of the size of an olive's bulk.

(7) He cannot however regard the bones in the dispute between the first Tanna and Judah b. Nakosa as protections, for then he would be in agreement with neither: for Judah b. Nakosa insists upon an olive's bulk, and the first Tanna upon a half olive's bulk, since he speaks of two bones together making up an olive's bulk, whereas R. Johanan rules that a protection can serve as such even to anything less than the size of a bean which is certainly less than a half olive's bulk. See Rashi and Tosaf. a.l.

(8) I.e., if the olive's bulk of flesh attached to this bone was with other foodstuffs so that together there was an egg's bulk of foodstuff, and unclean matter came into contact with the bone, the whole would then become unclean.

(9) For Rab says that a handle to anything less than the size of an olive's bulk cannot serve as a connective.

(10) For R. Judah speaks of an olive's bulk of flesh which was attached to the bone, whereas Rab said that a protection to that which is less than an olive's bulk, provided it is of the size of a bean, can serve as a protection.

(11) In this case R. Johanan could certainly regard it as a handle and he would be in agreement with the ‘others’; moreover, if he did so, it would leave no ground for the question which follows in the text; but he preferred to regard it as a protection, since the thigh-bone, which is expressly mentioned in the Baraita, usually contains marrow and so must be considered as a protection. V. Rashi, s.v.

(12) Whereas R. Johanan considers it a proper protection even if the substance within is less than the size of a bean.

(13) An olive's bulk.

(14) The size of a bean; nevertheless a protection to something even less than the size of a bean would also be regarded as a protection.

(15) Which usually contains marrow, and therefore is to be considered a protection.

(16) The statement of the ‘others’ above: ‘Even if it has flesh only the size of a bean attached to it’.

(17) But a protection to anything less than this size cannot be considered as a protection.

(18) Cf. ‘Uk. I, 5. R. Eleazar b. ‘Azariah maintains that the pod of beans is not regarded as a protection to convey uncleanness to or from the beans, neither is it to be reckoned together with the beans so as to make up the requisite quantity, because the pod does not serve any useful purpose since the beans are large enough to be handled with the fingers. On the other hand the pods of peas or of other pulse are regarded as protections, for the peas are small and the pods then serve a useful purpose in making the handling of the peas easier. Now even if there was only one pea in the pod it would serve as a protection to it. Hence it is clear that a protection can serve as a protection even to a foodstuff less than the size of a bean, contra R. Hanina and Rab.

(19) It is not the pod that is considered here but the stalk to which a number of pods are attached. In the case of other pulse, like peas, the stalk serves as a handle to all the pods (which obviously are more than an olive's bulk), and so is a connective for uncleanness. In the case of the bean, however, the stalk is of no importance, for the beans are large enough to be handled by themselves, and is therefore not considered a handle for the uncleanness.
Talmud - Mas. Chullin 119b

Can two protections be reckoned together\(^1\) or not? But what is the actual case? If you say that one is over the other, but can it be said that a protection over a protection [has the law of a protection]? Behold we have learnt: R. Judah says: An onion has three skins: the innermost skin, whether it is entire or has holes in it, is reckoned together [with the edible part]; the middle skin, if it is entire, is reckoned together, but if it has holes in it, it is not reckoned together; the outermost skin in either case is clean\(^12\) — R. Oshaia really raised this question: What is the law if the protection of a foodstuff was divided?\(^3\) Since this [half of the protection] does not protect the other [half of the foodstuff] and the other [half of the protection] does not protect this [half of the foodstuff] they cannot be reckoned together, or, it may be, since each [half of the protection] protects its own [half of the foodstuff] they can be reckoned together? Come and hear: R. Eleazar b. 'Azariah declares that of the bean clean but that of [other] pulse unclean, since one is pleased with it when handling them!\(^4\) — R. Aha the son of Raba answered: It refers to the stalk which is considered as a handle.\(^5\) And what is meant by ‘when handling them’? — It means, when moving them about.

Come and hear from the following teaching of a Tanna of the school of R. Ishmael: It is written: ‘Upon any sowing seed which is to be sown’,\(^6\) that is to say, in the manner in which men take out the seeds for sowing; wheat in its husk, barley in its husk, lentils in their husks\(^7\) — As R. Aha the son of Raba had suggested [above] that it referred to the stalk which is considered a handle, so here it refers to the stem [of the ear of wheat] which is considered a protection.\(^8\) Granted, however, that the upper rows need the lower ones; but do the lower need the upper ones?\(^9\) — We are dealing here with one row only.\(^10\) But is there ever as much as an egg's bulk of foodstuff in one row? — Yes, in the wheat grains of Simeon b. Shetah.\(^11\) And now that you have arrived at this, you may say that it refers to a single grain of wheat, but of the wheat grains of Simeon b. Shetah.

[To revert to] the [above] text: If there were two bones [of a corpse] that bore [at one end] a half olive's bulk of flesh and a man brought into a house the other two ends, and the house overshadowed them, the house becomes unclean. Judah b. Nakosa says in the name of R. Jacob: How can two bones [each bearing only a half olive's bulk of flesh at the other end] be reckoned together to make up an olive's bulk”? R. Simeon b. Lakish said: This was taught only with regard to a bone which is considered a handle, but a hair is not considered a handle.\(^12\) R. Johanan however said: Even a hair is considered a handle.

R. Johanan raised the following objection against R. Simeon b. Lakish: If there was an olive's bulk of [unclean] flesh adhering to the hide and a man touched a shred hanging from it,\(^13\) or a hair that was opposite it,\(^14\) he becomes unclean. It is, is it not, because it [the hair] is regarded as a handle? — No, it is because it is regarded as a protection. But can there be a protection over another protection?\(^15\) — It penetrates right through.\(^16\)

R. Aha b. Jacob demurred, [saying:] If so, how may we write Tefillin?\(^17\) Surely it is necessary that the writing be perfect, and it is not so?\(^18\) — [In raising this objection] he must have overlooked the statement [of the Rabbis] in the West, viz., Any hole [in parchment] over which the ink can pass is not considered a hole.\(^19\) Or if you wish, you may answer: Each is considered a handle, for as R. Ila'a referred [elsewhere] to a bristle among many bristles, so here too it refers to a hair among many hairs.\(^20\) And where was this view of R. Ila'a stated? In connection with the following [Mishnah].\(^21\)
The bristles\textsuperscript{23} of ears of corn bring in uncleanness and convey uncleanness,\textsuperscript{24} but are not included together [with the rest to make up the quantity necessary to convey uncleanness]. Of what use is a bristle?\textsuperscript{25} R. Ila'a replied: It refers to a bristle among many bristles.\textsuperscript{26}

Another version renders the argument as follows: It is more reasonable to say that it [a hair] is regarded as a protection, for should you say it is regarded as a handle [it will be asked]: Of what use is one hair? — As R. Ila'a referred [elsewhere] to a bristle among many bristles, so here, too, it refers to a hair among hairs. And where was this view of R. Ila'a stated? In connection with the following Mishnah: The bristles of ears of corn bring in uncleanness and convey uncleanness, but are not included together with the rest. Of what use is a bristle? — R. Ila'a replied: It refers to a bristle among many bristles.

Some refer it\textsuperscript{27}

\begin{enumerate}
\item With the foodstuff within so as to make up the egg's bulk in order to contract and convey uncleanness.
\item V. 'Uk. II, 4. The innermost skin is regarded as part of the onion for it is edible, the middle is a protection and therefore can serve as such only when entire, the outermost as a protection over a protection which can in no circumstances be reckoned together with the foodstuff.
\item I.e., a foodstuff that had a protection over it was divided into two. V. however, Tosaf. s.v. שומרים.
\item V. supra p. 660, n. 3. Since, therefore, in the case of other pulse, such as peas, several pods can be reckoned together with the peas within them to make up the quantity of an egg's bulk; it is evident that two protections can be reckoned together.
\item The one stalk serves as a handle to many pods.
\item Lev. XI, 37.
\item Since several grains with their husks can be reckoned together to make up the quantity of an egg's bulk, it is evident that protections can be reckoned together; likewise, where a foodstuff was divided into two together with the protection upon it, the parts can be reckoned together.
\item The grains in the ear of corn spring from the rachis or stem in row upon row on all sides of it; moreover the ear of corn (in barley and certain species of wheat) is covered by an awn or beard. The suggestion seems to be here that the rachis and the awn together act as one protection to the grains.
\item The lower rows of grain support the upper rows and if the lower rows were to fall away the upper rows, losing their support, would fall away too; hence from the point of view of the upper rows the entire ear of corn serves as one whole protection. On the other hand, the lower rows can stand without the upper ones for it has its own protection, and the fact that the upper and lower rows in the ear can be reckoned together proves that two protections can be reckoned together.
\item I.e., the protection and the grains on one row only must make up the quantity of an egg's bulk.
\item In his time the grains of wheat were of extraordinary size, v. Ta'an. 23a.
\item But only a protection. And there is this qualification with regard to a protection, namely, that the contact must be made with the protection that is directly opposite the foodstuff.
\item The flesh. But, v. infra 124a.
\item I.e., on the outside of the hide, opposite the flesh.
\item For the skin is itself a protection and the hair is above the skin.
\item The hair penetrates through the skin to the flesh, so that it serves as a protection to the flesh, and not as a protection to the hide, so that it is not a protection over another protection.
\item I.e., phylacteries which contain scrolls of parchment with special selected passages written thereon. Cf. Deut. VI, 8.
\item Since the hair penetrates the hide the parchment made from it must perforce be full of holes, and any writing on it must be interrupted as the pen passes over these holes, and this invalidates the scroll.
\item The holes are so minute that the pen passes smoothly over them, even the ink does not collect in these holes.
\item Sc. the shred of flesh and the hair.
\item It is conceded by R. Simeon b. Lakish that many hairs taken together can serve as a handle, but a single hair, he maintains, cannot, for it would certainly snap when attempting to lift the bulk by it.
\item 'Uk. I, 3.
\item I.e., the spiky growth at the end of an ear of corn; the awn or the beard.
\end{enumerate}
(24) For they are regarded as handles.
(25) How can it serve as a handle seeing that it would break off as soon as one took hold of it?
(26) By grasping many awns together one can obtain a firm hold on the ears of corn.
(27) The above dispute between R. Johanan and Resh Lakish.

Talmud - Mas. Chullin 120a

to our Mishnah thus, THE HIDE, MEAT JUICE, SEDIMENT . . . [BONES . . .] ARE TO BE INCLUDED TO CONVEY FOOD UNCLEANNESS. Thereupon R. Simeon b. Lakish said: This was taught only with regard to a bone which is considered a protection, but a hair is not considered a protection; R. Johanan, however, said: Even a hair is considered a protection. Said Resh Lakish to R. Johanan: But can there be a protection over another protection? — [He replied.] It penetrates right through. R. Aha demurred saying: If so, how may we write Tefillin? It is necessary that the writing be perfect and it is not so? — He must have overlooked the statement [of the Rabbis] in the West, viz., Any hole [in parchment] over which the ink can pass is not considered a hole. R. Johanan then raised the following objection against Resh Lakish: If there was an olive's bulk of [unclean] flesh on the hide and a man touched a shred hanging from it, or a hair that was opposite it, he becomes unclean. It is, is it not, because it [the hair] is regarded as a protection? — No, it is because it is regarded as a handle. But of what use is one hair? — As R. Ila'a referred [elsewhere] to a bristle among many bristles, so here, too, it refers to a hair amongst other hairs. And where was this view of R. Ila'a stated? — In connection with the following Mishnah: The bristles of an ear of corn contract uncleanness and convey uncleanness, but are not included together with the rest. Of what use is a bristle? — R. Ila'a replied: It refers to a bristle among many bristles.

MEAT JUICE. What is the ROTEB? — Raba said: It is the fat. Whereupon Abaye said to him: But should it not by itself convey food uncleanness? — Rather it must be, meat juice which had set. But why ‘had set’? Even if it had not set it should also [be included with the meat], for Resh Lakish has said that the juice of vegetables is to be included [with the vegetable] to make up the date's bulk with regard to the Day of Atonement. — There it is a question of satisfying one's hunger and anything [though not strictly a foodstuff] would satisfy it; here, however, it is a question of what can be included [with a foodstuff] and, therefore, if it [the meat juice] had set it can be included, but if it had not set it cannot be included.

SEDIMENT. What is the KIPPAH? — Raba said, It is the sediment [of boiled meat]. Whereupon Abaye said to him: But should it not by itself convey food uncleanness? — Rather said R. Papa: It must be the spices.

We have learnt elsewhere: If a man clotted blood and ate it, or if he melted [forbidden] fat and gulped it down, he is culpable. Now it is quite clear in the case where he clotted blood and ate it, for since he clotted it he thereby determined it [as a foodstuff], but [why should he be culpable] where he melted fat and gulped it down? Scripture uses the term ‘eating’ in connection with it, and this is not eating? — Resh Lakish said: The verse says: Soul, to include one who drinks.

The same has been taught in respect of leavened bread: Where a man dissolved it and gulped it down, if it was leavened, he is liable to the penalty of kareth, and if it was unleavened, he has not thereby fulfilled his obligation on the Passover. Now it is quite right to say ‘If it was unleavened he has not thereby fulfilled his obligation on the Passover’, for the Divine Law says: Bread of affliction, and this is not bread of affliction; but why does it say: ‘If it was leavened he is liable to the penalty of kareth’? Does not Scripture use the term eating’ in connection with it? Resh Lakish said: The verse says: Soul, to include one who drinks.

And the same has been taught in respect of the carcass of a clean bird: If he dissolved it with fire (and gulped it down), he is unclean; but if in the sun, he is not unclean. Whereupon we put the questions is not the expression ‘eating’ written in connection with it? And Resh Lakish replied. The verse says: Soul, to include one who drinks. But if so, even (if he dissolved it) in the sun he should also [be unclean]? — In the sun it becomes putrid.

Now this was necessary [to have been taught with regard to each of these cases]. For if the Divine Law had stated it only with regard to the fat, one could not have inferred the same with regard to leavened bread, for (in the case of the former) there was never a moment when it was permitted; nor could one have inferred the same with regard to the carcass [of a clean bird], for the former is punishable by kareth. And had the Divine Law stated it only with regard to leavened bread, one could not have inferred the same with regard to the fat, for the former does not admit of any exception; nor could one have inferred the same with regard to the carcass [of a clean bird], for the former is punishable by kareth. And had the Divine Law stated it only with regard to the carcass [of a clean bird], one could not have inferred the same with regard to the others, for the former conveys uncleanness. [Clearly] one case could not have been inferred from the other, but could not one case have been inferred from the other two? — Which could have been inferred? Had not the Divine Law stated it with regard to the carcass [of a clean bird] but this latter was to be inferred from the others, [such inference could be refuted thus]: It is so with the other cases since they are punishable by kareth. And had not the Divine Law stated it with regard to leavened bread but this latter was to be inferred from the others, [such inference could be refuted thus], it is so with the other cases since they were never permitted at any time. And had not the Divine Law stated it with regard to the forbidden fat but this latter was to be inferred from the others, [such inference could be refuted thus]: It is so with the other cases since they admit of no exceptions; will you, then, say the same of the forbidden fat which admits of an exception? — What is this [exception]? Is it that the forbidden fat of cattle is permitted to the Most High? But a carcass [of a bird], too, is permitted to the Most High, namely, a bird whose head has been nipped off? Or is it that the fat of a wild animal [is permitted] to a common man? But a carcass, namely, the sin-offering of a bird whose head has been nipped off, is also permitted to priests! — In truth, [the exception is that] the fat of a wild animal [is permitted] to a common man, and as for your difficulty from the case of the priests, [it must be remembered that] the priests enjoy this privilege from the table of the Most High.

Wherefore is the following teaching necessary: ‘[It is written,] The unclean, to signify that the juice and the broth and the sediment of these are forbidden’? Surely it could have been inferred from the above cases? — It is necessary, for had not the Divine Law stated it expressly I would have said: ‘It is enough if the inferred law is as strict as that from which it is inferred’, and as there [a minimum of] an olive's bulk is essential, so here a minimum of an olive's bulk is essential.

(1) רוס, translated in the Mishnah as meat juice.
(2) On the surface of the broth.
(3) The eating of a date's bulk on the Day of Atonement is the minimum quantity to render one liable. Here the juice of the vegetable is regarded as part of the foodstuff and is reckoned together with it to make up this quantity. If it were not regarded as part of the foodstuff but as a liquid it could not be reckoned together with it; cf. Yoma 73b.
(4) For a liquid and a foodstuff cannot be reckoned together to make up the minimum quantity so as to convey food uncleanness, for the standard with each is different.
(5) רפם ‘sediment’, either of the meat itself, i.e., the particles of meat that fall away in the boiling and form a jelly, or of the spices; v. infra.
(6) Men. 21a, but not in a Mishnah.
(7) Lev. VII, 25: ‘The soul that eateth it shall be cut off from his people; in connection with forbidden fat.
(8) The word נבר, ‘soul’, is also used to express desire, pleasure (cf. Gen. XXIII, 8 Deut. XXIII, 25), so that even when a person drinks fat his ‘soul’ enjoys it and he is therefore liable.
(9) Sc. bread.
(10) V. Pes. 35a.
Deut. XVI, 3.
It is not the usual way of eating bread. Cf. Rashi Pes. 35a bot.
Ex. XII, 15: That soul shall be cut off from Israel.
Sc. the carcass of a clean bird.
And renders unclean the clothes that he is wearing whilst swallowing it.
Naz. 50a.
Ex. XVII, 15: And every soul hath eateth that which dieth of itself.
That one who drinks forbidden food that was melted down is also liable.
Forbidden fat in an animal has always been forbidden from the birth of the animal, whereas leavened bread is forbidden only during Passover, but before the festival, it was permitted.
Sc. forbidden fat, but there is not the penalty of kareth for eating nebelah.
Whereas the fat in certain cases is permitted, v. infra.
I.e., is itself a source of uncleanness, whereas forbidden fat and leavened bread have no uncleanness in themselves.
Sc. fat and leavened bread.
Sc. fat and the carcass of a clean bird.
Sc. leavened bread and the carcass of a clean bird.
The forbidden fat of a sacrifice is permitted to, i.e., is offered upon, the altar.
Ordinarily this method of killing the bird would render it nebelah, nevertheless it is acceptable as a sacrifice; hence the law of nebelah admits of an exception, like the fat.
The priests may eat the flesh of this bird sacrifice, hence there is an exception to the law of nebelah even in respect of the eating thereof.
It is only to the Most High that nebelah is permitted, even though priests may enjoy it as guests of the Divine table; there is no case, however, of nebelah being permitted to a common man as of law.
Lev. XI, 31: These are the unclean unto you among all that creep. The definite article before ‘unclean’ is obviously superfluous, and it therefore serves to indicate that the extracts and juices from creeping things are included within the prohibition. V. supra 112b.
For we have learnt above in respect of three cases (viz., the forbidden fat, leavened bread and the carcass of a clean bird) that a solution of the forbidden substance and also the extracts and juices therefrom are forbidden; and all cases could be inferred from these.
With regard to creeping things.
Whereas the law, is established that the eating of a lentil's bulk of a creeping thing renders one liable.

Talmud - Mas. Chullin 120b

The Divine Law then could have stated it with regard to creeping things and the other cases would have been inferred therefrom? Such inference could be refuted thus: It is so with the case of creeping things since they convey uncleanness no matter what their size.

And as for [the Baraita] which was taught: ‘The liquids that exuded from produce of tebel, or from new produce, or from consecrated produce or from seventh year produce, or from the produce of diverse kinds, are like [the produce] themselves’ — whence is this derived? Should you say it can be inferred from the other cases, [but it will be refuted thus.] It is so with the others since each is an original prohibition. Now this [inference] could stand in respect of those that are original prohibitions, but whence would we know it in respect of prohibitions which are not original? We could infer it from the law of the firstfruits. And whence do we know it with regard to the firstfruits? — From the following teaching of R. Jose: It is written: The fruit, that is to say, you shall bring fruit but not liquids. And whence do we know that where a man brought grapes and trod them [into wine they are acceptable as firstfruits]? The verse therefore says: Thou shalt bring. But the inference can be refuted thus: It is so with firstfruits since they require the recital [of a passage] and also setting down. — Rather it must be inferred from terumah. And whence do we know it with regard to terumah itself? Because it has been likened to the firstfruits, for a Master has said: The offering if thine hand refers to the firstfruits. But [it will be refuted thus]: It is so with regard to terumah since on account of it people incur the penalty of death\textsuperscript{19} and the penalty of the [added] fifth!\textsuperscript{20} — Rather it must be inferred from the two, from terumah and the firstfruits. But [it will be refuted thus], It is so with regard to terumah and the firstfruits since on account of them people incur the penalty of death and the penalty of the [added] fifth! — Rather it must be inferred either from terumah and one of the other cases\textsuperscript{21} or from the firstfruits and one of the other cases.\textsuperscript{21}

And as for [the Mishnah] which we learnt: ‘[If a non-priest drank in error] date-honey, cider, vinegar from wintergrapes, or any other juices,\textsuperscript{22} of terumah, R. Eliezer declares him liable to the payment, of the value and the [added] fifth, but R. Joshua declares him exempt [from the added fifth]\textsuperscript{23} — on what principle do they differ?\textsuperscript{24} — They differ as to [whether we say], ‘Deduce from it and [entirely] from it’, or, ‘Deduce from it and establish it in its own place’.\textsuperscript{25} R. Eliezer holds, ‘Deduce from it and [entirely] from it’: thus, ‘deduce from it’ — just as in the case of firstfruits the liquids which exude from them are like [the fruits] themselves, so in the case of terumah, too, the liquids which exude from it are like [the fruit] itself; ‘and [entirely] from it’ — just as this law of firstfruits applies even to the other kinds,\textsuperscript{26} so with regard to terumah, too, this law applies even to the other kinds.\textsuperscript{27} R. Joshua holds, ‘Deduce from it and establish it in its own place’: thus ‘deduce from it’ — just as in the case of firstfruits the liquids which exude from them are like [the fruits] themselves, so in the case of terumah, too, the liquids which exude from it are like [the fruit] itself; ‘and establish it in its own place’ — just as the liquids that can be consecrated as terumah are only wine and oil but no other liquids, so, too, the rule that the liquids which exude from it are like [the fruit] itself, applies only to wine and oil, but to no other liquids.\textsuperscript{28}

And as for [the Mishnah] which we learnt: ‘No liquid may be brought as firstfruits excepting the product of olives and grapes’\textsuperscript{29} — who is the author thereof? — It is R. Joshua who holds the principle, ‘Deduce from it and establish it in its place’, and then he infers the law as to firstfruits from terumah.\textsuperscript{30}

And as for [the Mishnah] which we learnt: ‘One would not suffer the penalty of forty stripes incurred through the transgression of the law of orlah\textsuperscript{31} [for the liquid which issued from any orlah fruits] save for that which issued from olives and grapes’\textsuperscript{29} — who is the author thereof’? — It is R. Joshua who holds the principle, ‘Deduce from it and establish it in its own place’, he then infers the law as to firstfruits from terumah.

(1) That the extracts and juices from forbidden substances or the liquids made from them are included within the prohibition.
(2) Sc. the carcass of a clean bird, the forbidden fat, and leavened bread. V. Tosaf. s.v. הַרְעֹת, and also Glos. of Isaiah Berlin in the margin of the text quoting the Adreth Hiddushim.
(3) I.e., even the size of a lentil’s bulk; but v. Tosaf. 120a s.v. מָלַיֶּהוּ.
(4) מַגְּזִית ‘mixed’; produce from which the priestly and levitical dues have not been separated.
(5) The harvest of the new season which may not be eaten before the offering of the ‘omer; v. Lev. XXIII, 10-14.
(6) Cf. Ex. XXIII, 21; Lev. XXV, 2-7.
(7) Cf. Lev. XIX, 19; Deut. XXII, 9.
(8) Sc. the fat, leavened bread and the carcass of a clean bird.
(9) Lit., ‘the prohibition comes from itself’; as opposed to a prohibition which is brought about by man. All the cases mentioned in this passage are original except that of consecrated produce.
(10) Sc. consecrated produce.
(11) Cf. Deut. XXVI, 1ff. Firstfruits are, like consecrated produce, rendered holy by the word of man.
(12) ‘Arak. 11a.
(13) Deut. XXVI, 2.
(14) We thus see that the liquid is like the fruit.
(15) Ibid. 5ff.
(16) I.e., setting down the basket of fruit before the Lord; ibid. 10.
(17) Sc. that the liquid and juice of any substance is like the substance itself in the case of consecrated produce.

(18) Ibid. XII, 17. Heb. דְּרֵי מָצָאָבָה לִי. By דְּרֵי, ‘thy hand’ is meant: Firstfruits, in reference to which ‘hand’ is mentioned (cf. Deut. XXVI, 4); hence terumah is equated with Firstfruits. V. Mak. 17a.

(19) When a non-priest deliberately consumes terumah he incurs the penalty of death at the hands of Heaven; cf. Lev. XXII, 9, 10.

(20) When a non-priest consumes terumah in error and makes restitution, cf. ibid. 14.

(21) I.e., either the case of leavened bread, or of the carcass of a clean bird (Rashi, but v. Tosaf. s.v. סְפִּיאָ). The inference is drawn by reducing these cases to their common features, that is, each is a forbidden substance and the liquid made from it is forbidden like the substance itself.

(22) Excepting wine and oil.

(23) Ter. XI, 2. Ber. 38a.

(24) Since it is established by analogy with firstfruits that the liquid exuding from terumah is like terumah itself.

(25) Whenever one subject is inferred from another by means of analogy, or by ‘the common features’, the question always arises as to extent to which the inference must be carried. We may say that the inference is ‘from it and again from it’, i.e., the subjects must be alike in every respect and on every point, or we may say that the inference is ‘from it and then put in its place’. i.e., the inference is made with regard to one point only, and as for the rest each subject is regulated by the rules which govern its other aspects.

(26) I.e., to the seven kinds of products for which the Land of Israel was famed: wheat, barley, grapes, figs, pomegranates, olive-oil and date-honey. V. Deut. VIII, 8.

(27) Hence the liquids made from apples and dates are subject to the law of terumah.

(28) For wine and oil are the only liquids expressly mentioned in the Torah with regard to terumah; cf. Num. XVIII, 12; Deut. XVIII, 4. So, juice which exuded from grapes and olives of terumah is as the terumah itself.

(29) Ter. XI, 3.

(30) The rule stated in this Mishnah is arrived at by the following stages in the argument: (a) it is inferred from firstfruits that the liquid derived from terumah fruits is consecrated like the fruit itself; (b) this deduction must be governed by the conditions of terumah, i.e., this rule applies only to those liquids which are expressly mentioned in the Torah as terumah, sc., wine and oil; and finally (c) it is inferred from terumah that only the liquids from olives and grapes are acceptable as firstfruits.

(31) V. Glos.

Talmud - Mas. Chullin 121a

and finally he derives the law as to ‘orlah by means of the word ‘fruit’ stated here and also in connection with the firstfruits.¹ AND ALAL.² What is ALAL? R. Johanan said: It is withered flesh.³ Resh Lakish said: It is flesh which the knife has cut away.⁴ An objection was ‘raised. It is written: But ye are plasterers of lies, ye are all physicians of elil.⁵ Now according to him who says it is withered flesh it is well, for such cannot be healed; but according to him who says it is flesh which the knife has cut away, surely this can be healed!⁶ — There is no dispute at all about the elil mentioned in the verse;⁷ they only disagree as to the meaning of alal in our Mishnah.

Come and hear: [from our Mishnah]: R. JUDAH SAYS, IF SO MUCH OF ALAL WAS COLLECTED TOGETHER SO THAT THERE WAS AN OLIVE’S BULK IN ONE PLACE, ONE WOULD THEREBY BECOME LIABLE. And to this R. Huna added, provided he collected it together.⁸ Now according to him who says it is the flesh which the knife has cut away, it is clear that when there was an olive's bulk of it [in one place] one would thereby become liable; but according to him who says it is withered flesh, what if there was an olive's bulk of it, it is surely only regarded as wood?They certainly do not disagree as to the alal referred to by R. Judah,⁹ they only disagree as to the meaning of the alal according to the Rabbis. R. Johanan maintains that even withered flesh can be included together [with ordinary flesh to make up the minimum quantity to convey uncleanness], but Resh Lakish maintains that only the flesh which the knife has cut away can be included but withered flesh cannot be included.
What is the case with regard to the flesh which the knife had cut away? If he intended it [as a foodstuff],\(^{10}\) it should contract uncleanness alone;\(^{11}\) and if he did not intend it [as a foodstuff], he has then surely abandoned it! — R. Abin and R. Meyasha [each offered a suggestion]; one suggested the case where he intended part of it [as a foodstuff],\(^{12}\) the other suggested the case where part was rent by a wild beast and part cut away by the knife.\(^{13}\)

We have learnt elsewhere: The beak and the claws contract uncleanness and convey uncleanness and can be reckoned together [with the flesh].\(^{14}\) But is not the beak like wood? — It refers to the lower beak. And is not the lower beak also like wood? — R. Papa said: It means the lower part [inside membrane] of the upper beak. As to ‘claws’, — R. Eleazar said: It refers to that part [of the claws only] which is buried in the flesh. HORNS. R. Papa said: It refers to that part [of the horns] from which the blood flows when cut into.

SIMILARLY, IF A MAN SLAUGHTERED AN UNCLEAN ANIMAL.\(^{16}\) R. Assi stated: Some teach that in the case of an Israelite [slaughtering] an unclean animal and also in the case of a gentile [slaughtering] a clean animal, there must be\(^{17}\) an express intention [to regard it as a foodstuff],\(^{18}\) and the animal must be\(^{17}\) rendered susceptible [to uncleanness by a liquid] from another source.\(^{19}\) Wherefore is it necessary that it be rendered susceptible to uncleanness? Ultimately it will convey the graver uncleanness,\(^{20}\) will it not? And whatever will ultimately convey the graver uncleanness does not require to be rendered susceptible to uncleanness! For the school of R. Ishmael taught: But if water be put upon seed\(^{21}\) — just as seeds, which will never ultimately convey the graver uncleanness, require to be rendered susceptible to uncleanness by a liquid,\(^{22}\) in like manner, whatever will not ultimately convey the graver uncleanness requires to be rendered susceptible to uncleanness by a liquid. And it has also been taught: R. Jose says: Why did [the Rabbis] rule\(^{23}\) that in the case of the carcass of a clean bird there must be an intention [to use it as food],\(^{24}\) but it does not need to be rendered susceptible to uncleanness by a liquid? Because

---

\(^{(1)}\) Just as the term ‘fruit’ stated in connection with the firstfruits (Deut. XXVI, 2) includes the products of olives and grapes but no other liquids (v. supra n. 4) so the term ‘fruit’ stated (Lev. XIX, 23) in connection with ‘orlah includes the products of olives and grapes but no other liquids.

\(^{(2)}\) Heb. סֶפֶכֶת.

\(^{(3)}\) So R. Hananel and Tosaf. According to Rashi, it is the hard veins in the throat.

\(^{(4)}\) When the animal is flayed some flesh is inevitably cut away and remains attached to the hide.

\(^{(5)}\) Job XIII, 4. Heb. סֶפֶכֶת, usually translated ‘of no value’. The word is of the same root as that of our Mishnah.

\(^{(6)}\) If the flesh cut away is replaced and bound up well it would heal up.

\(^{(7)}\) Scriptural elil certainly means ‘withered flesh’ (or, ‘the hard veins’).

\(^{(8)}\) And by collecting it together of set purpose he has revealed his intention that he never ceased to regard it as foodstuff. If, however, it was collected by a child, or if he himself inadvertently collected it together, R. Judah would agree that the olive's bulk of it cannot be accounted as nebelah.

\(^{(9)}\) R. Judah when dealing with alal certainly speaks of the ‘pieces of flesh cut away by the knife in flaying.

\(^{(10)}\) Even though it was already adhering to the skin.

\(^{(11)}\) Without being included together with other flesh; for whatsoever can be eaten and is intended to be used as a foodstuff will contract and convey food uncleanness.

\(^{(12)}\) But he did not expressly state which part he intended as a foodstuff. Therefore, by itself it cannot contract uncleanness, for in an egg's bulk thereof only part of it is a foodstuff, but that part which was intended as a foodstuff can be reckoned together with other foodstuff to make up the quantity of an egg's bulk.

\(^{(13)}\) A wild beast attacked the animal whilst alive and tore away a portion of flesh which was left hanging, and later when the animal was being flayed this portion of flesh and some more was cut away by the knife and remained attached to the skin. Now it is to be assumed that the portion torn by the wild beast is usually not regarded as abandoned but that cut away by the knife is; consequently this portion of flesh adhering to the skin is abandoned in part only, and therefore the other part can be reckoned together with other flesh.

\(^{(14)}\) Toh. I, 2.
(15) The carcass of a clean bird (except that it renders the clothes of the person that eats of it unclean) is not in itself a source of uncleanness, but is regarded only as a foodstuff, to contract uncleanness from unclean matter and to transfer it to other foodstuffs. This Mishnah (Toh. I, 2) enumerates the various parts of a fowl which by themselves are not regarded as foodstuffs but can serve as handles to convey uncleanness to the fowl or from it.

(16) V. supra p. 648, n. 5.

(17) In order that the animal should convey food uncleanness, if it comes into contact with unclean matter, from the moment after the slaughtering, while it still moves about convulsively, until the moment it is dead. Without this express intention it would not be regarded as a foodstuff until it was actually dead.

(18) I.e., his intention at the time of slaughtering the unclean animal was that a gentile should eat of it immediately.

(19) But the blood from the slaughtering of this animal will not serve to render the animal susceptible to uncleanness as is the case generally with slaughtering (v. supra 35b), for the blood is regarded as the blood of a dead animal which is not designated in the Bible as a liquid. The word ‘water’ in curr. edd. is omitted in MSS. and is deleted by Shittah Mekubezeth.

(20) When the animal is actually dead it will then render men and vessels that come into contact with it, even with only an olive's bulk of it, unclean, and it also renders these unclean by carrying.

(21) Lev. XI, 38.

(22) Foodstuff, liquids, and earthenware vessels can in no circumstances be a primary source of uncleanness, for these are implicitly excluded from Num. XIX. 22, since these, once unclean, have no remedy whereby they can become clean again.

(23) V. Toh. I, 1.

(24) For the carcass of a clean bird is generally not counted as a foodstuff in small towns and villages; in large towns, however, intention to use it as a foodstuff is not necessary since it is there generally regarded as a foodstuff, cf. 'Uk. III, 3.

Talmud - Mas. Chullin 121b

it will ultimately convey the graver uncleanness! — Hezekiah answered, [The case In our Mishnah is different] since he could cut it up into pieces each smaller than an olive's bulk.² Said R. Jeremiah to R. Zera, But could Hezekiah really have said so?³ Behold it has been reported: If a man cut ritually, both, or the greater part of both [organs of the throat of an unclean animal], and the animal was still struggling: Hezekiah said: It is no more subject to the prohibition of limbs [from the living animal],⁴ but R. Johanan said: It is still subject to the prohibition of limbs [from the living animal]. ‘Hezekiah said: It is no more subject to the prohibition of limbs’, because it is now considered as dead. ‘R. Johanan said: It is still subject to the prohibition of limbs’, because it is not actually dead!⁵ — He replied: It is really out of the category of living animals but has not yet come within the category of dead animals.⁶

The text above stated: ‘If a man cut ritually both or the greater part of both [organs of the throat of an unclean animal], and the animal was still struggling: Hezekiah said: It is no more subject to the prohibition of limbs [from the living animal]; but R. Johanan said: It is still subject to the prohibition of limbs’. R. Eleazar said: Hold fast to this view of R. Johanan for R. Oshaia has taught in agreement with him. For R. Oshaia taught: If an Israelite slaughtered an unclean animal for a gentile, as soon as he has cut both or the greater part of both organs of the throat, even though it still struggles, it conveys food uncleanness,⁷ but not the uncleanness of nebelah. A limb severed from it is regarded as severed from the living animal,⁸ and flesh severed from it is regarded as severed from the living animal, and it⁹ may not be eaten by a gentile even after the life of the animal has departed.¹⁰ If he only cut one or the greater part of one organ, it does not convey food uncleanness.¹¹ If he stabbed it,¹² it has no uncleanness whatsoever.¹³ If a gentile slaughtered a clean animal for an Israelite, as soon as he has cut both or the greater part of both organs, even though it still struggles, it conveys food uncleanness,¹⁴ but not the uncleanness of nebelah. A limb severed from it is regarded as severed from the living animal, and flesh severed from it is regarded as severed from the living animal, and it may not be eaten by a gentile even after the life of the animal has departed. If he only cut one or the greater part of one organ, it does not convey food uncleanness. If he stabbed it, it has no uncleanness whatsoever.

If the gentile cut only so much as does not render the animal trefah, and an Israelite came and finished it, the slaughtering is valid. If an Israelite slaughtered, whether he had cut so much as would render the animal trefah or not, and a gentile came and finished it, the slaughtering is invalid. If a person desires to eat the flesh of an animal before the life has departed from it, he should cut off an olive's bulk of flesh from around the throat, salt it well, rinse it well, wait until the life departs [from the animal], and then eat it. Both Israelite and gentile may eat it in this manner. This [Baraita][15] lends support to the view of R. Idi b. Abin. For R. Idi b. Abin said in the name of R. Isaac b. Ashian: If a person desires to be in good health he should cut off an olive's bulk of flesh from around the throat, salt it well, rinse it well, wait until the life departs [from the animal], and then eat it. Both Israelite and gentile may eat it in this manner.

R. Eleazar raised the question: What is the law if he paused or pressed down [the knife whilst cutting the organs][17] — Thereupon a certain old man answered: Thus said R. Johanan, It requires the same ritual acts of slaughtering as in the case of a clean animal. To what extent are the ritual acts essential? — R. Samuel b. Isaac said: Even to the examination of the knife.

R. Zera enquired of R. Shesheth: Can the animal protect the articles that are swallowed within it [from becoming unclean or not]? He replied: It already conveys food uncleanness, is it then possible that it should afford protection! The other retorted: It does not yet convey the uncleanness of nebelah, why then should it not afford protection? — Abaye said: It does not protect the articles that are within it from becoming unclean since it already conveys food uncleanness, and he who commits an unnatural crime upon it is culpable since it does not yet convey the uncleanness of nebelah.

R. JUDAH SAYS, IF SO MUCH OF ALAL WAS COLLECTED etc. R. Huna said: Provided he collected it together [of set purpose].

R. Huna also said: If there were two pieces of flesh on the hide, each a half-olive's bulk, the hide renders them negligible.

---

(1) For, when dead, it renders unclean the person that eats it and his clothes; therefore it does not require to be rendered susceptible to uncleanness by contact with a liquid.

(2) It must be remembered that our Mishnah deals with an animal not quite dead but still struggling, at which stage it certainly cannot convey the uncleanness of nebelah; moreover it is by no means certain that ultimately it will convey the graver uncleanness, i.e., the uncleanness of nebelah, for it is possible that the animal will be cut up into bits, each piece smaller than an olive's bulk.

(3) That while the animal still struggles it is not deemed nebelah and does not convey uncleanness as such.

(4) A gentile bound by the Seven Commandments of the Sons of Noah (cf. Sanh. 56a), is forbidden to eat a limb torn from a living animal. According to Hezekiah the animal is regarded as dead, and therefore is not subject to the aforementioned prohibition, not so according to R. Johanan.

(5) We thus see that according to Hezekiah even while the animal is still struggling it is presumably regarded as dead since the prohibition of limbs no longer applies.

(6) So that Hezekiah holds that it is not subject to the prohibition of ‘limbs’ since it can no longer be considered as living, neither can it be considered as dead to’ convey the graver uncleanness.

(7) If it came into contact with unclean matter it will convey uncleanness to other foodstuffs, for it is regarded as a foodstuff immediately on the cutting of the organs; the reason being that the ritual slaughtering performed by the Israelite expressly on behalf of the gentile renders the animal a foodstuff forthwith, just as the slaughtering by an Israelite of a clean animal certainly renders it a foodstuff forthwith.

(8) And defiles forthwith like nebelah.

(9) Sc. the limb or the flesh that was severed.

(10) Since it was severed from the ‘living’ animal, hence in agreement with R. Johanan that while struggling, the animal is still considered living.

(11) As long as it still struggles. For the animal at this moment is permitted neither to Israelite nor to gentile.

(12) At the throat.

(13) Just as when an Israelite slaughters an animal, as soon as the organs are cut through it is rendered a foodstuff forthwith, so it is when a gentile slaughters it expressly on behalf of an Israelite.

(14) E.g., the gentile only cut half through the windpipe, so that if the gentile were to stop at this stage the animal would not be trefah. Cf. supra 59b.

(15) Which states that even the gentile may eat of it.

(16) v. supra p. 177.

(17) In the aforementioned cases, where an Israelite slaughtered an unclean animal for a gentile, or a gentile slaughtered a clean animal for an Israelite, the question is raised as to whether the slaughtering must be entirely in accordance with ritual, free from such invalidating acts as pausing or pressing (cf. supra 9a), for otherwise it is like stabbing, or not.

(18) I.e., where an Israelite slaughtered an unclean animal for a gentile, or a gentile a clean animal for an Israelite, and the animal whilst alive had swallowed certain articles, and after it was slaughtered, while still struggling, was brought under the same roof or ‘tent’ as a corpse. V. supra 71b where it is stated that a living person or animal can protect from the uncleanness of the ‘tent’ the articles that are swallowed within them. The question is: Is the animal whilst still struggling regarded as living or not?

(19) Apparently because it is considered as dead.

(20) It is then not considered as dead.

(21) He suffers the death penalty if he committed the crime deliberately, or if inadvertently, is obliged to bring a sin-offering. According to Rashi, Abaye always considers the animal in that status which produces the more stringent result; but v. Tosaf., s.v. '��戻'.

(22) V. supra p. 672, n. 7.

(23) They cannot be reckoned together as one whole olive's bulk of nebelah so as to convey uncleanness by carrying.
According to whose authority is this ruling? If according to R. Ishmael's — but he maintains that the hide does not render them negligible; and if according to R. Akiba's — but it is obvious, for he maintains that the hide renders them negligible! — In fact it is in accordance with R. Ishmael's view, for R. Ishmael only maintains that the hide does not render them negligible in the case where the pieces were torn away by a wild beast, but where they were cut away by the knife [he concedes that] the hide renders them negligible.

Come and hear [from our Mishnah]. R. JUDAH SAYS, IF SO MUCH OF ALAL WAS COLLECTED TOGETHER SO THAT THERE WAS AN OLIVE'S BULK IN ONE PLACE, ONE WOULD THEREBY BECOME LIABLE. And to this R. Huna added, provided he collected it together. Now if you say that even where the knife cut it away it is not rendered negligible according to R. Ishmael, it is well, for then R. Huna is in agreement with R. Ishmael. But if you say that where the knife cut it away R. Ishmael concedes that it is rendered negligible, then [it will be asked], With whom does R. Huna agree? — You must therefore say that even where the knife cut it away it is not rendered negligible according to R. Ishmael; and R. Huna is in agreement with R. Akiba. But this would be obvious? — No, for you might have thought that R. Akiba maintains his view only where the knife cut it away, but where it was torn away by a wild beast he would concede that it is not rendered negligible; he therefore teaches us that the reason for R. Akiba's view is because the hide renders it negligible, making thus no difference whether it was torn away by a wild beast or cut away by the knife, for so it reads in the last clause: ‘Wherefore does R. Akiba declare him clean in the case of the hide? Because the hide renders them negligible’.

GEMARA. Ulla said: According to the law of the Torah the skin of a man is clean, but for what reason did they say it was unclean? As a precautionary measure lest a man make rugs out of the skin of his father and mother.

Others refer this [dictum of Ulla's] to the later clause of our Mishnah, viz., IF ANY OF THESE SKINS WAS TANNED OR TRAMPLED UPON AS MUCH AS [WAS USUAL] FOR TANNING, IT BECOMES CLEAN, EXCEPTING THE SKIN OF A MAN. Ulla said: According to the law of the Torah, if the skin of a man was tanned, it thereby becomes clean, but for what reason did they say it remained unclean? As a precautionary measure lest a man make rugs out of the skin of his father and mother. Now those who refer this [dictum of Ulla's] to the first cause will certainly refer it to the later cause, but those who refer it to the later clause [maintain that] in the first the uncleanness is by the law of the Torah.

THE SKIN OF THE DOMESTIC PIG etc. What is the issue between them? One is of the opinion that this is hard and only the other soft, whereas the other maintains that this, too, is soft.
THE SKIN OF THE HUMP OF A YOUNG CAMEL. How long is the camel considered young? — Ulla said in the name of R. Joshua b. Levi: As long as it has not borne a burden. R. Jeremiah enquired: What is the law [with regard to its skin] if it had reached the age for bearing burdens but had not actually borne any? Abaye enquired: What if it had actually borne burdens although it had not reached the age for it? — These questions must stand.

Resh Lakish was once sitting and raised the question: How long is the camel considered young? — R. Ishmael b. Abba answered: So said R. Joshua b. Levi: As long as it has not borne a burden. Whereupon he [Resh Lakish] said: Sit down opposite me.23

R. Zera was once sitting and raised the question: How long is the camel considered young? — Rabin b. Hinena answered him: So said Ulla in the name of R. Joshua b. Levi: As long as it has not borne a burden. He [Rabin] then repeated it over again,24 whereupon the other [R. Zera] said to him, ‘It is the only thing you knew, and you have already told us it!’ Come and see the difference between the imperious men of the Land of Israel and the pious men of Babylon25

THE SKIN OF THE HEAD [OF A YOUNG CALF]. How long is the calf considered young? — Ulla said: Throughout its first year. R. Johanan said: As long as it sucks. The question was raised: Did Ulla mean ‘Throughout its first year’ provided it still sucked.26

(1) V. infra 124a.
(2) Sc. pieces of flesh adhering to the hide each less than an olive's bulk.
(3) In this case the pieces of flesh became attached to the hide accidentally, without the knowledge or will of the owner, and therefore R. Ishmael holds that these pieces are not rendered negligible. Where, however, the pieces were cut away and intentionally left hanging on to the skin by the man who flayed the animal, even R. Ishmael agrees that they are negligible in themselves and are considered as part of the hide.
(4) This provision implies that the knife had cut away shreds of flesh in a number of places and left them attached to the hide. The fact that one is liable if the pieces were collected together clearly indicates that the hide did not render these shreds negligible, for had they once been rendered negligible the person who touched them would not become unclean and so not be liable for any further consequences.
(5) Sc. shreds of flesh attached to the hide.
(6) I.e., R. Judah of our Mishnah, as interpreted by R. Huna, is in agreement with R. Ishmael, and the Rabbis who differ with R. Judah are in agreement with R. Akiba.
(7) I.e., R. Judah's view as interpreted by R. Huna.
(8) I.e., the second dictum of R. Huna (‘If there were two pieces of flesh’ etc.) accords with R. Akiba; the first dictum of R. Huna which interprets the view of R Judah in our Mishnah (‘Provided he collected it together’) accords with R. Ishmael.
(9) V. infra 124a.
(10) The skins enumerated are thin and tender, and therefore with regard to the laws of uncleanness are regarded as flesh.
(11) In MS.M. and in the editions of the Mishnah: ‘R. Jose’.
(12) V. Gemara, for the definition of ‘YOUNG’.
(13) I.e., the skin of the womb in a female animal.
(14) Cf. Lev. XI, 29, 30, where are enumerated the eight unclean reptiles. In the case of these four mentioned, their skin is soft and is counted as the flesh. The identification of the reptiles mentioned is very uncertain; v. Lewysohn, Zoologie des Talmuds.
(15) Whose skin is hard and therefore not unclean.
(16) Lev. ibid. The skins of these eight reptiles are quite separate from the flesh and cannot convey uncleanness.
(17) Taken from a corpse. Human skin might have been preserved for sentimental reasons, or perhaps on grounds of utility.
(18) For since the skin was tanned and its character thus altered, there would be no other reason why it should remain unclean, except this precautionary measure stated by Ulla.
The first Tanna.

The skin of a wild pig.

The skin of the domestic pig.

R. Judah.

As a token of his gratitude and as a mark of respect.

He thought that R. Zera had not heard it the first time.

Resh Lakish who was of the powerful and imperious men of Palestine (cf. Yoma 9b) treated his informant with courtesy and respect, whereas R. Zera, a Babylonian who was renowned for his piety (cf B.M. 85a) treated his informant with disrespect and insult.

So that if it had passed its first year or if it had ceased to suck within its first year it was no more young.

Talmud - Mas. Chullin 122b

whereupon R. Johanan said to him, ‘As long as it sucks’; or Ulla meant ‘Throughout its first year’, whether it still was sucking or not, whereupon R. Johanan said to him, ‘Throughout its first year and provided it was still sucking?’ — Come and hear: ‘R. Johanan said: As long as it sucks’ — Now if it were the case [that R. Johanan required both] he should have said, provided it still sucks. This proves it.

Resh Lakish enquired of R. Johanan: ‘Can the skin of the head of a young calf convey uncleanness or not?’ — He replied: ‘It cannot’ — ‘But’, said the other, ‘you, our teacher have taught us, "IN THE FOLLOWING CASES THE SKIN IS CONSIDERED AS FLESH: . . . THE SKIN OF THE HEAD OF A YOUNG CALF"’. — He replied: ‘Do not weary me [with your arguments], for I taught that [Mishnah] as the opinion of an individual. For it was taught: If a man slaughtered a burnt-offering purposing to burn an olive's bulk of its skin from under the fat tail at the improper place, the sacrifice is invalid, and he is not liable to the punishment of kareth, but [if he purposed to burn it] at the improper time, it would be piggul, and he would be liable to the punishment of kareth. Eleazar b. Judah of Ablum stated in the name of R. Jacob, similarly R. Simeon b. Judah of Kefar ‘Ikum stated in the name of R. Simeon, [If a man while slaughtering a burnt-offering intended to burn] either the skin around the hoofs, or the skin of the head of a young calf, or the skin from under the fat tail, or any of the skins enumerated by the Sages in connection with the law of uncleanness VIZ., IN THE FOLLOWING CASES THE SKIN IS ACCOUNTED AS FLESH, meaning to include the skin of the pudenda — at the improper place the sacrifice is invalid, and he is not liable to the punishment of kareth; but at the improper time, it would be piggul, and he would be liable to the punishment of kareth’.

THE SKIN AROUND THE HOOFS. What is the meaning of AROUND THE HOOFS? — Rab said: It means actually around the hoofs. R. Hanina said: It means the [skin upon the nethermost] limb which is usually sold with the head.

THE SKIN OF THE HEDGEHOG. Our Rabbis taught: ‘The unclean includes their skins, which are to be regarded as their flesh. I might then say that this is so with regard to then, all the verse therefore states These. But does not the expression ‘These’ refer to all [reptiles mentioned]? — Rab said: The phrase After its kinds interrupts the subject matter. And why is not the mole also reckoned? — R. Samuel b. Isaac said: Rab is himself a Tanna and he [in his Mishnah] includes the mole. But why does not our Tanna [of our present Mishnah] include the mole? — R. Shesheth the son of R. Idi said: Our Tanna agrees with R. Judah that it depends upon the feel [of the skin], but he differs with him about the feel of the [skin of the] lizard.

IF ANY OF THESE SKINS WAS TANNED etc. Only if trampled upon does it [become clean], but if not trampled upon it does not [become clean]; but R. Hisyya has taught [to the contrary], viz., If a man patched up his basket with the ear of an ass it becomes clean. with it, then it becomes clean even though it had not been trampled upon; but if he had not patched up anything with it, then if trampled upon it does [become clean], but if not trampled upon it does not [become clean]. How much [trampling] would be sufficient for tanning? — R. Huna said in the name of R. Jannai, [The equivalent of a] four mils [distance].

R. Abbahu said in the name of Resh Lakish: For kneading,\(^\text{21}\) for prayer,\(^\text{22}\) and for washing the hands,\(^\text{23}\) the standard is four mils. R. Nahman b. Isaac said:

\(^{\text{1}}\) Even though it had passed its first year.

\(^{\text{2}}\) That it must be in its first year and also continue to suck.

\(^{\text{3}}\) It accords with the individual opinion of Eleazar b. Judah infra. V. supra 55b.

\(^{\text{4}}\) Zeb. 28a.

\(^{\text{5}}\) An intention, expressed during the slaughtering of a sacrifice, of performing a subsequent service improperly, can only invalidate the sacrifice if the proposed service relates to matters which are usually so served and performed. E.g., an intention, expressed during the slaughtering of the sacrifice, of eating at the improper time or place, such parts which are not usually eaten, as the hide, does not invalidate the sacrifice. It is evident, therefore, that the skin from under the fat tail is regarded as edible inasmuch as the sacrifice is rendered invalid by the wrongful intention with regard to it.

\(^{\text{6}}\) V. Glos.

\(^{\text{7}}\) V. supra p. 305, n. 1.

\(^{\text{8}}\) V. supra ibid., n. 2.

\(^{\text{9}}\) This Tanna — Eleazar b. Judah — is of the opinion that all the skins mentioned in our Mishnah are edible and therefore regarded as flesh, whereas the first Tanna (with whom R. Johanan is in agreement) considers only the skin under the fat tail as edible.

\(^{\text{10}}\) I.e., the skin of the womb of the female animal. This had to be specially included for the Tanna was dealing with the case of a burnt-offering which is a male and not a female animal.

\(^{\text{11}}\) I.e., the metatarsus, which is usually sold with the head as offal.

\(^{\text{12}}\) Lev. XI, 31. The three verses relevant to this argument read: (v. 29) . . . the weasel, and the mouse, and the toad after its kinds, (v. 30) and the hedgehog, and the chameleon, and the lizard, and the snail, and the mole. (v. 31) These are the unclean amongst all the creeping things.

\(^{\text{13}}\) I.e., that the skins of those mentioned in v. 29 should also be reckoned as the flesh.

\(^{\text{14}}\) Both in vv. 29 and 30.

\(^{\text{15}}\) Ibid. 29. The term These (in v. 31) refers only to those reptiles mentioned in the preceding verse 30.

\(^{\text{16}}\) Which is also mentioned in v. 30.

\(^{\text{17}}\) The Tanna of our Mishnah and R. Judah (also mentioned in our Mishnah) do not form their views by the interpretation of the aforementioned verses but from practical observation. It depends entirely upon the feel of the skin. If the skin of the reptile feels soft and fleshy it is regarded as flesh, but if hard and scaly it is not regarded as flesh.

\(^{\text{18}}\) I.e., with R. Judah.

\(^{\text{19}}\) The skin of the lizard according to R. Judah feels hard but according to the first Tanna it has the feel of flesh.

\(^{\text{20}}\) The ass's ear becomes clean as soon as it serves as skin even though it has not been treated in any way for tanning and not even trampled upon.

\(^{\text{21}}\) A person who undertakes, for reward, to knead the dough of an owner in conditions of levitical cleanness, and the owner's vessels are unclean, must go even a distance of four miles, if that is the nearest mikweh, in order to immerse the vessels, but no further. For other explanations v. Tosaf. s.v. צכ"א.

\(^{\text{22}}\) A person who is on the way and wishes to rest for the night, and knows of a Synagogue not more than four mils away, must continue his journey till he reaches that Synagogue in order to pray there.

\(^{\text{23}}\) Before meals. If a person knows that he can obtain water a distance of four mils away, he must wait until he reaches it before making a meal.

Talmud - Mas. Chullin 123a

It was Aibu who reported this\(^{\text{1}}\) and he mentioned four things, one of which was the trampling for tanning. R. Jose b. R. Hanina said: This ‘teaching applies only to the distance ahead of him,\(^{\text{2}}\) but [as for going] back he need not turn back even one mil. R. Aha b. Jacob said: From this [can be inferred that] a distance of one mil he need not turn back, but a distance of less than a mil he must turn back.

Our Rabbis taught: If a [Roman] legion which passes from place to place enters a house, the house is unclean, for there is not a legion that does not carry with it several scalps.³ And be not surprised at this; for R. Ishmael’s scalp was placed upon the head of kings.⁴

GEMARA. What is the law when more than this¹³ [has been flayed]? — Rab said: That which has already been flayed is clean;¹⁴ R. Assi said: The handbreadth nearest to the flesh is unclean.¹⁵

An objection was raised: If a man had flayed this extent,¹⁶ henceforth whosoever touches that which has already been flayed is clean.¹⁷ Presumably [this is so] even [if he touches] the handbreadth nearest to the flesh?¹⁸ — No, except for the handbreadth nearest to the flesh.

Come and hear: [Whosoever touches] the skin opposite the flesh is unclean. [That is, presumably whosoever touches] the skin opposite the flesh only is unclean, but [whosoever touches the skin in] the handbreadth nearest to the flesh is clean! — This Tanna expresses the handbreadth nearest to the flesh by the term ‘the skin opposite the flesh’.

Come and hear: If a man flayed cattle or wild animals, clean or unclean, small or large, in order to use the hide for a covering, [and he flayed] so much [of the hide] as can be taken hold of, [it does not serve as a connective], and the handbreadth nearest to the flesh is clean! — That refers to the first handbreadth.¹⁹ It was taught: How much is meant by ‘so much as can be taken hold of’? — A handbreadth. But it was taught: Two handbreadths! — Abaye explained (The former Baraita meant) a double handbreadth. And so it has been expressly taught: How much is ‘so much as can be taken hold of’. A double handbreadth.

We have learnt elsewhere:²⁰ If a man had begun to tear a garment²¹ (which was unclean), so soon as the greater part of it is torn²² the parts can no longer be deemed to be joined and it is clean. R. Nahman said in the name of Rabbah b. Abbuha: This [teaching] applies only to a garment which had been immersed that same day,²³ for since he did not shrink from immersing it, he likewise will not shrink from tearing the greater part of it; but it does not apply to a garment which had not been immersed that same day, for it is to be feared that he will not tear the greater part of it. Thereupon Rabbah said: There are two objections to this argument. In the first place [it certainly cannot apply to a garment which had been immersed that same day], for people might say that immersion during the day is sufficient [to render an article clean];²⁴ secondly,

(1) In the name of R. Simeon b. Lakish, and not R. Abbahu.
(2) This distinction obviously according to Rashi does not refer to the case of the kneader, for to him it would make no difference in which direction he would have to go. V. however, Tosaf. supra 122b s.v. קדוק.
(3) As mementos of victories, or, as Rashi suggests, to serve as charms against danger in battle.

(5) Either the animal was clean (i.e., of the species fit for food, and also slaughtered ritually) and the man who flayed it was unclean, or the animal was unclean (i.e., either of the former species but not ritually slaughtered, or of the species that are forbidden to be eaten even though slaughtered ritually) and the man who flayed it was clean.

(6) For this purpose the hide was slit the whole length of the animal and flayed on both flanks, the result being one large sheet of hide.

(7) Until this much has been flayed that portion which has actually been flayed is not regarded as entirely disconnected from the flesh but rather as a ‘handle’ which conveys uncleanness to and from the flesh. Once this extent (- for the measure v. Gemara — ) has been flayed the hide is regarded as disconnected and can no longer serve as a handle.

(8) For this purpose the hide was not slit lengthwise but was cut around the neck and flayed whole from the animal so as to form a receptacle to hold liquids.

(9) The breast is the most difficult part of the operation of flaying for the hide adheres fast there and, therefore, so long as the region of the breast has not been flayed that which has already been flayed serves as a connective or ‘handle’ to the flesh.

(10) In this manner of flaying, the region around the breast is the last important section to be flayed, although there yet remains the skin around the neck to be flayed.

(11) Whether this includes the flaying of the skin around the neck or not, is the subject of the following dispute between R. Johanan b. Nuri and the Sages.

(12) It is negligible and soon falls away of itself by the weight of the rest of the hide, and therefore can no longer serve as a connective.

(13) Sc. as much as can be taken hold of; a handgrip.

(14) But that which still adheres to the flesh serves as a ‘protection’ and conveys uncleanness to and from the flesh.

(15) The last handbreadth of the skin that had been flayed nearest to the flesh is unclean, i.e., it serves as a ‘handle’ to convey uncleanness to and from the flesh.

(16) As much as a handgrip.

(17) Assuming the animal was itself unclean; for it does not serve as a ‘handle’.

(18) Contra R. Assi.

(19) R. Assi admits that where only so much of the hide as can be taken hold of plus one handbreadth had been flayed the handbreadth nearest to the flesh is not deemed a ‘handle’ for the amount flayed is too little to be made use of as a handle. For a var. text and interpretation v. Tos. s.v. נתרון.

(20) Kel. XXVIII, 8.

(21) In order to render it clean by making it unfit for its former use.

(22) The original garment is now deemed to be destroyed and with it the uncleanness it bore, even though each part of the garment is of a substantial size (Rashi). According to Tosaf. the garment was torn to shreds there was no piece the width of three fingerbreadths but these shreds were joined at one end (v. Tosaf. supra 72b s.v. יִפְרָה אֵלֵי).

(23) Ordinarily the garment by evening would be clean, but this man desiring to use it immediately with clean things sets about to tear it. Now since he has actually immersed it in the waters of a mikweh, an act which certainly does not improve the garment, he will have no hesitation in tearing the greater part of the garment.

(24) For those who saw the immersion of the article by day and later see it used that selfsame day with clean things, will be led to believe that immersion by itself renders an article clean without the additional necessity of waiting until sunset of that day, for they might not be aware of the fact that the garment had been torn.

The same is to be feared in the case of the burnt-offering of a bird, according to the view of R. Eleazar son of R. Simeon, namely that he will not divide the greater part of both organs [of the throat]! — R. Joseph replied to him: As for your objection ‘people might say that immersion during the day is sufficient’, [my answer is,] the tearing explains the position; and as for your objection ‘The same is to be feared in the case of a burnt-offering of a bird according to the view of R. Eleazar son of R. Simeon’, [my answer is,] priests are most careful.
Come and hear: IF A MAN WAS FLAYING CATTLE OR WILD ANIMALS, CLEAN OR UNCLEAN, SMALL OR LARGE, IN ORDER TO USE THE HIDE FOR A COVERING, UNTIL SO MUCH [OF THE HIDE HAS BEEN FLAYED] AS CAN BE TAKEN HOLD OF, etc. Now if more than this had been flayed, it would be clean, would it not? But why? Should we not apprehend that he will have flayed only so much as can be taken hold of, in which case [by touching the hide] he is [as it were] touching uncleanness, and yet we declare him to be clean? If it were a case of uncleanness as enjoined by the Torah this would indeed be so; but here we really speak of uncleanness as enjoined by the Rabbis. This is well in the case of an unclean person [flaying] a clean animal, but in the case of a clean person [flaying] an unclean animal, surely the uncleanness is enjoined by the Torah! — It refers to a trefah animal. And can a trefah animal render ought unclean? — Yes, as stated by Samuel's father. For Samuel's father stated: A trefah animal that was slaughtered renders holy things unclean.

Come and hear: R. Dosethai b. Judah says in the name of R. Simeon: If a man was skinning reptiles, the skin is regarded as a connective until the whole has been removed. Now it follows, does it not, that in the case of a camel it is not regarded as a connective — Draw not the inference that in the case of a camel it is not regarded as a connective, but rather that in the case of a camel the skin that is on the neck is not regarded as a connective, and this accords with the opinion of R. Johanan b. Nuri.

R. Huna said in the name of R. Simeon son of R. Jose: This [teaching] applies only to the case where he did not leave [untorn] a portion sufficient for an apron, but if he left [untorn] a portion sufficient for an apron, it [the garment] is deemed to be joined.

Resh Lakish said: This [teaching] applies only to a garment, but in the case of leather, [what is left] is firm. But R. Johanan said: Even in the case of leather, [what is left] is not firm. R. Johanan raised an objection against Resh Lakish [from the following Mishnah]: If a hide had contracted midras uncleanness, and a man had the intention to use it for straps and sandals, so soon as he puts the knife into it it becomes clean; so R. Judah. But the Sages say. Not until he has reduced its size to less than five handbreadths. It follows, however, that if he had reduced its size [to less than five handbreadths] it would be clean; but why? Surely, we should say, [what is left] is firm! — When do we say, [what is left] is firm, only in the case where the hide was cut with a straight cut, but here we must suppose that it was trimmed on all sides.

R. Jeremiah raised an objection: IF A MAN WAS FLAYING CATTLE OR WILD ANIMALS, CLEAN OR UNCLEAN, SMALL OR LARGE, IN ORDER TO USE THE HIDE FOR A COVERING, UNTIL SO MUCH [OF THE HIDE HAS BEEN FLAYED] AS CAN BE TAKEN HOLD OF, etc. Now if more than this had been flayed it would be clean, would it not? But why? Surely we should say [that the residue of the hide that is attached to the carcass] is firm! — R. Abin explained it, [that with regard to the hide,] each portion flayed is considered as fallen away.

R. Joseph raised an objection: AS FOR THE SKIN THAT IS ON THE NECK, R. JOHANAN B. NURI DOES NOT REGARD IT AS A CONNECTIVE. But why? Surely it holds firm! — Thereupon Abaye said to him, But read the next line: BUT THE SAGES DO REGARD IT AS A CONNECTIVE! In fact, said Abaye, the point at issue between them is concerning a protection that will soon fall away of its own accord: one maintains that it is still a protection, the other that it is no protection.

R. Jeremiah raised an objection: If an oven had become unclean how can one make it clean again? One should divide it into three parts and scrape off the plastering

(1) In sacrificing the burnt-offering of a bird the head had to be nipped off by the officiating priest, but not severed entirely (cf. Lev. I, 17); and according to the interpretation of R. Eleazar b. R. Simeon, it means that he must divide the greater portion of each organ and no more (v. supra 21a). Now is there not a similar apprehension in this case that the priest will not divide the greater portion of the organs?

(2) The onlookers will know that it is the tearing of the garment that renders it clean and not the immersion by itself.

(3) And do exactly what is required by law, neither more nor less.

(4) Assuming that the carcass was unclean.

(5) i.e., the ruling with regard to an unclean person flaying a clean animal as stated in our Mishnah, refers to a person that was rendered unclean by enactment of the Rabbis (cf. the cases enumerated in Shab. 13b) and the animal spoken of was a consecrated animal. Accordingly we do not impose any further preventive measures by reason of such remote apprehensions.

(6) i.e., the uncleanness of nebelah.

(7) The reference in our Mishnah with regard to an unclean animal, really means an animal which was slaughtered and found to be trefah.

(8) So according to Maim. Yad. Aboth Ha-tumah, II, 8. Rashi interprets: A consecrated animal which was slaughtered and found to be trefah renders unclean, v. supra 73a.

(9) As soon as the extent of a handgrip of the hide has been flayed. And there is no mention of any apprehension lest on account of this ruling, people might be led to believe that even when less than a handgrip had been flayed the hide is not to be regarded as a connective. This then conflicts with R. Nahman's statement supra.

(10) This refers to the case where the man who flays the camel requires the hide for a water-skin, or where he flays it from the feet upwards; in either case, according to R. Johanan b. Nuri, once the whole hide, with the exception of that which is on the neck, has been flayed, it can no longer be regarded as a connective (v. our Mishnah supra), in contradistinction from the case of reptiles, for with reptiles even the skin around the neck is regard ed as a connective.
There is indeed here no ground at all to apply a preventive measure in apprehension lest he who flays the camel will not remove all the hide with the exception only of that which remains on the neck, in which case the hide would be a connective, for the standard has been clearly stated, namely, whether or not anything more than the skin of the neck remains, and this standard is a matter which is clearly noticeable and ascertainable. On the other hand, the standard ‘as much as can be taken hold of’ is not so clearly defined and ascertainable; similarly, the difference between tearing the greater part of a garment and only half of it is also a matter not clearly discernible, accordingly in the latter two cases there is ground for a restrictive measure.

(11) That a garment is rendered clean by tearing the greater part of it.

(12) That where there was not left untorn a portion sufficient for an apron the garment is rendered clean.

(13) No matter how little it is, for it can be sewn together and used again for its original purpose.

(14) Heb. הָרְפֵּא. The degree of uncleanness arising when an unclean person, of those mentioned in Lev. XV, 2, 19, 25, sits or treads upon or leans with the body against an object, provided such object is fit and generally used for one of the above purposes.

(15) By putting the knife to it he has annulled it from its original use even though there are as yet substantial pieces left each five handbreadths square, this being the minimum size for leather to contract midras uncleanness (cf. Kel. XXVII.
2).

(16) Kel. XXVI, 9.

(17) Since there are irregular cuts on all sides, even if it is sewn together it will not hold firm.

(18) Lit., ‘the first, the first’.

(19) For it cannot by any means be made to adhere again to the flesh, whereas in the case of a garment it can be sewn together to hold fast.

(20) The skin on the neck still adheres to the flesh, nevertheless, R. Johanan b. Nuri holds that whosoever touches this skin (the animal being unclean) is not thereby rendered unclean; thus conflicting with Resh Lakish's view.

(21) And this would be in support of Resh Lakish's view.

(22) Sc. between the Sages and R. Johanan b. Nuri in our Mishnah.

(23) E.g., the skin around the neck when all the rest of the hide has been removed.

(24) The Sages hold that so long as it has not fallen off it still serves as a protection and conveys uncleanness to and from the flesh.

(26) It usually consisted of an earthenware pot with no bottom, placed on the ground, and plastered on all sides with clay so that it lies on the ground. R. Meir says. One need not scrape off the plastering nor [see to it] that it lies on the ground, but one need only cut it down to less than four handbreadths high inside. It follows that if one did cut it down to less than four handbreadths high it would be clean; but why? Surely we should say that it stands firm! — Thereupon Raba said to him, Why not rather quote the view of the Rabbis, ‘One should scrape off the plastering so that it lies on the ground’ [in support]? Rather, said Raba, This is the interpretation: If an oven had become unclean how can one make it clean again? It is the unanimous opinion that one should divide it into three parts and scrape off the plastering so that it lies on the ground. And if one desires that the oven should not be susceptible to uncleanness what should one do? One should divide it into three parts and should scrape off the plastering so that it lies on the ground. R. Meir says. One need not scrape off the plastering nor [see to it] that it lies on the ground, but one need only cut it down to less than four handbreadths high inside.

The Master said: ‘One should divide it into three parts’. But there is a contradiction to this, for we have learnt: An oven must, in its first state, be [at least] four handbreadths high, and any fragment thereof [is still unclean if it is] four handbreadths high: so R. Meir. But the Sages say. This applies only to a large oven, but as regards a small oven, no matter what its height was in its first state, provided its manufacture was complete. [it is susceptible to uncleanness.] and any fragment thereof [is still unclean if it amounts to] the greater portion of [the oven]. How much is meant by ‘no matter what its height’? R. Jannai said, [At least] one handbreadth high, for it is usual to make an oven one handbreadth high [as a plaything]. Now only if there is a fragment of four handbreadths [is it still unclean], but if there is no fragment of four handbreadths it is clean! — I can answer: There he split it across the width, but here he split it lengthwise.

The Master said: ‘And any fragment thereof [is still unclean if it amounts to] the greater portion of [the oven]’. But of what use can the greater portion of a handbreadth be? — Abaye said: It means, any fragment of a large oven [is still unclean if it amounts to] the greater portion of it. But [with regard to a large oven] the Sages say [in agreement with R. Meir that it is still unclean if the fragment is] four handbreadths? — This is no difficulty: one ruling refers to an oven nine handbreadths high, the other to an oven seven handbreadths high.

Another version reports the passage as follows: R. Huna said in the name of R. Ishmael son of R. Jose. Even if he left a portion sufficient for an apron [the garment is rendered clean]. Thereupon Resh Lakish said: This [teaching] applies only to a garment, but in the case of leather [what is left] is of value. But R. Johanan said: Even in the case of leather [what is left] is of no value. R. Johanan raised the following objection against Resh Lakish: If a hide had contracted midras uncleanness and a man had the intention to use it for straps and sandals, so soon as he puts the knife into it it becomes clean: so R. Judah. But the Sages say. Not until he has reduced its size to less than five handbreadths. It follows, however, that if he had actually reduced its size [to less than five handbreadths] it would be clean; but why? Surely we should say [what is left] is of value! — We must suppose here that he intended [the hide] to serve as a seat for one suffering with an issue.

MISHNAH. IF THERE WAS AN OLIVE’S BULK OF [UNCLEAN] FLESH ADHERING TO THE HIDE AND A MAN TOUCHED A SHRED HANGING FROM IT, OR A HAIR THAT WAS OPPOSITE TO IT, HE BECOMES UNCLEAN. IF THERE WERE TWO PIECES OF FLESH EACH A HALF-OLIVES BULK UPON IT, THEY CONVEY UNCLEANNESS BY CARRYING BUT NOT BY CONTACT: SO R. ISHMAEL. R. AKIBA SAYS, NEITHER BY CONTACT NOR BY CARRYING. R. AKIBA, HOWEVER, AGREES THAT IF THERE WERE TWO PIECES OF FLESH, EACH A HALF-OLIVE'S BULK, STUCK ON A CHIP AND A MAN SWAYED THEM, HE BECOMES UNEFFECT. WHEREFORE THEN DOES R. AKIBA DECLARE HIM CLEAN IN THE [CASE WHERE THEY ADHERE TO THE] HIDE? BECAUSE THE HIDE RENDERS THEM NEGLIGIBLE.

GEMARA. ‘Ulla said in the name of R. Johanan. This rule applies only to the case where a wild beast tore it away, but where it was cut away by the knife [in flaying] it certainly is deemed negligible. R. Nahman enquired of ‘Ulla, ‘Did R. Johanan also say so even if it was as large as a tirta?’ — He replied. ‘Yes’. ‘And even as large as a sieve?’ — He replied. ‘Yes’. ‘By God!’ said the other; ‘even if R. Johanan himself had told it me by his own mouth I should not have accepted it!’

When R. Oshaia went up [to Palestine] he met R. Ammi and reported to him the discussion, ‘So said ‘Ulla and so answered R. Nahman’. Said [R. Ammi] to him, ‘And even if R. Nahman is the son-in-law of the Exilarch shall he make light of the teaching of R. Johanan?’ On another occasion he [R. Oshaia] found him [R. Ammi] sitting and expounding it with reference to the second clause [of our Mishnah] thus: ‘IF THERE WERE TWO PIECES OF FLESH EACH A HALF-OLIVE’S BULK UPON IT. THEY CONVEY UNEFFECT BY CARRYING BUT NOT BY CONTACT: SO R. ISHMAEL. R. AKIBA SAYS, NEITHER BY CONTACT NOR BY CARRYING. Thereupon R. Johanan had said: This rule applies only to the case where a wild beast tore them away, but where they were cut away by the knife [in flaying] they are deemed negligible’. Then said [R. Oshaia]. ‘Does the Master refer it to the second clause?’ — He replied. ‘Yes; did ‘Ulla tell it you with reference to the first clause?’ Said the other, ‘He did’. ‘By God!’ said R. Ammi, ‘even if Joshua the son of Nun had told it me by his own mouth I should not have accepted it!’ When Rabin came down with all the company that used to come down [from Palestine to Babylon] they reported that it referred to the first clause. But is there not then a difficulty? — As R. Papa suggested [elsewhere].

(1) Sc. the plastering; i.e., the plastering must be entirely demolished so that it in no wise supports the parts of the oven (Rashi); or, ‘it’ sc. each part of the oven (Maim); or, ‘it’ sc. the crack must run from the top to the bottom of the oven, i.e., a perpendicular crack (R. Samson of Sens).
(2) Kel. V, 7.
(3) By reason of the plastering around it. This then conflicts with Resh Lakish who maintains that if only a portion of an article remains firm, although the rest of it is broken or torn, it is still considered an article.
(4) Sc. the first Tanna of this Mishnah.
(5) The dispute therefore between R. Meir and the Rabbis is only with regard to an oven which was not unclean, concerning the measures necessary in order to prevent it from ever becoming unclean.
(6) In order to be susceptible to uncleanness.
(7) I.e., of a large oven which was broken in order to be made clean again; cf. Lev. XI, 35.
(8) Sc. the ruling of R. Meir.
(9) I.e., an oven used for baking or cooking.
(10) Which is used as a plaything.
(11) Kel. V, 1.
(12) This clearly contradicts the aforementioned Mishnah which states that an oven to be made clean again must be divided into three parts, but it would not be sufficient to divide it into two, even though each part would be less than four handbreadths.
(13) And if none of the fragments are of four handbreadths, the oven is absolutely useless and therefore clean.
(14) And if there remains standing the greater part of the oven, even though such part is less than four handbreadths, it remains unclean. It must therefore be divided into three parts so that no part is equal to the greater part of the oven.
(15) The Sages adopt rules of leniency: where the greater portion of the oven is more than four handbreadths then they regard fragments up to the size of the greater portion as clean; and where the greater portion is less than four handbreadths then they regard fragments up to four handbreadths as clean.
(16) Even though it is only the size of an apron. Hence it is not rendered clean by ‘the tearing, for it cannot be said to be destroyed for al use.

(17) V. supra p. 690.

(18) Reading פּוֹשֵׁׁבָה, פּוֹשֵׁׁבָה. According to MS.M. and ‘Aruch the reading is פּוֹשֵׁׁבָה, a peculiar word, whose etymology as well as meaning is extremely doubtful. ‘A leather seat of a folding chair’ (Jast). The argument is, since the hide was intended to be used for a particular purpose so soon as it is diminished and so rendered unfit for that purpose it is deemed to be of no value.

(19) In one place.

(20) I.e., from the olive's bulk of flesh (Rashi). According to Maim. the Mishnah refers to a fibre that proceeds from the hide.

(21) I.e., on the outside of the hide, directly over the morsel of flesh.

(22) For the shred is like the flesh itself, and the hair is a protection to the flesh.

(23) For when a person carries the hide he carries at the same time an olive's bulk of the carcass.

(24) Since the pieces are apart they cannot be touched simultaneously but only one after the other, and each time only a half-olive's bulk is touched. The two separate ‘contacts’ cannot be reckoned together to make up a ‘contact’ of an olive's bulk.

(25) For R. Akiba is of the opinion (infra) that flesh less than an olive's bulk adhering to hide is deemed as part of the hide itself.

(26) I.e., moved them without actually touching them. Heb. דָּשָׁם ‘swaying’, ‘shaking’.

(27) V. Gemara for the reason of R. Akiba's view.

(28) That an olive's bulk of flesh adhering to the hide is not rendered negligible.

(29) I.e., a wild beast bit into the animal whilst alive and later when the animal was being flayed pieces of flesh were found to have been torn away and left hanging to the hide.

(30) Even though there is a whole olive's bulk of flesh.

(31) A quarter of a kab; or, the pan of scales (Rashi). The question is, what if the knife, whilst flaying, cut away a large slice of flesh as much as a tirta? Can this quantity, too, be deemed negligible or not?

(32) Sc. the above statement of R. Johanan.

(33) That two pieces of flesh each a half-olive's bulk are not rendered negligible according to R. Ishmael.

(34) יְרוּשָׁלֶם; the scholars who used to travel to and fro between Palestine and Babylon reporting teachings of the one country to the other.

(35) For if it is held that a whole olive's bulk of flesh is rendered negligible when cut away by the knife then the same should be the case where flesh the size of a tirta or a sieve was cut away. But this is contrary to reason!

(36) V. infra.

Talmud - Mas. Chullin 124b

that the flesh was beaten thin, so here it could also be explained that the flesh was beaten thin.¹

IF THERE WERE TWO PIECES OF FLESH EACH A HALF-OLIVES BULK UPON IT etc. Bar Padda said: This ruling² applies only to the case [where a man touched them] from the outside,³ but [where he touched them] on the inside⁴ the two contacts can be reckoned together.⁵ But R. Johanan said: The two contacts cannot be reckoned together.

R. Johanan is consistent in his view, for R. Johanan also said that R. Ishmael and R. Dosa b. Harkinas said the same thing. R. Ishmael taught it in the above passage,⁶ and R. Dosa b. Harkinas in the following Mishnah which we learnt: If any matter⁷ which causes uncleanness in a ‘tent’⁸ was divided and [the parts]⁹ brought into a house, R. Dosa b. Harkinas declares [everything under the same roof-space] clean, but the Sages declare it unclean.¹⁰ Now does not R. Dosa b. Harkinas hold that two overshadowings¹¹ cannot be reckoned together? Similarly, two contacts cannot be reckoned together.

As it is established that R. Dosa b. Harkinas is in agreement with R. Ishmael, it follows that the Sages [the opponents of R. Dosa] are in agreement with R. Akiba [the opponent of R. Ishmael]. But does not R. Akiba hold that they are entirely clean?

— R. Akiba only declares them clean when adhering to the hide, but otherwise they convey uncleanness, as stated in the latter part [of the Mishnah]: R. AKIBA, HOWEVER, AGREES THAT IF THERE WERE TWO PIECES OF FLESH. EACH A HALF-OLIVE'S BULK, STUCK ON A CHIP AND A MAN SWAYED THEM, HE BECOMES UNCLEAN. WHEREFORE THEN DOES R. AKIBA DECLARE HIM CLEAN IN THE [CASE WHERE THEY ADHERE TO THE] HIDE? BECAUSE THE HIDE RENDERS THEM NEGLECTIBLE.

R. 'Ukba b. Hama raised an objection. It is written: [He that toucheth] the carcass thereof, but not the hide upon which are two pieces of flesh each a half-olive's bulk. I might think that the same is the case with regard to carrying, the verse therefore says. And he that carrieth . . . shall be unclean. So R. Ishmael. R. Akiba says: It is written: ‘He that toucheth’, and ‘He that carrieth’: therefore, what comes within the scope of uncleanness by contact, comes within the scope of uncleanness by carrying, and what does not come within the scope of uncleanness by contact does not come within the scope of uncleanness by carrying. Now if it were so, indeed comes within the scope of uncleanness by contact on the inside! — Raba answered. He means to say this: What comes within the scope of uncleanness by contact on every side thereof comes within the scope of uncleanness by carrying.

R. Awia the Elder enquired of Rabbah son of R. Huna: Can a closed marrow-bone, according to R. Ishmael, convey uncleanness [by carrying] or not? Does R. Ishmael accept the principle ‘What comes within the scope of uncleanness by contact, comes within the scope of uncleanness by carrying, and what does not come within the scope of uncleanness by contact, does not come within the scope of uncleanness by carrying’, but here [in our Mishnah] the reason is because it comes within the scope of uncleanness by contact on the inside; or does he not accept this principle at all? — He replied: See, there's a raven flying past. [When R. Awia left,] his son Raba said to him, ‘Was that not R. Awia the Elder of Pumbeditha whom you, Sir, have praised as a great man’? He replied: ‘I am to-day in the condition of the lover who said,] Sustain me with raisin-cakes!' And he asks me a matter which requires much reasoning!

Ulla said: If there were two pieces of flesh, each a half-olive's bulk, stuck on a chip and a man waved them to and fro, even the whole day long, he remains clean. Why? Because [as] written [the word can be read] ‘be carried’, but [by tradition] we read ‘carries’; it is necessary therefore that when one ‘carries’ it it must be able to ‘be carried’ at one time.

We have learnt: IF THERE WERE TWO PIECES OF FLESH, EACH A HALF-OLIVE'S BULK. UPON IT, THEY CONVEY UNCLEANNESS BY CARRYING BUT NOT BY CONTACT; SO R. ISHMAEL. Wherefore is this so? They surely cannot ‘be carried’ at one time? — R. Papa suggested that there was a thin strip [of flesh joining the two pieces]. Come and hear: R. AKIBA, HOWEVER, AGREES THAT IF THERE WERE TWO PIECES OF FLESH, EACH A HALF-OLIVE'S BULK, STUCK ON A CHIP AND A MAN SWAYED THEM, HE BECOMES UNCLEAN. Wherefore is this so? They surely cannot ‘be carried’ at one time? — Here, too, we must suppose that there was a thin strip of flesh.

Tannaim differ on this point. It was taught: It is all one whether one touches them or sways them. R. Eliezer says. Even if one carries them. But does not the one that carries them also sway them? — This must be the interpretation: It is all one whether one touches them or sways them even though they cannot be carried [at one time]. Whereupon R. Eliezer comes to say, [No.] only if they can be carried at one time. Then what is the meaning of ‘even’? Read: Only if they can be carried at one time.
MISHNAH. WITH REGARD TO A THIGH-BONE

(1) There was a thin slice of flesh the size of a tirta or even of a sieve which when collected and rolled tip amounted to an olive's bulk only.

(2) Of R. Ishmael that the two pieces of flesh each a half-olive's bulk adhering to the hide do not convey uncleanness by contact.

(3) I.e., he did not actually touch the flesh but only the hide opposite each piece; the hide in such a case cannot serve either as a protection or as a handle to combine the two pieces in order to convey the uncleanness.

(4) I.e., he actually touched the pieces of flesh, first the one half-olive's bulk and then the other. In this case R. Ishmael will hold that the two separate contacts are combined and are regarded as one contact of a whole olive's bulk, and the person would be unclean.

(5) Lit., 'there is such a thing as touching and again touching'.

(6) That according to R. Johanan R. Ishmael holds that two separate contacts, each time of half the minimum quantity, cannot be reckoned as one contact of the whole quantity.

(7) Of those enumerated in Ohol. II, 1, e.g. an olive's bulk of the flesh of a corpse, or a ladleful of corpse-mould.

(8) By overshadowing, i.e., which renders unclean everything which happens to be in the same tent or under the same roof space as the unclean matter. Cf. Num. XIX, 14.

(9) Each less then the minimum quantity.

(10) Oh. III, 1, ‘Ed. III, 1.

(11) Each time of half the minimum quantity. According to R. Dosa b. Harkinas, overshadowing must be in one place, at the same time, and over a whole olive's bulk.

(12) Sc. the flesh adhering to the hide. Thus R. Akiba is more lenient in his view than R. Ishmael, whereas the Sages who differ with R. Dosa (supra) declare everything in the house to be unclean.

(13) Sc. the two pieces of flesh, each a half-olive's bulk, when touched separately.

(14) Lev. XI, 39.

(15) Ibid. 40.

(16) Therefore, argues R. Akiba, it cannot be said that these pieces of flesh convey uncleanness by carrying and not by contact, as R. Ishmael would have it.

(17) That, according to Bar Padda, R. Ishmael holds that these pieces can convey uncleanness also by contact, namely, on the inside (v. supra p. 696, n. 2), then R. Akiba's argument is void of meaning.

(18) I.e., R. Akiba means that unless a substance can convey uncleanness by every contact with it, from the outside as well as from the inside, it will not convey uncleanness by carrying.

(19) And therefore a closed-up marrow-bone of a carcass, since it does not convey uncleanness by contact (v. next Mishnah, for the bone itself is not considered unclean as the carcass, and the marrow within it is inaccessible for it is closed-up), will not convey uncleanness by carrying.

(20) Why the two morsels of flesh convey uncleanness by carrying.

(21) An evasive answer.

(22) Raba said to his father Rabbah b. R. Huna.

(23) Cant. II, 5. He had just finished his lecture for that day (or, he was that day elected Head of the Academy — ‘Aruch) and was too exhausted for any argument or discussion but required rest and refreshment.

(24) Lev. XI, 40. Heb. לָכַבּוּ. The traditional reading is לָכַבּוּ, (in active sense) ‘and he who carries’; though the word might also be read as יָלַכְבּוּ, (in passive sense) ‘and whatsoever is carried’.

(25) I.e., the olive's bulk must be one whole piece so that if one were to lift up part thereof the whole would be lifted up.

(26) As to whether it is essential that the olive's bulk be in one whole so that it could be carried at one time.

(27) And one is rendered unclean.

(28) Sc. the two pieces of unclean flesh each a half-olive's bulk.

(29) Wherein then does R. Eliezer differ from the first Tanna?

(30) The word 'even' implies an extension of the law beyond that stated by the first Tanna; on the other hand, 'only' is a limitation.

(31) Or any bone which contains marrow.
OR A THIGH-BONE OF A CONSECRATED ANIMAL,\(^1\) HE WHO TOUCHES IT, WHETHER IT BE STOPPED UP OR PIERCED, BECOMES UNCLEAN. WITH REGARD TO A THIGHBONE OF A CARCASS OR OF A [DEAD] REPTILE, IF IT WAS STOPPED UP HE WHO TOUCHES IT REMAINS CLEAN,\(^2\) BUT IF IT WAS AT ALL PIERCED IT CONVEYS UNCLEANNESS BY CONTACT. WHENCE DO WE KNOW [THAT IT CONVEYS UNCLEANNESS] ALSO BY CARRYING? THE TEXT SAYS, HE THAT TOUCHETH\(^3\) AND HE THAT CARRIETH:

THEREFORE, WHAT COMES WITHIN THE SCOPE OF UNCLEANNESS BY CONTACT COMES WITHIN THE SCOPE OF UNCLEANNESS BY CARRYING. AND WHAT DOES NOT COME WITHIN THE SCOPE OF UNCLEANNESS BY CONTACT DOES NOT COME WITHIN THE SCOPE OF UNCLEANNESS BY CARRYING.

GEMARA. He who touches it does [become unclean] but he who overshadows it does not [become unclean]. What are the circumstances? If there was an olive's bulk of flesh upon it, then surely it conveys uncleanness by overshadowing? — It must be that there was not an olive's bulk of flesh upon it. But if there was an olive's bulk of marrow within it, then surely the uncleanness breaks through and rises upwards,\(^5\) and it should convey uncleanness by overshadowing? — It must be that there was not an olive's bulk of marrow within it. But if it is held that the marrow within [the bone] can restore [the flesh] outside it,\(^6\) then surely it is a proper limb, and it should convey uncleanness by overshadowing? — Rab Judah the son of R. Hiyya said: This proves that the marrow within cannot restore [the flesh] outside it.

How have you explained the case? That there was not an olive's bulk.\(^7\) Then why does it convey uncleanness in the case of consecrated animals?\(^8\) Furthermore, why does the thigh-bone of a carcass or of a [dead] reptile, even when pierced, convey uncleanness?\(^9\) — These are no difficulties at all, for the first clause\(^10\) refers to the case where there was not an olive's bulk and the subsequent clause\(^11\) to the case where there was an olive's bulk. What does he teach us then? — He teaches us a number of rules. The first clause teaches us [the principle] that the marrow within [the bone] cannot restore [the flesh] outside it.\(^12\) The clause concerning consecrated animals teaches us that whatever serves [as a holder for] the meat left over [from the sacrifice] is a matter of consequence,\(^13\) for R. Mari b. Abbuha said in the name of R. Isaac,\(^14\) Bones of sacrifices which served [as a holder for] the meat left over [from the sacrifice] render the hands unclean, since they have become auxiliary\(^15\) to forbidden matter. The clause concerning the carcass [teaches us] that even if there is an olive's bulk [of marrow in the bone], only when [the bone is] pierced does it [convey uncleanness], but when not pierced it does not [convey uncleanness].

Abaye said: In fact [I maintain that] the marrow within [the bone] can restore [the flesh] outside it, but here we are dealing with a bone which was sawn through [transversely],\(^16\) and it is in agreement with R. Eleazar's view. For R. Eleazar stated: If a man sawed through a marrow-bone lengthwise it is still unclean,\(^17\) if transversely it is clean; as a mnemonic think of the palm tree.\(^18\)

R. Johanan said: In truth, there was an olive's bulk [of marrow in the bone], and [I maintain that] the marrow within can restore [the flesh] outside it,\(^19\) but the expression HE WHO TOUCHES stated [in the Mishnah] means also overshadowing.\(^20\) But surely if the marrow within can restore [the flesh] outside it, why is it that the thigh-bone of a carcass or of a dead reptile, if not pierced, is clean?\(^21\) — R. Benjamin b. Giddal said in the name of R. Johanan. We are dealing here with an olive's bulk of marrow that shakes about\(^22\) [in the bone]; so that with regard to a corpse\(^23\) the uncleanness breaks through and rises upwards, but with regard to a carcass, since the marrow shakes about within,\(^24\) if the bone was pierced, it does [convey uncleanness], but if it was not pierced, it does not [convey uncleanness].
R. Abin (others say R. Jose b. Abin) said: We have also learnt the same: If a man touched one half-olive's bulk [of a corpse] and [at the same time] overshadowed another half-olive's bulk or the other half-olive's bulk overshadowed him, he is unclean. Now if you hold that they fall within one category then it is quite right that they combine [to render the person unclean]; but if you hold that they fall within two categories, can they in any way combine? Surely, we have learnt: This is the general rule: All [means of conveying uncleanness] which fall within one category combine to convey uncleanness, but all which fall within two categories do not [combine to] convey uncleanness. What do you say then? That they fall within one category? Read the following clause: But

(1) Which was rendered piggul (v. Glos.) in the course of the offering, or whose meat became nothar, i.e., was left over beyond the time prescribed for eating. The Rabbis, in order to prevent such abuses arising out of the negligence of the priest, decreed that sacrificial meat which was piggul or nothar shall render the hands unclean (v. Pes. 120b). This decree clearly applied to those parts of the sacrifice which were edible; therefore it did not apply to marrowless bones, but it did apply to a marrowbone for then the bone serves as a holder for the marrow within it.

(2) The bone of a carcass or of a reptile is in itself not unclean (v. supra 77b); it is, however, unclean because it serves as a ‘protection’ to the marrow that is within it. And this is so only if the marrow within was accessible, i.e., the bone must be pierced so as to allow a hair at least to reach the marrow.

(3) Lev. XI, 39.

(4) Ibid. 40.

(5) Since presumably there is not within the bone an air-space of one cubic-handbreadth the uncleanness within it breaks through its enclosure and spreads in the house or ‘tent’. Cf. supra 71a, and Ber. 19b.

(6) And even if the marrow of a bone in the living animal has entirely wasted away, and the flesh around it has gone, the bone is still regarded as a proper limb, for it is possible for new marrow to form in the bone and to restore the flesh around it.

(7) Neither of marrow nor of flesh.

(8) For to regard the bone as a holder for the flesh that is nothar (v. Glos.) there must be at least an olive's bulk either of marrow within it or of flesh upon it.

(9) The bone is clearly a protection for the marrow that is within it, and it ha been established (supra 117b, in the very first ruling of this chapter) that a protection can be included and reckoned together with the foodstuff only to convey the light uncleanness i.e., to render other foodstuffs unclean, but not to convey the grave uncleanness, i.e., to render the person that touches it unclean.

(10) Which deals with the thigh-bone of a corpse.

(11) Which deals with the thigh-bone of consecrated animals and of a carcass or reptile.

(12) Therefore if there was not an olive's bulk of marrow within the bone, it cannot convey uncleanness by ‘overshadowing’. i.e., It cannot render unclean men and vessels that are in the same ‘tent’ or under the same roof.

(13) It is regarded as the meat itself and so renders the hands unclean.

(14) V. Pes. 83a.

(15) Lit., a stand for’.

(16) In which case there is no hope of the limb being restored by the formation of new marrow and flesh. Hence as there is not an olive's bulk of marrow now in the bone, neither is there any prospect for the bone to form new marrow, it cannot convey uncleanness by overshadowing.

(17) Although it does not now contain the requisite quantity of marrow, since in a portion of the bone there is a continuous strip of marrow, it will be invested in time with marrow and flesh, and it therefore conveys uncleanness as the corpse itself.

(18) If a long strip of the bark of the tree is removed, the tree will in no way be affected by it, but if a strip around the circumference of the tree is removed, the tree will soon wither.

(19) I.e., even if there was not an olive's bulk of marrow within the bone, it would still convey uncleanness as a corpse, for the limb would, in time, be restored.

(20) So that the original assumption at the outset that the Tanna of our Mishnah excluded uncleanness by overshadowing was incorrect.

(21) It is surely regarded as a whole limb, for even if it has no marrow or flesh at present, it will be invested with these later on; of what avail is it, therefore, that the bone is stopped up?

(22) I.e., it is dried up and shrivelled so that it shakes about within the bone; in such a case the limb cannot be restored.

(23) Since there is the requisite quantity of marrow within the bone it is immaterial whether it is stopped up or not, for the uncleanness breaks through. With regard to consecrated meat, too, as the bone should as a holder for an olive's bulk of marrow which was nothar, it conveys uncleanness.

(24) And since it cannot restore the flesh on the outside, it cannot then be considered as a limb; it therefore requires the minimum standard of an olive's bulk which must be accessible.

(25) Ohol. III, 2. The Tanna in the following Mishnah clearly holds the view that the expression ‘contact’ means also ‘overshadowing’, and that these two forms of uncleanness fall within one category.

(26) E.g. one hand of the man was touching one half-olive's bulk while the other hand was directly above and overshadowing the second half-olive's bulk.

(27) E.g. the second half-olive's bulk was stuck on a chip which was inserted in the wall and the man stood directly underneath it.

(28) Sc., uncleanness conveyed by contact and by overshadowing.

(29) Ohol. ibid.

Talmud - Mas. Chullin 125b

if he touched one half-olive's bulk and some other thing overshadowed both him and another half-olive's bulk, he is clean. Now if they fall within one category why is he clean? But does not this clause conflict with the first clause? — R. Zera answered: We are dealing there [in the first clause] with uncleanness that was confined between two cupboards between which there was not a handbreadth's space, in which case [overshadowing] is regarded as actual contact.

Who then is the Tanna that includes ‘overshadowing’ in the term ‘he who touches’? — It is R. Jose. For it was taught: R. Jose says. A ladleful of corpse-mould conveys uncleanness by contact, by carrying, and by overshadowing. Now it is clear [that a person is rendered unclean] by carrying and by overshadowing, for he carries the whole quantity and overshadows the whole quantity, but with regard to uncleanness by contact, he surely does not touch the whole quantity!

One must say, therefore, that the expression ‘contact’ means ‘overshadowing’. But does it not expressly state ‘by contact’ as well as ‘by overshadowing’? Abaye suggested, [To overshadow uncleanness] within a handbreadth thereof is termed ‘overshadowing by contact’, but more than a handbreadth away it is termed ‘plain overshadowing’.

Raba said: Even more than a handbreadth away, it is also termed overshadowing by contact'; but what is meant by ‘plain overshadowing’? Where there is a projection.

Raba said: Whence do I derive this? From what was taught [in the following Baraitha]: R. Jose says. The woven cords of beds and the lattice-work of windows serve as partitions between the house and the upper room to prevent the passage of uncleanness to the other side. If these were spread over a corpse, being suspended in the air, whatever touches directly over a mesh is unclean but whatever is not directly over a mesh is clean. Now what are the circumstances? If [they were suspended] within a handbreadth [from the corpse], why does that which was not directly over a mesh remain clean? Surely it is nothing else but the corpse in its shroud, and the corpse in its shroud conveys uncleanness!

They must then [have been suspended] more than a handbreadth away [from the corpse], nevertheless the expression ‘whatever touches’ is used! — Abaye said: In fact [they were suspended] within a handbreadth [from the corpse], but as for your objection, ‘Surely it is nothing else but the corpse in its shroud!’ I reply that] with regard to the corpse in its shroud a man certainly ignores [the existence of the shroud], but he does not ignore the existence of these. But is this not a case of concealed uncleanness which [according to established law] breaks through and rises upwards? — R. Jose is of the opinion that concealed uncleanness cannot break through and rise upwards.
Whence do you know this? From [the following Mishnah] which we learnt: If a drawer in a cupboard had the capacity of a [cubic] handbreadth within, and the opening [of the cupboard] was less than a handbreadth [square], and there was some uncleanness in it, the house becomes unclean; if there was some uncleanness in the house, what is in the drawer remains clean, for the uncleanness must come forth [eventually] but need not come in at all. R. Jose declares [the house] clean, for one could take out the uncleanness by halves or burn it in its place. And the next clause reads thus: If one set [the cupboard] in the doorway of the house and it [the cupboard] opened outwards, and there was some uncleanness in it, the house remains clean; if there was some uncleanness in the house, what is in [the cupboard] remains clean.

(1) E.g., both the man and the second half-olive's bulk were directly underneath and overshadowed by a plank.
(2) Should not the contact and the overshadowing, each in connection with a half-olive's bulk of a corpse, combine to render the person unclean?
(3) I.e., there is a contradiction in this Mishnah itself between the first clause and the next one.
(4) For it is established law that uncleanness which is confined or wedged in — i.e., there is not the air-space of a handbreadth on all sides — breaks through its confines and rises, as it were, in a column directly above, so that whoever passes at any height whatsoever over the uncleanness actually comes into contact with the column of uncleanness and is rendered unclean.
(5) I.e., the earth of a decomposed body found in a coffin.
(6) For the corpse-mould is composed of many particles, and when a person touches a part thereof he cannot be said to have touched the whole ladleful, in which case he should not be rendered unclean by contact therewith.
(7) The terms 'contact' and 'overshadowing' employed in the foregoing Baraitha are both to be understood in the sense of overshadowing, but Abaye draws a distinction between two modes of overshadowing. It must be observed that Abaye's suggestion is in no wise in support of R. Johanan's contention that the Tanna of our Mishnah is R. Jose and that the expression in our Mishnah HE WHO TOUCHES includes overshadowing, for according to him only overshadowing within a handbreadth from the unclean matter can be referred to by the term 'touch', accordingly our Mishnah does exclude plain overshadowing so that the difficulty propounded at the beginning of the argument stands. Of course Abaye himself has already explained the Mishnah to his satisfaction as stated above, supra p. 701.
(8) I.e., where the person and the uncleanness are side by side, but some projection overshadowed both, forming a 'tent' or roof over both.
(9) That whatsoever overshadows more than the distance of a handbreadth away from the uncleanness is still regarded as 'overshadowing by contact' according to R. Jose, and is implied in the term 'touch'.
(10) If these networks are stretched out across the lower room forming a ceiling thereto, they become forthwith part of the structure of the room and as such cannot contract uncleanness. Moreover they serve as a partition and prevent the uncleanness from passing into the room above, for the meshes or holes in the network do not give passage to the uncleanness since there is no opening a handbreadth square in it. Consequently whatsoever happens to be in the upper room, even that which is directly over a hole in the net, remains clean.
(11) I.e., happens to be directly over one of the holes in the net. In this case the network is in no way intended as a ceiling, consequently whatsoever directly overshadowing the corpse becomes unclean, but whatsoever is not directly over a hole but over a bar or thread of the net does not become unclean, for in this respect the threads of the net, inasmuch as they do not contract uncleanness, form a partition to prevent the uncleanness from passing upwards.
(12) The network, since it is so close to the corpse, can almost be regarded as the shroud of the dead, and the shroud of the dead surely cannot prevent the uncleanness of the corpse from spreading!
(13) I.e., he mentally ignores the separate existence of the shroud as a garment but looks upon it as part of the corpse; this, however, cannot be said with regard to the network.
(14) I.e., uncleanness over which there is not the space of one handbreadth. V. supra 71a and Ohol. XIV, 6.
(15) That according to R. Jose concealed uncleanness cannot break through.
(16) Ohol. IV, 2, 3.
(17) So that any uncleanness inside it would not be regarded as concealed uncleanness.
(18) By Rabbinic decree everything in the house becomes unclean forthwith, even while the uncleanness is still shut-up in the drawer, because eventually the uncleanness will be brought forth and then it will certainly render everything in the house unclean. Cf. Ohol. VII, 3; Bez. 101.
It is not inevitable that the house be tendered unclean, for the uncleanness can either be destroyed in the drawer, or be brought out in such quantities as does not render unclean.

For the uncleanness will not pass through the house at all and as there was the space of a cubic handbreadth in the cupboard the uncleanness in it cannot break through.

Talmud - Mas. Chullin 126a

And in connection with this it was taught that R. Jose declares [the house] clean. Now to which clause [does R. Jose refer]? If to the last clause-surely the first Tanna [in that case] also declares [the house] clean! It must therefore [be this]. The first Tanna had said: ‘If there was some uncleanness in it the house becomes unclean’, either by virtue of the fact that the uncleanness must come forth eventually, or by virtue of the rule that concealed uncleanness breaks through. Whereupon R. Jose said to him: As for your argument, ‘The uncleanness must come forth eventually’, [I reply that] one could take out the uncleanness by halves, or burn it in its place; and as for your ruling, ‘Concealed uncleanness breaks through’, [I maintain that] concealed uncleanness does not break through. I can point out a contradiction in the views of R. Jose. For we have learnt: If a dog ate the flesh of a corpse and died and Jay upon the threshold: R. Meir says. If its neck was one handbreadth wide, it brings the uncleanness [into the house]; and if not, it does not bring in the uncleanness. R. Jose says. We must see [where the uncleanness lies]: if it lies opposite the lintel and inwards, the house is unclean; but if opposite the lintel and outwards, the house is clean. R. Eleazar says. If its mouth lies inside, the house remains clean; but if the mouth lies outside, the house is unclean, because the uncleanness passes out by way of its lower parts. R. Judah b. Bathrya says. In all circumstances the house is unclean. Now presumably R. Jose deals with the case where its neck was not one handbreadth wide; hence you can deduce [that he holds], concealed uncleanness breaks through! — Said Raba: He [R. Jose] means to say: ‘We must consider the space in connection with the uncleanness’; and R. Jose consequently differs on two points, saying to R. Meir thus: As for your saying: ‘If its neck was one handbreadth wide it brings in the uncleanness’, [I maintain that] we must consider only the space; and as for your saying, [If it lies] anywhere upon the threshold the house is unclean, [I maintain that] if it lies on the inside of the lintel the house is unclean, but if on the outside of the lintel the house remains clean. Aha the son of Raba actually quotes the Mishnah with these words: R. Jose says. We must consider the space in connection with the uncleanness.

And who is the Tanna that disagrees with R. Jose? — It is R. Simeon. For it was taught: R. Simeon says.

---

(1) I.e., R. Jose had heard the first Tanna declare the house unclean in every case to which one of the reasons stated in the text applies. E.g., (in the case that is inferred from the last clause) where there was not the space of a cubic handbreadth in the drawer, even though the cupboard stood in the doorway of the house, the house is unclean because of concealed uncleanness; or, the case quoted in the first clause, the house is unclean for the uncleanness will eventually pass through.

(2) Ohol. XI, 7.

(3) If alive there would be no question at all of uncleanness, for, as already stated (supra 71a), uncleanness that is swallowed within a living being cannot render unclean.

(4) With its head pointing inside the house.

(5) Since the width of the neck is one handbreadth (even though it is not one handbreadth of space but consists of flesh, vertebrae, arteries etc.) the uppermost side of the neck overshadows as a ‘tent’ the uncleanness, and seeing that the ‘tent’ extends into the house it thus leads in the uncleanness.

(6) For a space with one of its dimensions less than a handbreadth cannot be regarded as a tent with regard to uncleanness. V. Ohol. III, 7.

(7) Sc., that part of the dog in which the uncleanness happens to be.

(8) I.e., the inner side of the lintel so that the house overshadows the uncleanness.
Presumably even though the dog's neck was not one handbreadth wide, for the uncleanness concealed within breaks through, so that the house overshadows the uncleanness.

And therefore one may regard the uncleanness in the dog as extending along the lower parts of the animal (for by this way it would have been evacuated) into the house.

Whether the neck was one handbreadth wide or not, and whether the actual uncleanness lay on the inside of the lintel or not, and whether the mouth of the dog lay inside or not.

Whether the neck was one handbreadth wide or not, and whether the actual uncleanness lay on the inside of the lintel or not, and whether the mouth of the dog lay inside or not.

V. supra n. 8.

Where there is in the neck a space of one handbreadth, the uppermost side of the neck would serve as a 'tent' and would lead the uncleanness into the house. Where, however, there is no space of a handbreadth in the neck, even though the neck in which the uncleanness lies is entirely within the house, the house is clean, for the uncleanness is concealed and cannot break through.

Even if it lies on that part of the threshold which is outside of the lintel.

R. Jose therefore is in every respect less strict than R. Meir, and not, as was previously assumed, more so.

I.e., who is it that holds, in opposition to R. Jose, that overshadowing is in no way in cluded in the expression ‘he who touches’, for contact and overshadowing are separate categories of uncleanness.

Talmud - Mas. Chullin 126b

There are three matters of uncleanness issuing from a corpse which convey uncleanness by two means but not by the third,\(^1\) and these are they: a ladleful of corpse-mould, a barley's bulk of bone, and the covering stone and side stones of the grave.\(^2\) A ladleful of corpse-mould conveys uncleanness by carrying and by overshadowing but not by contact;\(^3\) [uncleanness by] contact, however, is to be found with each of the others. A barley's bulk of bone conveys uncleanness by carrying and by contact but not by overshadowing;\(^4\) [uncleanness by] overshadowing, however, is to be found with each of the others. The covering stone and side stones of the grave convey uncleanness by contact and by overshadowing but not by carrying;\(^5\) [uncleanness by] carrying, however, is to be found with each of the others. A THIGH-BONE OF A CARCASS OR OF A [DEAD] REPTILE, etc. Our Rabbis taught: It is written: [He that toucheth] the carcass thereof,\(^6\) but not a stopped up thigh-bone. I might think [that the same is the case] even if it was pierced, the verse therefore says: He that toucheth . . . shall be unclean,\(^7\) that is,\(^8\) whatever can be touched is unclean\(^9\) but whatever cannot be touched is clean. R. Zera said to Abaye. In that case a carcass with the hide still upon it should not convey uncleanness?\(^10\) — [He replied,] Just go and see how many apertures there are in it?\(^11\) R. Papa said to Raba. In that case the kidney [of a carcass], so long as it is surrounded with fat, should not convey uncleanness?\(^12\) — [He replied:] Just go and see how many fibers run through it!\(^13\)

R. Oshaia raised the question. What is the position if a man intended to pierce [the bone] but did not pierce it? Does the absence of piercing make it incomplete,\(^14\) or not? He later answered the question himself: the absence of piercing does not make it incomplete.\(^15\)

MISHNAH. THE EGG OF A REPTILE IN WHICH THERE HAS FORMED AN EMBRYO IS CLEAN;\(^16\) IF IT WAS PIERCED, HOWEVER SMALL THE HOLE WAS, IT IS UNCLEAN.\(^17\) WITH REGARD TO A MOUSE WHICH IS HALF FLESH AND HALF EARTH,\(^18\) IF A MAN TOUCHED THE FLESH HE BECOMES UNCLEAN, BUT IF HE TOUCHED THE EARTH HE REMAINS CLEAN. R. JUDAH SAYS, EVEN IF HE TOUCHED THE EARTH THAT IS OVER AGAINST THE FLESH HE BECOMES UNCLEAN.

GEMARA. Our Rabbis taught: The unclean\(^17\) includes the egg of a reptile and the thigh-bone of a reptile. I might think [that it is the same] even if there had not formed an embryo in it, the verse therefore adds: The creeping things,\(^17\) that is, just as the creeping thing is fully formed so the reptile's egg must also be fully formed. I might think [that it is the same] even if they had not been pierced, the verse therefore states: Whosoever doth touch them ... shall be unclean,\textsuperscript{17} that is, whatever can be touched is unclean, but whatever cannot be touched is clean. How much must be pierced? A hairbreadth, for then it could be touched with a hair.\textsuperscript{18}

WITH REGARD TO A MOUSE WHICH IS HALF FLESH etc. R. Joshua the son of Levi said, provided the entire length [of the creature] had developed.\textsuperscript{19} Others, however, report this statement in reference to the last clause thus: R. JUDAH SAYS, EVEN IF HE TOUCHED THE EARTH THAT IS OVER AGAINST THE FLESH HE BECOMES UNCLEAN. Thereupon R. Joshua the son of Levi said, provided the entire length [of the creature] had been developed. He who reports it in reference to the first clause will with more reason apply it also to the last clause,\textsuperscript{20} but he who reports it in reference to the last clause will hold that in the first clause even though the entire length [of the creature] had not been developed [whosoever touches the fleshy part thereof becomes unclean].

Our Rabbis taught: Since Scripture mentioned ‘the mouse’\textsuperscript{21} I would have said that it included the sea-mouse for it bears the name ‘mouse’. There is, however, an argument [against this]: [Scripture] declared the weasel unclean and the mouse unclean, therefore as the weasel refers only to those that live upon the land\textsuperscript{22} so the mouse refers only to those that live upon the land. Or you might argue in this way: [Scripture] declared the weasel unclean and the mouse unclean, therefore as the weasel refers to every creature which bears the name weasel, so the mouse refers to every creature which bears the name mouse, and so it will include the sea-mouse since it bears the name mouse! The text therefore teaches: Upon the earth.\textsuperscript{23} But if I had only the expression ‘upon the earth’ to go by, I might say that while upon the earth it\textsuperscript{24} can render unclean, but if it went down into the sea it cannot render anything unclean!

\begin{itemize}
\item \textsuperscript{(1)} The three means of conveying uncleanness are: by contact, by carrying, and by overshadowing. With regards to the three matters stated, only two of these means apply, the actual two varying with each case, but not all three.
\item \textsuperscript{(2)} V. supra p. 397, n. 7.
\item \textsuperscript{(3)} This clearly conflicts with the aforementioned view of R. Jose, supra p. 703.
\item \textsuperscript{(4)} This is a traditional law and not derived from the exposition of a verse, but v. Tosa f. s.v. נָזַר, and s.v. לָאַטְם.
\item \textsuperscript{(5)} Lev. XI, 39.
\item \textsuperscript{(6)} According to Rashi the implication is derived from the superfluous ‘yod’ in the word yitma, shall be unclean. V. however, Shittah Mekubbezeth, n. 9.
\item \textsuperscript{(7)} If the flesh, or, as in this case, the marrow, that is inside can be touched from the outside, then the outer covering serves as a protection to what is inside, and as such conveys the uncleanness.
\item \textsuperscript{(8)} Since one cannot touch the flesh directly and the hide itself is clean, v. supra 124b.
\item \textsuperscript{(9)} E.g., the nose and the mouth which give direct access to the flesh.
\item \textsuperscript{(10)} For the fat itself is clean, v. Pes. 231.
\item \textsuperscript{(11)} And the fibers are accounted as flesh.
\item \textsuperscript{(12)} And what is incomplete does not convey uncleanness.
\item \textsuperscript{(13)} And therefore since there was a clear intention to pierce it it conveys uncleanness. According to old sources the reading is, ‘The absence of piercing makes it incomplete’; for which see Sh. Mek., n. 5, and Maim. Yad, Aboth Hatumeah, II, 12.
\item \textsuperscript{(14)} And if a man touched the shell he remains clean since the developed embryo within cannot be touched at all.
\item \textsuperscript{(15)} And contact with the shell would render the person unclean, for in this case the shell serves as a protection to foodstuff and as such conveys uncleanness.
\item \textsuperscript{(16)} According to the Rabbis, there exists a kind of mouse which is generated from the earth itself; v. Lewysohn, Zoologie des Talmuds, p. 345. Cf. also Sanh. 91a. In the process of generation there would be a time when it is half flesh and half earth.
\item \textsuperscript{(17)} Lev. XI, 31: These are the unclean amongst all the creeping things: whosoever doth touch them, when they are dead, shall be unclean until the even.
\item \textsuperscript{(18)} For it is established law that if a person touched the hair of an unclean body or if by his hair he touched an unclean body, in either case he becomes unclean. V. Rashi a.l.
\end{itemize}

(19) If the creature had already developed in its entire length from head to tail, even if only in half the width of its body, whosoever touches the fleshy part which has already developed becomes unclean.

(20) For had it not developed in its entire length R. Judah surely would not have said that whosoever touched the earth thereof would become unclean.

(21) Lev. XI, 29: And these are they which are unclean to you among the creeping things that creep upon the earth: the weasel, and the mouse, and the toad after its kind.

(22) For there are no weasels, nor any creatures by the name of weasel, that live in the sea.

(23) Ibid. This serves to exclude those that live in the sea.

(24) Sc., the mouse, be it land-mouse or sea-mouse.

Talmud - Mas. Chullin 127a

The text therefore teaches: That creep\(^1\) signifies, wherever it creeps\(^2\) [it renders unclean]. But perhaps it is not so but that the expression ‘that creep’ signifies, all that breed\(^3\) can render unclean, but those that do not breed cannot render unclean, and so I would exclude the mouse which is half flesh and half earth since it does not breed.\(^4\) There is, however, a good argument [against this]: [Scripture] declared the weasel unclean and the mouse unclean, therefore as the weasel refers to all that bear the name weasel, so the mouse refers to all that bear the name mouse, and [in this way] I include the mouse which is half flesh and half earth. Or you might argue in this way: As the weasel breeds so the mouse [includes all species that] breed, [and so I would exclude the mouse which is half flesh and half earth]! The text therefore teaches. Among the creeping things.\(^5\)

A certain Rabbi said to Raba: Perhaps the expression ‘among the creeping things’ includes the mouse which is half flesh and half earth, and the expression ‘that creep’ signifies all that creep, thus including the sea-mouse, and as for the expression ‘upon the earth’, it would be interpreted as follows: While upon earth it\(^6\) can render unclean, but if it went down into the sea it cannot render anything unclean? — He replied: Since you regard the sea as a place of uncleanness, then it is all one, whether here or there.\(^7\) But is not the expression ‘upon the earth’ required to exclude a floating uncleanness where there is a doubt [concerning contact]?\(^8\) For R. Isaac b. Abdimi stated: The expression ‘upon the earth’ excludes a floating uncleanness concerning which there is a doubt! — ‘Upon the earth’ is written twice.\(^9\) Our Rabbis taught: The toad after its kind,\(^10\) includes the ‘arod,\(^11\) the ben-nephilin,\(^12\) and the salamander.\(^13\) When R. Akiba read this verse he used to say: ‘How manifold are Thy works, O Lord!’\(^14\) Thou hast creatures that live in the sea and Thou hast creatures that live upon the dry land; if those of the sea were to come up upon the dry land they would straightway die, and if those of the dry land were to go down into the sea they would straightway die. Thou hast creatures that live in fire and Thou hast creatures that live in the air; if those of the fire were to come up into the air they would straightway die, and if those of the air were to go down into the fire they would straightway die. How manifold are Thy works, O Lord!’

Our Rabbis taught: Every creature that is on the dry land is also to be found in the sea, excepting the weasel. R. Zera said: Where is there proof for this from Scripture? Give ear, all ye inhabitants of the world.\(^15\)

R. Huna the son of R. Joshua said. The beavers around Naresh\(^16\) are not land [creatures].\(^17\)

R. Papa said. The ban upon Naresh, its fat, its hide, and its tail!\(^18\)

O Land, land, land, hear the word of the Lord.\(^19\) Said R. Papa. Yet the inhabitants of Naresh would not hear the word of the Lord.

R. Giddal said in the name of Rab, If an inhabitant of Naresh has kissed you then count your teeth. If a man of Nehar Pekod accompanies you it is because of the fine garments he sees on you. If a Pumbedithan accompanies you then change your quarters.

R. Huna b. Torta said: I once went to Wa'ad and saw a snake wrapped round a toad; after some days there came forth an ‘arod from between them. When I came before R. Simeon the pious, [and related this to him,] he said to me: The Holy One, blessed be He, said: They have produced a new creature which I had not created into my world, I too will bring upon them a creature which I had not created in my world. (But has not a Master said, All creatures whose manner of copulation is the same and whose period of gestation is the same can bear young from each other and suckle each other, but all creatures whose manner of copulation is not the same and whose period of gestation is not the same cannot bear young from each other nor suckle each other? — Rab said: It was a miracle within a miracle. But this is for chastisement! — It was a miracle within a miracle even for chastisement!)

MISHNAH. LIMBS OR PIECES OF FLESH WHICH HANG LOOSE FROM THE [LIVING] ANIMAL ARE RENDERED UNCLEAN IN RESPECT OF FOOD UNCLEANNESS WHILST THEY ARE IN THEIR PLACE. AND REQUIRE TO BE RENDERED SUSCEPTIBLE TO UNCLEANNESS.

(1) Ibid.
(2) In the light of this interpretation it could not have been maintained that a mouse cannot render unclean if it fell into the sea and there came into contact with some object. Consequently the term ‘upon the earth’ must be explained with regard to species, thus only land species can render unclean but not the sea species.
(3) Heb. שְׁרִינוֹת might also mean to propagate, breed; cf. Ex. I, 7. Rashi, however, explains the word in the sense that the creature is the product of copulation of the sexes, which is not the case with the mouse that is generated by the earth itself. In some MSS. of Rashi this explanation is not found.
(4) Consequently the expression ‘upon the earth’ would signify that all creatures, whether land or sea creatures, if they have fallen into the sea, cannot render anything unclean.
(5) Lev. XI, 29. This would include even the mouse generated by the earth.
(6) Sc., any mouse, whether land-mouse or sea-mouse, or the mouse generated from the earth.
(7) I.e., a breeding place for species that can render unclean. Since it has been established that the sea-mouse can render unclean, there is no sufficient reason, indeed it is illogical to limit such uncleanness to the time when it creeps upon the land.
(8) I.e., if a dead reptile was floating upon the water and there arose a doubt as to whether or not it had come into contact with some object, even if the doubt arose in a private domain (in which case the established rule is that the state of doubt is resolved according to its more stringent aspect. i.e., unclean), the object remains clean. This is deduced from the strict interpretation of the expression ‘upon the earth’. V. Nazir 64a.
(9) Ibid. XI, 29 and 41.
(10) Lev. XI. 29.
(11) נַחַל, a species of lizard; a cross between a snake and a toad. ‘The watersnake’ according to Lewysohn, op. cit. pp. 241-2.
(12) כְּבָר מַגְיַלְיָא, the skink; so Lewysohn, p. 225.
(13) A kind of lizard which was supposed to exist in fire without being burnt; v. Hag. end.
(14) Ps. CIV, 24.
(15) Ibid. XLIX, 2. ‘The world’ is expressed by the rare word שַׁקִּד (heled) which is similar to the word for the weasel (holed). The world (heled) is the specific habitation of the weasel (holed), for the latter is not to be found in the sea.
(16) Identical with Nahras, on the canal of the same name, on the East bank of the Euphrates.
(17) So according to Rashi. Tosaf., however, gives an entirely different rendering: ‘The inhabitants of Bibri and of Naresh are not fit for human society’ (i.e., they are in every way wicked, see following statement of R. Papa). Accordingly Bibri (Be-Bari) is taken as the town close to Naresh; cf. ‘Er. 56a and Sot. 10a. V. Tosaf. a.l., and Lewysohn, op. cit. p. 98. [Obermeyer p. 308 renders: Be-Bari and Naresh are not accounted as (inhabited) settlements. They are, that is, sparsely inhabited and infested consequently with wild animals.1
The inhabitants of Naresh, both great and small, all without exception are wicked, and should be put under the ban. The fat, the hide, and the tail, indicate the various sections of the community.

Jer. XXII, 29.

For they are all thieves and insincere in their profession of friendship.

He will steal it from you at the first opportunity.

That he may not rob you.

The name of a certain place whose inhabitants used to engage in crossbreeding animals. A variant reading is, יִשְׁנָה, ‘a forest’.

Sc. the ‘arod whose bite is deadly; cf. Ber. 331.

Bek. 8a.

The periods of gestation of a snake and a toad differ greatly; with the latter it is six months, with the former seven years, cf. Bek. 8a, consequently they cannot be crossed.

First that each should leave its own kind, and secondly that these two kinds should bear from each other.

God surely would not perform miracles for the purpose of chastisement.

So MS.M. Cur. edd., ‘what is the meaning of a miracle within a miracle? For the purpose of punishment.’

I.e., pieces consisting of bones, flesh and sinews. A limb entirely severed from the living animal renders unclean men and vessels like a carcass, whereas a piece of flesh entirely severed from the animal has no uncleanness whatsoever, v. infra 128b.

Although they are not severed from the animal and the animal whilst alive cannot contract or convey uncleanness, they are in this respect regarded as detached from the animal, provided they were expressly intended to serve as food (for a gentile, cf. ‘Uk. III, 2), so as to contract uncleanness like ordinary foodstuffs and also to convey it.

By being moistened by water or one of the seven liquids (v. Maksh. VI, 4) at any time after they have been torn loose.

Talmud - Mas. Chullin 127b

GEMARA. They are rendered unclean in respect of FOOD UNCLEANNESS but not in respect of nebelah uncleanness.3 Now what are the circumstances? If they can be restored4 they should not be rendered unclean even in respect of food uncleanness, and if they cannot be restored they should be then rendered unclean also in respect of nebelah uncleanness! — In fact they cannot be restored, but with regard to nebelah Uncleanliness it is different, for the Divine Law says. And if there fall,5 that is, they must absolutely fall away [from the body].6 There was also taught [a Baraitha] to this effect: ‘With regard to the limbs or the pieces of flesh which hang loose from the animal and are attached by a hairbreadth, I might have said that they should convey nebelah uncleanness, the text therefore states. "And if there fall", that is, they must absolutely fall away [from the body]”; nevertheless, they are rendered unclean in respect of food uncleanness.7

This supports R. Hiyya b. Ashi, for R. Hiyya b. Ashi said in the name of Samuel: Figs which had shrivelled up on the branch are rendered unclean in respect of food uncleanness, and he who plucks them on the Sabbath is liable to bring a sin-offering.8

Shall we say that the following also supports him? It was taught: Vegetables, such as cabbages and pumpkins, which had shrivelled up on the stem,9 are not rendered unclean in respect of food uncleanness. If they were cut down and dried, they are rendered unclean in respect of food uncleaness. ‘If they were cut down and dried’. But this is unthinkable, for they are then like wood! R. Isaac, however, explained that it means: If they were cut down in order to be dried. Now this reasoning applies only to cabbages and pumpkins, for these no sooner have they become dry than they are uneatble: but other fruits [even though they shrivelled up on the stem] are rendered unclean [in respect of food uncleanness]. And what are the facts [in the case of the shrivelled-up cabbages and pumpkins]? If both they and their stems dried up, it is obvious; it must be then that only they shrivelled up but not their stems! — [It is not so]. In fact both they and their stems had dried up, but it was necessary to teach that if one cut them down in order to dry them [they are still unclean in respect of food uncleanness].

Come and hear: If a branch of a tree broke off with fruits upon it they are regarded as plucked. If they had dried up they are regarded as attached, presumably as the one is regarded as plucked for all purposes, so the other is regarded as attached for all purposes! — Is this an argument? One means one thing, and the other another.

IF THE ANIMAL WAS SLAUGHTERED etc. What is the issue between them? — Rabbah said: They differ as to whether the animal can be regarded as serving as a handle to a limb; one holds that the animal can be regarded as a handle to a limb, and the other holds that the animal cannot be regarded as a handle to a limb.

Abaye said: They differ as to the ruling in the case where by taking hold of the smaller part of a thing the greater part does not come away with it; one is of the opinion that where by taking hold of the smaller part of a thing the greater part does not come away with it it is regarded like it, but the other is of the opinion that where by taking hold of the smaller part of a thing the greater part does not come away with it it is not regarded like it.

R. Johanan also maintains that they differ as to the ruling in the case where by taking hold of the smaller part of a thing the greater part does not come away with it. For R. Johanan pointed out a contradiction in the views of R. Meir. Did R. Meir say, where by taking hold of the smaller part of a thing the greater part would not come away with it it is regarded like it? But there is a contradiction to it for we have learnt: If a foodstuff [of terumah] was divided, but was still attached in part.

(1) For at the slaughtering the limbs and pieces of flesh are not regarded as having fallen off, so that although the slaughtering cannot render the limbs and flesh fit for food it can render them clean that they be not nebelah, and at the same time it renders them susceptible to receive uncleanness by the moistening by the blood. V. supra 33a.
(2) For at death the limbs and pieces of flesh are regarded as having fallen off before, i.e., from the living animal, and therefore the flesh is entirely free from uncleanness (v. p. 714, n. 12) whereas the limbs convey uncleanness as limbs severed from a living animal but not as limbs severed from a carcass. For the distinction v. Gemara infra.
(3) I.e., the limb does not render men and vessels unclean.
(4) I.e., the flesh or the limb hanging from the body could be reset and bound up with the body so as to heal and recover completely.
(5) Lev. XI, 37.
(6) In order to be deemed unclean like nebelah.
(7) Though in respect of nebelah uncleanness they are considered attached to the animal.
(8) Thus although with regard to Sabbath the figs are regarded as still upon the tree, with regard to food uncleanness they are regarded as fallen off.
(9) I.e., during growth.
(10) Although they were intended to be dried and used as fuel, nevertheless so long as they are still moist they are rendered unclean in respect of food uncleanness.
(11) For even with regard to the laws of Sabbath these vegetables would be regarded as plucked, consequently only these do not convey food uncleanness, since they are as wood, but other vegetables do. Hence it was unnecessary for the Baraitha to state these obvious rules.

(12) In which case with regard to the laws of Sabbath they would be regarded as unplucked, nevertheless with regard to uncleanness they are considered plucked and convey food uncleanness, thus supporting Samuel's view.

(13) In the case where the tree had not split but the fruits had dried upon the tree.

(14) I.e., both as regards the laws of Sabbath and uncleanness, thus conflicting with Samuel, who distinguishes between these laws.

(15) In other words, ‘regarded as attached’ has reference only to the laws of Sabbath but not to uncleanness, thus in agreement with Samuel.

(16) R. Meir and R. Simeon in our Mishnah.

(17) Both agree that moistening the handle of foodstuffs renders the whole foodstuff susceptible to uncleanness, but the question is whether the major portion of a thing can in any way be said to serve as a handle to the lesser portion, so that by moistening the bulk the handle is regarded as made susceptible to uncleanness.

(18) R. Meir.

(19) So when the animal was rendered susceptible to uncleanness the hanging limb was likewise rendered susceptible.

(20) R. Simeon.

(21) I.e., the smaller part is still considered as part of the whole. It is agreed to by all that the animal cannot serve as a handle to the limb, but R. Meir and R. Simeon differ in this: R. Meir maintains that whatever still hangs on to the whole is regarded as part of the whole; for, granted that the hanging limb cannot pull with it the rest of the animal, the animal when taken up would certainly take with it this hanging limb. R. Simeon, however, does not accept this argument.

(22) T. Y. III, 1. Cf. variant text in Tosaf. 128a, s.v. הכ"ה.

Talmud - Mas. Chullin 128a

R. Meir says: If by taking hold of the smaller part the greater part comes away with it, it is regarded like it; otherwise it is not regarded like it. Whereupon R. Johanan suggested that he in this case changed his opinion! But what was [R. Johanan's] difficulty? perhaps R. Meir distinguishes between the uncleanness of a tebul yom and other uncleannesses? — [This surely is not the case for] it was taught: Rabbi says: It is all one whether the uncleanness was that of a tebul yom or any other uncleanness. But perhaps Rabbi draws no distinction [between the uncleannesses] but R. Meir does? — Said R. Josiah. This is what R. Johanan meant to say. According to Rabbi's view he [R. Meir] in this case changed his opinion. Raba said: They differ as to whether the law of handles applies only in respect of conveying the uncleanness but not in respect of rendering [the bulk] susceptible to uncleanness [or whether it applies to both]; one holds that the law of handles applies only in respect of conveying the uncleanness but not in respect of rendering [the bulk] susceptible to uncleanness, but the other holds that the law of handles applies both in respect of conveying the uncleanness and of rendering [the bulk] susceptible to uncleanness.

R. Papa said: They differ as to the ruling in the case where [the limb] was rendered susceptible [to uncleanness] before any intention [was formed of using it as food]. For it was taught: R. Judah said: R. Akiba used to teach as follows: The forbidden fat of a slaughtered animal, in villages needs intention [to be used for food], but does not need to be made susceptible to uncleanness, since it has already been made susceptible by the slaughtering. Thereupon I said to him: Master, did you not teach us that if a man gathered endives, washed them for [feeding] cattle, and then determined to use them as food for man, they again need [to be moistened in order] to be rendered susceptible to uncleanness? R. Akiba then retracted and taught according to R. Judah. The one accepts the original [teaching of R. Akiba] the other [the teaching] after he retracted. R. Aha the son of R. Ika said: They differ in the case where the blood was wiped away [from the limb] between the cutting of the first and second organs [of the throat]; one maintains that the term shechitah applies to the entire process of slaughtering from beginning to end, consequently this [blood that was upon the limb] was the blood of slaughtering; the other maintains that the term shechitah applies only to the last stage of the slaughtering, consequently this [blood that was upon the limb] was the blood of a wound.
R. Ashi said: They differ as to whether the slaughtering only and not the blood renders susceptible to uncleanness.\(^{18}\)

Rabbah raised the following question: Can the living animal serve as a handle to the limb or not?\(^{19}\) — It is undecided.

Abaye said: Behold they have said:\(^{20}\) If a man planted a cucumber in a plant-pot and it grew and spread outside the pot, it is clean.\(^{21}\) Said R. Simeon: How does this come to be clean? Rather what is unclean remains unclean and what is clean remains clean. Now, asked Abaye, [according to R. Simeon] can it serve as a handle to the rest?\(^{25}\) — It is undecided.

R. Jeremiah said: Behold they have said that if a man bowed down to half a pumpkin he has thereby rendered it forbidden.\(^{26}\) Now, asked R. Jeremiah,

---

\(^{1}\) And if a tebul yom (i.e., one who has immersed himself by day but is not regarded as absolutely clean until sunset) touched either part, the whole is rendered invalid (i.e., it is unclean, but it cannot convey the uncleanness).

\(^{2}\) And only the part touched by the tebul yom is rendered invalid but not the other.

\(^{3}\) R. Meir in the case of the tebul yom adopted a different view, but generally he is of the opinion that where by taking hold of the smaller part the greater part does not come away with it, the former is regarded as part of the whole (Rashi).

\(^{4}\) V. n. 2. In the case of a tebul yom R. Meir adopts a less strict view, since the uncleanness of such a person is only Rabbinic. So Rashi, but v. Glos. of R. Akiba Eger in the margin of the folio.

\(^{5}\) I.e., what is regarded as contact with the whole in the case of other sources of uncleanness is also regarded as contact with the whole by a tebul yom.

\(^{6}\) They both, however, agree that the animal can serve as a handle to the limb.

\(^{7}\) R. Simeon.

\(^{8}\) R. Meir.

\(^{9}\) Since the limb was hanging loose from the living animal it is forbidden, even after the slaughtering, to be eaten by all, Jew and gentile alike; consequently it is not regarded as a foodstuff unless an express intention was formed to that effect. In this case, however, at the time of slaughtering when the animal was rendered susceptible to uncleanness by the blood, no such intention was expressed. Later when it is intended to be used as food the question arises whether the first moistening has effectively rendered it susceptible to uncleanness or not. They both, however, agree that a part can serve as a handle both for the purposes of uncleanness and of rendering aught susceptible to uncleanness.

\(^{10}\) In villages fat was not counted as a foodstuff for it was not usually eaten, either because the villagers could not afford to buy it, or because there was no need for it because of their abundant supply of meat.

\(^{11}\) Prior to the intention.

\(^{12}\) For the first washing by water, since it preceded the intention to use them as a foodstuff, will not serve to render them susceptible to uncleanness.

\(^{13}\) That moistening by water of any matter, even before the intention was formed to use it as a foodstuff, renders it susceptible to uncleanness.

\(^{14}\) They both hold that although the animal serves as a handle to the limb, it can only serve as such for the purposes of uncleanness but not for the purpose of rendering the limb susceptible to uncleanness; in other words the limb must itself be moistened. Now in this case some blood of the slaughtering splashed upon this loose limb but it was wiped off before the slaughtering was completed.

\(^{15}\) R. Meir.

\(^{16}\) R. Simeon.

\(^{17}\) Which cannot render aught susceptible to uncleanness; v. supra 35b.

\(^{18}\) It is agreed by all that the animal cannot serve as a handle to the limb for the purpose of rendering it susceptible to uncleanness; it is therefore suggested that the limb was splashed with the blood of the slaughtering which was not wiped off at all. R. Simeon nevertheless maintains that the limb was not thereby rendered susceptible, for he holds that it is the act of slaughtering and not the blood which renders the animal susceptible to uncleanness, and this being so, the act of slaughtering must be a valid act such as renders the animal fit for food, which is not the case with regard to this limb.
This question is founded upon the view of R. Meir who, on Rabbah's interpretation, holds that the slaughtered animal serves as a handle to the loose limb. If it is held that the living animal can also serve as a handle to the loose limb, then the position would be that if unclean matter came into contact with the body of the animal, although it could not itself contract uncleanness thereby for it is alive, it could nevertheless act as a 'handle' to convey the uncleanness to the loose limb (provided the limb was first moistened by water).

(21) Whosever is planted in a plant-pot which is not perforated is not regarded as attached to the soil in any way; it is therefore susceptible to contract uncleanness, or if the plant was unclean before planting, it retains the uncleanness (which is not the case if the plant was planted in the ground). If, however part of the growth of the plant spread outside the pot this part clearly draws nourishment from the earth and the effect is that the whole plant, even that which is inside the pot, is insusceptible to uncleanness, or if the plant, before planting, was unclean, it is now clean.

(22) Lit., 'what is the nature of this'?

(23) Sc., that which is inside the pot, for it is not regarded as attached to the soil.

(24) Sc., that which is outside the pot, which draws sustenance from the soil and so is regarded as attached to the soil.

(25) To convey uncleanness to what is inside the pot although it itself cannot contract uncleanness.

(26) Inasmuch as it is forbidden to derive any benefit whatsoever from the object worshipped, the half pumpkin is no longer, according to the view of R. Simeon infra 129a, regarded as a foodstuff, and so cannot contract uncleanness.

Talmud - Mas. Chullin 128b

can it serve as a handle to the other [half]? — It is undecided.

R. Papa said: Behold they have said, 2 If a branch of a fig-tree was broken off but it was still attached by the bark, [and unclean matter came into contact with it.] R. Judah declares it to be clean; 3 but the Sages say. If it can live, 4 it is clean; but if not, it is unclean. Now, asked R. Papa, can it serve as a handle to the rest? 5 — It is undecided. R. Zera said: Behold they have said, 6 As to a stone that is in a corner, 7 when it must be taken out 8 the whole of it must be taken out, and when [the house] must be pulled down 9 a man need pull down only his own [half of the stone] but leaves his neighbour's [half]. Now, asked R. Zera, can it serve as a handle to the rest? 10 — It is undecided.

IF THE ANIMAL DIED. What difference is there between a limb torn from a living animal and a limb torn from a dead animal? — The difference is where some flesh is severed from the limb; for flesh severed from the limb torn from a living animal is not rendered unclean, but [flesh severed] from the limb torn from a dead animal is rendered unclean. And where is there proof in Scripture that a limb torn away from a living animal renders unclean? — Rab Judah said in the name of Rab: It is written: And if there die of the beasts. 11 But surely this verse is required for the other teaching of Rab Judah in the name of Rab; for Rab Judah said in the name of Rab, (others say: It was so taught in a Baraitha). It is written: And if there die of the beasts, [he that toucheth the carcass thereof shall be unclean,] that is to say, some beasts render unclean and some do not, and which are they [that do] not render unclean? They are trefah animals that have been slaughtered. 12 — If that were so, Scripture should have stated ‘of beasts’; why does it state ‘of the beasts’? You may therefore infer two results from it. Then in that case even flesh [severed from the living animal] should also [render unclean], should it not? — You cannot say so, for it has been taught: I might think that flesh severed from the living animal should also be unclean, Scripture therefore states: And if there die of the beasts: as death cannot be replaced so everything that [is severed and] cannot be replaced [renders unclean]; so R. Jose [the Galilean]. R. Akiba says. It is written: ‘The beasts’: as the beast is made up of veins and bones so everything [severed] must be made up of veins and bones [in order to render unclean]. Rabbi says: ‘The beasts’: as the beast is made up of flesh and veins and bones so everything [severed] must be made up of flesh and veins and bones [in order to render unclean]. Wherein is there a difference between Rabbi and R. Akiba? — In the case of the nethermost joint [of the leg]. 13 And wherein is there a difference between R. Akiba and R. Jose the Galilean? — R. Papa answered: In the case of the kidney and the upper lip. 14

The same has also been taught with regard to creeping things, viz., I might think that flesh severed from [living] creeping things should also be unclean, Scripture therefore states. When they are dead: 15 as death cannot be replaced so everything that [is severed and] cannot be replaced [renders unclean]; so R. Jose the Galilean. R. Akiba says. It is written: The creeping things: 15 as the creeping thing is made up of veins and bones so everything [severed] must be made up of veins and bones [in order to render unclean]. Rabbi says: ‘The creeping things’: as the creeping thing is made up of flesh and veins and bones so everything [severed] must be made up of flesh and veins and bones. Between Rabbi and R. Akiba there is a difference with regard to the nethermost joint [of the leg]; and between R. Akiba and R. Jose the Galilean there is a difference with regard to the kidney and the upper lip.

Now both teachings were necessary. For if it had been taught only with regard to beasts I should have said that the reason [why the flesh torn from] the living beast does not render unclean was that [the beast when dead] does not render unclean by a lentil's bulk thereof, 16 but in the case of a creeping thing, since [when dead] it renders Unclean by a lentil's bulk thereof, I should have said that the flesh of the living [creeping thing] should render Unclean. And if it had been taught only with regard to creeping things, I should have said that the reason [why the flesh torn from] the living creeping thing does not render unclean was that creeping things do not convey uncleanness by carrying, but in the case of beasts, since they do convey uncleanness by carrying. I should have said that even [the flesh torn from] the living beast should render unclean. Therefore both teachings were necessary.

Our Rabbis taught: Where a man cut off an olive's bulk 17 of flesh from a limb that was severed from a living animal, if he first cut it off and then intended it as food, 18 it is clean; 19 but if he first intended it as food and then cut it off, it is unclean. 20 R. Assi was once absent from the Beth Hamidrash. He later met R. Zera and asked him, ‘What was said in the Beth Hamidrash’? Said the other, ‘And what was your difficulty’? He said: ‘Well, it has been stated: “If he first intended it as food and then cut it off, it is unclean”.

---

(1) I.e., if unclean matter came into contact with the forbidden half, can it, seeing that it cannot contract uncleanness itself, serve as a handle to convey the uncleanness to the other half or not?
(2) ‘Uk. III, 8.
(3) For it is still regarded as part of the tree and therefore cannot contract uncleanness.
(4) I.e., if when tied to the tree it can produce fruit.
(5) I.e., can this branch which has been tied to the tree and continues to produce fruit, (in which case it cannot contract uncleanness itself,) serve as a handle, if unclean matter came into contact with it, to convey the uncleanness to a smaller branch broken away from it and which cannot live and produce fruit? This is the first interpretation of Rashi, and it is on all fours with the previous questions that were raised. A simpler interpretation is: can the tree, which does not contract uncleanness, convey the uncleanness which came into contact with it to the branch which has broken away and which cannot revive even when tied to the tree?
(6) Neg. XIII, 2.
(7) I.e., a stone which forms part of two adjoining houses and which was infected with some leprous disease. Cf. Lev. XIV, 33ff: if the plague had spread after the house had been shut up for seven days the infected stones must be removed and replaced by others, and if after a further period of seven days the plague appears upon the new stones then the entire house must be pulled down.
(8) Viz., after the first seven days.
(9) Viz., after the second period of seven days.
(10) It is established that stones infected with the plague render everything in the ‘tent’, i.e., under the same roof-space unclean; cf. Lev. XIV, 36. 46. The question, therefore, is: can the other half of the stone which remains, i.e., his neighbour's half, since it is clean itself, serve as a handle in order that the uncleanness may pass from his house into his neighbour's house.
Lev. XI, 39. The exposition is inferred from the Heb. מִן הָעֹלָם, ‘of the beasts’, i.e., a part thereof. Thus a limb that has died (i.e., torn away from the beast) renders unclean.

In this case the expression מִן הָעֹלָם, ‘of the beasts’, means among beasts; thus some beasts render unclean and some do not.

Sc., the metatarsus or the metacarpus; these consist entirely of bones and veins without flesh. According to R. Akiba, these are limbs and if severed from the living beast render unclean, and so too according to R. Jose; but according to Rabbi these are not limbs.

These are without bones, but obviously once cut away the animal cannot get another kidney or upper lip. According to R. Jose's definition these are regarded as limbs, but not so according to R. Akiba's definition.

Lev. XI, 31.

There must be at least an olive's bulk thereof.

The words ‘an olive's bulk’ are omitted in MS.M. and other MSS. Rashi apparently also adopts the reading without these words and he quotes the Tosef. in support. The reason for the omission is, that for a foodstuff to contract uncleanness and to convey uncleanness, there must be at least an egg's bulk.

For a gentile.

For a morsel of flesh which has been cut away from a limb that was severed from a living animal has no uncleanness of its own; and at the moment that this morsel comes to be regarded as a foodstuff it was then separated from the limb or from any source of uncleanness, hence it is clean.

Inasmuch as this morsel was regarded as a foodstuff whilst still joined to the limb, it has always borne uncleanness; for when joined to the limb it bore the graver uncleanness (which can render men and vessels unclean), and when separated from it it thereby loses the graver uncleanness but bears the lighter uncleanness (which can render unclean only foodstuffs and liquids) because of its contact with the limb.

Talmud - Mas. Chullin 129a

But it had only [made] covert [contact with] uncleanness and covert [contact with] uncleanness does not render unclean? Said the other, ‘I, too, had this difficulty and I put it to R. Abba b. Memel, and he told me that this ruling was in accordance with R. Meir's view who maintains that covert [contact with] uncleanness does render unclean’. He said: ‘Indeed on many occasions he told me that too, but I replied to him that R. Meir surely made a distinction between that which needed to be rendered susceptible [to uncleanness by a liquid] and that which did not need to be so rendered susceptible’.

Raba said: But what was the objection, perhaps it was rendered susceptible to uncleanness?

Whereupon Rabbah son of Hanan asked Raba: Why is it at all necessary that it be rendered susceptible? Originally it conveyed the graver uncleanness! — He replied. But then it served only as wood.

Abaye said: Behold they have said that if a man especially set aside a lump of leaven to be used as a seat, he has thereby nullified it. The uncleanness thereof [I say] is not decreed by the law of the Torah; for should you say it is so by the law of the Torah then we should have a case of foodstuffs being able to convey the graver uncleanness [later on]! — [No. Not necessarily so]. For it now serves as wood.

Abaye said: Behold they have said that foodstuffs used as offerings to idols render unclean [men and vessels that are] in the same tent. This uncleanness [I say] is not decreed by the law of the Torah; for should you say it is so by the law of the Torah then we should have a case of foodstuffs being able to convey the graver uncleanness [later on]! — [No. Not necessarily so]. For they now serve as wood.

Abaye said: Behold they have stated that foodstuffs that adhere closely [to vessels] are like the vessels themselves. The uncleanness [in such a case I say] is not decreed by the law of the Torah; for should you say it is so by the law of the Torah then we should have a case of foodstuffs being able to convey the graver uncleanness [later on]! — [No. Not necessarily so]. For they now serve as wood.
R. Papa said to Raba: In view of that which has been taught\(^{14}\) viz.: The forbidden fat of a carcass [of a clean animal], in villages,\(^{15}\) needs the intention [to be used as food] and also needs to be made susceptible to uncleanness, [I say] the uncleanness that [the fat] conveys by reason of the kidney within it,\(^{16}\) is not decreed by the law of the Torah; for should you say it is so by the law of the Torah then we should have a case of foodstuffs being able to convey the graver uncleanness!\(^{17}\) — [No, not necessarily so]. For it now serves as wood.\(^{18}\)

R. Mattenah said: Behold they have spoken of a house roofed with stalks;\(^{19}\) the uncleanness thereof\(^{20}\) [I say] is not decreed by the law of the Torah; for should you say that it is so by the law of the Torah then we should have a case of stalks conveying the graver uncleanness! — [No, not necessarily so]. For they now serve as wood.

R. SIMEON DECLARES IT CLEAN. But whichever view you take [it is difficult]: If at death the limb is considered as already fallen off then it should be unclean as a limb severed from a living animal, and if at death it is not considered as already fallen off then it should be unclean as a limb severed from a carcass! — R. Simeon refers to the first clause [which reads]: LIMBS OR PIECES OF FLESH WHICH HANG LOOSE FROM THE [LIVING] ANIMAL ARE UNCLEAN IN RESPECT OF FOOD UNCLEANNESS WHILST THEY ARE IN THEIR PLACE, AND REQUIRE
TO BE RENDERED SUSCEPTIBLE TO UNCLEANNESS. But R. Simeon declares them clean.

R. Assi said in the name of R. Johanan. What is the reason for R. Simeon's view? Because Scripture says. All food therein which may be eaten;\(^{21}\) therefore, food which you may give others\(^{22}\) to eat is termed food, but food which you may not give

---

(1) The contact between the morsel and the limb was made only at the place where subsequently the severance is to be made, and that contact was not exposed. Cf. supra 72b.
(2) R. Meir would agree that where after severance from the limb the part has to be rendered susceptible to uncleanness by water or some other liquid, as is the case here (cf. the Mishnah supra 127a bot.), the covert contact with the uncleanness would not render unclean. Contrast the case stated supra 72b, where the foetus in the womb was already rendered susceptible to uncleanness by the slaughtering of its dam before the unclean protruding limb was cut off.
(3) I.e., the morsel before it was severed from the limb was moistened with water.
(4) Lit., 'together with its father'.
(5) The morsel when joined to the limb was regarded as a primary source of uncleanness to convey the graver uncleanness, and it is established that whatsoever will convey the graver uncleanness later on does not require to be rendered susceptible to uncleanness by water, v. supra 121a; how much more so this morsel which in the past did convey the graver uncleanness!
(6) I.e., it had no individual character but formed together with the bones and sinews an entire limb. It is only now on being severed from the limb that it assumes a new character, viz., that of a foodstuff, and like all foodstuffs it requires moistening in order to be rendered susceptible to uncleanness.
(7) Pes. 45b.
(8) I.e., it no longer counts as leaven and by using it on the Passover one does not transgress the prohibition of Ex. XII, 19, for it is no longer a foodstuff but converted into a seat. As a seat it would contract midras uncleanness (which is a grave uncleanness) if a man that has an issue sat upon it.
(9) Which would conflict with the principle laid down supra 121a, quoted supra p. 725, n. 5.
(10) When converted into a seat it has lost all the characteristics of a foodstuff and has become quite a new article, and as such can convey the graver uncleanness. Accordingly the uncleanness spoken of can well be by the law of the Torah.
(11) The words 'men and vessels that are in the same tent' are omitted in MS.M. Cf. Tosaf. supra 13b s.v. תNamedQuery.
(12) Since it has been used for idolatrous purposes it is forbidden for all purposes, consequently it has lost its character as a foodstuff, and it is on all fours with any article that has been worshipped.
(13) E.g., pieces of dough found in the cracks of the kneading vessels are regarded as part of the vessel and, if unclean, can render unclean men and vessels. Cf. Pes. 45a, 46a.
(14) The reference given in the margin is to 'Uk. III, 3, but it is not to be found in the Mishnah in the form quoted. V.
others to eat is not termed food.\(^1\) R. Zera said to R. Assi, perhaps the reason for R. Simeon's view there [in the first clause] is: since it is attached it is regarded as one with it.\(^2\) For we have learnt:\(^3\) If a branch of a fig-tree was broken off but it was still attached by the bark, [and unclean matter came into contact with it.] R. Judah declares it to be clean;\(^4\) but the Sages say, if it can live,\(^5\) it is clean; but if not, it is unclean. And when we asked you the reason for R. Judah's view you told us that being still attached, it is regarded as one with it! — We must say that if\(^6\) refers to the middle clause [which reads]: IF THE ANIMAL WAS SLAUGHTERED THEY HAVE, BY THE BLOOD [OF THE SLAUGHTERING], BECOME SUSCEPTIBLE TO UNCLEANNESS: SO R. MEIR. R. SIMEON SAYS, THEY HAVE NOT BECOME SUSCEPTIBLE TO UNCLEANNESS. Thereupon R. Johanan said: What is the reason for R. Simeon's view? Because Scripture says: All food therein which may be eaten'; therefore, food which you may give others to eat is termed food, but food which you may not give others to eat is not termed food. But perhaps the reason for R. Simeon's view there is that given by Rabbah\(^7\) or R. Johanan!\(^8\) — Indeed we must say, it\(^6\) refers to the last clause, but [R. Simeon differs] not with regard to the limbs\(^9\) but only with regard to the pieces of flesh. Thus, IF THE ANIMAL DIED THE FLESH REQUIRES TO BE RENDERED SUSCEPTIBLE TO UNCLEANNESS; . . . R. SIMEON DECLARES IT CLEAN. Thereupon R. Johanan said: What is the reason for R. Simeon's view?\(^10\) Because Scripture says: ‘All food therein which may be eaten’; therefore, food which you may give others to eat is termed food, but food which you may not give others to eat is not termed food.

MISHNAH. LIMBS OR PIECES OF FLESH WHICH HANG LOOSE FROM A MAN ARE CLEAN. IF THE MAN DIED. THE FLESH IS CLEAN;\(^11\) THE LIMB IS UNCLEAN AS A LIMB SEVERED FROM THE LIVING BODY BUT IS NOT UNCLEAN AS A LIMB SEVERED FROM A CORPSE:\(^12\) SO R. MEIR. R. SIMEON DECLARES IT CLEAN.

GEMARA. Whichever view R. Simeon takes [it is difficult]: If at death the limb is considered as already fallen off, then it should be unclean as a limb severed from the living body, and if at death it is not considered as already fallen off, then it should be unclean as a limb severed from a corpse! — R. Simeon refers to the law in general.\(^13\) For the first Tanna had stated: THE LIMB IS UNCLEAN AS A LIMB SEVERED FROM THE LIVING BODY BUT IS NOT UNCLEAN AS A LIMB SEVERED FROM A CORPSE, and this clearly shows that the law in general is that a limb\(^14\) severed from a corpse is unclean; thereupon R. Simeon said to him that in general a limb\(^14\) severed from a corpse is not unclean. For it has been taught: R. Eliezer said: I have heard that a limb severed from the living body is unclean. Said to him R. Joshua. [Do you mean only] from the living body and not from a corpse? Surely it is all the more so: for if a limb severed from the living body which is clean, is unclean, how much more is a limb severed from a corpse unclean! In like manner we find it stated in the Scroll of Fasts:15 ‘On the minor Passover no mourning is allowed’. Does this mean that on the major festival16 mourning is allowed? Surely it is all the more so [on the major festival]; similarly here it is all the more so [with regard to the limb severed from the corpse]! He replied: So have I heard.17

What difference is there between a limb severed from the living body and a limb severed from a corpse?18 — The difference is with regard to an olive's bulk of flesh or a barleycorn's bulk of bone cut away from the limb that was severed19 (from the living body).20 For we have learnt: If an olive's bulk of flesh was cut away from a limb that was severed from the living body. R. Eliezer declares it unclean; but R. Nehunia b. Hakaneh and R. Joshua declare it clean. If a barleycorn's bulk of bone broke away from a limb that was severed from the living body. R. Nehunia b. Hakaneh declares it unclean; but R. Eliezer and R. Joshua declare it clean.21 Now that you have come to this,22 you can also say that the difference between the first Tanna and R. Simeon is with regard to an olive's bulk of flesh or a barleycorn's bulk of bone.23

CHAPTER X

(1) And a limb severed from a living animal is forbidden even unto gentiles; this being one of the Seven Commandments given to the sons of Noah, cf. Sanh. 56a.

(2) Lit., ‘since it is attached, it is attached’. I.e., as long as it is joined to the living animal, however slender the attachment may be, it is still regarded as part of the living animal and as such cannot be unclean.

(3) ‘Uk. III; 8; v. supra p. 721.

(4) For as long as it is joined to the tree, no matter how slightly, it is regarded as part of the tree, and therefore cannot contract uncleanness since the tree is attached to the soil.

(5) I.e., if when fastened to the tree the branch can continue to produce fruit.

(6) Sc., R. Johanan's explanation of R. Simeon's view derived from the interpretation of the verse in Lev. XI, 34.

(7) V. supra 127b, where Rabbah suggested as the reason for R. Simeon's view the principle that the animal cannot serve as a handle to a limb. In some texts the reading is Raba, and his explanation of R. Simeon's view is that in no circumstances can a handle serve as the means of rendering the rest susceptible to uncleanness (cf. supra 128a).

(8) According to R. Johanan the reason for R. Simeon's view is that he holds that where by taking hold of the smaller part the greater part would not come away with it the former cannot be regarded as one with the latter (cf. supra 127b).

(9) The limb is certainly unclean, whether as a limb severed from the living animal or as a limb from a carcass.

(10) That the pieces of flesh even though moistened by water do not contract uncleanness.

(11) The flesh which was hanging loose is clean for it is regarded as having fallen off before death, and this Tanna holds the view that flesh (not a limb) severed from the living body is clean.

(12) For the distinction between these two v. Gemara infra.

(13) And he holds that a limb (entirely without flesh) severed from a corpse does not convey uncleanness!

(14) With no flesh at all upon it.

(15) To commemorate joyous events in the history of the Jewish people there was drawn up a list of days on which fasting, and in some cases also mourning, was forbidden. See further J.E. VIII, p. 427, and also S. Zeitlin, Megillat Taanit, 1922.

(16) The festival of Passover in the month of Nisan as opposed to the minor festival, or Second Passover, in the month of Iyar (cf. Num. IX, 11).

(17) That a limb from a corpse which contains neither an olive's bulk of flesh nor a barleycorn's bulk of bone is not unclean.

(18) Seeing that the first Tanna (sc. R. Meir) in our Mishnah makes such a distinction.

(19) If such was cut away from the limb severed from the living body it is clean, but if from the limb severed from the corpse it is unclean. This view of R. Meir accords entirely with the view of R. Joshua as stated in the Mishnah ‘Ed., and in the foregoing Baraita.

(20) These words in brackets are obviously to be deleted. V. Glos. of Strashun a.l.
Talmud - Mas. Chullin 130a

MISHNAH. THE LAW OF THE SHOULDER AND THE TWO CHEEKS AND THE MAW\(^1\) IS IN FORCE BOTH WITHIN THE HOLY LAND AND OUTSIDE IT, BOTH DURING THE EXISTENCE OF THE TEMPLE AND AFTER IT, IN RESPECT OF UNCONSECRATED ANIMALS BUT NOT CONSECRATED ANIMALS. FOR IT MIGHT HAVE BEEN ARGUED THUS, IF UNCONSECRATED ANIMALS, WHICH ARE NOT SUBJECT TO THE LAW OF THE BREAST AND THE THIGH,\(^2\) ARE SUBJECT TO THESE DUES, HOW MUCH MORE ARE CONSECRATED ANIMALS, WITH ARE SUBJECT TO THE LAW OF THE BREAST AND THE THIGH, SUBJECT ALSO TO THESE DUES! SCRIPTURE THEREFORE STATES, AND I HAVE GIVEN THEM UNTO AARON THE PRIEST AND UNTO HIS SONS AS A DUE FOR EVER;\(^3\) ONLY WHAT IS MENTIONED IN THIS PASSAGE SHALL BE HIS.\(^4\)

ALL CONSECRATED ANIMALS WHICH HAD CONTRACTED A PERMANENT PHYSICAL BLEMISH BEFORE THEY WERE CONSECRATED\(^5\) AND HAVE BEEN REDEEMED\(^6\) ARE SUBJECT TO THE LAW OF THE FIRSTLING\(^7\) AND TO THESE DUES, AND LIKE UNCONSECRATED ANIMALS THEY MAY BE SHORN AND MAY BE PUT TO WORK,\(^8\) AND AFTER THEY HAVE BEEN REDEEMED THEIR YOUNG\(^9\) AND THEIR MILK ARE PERMITTED,\(^10\) AND HE WHO SLAUGHTERED THEM\(^11\) OUTSIDE THE SANCTUARY IS NOT LIABLE, AND THEY\(^11\) DO NOT RENDER WHAT WAS SUBSTITUTED FOR THEM [HOLY].\(^12\) AND IF THEY DIED THEY MAY BE REDEEMED.\(^13\) THE FIRSTLING\(^14\) AND THE TITHE OF CATTLE\(^14\) ARE EXCEPTED. ALL [CONSECRATED ANIMALS] WHICH HAD CONTRACTED A PERMANENT BLEMISH AFTER THEY WERE CONSECRATED, OR IF THEY HAD CONTRACTED A PASSING BLEMISH BEFORE THEY WERE CONSECRATED AND SUBSEQUENTLY [AFTER CONSECRATION] CONTRACTED A PERMANENT BLEMISH, AND HAVE BEEN REDEEMED,\(^15\) ARE EXEMPT FROM THE LAW OF THE FIRSTLING, AND FROM THESE DUES, AND THEY MAY NOT, LIKE UNCONSECRATED ANIMALS, BE SHORN OR PUT TO WORK, AND [EVEN] AFTER THEY HAVE BEEN REDEEMED THEIR YOUNG\(^16\) AND THEIR MILK ARE FORBIDDEN, AND HE WHO SLAUGHTERED THEM OUTSIDE THE SANCTUARY IS LIABLE,\(^17\) AND THEY\(^18\) RENDER WHAT WAS SUBSTITUTED FOR THEM [HOLY], AND IF THEY DIED THEY MUST BE BURIED.\(^19\)

GEMARA. The reason\(^20\) is that Scripture stated them,\(^21\) but without it I should have argued that consecrated animals are subject to these dues; but surely the argument [of the Mishnah] can be refuted thus: That is so\(^22\) of unconsecrated animals since they are [also] subject to the law of the Firstling;\(^23\) — It\(^24\) might have been inferred from male unconsecrated animals.\(^25\) But [it can also be refuted thus]. That is so\(^22\) of males since they are [also] subject to the precept of the First of the Fleece;\(^26\) — It\(^24\) might then have been inferred from he-goats. But [it might be argued,] that is so of he-goats since they [also] enter the stall to be tithed!\(^27\) — It might then have been inferred from old\(^28\) [he-goats]. But [it might be argued,] that is so of old [he-goats] since they have in the past entered the stall to be tithed! — It might then have been inferred from a bought or orphaned animal.\(^29\) But [it might be argued,] that is so of bought or orphaned animals since their kind enters the stall to be tithed! — ‘Their kind’! you say; then it is the same with consecrated animals too, for their kind\(^30\) enters the stall to be tithed.\textsuperscript{31}

But can it not be inferred that unconsecrated animals are subject to the precept of the breast and the thigh from the following a fortiori argument? Thus: if consecrated animals, which are not subject to the priestly dues, are subject to the precept of the breast and the thigh, how much more are unconsecrated animals which are subject to the priestly dues subject also to the precept of the breast and the thigh! The verse therefore reads: And this shall be the priests’ due;\textsuperscript{32} ‘this’, yes, but nothing else. Now the reason is that Scripture stated ‘this’, but without it I should have said that unconsecrated animals are subject to the precept of the breast and the thigh. But is not the rite of ‘waving’ essential?\textsuperscript{33} And where can they be waved? Outside [the Sanctuary]? But it is written: Before the Lord.\textsuperscript{33}

---

(1) Deut. XVIII, 3: And this shall be the priests’ due from the people, from them that slaughter a slaughtering whether it be ox or sheep, that they shall give unto the priest the shoulder and the two cheeks and the maw.
(2) Lev. VII, 29ff. This law clearly refers to animal offerings only.
(3) Ibid. 34.
(4) Thus of consecrated animals the breast and the thigh only pertain to the priest but not the shoulder etc.
(5) Such animals can only be regarded as consecrated for their value (םל السلط‎) for they are unfit for sacrifice by reason of their blemish.
(6) They are now like ordinary unconsecrated animals in every respect.
(7) And if they now bear a male firstling, even though the animal became pregnant before redemption, it belongs to the priest; cf. Num. XVIII, 15-28.
(8) But this is not so with consecrated animals which contracted a permanent blemish after consecration and have been redeemed. To such the provisions of Deut. XII, 15 apply; thus they are regarded as the gazelle and the hart and are exempt from the law of firstling and from the priestly dues; they may be slaughtered and eaten but may not be put to any labour; and their products, as wool, milk and young, are forbidden.
(9) Even though the animal became pregnant before it was redeemed and brought forth its young after redemption; cf. Bek. 14a.
(10) V. p. 732, n. 8.
(11) Even before they were redeemed.
(12) For although the expression, ‘A good for a bad or a bad for a good’, in connection with the law of Substitution (Lev. XXVII, 10) has been interpreted to mean an unblemished for a blemished animal, this applies only to a consecrated animal that later suffered a blemish, but not to a blemished animal that was later consecrated; cf. Bek. 14b.
(13) Even though they are fit now only for dogs’ food; for the rule (Bek. 15a), ‘One must not redeem consecrated animals in order to feed dogs therewith’, does not apply to these animals, since they were never regarded as consecrated themselves (םל السلط‎), but only as consecrated for their value (םל السلط‎). Moreover this Tanna is of the opinion that whatsoever is consecrated for value only need not be made to stand when being redeemed, as is the case with animal offerings when being redeemed on account of a blemish (v. Lev. XXVII, 11,12).
(14) These are holy in all circumstances; for the male firstling is still holy even though born blemished; likewise the tenth beast is designated holy, whether it is blemished or not.
(15) These were themselves consecrated for sacrifice and the provisions of Deut. XII, 15 apply; v. supra p. 732, n. 8.
(16) It is assumed that the animal became pregnant before it was redeemed and brought forth its young after redemption; v. Bek. 14a.
(17) Even though because of their blemish they are not fit for sacrifice in the Sanctuary. In Bek. 16a the unfitness is explained as arising out of a slight blemish, e.g., a thin filmy veil over the eye, and the view adopted is that of R. Akiba who holds that a consecrated animal with such a blemish if already offered upon the altar must not be taken down.
(18) Before they were redeemed.
(19) V. supra p. 733, n. 5. For one must not redeem consecrated animals in order to feed dogs therewith; alternatively because they cannot stand while being redeemed.
(20) Why consecrated animals are not subject to the priestly dues of the shoulder and the two cheeks and the maw.
(22) Viz., that they are subject to the priestly dues.
Whereas consecrated animals are not subject to the law of the Firstling, consequently they should neither be subject to the priestly dues.

That consecrated animals, were it not for the express verse which excludes them, should also be subject to the priestly dues.

These, being males, are not subject to the law of the Firstling, and yet are subject to the priestly dues; similarly consecrated animals although not subject to the law of the Firstling should nevertheless be subject to the priestly dues.

V. Deut. XVIII, 4. This law, however, does not apply to he-goats, nor to consecrated animals. Likewise the priestly dues should not apply to consecrated animals.

I.e., are subject to the law of cattle tithe (cf. Lev. XXVII, 32); consecrated animals, however, are exempt from the cattle tithe.

Which have passed through the gate for tithing. Such an animal is no more subject to the law of cattle tithe, yet is subject to the priestly dues; I would then say the same of consecrated animals.

These are exempt from the cattle tithe, v. Bek. 55b, 57a. By ‘orphaned’ is meant a beast whose dam died whilst bearing it. The argument in the latter part of the prec. n. applies here too.

I.e., unconsecrated animals.

Hence the argument from bought and orphaned animals would have been conclusive to include consecrated animals within the law of the priestly dues; accordingly the verse quoted in the Mishnah is necessary to exclude them.

Deut. XVIII, 3. No other dues but those mentioned in this verse are to be exacted from unconsecrated animals.

Lev. VII, 30.

Talmud - Mas. Chullin 130b

Inside [the Sanctuary]? Then he is bringing what is unconsecrated into the Temple court. It is therefore inapplicable; wherefore then do I require [the word] ‘this’? — For R. Hisda’s teaching. For R. Hisda said: If a man destroyed or consumed the priestly dues [before they were given to the priest] he is not liable to make restitution.

[To turn to] the main text: ‘R. Hisda said: If a man destroyed or consumed the priestly dues [before they were given to the priest] he is not liable to make restitution’. For what reason? If you wish I can say, because it is written [the word] this; or if you prefer I can say, because it is property which has no definite claimant.

An objection was raised: [The verse,] And this shall be the priests’ due [mishpat], teaches that the dues are a matter of right. What is the effect of this? Is it not that they can be claimed in court? — No, it is that they are to be distributed by the [advice of the] court. And this is in agreement with R. Samuel b. Nahmani; for R. Samuel b. Nahmani said in the name of R. Jonathan: Whence do we know that one should not give any dues to a priest an ‘am ha-arez? From the verse: Moreover he commanded the people that dwelt in Jerusalem to give the portion of the priests and the Levites, that they might hold fast to the law of the Lord, whosoever holds fast to the law of the Lord has a portion, and whosoever does not hold fast to the law of the Lord has no portion.

Come and hear: R. Judah b. Bathrya says: The expression ‘due’, [mishpat], teaches that the dues are a matter of right. I might say that the breast and the thigh are also a matter of right, the text therefore states: And this. Now what is the effect of this rule? Is it that they are to be distributed by [the advice of] the court? Then surely the breast and thigh are also to be distributed by the [advice of the] court. It must therefore mean that they can be claimed in court! — We are dealing here with the case where they had come into [the priest’s] possession. But if they had come into his possession already then this is obvious! They came into his possession unseparated, and this Tanna is of the opinion that priestly dues although not separated [from the bulk] are regarded as virtually separated.

Come and hear: If a householder was travelling from place to place and is obliged to take the gleanings, the forgotten sheaf, or the corners of the field, he may take them, and when he returns to his house he must make restitution; so R. Eliezer. — R. Hisda said: They taught this Only as a rule of conduct for the pious. Said Raba: But the Tanna stated ‘he must make restitution’, how then can one say that this was stated here only as a rule of conduct for the pious? Moreover, can any objection be raised from the statement of R. Eliezer? Indeed it was from the following clause [that the objection was raised] viz., But the Sages say: He was a poor man at that time. Now this is so only because he was a poor man, but had he been a rich man he would have had to make restitution; but why? Is this not a case of a man destroying or consuming the priestly dues? Whereupon R. Hisda answered: They taught this only as a rule of conduct for the pious.

Come and hear: Whence do we know that if an owner consumed his produce without having separated the tithes, or if a Levite consumed his tithe without having separated the priestly tithe therefrom, he is exempt from making restitution? Because Scripture says: And they shall not profane the holy things of the children of Israel, which they set apart unto the Lord; thou hast a right to them only after they have been set apart. It follows, however, that after they have been set apart, if a man consumed them he would be liable to make restitution; but why? Is this not a case of a man destroying or consuming the priestly gifts? — Here too [we must suppose that]

(1) And this is forbidden Biblically, v. Tosaf s.v. נכון.
(2) To exclude unconsecrated animals from the precept of the breast and the thigh seeing that the indispensability of the rite of ‘waving’ makes it inapplicable to them.
(3) The rule is derived from the word ‘this’ (v. infra), which implies that these portions if in existence must be given to the priest, but if destroyed there is no obligation to compensate the priest for them.
(4) For to every priest that claims them the owner could say that he proposed to give them to another priest.
(5) Deut. XVIII, 3. Heb. יושב. In this verse it is translated as ‘due’, but generally it means ‘judgment, right’. The use of this word in connection with these portions signifies that they are regarded as a legal right.
(6) Lit., ‘to collect them by (order of) the judges’. I.e., a priest can claim them in court from an owner who withholds them; thus conflicting with R. Hisda who regards these dues as property without any claimants.
(7) I.e., the court guides the owner as to the distribution of his dues, that he should not give them to the unworthy.
(8) V. Gloss. In general the ignorant and irreligious people.
(9) II Chron. XXXI, 4.
(10) For also these dues should not be given to an unworthy priest.
(11) I.e., a priest can claim the dues of the shoulder, the two cheeks and the maw from an owner; contra R. Hisda. This legal right was expressly excluded from the law of the breast and the thigh as any claim to them would hardly be contested, for, since they formed part of the atonement of the sacrifice, the owner would certainly not withhold them.
(12) The claim in connection with the dues of the shoulder etc. referred to arises when they were stolen from the possession of the priest to whom they had already been given.
(13) That they can be claimed and recovered in court.
(14) The entire animal came into the possession of the priest and, as the dues have no particular owner, this priest acquired the property in them even though they had not yet been separated from the animal.
(15) This, however, cannot be said with regard to the dues of the breast and thigh, for these are not free to all priests but are restricted to that division of priests on duty in the Temple at the time of the sacrifice.
(16) Lev. XIX, 9.
(17) Deut. XXIV, 19.
(18) This was due in the third and sixth years of the Sabbatical cycle in lieu of the Second Tithe, and was to be distributed among the poor. Deut. XIV, 28, 29.
(19) He must pay for the amount he had consumed to the first poor man who claims it. This clearly conflicts with R. Hisda’s teaching.
(20) Pe’ah V, 4.
(21) Strictly he is not bound to make any restitution, and his doing so is only in the nature of a pious and charitable act.
(22) Clearly a legal ruling!
Surely not; for R. Hisda need not find himself in agreement with R. Eliezer seeing that R. Eliezer's view is disputed by the Sages. But see Tosaf. s.v. נון at end.

And therefore he need not make restitution.

In which case R. Hisda expressly said that he need not make restitution for none could claim it from him.

Lit., 'in a state of tebel' (mixture).

Even though he may be liable to death at the hands of Heaven for eating it, cf. Sanh. 83a.

Come and hear: If the king's officers seized the corn in a man's granary, if it was on account of a debt due from him he must give tithe for it, but if it was by reason of confiscation he is under no obligation to give tithe for it! — There the case is different, because they confer some advantage on him.

Come and hear: If a man said: 'Sell me the entrails of a cow', and among them were the priestly dues, he [the purchaser] must give them to a priest, and [the seller] need not allow any reduction in the purchase price on that account. But if he bought them from him by weight, he must give them to a priest and [the seller] must allow a reduction in the price on that account. But why? Is it not like the case of a man destroying or consuming the priestly dues? — There it is different, because they are actually in existence.

Come and hear: The following nine things are the property of the priest: Terumah, the terumah of the tithe, the dough-offering, the first of the fleece, the dues, the [terumah of the tithe of] dem'ai, the firstfruits, the principal and the added fifth. In what respect [are they considered the property of the priest]? Surely in that they can be claimed in court! — No, but as we have learnt: Why did they say that [the firstfruits] are the property of the priest? Because with them he may buy slaves, immovable property and unclean cattle, and a creditor can take them in payment of his debt, or a woman in payment of her kethubah, and [he may also buy with them] a scroll of the Law.

There was once a Levite who used to snatch the priestly dues. When this was reported to Rab, he said: Is it not enough for him that We do not take the dues from his own [slaughtering], but he must also snatch them? But what was Rab's view? If they [Levites] are included within the term 'the people' we should exact the dues from them too; and if they are not included within the term 'the people' then the Divine Law has exempted them? — Rab was in doubt whether they are included within the term 'the people' or not.

R. Papa was once sitting and reciting the above statement, whereupon R. Idi b. Abin raised this objection against R. Papa. [It was taught:] The four gifts [assigned by the Torah] to the poor in a vineyard, namely the fallen grapes, the small clusters, the forgotten cluster, and the corner [of the vineyard], and the three in a cornfield, namely the gleanings, the forgotten sheaf, and the corners of the field, and the two in the fruit of the tree, namely the forgotten fruits and the corner of the tree — with regard of these, the owners have not the benefit of disposal, and even from the poorest in Israel they are exacted. With regard to the Poorman's Tithe which is distributed in the house, the owner has the benefit of disposal, and it is exacted even from the poorest in Israel. The other priestly dues, such as the shoulder and the two cheeks and the maw, are not exacted from one priest in favour of another priest nor from one Levite in favour of another Levite. 'The four gifts to the poor in the vineyard, namely the fallen grapes, the small clusters, the forgotten cluster, and the corner' — for it is written: And thou shalt not glean the small clusters of thy vineyard, neither shalt thou gather the fallen fruit of thy vineyard. And it is written: When thou gatherest the grapes of thy vineyard thou shalt not glean the small clusters after thee; and R. Levi said: ‘After thee’ implies that which is forgotten. As to the corner (of the vineyard) this is inferred by the use of the expression ‘after thee’ both here [with regard to a vineyard] and also with regard to the olive-tree; for it is written: When thou beatest thine olive-tree thou shalt not go over the boughs after thee, and a Tanna of the School of R. Ishmael expressed it thus: Thou shalt not cut off the crown thereof. ‘The three in the cornfield, namely the gleanings.

(1) The whole produce having been entrusted to the priest's keeping, the priest forthwith acquired the property in the tithes, and whosoever deprives him of them must certainly make restitution.
(2) From other produce, just as when a man sells produce he must also give the tithe for it. This, however, shows that the tithe is claimable and that the obligation is enforced by the court; it cannot mean that the obligation is merely a religious one for then it would not be insisted upon that he give the tithe for it seeing that he has neither the produce nor its value.
(3) V. Git. (Sonc. ed.) p. 190, n. 2.
(4) The obligation is therefore a religious one, yet he must give the tithe for it because he has this benefit that his debt has been cleared. V. supra p. 738, n. 9; and Tosaf. s.v. יסף.
(5) Sc., the maw.
(6) V. infra 132a. In the first case the transaction implicitly excluded the maw for it is common knowledge that the maw belongs to the priest, hence it was not included in the sale; in the second case, however, the maw was included in the weight sold, and since it was not the seller's to sell the price must be reduced to that extent.
(7) Why should the purchaser have to give the dues to the priest?
(8) And the priest may use them for any purpose whatsoever. This is only part of the list of twenty-four endowments bestowed upon the priests; v. infra 133b, and B.K. 110b. In point of fact there are fifteen priestly gifts which are the absolute property of the priest to be used for any purpose; but Rashi suggests that these fifteen are comprehended within the nine mentioned in the text; v. Rash s.v. הבנין. R. Han. reads ‘seven’, in the text; v. Tosaf. s.v. בנה.
(9) Cf. Num. XVIII, 12; v. Glos.
(10) To be given by the Levites; ibid. 26.
(11) Ibid. XV, 18-21.
(12) Deut. XVIII, 4.
(13) Ibid. 3. Sc., the shoulder and the two cheeks and the maw.
(14) The produce bought from an ‘am ha-arez was regarded as dem'ai, doubtful, for he could not be trusted as to the separation of the tithes. They were trusted, however, with regard to the separation of the terumah, for this had a higher degree of sanctity. Therefore the purchaser who scrupulously observes the law of tithing must separate from dem'ai (a) ‘the terumah of the tithe’, i.e., the portion due to the priest out of the First Tithe, and (b) the Second Tithe.
(15) Ex. XXIII, 19; and Deut. XXVI, 1ff.
(16) The restitution, (consisting of the principal and an additional fifth) that is to be made for robbery committed upon a proselyte who died without issue belongs to the priest. Cf. Num. V, 7, 8.
(17) Thus conflicting with R. Hisda's view.
(18) Bik. III, 12.
(19) Generally meaning the statutory sum that the husband undertakes to pay to his wife in the event of his death or of his divorcing her. V. Intro. to Kethuboth, Sonc. ed., p. xi.
(20) In the Mishnah Bik., the text reads ‘as (the creditors may also do with) a scroll of the Law’. V. Rashi here s.v. תבנין.
(21) From children who were carrying them to the priest's home.
(22) I.e., when he slaughters his own animal we do not compel him to give the dues to a priest. The tone of Rab's remark implies that this was a concession to them by the Rabbis.
(23) Deut. XVIII, 3: And this shall be the priests' due from the people.
(24) What then did Rah mean by suggesting that they were favoured in that it was not insisted upon that they give the dues? V. supra n. 6, end.
(25) And therefore no priest could claim the dues from Levites without bringing evidence to prove they latter are subject to this law.
(26) That Rab was in doubt whether Levites were subject to this law or not.
(27) To give them to whomsoever he wishes, but they are to be left on the field free to all the poor, and the first poor person that collects them acquires them.
(28) If he is in possession of a field he is bound to leave these gifts for the poor.
(29) Tosef. Pe'ah II. The Gemara proceeds first to interpret this Baraitha, proving the Biblical source for each of these gifts to the poor, and later on reverts to the objection raised by R. Idi against R. Papa.
(30) Lev. XIX, 10: יִתְהַלְכָּהוּ. Thou shalt not remove the בּוֹרָם. i.e., the small clusters פִּקְדָן, i.e., single grapes that fall off during ‘the grape gathering’
(31) Deut. XXIV, 21.
(32) For the law of the forgotten sheaf or cluster applies only to what has been left ‘after’ i.e., behind one, but not to what is still in front of one; cf. Pe'ah VI, 4, and B.M. 12a
(33) Deut. XXIV 20.
(34) I.e., one must not remove the last berries from the extremities or corners of the tree. By an inference made from the common expression ‘after thee’, the law of the ‘corners stated in connection with the olive-tree applies also to a vineyard.

Talmud - Mas. Chullin 131b

the forgotten sheaf, and the corners of the field’ — for it is written: And when ye reap the harvest of your land, thou shalt not wholly reap the corner of thy field; neither shalt thou gather the gleaning of thy harvest; and it is written: When thou reapest thy harvest in thy field, and hast forgot a sheaf in the field, thou shalt not go back to fetch it. ‘The two in the fruit of the tree, namely the forgotten fruits and the corner [of the tree]’ — for it is written: When thou beatest thine olive-tree thou shalt not go over the boughs after thee, and a Tanna of the School of R. Ishmael expressed it thus: Thou shalt not cut off the crown thereof; and the expression ‘after thee’ refers to the forgotten fruits. ‘With regard to all of these the owners have not the benefit of disposal’ — because the term ‘leaving’ is used in connection with them. ‘And even from the poorest in Israel they are exacted’ — for it is written: Neither shalt thou gather the gleaning of thy harvest; thou shalt leave them for the poor and the stranger: this is an admonition to a poor man [who himself owns a field] in regard to his own [gleanings]. ‘With regard to the poorman's Tithe which is distributed in the house, the owner has the benefit of disposal’ — because the term ‘giving’ is used in connection with it. ‘And it is exacted even from the poorest in Israel’ — for R. Ila'a said: An inference is to be made by means of the common expression ‘for the stranger’ from the other [dues to the poor]: ‘And even from the other dues there is an admonition to a poor man in regard to his own, so here [with regard to the Poorman's Tithe] there is an admonition to a poor man in regard to his own. ‘The other priestly dues, such as the shoulder, the two cheeks and the maw, are not exacted from one priest in favour of another priest, nor from one Levite in favour of another Levite’ — it follows, however, that they may be exacted from a Levite in favour of a priest; apparently because they are included within the term ‘the people’! [It only stated,] ‘Such as the shoulder’, but not actually the shoulder; what is really meant is the First Tithe. But is not the First Tithe due to the Levite? — The view expressed here is that of R. Eleazar b. ‘Azariah; for it has been taught: Terumah belongs to the priest, the First Tithe to the Levite; so R. Akiba. R. Eleazar b. ‘Azariah says. It belongs to the priest also. But R. Eleazar
b. ‘Azariah said: ‘to the priest also’! Did he say, to the priest and not to the Levite? — Yes, after Ezra had penalized them. Perhaps Ezra had penalized them that one should not give it [the First Tithe] to them, but did he intend that it should be taken away from them? — We must therefore say, such as the shoulder’, but not actually the shoulder; what is really meant is the First Tithe, and this refers [to the state of

 Come and hear: This is the general rule: Whatsoever is sacred, as terumah, the terumah of the Tithe, and the Dough-offering, is exacted from their hands, and whatsoever is not sacred, as the shoulder, the two cheeks and the maw, is not exacted from them! — [It states,] ‘Such as the shoulder’ but not actually the shoulder; what is meant is the First Tithe, and this refers [to the state of Come and hear: If a man slaughtered an animal for a priest or for a gentile, he is exempt from the dues. If it follows, does it not, that for a Levite or an Israelite he is liable? — Say not, ‘it follows that for a Levite or an Israelite he is liable’, but rather, it follows that for an Israelite he is liable. But for a Levite [you say] he is exempt, in that case the Mishnah should have taught thus: If a man slaughtered an animal for a Levite or a gentile he is exempt from the dues. Moreover it has been taught [in a Baraitha]: If a man slaughtered an animal for a priest or a gentile, he is exempt from the dues, but if he slaughtered for a Levite or an Israelite, he is liable. Surely this is a refutation of Rab’s view! — Rab can reply that it is a matter of dispute between Tannaim. For it has been taught: [Scripture says,] And he shall make atonement for the most holy place: this means [for transgression of the laws of uncleanness occurring in] the Holy of Holies; and the tent of meeting: this means in the Holy place; and the altar: this is to be taken in its usual sense; he shall make atonement: this means [for transgression of the laws of uncleanness occurring in] the various Temple courts; and for the priests: this is to be taken in its usual sense; and for all the people of the assembly: this means the Israelites; he shall make atonement: this means the Levites. And another [Baraitha] taught: He shall make atonement: this means [heathen] slaves. Surely then the Tannaim differ in this: one holds that they [the Levites] are included Under the term ‘the people’, and the other holds that they are not included Under ‘the people’. And Rab? If he agrees with the one Tanna he should have ruled accordingly, and if he agrees with the other Tanna he should have ruled accordingly? — Rab was in doubt whether to accept the ruling of the one Tanna or of the other.

Meremar stated in a discourse: The law is in accordance with Rab's view, and the law is also in accordance with R. Hisda's view.

‘Ulla used to give the priestly dues to the daughter of a priest. Raba raised the following objection to ‘Ulla. We have learnt: The meal-offering of a priest's daughter is eaten, but the meal-offering of a priest may not be eaten. Now if you say that ‘priest’ includes a priest's daughter too, is it not written: And every meal-offering of the priest shall be wholly made to smoke; it shall not be eaten? — He replied: Master,

(1) Lev. XXIII, 22.
(2) Deut. XXIV, 19.
(3) Ibid. 20. V. supra p. 741, n. 8.
(4) In some contexts the expression used is ‘thou shalt leave them for the poor’, e.g., Lev. XIX, 10, XXIII, 22; and in others the expression used is ‘it shall be for the stranger’, e.g., Deut. XXIV, 19, 20, 21. It is clear therefore that the poor man has a claim to them whilst they are in the field, hence there is no right for the owner of the field to collect them, bring them into his house and distribute them according to his discretion among the poor.
(5) In the Hebrew of the verse: Lev. XXIII, 22, ‘for the poor’ follows immediately upon the command to leave the gleanings, and the interpretation is, that it is for the poor, too’ to leave the gleanings.
(6) Cf. Deut. XXVI, 22.
(7) Cf. Lev. XXIII, 22, and Deut. ibid.
(8) This is in conflict with Rab who was in doubt about it.
(9) The expression ‘such as the shoulder’ was stated as an example of the priestly dues, but what was specially meant was the First Tithe (v. Num. XVIII, 21) which according to this teaching, could be taken away from the Levite in favour of the priest.
(10) Yeb. 86a; Keth. 26a; B.B. 81b.
(11) For although the Torah expressly granted the First Tithe to the Levites, the priests were not thereby excluded, for in twenty-four instances do we find priests described as Levites, e.g., Ezek. XLIV, 15.
(12) Because the Levites did not go up with him in the return to Judea from the Babylonian exile, Ezra deprived them of the tithe; v. Yeb. 86b. There is no express reference to this in the Books of Ezra or Nehemiah; v. Rashi s.v. רָבָּה. It has been suggested that Mal. III, 10: Bring ye the whole tithe into the Temple treasury, refers to this new institution of Ezra; for according to Jewish tradition, Malachi is identified with Ezra (v. Meg. 15a). Cf. Tosaf. Yeb. 86b, s.v. הבקע.

(13) It surely was not intended that the Levites were bound to give the First Tithe of their own produce to the priests.

(14) This law (Deut. XVIII, 4) certainly applies to Levites too’ and the due is exacted from the Levite in favour of the priest.

(15) I.e., forbidden to non-priests.

(16) From the Levites in favour of the priests.

(17) This clearly shows that the Levites are not under any obligation to give the shoulder etc. to the priests, obviously because they are not included under the term ‘the people’. Why then was Rab in doubt about it?

(18) The suggestion therefore is that although the Levites are not to be given the First Tithe any more, it is not to be exacted from their own produce in favour of the priest. With regard to the shoulder, however, the matter is still in doubt.

(19) Although the claim for these dues is usually made upon the slaughterer (v. infra 132b), in this case the slaughterer is exempt since the animal belonged to the priest or to the gentile. V. infra 132a.

(20) And needless to say that it is so where the animal belonged to a priest.

(21) Yoma 61a; Sheb. 23b; Men. 92a.

(22) Lev. XVI, 33. The bullock and the goat prescribed in the sacrificial service of the Day of Atonement make atonement for all transgressions of the rules of uncleanness occurring in the several parts of the Temple precincts, e.g., if any person entered the Temple court in a state of levitical uncleanness; and the atonement is extended to include every section of the community. Cf. Sheb. 13b.

(23) I.e., if a priest whilst serving at the altar became unclean and stayed there for a period co-extensive with the time of one prostration, cf. Sheb. 16a.

(24) V. p. 744, n. 6.

(25) Who are also in need of atonement.

(26) Sc., the Tanna of the latter Baraitha. It is therefore unnecessary to have a special reference in the verse to include Levites, consequently the reference serves to include heathen slaves.

(27) Sc., the Tanna of the first Baraitha; it was therefore necessary to include Levites expressly.

(28) How is it that he was in doubt?

(29) That we do not exact the priestly dues from Levites.

(30) That whosoever destroys or consumes the priestly dues, before they ever came into the hand of the priest, is exempt from making restitution; v. supra 130b.

(31) Even though she is married to an Israelite; for the precept And they shall give unto the priest (Deut. XVIII, 3) includes every one of priestly stock, even females.

(32) Sot. 23a.

(33) The residue of her meal-offering, and so also of that of an Israelite, was eaten by the priests after that the handful, i.e., the memorial part thereof, had been burnt upon the altar.

(34) Lev. VI, 16.

Talmud - Mas. Chullin 132a

I borrow your own argument,¹ for in that passage are expressly mentioned Aaron and his sons.² The school of R. Ishmael taught: unto the priest,³ but not unto the priest's daughter, for we may infer what is not explicitly stated from what is explicitly stated.⁴

The school of R. Eliezer b. Jacob taught: unto the priest,³ and even unto the priest's daughter, for we have here a limitation following a limitation,⁵ and the purpose of a double limitation is to extend the law.

R. Kahana used to eat [the priestly dues] on account of his wife.⁶ R. Papa used to eat them on account of his wife. R. Yemar used to eat them on account of his wife. R. Idi b. Abin used to eat them on account of his wife.

Rabina said: Meremar told me that the law was in accordance with Rab's view;⁷ that the law was in accordance with R. Hisda's view;⁷ that the law was in accordance with ‘Ulla's view;⁸ and that the law was in accordance with the view of R. Adda b. Ahaba that if a Levite's daughter gave birth to a firstborn son the child is exempt from the payment of the five sela's.\(^9\)

Our Rabbis taught:\(^{10}\) The law of the shoulder, the two cheeks and the maw applies to a hybrid and to a koy.\(^{11}\) R. Eliezer says, A hybrid, the offspring of a he-goat and a ewe, is subject to these dues; the offspring of a he-goat and a hind\(^{12}\) is exempt from these dues. Let us consider the case. It has been established\(^{13}\) that with regard to the law of covering up the blood and also with regard to the priestly dues the dispute (between R. Eliezer and the Rabbis as to the koy) can arise only in the case where a hart covered a she-goat; for both R. Eliezer and the Rabbis are undecided whether or not to take into consideration the seed of the male parent, but they differ as to whether the term ‘sheep’ includes even that which is a sheep in part only: one\(^{14}\) maintains that the term ‘sheep’ includes even that which is a sheep in part only, the other\(^{15}\) maintains that we do not say that the term ‘sheep’ includes that which is a sheep in part only. Now R. Eliezer's view that [the offspring of a he-goat and a hind] is exempt from dues is clear, for he holds that the term ‘sheep’ does not include even that which is a sheep in part only.\(^{16}\) According to the Rabbis however [it is difficult]; for granting that they hold the view that the term ‘sheep’ includes even that which is a sheep in part only, he [the priest] should only be entitled to half the dues,\(^{17}\) for as to the other half the owner could say to him, ‘Bring proof that we do not take into consideration the seed of the male parent and then you can have it’! — R. Huna b. Hyya answered that by ‘subject’ they meant subject to half the dues.\(^{18}\)

R. Zera raised an objection. We have learnt: A koy is in some ways similar to cattle, and in some ways similar to wild animals, and in some ways it is similar to wild animals and to cattle. Thus, its fat is forbidden like the fat of cattle; its blood must be covered up like the blood of wild animals. ‘In some ways it is similar to cattle and to wild animals’, for the blood and the sciatic nerve thereof are forbidden like [the blood and the sciatic nerve of] cattle and wild animals. It is subject to the law of the shoulder, the two cheeks and the maw, like cattle; R. Eliezer declares it exempt [from these dues].\(^{19}\) Now if it were so,\(^{20}\) it should state that it is subject to half the dues only! — Since it states the rule with regard to its fat and its blood, in which case it could not have stated half, it therefore does not state half [even with regard to the dues].\(^{21}\)

When Rabin came [from Palestine] he reported in the name of R. Johanan that a koy, according to the Rabbis, is subject to the whole of the dues. For it was taught: [Scripture could have stated] ‘ox’, wherefore does it state, whether it be ox?\(^{22}\) To include the hybrid. [Likewise it could have stated] ‘sheep’, wherefore does it state, whether it be sheep?\(^{22}\) To include the koy. According to R. Eliezer what is the purpose of ‘whether’?\(^{22}\) — It is necessary in order to\(^{19}\) indicate disjunction.\(^{23}\) Then whence do the Rabbis derive the principle of disjunction? — From the verse: From them that slaughter a slaughtering.\(^{24}\) And to what purpose does R. Eliezer put this verse: From them that slaughter a slaughtering? — He requires it for Raba's teaching, for Raba said: The claim is made against the slaughterer.\(^{25}\)

Mishnah. If a firstling got mixed up with a hundred other animals and a hundred [and one] persons slaughtered them all,\(^{26}\) they are all exempt from the dues.\(^{27}\) If one person slaughtered them all,\(^{28}\) only one animal is exempt from the dues. If a man slaughtered an animal for a priest or a gentile,\(^{29}\) he is exempt from the dues; if he had a share [in the animal] with them, he must indicate this by some sign.\(^{30}\) If he said, ‘Except the dues’, he is exempt from giving the dues.\(^{32}\) If a man said, sell me the entrails of a cow’, and among them were the priestly dues, he must give them to a priest and [the seller] need not allow any reduction in the purchase price on that account. But if he bought them from him by weight, he must give them to a priest, and [the seller] must allow a reduction in the price on that account.\(^{33}\)
GEMARA. Why is this so?— The priest can surely approach him with a double claim saying [of each animal]. ‘If it is the firstling, it is all mine, and if it is not the firstling, then give me my dues!’

(1) Lit., ‘from your burden’; i.e., the other words in the passage quoted by you confute you.

(2) Ibid. 13. But elsewhere, wherever ‘priest’ alone is mentioned, it includes even the priest's daughter, as in the case of the priestly dues.

(3) Deut. XVIII, 3, in reference to the priestly dues.

(4) With regard to the meal-offering of priests the Torah expressly states ‘Aaron and his sons’, in order to exclude the priest's daughters, and this serves as a guiding principle suggesting that whenever Scripture mentions ‘priest’ the priest's daughter is excluded.

(5) In the passage dealing with the priestly dues there occur the words ‘priests’ and ‘priest’, and inasmuch as each serves as a limitation to exclude the priest's daughter, the result is that the successive limitations actually amplify the scope of the law and include the priest's daughter.

(6) Who was the daughter of a priest. The meaning is that the giving of the priestly dues to the husband of a priest's daughter is a proper fulfilment of the obligation (R. Nissim).

(7) V. supra p. 745.

(8) That one may give the priestly dues to the daughter of a priest.

(9) The sum prescribed for the redemption of the firstborn son; cf. Num. XVIII, 25, 26. It is established law (cf. Bek. 13a) that where either one of the parents is of priestly stock or where the father is a Levite, the firstborn son is exempt from redemption. R. Adda b. Ahaba here extends the rule of exemption even where the mother is the daughter of a Levite. V. Bek. 47a.

(10) V. supra p. 443.

(11) A permitted animal, about which the Rabbis were undecided whether it was to be classed in the category of cattle or of wild beasts.

(12) For ‘the offspring of a he-goat and a hind’ Rashal substitutes ‘the koy’.

(13) V. supra 80a, pp. 444-5 and notes thereon.

(14) The Sages.

(15) R. Eliezer.

(16) And as this offspring is at most only a part sheep by reason of its sire it is exempt entirely from dues.

(17) Even in the case of the offspring of a hart and a she-goat.

(18) Strictly the Rabbis did not use the expression ‘subject’ at all; they only ruled that the law of the shoulder etc. applied to a koy, and it is now suggested that by ‘applied’ they meant only as to half the dues.

(19) Bik. II, 8.

(20) That according to the Rabbis the koy is only subject to half the dues.

(21) But of course it is only subject to half the dues.

(22) Deut. XVIII, 3. The particle (im) is unnecessarily stated before ox and sheep.

(23) That these portions are due when one slaughters either an ox or a sheep; without the particles ‘im it might have been said that these portions are due only when one slaughters an ox and a sheep.

(24) Ibid. ‘slaughtering’ is in the singular; so that the slaughtering of one animal imposes the obligation of the dues.

(25) The priest when claiming his dues makes his claim upon the slaughterer, although the latter may have slaughtered animals belonging to other people.

(26) I.e., every animal belonged to a different person, or better, each person slaughtered his own animal.

(27) For each owner-slaughterer can rebut the priest's claim by saying that what he had slaughtered was the firstling which is exempt from priestly dues.

(28) I.e., the animals all belonged to one person.

(29) I.e., the animal belonged to a priest or a gentile.

(30) That all may know that he shares the animal with the priest or the gentile and on that account he is exempt from giving the dues.

(31) A priest or a gentile when selling the animal to an Israelite.
The purchaser is exempt from giving the dues for they had not become his property at all.

That, in the first clause, all the animals are exempt from the dues because of the firstling that is mixed up with them.

Lit., ‘from two sides’.

— R. Oshaia said: This [firstling] had already been received by the priest but when it suffered a blemish he sold it to an Israelite.

IF A MAN SLAUGHTERED AN ANIMAL FOR A PRIEST OR A GENTILE HE IS EXEMPT FROM THE DUES. Why does not the Mishnah teach simply. ‘Priests and gentiles are exempt from giving the dues’? — Raba said: This proves that the claim is made against the slaughterer.

Raba stated in his discourse, Scripture says: From the people, but not from the priests; but when it further says. From them that slaughter a slaughtering, I say, this includes even a slaughterer who is a priest.

R. Tabla’s host was a priest and in sore need. When he came to R. Tabla the latter said to him, ‘Go and take a share [in the animals] of the Israelite butchers, for since they will thereby be exempt from giving the dues they will give you a share with them’. R. Nahman, however, declared him liable to give the dues. Said he, ‘But R. Tabla has exempted me’. ‘Go at once’, ordered [R. Nahman.] ‘and give up the dues, or else I will put R. Tabla out of your mind’. Thereupon R. Tabla came before R. Nahman and said to him, ‘Why has the Master done so?’ He replied. ‘When R. Ahab b. Hanina came from the schools in the South he reported that R. Joshua b. Levi and the elders of the South ruled that a priest who became a slaughterer was exempt from giving the dues for the first two or three weeks, but thereafter he was liable to give the dues’. ‘Then’, said the other, ‘why does not the Master at least deal with him in accordance with R. Ahab b. Hanina’? He replied. ‘That is the ruling only when he has not set up a butcher's stall; but here he has set up a stall’.

R. Hisda said: A priest [a butcher] who does not give the dues [to another priest] is to be put under the ban of the Lord God of Israel. Rabbah son of R. Shila, said: The butchers of Huzal have been under the ban of R. Hisda for the last twenty-two years. Now what is the point of this? Does it mean to say that we do not continue the ban? But it has been taught: This applies only to negative precepts, but in the case of positive precepts as, for instance, when a man is told, ‘Make a sukkah’, and he does not make it, or ‘Perform the commandment of the lulab’, and he does not perform it, he is flogged until his soul departs! — It means that we may penalize them [now] without warning.

R. Hisda also said: The [entire] shoulder is to be given to one [priest], the maw to another, and the two cheeks to two [priests]. But surely this is not so, for when R. Isaac b. Joseph came [from Palestine] he reported that in the West they even divide every bone [amongst a number of priests]! — That is only in the case of an ox.

Rabbah b. Bar Hana said in the name of R. Johanan: It is forbidden to eat from an animal from which the priestly dues have not been taken.

Rabbah b. Bar Hana also said in the name of R. Johanan: Whosoever eats from an animal from which the priestly dues have not been taken is as one who eats untithed produce. — The law, however, is not in accordance with him.

R. Hisda said: The priestly dues may be eaten only roasted and with mustard. What is the reason?
Because Scripture says: For a consecrated portion,\(^{21}\) that is, as a mark of eminence,\(^{22}\) [and must therefore be eaten] as kings take their food.

R. Hisda also said: A priest who is not conversant with the twenty-four priestly endowments\(^{23}\) should not be given any gifts at all. This however is not right; for it has been taught:\(^{24}\) R. Simeon says. A priest who does not believe in the [Temple] service\(^{25}\) has no portion in the priesthood,\(^{26}\) for it is written: He among the sons of Aaron, that offereth the blood of the peace-offerings, and the fat, shall have the right thigh for a portion.\(^{27}\) I only know it with regard to this service; whence do I know it with regard to the fifteen other services in the Temple, viz., the rites of pouring,\(^{28}\) mingling,\(^{30}\) breaking into pieces,\(^{31}\) seasoning with salt,\(^{32}\) waving,\(^{33}\) bringing near,\(^{34}\) taking out the handful,\(^{35}\) and burning it,\(^{35}\) the rite of nipping off.\(^{36}\)

---

(1) So that the priest's claim is only in respect of the dues.
(2) Since these are not included within the term 'the people'; Deut. XVIII, 3.
(3) And the slaughterer can meet the claim by proving that the animal belongs to a priest or a gentile.
(4) Deut. XVIII, 3.
(5) I.e., a priest who has opened up a trade as a butcher must give the dues to another priest. What he slaughters for his own use, however, is exempt from the dues.
(6) In accordance with the rule in our Mishnah.
(7) Sc., the Israelite who granted this priest a share in his animals.
(8) Lit., 'I will take R. Tabla out of your ear'; i.e., I shall place you under the ban and R. Tabla will not be able to help you in any way.
(9) I.e., for so long until he is established in the town as a butcher.
(10) And exempt the Israelite his partner from giving the dues for the first two or three weeks.
(11) And has at once established himself as a butcher.
(12) Of stating twenty-two years.
(13) That with the execution of punishment the wrong is atoned for.
(14) The booth for the Feast of Tabernacles, cf. Lev. XXIII, 42.
(15) The palm branch used in the ritual of the Feast of Tabernacles, cf. ibid. 40.
(16) Hence we see that a person who is recalcitrant in the performance of a commandment (especially in the performance of a commandment which does not involve great outlay or expense-Rashi) is to be coerced by whatever means the Rabbis have in their power and they will not relax it until he does perform it. In the previous case therefore the ban would be continued unremittingly until the precept is performed.
(17) I.e., when a person has been under the ban for twenty-two years he may be punished further without any warning.
(18) For refusing to give the priestly dues Raba once took away from the owner an whole side of meat and gave it to the priest.
(19) So that even when one portion, e.g., the shoulder, is cut up into several parts each priest would receive something substantial.
(20) יִבְנַעֲנוּ, for which the penalty is death at the hands of Heaven. V. Tosaf. s.v. יָם עֲנוֹ.
(21) Num. XVIII, 8.
(22) So Targum Onkelos: יִבְנַעֲנוּ ‘as a distinction, as a mark of eminence’.
(23) As to the manner in which they should be eaten, cf. prec. passage.
(24) Men. 18b; Tosaf. Dem'ai II.
(25) As a divine institution.
(26) I.e., is not entitled to any portion of sacrificial meat or to the priestly dues.
(27) Lev. VII, 33.
(28) Sc., the rite of ‘offering’ or bringing forward the parts of the sacrifice to the altar.
(29) Oil in the vessel of the meal-offering; cf. Men. 74b.
(30) The meal with the oil; Men. ibid.
(31) The baked meal-offering; Lev. II, 6.
(32) Ibid. 13.
(33) Certain meal-offerings; v. Men. 60a, 61a.
of receiving [the blood in a vessel], and sprinkling it, the ceremony of giving the water to a woman suspected of adultery, of breaking the heifer's neck, of purifying the leper, and of raising the hands [for the priestly benediction] both inside (the Temple) and outside. The text therefore states, among the sons of Aaron, that is, every service ordained for the sons of Aaron. Hence, a priest who does not believe in the [Temple] services has no portion in the priesthood. Now the reason for this is that he does not believe in them, but if he does believe in them although he is not conversant with them [he is entitled to the priestly dues].

R. Abba said in the name of R. Huna who said it in the name of Rab: The veins in the cheek are forbidden, and a priest who does not know how to remove them should not be given this portion. But this is not correct, for if [the meat is] roasted then the blood will run out, and if [it is] cooked in a pot, having first been cut up and salted, then the blood will have run out.

Raba said: R. Joseph once tested us [by the following question]: If a priest snatches the priestly dues, is this a token of his zeal for the precept or of his contempt for the precept? And we replied, [Scripture says.] They shall give, but he shall not take it himself.

Abaye said: At first I used to snatch the priestly dues for I said to myself. ‘I am showing my zeal for the precept’, but when I heard the teaching, ‘They shall give’, but he shall not take it himself’, I would no more snatch it, but would say to all, ‘Give them to me’. And when I heard the teaching [of the following Baraitha] which was taught: ‘They turned aside after lucre; R. Meir said: Samuel's sons used to ask for the portions themselves’, I decided not to ask for them but would accept them if they were given to me. And when I heard the following [Baraitha] which was taught: ‘The modest withdrew their hands from it but the greedy took it’, I decided not to accept them at all, save on the day before the Day of Atonement so as to establish myself as one of the priests. But he could have raised his hands [for the priestly benediction]?

R. Joseph said: A priest in whose neighbourhood there lives a scholar who is in sore need, may assign to him the priestly dues even though they have not yet come into his hands; provided [the priest] is popular among the priests and Levites.

Raba and R. Safra once visited the house of Mar Yuhna the son of R. Hana b. Adda (others say, the house of Mar Yuhna the son of R. Hana b. Bizna), and he prepared for them a third-born calf. Thereupon Raba said to the attendant: ‘Assign to me the dues, for I wish to eat the tongue with mustard’. He assigned them to him. Raba ate it, but R. Safra would not eat it.

There came to R. Safra the following verse in a dream: As one that taketh off a garment in cold weather, and as vinegar upon nitre, so is he that singeth songs to a heavy heart. He then came before R. Joseph and said to him, ‘Perhaps it was because I did not do in accordance with the Master's teaching that this verse came to me?’ But he [R. Joseph] replied. ‘I said it of a stranger only, but an attendant perforce must assign it; moreover I said it in respect of one who is needy, but here it was not a case of need’. ‘Then why did this verse appear to me?’ — ‘It referred to Raba’. ‘Then why did it not appear to Raba?’ ‘He was under Divine censure’.

Abaye said to R. Dimi: To what does the plain meaning of the [above] verse refer? — He replied: To one who teaches a disciple that is unworthy. For Rab Judah stated in the name of Rab: Whosoever teaches a disciple that is unworthy will fall into Gehinnom, as it is written: All darkness is laid up for his treasures; a fire not blown by man shall consume him that hath an unworthy remnant [sarid] in his tent:

30 And ‘sarid’ can refer only to the scholar, as it is written: And among the remnant [u-baseridim] those whom the Lord shall call.

R. Zera said in the name of Rab: Whosoever teaches a disciple that is unworthy is as one that throws a stone at a Merculis, for it is written: As a small stone in a heap of stones, so is he that giveth honour to a fool; and ‘honour’ is nothing but the Torah as it is written: The wise shall inherit honour; and The perfect shall inherit good.

R. Hama b. Hanina said: Whosoever does good to one that does not appreciate it is as one that throws a stone at a Merculis, for it is written: As a small stone in a heap of stones, so is he that giveth honour to a fool; and it is also written: Luxury is not seemly for a fool.

IF HE HAD A SHARE [IN THE ANIMAL] WITH THEM, HE MUST INDICATE THIS BY SOME SIGN. [This is so, apparently] even with a gentile. But I can point out a contradiction, for it has been taught: If a man shares [the animal] with a priest he must indicate this by a sign; if he shares it with a gentile, or if the animal was a consecrated animal that had become unfit for a sacrifice, there is no need to indicate this by a sign!

(1) Either upon the veil of the Holy of Holies, or upon the altar.
(2) Num. V, 24.
(3) Deut. XXI, 4.
(4) Lev. XIV, 2ff.
(5) Num. VI, 22-27.
(6) I.e., in Synagogues.
(7) Lev. VII, 33.
(8) This clearly refutes R. Hisda's statement.
(9) On account of the blood that is in them.
(10) Cf. supra 93a re the veins in the fore-limb.
(11) From children who are taking it to another priest.
(12) Deut. XVIII, 3.
(13) Hence it is wrong to seize it.
(14) I Sam. VIII, 3.
(15) Yoma 39a, in connection with the distribution of the shew-bread among the priests, and conditions in the Temple after the death of Simeon the Just.
(16) That it should not be forgotten that he was a priest.
(17) In the Synagogue service and this would have proved him to be a priest.
(18) He was always occupied in study with his pupils that he could not find the time to take part in the priestly benediction. According to 'Aruch and Alfasi, Abaye used to suffer from intestinal troubles and this debared him from participating in the priestly benediction.
(19) And the scholar may collect the dues from the people.
(20) Mal'akim Kladenah. Lit., 'acquaintances of priesthood'. One who can count upon receiving dues from many people, and therefore, having as it were a presumptive ownership of the dues, he can assign them even though he has not actually received them.
(21) Or, a calf in its third year, or one that has reached a third of its growth.
(22) Who was a priest and who usually received the priestly dues from his master.
(23) The tongue constitutes part of the two cheeks to be given to the priest.
(24) He held that the attendant could not assign what he had not yet received.
(25) Prov. XXV, 20. R. Safra felt humiliated that this verse should have been applied to him; for the latter part of the verse implies that it is useless to teach one who has no understanding.
(26) Stated supra.
(27) To his master's guests; in such a case they in whose favour the dues were assigned would not acquire them.
Because of his conduct in this incident, or because he had incurred the divine displeasure by demanding rain from Heaven, cf. Ta'an. 24b.

The place of punishment of the wicked in the hereafter; hell.

Job XX, 26. All darkness i.e., Gehinnom, and a fire not blown by man i.e., the fires of hell, are prepared for him who has an unworthy scholar (רבי שליח אונומט) in his tent.

Joel III, 5: רבי שליח אונומט.

I.e., an idolater. Mercurius, a Roman divinity, identified with the Greek Hermes, the patron deity of wayfarers. Worship of this deity consisted in the setting up of stones, two beside each other and one above them, cf. A.Z. 49b, and sometimes simply in throwing stones at the figure; cf. Sanh. 60b.

Prov. XXVI. 8. The words in the text following this verse until the end of this same verse quoted in the subsequent passage are omitted in the current editions. It is an obvious scribal omission, and the text has been supplied from MS.M.; the passage in full is also to be found in the ‘En Jacob.

Ibid. III, 35.

The logic of the argument must be followed up thus: And ‘good’ is nothing but Torah, as it is said: For I give you good doctrine, forsake ye not my Torah (ibid. IV, 2). Cf. Aboth VI, 3.

Ibid. XIX, 10.

I.e., it is necessary to indicate by some sign the existing partnership between the Jew and the gentile.

By reason of a physical blemish and which has been redeemed. Such an animal is exempt from the priestly dues, v. supra 130a.

Talmud - Mas. Chullin 133b

— We must suppose in this case that the gentile was sitting by the butcher's stall. But then in the case of the priest we must also suppose the same circumstances, that he sat by the stall; why then is it necessary to indicate [the partnership] by a sign? — Because people might say that he is only buying meat. Then in the case of a gentile, too, people might say that he is only buying meat, will they not? — We must suppose in this case that the gentile was sitting by the till. Then in the case of the priest we must suppose the same circumstances, that he sat by the till, why is it necessary to indicate by a sign? — Because people might say that he merely trusted him [the priest]. Then in the case of a gentile, too, people might say that he merely trusted him? — There is no trust among heathens. If you wish, however, I can say, a gentile [partner] usually makes himself heard.

The Master stated: ‘If the animal was a consecrated animal that had become unfit for sacrifice, there is no need to indicate this by a sign’. This shows that it is evident to all, but we have learnt: Consecrated animals that have become unfit for sacrifice may [after they have been redeemed] be sold in the market, may be slaughtered in the market, and may be weighed out by the pound! — R. Adda b. Ahabah suggested before R. Papa that our case refers only to those animals that are sold in the house.

R. Huna said: If he has a share in the head of the animal only, one is exempt from giving the cheeks; if he has a share in the forelimb, one is exempt from giving the shoulder; and if he has a share in the entrails, one is exempt from giving the maw. Hiyya b. Rab said: Even if he has only a share in one of these parts one is nevertheless exempt from all [the dues].

An objection was raised: [If he said], ‘The head shall be mine and the rest yours’, or even [if he said], ‘One hundredth part of the head [shall be mine]’, he is exempt. ‘The fore-limb shall be mine and the rest yours’, or even ‘One hundredth part of the fore-limb [shall be mine]’, he is exempt. ‘The entrails shall be mine and the rest yours’, or even ‘One hundredth part of the entrails [shall be mine]’, he is exempt. Now this means, does it not, that he is exempt from the cheeks but liable to give the others; likewise that he is exempt from the shoulder but liable to give the others; and so also that he is Exempt from the maw but liable to give the others? — No, it means, he is exempt from all the dues. Then why does it not [expressly] state, ‘He is exempt from all the dues’? Furthermore, it has been expressly taught: [If he said.] ‘The head shall be mine and the rest yours’, or even ‘One hundredth part of the head [shall be mine]’, he is exempt from giving the cheeks but he is liable to give the others! — This is surely a refutation of the view of Hiyya b. Rab. It is a refutation.

R. Hisda said: The following Baraita misled Hiyya b. Rab. For it was taught. There are twenty-four priestly endowments, all bestowed upon Aaron and his sons first in general terms and then specified separately, and [finally confirmed] by a covenant of salt. Whosoever observes them is as though he observes [the whole Torah which is expounded by] generalizations and specifications and [the sacrifices which were confirmed by] a covenant of salt, and whosoever neglects them is as though he neglects [the whole Torah which is expounded by] generalizations and specifications and [the sacrifices which were confirmed by] a covenant of salt. And these are they: Ten [that are to be eaten] within the precincts of the Temple, four [that are enjoyed] in Jerusalem, and ten [that are given to them] within the borders [of the Land of Israel]. The ten [that are to be eaten] within the precincts of the Temple are: the sin-offering of an animal, the sin-offering of a bird, the guilt-offering for a known sin, the guilt-offering for a doubtful sin, the peace-offerings of the congregation, the log of oil of the leper, the two loaves, the shewbread, the remnant of the meal-offerings, the remnant of the ‘Omer. The four [that are enjoyed] in Jerusalem are: the firstling, the firstfruits, that which is taken away as a heave-offering from the thank-offering and from the ram of the Nazirite, and the hides of the [most] holy sacrifices. The ten [that are given to them] within the borders [of the Land of Israel] are: the terumah, the terumah of the tithe, the dough-offering, the first of the fleece, the [priestly] dues, the redemption of the [firstborn] son, the redemption of the firstling of an ass, the field of possession, and [the restitution for] robbery committed upon a proselyte. Now he thought that since ‘the [priestly] dues’ were counted as one [item in the list], they are considered one; but it is not the case, for can it be said that ‘what is taken away as a heave-offering from the thank-offering and from the ram of the Nazirite’ are considered one merely because they are counted as one item? Surely they are counted as one item because they are similar to each other; then in this case too, they are counted as one item only because they are similar to each other.

The question was raised: What is the law [if he said], ‘The head shall be yours and all the rest shall be mine’? Do we have regard to the part of the animal on which the obligation rests and this part belongs to the Israelite, or do we have regard to the major portion of the animal and this belongs to the priest? — Come and hear: If a gentile or a priest delivered sheep to an Israelite to shear them, he is exempt from the first of the fleece. If a man bought the fleeces of a flock belonging to a gentile, he is exempt from the first of the fleece. In this respect the law of the shoulder and the two cheeks and the maw is more strict than the law of the first of the fleece. This proves that we have regard to the part of the animal upon which the obligation rests. This proves it.

IF HE SAID, ‘EXCEPT THE DUES’, HE IS EXEMPT FROM GIVING THE DUES.

(1) And this in itself is a manifest indication to all that the gentile has a share in the business.
(2) This is even stronger evidence that the gentile is a partner.
(3) To guard the till, but it does not necessarily imply that the priest has a share in the business.
(4) The circumstances were, as suggested at first, that the gentile was sitting by the butcher's stall, and so too in the case of the priest. But there is this distinction: a gentile partner would not look on in silence but would interfere in the business done by his Jewish partner, protesting from time to time at the price his partner allows, so that it would be obvious to all that the gentile has a share in the business. This, however, is not the case with a priest who is a partner in the business.
(5) That the animal is an animal unfit for sacrifice and has been redeemed. This is indicated, no doubt, by the fact that the meat is not sold in the market place like ordinary meat.
(6) Lit., ‘by the litra’ (the weight of one pound). It is evident from this Mishnah (Bek. V, 1) that consecrated animals which have been redeemed are treated in every way like ordinary animals.
E.g., the Firstling and Cattle Tithe (cf. Bek. V, 1). In other words, the dictum of the Master that there is no need for any indication in the case of consecrated animals that became unfit refers only to the Firstling and the Cattle Tithe, for these may not, under any circumstances, be sold in the market but only in the house.

(8) Sc., the priest or the gentile.

(9) Sc., the priest or the gentile when selling the animal to an Israelite.

(10) The Israelite.

(11) B.K. 110b; Tosef. Hal. II.

(12) Cf. Num. XVIII, 8: All the hallowed things of the children of Israel unto thee have I given them.

(13) Num. XVIII, 9-19.

(14) Ibid. 19. I.e., a permanent covenant.

(17) Used for his purification rite; v. ibid. XIV, 10ff.

(18) Brought on the Feast of Weeks, ibid. XXIII, 17.

(19) Cf. Ex. XXV, 30; Lev. XXIV, 5-9.

(20) Lit., ‘sheaf’, referred to in Lev. XXIII, 10ff.

(21) Sc., the breast and the thigh and the four loaves; cf. ibid. VII, 11-14.

(22) Sc., the sodden shoulder, an unleavened cake and wafer; cf. Num. VI. 19.

(23) The hides of burnt-offerings, sin-offerings and guilt-offerings; cf. Lev. VII, 8. The hides of the lesser holy sacrifices belong to the donors; v. Zeb. 103b.

(24) I.e., the prescribed sum of five shekels; cf. Num. XVIII, 15-16.

(27) Num. XVIII, 14.

(28) I.e., the principal and the additional fifth, cf. Num. V, 7, 8. This list is also to be found in B.K. 110b, Sonc. ed., p. 645-6. Part of this list is also found supra 131a.

(29) Hiyya b. Rab.

(30) So that he that is exempt from one portion is exempt from all.

(31) Sc., the priest when selling to an Israelite the head of an animal only.

(32) At the time of slaughtering when the obligation to give the portions falls due the Israelite is the owner of the head of the animal. And since the head belongs to the Israelite he is liable to give the two cheeks to the priest.

(33) Sc., the Israelite.

(34) For if an Israelite bought the portions of an animal from a priest from which the priestly dues are taken he is bound to give the dues; hence it is clear that the obligation rests upon the part of the animal bought.

Talmud - Mas. Chullin 134a

I can point out a contradiction to this. [It was taught: If he said:]

‘On condition that the dues shall be given to me’, he may nevertheless give them to any priest he chooses! — Do you oppose the terms ‘except’ and ‘on condition that’ against each other? The term ‘except’ is a reservation, but the term on condition that is no reservation. There is, however, a further contradiction, [for it was taught: If he said:] ‘On condition that the dues shall be given to me’, the dues must then be given to him! — They differ in this: one holds that ‘on condition that’ is a reservation; the other holds that ‘on condition that’ is no reservation.

IF A MAN SAID, ‘SELL ME THE ENTRAILS OF A COW’, etc. Rab said: They taught this only where [the purchaser] weighed them for himself, but if the butcher weighed them for him, then the [priest's] claim is against the butcher [also]. R. Assi said: Even though the butcher weighed them for him his claim is with him only. Shall we say that they differ in the ruling of R. Hisda? For R. Hisda stated: If a person misappropriated [an article] and, before the owner gave up hope of recovering it, another person came and consumed it, the owner has the option of collecting payment from either the one or the other. Now is it to be said that the one [Rab] agrees with R. Hisda and the other [R. Assi] does not agree with R. Hisda? — No, all agree with R. Hisda, but there they differ as to whether the priestly dues are subject to the law of theft, the one [Rab] holds that they are subject to the law of theft and the other [R. Assi] holds that they are not. Some report the above argument independently thus: Rab said: The priestly dues are subject to the law of theft; R. Assi said: The priestly dues are not subject to the law of theft.

MISHNAH. IF A PROSELYTE HAD A COW AND HE SLAUGHTERED IT BEFORE HE BECAME A PROSELYTE, HE IS EXEMPT FROM GIVING THE PRIESTLY DUES; IF [HE SLAUGHTERED IT] AFTER HE BECAME A PROSELYTE, HE IS LIABLE; IF THERE WAS A DOUBT ABOUT IT, HE IS EXEMPT, FOR THE BURDEN OF PROOF LIES UPON THE CLAIMANT.

GEMARA. When R. Dimi came [from Palestine] he reported that R. Simeon b. Lakish pointed out the following contradiction to R. Johanan. We have learnt: IF THERE WAS A DOUBT ABOUT IT, HE IS EXEMPT, which shows that the doubt is decided in favour of leniency. But there is a contradiction to this, for we have learnt: [The grain found] in ant-holes among the standing corn, belongs to the owner; [as for the grain found in ant-holes] behind the reapers, the uppermost layer belongs to the poor, but what is beneath belongs to the owner. R. Meir says. It all belongs to the poor, since gleanings that are in doubt are deemed to be gleanings. To this [R. Johanan] answered: Do not weary me [with your arguments], since I quote that [Mishnah] as the opinion of an individual; for it has been taught: R. Judah b. Agra says in the name of R. Meir: Gleanings that are in doubt are deemed to be gleanings, forgotten sheaves that are in doubt are deemed to be forgotten sheaves, and corners of the field that are in doubt are deemed to be corners of the field. The other [Resh Lakish] retorted: Teach it even in Ben Taddal's name, [the difficulty, however, remains] for he adduces a reason for his view. For Resh Lakish said, It is written: Do justice to the afflicted and poor; what is meant by ‘do justice’? Can it mean, [favour him] in his lawsuit? Surely it is written: Thou shalt not favour a poor man in his cause! Rather it means: Be liberal with what is yours and give it to him! — Raba answered, Here the cow has the status of exemption [from dues], but the standing corn has the status of being subject [to the dues]. Said Abaye to him: Behold the case of the dough [of a proselyte, of which we learnt]: If it was mixed before he became a proselyte he is exempt from giving the dough-offering; if after he became a proselyte, he is liable to give it; if there was a doubt about it, he is liable! — He replied. Where the doubt concerns a religious prohibition we must take the more stringent view, where the doubt concerns a monetary matter we take the more lenient view. For R. Hisda stated, and so also did R. Hiyya teach: Eight cases of doubt were cited in connection with a proselyte, in four he is held liable and in four he is held exempt; and these are they: with regard to his wife's sacrifice, the dough-offering, the firstling of an unclean animal, and the firstling of a clean animal, he is held liable; he was also in the wrong, and he must make every effort to obtain them for the priest. V. B.K. 115a.

(11) The priest can only claim the dues from the person in whose possession they are, in this case from the purchaser.

(12) I.e., the one who robbed him.

(13) I.e., the one who later consumed the article; for so long as the owner has not given up hope of recovering it it is deemed to be his property wherever it happens to be, so that the one who consumed it also committed an act of theft.

(14) Accordingly the butcher when he sold them committed an act of theft for which he is held liable.

(15) For since they are endowments by Divine Law they always remain the priest's property wherever they are, consequently the law of theft does not apply to them, but the person in whose possession they are is alone responsible for them to the priest.

(16) And not in connection with our Mishnah.

(17) In this case it would be upon the priest to show that the animal was slaughtered after the owner was converted to the Jewish faith.

(18) I.e., in favour of the owner.

(19) Pe'ah IV. 11.

(20) According to Rashi, that which is in front of the reapers, i.e., which the reapers have not yet reached, although they have begun to reap the field; but v. infra p. 762, n. 1, commentary of R. Samson of Sens.

(21) The law of gleanings does not apply to it, for it is certain that the grain was carried into the holes by ants and did not fall therein at the time of reaping, since that part of the field has not yet been reaped.

(22) According to R. Samson of Sens, if only the reapers have started to reap even though they have not reached the standing corn around the ant-holes; q.v.

(23) R. Meir thus in a case of doubt decides against the owner, which view clearly contradicts that of our Mishnah which is also the view of R. Meir, for an anonymous Mishnah represents the view of R. Meir, v. Sanh. 86a (Sonc. ed.) p. 566. V., however, Tosaf. s.v. והימיניהו.

(24) It is only the opinion of R. Judah b. Agra quoting R. Meir, and he is not to be relied upon.

(25) A fictitious name for some foolish babble (Jast.). Variants are: עיבות סמחים ובן עיות a stammerer, cf. Ex. VI, 12; בון זרחי ובון עיות probably names of persons known to have been unreliable in all matters.

(26) [Insert with MS.M., ‘what is the reason of R. Judah b. Agra’?]

(27) Ps. LXXXII, 3.

(28) Ex. XXIII, 3.

(29) I.e., in matters of doubt give the poor the benefit.

(30) To reconcile the two Mishnahs.

(31) In every case of doubt we must refer to the status of the thing before the doubt arose (v. supra p. 46), and the cow then belonged to a gentile when it was exempt from dues; the cornfield, on the other hand, being the property of an Israelite, has always been subject to the various dues to the poor.

(33) Even though at the time when the doubt arises the dough has the status of exemption from the dough-offering, for the dough of a gentile is exempt; this clearly conflicts with Raba's contention.

(34) For if the dough-offering is not given to the priest the whole dough is deemed to be tebel and forbidden to be eaten on the penalty of death at the hands of Heaven.

(35) The priestly dues are in no wise sacred and the omission to give them does not render the animal forbidden; consequently, it is only a monetary consideration, and in a case of doubt it is for the priest, the claimant, to establish his claim.

(36) Where there was a doubt whether his wife gave birth to a child before she became a proselyte or after. This case of doubt may involve a penalty of kareth, for if she gave birth after she became a proselyte she would then be obliged to bring a sacrifice consequent upon her childbirth (cf. Lev. XII); and if she failed to do so and ate consecrated food she would be liable to the penalty of kareth.

(37) The doubt here being as stated in Mishnah Hal. III, 6. This case of doubt may involve the penalty of death at the hands of Heaven, v. supra n. 3.

(38) Where there was a doubt whether the proselyte's ass brought forth a firstling before his conversion or after. If after, then the foal is forbidden for all purposes until it is redeemed with a lamb (cf. Ex. XIII, 13), which lamb had to be given to the priest; in this case of doubt, the proselyte must redeem the foal with a lamb, but he may withhold it from the priest; v. infra n. 20.
The doubt here as in prec. note. This case of doubt may involve the penalty of karath for slaughtering a firstling outside the Temple.

Since these cases are matters which involve religious prohibitions and entail serious penalties, we must adopt the stricter view and impose the obligation upon the proselyte.

Talmud - Mas. Chullin 134b

with regard to the first of the fleece, the priestly dues, the redemption of his firstborn son, and the redemption of the firstling of an ass, he is exempt.

When Rabin came [from Palestine] he reported that he had pointed out to him a contradiction with regard to the standing corn itself.

Levi once sowed grain in Kishor, and there were no poor to collect the gleanings, so he came before R. Shesheth. He told him: It is written: Thou shalt leave them for the poor and the stranger, but not for ravens and bats.

An objection was raised: One is not obliged to bring in the terumah from the threshing-floor into the town, nor from the desert into the inhabited place; if, however, there is no priest there [in the district], one must hire a cow and bring it in, for otherwise there would be a waste of terumah! — In the case of terumah it is different, for [without setting apart the terumah] the whole is forbidden, and therefore one has no choice but to set it apart. But take the case of the priestly dues they do not render the whole forbidden, nevertheless it has been taught: Where the custom is only to scrape away [with boiling water the hair] of calves, one should not remove the skin from the shoulder; moreover, where the custom is to remove the skin from the head one should not remove the skin from the cheeks. If there is no priest [to whom to give these dues], one must estimate their value and then eat them, so that there should be no loss to the priest! — In the case of the priestly dues it is different, for in regard to them the term giving is used. And now that you have suggested this, you may also say that in regard to terumah the term ‘giving’ is used.

For what purpose then do I require the additional expression ‘Thou shalt leave them’? — For the following teaching: If a man renounced the ownership of his vineyard and rose early on the following morning and gathered the grapes, he is liable to the laws of the fallen grapes, the small clusters, the forgotten clusters, and the corners [of the vineyard], but he is exempt from the tithe.

There once arrived at the Beth Hamidrash [a gift of] a bag of [golden] denars, whereupon R. Ammi came in first and acquired them. But how may he do such a thing? Is it not written. And they shall give, but he shall not take it himself? — R. Ammi acquired them on behalf of the poor. Or, if you wish, you may say that in the case of an eminent person it is different.

For the verse: And the priest that is highest among his brethren, implies that he shall be highest among his brethren in beauty, in wisdom and in wealth. Others say: Whence is it proved that if he does not possess any wealth, his brethren, the priests, shall make him great? Because Scripture says: And the priest that is highest by reason of his brethren, that is, he must be made the highest [by reason of gifts] from his brethren.

Mishnah. What Counts as ‘The Shoulder’? From the joint up to the shoulder-socket of the forelimb; and this is the same for the nazirite. The corresponding part of the hind leg is called the thigh. R. Judah says, the thigh extends from the joint up to the fleshy part of the leg. What counts as ‘The Cheek’ from the joint of the jaw to the prominence of the windpipe.

Gemara. Our Rabbis taught: The shoulder, that is, the right shoulder. You say it is the right shoulder, but perhaps it is the left? Scripture therefore says: ‘The shoulder’. How is this implied? —
As Raba said: ‘The thigh’ means the right thigh, so ‘The shoulder’ means the right shoulder. And for what purpose is ‘The cheeks’ stated? — To include the wool upon the head of sheep and the hair of the beard of goats. And for what purpose is ‘The maw’ stated? — To include the fat that lies upon the stomach and the fat within the stomach. For R. Joshua said: The priests were in the habit of being generous with this and used to return it to the owners. The only reason for returning it is that they were in the habit of doing so, but had they not been of this habit it certainly would have belonged to them.

The interpreters of Scripture by symbol used to say: ‘The shoulder’ represents the hand [of Phinehas], for it is written: And took a spear in his hand. ‘The cheeks’ represent his prayer, for so it is written: Then stood up Phinehas and prayed. ‘The maw’ — this is to be taken in its literal sense, for so it is written: And the woman through her stomach.

A Tanna derives it from the following: It is written: And the right thigh; from this I only know the right thigh, whence do I know this of the shoulder of consecrated animals? Because the text states: As a heave-offering. And whence do I know this of the shoulder of unconsecrated animals? Because the text states: Ye shall give.

WHAT COUNTS AS ‘THE CHEEK’? FROM THE JOINT OF THE JAW TO THE PROMINENCE OF THE WINDPIPE. But it has been taught: One should cut it away and the place of slaughtering should go with it! This is no contradiction, for the one [our Mishnah] gives the opinion of the Rabbis, and the other [the Baraitha] the opinion of R. Hanina b. Antigonus. For it was taught: Any deflection [of the knife outside the top ring] invalidates the slaughtering. R. Hanina b. Antigonus testified that a deflection is permitted. Or, if you wish, you may say that both statements accord with the opinion of the Rabbis, for ‘with it’ [in the Baraitha] means with the [rest of the] animal.

C H A P T E R X I

(1) Sc., the lamb used for redeeming the firstling of the ass; v. supra n. 7.
(2) In all these cases the doubt was whether at the material time, i.e., when the obligation to make these presents to the priest fell due, this man was already a proselyte or not. Since, however, these are all monetary considerations we adopt the lenient view and leave it to the priest who is the claimant to establish his claim.
(3) I.e., that Resh Lakish had pointed out to R. Johanan a contradiction between R. Meir’s views with regard to standing corn, and not, as reported by R. Dimi, a contradiction between R. Meir’s views with regard to standing corn and the priestly dues. According to Rabin’s report Resh Lakish had adduced a Baraitha concerning standing corn in which R. Meir’s view was in direct conflict with that expressed by him in Mishnah Pe’ah IV, 11. R. Johanan, however, made the same answer as reported above, viz., that the latter Mishnah was taught by an individual.
(4) [Probably Levi b. Hama; v. D.S. note a.l.]
(5) Lev. XIX, 10.
(6) So that where there are no poor the gleanings may be gathered by the owner and consumed by him, but on no account are they to be left in the open field to be consumed by birds.
(7) The priest must go and fetch it himself.
(8) The owner must then bring it in and store it for the priest (no doubt he could claim his expenses from the priest, cf. Maim. Yad, Terumoth XII, 17); the same should also be the rule with the dues to the poor, i.e., the owner should collect and keep them for the poor, but not consume them himself.
(9) ‘mixed’, i.e., untithed produce, which is forbidden to be eaten under the penalty of death at the hands of Heaven.
(10) And since one must set it apart in order to render the rest of the produce permitted, it becomes one’s duty also to keep it in store for the priest; but this is not the case with gleanings, for the produce is under no restriction even though the gleanings were not left.
(11) And cook it together with its skin and eat it. V. Alfasi for a variant in the text and the comment of R. Nissim.
(12) But one should give it to the priest with the skin upon it.
(13) And set aside the money to be given to the first priest that claims it. This should be the case, should it not, with the gifts to the poor too?
(14) Cf. Deut. XVIII, 3. It is thus one's duty to give them to the priest, even though no priests are available at the time.
(15) Cf. Num. XVIII, 12.
(16) This expression is found in Lev. XIX, 10 and also in XXIII, 22. Surely its purpose is to teach that one must keep the dues for the poor, is it not?
(17) For although ownerless property or property that has been renounced by its owner is free from these poor laws, in this case the original owner has by his conduct resumed the ownership of the vineyard and is therefore liable to these poor laws. This is inferred from the superfluous expression 'Thou shalt leave them', which, as shown supra 131a ff (v. Rashi), refers only to the poor laws but not to the tithe. For the special connotation of each of these terms and their Biblical sources v. supra ibid. and notes thereon. V. also B.K. 28a, and Ned. 44b.
(19) Deut. XVIII, 3.
(20) R. Ammi as head of the Academy was permitted to acquire the money for himself; indeed, it is a duty upon all to make him 'the greatest among his brethren'.
(21) Lev. XXI, 10.
(22) I.e., from the carpus to the scapula; it thus consists of two bones, the radius and the humerus. V. Diagram of ox.
(23) Cf. Num. VI, 19: 'the shoulder of the ram'.
(24) I.e., from the tarsus to the innominate bone; this also consists of two bones, the tibia and the femur. This portion together with the breast was to be given to the priest from every peace-offering, cf. Lev. VII, 32.
(25) I.e., it consists of one bone only, viz. the tibia.
(26) I.e., the tip of the thyroid cartilage. This extent includes the whole of the lower jaw and the tongue.
(27) Deut. XVIII, 3.
(28) Gen. XXXII, 33. V. supra 91a. The implication is from the additional הַלַע, 'the', in each case.
(29) I.e., the additional הַלַע, the.
(30) The fat upon the greater and lesser curvatures of the stomach; v. Tur. Yoreh De'ah c. LXI. Perhaps the second should be read הַלַע, i.e., the milk within the stomach; and from Rashi (in MSS.) this would appear to be the meaning.
(31) Probably R. Joshua b. Levi; so MS. M. In many MSS. (v. Bah) 'For' at the head of this passage is omitted, and the passage is quite independent of what has gone before.
(32) Sc., the supplementary portions of the stomach. Cf. Taz, Yoreh De'ah c. LXI, sub-sec. 7.
(33) Gen. XXXII, 33, in MS.M. תְבַעָרָה דְּרֵשֵׁים מָמוּרָה. See the exhaustive discussion of Lauterbach in JQR. (N.S.) I, pp. 291-333, 503, 531.
(34) These portions were granted to the priests as a reward for Phinehas's zealous act in slaying Zimri, and so turned away God's wrath from Israel. V. Num. XXV, 6ff.
(35) Ibid. 7. Presumably in his right hand, consequently it is the right shoulder that is to be given.
(36) Ps. CVI, 30.
(37) Num. XXV, 8.
(38) Lev. VII, 32.
(39) That the shoulder which is taken as a heave-offering from the sacrifice of the Nazirite (cf. Num. VI, 19) shall be the right one.
(40) I.e., of the priestly dues.
(41) Lev. ibid. WHATSOEVER is given shall be from the right side.
(42) This apparently implies that a part of the area prescribed for slaughtering must be included in 'the cheek'. This however is not the case according to the description of 'the cheek' in our Mishnah, for the tip of the thyroid cartilage, which is the limit described in the Mishnah, is surely not within the area prescribed for slaughtering.
(43) V. supra 18b. According to R. Hanina b. Antigonus the tip of the thyroid cartilage is within the area prescribed for slaughtering. It must be observed that with regard to the extent of the cheek that is given to the priest there is no difference of opinion between R. Hanina and the Rabbis.
(44) But it is not included in the portion of 'the cheek'.

GEMARA. Why does not [the law of the first of the fleece] apply to consecrated animals? — Because Scripture says, of thy sheep,⁷ but not of the sheep of the Sanctuary. Now this is so because Scripture stated: ‘Of thy sheep’, but without this [Scriptural indication] I should have said that consecrated animals are subject to the law of the first of the fleece; but surely they may not be shorn, for it is written: Thou shalt not shear the firstling of thy flock!¹² — In respect of animals consecrated for the altar this is indeed so,¹³ but we were referring to animals consecrated to the Temple treasury.¹⁴ But has not R. Eleazar said that animals consecrated to the Temple treasury are forbidden to be shorn and to be used for work? — [This is forbidden] by Rabbinic decree only. Now I might have thought that, since by law of the Torah they may be shorn, where a man did shear them he should give [the priest the first of the fleece; Scripture therefore teaches that they are not subject to the law]. But it is consecrated, is it not?¹⁵ — I might think that he¹⁶ must redeem it and give it to the priest. But surely it has to stand up to be appraised?¹⁷ This is well according to him who says that animals consecrated to the Temple treasury are not subject to the law of ‘standing up to be appraised’, but what can you say according to him who says that they are subject to this law? — R. Mani b. Pattish suggested in the name of R. Jannai: We are referring here to the case of a man who consecrated to the Temple treasury his animal apart from its fleece. Now I might have thought that he should shear it and give [the portion] to the priest. Scripture therefore states: ‘Of thy sheep’ but not of the sheep of the Sanctuary. In that case it can also refer to an animal consecrated to the altar¹⁸ — It would thereby become weak.¹⁹ Then the animal consecrated to the Temple treasury would also become weak thereby? — [We must assume that] he said: ‘[I consecrate the animal] except for its fleece and the debility [resulting from the shearing of the fleece’]. Then even with regard to an animal consecrated to the altar, [we can assume that] he said: ‘[I consecrate the animal] except for its fleece and the debility [resulting from the shearing thereof]’! — Even so the sanctity extends over the whole [animal]. Whence do you gather this? — Because [we have learnt:] R. Jose said: Is it not the case that, in connection with animal offerings, if one said: ‘Let the foot of this animal be a burnt-offering’, the whole animal is consecrated as a burnt-offering? And even according to R. Meir who declares that the whole animal does not thereby become [consecrated as] a burnt-offering, that is so only where one consecrated a limb wherein the life [of the animal] does not depend, but if one consecrated a limb wherein the life [of the animal] depends, [he agrees that] the whole animal becomes consecrated.

Raba said, [Our Mishnah refers to the case] where a man consecrated the fleece only; now I might have said that he must shear it, redeem it, and give it to the priest. Scripture therefore states The fleece of thy sheep shalt thou give him: this applies only to that which lacks shearing and giving but not to that which lacks shearing, redeeming and giving.

And what does the expression ‘Of thy sheep’ come to teach us? — The following, which has been taught: An animal which is held jointly is subject to the law of the first of the fleece; R. Ila'i declares it exempt. What is the reason for R. Ila'i's view? — Because Scripture states ‘Of thy sheep’, but not of that which is held jointly. And the Rabbis? — [They say that] it serves to exclude only that which is held jointly with a gentile. And whence does R. Ila'i know that that which is held jointly with a gentile [is exempt]? — He derives it from the beginning of the verse, which reads: The first of thy corn, but not that which is held jointly with a gentile. And the Rabbis: — The word ‘first’ [they say] interrupts the subject-matter. And R. Ila'i? — ‘And’ [he says] connects this [with the above Subject].

1. Deut. XVIII, 4: And the first of the fleece of thy sheep shalt thou give him.
2. Even if one slaughters a single beast.
3. Isa. VII, 21. The term נסומי ‘flock’ stated in connection with the law of the first of the fleece is in this verse used of two sheep.
4. I Sam. XXV, 18. The expression רועי ‘ready dressed’, is interpreted to mean that the commandment (רשי) of the first of the fleece had been fulfilled in respect of them.
5. V. Glos.
6. Sc. to the priest. V. Gemara 137b.
7. Deut. XVIII, 4.
8. For he has acquired absolute ownership of the wool by the change he had wrought in it. This is regarded as an act of theft and he is exempt from giving it now to the priest, in accordance with R. Hisda's dictum supra 130b.
9. Mere bleaching, unlike dyeing, does not constitute a change whereby one can acquire the ownership of an article.
10. Even though the wool was not shorn from the animal, but the Israelite sheared it.
11. Both the seller and the purchaser must give to the priest the first of the fleece. V. however Gemara, 136b.
13. And no verse is necessary to exclude consecrated animals fit for a sacrifice from the law of the first of the fleece.
14. These consecrated animals may be shorn, and therefore a scriptural indication must be resorted to in order to exclude them from the law of the first of the fleece.
15. The fleece belongs to the Temple treasury, how then can it be suggested that it be given to the priest?
16. Probably the original owner who consecrated the beast, but v. Tosaf. s.v. רמאי.
17. Every consecrated living animal and everything attached to it, when it is about to be redeemed must be able to stand up before the priest to be valued, in accordance with Lev. XXVII, 11, 12.
18. For since the animal only was consecrated and not the fleece, it is permitted to use the fleece, hence it is necessary for Scripture to teach that it need not be given to the priest.
19. I.e., by the shearing: it is therefore forbidden to shear the wool of a consecrated animal, even though the wool was not consecrated.
20. So that in the case of an animal consecrated to the altar the exception of the fleece cannot be regarded as a reservation and the whole animal is deemed to be consecrated; whereas in the case of an animal consecrated to the Temple treasury whatsoever is excepted will not be deemed to be consecrated.

(21) V. Tem. 10a, and supra 69b. R. Jose puts forward this argument to prove that where the foot of an animal was designated as a substitute for an already consecrated animal, the whole animal thereby becomes consecrated.

(22) Deut. XVIII, 4.

(23) Hence the fleece of consecrated animals is not subject. It must be observed that the rule of ‘standing up to be appraised’ does not come into consideration here for it does not apply to an inanimate object consecrated to the Temple treasury. V. p. 771, n. 3, and Tosaf. s.v. סֵפֶר.

(24) The expression ‘Of thy sheep’ — meaning sheep belonging to a single individual — excludes, according to the view of the first Tanna (later referred to as ‘the Rabbis’), sheep held jointly by an Israelite and a gentile, and according to R. Ila'i, even that which is held by two Israelites jointly.

(25) But that which is held by two Israelites jointly is subject to the law of the first of the fleece, since each is individually subject to the law, and the people of Israel are often referred to as a single individual; cf. Mak. 23b.

(26) Deut. XVIII, 4. The firstfruits of corn held jointly with a gentile is not subject to the offering of terumah; likewise it is reasonable to infer that sheep held jointly with a gentile are not subject to the law of the first of the fleece; consequently the later expression ‘thy sheep’ excludes that which is held jointly by Israelites.

(27) How do they meet this argument of R. Ila'i?

(28) The verse reads: The first of thy corn . . . and the first of the fleece of thy sheep shalt thou give him. The fact that Scripture repeats the word ‘first’ in regard to the fleece indicates that it is quite distinct from the foregoing, and no inference may be made therefrom.

(29) Were the two laws entirely distinct, Scripture would not have introduced the second with the conjunction ‘and’. It evidently signifies some connection and analogy between the two.

Talmud - Mas. Chullin 135b

And the Rabbis? — [They say] the Divine Law then should have stated neither ‘and’ nor ‘first’.¹ And R. Ila'i? — [He says] since the one has no sanctity whatsoever,² whereas the other is itself sacred, the two had to be [in the first place] stated separately and later connected.

Alternatively, you may say, the Rabbis are of the opinion that what is held jointly with a gentile is subject to terumah.³ For it has been taught:⁴ If an Israelite and a gentile bought a field jointly, tebel and hullin⁵ are inextricably mixed up in it;⁶ so Rabbi. Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel says: The part belonging to the Israelite is subject to the tithe, and the part belonging to the gentile is exempt. Now the extent of their difference consists in this, that the one authority [R. Simeon] holds the principle of bererah⁷ while the other does not hold the principle of bererah, but both are agreed that whatsoever is held jointly with a gentile is subject to tithe.

In the further alternative you may say that both rules⁸ are derived, according to R. Ila'i, from the expression ‘thy sheep’. For why is it that what is held jointly with a gentile is exempt [from the law of the first of the fleece]? Because it is not solely his. Then what is held jointly with another Israelite should also be exempt, for it is not solely his. And the Rabbis? — [They distinguish thus:] A gentile is not subject to this law, whereas an Israelite is.⁹

Raba said: R. Ila'i agrees as regards terumah;¹⁰ for, although it is written; ‘Thy corn’ [from which it would appear that] thine only [is subject to terumah] and not what is held jointly, the Divine Law stated: Your heave-offerings.¹¹ What then is the significance of ‘thy corn’? — It excludes what is held jointly with a gentile. As regards the dough-offering,¹² although there is written the word ‘first’,¹³ and one could draw an analogy by reason of the common word ‘first’¹⁴ from the law of the first of the fleece: as there what is held jointly is exempt so here what is held jointly is exempt, the Divine Law stated: Your dough.¹² Now this is so only because Scripture stated: ‘Your dough’, but had it not stated it I should have said that we should draw an analogy by reason of the common word ‘first’ from the law of the first of the fleece, but on the contrary we would rather draw the analogy from the law of terumah!
— This is indeed so; what then is the significance of ‘your dough?’ — That there must be as much as your dough.

As regards the corner of the field, although it is written: Thy field [from which it would follow that] thine only is subject and not what is held jointly, the Divine Law stated: And when ye reap the harvest of your land. What then is the significance of ‘thy field’? — It excludes what is held jointly with a gentile.

As regards the law of the firstling, although it is written: All the firstling males that are born of thy herd and of thy flock, [from which it would follow that] thine only is subject but not what is held jointly, the Divine Law stated: And the firstlings of your herd and of your flock. What then is the significance of ‘thy herd and thy flock’? — It excludes what is held jointly with a gentile.

As regards the law of mezuzah, although it is written: Thy house, [from which it would follow that] thine only is subject but not what is held jointly, the Divine Law stated: That your days may be multiplied and the days of your children.

(1) If any analogy was to be inferred from the two laws, both these expressions then should have been omitted, viz., ‘and’ which implies connection with the preceding subject and ‘first’ which implies separateness.
(2) Lit., ‘it is consecrated as to its value’. Not to be taken literally, since the first of the fleece has no sanctity whatsoever, whereas terumah is sacred and may be eaten by none but priests (Rashi).
(3) I.e., only the share held by the Israelite. Consequently the expression ‘thy sheep’ serves to exclude that which is held jointly with a gentile from the law of the first of the fleece, and the expression ‘thy corn’ serves to exclude that which belongs entirely to the gentile. V. Rashi s.v.
(4) Tosef. Ter. II; and Git. 47aff.
(5) Tebel (lit., mixed) is produce which is subject to tithes but from which these have not been separated. Hullin (lit., common, unconsecrated) is produce that is free entirely from tithes, e.g., what is bought from a gentile.
(6) Even after they have divided between them the produce of the field, we do not assume that the share which each took eventually was intended for him from the beginning, so that the result would be that the Israelite's share is wholly tebel and the gentile's wholly hullin. This would mean the application of the principle of bererah i.e., retrospective designation. Rabbi does not accept this principle and maintains that each share, nay, each grain, is part tebel and part hullin; and the Israelite therefore must separate the tithe for his share from this very produce but not from other produce, neither can this produce be set aside as tithe for other produce. V. Rashi s.v.
(7) v. Glos, and also supra 14a and notes.
(8) That sheep held jointly with an Israelite as well as sheep held jointly with a gentile are exempt from the law of the first of the fleece.
(9) It is not necessary that the sheep shall belong wholly to one person, all that the law insists upon is that it shall belong to parties each subject to the law, se. Israelites, for, after all, the people of Israel are often referred to as a single unit.
(10) That produce held jointly by Israelites is subject to terumah.
(11) The use of the second person plural suffix in this and in all subsequent cases indicates that the matter may be held by several persons jointly. ‘Your heave-offerings’ is not found in the Torah at all, but only in Ezek. XX, 40 and XLIV, 30. Probably the text should read: Your heave-offering, as in Num. XVIII, 27.
(12) Num. XV, 20.
(13) Stated here in connection with the dough-offering, and also in connection with the first of the fleece; Deut. XVIII, 4.
(14) With the result that what is held jointly by Israelites is subject to the dough-offering, just as it is subject to terumah.
For it is an established principle that where two analogies are possible, one leading to stringency and the other to leniency, we must adopt the former; v. Yeb. 8a, Kid. 68a, and A.Z. 46b.
(15) To be subject to the dough-offering there must be a minimum quantity of dough equal to a person's daily ration in the wilderness, viz., an ‘omer per head (Ex. XVI, 16), and an ‘omer is the tenth part of an ephah (ibid. 36). This is equivalent in mass to forty-three and one fifth eggs, for an ephah equals four hundred and thirty-two eggs. (One ephah = three se'ah; one se'ah = six kabs; one kab = four logs; one log = six eggs.)

(16) Lev. XIX, 9.
(17) Deut. XV, 19.
(18) Ibid. XII, 6.
(19) V. Glos.
(20) Ibid. VI, 9.

Talmud - Mas. Chullin 136a

The way thou enterest [thy house], that is, with the right [foot].

As regards the tithe, although it is written: The tithe of thy corn, [from which would follow that] thine only is subject but not what is held jointly, the Divine Law stated: Your tithe. What then is the significance of ‘the tithe of thy corn’? — It excludes what is held jointly with a gentile.

As regards the priestly dues, although it is written: And he shall give, and by reason of the common expression ‘giving’ one might draw an analogy from the law of the first of the fleece: as there what is held jointly is exempt so here what is held jointly is exempt, the Divine Law stated: From them that slaughter a slaughtering. Now this is so only because Scripture stated: From them that slaughter a slaughtering, but had it not stated it, I should have said that one should draw the analogy from the law of the first of the fleece; but on the contrary one should rather draw the analogy from terumah. — This is indeed so; what then is the significance of ‘from them that slaughter a slaughtering’? — It is as Raba said. For Raba said: The claim is made against the slaughterer.

As regards the first-fruits, although it is written: Thy land, [from which it would follow that] thine only is subject but not what is held jointly, the Divine Law stated: The first-ripe fruits of all that is in their land. What then is the significance of ‘thy land’? — It excludes land that is outside the Land [of Israel]. As regards the law of zizith, although it is written: Thy covering, [from which it would follow that] thine only is subject but not what is held jointly, the Divine Law stated: In the corners of their garments. What then is the significance of ‘thy covering’? — It is as Rab Judah said. For Rab Judah said: A borrowed garment is for the first thirty days exempt from zizith.

As regards the law of the parapet, although it is written: For thy roof, [from which it would follow that] thine only is subject but not what is held jointly, the Divine Law stated: If any man fall from thence. What then is the significance of ‘thy roof’? — It excludes the roofs of Synagogues and Houses of Study.

R. Bibi b. Abaye said: These cases are all wrong, for it has been taught: An animal that is held jointly is subject to the law of the firstling; R. Ila'i declares it exempt. What is the reason for R. Ila'i's view? — Because it is written: Thy herd and thy flock. But it is also written: Your herd and your flock. — That means of all Israel.

R. Hanina of Sura said: These cases are all wrong, for it has been taught: An animal that is held jointly is subject to the priestly dues; R. Ila'i declares it exempt. What is his reason? — He draws an analogy by means of the common expression ‘giving’ from the law of the first of the fleece; just as there what is held jointly is exempt so here what is held jointly is exempt. Now if you could say that in respect of terumah [what is jointly held] is liable, then surely one would have to draw the analogy by means of the common expression ‘giving’ from terumah. This proves, therefore, that even in respect of terumah [what is jointly held] is exempt.
But just as terumah obtains in the Land [of Israel] only and not outside it so the law of the first of the fleece should obtain in the Land only and not outside it! — R. Jose of Nehar Bil said: It is indeed so; for it has been taught: R. Ila'i says: The law of the priestly dues obtains only in the Land [of Israel]. Likewise R. Ila'i used to say: The law of the first of the fleece obtains only in the Land. What is R. Ila'i’s reason? — Raba answered: He draws an analogy by means of the common expression ‘giving’ from terumah; as terumah obtains in the Land only and not outside it, so the law of the first of the fleece obtains in the Land only and not outside it.

Said to him Abaye. Then just as terumah produces the condition of tebel so should the first of the fleece produce the condition of tebel, should it not? — He replied: Scripture says. And the first of the fleece of thy sheep shalt thou give him, that is, you have no right to it except after it has [been separated as] the first.

Again just as terumah is subject to the penalty of death and the additional fifth so the first of the fleece should be subject to the death penalty and the additional fifth, should it not? — Scripture says: And die for it, and He shall add unto it; that is, ‘unto it’ [he shall add the fifth] but not unto the first of the fleece; for it’ [they shall die] but not for the first of the fleece.

Again just as there follow after terumah the first and second [tithes] so there should follow after the first of the fleece the first and second [tithes], should there not? — Scripture says: ‘The first’, thus you have only [to give] the first [of the fleece].

Again just as in the case of terumah one must not set aside new [grain as terumah] for old so in the case of the first of the fleece one should not give new [fleece as the due] for old? — This is indeed so; for it has been taught: If a man had two lambs and he sheared them and kept [the wool], and [next year] again sheared them and kept [the wool], and so he did for two or three years, they are not to be reckoned together. It follows, however, that if he had five lambs they would be reckoned together; yet [in another Baraitha] it has been taught that they would not be reckoned together. It is clear therefore that one [Baraitha] gives R. Ila'i’s opinion and the other that of the Rabbis.

Again just as with regard to terumah it is the law that what grows [on land in the possession of] one subject [to terumah] is liable [to it], but what grows [on land in the possession of] one not subject [to terumah] is exempt [from it], so it should be with regard to the first of the fleece: what grows on [sheep in the possession of] one subject to this law is liable, but what grows on [sheep in the possession of] one not subject to this law is exempt? (Whence do we know this with regard to terumah? — From the following [Baraitha] which was taught: If an Israelite bought a field in Syria from a gentile before the produce had reached a third of its growth, it is subject [to tithe]; if it had already reached a third of its growth, R. Akiba declares the increase subject [to tithe], but the Sages declare it exempt.) And should you say that this is indeed so, but we have learnt: IF A MAN BOUGHT THE FLEECES OF A FLOCK BELONGING TO A GENTILE HE IS EXEMPT FROM THE LAW OF THE FIRST OF THE FLEECE, so it follows that if he bought the flock [with its fleece] which was ready for shearing he would be liable! — Our Mishnah

(1) On that side, sc. the right, you must fix the Mezuzah. V. Men. 340 and Yoma 11b.
(2) Ibid. XIV, 23.
(3) Ibid. XII, 6.
(4) Ibid. XVIII, 3.
(5) Used here and also in connection with the first of the fleece: shalt thou give him (ibid. 4).
(6) Ibid. XVIII, 3. The plural in this verse indicates that though the animal is held jointly by several people it is still subject to the dues.
(7) By means of the common expression ‘giving’ which is also used in connection with terumah (cf. Num. XVIII, 12), with the result that what is held jointly is subject to the dues. V. supra p. 775, n. 3.

(8) V. supra 132a.
(9) Deut. XXVI, 2.
(10) Num. XVIII, 13.
(11) From the law of the firstfruits. This would not have been excluded from the expression ‘their land’, and therefore Scripture says: Thy land which implies the specific land of the Israelite, the Land of Israel.
(12) The fringes attached to the four corners of the garment; v. Num. XV, 38.
(13) Deut. XXII, 12.
(14) Num. ibid.
(15) For it is not ‘thy covering’; v. supra 110b.
(16) Cf. Deut. XXII, 8, where it enjoined to erect a parapet around the roof of the house to prevent accidental falling off.
(17) Ibid. Any roof from which one might fall had to be fenced, even though the roof was held jointly.
(18) For the verse implies the roof of a house used as a dwelling but not the roof of any other building.
(19) These cases enumerated by Raba in which R. Ila'i is said to agree that what is jointly held is subject to the law in question are to be disregarded.
(20) Since we find that R. Ila'i exempts what is jointly held from the law of the firstling, hence Raba's argument fails with regard to this; accordingly his arguments with regard to the others cannot be upheld.
(21) Deut. XV, 19.
(22) Ibid. XII, 6.
(23) To the exclusion of gentiles. On the other hand, wherever Scripture states ‘thy’ it excludes what is held jointly.
(24) In accordance with the established principle quoted supra p. 775, n. 3.
(25) Here commences a new argument. Since R. Ila'i derives the law of the first of the fleece from terumah (cf. supra 135a, bot.) concerning what is held jointly with a gentile, the analogy must be carried to all its conclusions and the rules applying to the one should apply to the other. V. Rashi s.v. נשת, and comments of Rashal, Maharsha and Maharam thereon. V. also Torath Hayyim a.l., and Gloss. of Bah.
(26) So in MS.M. and most MSS., and apparently also according to Rashi; in cur. edd. ‘the priestly dues’. V. Maharam a.l.
(27) Which is contrary to our Mishnah.
(28) I.e., renders the whole produce forbidden to he eaten until the terumah is separated therefrom.
(29) Deut. XVIII, 4.
(30) Sc. the priest.
(31) But before the first of the fleece has been set apart no priest has any claim to it, and consequently the condition of tebel does not exist at all. This implication is made from the word ‘first’ which is redundant in the verse.
(32) If a non-priest deliberately ate terumah, he is liable to the penalty of death at the hands of Heaven; v. Sanh. 83a.
(33) If a non-priest inadvertently ate terumah, he must make restitution by paying the value thereof plus a fifth to the priest; cf. Lev. XXII, 14.
(34) Lev. XXII, 9.
(35) Ibid. 14.
(36) The produce of one year may not be given as terumah or tithe for the produce of the preceding year, or vice versa, for it is written: That which is brought forth in the field year by year (Deut. XIV, 22).
(37) Even though he has now accumulated five fleeces; for there must be five fleeces from five sheep.
(38) And he sheared some one year and the rest the next year.
(39) The second Baraitha represents R. Ila'i's view that the fleece of one year's shearing cannot be reckoned together with that of another year's shearing, as is the case with the produce of terumah.
(40) E.g., if an Israelite bought a field from a gentile.
(41) Sc. land in the possession of a gentile.
(42) Git. 47a.
(43) The Biblical Aram Zobah which was conquered by David and added by him to the Land of Israel (II Sam. VIII). It is not, however, regarded as the Land of Israel proper, and therefore what is owned there by a gentile constitutes full ownership so as to release it from the obligation of tithe. This is not the case with regard to land held by a gentile in the Land of Israel proper, v. Git. 47a.
(44) At which stage corn becomes liable to tithe, cf. Ma'as. I, 3.
Sc. the last two-thirds of the growth; this increase is in fact a mixture of tebel and hullin.

That fleece which had grown on sheep while in the possession of a gentile, although now in the possession of an Israelite, is exempt from the first of the fleece.

Although the wool grew upon the sheep whilst they were in the possession of the gentile.

Talmud - Mas. Chullin 136b

is not in accordance with R. Ila'i. 1

Again just as in the case of terumah one may not give one kind [as terumah] for another kind, 2 so in the case of the first of the fleece one should not give one kind [as the due] for another kind? (Whence do we know this in the case of terumah? — From the following [Baraitha] which was taught: If a man had two kinds of figs, black and white, likewise if he had two kinds of wheat, he may not give one kind as terumah or as tithe for the other kind. R. Isaac reports in the name of R. Ila'i: 3 Beth Shammai say that he may not give [one kind] as terumah [for another kind], but Beth Hillel say that he may.) So in the case of the first of the fleece one should not be permitted to give one kind [as the due] for another kind! — This is indeed so, for we have learnt: IF HE HAD TWO KINDS OF WOOL, GREY AND WHITE, AND HE SOLD THE GREY BUT NOT THE WHITE . . . EACH MUST GIVE [THE FIRST OF THE FLEECE] FOR HIMSELF. 4 But if so, in the last clause which reads: IF HE SOLD THE WOOL OF THE MALES BUT NOT OF THE FEMALES EACH MUST GIVE THE FIRST OF THE FLEECE FOR HIMSELF, is the reason also because they are two different kinds? 5 We must therefore say 6 that the Tanna was merely giving a piece of good advice, viz., that he 7 should give him of the hard as well as the soft wool; 8 likewise in the former clause he also gives a piece of good advice, viz., that he should give him of both kinds! 9 — We have already stated that our Mishnah is not in accordance with R. Ila'i.

Again just as in the case of terumah there must be a ‘first offering’ such as leaves a perceptible remainder, 10 so in the case of the first of the fleece there should also be a ‘first offering’ such as leaves a perceptible remainder, should there not? — This is indeed so; for we have learnt: 11 If a man said: ‘Let all [the corn in] my threshing floor be ‘terumah’, or ‘Let all my dough be dough-offering’, his words are of no effect. It follows, however, that if he said: ‘Let all my fleeces be the first of the fleece’, his words would hold good; yet another [Baraitha] taught that his words are of no effect. It is clear therefore that one [Baraitha] gives R. Ila'i's opinion 12 and the other that of the Rabbis.

R. Nahman b. Isaac said: Nowadays the world has adopted the views of the following three Elders: that of R. Ila'i with regard to the first of the fleece, for it has been taught: R. Ila'i says: The law of the first of the fleece obtains only in the Land [of Israel]; that of R. Judah b. Bathyra with regard to the words of the Torah, for it has been taught: R. Judah b. Bathyra says: The words of the Torah do not contract uncleanness; 14 and that of R. Josiah with regard to diverse kinds, 15 for it has been taught: R. Josiah says: A man does not incur guilt [for the infringement of this law] 15 until he sows wheat, barley and grape-kernels with one throw of the hand.

THE LAW OF THE SHOULDER . . . IS MORE STRICT etc. Wherefore does not the Tanna state that the law of the first of the fleece is more strict in that it applies to a trefah animal, which is not so with regard to the priestly dues? 16 — Rabina said: The author [of the view in our Mishnah] is R. Simeon, for it has been taught: R. Simeon exempts trefah animals from the first of the fleece.

What is the reason for R. Simeon's view? — He draws an analogy by means of the common expression ‘giving’ from the priestly dues; just as the priestly dues do not apply to a trefah animal 16 so the law of the first of the fleece does not apply to trefah animals. But since he draws an analogy by means of the common expression ‘giving’ from the priestly dues, he should also draw an analogy by means of this common expression ‘giving’ from terumah: just as terumah obtains only in the Land [of Israel] but not outside it so the law of the first of the fleece obtains only in the Land [of Israel] but not outside it. Wherefore then have we learnt: THE LAW OF THE FIRST OF THE FLEECE APPLIES BOTH WITHIN THE HOLY LAND AND OUTSIDE IT? — Rather we must say that this is the reason for R. Simeon's view: he draws an analogy by means of the common expression ‘sheep’ from the [cattle] tithe: just as the tithe does not apply to a trefah animal the law of the first of the fleece does not apply to a trefah animal. And whence do we know it there? — For it is written: Whatsoever passeth under the rod, thus excluding a trefah animal since it cannot pass under [the rod].

And wherefore does he [R. Simeon] not draw an analogy by means of the common expression ‘sheep’ from the firstling: just as the law of the firstling also applies to a trefah animal so the law of the first of the fleece also applies to a trefah animal? — It is more logical to draw the analogy from the cattle tithe, because they are alike in the following points: (i) males, (ii) unclean animals, (iii) quantity, (iv) sanctity from the womb, (v) mankind, (vi) ordinary, and (vii) before the Revelation. On the contrary, should not the analogy be drawn rather from the law of the firstling, since they are alike in the following points: — (i) orphan-beast, (ii) bought, (iii) held jointly, (iv) given, (v) during the existence of [the Temple], (vi) priestly endowment,

(1) For according to R. Ila'i if an Israelite bought flocks from a gentile with fleeces that were ready to be shorn he would be exempt.
(2) Even though both kinds are of the same species; cf. infra black figs and white figs.
(3) MS.M. and also in Tosef. Ter. II, ‘R. Eleazar’.
(4) This case proves the rule that one may not give the fleece from one kind as the due for other kinds. For if this were not so, the seller alone would be liable to give the due both in respect of what he sold and of what he retained, in accordance with the preceding clause of the Mishnah: IF THE SELLER KEPT BACK SOME FOR HIMSELF, THE SELLER IS LIABLE; for since the various kinds count as one with regard to the priestly due it would be regarded as though the seller had retained some for himself, and only he would be liable.
(5) It would be absurd to regard the males and females of sheep as different kinds.
(6) Male and female sheep certainly count as one kind, and therefore the seller, having kept back some, viz., the females, for himself, is in fact solely liable to give the first of the fleece to the priest.
(7) Sc. the seller.
(8) The wool of male sheep is harder and therefore of less value than that of females. The seller is, in our Mishnah, advised for his own advantage to buy back some of the wool of the males from the purchaser, so as not to have to give soft and more expensive wool to the priest in respect of the hard wool of the male now in possession of the purchaser.
(9) For the seller is solely liable, inasmuch as the two colours of wool count as one kind and he retained one colour for himself. Consequently the reason of the Mishnah is not, as R. Ila'i suggested, because one may not give one kind as due for another kind.
(10) I.e., part thereof is set aside as terumah and the rest is common produce, but the whole produce is not to be terumah; cf. Ter. IV, 5.
(12) Sc. the latter Baraita represents the view of R. Ila'i that with regard to the first of the fleece, as with terumah, there must be a perceptible remainder.
(13) Likewise the priestly dues of the shoulder, the two cheeks, and the maw (Rashi).
(14) And therefore a man that has suffered a seminal emission may occupy himself with the study of the Torah; cf. Ber. 220.
(16) For with regard to the priestly dues it is written: They shall give unto the priest, that is, the dues shall be fit for the priest to be eaten by him and not for his dog only.
(17) Cf. Lev. XXVII, 32: And all the tithe of cattle and sheep, whatsoever passeth under the rod, the tenth shall be holy unto the Lord. With regard to the law of the first of the fleece the word ‘sheep’ is also written, cf. Deut. XVIII, 4.
(18) That the cattle tithe does not apply to a trefah animal.
(19) E.g., an animal whose hind-legs were cut off above the knee-joint (v. supra 76a). And so all trefah animals are
(20) Cf. Deut. XV, 19: All the firstling males that are born of thy cattle and of thy sheep thou shalt sanctify unto the Lord.

(21) A firstling that is born a trefah is nevertheless sacred, and must be buried.

(22) Sc. the cattle tithe and the first of the fleece.

(23) These two laws — Sc. the cattle tithe and the first of the fleece — apply not only to male but also to female animals, whereas the firstling applies only to the males.

(24) They do not apply to unclean animals, whereas the firstling of an ass is also sacred.

(25) They require a minimum number of animals for the law to apply; for the first of the fleece there must be at least five sheep, and for the cattle tithe there must be ten animals, whereas one single firstling is sacred.

(26) They are not sacred when born, like the firstling.

(27) They do not apply to human beings, whereas the first-born of man is holy.

(28) They only apply to ordinary animals, i.e., not firstlings.

(29) These two laws were first promulgated on Mount Sinai at the giving of the Torah, whereas the law of the firstling was made known to Israel, whilst still in Egypt, cf. Ex. XIII, 2ff.

(30) An orphan, i.e., a beast whose dam died or was slaughtered at the very moment that it was born, is sacred if a firstling, and is subject to the law of the first of the fleece, but is exempt from the cattle tithe.

(31) Animals bought or held jointly or received as a gift are subject to the law of the firstling and to the first of the fleece but are exempt from the cattle tithe. V. Bek. 55b, 56b.

(32) This applies at all times both during the existence of the Temple and after it, whereas the cattle tithe does not operate nowadays; cf. Bek. 53a. V. however, Tosaf. s.v. לֶפֶנְיָנָה.

(33) The firstling and the first of the fleece are to be given to the priest, whereas the cattle tithe is consumed by the owner like peace-offerings.
(vii) sacred, and (viii) sold, and these have more points in common? — It is preferable to draw the analogy from ordinary animals.

THE LAW OF THE FIRST OF THE FLEECE APPLIES ONLY TO SHEEP. Whence is this derived? — R. Hisda said: An inference is made by means of the common expression ‘fleece’; it is written here: The first of the fleece, and it is written there: And if he were not warned with the fleece of my sheep; just as there it is [the fleece of], sheep, so here it refers to [the fleece of] sheep. Should not the inference rather be made by means of the common expression ‘fleece’ from the law of the firstling? For it has been taught: From the verse: Thou shalt do no work with the firstling of thine ox, nor shear the fleece of the firstling of thy sheep, I only know that an ox [may not be put] to any work and that the sheep [may not be] shorn, whence do I know to apply the restriction of the one to the other? The text therefore states: Thou shalt do no work . . . nor shear! — Scripture says: ‘Thou shalt give him’, and not for his sack. If so, then goats’ hair should also be subject to this law, should it not? — It is necessary that it be shorn, which is not the case [with goats’ hair]. But whom, have you heard, holding this view? It is R. Jose, is it not? And R. Jose agrees that what is the general practice [is included]. As R. Joshua b. Levi said elsewhere, The expression ‘to stand to minister’ indicates something serviceable for ministering, so here too, it must be something serviceable for ministering. What then is the significance of the analogy by reason of the common expression ‘fleece’? — It is in respect of the following teaching of a Tanna of the school of R. Ishmael. For a Tanna of the school of R. Ishmael taught: Sheep with hard wool are exempt from the law of the first of the fleece, since it is written: And if he were not warmed with the fleece of my sheep. One [Baraita] teaches: If a man shears the [hair of] goats or washes the sheep [and plucks their wool] he is exempt from the first of the fleece. Another [Baraita] teaches: If a man shears the [hair of] goats he is exempt from the first of the fleece; if he washes the sheep [and then plucks their wool] he is liable. There is, however, no difficulty; for one [Baraita] sets forth R. Jose’s view, the other that of the Rabbis. For it has been taught: Scripture says: The gleaning of thy harvest, but not the gleaning of plucking. R. Jose says: Gleaning is only that which falls at the reaping. Is not R. Jose’s view identical with that of the first Tanna? — The whole of the Baraita sets forth R. Jose’s view, render therefore, ‘For R. Jose says: Gleaning is only that which falls at the reaping’.

R. Aha the son of Raba said to R. Ashi: R. Jose nevertheless agrees that what is the general practice [is included]. For it has been taught: R. Jose says, [Scripture states:] Harvest from which I only know that reaping [is subject to the law of gleanings]; whence would I know uprooting? The text therefore states: To reap. And whence would I know plucking? The text therefore states: When thou reapest. Rabina said to R. Ashi: We have also learnt the same. If rows of onions are planted among vegetables, R. Jose says: ‘The corner’ must be left in each [row]. But the Sages say: In one for all.

WHAT IS MEANT BY ‘MANY’? Now Beth Shammai’s view is clear, for [we see that] two sheep are also referred to as zon, but what is the reason for Beth Hillel’s view? — R. Kahana answered: The verse says: Five sheep ready dressed, that is, ‘ready’ [now] for the fulfilment of two precepts, viz., the first of the fleece and the priestly dues. But perhaps it refers to the law of the firstling and the priestly dues? — [This cannot be, for] is not one [sheep] subject to the law of the firstling? Then according to your suggestion [it can also be asked:] Is not one [sheep] subject to the priestly dues? — Rather, said R. Ashi, the verse says: ‘Five sheep ready dressed’, that is, they bid their owner to be ready, addressing him, ‘Up, perform the commandment’.

It was taught: R. Ishmael son of R. Jose says in the name of his father, Four [sheep are subject to the law of the first of the fleece], as it is written: Four sheep for a sheep.\textsuperscript{35} It was taught: Rabbi said: Had their\textsuperscript{36} views been based on words from the Torah and Beribbi's\textsuperscript{37} view on words from the prophets, we should nevertheless have had to adopt Beribbi's view.\textsuperscript{38} how much more now that their views are based on words from the Prophets and Beribbi's view on words of the Torah! But has not a Master said,\textsuperscript{39} A compromise of a third [independent opinion] is no true compromise?\textsuperscript{40}

(1) The firstling and the first of the fleece have not to be consecrated, the former because it is sacred from the womb and the latter because it has no sanctity whatsoever, whereas the cattle tithe must be consecrated with the rod.

(2) These may be sold by the priest, but the cattle tithe may neither be sold nor exchanged, v. Bek. 320.

(3) Rather than from a firstling.

(4) Deut. XVIII, 4.

(5) Job XXXI, 20.

(6) Bek. 250.

(7) Deut. XV, 19.

(8) These verbs stated at the head of the sentence imply that the prohibition is general and not restricted to the specific objects mentioned in the verse. It follows then that it is forbidden to shear ‘the fleece’ (i.e., the hair) of an ox; consequently by analogy with the firstling ‘the fleece’ of an ox should also be subject to the law of the first of the fleece.

(9) Deut. XVIII, 4. It must be given to the priest for his use, i.e., for clothing; the fleece of an ox, however, is not usually made into clothing but used for making sacks.

(10) Since goats’ hair is suitable to be made into cloth.

(11) The common practice is to pluck the hair off the goats and not to shear it.

(12) That the words of the Torah must be given their strictest meaning, so that the word ‘fleece’ from root \textsuperscript{3}\textsuperscript{22}\textsuperscript{3}\textsuperscript{3}\textsuperscript{10} to shear, implies only what is shorn.

(13) V. infra.

(14) And since goats’ hair is generally plucked, what is plucked is deemed to be its ‘fleece’ and therefore should be subject to the law of the first of the fleece!

(15) Infra 1380.

(16) Deut. XVIII, 5. This verse follows immediately after the one enjoining the law of the first fleece.

(17) I.e., the fleece referred to in the preceding verse 4 must be such as could be used for the priestly robes of service, and the blue wool in the priestly garments was of sheep's wool and not of goats’ hair.

(18) Bek. 17a.

(19) Job. XXXI, 20. Hence only soft wool which gives warmth is subject to the law of the first of the fleece, but not hard wool; this rule is established by reason of the analogy through the expression ‘fleece’.

(20) The usual practice is to shear the wool of the sheep, and to pluck the hair of the goats after they have been washed in water so that the hair should come away more easily. Any person who acts contrary to these practices is exempt from giving the first of the fleece.

(21) The first Baraitha represents the view of R. Jose who applies the strictest meanings to the terms of Scripture.

(22) Lev. XIX, 9.

(23) If a man harvested his field by plucking with his hand the ears of corn he is not subject to the law of gleanings.

(24) Lit., ‘which comes on account of the harvest’.

(25) And with many vegetables, e.g., onions and garlic, plucking is the normal method of ‘ingathering’, and renders the field subject to the law of ‘the corner’.

(26) Is also subject to the law of gleanings.

(27) Lev. XXIII, 22. This as well as the ‘preceding expression ‘to reap’ is redundant in the verse and serves to include every manner of ‘harvesting’ which is the usual practice with regard to the particular plants.

(28) Pe’ah III, 4.

(29) Of all vegetables only onions and garlic are subject to the law of ‘the corner’. Here, since the other vegetables separate the rows of onions from each other, each row, maintains R. Jose, is deemed a separate field and therefore each is subject to the law of ‘the corner’. It is clear, however, that that which is usually plucked, as onions, is subject to the law of the corners.

(30) \textsuperscript{3}\textsuperscript{22}\textsuperscript{3}\textsuperscript{10}, ‘flock’; in the verse quoted by him in the Mishnah; Isa. VII, 21.

(31) 1 Sam. XXV, 18.
Since there is the required minimum of five sheep.

This can only refer to the law of the first of the fleece for which, as is apparent from the verse, there must be a minimum of five sheep; for the law of the firstling and the priestly dues apply even to a single sheep.

So according to Rashi, Alfasi and MSS. In cur. edd. ‘In the school of R. Ishmael b. R. Jose it was said in the name of his father’.

Ex. XXI, 37. Here the word $\text{יִנְסַב}$ is used of four sheep.

A title of honour applied to scholars of eminence; here applied to R. Jose. V. supra p. 52, and J.E. III, p. 52.

Since it is assumed for the present that Beribbi's view is in the nature of a compromise, i.e., not so many as five as Beth Hillel would have it; nor so few as two as Beth Shammai, but four.

And cannot be accepted as the final decision. Here Beribbi's view is not a true compromise, for it does not adopt any of the arguments of the conflicting Rabbis, but constitutes a third independent opinion opposed in its entirety to each of the other opinions.

Talmud - Mas. Chullin 137b

— R. Johanan said: He had it as a tradition deriving from Haggai, Zechariah and Malachi. R. Dosa b. Harkinas says . . . [WHATEVER THEIR FLEECEES WEIGH]. What is meant by 'WHATEVER'? — Rab said, [At least] a maneh and a half, provided each supplies [no less than] a fifth [of this quantity]. Samuel said, [At least] sixty [sela's], and he gives thereof one sela' to the priest. Rabbah b. Bar Hana said in the name of R. Johanan, [At least] six [sela's], and he gives five to the priest and retains one for himself. Ulla said in the name of R. Eleazar: Our Mishnah expressly says: WHATEVER.

We have learnt: AND HOW MUCH SHOULD ONE GIVE HIM? THE WEIGHT OF FIVE SELA'S IN JUDAH, WHICH IS EQUAL. TO TEN SELA'S IN GALILEE. Now this is in order according to the views of Rab and R. Johanan, but it surely presents a difficulty, does it not, to Samuel and R. 'Eleazar? — Then, as you would have it, it also presents a difficulty to Rab? For did not Rab and Samuel both rule that the proper measure for the first of the fleece is one sixtieth part? But the fact is as has already been taught in connection with this [Mishnah] that Rab and Samuel both said; it speaks of the case of an Israelite who has many fleeces and who wishes to distribute them among a number of priests, and we tell him that he must not give less than the weight of five sela's to each.

[To turn to] the main text. ‘Rab and Samuel both ruled: The proper measure for the first of the fleece is one sixtieth part, for terumah one sixtieth part, and for the "corner" one sixtieth part’. ‘For terumah one sixtieth part’. But we have learnt: The proper measure for terumah, if a man is liberal, is one fortieth part? — According to the law of the Torah the measure is one sixtieth part, but by Rabbinic enactment it is one fortieth part. But has not Samuel stated that one grain of wheat frees the stack? — The law of the Torah is as Samuel stated it; but the Rabbinic enactment is that in respect of that which is subject [to terumah] only by the Rabbis the measure is one sixtieth part, and in respect of that which is subject [to terumah] only by the Rabbis the measure is one sixtieth part.

‘For the "corner" one sixtieth part’. But we have learnt: These are the things which have no fixed measure: the corner [of the field], the firstfruits, and the appearance-offering! — By law of the Torah there is no fixed measure, but by Rabbinic enactment it is fixed as one sixtieth part. Then what does he teach us? We have learnt it: The corner should not be less than one sixtieth part, even though they have said that no fixed measure is prescribed for the corner! — That gives the rule for the Land [of Israel], here [Rab and Samuel] give the rule for outside the Land [of Israel]. When Isi b. Hini went up [to Palestine], R. Johanan found him teaching his son [our Mishnah and using the term] rehelim. He [R. Johanan] said to him, ‘Use the term reheloth’. The other retorted, ‘But it is written: Two hundred rehelim'.

He replied: 'The Torah uses its own language and the Sages their own'.

He [R. Johanan] then enquired, 'Who is the head of the Academy in Babylon'? 'Abba Arika', he replied. 'And you simply call him Abba Arika!' said [R. Johanan]. 'I remember when I was sitting before Rabbi, seventeen rows behind Rab, seeing sparks of fire leaping from the mouth of Rabbi into the mouth of Rab and from the mouth of Rab into the mouth of Rabbi, and I could not understand what they were saying; and you simply call him Abba Arika!' Then the other asked, 'What is the minimum quantity subject to the law of the first of the fleece'? — ‘Sixty [sela's]’, he replied. ‘But’, said the other, ‘we have learnt: WHATEVER [THEIR FLEECES WEIGH]!’ ‘Then what difference is there between me and you?’ he retorted.

When R. Dimi came [from Palestine] he reported: With regard to the first of the fleece, Rab said: Sixty; R. Johanan said in the name of R. Jannai: Six. Thereupon Abaye said to R. Dimi: One opinion is quite in order, but the other presents to us a difficulty. There is indeed no contradiction between the one opinion of R. Johanan and the other, for one is his own opinions the other that of his master; but surely there is a contradiction between this opinion of Rab and the other, for Rab has said: At least a maneh and a half — There is also no contradiction between this opinion of Rab and the other, for by ‘a maneh’ he meant [a maneh] of forty sela's, so that [a maneh and a half] is equal to (1) R. Jose.

(2) And therefore his opinion should be accepted as final.
(3) From the five sheep there must be a minimum quantity of wool, of one maneh and a half in order to be subject to the law of the first of the fleece. This quantity equals thirty-seven and a half sela's (one maneh twenty-five sela's).
(4) No sheep shall supply less than seven and a half sela's of wool.
(5) Whatever quantity of wool the five sheep produce, even though only one sela' in all, it is subject to this law.
(6) For R. Johanan expressly stated that five sela's weight shall be given to the priest in every case, even out of a total of six sela's! Rab also agrees with the ruling of the Mishnah that five sela's' weight must be given to the priest, but he merely establishes the minimum quantity of wool that is subject to this law.
(7) For according to Samuel the quantity of one sela’ only, and according to Ulla even less, shall be given to the priest.
(8) I.e., the amount to be given to the priest shall not be less than one sixtieth part of the whole; whereas now it is suggested, according to Rab, that out of a total of thirty-seven and a half sela's five shall be given to the priest, almost one-seventh!
(9) The statement of the Mishnah FIVE SELA'S does not purport to establish this amount as the minimum quantity to be given to the priest, for this is fixed at one sixtieth in accordance with the ruling of Rab and Samuel.
(10) Sc. the sixtieth part.
(11) V. Ter. IV, 3, where the Mishnah continues: If he is mean it is one sixtieth part. Surely Rab and Samuel would not adopt as the general standard the measure given in the case of a mean person.
(12) This is indicated in Ezek. XLV, 13: This is the heave offering (terumah) which ye shall offer; the sixth part of an ephah (i.e., half a se'ah) from an homer of wheat (i.e., thirty se'ah). That is one sixtieth part.
(13) The obligation of terumah can be discharged by the removal of one grain from the heap, since the Torah does not prescribe any specific amount.
(14) That one grain discharges the obligation of terumah.
(15) Viz., corn, wine, and oil; cf. Deut. XVIII, 4.
(16) Viz., other fruits (besides the vine) and vegetables.
(17) Pe'ah I, 1.
(18) Heb. פְּאָה. The offerings to be brought on appearing before the Lord at the three Festivals (in accordance with Deut. XVI, 16: They shall not appear before the Lord empty) are not limited in their value; but see Hag. 20.
(19) Pe'ah I, 2.
(20) In the ruling of R. Dosa b. Harkinas. פְּאָהִים, the plural of פְּאָה (a ewe, lamb) with the masculine plural ending im.
(21) פְּאָהִים with the feminine plural ending oth.
(22) Gen. XXXII, 15.
In the speech of the Rabbis there is a marked tendency to adopt the plural ending oth in place of the ending im with which the same words are found in the Bible. Cf. the plural of וּכְנַהְוָא דֶּרֶךְ, עֲלוֹת, etc.

identified by Zuri (תכלית התפילה והzá^{18}בר, pp. 247ff) as the Archi Synagogi, the supreme authority over the synagogues. V. Sot., (Sonc. ed.) p. 202, n. 5.

(26) And not by the generally accepted title of ‘Rab’, the Master, par excellence.

‘If I do not know the interpretation of the Mishnah, then I am no better than you’. The Mishnah by the expression WHATEVER assumed a minimum of sixty selas so that the priest would receive at least one sela’.

(28) The weight of sixty selas is the minimum quantity subject to the law of the first of the fleece. Or: the amount to be given to the priest must be one sixtieth part of the whole.

In MS.M. ‘sixty’. V. Maharam a.l.

In fact there is an apparent contradiction between two statements of R. Johanan. Above it has been stated: ‘Rabbah b. Bar Hana said in the name of R. Johanan: At least six selas’; but subsequently we read that R. Johanan told Isi b. Hini that there must be at least sixty selas in order to be subject to the law of the first of the fleece. The report of R. Dimi however clears up this contradiction, for it is manifest that the former statement was not the personal view of R. Johanan but that of his teacher R. Jannai, and R. Dimi expressly reported it so.

I.e., there must be a maneh and a half — thirty-seven and a half selas — to be subject to the law of the first of the fleece, whereas according to R. Dimi Rab ruled that there must be a minimum of sixty selas. According to the second interpretation (v. p. 790, n. 9) the contradiction between Rab is this: Rab is reported by R. Dimi to have ruled that the measure for the first of the fleece is one sixtieth part, whereas previously Rab ruled that out of thirty-seven and a half selas, the minimum quantity that is subject to the law of the first of the fleece, one sela’, which is the very least that would constitute ‘giving’ must be given to the priest.

Talmud - Mas. Chullin 138a

sixty selas. But do we know of any Tanna that refers to a maneh of forty selas? — We do, indeed; for it has been taught: A new waterskin, even though it can hold pomegranates, is clean; if it had been sewn and then was torn, [it thereby becomes clean provided the rent was of] such a size as to let through pomegranates. R. Eliezer b. Jacob says: Of such a size as to let through a warp-clew [which weighs] one fourth part of a maneh of forty selas.

AND NOW MUCH SHOULD ONE GIVE HIM . . . [OF BLEACHED WOOL]. A Tanna taught: It does not mean that one must first bleach it and give it him, but that after the priest has bleached it there should be the weight of five selas.

SUFFICIENT TO MAKE FROM IT A SMALL GARMENT. Whence is this derived? — R. Joshua b. Levi said: The expression ‘to stand to minister’ indicates that it must be something serviceable for ministering, and that is, the girdle. Perhaps it is the robe [that is meant]? — If you grasp a lot, you cannot hold it; if you grasp a little, you can hold it. Perhaps it is the woolen cap [that is meant]? For it has been taught: Upon the High Priest's head there lay a woolen cap upon which was placed the plate [of gold], in order to fulfil literally what is said: And thou shalt put it on a lace of blue wool! — The verse says: Him and his sons, that is, an article worn alike by Aaron and his sons. But the girdle is not worn alike [by High Priest and priest], is it? This, however, presents no difficulty to him who holds that the girdle worn by the High Priest [on the Day of Atonement] was not similar to that worn by an ordinary priest [the whole year round]; but what can be said according to him who holds that the girdle worn by the High Priest [on the Day of Atonement] was similar to that worn by an ordinary priest [the whole year round]? — The name girdle, however, is to be found with each.

IF THE OWNER DID NOT MANAGE TO GIVE etc. It was stated: If a man sheared the first sheep and immediately sold it, R. Hisda says: He is liable [to give the first of the fleece]; but R.
Nathan b. Hoshaia says: He is exempt. ‘R. Hisda says: He is liable’, because he has shorn;¹⁶ ‘R. Nathan b. Hoshaia says: He is exempt’, because at the time that the requisite quantity has been reached one must be able to refer to [the sheep as] ‘thy sheep’, and this is not the case here.¹⁷

We have learnt: IF A MAN BOUGHT THE FLEECES OF A FLOCK BELONGING TO A GENTILE, HE IS EXEMPT FROM THE LAW OF THE FIRST OF THE FLEECE. It follows from this that if [he acquired] the flock for [the time that he was] shearing, he would be liable [to the first of the fleece].¹⁸ But why? Does not each sheep leave his possession after it has been shorn?¹⁹ — R. Hisda interpreted this according to the view of R. Nathan b. Hoshaia as follows: He²⁰ granted him possession of the flock for thirty days.²¹

IF A MAN BOUGHT THE FLEECE OF A FLOCK BELONGING TO HIS NEIGHBOUR, [AND THE SELLER KEPT BACK SOME FOR HIMSELF, THE SELLER IS LIABLE]. Who is the authority that holds that where the seller keeps back some for himself we turn to the seller?²² — R. Hisda said: It is R. Judah, for we have learnt:²³ If a man sold single trees²⁴ in his field, the buyer must leave the ‘Corner’ from each tree.²⁵ R. Judah said: This applies only if the owner of the field had not kept back [any tree for himself], but if the owner of the field had kept back some for himself he must leave the ‘Corner’ for the whole.²⁶ Raba said to him: But did not the Master himself say: ‘Provided the owner of the field had begun to reap’?²⁷ And if you were to suggest in this case, too, ‘Provided the owner of the sheep had begun to shear’,²⁸ [I reply that the cases are not alike]. For it is right in that case, since it is written: And when ye reap the harvest of your land,²⁹ that is, the moment one begins to reap one becomes bound to leave the ‘Corner’ for the whole field; but in this case, the moment one begins to shear one does not become liable for the whole flock.⁰ — Rather, said Raba: It is the following Tanna, for we have learnt:³¹ If a man said: ‘Sell me the entrails of this cow’, and among them were the priestly dues, he must give them to the priest, and [the seller] need not allow any reduction in the purchase price on that account. But if he bought them from him by weight, he must give them to a priest, and [the seller] must allow a reduction in the price on that account.

---

(1) I.e., unfinished; the skin had not yet been sewn up completely and therefore it cannot contract uncleanness, for it is an unfinished article.
(2) Cf. Kel. XVII, 1, 2.
(3) I.e., it is not incumbent upon an Israelite to give the priest bleached wool, but he must estimate such a quantity as would, after bleaching, make up five sela's weight.
(4) Deut. XVIII, 5; this verse follows immediately after the law of the first of the fleece.
(5) Sc. the first of the fleece given to the priest.
(6) Which is the smallest article among the priestly robes, and could be woven out of five sela's of wool.
(7) A proverbial saying. I.e., where there are two possible inferences always select that which gives the smaller result. V. Rashi s.v. נִשְׂפָּת.
(8) Ex. XXVIII, 37.
(9) Deut. XVIII, 5.
(10) Whereas the woollen cap was worn by the High Priest only.
(11) Which was of linen only, cf. Lev. XVI, 4.
(12) V. Yoma 6a. For the whole year round both the High Priest and the ordinary priest wore a girdle of wool and linen combined, cf. Ex. XXXIX, 29; so that a woolen girdle is a garment worn alike by priest and High Priest.
(13) I.e., both were of linen, and only the High Priest wore a girdle of wool and linen (except on the Day of Atonement); so that it cannot be said that the ‘woollen girdle’ was worn alike by ‘Aaron and his sons’.
(14) Lit., ‘is in the world’. Both the High Priest and ordinary priests were alike in that they wore girdles although the material in each case was different.
(15) Sc. the sheep, and so he did with all his sheep (Rashi and R. Nissim). V., however Maim. Yad, Bikkurim, X, 15.
(16) The requisite number of sheep; and at the time of shearing each sheep was still his, and it is in accordance with the precept of the Torah ‘The first of the fleece of thy sheep’.
(17) For when the obligation of the first of the fleece falls due, namely with the shearing of the fifth sheep, the owner has already sold the first four sheep.

(18) The reason for the exemption in the Mishnah is that the sheep at no time belonged to the shearer, but if they did belong to him, even if only temporarily, he would be liable.

(19) This clearly is in conflict with R. Nathan b. Hoshia.

(20) Sc. the gentile.

(21) The case was not, as assumed, that immediately after the shearing of each sheep that sheep reverted to its owner, but that the ownership in all the sheep remained with the Israelite for thirty days, or for any period until the end of all the shearing.

(22) I.e., the obligation to give the first of the fleece to the priest lies entirely upon the seller.

(23) Pe’akh. III, 5.

(24) Lit., ‘trunks of trees’, meaning single trees, but not several trees together with the land between them.

(25) For each tree is regarded as a separate entity, and each is subject to the law of the ‘Corner’.

(26) Thus the obligation of leaving the ‘Corner’, even in respect of the trees actually sold, lies upon the seller, since he kept back some for himself. This view therefore corresponds with the view in our Mishnah.

(27) I.e., he had begun to gather in the fruits before he had sold any of the trees; in that case the duty of the ‘Corner’ lay upon him in respect of the entire field.

(28) Only then is the seller liable to give the priest's due.

(29) Lev. XIX, 9.

(30) The obligation of the first of the fleece arises only after the shearing, for Scripture does not use the expression here ‘And when ye shear’.

(31) V. supra 132a.

(32) The purchaser.

Talmud - Mas. Chullin 138b

Hence it is clear that no man sells the priestly dues; here, too, the priest's due no man sells. Therefore, if the seller kept back [some fleece for himself] the seller is solely liable [to give the first of the fleece], for the buyer can say to him, ‘The priest's due still remains with you’. If he did not keep back anything for himself the buyer is liable; for the seller can say to him, ‘I never sold you the priest's due’.

CHAPTER XI

MISHNAH. THE LAW OF LETTING [THE DAM] GO FROM THE NEST IS IN FORCE BOTH WITHIN THE HOLY LAND AND OUTSIDE IT, BOTH DURING THE EXISTENCE OF THE TEMPLE AND AFTER IT, IN RESPECT OF UNCONSECRATED BIRDS BUT NOT CONSECRATED BIRDS. THE LAW OF COVERING UP THE BLOOD IS OF WIDER APPLICATION THAN THE LAW OF LETTING THE DAM GO; FOR THE LAW OF COVERING UP THE BLOOD APPLIES TO WILD ANIMALS AS WELL AS BIRDS, WHETHER THEY ARE AT ONE'S DISPOSAL OR NOT, WHEREAS THE LAW OF LETTING [THE DAM] GO FROM THE NEST APPLIES ONLY TO BIRDS AND ONLY TO THOSE WHICH ARE NOT AT ONE'S DISPOSAL. WHICH ARE THEY THAT ARE NOT AT ONE'S DISPOSAL? SUCH AS GEESE AND FOWLS THAT MADE THEIR NESTS IN THE OPEN FIELD; BUT IF THEY MADE THEIR NESTS WITHIN A HOUSE OR IN THE CASE OF HERODIAN DOVES, ONE IS NOT BOUND TO LET [THE DAM] GO. AN UNCLEAN BIRD ONE IS NOT BOUND TO LET GO. IF AN UNCLEAN BIRD WAS SITTING ON THE EGGS OF A CLEAN BIRD, OR A CLEAN BIRD ON THE EGGS OF AN UNCLEAN BIRD, ONE IS NOT BOUND TO LET IT GO. AS TO A COCK PARTRIDGE, R. ELIEZER SAYS ONE IS BOUND TO LET IT GO, BUT THE SAGES SAY ONE IS NOT BOUND.

GEMARA. R. Abin and R. Meyasha [taught the following:] One said that the expression ‘both within the Holy Land and outside it’ was in every case unnecessary, except in [the Mishnah of] ‘The first of the fleece’,\(^{11}\) [where it had to be stated] in order to exclude the view of R. Ila‘i, who holds that the law of the first of the fleece obtains only in the Land of Israel.\(^{12}\) The other said, the expression ‘both during the existence of the Temple and after it’\(^{9}\) was in every case unnecessary, except in [the Mishnah of] ‘It and its young’, [where it had to be stated,] for I might have argued that, since that law is stated in connection with laws concerning sacrifices,\(^{13}\) it is in force only as long as sacrifices continue but it is not in force once sacrifices are no more, [the Tanna] therefore found it necessary to teach us [that it is binding for all time]. Furthermore both said that the expression ‘in respect of unconsecrated and consecrated animals’,\(^{14}\) was in every case necessary except in [the Mishnah of] ‘The sciatic nerve’,\(^{15}\) for it is obvious that the prohibition of the nerve has not vanished merely because the animal has been consecrated. But did we not establish [that Mishnah] as dealing with the young of consecrated animals?\(^{16}\) — Yes, but why did we establish [the Mishnah] in that way? Was it not because we were faced with the difficulty: ‘Why did [the Tanna] state it’? In reality however\(^{17}\) this at the very outset should offer no difficulty, for since this expression was stated in one Mishnah where it was necessary\(^{18}\) it was also stated in the other where it was not necessary at all.

IN RESPECT OF UNCONSECRATED BIRDS BUT NOT CONSECRATED BIRDS. Why not? — Because the verse: Thou shalt in any wise let the dam go,\(^{19}\) clearly refers only to such as you are bound to let go, excluding such as you are not bound to let go but rather to bring to the Temple treasurer. Rabina said: It follows, therefore, that if a clean bird killed a man, one is not bound to let it go,\(^{20}\) because the verse: ‘Thou shalt in any wise let the dam go’, clearly refers only to such as you are bound to let go, excluding such as you are not bound to let go but rather to bring to the Beth din.\(^{21}\) But what are the circumstances here? If it had already been condemned,

---

\(^{1}\) And therefore whenever the seller keeps back anything for himself it is to be presumed that he has kept back the priest's due, for that he certainly would not sell.

\(^{2}\) Not because the obligation rests upon the buyer, but because at the sale the priestly dues were not intended to pass from the seller to the buyer.

\(^{3}\) Deut. XXII, 6, 7.

\(^{4}\) Lev. XVII, 13.

\(^{5}\) I.e., always ready at hand for one's purpose and use.

\(^{6}\) Although geese and fowls are usually domesticated, if they became wild and broke loose and nested in the open field the law of letting the dam go applies.

\(^{7}\) A special breed of doves favoured by Herod; or, as some read תגרה, doves from a particular locality. These doves are quite domesticated. V. infra 139b.

\(^{8}\) Which like the hen partridge broods upon eggs of other birds; cf. Jer. XVII, 11.

\(^{9}\) Stated in the opening Mishnah of Chap. V, VI, VII, X, XI, XII.

\(^{10}\) Since every precept which is not dependent upon the land obtains both within the Land of Israel and outside it; v. Kid. 36b.

\(^{11}\) And also the Mishnah dealing with the Priestly dues, (supra Chap. X) the law of which is derived from that of the ‘first of the fleece’. (Rashi, Tosaf.).

\(^{12}\) V. supra 136b.

\(^{13}\) The law of ‘It and its young’ (Lev. XXII, 28) is immediately preceded and followed by laws concerning sacrifices.

\(^{14}\) Stated in the opening Mishnah of Chap. V and VII.

\(^{15}\) At the opening of Chap. VII.

\(^{16}\) V. supra 89b. The case therefore is not obvious, for it teaches that the prohibition of the nerve can be superimposed upon the existing prohibition of consecrated things.

\(^{17}\) In the view of R. Abin and R. Meyasha.

\(^{18}\) At the opening of Chap. V.

\(^{19}\) Deut. XXII, 7.

\(^{20}\) If found in the nest sitting upon its young ones.

\(^{21}\) I.e., the Court, to be put to death.
then surely it would have been put to death! Rather we must say that it had not yet been condemned, in which case one is bound to bring it to the Beth din so as to carry into effect the verse: So shalt thou put away the evil from the midst of thee.¹

What are the circumstances with regard to consecrated birds? If you say that a man had a nest in his home and consecrated it, but in that case the law does not apply, for the verse: If a bird's nest chance to be before thee,² excludes what is at one's disposal. You will say then that a man saw a nest somewhere and consecrated it, but in that case would it become consecrated? Does not the Divine Law say: And when a man shall sanctify his house to be holy,³ [from which we conclude that] just as his house is in his possession so must everything [that he may wish to sanctify] be in his possession? You will then say that a man lifted up the young ones,⁴ consecrated them, and put them back again; but in such a case, even though they were not consecrated, the law would not apply, for we have learnt: If a man took the young and brought them back again into the nest, and afterwards the dam returned to them, he is not bound to let it go.⁵ You will therefore say that he lifted up the dam, consecrated it, and put it back again; but in that case at the very outset, even before he consecrated it, he was bound to let it go, for it was taught: R. Johanan b. Joseph says: If a man consecrated a wild animal and then slaughtered it, he is exempt from covering up [the blood];⁶ if he slaughtered it and afterwards consecrated it, he is bound to cover up [the blood], since he was already bound to cover up [the blood] before it was consecrated!⁷ Rab suggested⁸ the case where a man consecrated the young of his dove-cote⁹ and they later broke loose.¹⁰ Samuel suggested the case where a man consecrated his hen¹¹ to the Temple treasury.¹² Now one can understand why Samuel does not suggest the case of Rab; it is because he wishes to state the law even in respect of that which is consecrated to the Temple treasury only. But why does not Rab suggest the case of Samuel? — Rab would answer thus: It is only in the case where a man consecrated the young of his dove-cote that one is not bound to let the dam go, for they are consecrated for the altar; and inasmuch as they are themselves consecrated for an offering, [even though they break loose,] their sanctity has not gone.¹³ But where a man consecrated his hen to the Temple treasury, inasmuch as it was not consecrated for the altar but only for its value, as soon as it breaks loose its sanctity has gone, and the law of letting the dam go applies. But Samuel says: Wherever it¹⁴ happens to be it is in the Lord's treasury, for it is written: The earth is the Lord's and the fullness thereof.¹⁵

And so, too, did R. Johanan say: It is a case where a man consecrated his hen to the Temple treasury, and afterwards it broke loose. Thereupon R. Simeon b. Lakish said to him: Surely as soon as it breaks loose its sanctity has gone! — He replied: Wherever it happens to be it is in the Lord's treasury, for it is written: ‘The earth is the Lord's and the fullness thereof’.

I can point out a contradiction between the words of R. Johanan [here] and the words of R. Johanan [elsewhere]; and I can point out a contradiction between the words of Resh Lakish [here] and the words of Resh Lakish [elsewhere]. For it has been stated: [If a man said], ‘Let this maneh be for the Temple treasury’, and it was stolen or lost, R. Johanan says: He is responsible for it until it reaches the hands of the Temple treasurer; but Resh Lakish says: Wherever it is it is in the Lord's treasury, for it is written, ‘The earth is the Lord's and the fullness thereof’. Hence there is a contradiction between R. Johanan's statements, and between Resh Lakish's statements.¹⁶ [I concede that] there is not necessarily a contradiction between Resh Lakish's statements, for this [the former] view he expressed before he had learnt the true view from his master R. Johanan,¹⁷ whilst that [the latter] view he expressed after he had learnt it from his master R. Johanan.¹⁸ But surely there is a contradiction between the statements of R. Johanan! — There is no contradiction even between the statements of R. Johanan, for in one case the man said: ‘I take upon myself [an offering]’ and in the other case he said: ‘Let this be [an offering]’.¹⁹ It follows then that, according to Resh Lakish, a man is not responsible [for his offering] even though he said: ‘I take upon myself’. But we have learnt: What is a votive-offering and what a freewill-offering? It is a votive-offering when a man says: ‘I take upon myself a burnt-offering’; it is a freewill-offering when a man says: ‘Let this be a burnt-offering’. And wherein do votive-offerings differ from freewill-offerings? With a votive-offering if it dies or is stolen or lost, he is responsible for it [and must replace it]; but with a freewill-offering, if it dies or is stolen or lost he is not responsible for it. — Resh Lakish can answer thus: That is so only with regard to what is consecrated for the altar, since it still needs to be offered as a sacrifice; but with regard to what is consecrated to the Temple treasury, since it has not to be offered as a sacrifice, he is not responsible for it even though he said ‘I take upon myself’. But we have learnt: If a man said: ‘Let this ox be a burnt-offering’, or, ‘Let this house be an offering’, and the ox died or the house fell down, he is not bound to make restitution; but if he said: ‘I take upon myself [to offer] this ox for a burnt-offering’, or, ‘I take upon myself [to present] this house as an offering’, and the ox died or the house fell down, he must make restitution! That is so only where the ox died or the house fell down, then indeed he must make restitution, since they are no more in existence; but where they are in existence, wherever they happen to be, they are still within the Lord's treasury, for it is written: ‘The earth is the Lord's and the fullness thereof’. R. Hamnuna said: All agree that regarding vows of valuation, even though a man said: ‘I take upon myself’, he is not bound to make restitution, for these cannot be expressed without the formula ‘I take upon myself’. For how else can they be expressed? If he were only to say: ‘My valuation’, then we do not know upon whom [lies this obligation]; and if he were to say: ‘The valuation of So-and-So’, we still do not know upon whom [lies the obligation]. Raba demurred: But surely he can say: ‘Here is my valuation’, or, ‘Here is the valuation of So-and-so’. Moreover it has been taught: R. Nathan says: It is written: And he shall give thy valuation in that day, as a holy thing unto the Lord. What does Scripture teach thereby? But inasmuch as we find that, with regard to consecrated things and second tithe, if a man exchanged them for unconsecrated money and the money was stolen or lost, he is not liable to make restitution, to it, since it is still within the Lord's treasury.

(19) R. Johanan, although maintaining the principle that wherever a thing happens to be it is still within the Lord's treasury, nevertheless holds a man responsible for his offering if he expressed himself thus: 'I take upon myself', for then the personal obligation is not discharged until the Temple treasurer has actually received it.

(20) Kin. I, 1; R.H. 6a; Meg. 82. Resh Lakish surely would not maintain his view in opposition to the Mishnah quoted and hold that even where a man said: 'I take upon myself', he is not responsible for it.

(21) That where a man says: 'I take upon myself', he is responsible for it.

(22) Therefore so long as he has not brought his offering to the Temple he will not have discharged his obligation, and up to then he is responsible for it.

(23) For as soon as he dedicates it to the Temple it automatically becomes part of the Temple treasury, and wherever it happens to be it is still within the Lord's treasury.

(24) 'Arak. 20b.

(25) Even though he specified the subject consecrated by the term 'this' he is nevertheless responsible since he undertook the vow as a personal charge. It is, however, evident from this that even in respect of what is consecrated to the Temple treasury, e.g., a house, one is bound to make restitution, contra Resh Lakish.

(26) Where a man vows to the Temple the 'valuation' of himself or of another person. The 'valuation' is fixed according to the scale prescribed in the Torah, cf. Lev. XXVII, 1ff.

(27) And he set aside the fixed amount and it was lost or stolen.

(28) Lev. XXVII, 23. This verse is stated in connection with the law of the redemption of a field that was bought and afterwards consecrated unto the Temple, and the reference in this verse to 'thy valuation' is certainly strange and out of place.

(29) For Scripture does not state that the redemption money shall be given unto the Lord, but simply that it is holy, ibid. 15.

Talmud - Mas. Chullin 139b

I might say that it is the same with regard to this too; the text therefore states: 'And he shall give thy valuation in that day as a holy thing unto the Lord'; that is to say, it is still consecrated [in thy hand] until it reaches the hand of the Temple treasurer. — Rather if this statement was reported it must have been reported as follows: R. Hamnuna said: All agree that regarding vows of valuation, even though a man did not say 'I take upon myself', he is bound to make restitution, for it is written: 'And he shall give thy valuation etc.', that is to say, it is still consecrated in thy hand until it reaches the hand of the Temple treasurer. THE LAW OF COVERING UP THE BLOOD IS OF WIDER APPLICATION etc. Our Rabbis taught: It is written: If a bird's nest chance to be before thee [in the way, in any tree or on the ground]. What does Scripture teach thereby? But because it is also written: Thou shalt in any wise let the dam go, but the young thou mayest take unto thyself, I might suppose that one should go searching over mountains and hills to find a nest, the text therefore states: 'chance to be', that is, if it happens to be before you. 'A nest', that is, any nest whatsoever. 'A bird's', that is, of a clean but not of an unclean bird. 'Before thee', that is, in a private domain. 'In the way', that is, in a public place. Whence do I know even [if found] on trees? The text states: 'In any tree'. Whence do I know even [if found] in cisterns, ditches or caverns? The text states: 'Or on the ground'. But since in the end we include everything, wherefore [does Scripture say], 'Before thee in the way'? To teach you, just as on the way the nest cannot be said to be ready at your hand, so everywhere the nest must not be ready at your hand; hence they said, [Wild] doves of the dove-cote, and doves of the loft, and birds which made their nests in the cornices [in the walls] in large houses, and geese and fowls that made their nests in the open field, one is bound to let the dam go; but if they made their nests within a house, or in the case of Herodian doves, one is not bound to let the dam go.

The Master said: ‘Just as on the way the nest cannot be said to be ready at your hand, so everywhere the nest must not be ready at your hand’. Is this [teaching] necessary? It is surely inferred from the expression ‘chance to be’ thus, ‘chance to be’, but not what is at one's disposal!
Moreover, what is the significance of the expression ‘before thee’? — Rather we must say: The expression ‘before thee’ serves to include those birds that were once before you and which later broke loose; and the expression ‘in the way’ points to the teaching of Rab Judah in the name of Rab. For Rab Judah said in the name of Rab: If a man found a nest in the sea he is bound to let the dam go, since it is written: Thus saith the Lord, who maketh a way in the sea. Then, in like manner, if a man found a nest in the sky, inasmuch as it is written: The way of an eagle in the sky, he should also, should he not, be bound to let the dam go? — It [the sky] is referred to as ‘the way of an eagle’, but never simply as ‘way’.

The Papunians asked of R. Mattenah: What if one found a nest upon a man's head? — He replied, It is written: And earth upon his head. Where is Moses indicated in the Torah? [they asked]. — In the verse: For that he also is flesh. Where is Haman indicated in the Torah? — In the verse: Is it from the tree? Where is Esther indicated in the Torah? — In the verse, And I will surely hide my face. Where is Mordecai indicated in the Torah? — In the verse: Flowing myrrh, which the Targum renders as mira dakia. WHICH ARE THEY THAT ARE ‘NOT AT ONE'S DISPOSAL’? etc. R. Hiyya and R. Simeon [b. Rabbi differ]: One reads [in the Mishnah] ‘Hadresioth’, and the other reads ‘Hardesioth’. He who reads ‘Hardesioth’ derives the word from the name of Herod; and he who reads ‘Hadresioth’ derives it from their place of origin. R. Kahana said: ‘I once saw them, and there were sixteen rows of them, each row extending over one mil, and they were calling out, kiri kiri. One, however, did not call out kiri kiri, and its neighbour said to it, ‘You blind fool, call out kiri kiri’. The other replied: ‘You blind fool, call out rather kiri keri’. Straightway she was taken and slaughtered. R. Ashi said: R. Hanina told me that all this was empty words. Empty words! surely not! — Say, rather: All this conversation was effected by magic spells.

AN UNCLEAN BIRD ONE IS NOT BOUND TO LET GO. Whence is this derived? — R. Isaac said: From the verse: If a nest of a bird [zippor] chance to be before thee. Now the term ‘of’ applies both to clean and unclean birds, but as for the term ‘zippor’, we find clean birds referred to as zippor but not unclean birds. Come and hear: It is written: The likeness of any winged zippor. Surely ‘zippor’ includes both clean and unclean birds, and ‘winged’ includes locusts! — No, ‘zippor’ refers only to clean birds, and ‘winged’ includes both unclean birds and locusts. Come and hear: It is written: Beasts and all cattle, creeping things and winged zippor. Surely ‘zippor’ includes both clean and unclean birds, and ‘winged’ includes locusts. — No, ‘zippor’ refers only to clean birds, and ‘winged’ includes both unclean birds and locusts. Come and hear: It is written: Every zippor of every sort. Surely the interpretation is as suggested in the above objection! — No, it is as suggested in the above reply. Come and hear: It is written: And thou, son of man, [thus saith the Lord God]: Speak unto the zippor of every sort. Surely the interpretation is as suggested in the above objection! — No, it is as suggested in the above reply.

Come and hear:

(1) Sc. with regard to vows of valuation, that one is not bound to make restitution for the loss of the valuation money.
(2) Hence a man is responsible for the valuation money until it actually reaches the Temple treasury, thus in conflict with R. Hammuna.
(3) Deut. XXII, 6.
(4) Ibid. 7.
(5) Even though there is only one egg or one young bird in it. V. infra Mishnah 140b.
(6) But only in such a private domain as cannot acquire the nest or the bird for the owner, e.g. a private field which is unguarded or has no fences round it. Cf. B.M. 11a.
(7) For the birds are not yet caught and certainly not at one's disposal.
A tree was washed away into the sea and upon it was a bird's nest.

Isa. XLIII, 26. Hence the term ‘way’ includes the expanse of the sea.

The bird was carrying its nest while flying.

Prov. XXX, 19.

I.e., men of Paphnia, a town situated between Bagdad and Pumbeditha (v. map at end of Kid., Sonc. ed.).

II Sam. XV, 32. Earth even though upon a man's head is still called earth and is looked upon as on the ground; likewise a nest upon a man's head is also looked upon as on the ground, and so the law of letting the dam go applies.

I.e., where in the Torah is the coming of Moses foretold? Possibly it is an attempt to find some indication or hint of the name of Moses even in Genesis, the First Book of Moses.

Gen. VI, 3. Heb. מיס which in the numerical value of its letters is equivalent to the name מוסesus — 345. Moreover this verse adds: Therefore shall his days be a hundred and twenty years, which corresponds with the years of the life of Moses.

Ibid. III, 11. Heb. מיס. The first word can be read as Haman, and the second can refer to the tree or gallows upon which Haman was hanged; cf. Esth. VII, 10.

Deut. XXXI, 18. Heb. אסתר. The second word is very like the name Esther, אסתר both in spelling and in sound. The verse in general foretells the many evils and troubles that shall befall Israel when they forsake the ways of God, and this was the case at the time of Esther, cf. Meg. 12a.

Ex. XXX, 23. Heb. מרדכי. The aramaic translation of Onkelos renders the Hebrew by מרדכי, which words both in spelling and in sound resemble מרדכי, Mordecai.

The locality referred to is unknown. V. supra, Mishnah p. 795, n. 5.

ןירדס, Master’, from Gr.  referring to Herod.

ויהי (in current ed. ויהי) ‘slave’ from Gr. , ‘a slave’. Kiri keri = the master is a slave.

For R. Kahana actually said that he saw these doves.

Of the birds.

Lit., ‘words’.

Ex. XXII, 6. Heb. מזפט. Of the birds.

Ps. CXLVIII, 10.

Ps. CXLVIII, 10.

Ibid. IV, 17; with reference to the prohibition of idolatry.

Lit., ‘of every winged (species)’. Ezek. XXXIX, 17.

Talmud - Mas. Chullin 140a

It is written: And the zippor of the heaven dwelt in the branches thereof! — They are designated ‘the zippor of the heaven’, but not ‘zippor’ alone. Come and hear: It is written: Every zippor that is clean ye may eat; from which we may deduce that there is [a zippor] that is unclean! — No, we may deduce that there is [a zippor] that is forbidden. But which is that? If it is one that is trefah, but this is expressly stated [to be forbidden]. And if it is the slaughtered bird of the leper, but this is inferred from the next verse: And these are they of which ye shall not eat, which includes the slaughtered bird of the leper! — It is, in truth, the slaughtered bird of the leper, and [it is repeated so as to teach that] one infringes on that account a positive and also a negative precept. But why not say that it is a trefah bird [that is meant, and it teaches that] one infringes on that account a positive and also a negative precept? — ‘The meaning of a verse is to be deduced from its context’, and the context deals with those that are slaughtered. Come and hear: It is written: Two living zipparim. Now what is meant by ‘living’? It means, does it not, those that are fit for your mouth, and from which follows that there are also those [zipparim] that are not fit for your mouth? — No, by ‘living’ is meant those whose principal limbs are living. Come and hear from the next word [in the above verse]: Clean. Is not the inference that there are unclean [zipparim]? — No, the inference is that there are trefah [clean birds]. But are not trefah birds excluded by the term ‘living’? Of course this presents no difficulty to him who says that a trefah can continue to live, but according to him who says that a trefah cannot continue to live, this is inferred from the teaching of a Tanna of the school of R. Ishmael. For a Tanna of the school of R. Ishmael taught: There have been prescribed qualifying and atoning sacrifices within the Temple, and there have been prescribed qualifying and atoning sacrifices outside the Temple; just as with regard to the qualifying and atoning sacrifices prescribed within the Temple, the qualifying sacrifices are equal to the atoning sacrifices, so with regard to the qualifying and atoning sacrifices prescribed outside the Temple, the qualifying sacrifices are equal to the atoning sacrifices! Rather said R. Nahman b. Isaac, [The expression ‘clean’] serves to exclude the birds of a beguiled city. But for which one? If for the one that must be set free, but surely the Torah would not enjoin to set it free if it would thereby lead to transgression! Rather it could serve for the one that must be slaughtered.

Raba said, [The expression ‘clean’] serves to exclude [the following case]: that one may not use this bird before it is set free so as to make up the pair of birds [for the purification rites] of another leper. But for which one? If for the one that was to be slaughtered, but surely it must be set free!

R. Papa said, [The expression ‘clean’] serves to exclude birds that were obtained in exchange for an idol, for it is written: And become a devoted thing like unto it; whatever you bring into being from [the devoted thing] is to be treated like it. But for which one? If for the one that must be set free, but surely the Torah would not enjoin to set it free if it would thereby lead to transgression! Rather it could serve for the one that must be slaughtered.

Rabina said: We are dealing here with a bird that had killed a man. But what are the circumstances? If it had already been condemned, then it must be put to death; we must therefore say that it had not yet been condemned. But for which one [of the leper’s birds might this be used]? If for the one that must be set free, but surely it must be brought to the Beth din so as to carry into effect the verse: So shalt thou put away the evil from the midst of thee! Rather it could serve for the one that must be slaughtered.

IF AN UNCLEAN BIRD WAS SITTING ON THE EGGS OF A CLEAN BIRD . . . [ONE IS NOT BOUND TO LET IT GO]. This is indeed clear of an unclean bird sitting on the eggs of a clean bird, for the law [of letting the dam go] applies only to a ‘zippor’, and this is not the case here; but why [is one not bound to let go] the clean bird that was sitting on the eggs of an unclean bird? It is a zippor, is it not? — As R. Kahana said [in another connection]. It is written, [But the young] thou mayest take for thyself; ‘for thyself’ but not for thy dogs; here too [we say the same], ‘Thou mayest take for thyself’, but not for thy dogs.

In what connection was this statement of R. Kahana said? — In connection with the following Baraitha which was taught: If the dam is trefah, one is still bound to let it go; if the young ones are trefah, one is not bound to let the dam go. Whence is this derived? — R. Kahana said: It is written: ‘[But the young] thou mayest take for thyself; ‘for thyself’ but not for thy dogs. But should we not regard a trefah dam on the same footing as [trefah] young ones, and as in the case of trefah young ones one is not bound to let the dam go so in the case of a trefah dam one is not bound to let it go?

(1) Dan. IV, 9. Since here there is no other synonym for bird mentioned in the verse, then surely the term ‘zippor’ includes all, both clean and unclean birds.

(2) Sc. unclean birds.

(3) Deut. XIV, 11.

(4) Although it is a clean bird.

(5) Cf. Lev. XXII, 8, which verse, according to Rabbinic tradition, refers to a clean bird that was rendered trefah.
(6) Lev. XIV, 4, 5. Of the two birds used in the purification rites of a leper one was slaughtered and was thereupon rendered forbidden for all purposes, cf. Kid. 57a, A.Z. 74a.
(7) Deut. XIV, 12. ‘Of which’ clearly refers to those clean birds mentioned in the preceding verse, implying that some of those are forbidden even though clean.
(8) V. Kid. loc. cit.
(9) That is excluded from v. 11.
(10) By deriving any benefit from the slaughtered bird of the leper one transgresses the negative precept implied in Deut. XIV, 12, and also the positive precept (i.e., the negative inference from a positive precept which has the force of a positive precept) derived from Deut. XIV, 11.
(11) For the passage begins with the verse: ‘Every clean bird ye may eat’, which means, of course, only if slaughtered.
(12) Lev. XIV, 4.
(13) Lit., ‘living in your mouth’, i.e., permitted to be eaten.
(14) And only excludes those clean birds which have an entire limb missing.
(15) Which are excluded from use in the purification rites of a leper.
(16) V. supra 42a.
(17) That a trefah bird may not be used in the purification rites of a leper.
(18) A qualifying sacrifice is one that renders a person fit to enter the Temple and partake of sacred food; in most cases (e.g., the sin-offering brought by a woman after childbirth, or the guilt-offering of a leper) the service of the sacrifice was performed inside the Temple, but in some cases (e.g. the bird-offerings of a leper) the service was performed outside the Temple. An atoning sacrifice, on the other hand, is one that atones for a sin committed; in most cases (e.g., the usual sin-offerings and guilt-offerings) the service of the sacrifice was performed inside the Temple, but in a few cases (e.g., the Scapegoat, and the heifer whose neck was to be broken) the service was performed outside the Temple.
(19) And therefore what is regarded as unfit for an atoning sacrifice, e.g. an animal that is trefah or has a physical blemish, may not be used for a qualifying sacrifice. Hence a trefah bird may not be used for the purification rites of a leper, and there is no need for any express term to exclude it.
(20) A city whose inhabitants were enticed into idolatry was to be utterly destroyed and everything belonging to it was forbidden absolutely; cf. Deut. XIII, 13ff. The term ‘clean’ thus excludes the birds of this town from being used in the purification rites of the leper.
(21) For which of the two birds of the leper's offering could such a bird be used? Cf. Lev. XIV, 4ff, where two birds are prescribed for the leper's offering, one was to be slaughtered whilst the other was to be set free.
(22) Lit., ‘for a stumbling-block’. The finder of the bird, not knowing that it originally came from a beguiled city, will eat it, and so be led into sin by another's performance of a precept. On this ground therefore it cannot be suggested that birds from a beguiled city may be used for the leper's offering.
(23) The word ‘clean’ is therefore necessary to exclude such a bird.
(24) Of the second leper's birds would it at all be possible for this to be used.
(25) In order to fulfil the rites for the purification of the first leper; thus it certainly may not be slaughtered for the second leper.
(26) I.e., it could serve this same purpose for both lepers, were it not for the fact that the word ‘clean’ excludes such a case.
(28) V. supra n. 2.
(29) The term ‘clean’ is therefore necessary to exclude such a bird from use in the purification rites of the leper.
(30) V. p. 807, n. 10.
(31) Deut. XIII, 6.
(32) For by being slaughtered it is put away from the midst of thee’. Hence the verse is necessary to exclude it.
(33) I.e., a clean bird.
(34) Ibid. XXII, 7.

Talmud - Mas. Chullin 140b

— If that were so, then the teaching that the term zippor’ excludes an unclean bird is superfluous.\(^1\) But it has been taught: The dam of young that is trefah, one is bound to let go!\(^2\) — Abaye answered:
It is to be explained thus: If the dam of the young is trefa, one is bound to let it go.

R. Hoshaia raised the question: What is the law if a man put his hand into a nest and cut through a small part of the throat organs [of the young ones]? Should we say that, since if he were to leave off cutting at this point they would become trefa, the rule "Thou mayest take for thyself" but not for thy dog' applies; or rather, since it is within his power to finish cutting, we still say [of these young ones] 'Thou mayest take for thyself', and he is therefore bound to let the dam go? — This question remains unanswered.

R. Jeremiah raised the question: Would a cloth be regarded as an interposition or not? Would loose feathers be an interposition or not? Would addled eggs be an interposition or not? What if there were two layers of eggs, one above the other? What if the male bird was upon the eggs and the dam was upon the male? — These questions remain unanswered. R. Zera raised the question: What is the law if a dove was sitting on a tasil's eggs, or if a tasil was sitting on dove's eggs? Abaye said: Come and hear: IF AN UNCLEAN BIRD WAS SITTING ON THE EGGS OF A CLEAN BIRD, OR A CLEAN BIRD ON THE EGGS OF AN UNCLEAN BIRD, ONE IS NOT BOUND TO LET IT GO. It follows, does it not, that if a clean [bird was sitting upon the eggs of another] clean bird, one is bound to let it go? — Perhaps this is so only with a hen partridge.

AS TO A COCK PARTRIDGE, R. ELIEZER SAYS ONE IS BOUND TO LET IT GO, BUT THE SAGES SAY ONE IS NOT BOUND. R. Abbahu said: What is the reason of R. Eliezer? — He draws an analogy between the expressions 'brood'; for it is written here: As the partridge broodeth over young which he has not brought forth, and it is written there: She shall hatch and brood under her shadow.

R. Eleazar said: They differ only with regard to a cock partridge, but as for a hen partridge all agree that one is bound to let it go. Is not this obvious? for the Mishnah expressly says: A COCK PARTRIDGE! — One might have thought that even the hen partridge the Rabbis exempt [from letting go], but the reason why the cock partridge was stated [in the Mishnah] was to set forth the extent of R. Eliezer's view; we are therefore taught [that it is not so].

R. Eleazar also said: They differ only with regard to a cock partridge, but as for the male of any other [bird] all agree that one is exempt [from letting it go]. Is not this obvious? For the Mishnah expressly says: AS TO A COCK PARTRIDGE? — One might have thought that even the male of any other bird R. Eliezer declares one bound [to let go], but the reason why the cock partridge was stated was to set forth the extent of the Rabbis' view; we are therefore taught [that it is not so]. There has also been taught [a Baraitha] to this effect: The male of any other bird one is not bound [to let go]; as to a cock partridge. R. Eliezer declares one bound [to let it go], but the Sages say one is not bound.

MISHNAH. IF THE DAM WAS HOVERING [OVER THE NEST] AND HER WINGS TOUCH THE NEST, ONE IS BOUND TO LET HER GO; IF HER WINGS DO NOT TOUCH THE NEST, ONE IS NOT BOUND TO LET HER GO. IF THERE WAS BUT ONE YOUNG BIRD OR ONE EGG [IN THE NEST], ONE IS STILL BOUND TO LET THE DAM GO, FOR IT IS WRITTEN: A NEST, THAT IS, ANY NEST WHATSOEVER. IF THERE WERE THERE YOUNG BIRDS ABLE TO FLY OR ADDLED EGGS, ONE IS NOT BOUND TO LET [THE DAM] GO, FOR IT IS WRITTEN, AND THE DAM SITTING UP ON THE YOUNG OR UPON THE EGGS; AS THE YOUNG ARE LIVING BEINGS SO THE EGGS MUST BE SUCH AS [WOULD PRODUCE] LIVING BEINGS; HENCE ADDLED EGGS ARE EXCLUDED. AND AS THE EGGS NEED THE CARE OF THE DAM SO THE YOUNG MUST BE SUCH AS NEED THE CARE OF THE DAM; HENCE THOSE THAT ARE ABLE TO FLY ARE EXCLUDED.
GEMARA. Our Rabbis taught: It is written: Sitting, but not hovering. I might then suppose that even when her wings touch the nest [the law does not apply], the text therefore stated: ‘Sitting’. How is this implied? — Because it is not written ‘brooding’.

Rab Judah said in the name of Rab: If she was perched upon two branches of a tree, we must consider, if when the branches slip away from each other she would fall upon them, one is bound to let her go, but if not, one is not bound [to let her go].

An objection was raised. [It was taught:] If she was sitting among them, one is not bound to let her go, if upon them, one is bound to let her go; if she was hovering over the nest, even though her wings touch the nest, one is not bound to let her go. Now presumably the expression ‘upon them’ bears the same meaning as ‘among them’, and just as ‘among them’ means that she is actually touching them so ‘upon them’ also means that she is actually touching them; it follows, however, that if she was upon the branches of a tree, one is not bound [to let her go]. — No, the expression ‘upon them’ bears the same meaning as ‘among them’, and just as ‘among them’ clearly means that she is not touching them from above so ‘upon them’ also means that she is not touching them from above, and that must be the case where she was upon the branches of a tree. It is indeed more logical to argue thus, for if you were to hold that when perched upon the branches of a tree one is not bound [to let her go], then the Tanna, in place of the case ‘If she was hovering over the nest, even though her wings touch the nest, one is not bound to let her go’, should rather have taught the case where she was perched upon the branches of a tree, and it would go without saying that where she was hovering [over the nest one is not bound to let her go]! — [This argument is not conclusive for] he wished to state the case where she was hovering [over the nest] to teach that, even though her wings actually touch the nest, one is not bound to let her go. But have we not learnt: IF THE DAM WAS HOVERING OVER THE NEST, AND HER WINGS TOUCH THE NEST, ONE IS BOUND TO LET HER GO? — R. Jeremiah answered, The Baraitha deals with the case where her wings touch the side of the nest.

Another version reads as follows: Shall we say that the following [Baraitha] is a support for his view? For it was taught: If she was sitting among them, one is not bound to let her go, if upon them, one is bound to let her go; if she was hovering over the nest, even though her wings touch the nest, one is not bound to let her go. Now presumably the expression ‘upon them’ bears the same meaning as ‘among them’, and just as ‘among them’ clearly means that she is not touching them from above so ‘upon them’ also means that she is not touching them from above, and that must be the case where she was upon the branches of a tree! — No, the expression ‘upon them’ bears the same meaning as ‘among them’, and just as ‘among them’ means that she is actually touching them so ‘upon them’ also means that she is actually touching them, but if she was perched upon the branches of a tree one would not be bound [to let her go]. But if so, [the Tanna] in place of the last case ‘If she was hovering over the nest, even though her wings touch the nest, one is not bound to let her go’.

---

(1) For if by making this comparison a trefah dam is excluded, then in like manner an unclean bird would also be excluded, thus rendering the interpretation derived from the term ‘zippor’ unnecessary.

(2) It is assumed that the Baraitha means this: if the young ones were trefah and the dam was not, one is bound to let the dam go; thus in conflict with R. Kahana.

(3) For in the case of birds the slaughtering is valid only when the greater portion of one organ of the throat has been cut, and to leave off before this requisite amount has been cut through would render the bird trefah. It must, however, be assumed here that the partly-cut organ was the gullet, for a partly-cut windpipe does not render trefah (v. supra 29a); v. Shak, Yoreh De’ah c. 292, sec. 15; and Glosses of R. Bezalel Regensburg a.l.

(4) Accordingly one is not bound to let the dam go.

(5) If a cloth was spread over the eggs in the nest and the mother-bird was sitting on it, does the law of sending away apply or not? The doubt arises through a strict literal interpretation of the verse: And the dam sitting upon the young or upon the eggs (Deut. XXII, 6), which would exclude every case where some extraneous object interposed between the dam and the eggs.

(6) Since the law does not apply where there are only addled eggs in the nest (i.e., rotten eggs, incapable of producing a chicken; v. Mishnah infra), if these addled eggs formed a layer over ordinary eggs, interposing between the dam and the ordinary eggs, are they regarded as an interposition, in which case the law of letting the dam go does not apply, or not?

(7) Does the upper layer serve as an interposition, so that one may take away the eggs of the lower layer without first letting the dam go, or not?

(8) Since the law of letting the dam go does not apply to a male bird sitting on the eggs (v. supra), is the male bird deemed an interposition between the dam and the eggs, or not?

(9) רַפָּג a clean bird, resembling a dove; cf. supra 62a.

(10) I.e., the inference which Abaye makes from the statement of the Mishnah, that where one clean bird sits upon the eggs of another clean bird the law applies, may be restricted only to the case of the hen partridge which habitually broods over other birds’ eggs.

(11) Jer. XVII, 11. This verse clearly refers to the cock partridge because of the masculine form of the verb ‘he has not brought forth’.

(12) Isa. XXXIV, 15. The comparison is between the brooding by the dam in this verse and the brooding by the male bird in the previous verse; in each case it is a proper brooding.

(13) R. Eliezer and the Rabbis.

(14) The Sages.

(15) Deut. XXII, 6.

(16) Which would signify constantly sitting upon the eggs.

(17) Throughout this passage ‘she’ refers to the dam and ‘them’ to the young or the eggs.

(18) V. p. 821, n. 4.

(19) Since she does not actually touch them; contrary to Rab Judah's ruling.

(20) For since she is directly above them, even though she does not touch them, the law of ‘letting the dam go’ applies.

(21) If where she was perched the whole time directly over the nest the law of ‘letting the dam go’ does not apply, how much less where she was hovering over the nest!

(22) Whereas in our Mishnah the case is that the wings touch the nest from above, thus actually touching the young birds or the eggs, and therefore one is bound to let the dam go. V. however, Maim. Yad, Shechitah, XIII, 13; and Tur, Yoreh De’ah, c. 292.

(23) Rab's view, as quoted by Rab Judah.

Talmud - Mas. Chullin 141a

should rather have taught the case where she was perched upon the branches of a tree, and it would go without saying that where she was hovering [over the nest one is not bound to let her go]! — He wished to state the case where she was hovering [over the nest] to teach that, even though her wings actually touch the nest, one is not bound to let her go. But have we not learnt: IF THE DAM WAS HOVERING OVER THE NEST AND HER WINGS TOUCH THE NEST, ONE IS BOUND TO LET HER GO? — R. Jeremiah answered: The Baraita deals with the case where her wings touch the side of the nest. IF THERE WAS BUT ONE YOUNG BIRD OR ONE EGG etc. A certain Rabbi said to Raba: Perhaps it should be the reverse, thus if there was but one young bird or one egg [in the nest], one is not bound to let the dam go, for according to the verse there must be young or eggs, which is not the case here; and if there were there young birds able to fly or addled eggs, one is bound to let the dam go, for it is written, a nest, that is, any nest whatsoever! — [He replied,] If that were so, the verse should have stated: ‘And the dam sitting upon them’; why is it written: And the dam sitting upon the young or upon the eggs? To compare the young with the eggs and the eggs with the young.

MISHNAH. IF A MAN LET [THE DAM] GO AND SHE RETURNED, EVEN FOUR OF FIVE TIMES, HE IS STILL BOUND [TO LET HER GO AGAIN], FOR IT IS WRITTEN, THOU SHALT IN ANY WISE LET THE DAM GO. IF A MAN SAID, ‘I WILL TAKE THE DAM AND LET THE YOUNG GO’, HE IS STILL BOUND [TO LET HER GO], FOR IT IS WRITTEN, ‘THOU SHALT IN ANY WISE LET THE DAM GO’. IF A MAN TOOK THE YOUNG AND BROUGHT THEM BACK AGAIN TO THE NEST, AND AFTERWARDS THE DAM RETURNED TO THEM, HE IS NOT BOUND TO LET HER GO.8

GEMARA. A certain Rabbi said to Raba: Perhaps ‘shalleah’ means once, and ‘teshallah’ twice? — He replied: ‘Shalleah’ implies even a hundred times; and as for ‘teshallah’, [it is required for the following teaching:] I only know [this law in the case where the dam is required] for matters of choice,11 whence do I know [that this law applies even when it is required] for the fulfillment of a precept?12 The text therefore states: ‘teshallah’, [thou shalt let her go] under all circumstances.

R. Abba the son of R. Joseph b. Raba said to R. Kahana: Then the only reason [for this] is that the Divine Law stated ‘teshallah’, but otherwise I should have said that [where one required the dam] for the fulfillment of a precept, the law did not apply. But there is here, is there not, both a positive and a negative precept?13 And [it is established law that] a positive precept cannot override a positive and negative precept! — It is necessary for the case where one had transgressed and had taken the dam. Now he has already transgressed the negative precept, and there remains only the positive precept; and one might suppose that now a positive precept can override this [remaining] positive precept,15 [Scripture] therefore teaches us [that it is not so]. This is in order, however, according to him who teaches16 that it depends upon whether he has fulfilled or not fulfilled [the positive precept],17 but according to him who teaches that it depends upon whether he has nullified or not nullified [the positive precept],18 then so long as this man has not slaughtered the dam he has not transgressed the negative precept.19 Moreover, according to R. Judah who maintains that the precept of letting [the dam] go was intended only in the first instance,20 there is now [after the transgression of the law] not even a positive precept21 — Rather, said Mar son of R. Ashi, we suppose the case where a man took up the dam in order to let it go, in which case there is no infringement of the negative precept; there is, however, a positive precept and [it might be suggested that] the positive precept [of the leper's offering] should override this positive precept.22 But in what way is this positive precept more potent than that?23 — Because one might argue: since a Master has said,24 Great is the peace between man and wife, for the Torah has permitted the name of the Holy One, blessed be He, which is to be written in all sanctity, to be washed away in the waters of bitterness,25 and since a leper so long as he has not been cleansed is forbidden marital intercourse, (for it is written: And he shall dwell outside his tent seven days;26 ‘his tent’ signifies his wife,27 hence he is forbidden marital intercourse) — one might therefore argue, since he is forbidden marital intercourse, the positive precept in his case28 should override the positive precept of letting the dam go, we are therefore taught [that it is not so].

MISHNAH. IF A MAN TOOK THE DAM WITH THE YOUNG, R. JUDAH SAYS, HE HAS INCURRED [FORTY] STRIPES, AND HE NEED NOT NOW LET HER GO. BUT THE SAGES SAY, HE MUST LET HER GO, AND HE DOES NOT INCUR STRIPES. THIS IS THE GENERAL RULE: [FOR THE TRANSGRESSION OF] ANY NEGATIVE PRECEPT WHICH ADMITS OF A REMEDY BY THE SUBSEQUENT FULFILMENT OF A POSITIVE COMMAND,29 ONE DOES NOT INCUR STRIPES.30

GEMARA. R. Abba b. Memel raised the question: Is the reason for R. Judah's view [in the Mishnah] that he is of the opinion that [for the transgression of] a negative precept which can be remedied by a subsequent act [of the transgressor] one incurs stripes, or is it that elsewhere he is of the opinion that [for the transgression of] a negative precept which can be remedied by a subsequent act one does not incur stripes, but here the reason is that he maintains that the precept of letting [the dam] go was intended only in the first instance?31 — Come and hear: A thief and a robber are subject to the penalty of stripes; so R. Judah. Now is not this case a negative precept which can be remedied by a subsequent act, for the Divine Law says: Thou shalt not rob,32 and also: He shall... restore that which he took by robbery? You can therefore infer from this that the reason for R. Judah's view [in our Mishnah] is that he is of the opinion that [for the transgression of] a negative precept which can be remedied by a subsequent act [of the transgressor] one incurs stripes. Thereupon R. Zera said to them, Have I not told you that every Baraita that was not taught in the school of

(1) So in MS.M. and also in the first version supra; cur. edd. ‘Rab Judah’.
(2) So according to MSS, and Maharsha (q.v.); in the text ‘The Mishnah’. The latter, however, in all probability, was the text before Maim. and Tur. loc. cit.; v. D.S. a.l.
(3) Deut. XXII, 6. The verse states these nouns in the plural, i.e., several young or several eggs.
(4) I.e., as eggs need the care of the dam so the young must be such as need the care of the dam, thus excluding such as can fly.
(5) I.e., as the young are living beings so the eggs must be such as can produce living beings, thus addled eggs are excluded, v. Mishnah supra. Consequently the expression ‘a nest’, signifying any nest whatsoever, includes a nest that has but one young or one egg in it.
(6) Ibid. 7. Lit., ‘letting go thou shalt let go’; i.e., as often as necessary. V. Gemara infra.
(7) Having already let the dam go.
(8) For this man has acquired possession of the young ones, and they are now always at his disposal, consequently the law no longer applies.
(9) תָּלַק, ‘to let go’, the infinitive of the verb.
(10) תָּלַק, ‘thou shalt let go’, the imperfect of the verb.
(11) I.e., for one's own purposes, either for food or for breeding.
(12) E.g., for the leper's sacrifice (Lev. XIV, 4) or for the sacrifice of a woman after childbirth (ibid. XII, 8). Whence do I know that even for these religious purposes it is not permitted to take the dam?
(13) The negative precept Thou shalt not take the dam, and the positive precept Thou shalt in any wise let the dam go.
(14) For the fulfilment of which the bird is required, v. n. 3.
(15) I.e., that the positive precept of offering birds for the leper's sacrifice should override the positive precept of letting the dam go.
(16) V. Mak. 15a, 16a.
(17) In all prohibitions the transgression of which can be rectified by a subsequent act of the transgressor — e.g., the prohibition: Thou shalt not rob (Lev. XIX, 13), can after the transgression thereof be rectified by the remedial precept: He shall restore that which he took by robbery (ibid. V, 23) — the transgressor is not liable to forty stripes unless after the transgression he does not immediately (or, at the Court's bidding, v. Rashi, Mak. 15a s.v. תָּלַק) fulfil the remedial precept. In our case, therefore, if the man does not let the dam go at once he has transgressed the law and is liable to stripes. Accordingly there now remains only the positive precept and this could be overridden by another positive precept were it not for the expression ‘teshallah’, v. supra.
(18) I.e., the transgressor does not incur the penalty of stripes for the infringement of the negative precept unless he has also nullified his chances of performing the remedial precept, e.g., here if he slaughtered the dam. But so long as he has not nullified the remedial precept, even though he defers it to some later date, he is not liable to stripes.
(19) It cannot therefore be suggested that the positive precept of the leper's sacrifice should override the law of letting the dam go for the latter still involves a positive and a negative precept; accordingly the verse stated above to exclude this is now superfluous.
(20) I.e., on finding a bird's nest a man should immediately let the dam go, for as soon as he takes up the dam he thereby transgresses the law for which he incurs forty stripes (v. next Mishnah). Thereafter he is not obliged to let her go at all, but may use it for any purpose.
(21) It, therefore, cannot be suggested that the man had transgressed the law and taken the dam, for then according to R. Judah it may be used for all purposes.
(22) By taking the dam he has not infringed the negative precept, since he took it for the purpose of letting it go, and even if he does not let it go it cannot be said that he has transgressed this negative precept retroactively. There now remains incumbent upon him the positive precept of letting it go, but this would be overridden if he were to retain it for the fulfilment of the positive precept of the leper's offering. The verse is therefore necessary to exclude this possibility.
(23) Why should the precept of the leper's offering be considered more important so as to override the precept of letting the dam go?
(24) Shab. 116a and elsewhere.
(26) Lev. XIV, 8.
(27) Cf. Deut. V, 27: Go say to them: Return to your tents, which was a permission to resume marital relations.
(28) I.e., the offering of birds which brings about the leper's purification and also the restoration of conjugal relationships.
(29) Lit., ‘in which there is (the command,) Rise and do’.
(30) Provided one fulfilled the, remedial positive act immediately according to one view above, or one did not nullify the chances of performing the remedial act according to the other view above. V. supra p. 815, n. 8 and p. 816, n. 1, notes 5 and 6, and Mak. 15b.
(31) And therefore once the dam has been taken both the negative and positive precepts have been infringed, and one is no longer obliged to send it away. V. p. 816, n. 3.
(33) Ibid. V, 23. This precept obviously can only be taken as a remedial act for the preceding prohibition; nevertheless according to R. Judah the robber incurs the penalty of stripes.
(34) So in MS.M. ‘To them’, i.e., to the students in the Beth Hamidrash (House of Study) who quoted the foregoing teaching. Cur. edd. ‘to him’.

Talmud - Mas. Chullin 141b

R. Hiyya and R. Oshaia¹ is not authentic, and that you should not put it forward as a refutation in the Beth Hamidrash? Perhaps it was taught thus: [A thief and a robber] are not subject to the penalty of forty stripes.

Come and hear: R. Oshaia and R. Hiyya taught: [It is written,] Thou shalt not go back [to fetch it],² but if a man went back [and gathered the forgotten sheaf] — [It is written,] Thou shalt not wholly reap,³ but if a man did reap the whole field — he is subject to the penalty of forty stripes;⁴ so R. Judah. You may infer from this that the reason for R. Judah's view is that he is of the opinion that [for the transgression of] a negative precept which can be remedied by a subsequent act [of the transgressor] one incurs stripes! — Perhaps the reason here is that he maintains that the precept of leaving [the gleanings etc. for the poor] was intended only in the first instance.⁵ Rabina said to R. Ashi: Come and hear: [It is written,] And ye shall let nothing of it remain until the morning; [and that which remaineth of it until the morning] ye shall burn with fire.⁶ Scripture here came and provided a positive precept as a remedy for⁷ the [disregarded] prohibition, to indicate that the prohibition is not punishable by stripes; so R. Judah. You may then infer from this that the reason for R. Judah's view [in our Mishnah] is that he maintains that the precept of letting [the dam] go was intended only in the first instance. This indeed proves it.⁸

R. Idi b. Abin said to R. Ashi: Our Mishnah also proves it, for it states: IF A MAN TOOK THE DAM WITH THE YOUNG, R. JUDAH SAYS, HE HAS INCURRED [FORTY] STRIPES, AND HE NEED NOT NOW LET HER GO. Now if you were to say that the reason for R. Judah's view is that he is of the opinion that [for the transgression of] a negative precept which can be remedied by a subsequent act [of the transgressor] one incurs guilt,⁹ then it should have stated: 'He has incurred [forty] stripes and must also let her go'! — Perhaps the Mishnah is to be interpreted thus: He has not cleared himself [by merely letting her go] until he has suffered stripes.¹⁰

How far must he let it go? — Rab Judah said, until it is out of his reach.¹¹

How should he let it go? — R. Huna said: With its feet.¹² Rab Judah said: With its wings.¹³ ‘R. Huna said: With its feet’, for it is written: That let go freely the feet of the ox and the ass.¹⁴ ‘Rab Judah said: With its wings’, for its wings are also [regarded as feet].¹⁵
A man once clipped the wings [of the dam before letting it go], let it go and then caught it again. Rab Judah had him flogged and ordered him: ‘Go, keep it until it grows its wing feathers again and then let it go’. But whose view did he adopt? For according to R. Judah he suffers stripes but need not let it go, and according to the Sages he must let it go but does not suffer stripes? — In truth he adopted the view of the Sages, but [the flogging] was chastisement of the Rabbis.16

A man once came to Raba and asked: What is the law with regard to the Temah?17 Said [Raba to himself]: Does not this man know that one is bound to let go a clean bird? He [Raba] then said to him: Perhaps [you enquire because] there was [in the nest] but one young bird or one egg? He replied: That is so.18 Then said [Raba] to him: This surely should not give rise to any doubt;18 it is expressly stated in our Mishnah: If there was but one young bird or one egg [in the nest], one is still bound to let [the dam] go. The other then sent it away; whereupon Raba set snares for it and caught it. But is there not ground here for suspicion?19 — He acted in an indirect manner20 [as did not give rise to suspicion].

Our Rabbis taught:21 [Wild] doves of the dove-cote,22 and doves22 of the loft, are subject to the law of letting [the dam] go, and are forbidden as [coming within the category of] theft in the interest of peace.23 Now if the dictum of R. Jose b. Hanina,24 that a man's courtyard acquires [property] for him even without his knowledge, is correct, then apply to this case the verse: If a bird's nest chance to be before thee, which excludes that which is always at one's disposal!25 — Raba26 said: As soon as the greater part of the egg has emerged [from the body of the bird] the law of letting [the dam] go applies, whereas [the owner of the dovecote] does not acquire it until it falls into his courtyard; therefore the ruling: ‘Are subject to the law of letting [the dam] go’ means, before it falls into his courtyard.27 If so, why are they forbidden as theft?28 — That refers to the mother-bird.29 Alternatively, you may say, it refers indeed to the eggs, for when the greater part of the egg has emerged his mind is set upon it.30 But now that Rab Judah has said in Rab's name that it is forbidden to take the eggs so long as the dam is sitting on them, it is written: Thou shalt in any wise let the dam go, and then only: Thou mayest take the young to thee, — you may even say that it [the egg] fell into his courtyard, [nevertheless the law of letting the dam go applies], for whenever he himself may acquire it his courtyard acquires it for him, but whenever he himself may not acquire it his courtyard cannot acquire it for him either.32 If so, why are they forbidden as theft in the interests of peace? If he33 let the dam go, then [to take the eggs] is actual theft,34 and if he did not let it go, then he is bound to let it go?35 — We are referring to a minor.36 But is a minor subject to provisions enacted in the interests of peace? — It means this: The father of the minor must return [the eggs]37 in the interests of peace.

Levi b. Simon assigned to Rab Judah the young of his dovecote. When the latter came before Samuel he advised him: ‘Go, knock on the nest so that [the brooding birds] shall rise up, and then take possession’. But why was this necessary?38 If in order to take possession of them;39 but surely he could have acquired them by means of a ‘cloth’.40 And if for the purpose of the Festival,41

---

(1) Who were disciples of R. Judah the Patriarch who collected the Baraita (v. Glos.).
(2) Deut. XXIV, 19.
(3) Lev. XIX, 9.
(4) Although in each case the Torah provides a remedial act, to leave the forgotten sheaf and the corner of the field for the poor and the stranger.
(5) But once the law has been transgressed there is no longer a duty to leave them for the poor; hence the precept ‘to leave’ is not a remedial act.
(6) Ex. XII, 10.
(7) Lit., ‘after’.
(8) It cannot be otherwise since here R. Judah expressly states his view that for the transgression of a negative precept which can be remedied by a subsequent act of the transgressor one does not incur stripes.

(9) And on this assumption the precept of letting the dam go must be observed even after the transgression of the law.

(10) I.e., although he is bound even now to let her go he nevertheless suffers forty stripes.

(11) And then if this same person succeeds in catching it again he is permitted to use it.

(12) I.e., he must let it go so that it should be able to walk away on its feet. In this manner he has fulfilled his obligation even though he may have injured its wings so that it cannot fly away. Alter: he must get hold of it with its feet and set it free.

(13) I.e., that it should be able to fly with its wings.

(14) Isa. XXXII, 20. The expression ‘feet’ is used in connection with ‘letting go’.

(15) So MS.M. V. Rashal and Maharsha a.l. Cur. edd. ‘since these are its wings’.

(16) The punishment decreed by the Rabbis for disobedience as opposed to stripes ordained by Biblical law.

(18) The text in cur. edd. is doubtful; the translation rests upon the reading in MS.M.

(19) That Raba ordered the other to let the dam go only that he might gain possession of it himself.

(20) Lit., ‘as though (doing a thing) with the back of the hand’.

(21) B.M. 102a.

(22) I.e., doves that roam at large seeking their food in the open field, but come to rest for the night in the dove-cote or in the loft.

(23) Strictly they do not belong to the owner of the dove-cote, but the Rabbis, for the sake of peace, and knowing that he has set his mind on them, recognized his right to them as against all others.

(24) V. B.M. 11a, and 102a.

(25) And since the dove-cote has acquired the eggs for the owner the law of letting the dam go surely cannot apply.

(27) Since the egg has not emerged entirely the dove-cote has not acquired it for the owner, so that it is not at his disposal; and therefore it is subject to the law of sending away.

(28) Seeing that the egg has not yet become the property of the owner of the dove-cote.

(29) I.e., to take away the mother-bird is regarded by the Rabbis as theft, but only in the interests of peace, for the owner of the dove-cote has no doubt been looking forward to acquire this bird, since it has nested from time to time in his dove-cote, and it would therefore be wrong to deprive him of it. Similarly to take the egg, inasmuch as it has not wholly emerged from the mother-bird but is deemed a part thereof, would also constitute theft (Rashi). Cf. however Tosaf. B.M. 102a, s.v. ‘N.

(30) And therefore, in the interests of peace, it is forbidden to deprive the owner of the dove-cote of these eggs to which he has been looking forward; but in respect of the mother-bird he has no better claim than a stranger. And on the other hand, so long as the egg has not actually been laid the law of letting the dam go still applies.

(31) Deut. XXII, 7.

(32) And since he cannot acquire it himself for the dam is sitting on it, his courtyard likewise cannot acquire it for him, so that it is not at his disposal, and therefore the law of letting the dam go applies.

(33) Sc. any person who comes to take the eggs.

(34) For as soon as the dam is lifted up from the eggs the latter become the property of the owner of the courtyard.

(35) Before the eggs can be taken, so that they are forbidden in any case.

(36) Who is about to take the eggs from the dove-cote and upon whom the law of letting the dam go is not binding.

(37) To the owner of the dove-cote.

(38) To knock on the nest so as to make the birds rise up.

(39) According to the usual manner of acquiring a thing by lifting up.

(40) The passing of a cloth or any article from one party to the other effected the transfer of the subject matter of the transaction. V. B.M. 47a. Cf. Ruth IV, 7.

(41) Whatever is intended to be used on the Festival must be ‘set in readiness’ before the Festival, otherwise it would be regarded as mukzeh, i.e., laid aside and not to be used on the Festival. The knocking on the nest would therefore be regarded as setting them in readiness for the Festival.

Talmud - Mas. Chullin 142a
it is sufficient to stand by and say: ‘This one and that one I shall take’.\(^1\) — These eggs\(^2\) were newly laid and Levi b. Simon himself had not yet acquired them.\(^3\) [Samuel] therefore said this to him [Rab Judah], ‘Go knock on the nest so that [the brooding birds] shall rise up and Levi b. Simon shall acquire them, and afterwards let him assign them to you by means of a "cloth".'

MISHNAH. A MAN MAY NOT TAKE THE DAM WITH THE YOUNG EVEN FOR THE SAKE OF CLEANSING THE LEPER.\(^4\) IF IN RESPECT OF SO LIGHT A PRECEPT, WHICH DEALS WITH THAT WHICH IS BUT WORTH AN ISSAR,\(^5\) THE TORAH SAID, THAT IT MAY BE WELL WITH THEE, AND THAT THOU MAYEST PROLONG THY DAYS,\(^6\) HOW MUCH MORE [MUST BE THE REWARD] FOR THE OBSERVANCE OF THE MORE DIFFICULT PRECEPTS OF THE TORAH!

GEMARA. It was taught: R. Jacob says,\(^7\) There is no precept in the Torah, where reward is stated by its side, from which you cannot infer the doctrine of the resurrection of the dead.\(^8\) Thus, in connection with honouring parents it is written: That thy days may be prolonged, and that it may go well with thee.\(^9\) Again in connection with the law of letting [the dam] go from the nest it is written: ‘That it may be well with thee, and that thou mayest prolong thy days’. Now, in the case where a man's father said to him, ‘Go up to the top of the building and bring me down some young birds’, and he went up to the top of the building, let the dam go and took the young ones, and on his return he fell and was killed-where is this man's length of days, and where is this man's happiness? But ‘that thy days may be prolonged’ refers to the world that is wholly long,\(^10\) and ‘that it may go well with thee’ refers to the world that is wholly good.\(^10\) But\(^11\) perhaps such a thing could not happen? — R. Jacob actually saw this occurrence. Then perhaps that person had conceived in his mind a sinful thought? — The Holy One, blessed be He, does not reckon the sinful thought for the deed.\(^12\) Perhaps then he had conceived in his mind idolatry, and it is written: That I may take the house of Israel in their own heart,\(^13\) which, according to R. Aha b. Jacob, refers to thoughts of idolatry?\(^14\) — This was what he [R. Jacob] meant to convey: if there is a reward for precepts in this world, then surely that [reward] should have stood him in good stead and guarded him from such thoughts that he come not to any hurt; we must therefore say that there is no reward for precepts in this world.

But did not R. Eleazar say that those engaged\(^15\) in [the performance of] a precept never come to harm? — When returning from the performance of a precept it is different. But did not R. Eleazar say that those engaged in a precept never come to harm, either when going [to perform it] or when returning [from the performance thereof?] — It must have been a broken ladder [that was used],\(^16\) so that injury was likely; and where injury is likely it is different, as it is written: And Samuel said: How can I go? If Saul hear it, he will kill me.\(^17\)

R. Joseph said: Had Aher\(^18\) interpreted this verse\(^19\) as R. Jacob, his daughter's son, did, he would not have sinned. What actually did he see? — Some say: He saw such an occurrence.\(^20\) Others say, He saw the tongue of R. Huzpith the Interpreter\(^21\) lying on a dung-heap, and he exclaimed, ‘Shall the mouth that uttered pearls lick the dust’! But he knew not that the verse: ‘That it may go well with thee’, refers to the world that is wholly good, and that the verse: That thy days may be prolonged’ refers to the world that is wholly long.

---

\(^1\) In accordance with the view of Beth Hillel; Bez. 10a.
\(^2\) Lit., ‘these fruits’. The eggs were newly laid and the dam was still sitting over them.
\(^3\) For so long as the dam was sitting upon them his courtyard could not acquire the eggs for him.
\(^4\) For whose purification rites two birds were required, one to be slaughtered and the other to be set free into the open field, cf. Lev. XIV, 4ff.
\(^5\) V. Glos. Rarely would the dam be worth more than an issar.
\(^6\) Deut. XXII, 7.
\(^7\) The word הֵּיכָל ‘in the school of’ is to be omitted, so in MS.M. and in Kid. 39b.
Lit., ‘upon which the doctrine of the resurrection of the dead does not depend’.

Deut. V, 16.

The promise of bliss is to be fulfilled in the world to come, and one must not expect to receive the reward of a good deed in this world; v. infra, and Kid. loc. cit.

The rest of this chapter from this point is omitted in MS.M., and apparently it was not in the text before Rashi; cf. Tosef. Hul. end. It has been inserted here from Kid. loc. cit.

Lit., ‘He does not combine the (evil) thought with the (evil) deed’; i.e., God does not punish for the sinful thought.

Ezek. XIV, 5.

I.e., the intention to serve idolatry is punishable like the act.

Lit., ‘sent’.

By the person who went up to the top of the building to fetch the young ones.

1 Sam. XVI, 2. Although Samuel was bidden by God he nevertheless hesitated for the danger of his mission was apparent.

Lit., ‘Another’, ‘a stranger’, the name attached to Elisha b. Abuyah, the great scholar and teacher of R. Meir, on his apostasy, V. Hag. 15a.

Which promises happiness and length of days to him that performs the commandment; cf. Deut. V, 16, and XXII, 7.

Where a person engaged in the performance of a precept met with an accident and was killed. This incident made him doubt the truth of the Torah and he turned unbeliever.

A martyr of the Hadrianic persecution. He is mentioned in the Mishnah once only; Sheb. X, 6. He acted as Interpreter or Amora (v. Glos.) for R. Gamaliel, v. Ber. 27b.
CHAPTER I

MISHNAH. [AN ISRAELITE] WHO BUYS AN EMBRYO OF AN ASS BELONGING TO A HEATHEN OR WHO SELLS ONE TO HIM, ALTHOUGH THIS IS NOT PERMITTED, OR WHO FORMS A PARTNERSHIP WITH HIM, OR WHO RECEIVES [AN ANIMAL] FROM HIM TO LOOK AFTER OR WHO GIVES [HIS ASS] TO HIM TO LOOK AFTER, IS EXEMPT FROM THE [LAW OF THE] FIRSTLING; FOR IT SAYS: [‘I HALLOWED UNTO ME ALL THE FIRSTBORN] IN ISRAEL’, BUT NOT IN GENTILES.

GEMARA. What need is there for all these [cases mentioned in the Mishnah]? — It is necessary [to state all these cases]. For if it taught only the case of HE WHO BUYS etc., I might have thought the reason was because he brings it [the animal] into the state of holiness but where he sells [to a heathen], since he releases it from holiness, he should be punished. He accordingly states the second case [WHO SELLS etc.] What need is there for the statement OR WHO FORMS A PARTNERSHIP WITH HIM? — It is to exclude the ruling of R. Judah Who said: A partnership with a heathen is subject to the law of the first-born. [The Mishnah] accordingly informs us [that a partnership with a heathen exempts the Israelite from the duty of the first-born]. What need is there for the case OR [AN ISRAELITE] WHO RECEIVES [AN ANIMAL] TO LOOK AFTER. And what need is there to state [the latter case itself] OR [AN ISRAELITE] WHO GIVES [AN ANIMAL] TO HIM TO LOOK AFTER. And what need is there to state [the latter case itself.] OR [AN ISRAELITE] WHO RECEIVES FROM HIM OR WHO GIVES HIM, where [the Mishnah] does not expressly state that R. Judah differs, is it really the fact that he does not differ? You must admit that he does differ without [the Mishnah] saying so; similarly here also he differs without the Mishnah saying so. Come and hear: R. Judah says: If one received an animal from a heathen to look after and it gave birth [to a firstling] we settle [with the gentile partner] for what it is worth and half of its value is given to the priest. Or if [an Israelite] gives [an animal] to him [a heathen] to look after, although he is not permitted, we punish him by compelling him to redeem the animal even up to ten times its value and he gives its whole value to the priest.

(1) A firstling.
(2) For one is forbidden to sell large cattle to a heathen because the animal is worked on the Sabbath. (A.Z. 14b).
(3) Both purchasing an animal between them.
(4) The Israelite for attending to the animal receiving in payment half of the offspring, but the animal itself belonging to the heathen.
(5) The Israelite sharing a half or a third of the offspring.
(6) Which required the Israelite to set apart the first-born as holy to be given to the priest and in the case of the firstling of an ass, to redeem it with a sheep, failing which its neck was broken. (Ex. XIII, 12, 13).
(8) Lit., ‘in others’; where a Gentile has any share in the mother or the offspring, the firstborn is not holy.
HE WHO . . . Sells ... Forms a Partnership etc., since obviously the principle that a non-Jew sharing in an animal or its offspring exempts the Israelite from the law of the first-born and which is applied in the first case (HE WHO Buys etc.), applies equally to the others.

The animal coming into the possession of an Israelite will now rest on the Sabbath and therefore, having thereby performed a meritorious act he should not be punished by being made liable to observe the law of the firstling.

By being compelled to redeem it and give it to the priest.

If where the whole firstling belongs to the Israelite he is exempt, how much more so when he only shares in the offspring as a partner?

Half of the value of the first-born is consequently given to the priest.

Since, clearly, the rule that a non-Jew sharing in the animal or offspring exempts the Israelite from the law of the firstborn, applies here as in the previous passages.

What is the difference whether the Israelite undertakes to care for the heathen's animal or the non-Jew undertakes to attend to the Israelite's animal? For in both instances, since the non-Jew has a share in the offspring, the law of the first-born does not apply.

In the case of: OR WHO GIVES HIM etc., the whole animal, as well as half of the offspring, belongs to the Israelite.

In which the gentile has no portion either in the mother or in its offspring, claiming that exemption is also applicable in this instance.

A.Z. 14b.

An animal with a broken leg. The permission refers only to a place where there is no fear of carnal relations with animals.

Since a horse is generally used for riding, and if a gentile employed it in that manner on the Sabbath, there would be no breaking of the biblical prohibition of the Sabbath law, as riding on the Sabbath is only a rabbinic restriction.

In the case of a maimed animal.

And therefore we do not fear that if this is permitted, one would sell an ordinary animal to a heathen.

Because after its birth it is fit for work, and therefore if we allow it to be sold as an embryo, we may think that it is also permissible to sell an ordinary animal to a heathen.

And we are dealing with the case of an embryo and the Mishnah says ALTHOUGH HE IS NOT PERMITTED. Hence from the silence of R. Judah we may infer that the selling of an embryo to a heathen is forbidden according to every authority.

R. Judah differs from the Mishnah, as we have seen, with reference to a partnership with a heathen, and he also differs as stated later in the cases where an Israelite undertakes to look after a heathen's animal where a heathen looks after an Israelite's animal.

Where an Israelite sells an embryo to a heathen.

To share half the offspring between the Israelite and the heathen.

The animal, however, is not consecrated for sacrifice on the altar, since half of it belongs to a heathen.

To sell an animal to a heathen.

From the possession of the heathen.

Talmud - Mas. Bechoroth 2b

Now, does this not refer to the case of an embryo? — No, it refers to the animal. But it does not say ‘damaw’ [‘its value’]? But does it not say ‘and he gives its whole value to the Priest’? Now if [the words ‘its value’] refer to the animal, what has the priest to do with it? — [No.]

We are dealing here with a case where e.g., [an Israelite] gave him a pregnant animal to fatten, since we punish him for [selling the] animal [to a gentile,] we also punish him for [selling] an embryo. Said R. Ashi, Come and hear: R. Judah permits the selling of a maimed animal because it cannot be cured. But if it could be cured, it would be forbidden. Now, is not an embryo also like [an animal] which can be cured? Deduce, therefore, from this [that it is forbidden to sell an embryo to a heathen according to R. Judah].

Some there are who referred [R. Judah's ruling on an embryo] to our Mishnah: AND WHO SELLS [AN EMBRYO] TO HIM [A HEATHEEN] ALTHOUGH HE IS NOT PERMITTED. May we say that the Mishnah is not in agreement with R. Judah? For we have learnt: R. Judah permits the selling of a maimed [animal]!4 — You can even say [that the Mishnah] agrees with R. Judah. For the case of a maimed [animal] is not a frequent occurrence!5 whereas the case of an embryo is a frequent occurrence.16 Come and hear: R. Judah Says: if one received an animal from a heathen to look after and it gave birth [to a firstling], we settle [with the gentile partner] for what it is worth and half of its value is given to the priest. Or if [an Israelite] gives [an animal] to him to look after, although he is not permitted to do so, we punish him [by making him, redeem the animal] even up to ten times its value and he gives its whole value to the Priest. Now, does this not refer to the case of an embryo? — No, it refers to the animal. But does it not say “dawaw”? [‘its value’]? — Read ‘dameha’. But does it not say ‘and he gives its whole value to the Priest’? Now if [the words ‘its value’] refer to the animal, what has the Priest to do with it? — We are dealing here with a case where e.g., an Israelite gave him a pregnant animal to fatten, and since we punish him for [selling] the animal [to a gentile,] we also punish him for [selling] an embryo. Said R. Ashi, Come and hear: R. Judah permits the selling of a maimed [animal] because it cannot be cured. But if it could be cured it would be forbidden. And an embryo is on a par with an animal that can be cured. Deduc therefore from this [that according to R. Judah it is not allowed to sell an embryo to a heathen]. The following query was put forward: If one sold an animal for its [future] offspring [to a gentile,]17 what is the ruling?18 You can put this question to R. Judah and you can put this query to the Rabbis.19 You can put the query to R. Judah thus: are we to say that R. Judah only permits the case of a maimed [animal]20 because he [the Israelite] will not come to confuse it with another animal and sell it [to a heathen], but in the case of a whole animal,21 where he may confuse it with another, [he will say that] it is forbidden, or are we to say that perhaps, if in the case of a maimed [animal] where he severs all connection with it,22 [it is allowed,] how much more so in the case of a whole animal where he has not severed all connection with it?23 You can put this query to the Rabbis, thus: are we to say that the Rabbis only prohibit in the case of a maimed [animal] because he severs all connection with it,24 but in the case of a whole animal, where he does not sever his connection from the animal, it is permissible; or are we perhaps to say that if in the case of a maimed [animal], where he will not come to confuse it [with another animal], they forbid [the selling to a heathen,] how much more so in the case of a whole animal, is there the fear [of confusion.]25 But is the reason of the Rabbis because of what [is stated] here?26 Has it not been taught: They, [the Rabbis,] said to R. Judah:27 Is it not possible to couple [an animal with a broken foot] so that it gives birth? Consequently, the reason is on account of the [future] offspring?28 — This is what the Rabbis said [to R. Judah:] ‘Our reason [why we forbid the selling of a maimed animal] is because he may come to confuse it with another [animal]. But as for you, why do you permit a maimed [animal]? [It is] because it cannot be cured, and therefore it is as if he had sold it to be slaughtered.29 But do we not couple it and it gives birth? And since we couple it and it gives birth, he will detain it.30 And thereupon he replied to them: ‘When it gives birth,31 for [in fact] it cannot take a male [for coupling purposes].’32 Come and hear: OR AN ISRAELITE WHO GIVES [HIS ASS] TO HIM [A HEATHEEN] TO LOOK AFTER. And it does not say ‘although he is not permitted’!33 — But, according to your argument, when it says: OR WHO FORMS A PARTNERSHIP WITH HIM, since it does not say [it is forbidden,] are we to infer that it is allowed? Has not the father of Samuel said: One must not form a partnership with a heathen lest he [the heathen] will be bound to take an oath to him and he will swear in the name of his idol and the Torah says: [And make no mention of the name of other gods:] neither let it be heard out of thy mouth?34 You must, therefore, admit that when [the Mishnah] lays down that selling [to a heathen] is forbidden35 the same ruling applies to a partnership [with a heathen]. Likewise here also when [the Mishnah] lays down that selling [is prohibited] the same ruling applies to kablanuth.36 Why then does the Mishnah cite [the prohibition] specifically in connection with selling?37 — Because the main prohibition refers to the selling. Come and hear: R. Judah said: If one receives an animal from a heathen to look after and it gives birth [to a first-born] we settle [with the gentile partner] for what it is worth and half of its value is given to the priest. If again an Israelite gives an animal [to a heathen] to look after, although [he knows that] this is not permitted, we fine him even up to ten times its value and he gives its whole value to the Priest. But the Sages say, so long a gentile has a share in it, it is exempt from the law of the first-born.

(1) The statement that we punish him because he is not permitted to sell to a heathen.

(2) I.e., where an Israelite gives a pregnant animal to a heathen to look after, both sharing the offspring while the animal itself belongs to the Israelite, the words ‘although it is not permitted’ referring to the embryo. We punish him by making him give the value of the embryo to the Priest. Hence we can deduce that one is forbidden to sell an embryo to a heathen.

(3) The words ‘although it is not permitted’ refer to the animal, but an embryo is allowed to be sold to a heathen.

(4) The masculine ending of the Hebrew word דם, proves that it refers to the embryo.

(5) With a feminine ending referring to הבטימה (animal), which is a feminine noun.

(6) The Priest having no claim on the animal itself, only on its first-born.

(7) We cannot deduce from here the prohibition to sell an embryo to a heathen.

(8) The Israelite and the heathen share the offspring and any increase in the animal's value after it is sold.

(9) But elsewhere, R. Judah may hold that an embryo may be sold to a gentile, just as he allows the selling of a maimed animal.

(10) Supra p. 2, n. 8.

(11) To enable it to do work on the Sabbath.

(12) For in time, after its birth, it will be fit for work.

(13) And do not, in the first place, propound a query which they subsequently attempt to solve from the Mishnah.

(14) And an embryo may be compared with a maimed animal since in both cases the animals are unable to work, and therefore R. Judah will hold that an embryo may be sold to a heathen, contrary to the ruling of our Mishnah.

(15) As it is an unusual occurrence, R. Judah permits its selling, and we do not fear lest one will sell in other circumstances also.

(16) If we therefore permit in this case, one may come to sell in other cases also.

(17) The animal itself, however, he does not sell.

(18) Should we punish him by forcing him to redeem the animal for having broken the rule prohibiting the selling of large cattle to a gentile?

(19) Who differ from R. Judah with reference to a maimed animal.

(20) Supra p. 4, n. 22.

(21) As in our query, he may think that it is permissible to sell to a gentile a whole animal, since here, too, we allow him to sell an animal for its future offspring.

(22) The Israelite leaving nothing for himself after selling.

(23) Since the animal itself belongs to the Israelite and is not yet pregnant, and when the offspring is born, it will be in the possession of the heathen.

(24) The selling her is complete and, therefore, there is the fear that one might sell also a whole animal to a heathen.

(25) For another animal, where the selling is complete and the Israelite has no share in the animal, unlike the circumstances in our query, where the animal still belongs to the Israelite and there is as yet no offspring.

(26) So that the above query naturally arises.

(27) In arguing why they forbid the selling of a sheburah to a heathen.

(28) We may therefore solve from here our query by concluding that according to the Rabbis it is forbidden to sell an animal to a heathen for the sake of its future offspring, and according to R. Judah it is permissible.

(29) Therefore there can be no fear that one might substitute another animal which is not to be slaughtered and sell it to a gentile.

(30) For the sake of its offspring, and one who sees it in the house of a heathen at the end of a year or two may come to the conclusion that it is permissible to sell an animal which is not for slaughter to a heathen.

(31) You will then inform me.

(32) Because of the animal's disability.

(33) Now here the animal was sold to the heathen for its offspring and therefore we can infer that it is permissible to sell an animal to a gentile for its future offspring.

(34) Ex. XXIII, 23. ‘Out of thy mouth’, caused by thy mouth, i.e., when you are responsible for the heathen's oath, which shows that it is not allowed.

(35) The passage in the Mishnah ALTHOUGH HE IS NOT PERMITTED.
Where the heathen undertakes to take care of the Israelite's animal in return for its offspring.\(^{(36)}\)

And not in connection with the other cases enumerated in the Mishnah.\(^{(37)}\)

Lit., ‘has a hand in the middle’.\(^{(38)}\)

Talmud - Mas. Bechoroth 3a

Now, does not this statement\(^1\) deal with the case of the animal? — No. It deals with the case of an embryo.\(^2\) I can also prove this [from the wording]. For it says: We fine him up to ten times its value; from which you may deduce that it refers to the embryo.\(^3\) [The ruling that we punish him for selling to a gentile] supports the view of Resh Lakish. For Resh Lakish said: If one sells large cattle to a heathen, we punish him by forcing him [to redeem the animal]\(^4\) even up to ten times its value. [Does Resh Lakish mean] exactly ten times or not?\(^5\) — Come and hear: For R. Joshua b. Levi said: If one sells a slave to a heathen, we punish him by forcing him [to redeem the slave] even up to a hundred times his value.\(^6\) — The case of a slave is different, for every day he [his gentile master] prevents him from carrying out religious duties.\(^7\) Another version [of this argument] is: Said Resh Lakish: If one sells large cattle to a heathen, we punish him by forcing him to redeem the animal even up to one hundred times its value. But we have learnt in a Mishnah: or if [an Israelite] gives an animal to him [a heathen] to look after, although he is not permitted, we punish him by forcing him [to redeem the animal] even up to ten times its value!\(^8\) — By selling he severs all connection with it [the animal.]\(^9\) But in the ‘case of kablanuth\(^10\) there is no severing of his connection with the animal.\(^11\) [Does Resh Lakish mean] exactly [one hundred times] or not?\(^12\) — Come and hear: For R. Joshua b. Levi said: If one sells his slave to a heathen, we punish him by forcing him [to redeem the slave], even up to ten times his value!\(^13\) — The case of a slave is different, for he does not return\(^14\) [to his master after being redeemed].\(^15\) Now in the case of an animal, what is the reason [why an Israelite is forced to redeem it even up to one hundred times its value]? Presumably, because it comes back [to its master]. Let us then force him [to pay] once over [the ten etc.].\(^16\) — Rather the reason must be because the case of a slave [being sold to a heathen] is a rare occurrence,\(^17\) and any case which is of a rare occurrence, the Rabbis did not [in their rulings] guard against.\(^18\) ‘But the Sages say: So long a gentile has a share in it etc.’ Said R. Joshua:\(^19\) And both\(^20\) expounded the same verse: [Sanctify unto me] all the first-born [whatssoever openeth the womb in Israel].\(^21\) The Rabbis hold that [the word] ‘first-born’ is to be understood as meaning even if a portion [of a first-born] belongs to an Israelite.\(^22\) Therefore the Divine Law inserts the word ‘all’ implying that the whole [of the first-born must belong to the Israelite].\(^23\) R. Judah on the other hand holds that the word ‘first-born’ [by itself] is to be understood as meaning the whole of the first-born. Therefore the Divine Law inserts ‘all’ to show that even if any portion whatsoever [of the first-born belongs to the Israelite it\(^24\) is subject to the law of the firstling.] Or if you prefer, I may say that all [the authorities] understand that the word ‘first-born’ denotes the larger part [of the animal]. One Master, however, holds that the [purport of the] word ‘all’ is to add\(^25\) while the other Master\(^26\) holds that it is to diminish.\(^27\) And how much must a gentile's share be to exempt [the animal] from the law of the first-born? — Said R. Huna: Even if it is no more than of the [firstling's] ears. R. Nahman demurred. Let him [the Priest] say to him [the gentile] ‘Take your portion of the ear and go’!\(^28\) It was stated: R. Hisda said: [The heathen's share in the animal] must be something which renders an animal nebelah.\(^29\) Raba said: [The heathen's share in the animal] must be something which renders it trefah.\(^30\) What is the point at issue between them? — Whether a trefah can live. He who says that [the gentile's share in the animal] must be something which renders it trefah, would maintain that a trefah cannot live,\(^31\) whereas he who says [the gentile's share] must be something which renders the animal nebelah but a trefah, he would maintain, that it is able to live.\(^32\) The Rabbis said in the presence of R. Papa: The ruling of R. Huna on the one hand and the rulings of R. Hisda and Raba on the other, do not differ.\(^33\) The one [R. Huna's] relates to it [the first-born;]\(^34\) the other [the rulings of R. Hisda and Raba] relate to the mother.\(^35\) Said R. Papa to them [the Rabbis]: Why is there this ruling in connection with the first-born? [Presumably] because we require [the condition of] ‘all of the first-born'\(^36\) and it is not found here.\(^37\) In connection with its mother also, we require [the condition specified in the verse]: And of all thy cattle thou shalt sanctify the males, which is not found here. But there is in fact no difference. Mar, the son of R. Ashi demurred: Why should this be different from the premature [first births] of animals, which although they are not viable, are sacred? For a Master said: The words, [And every firstling that is a male] which thou hast coming from an animal [shall be the Lord's], [denote the foetus] which dwells in the animal? — There since there is no mixture of an unconsecrated [part of the animal], we apply to it the words ‘in the animal’, ‘all the first-born’. Here, however, since there is a mixture of the unconsecrated part of the animal, we do not read concerning it the words ‘all the first-born’. R. Eleazar once did not attend the House of Study. He came across R. Assi and asked him ‘What did the Rabbis say in the House of Study’? — He replied

(1) The ruling that we punish the Israelite to redeem it from the gentile refers to the animal. Consequently we see that if one sold an animal to a gentile for its future offspring, we punish him according to both the ruling of R. Judah and the Rabbis, for the opponents of R. Judah only differ from him in connection with the first-born.

(2) We punish him for making over the embryo in a pregnant animal to a gentile. But with the case of an animal sold for its future offspring, we are not here concerned. Therefore we are unable to solve the above query.

(3) Since it says הילמ ('its value') with the masculine ending and also speaks of giving it to the Priest, v. supra p. 4, n. 2.

(4) From the possession of the heathen.

(5) Must the Israelite actually pay even ten times its value in order to redeem the animal or does the ruling only mean that even if the gentile demands a larger price than its worth, the Israelite is compelled to redeem it?

(6) Now, since it says here a hundred times the value of the object sold and in reference to an animal it states ten times, we can infer that the numbers are meant to be taken literally, for if it were otherwise, why does it not say in both instances either a hundred times or ten times?

(7) And in the case of a heathen slave he would be preventing him from living up to the obligations resting on the Noahide. We therefore force the Israelite to pay even one hundred times the value of the slave. But in the case of an animal, we are not so strict and the ten times mentioned may be taken as an exaggeration.

(8) Thus the Mishnah is contrary to the ruling of Resh Lakish.

(9) We therefore force him to pay even one hundred times its value to the gentile.

(10) The case in the Mishnah just cited where a heathen undertakes to attend to an Israelite's animal.

(11) Since the animal still belongs to the Israelite.

(12) Or is the one hundred times mentioned a mere hyperbole?

(13) And since in connection with a slave it says ten times and in reference to an animal one hundred times, we may infer that the numbers mentioned are not to be taken literally, for otherwise in the case of a slave where lie is prevented from observing his religious obligations, the penalty should be much more severe than in the case of an animal.

(14) According to Rashi he is automatically set free. Y. Git. 43b. R. Gershom says that the slave hates to return of his own free will to his former master, after the latter had sold him to a heathen.

(15) And therefore we do not force him to pay more than ten times the value of the object sold, but in the case of an animal the number stated may be taken as precise.

(16) Since the animal returns to its former owner it cannot be counted as part of the fine i.e. the Israelite should be forced to pay eleven times its value.

(17) And therefore we do not force the Israelite to pay more than ten times the value of the object sold.

(18) But in the case of selling an animal which is a frequent occurrence, the Rabbis were more stringent.

(19) Var. lec.: R. Johanan.

(20) The Sages and R. Judah.

(21) Ex. XIII, 2.

(22) In order to be subject to the law of the first-born.

(23) Meaning literally ‘all’.

(24) The animal.

(25) So that the entire animal must, be in the Israelite's possession.

(26) R. Judah.

(27) Meaning ‘any’, so that if the Israelite has a share in the first-born, however small, he is required to carry out the duty of the first-born.

(28) For a first-born, even with a blemish, although unfit for sacrifice on the altar, is given to the Priest.

(29) An animal that has died a natural death or was killed not in accordance with the Jewish ritual law, is called nebelah. If the gentile therefore had for his share an essential part of the animal the absence of which would make it impossible to perform ritual slaughter, e.g., its gullet or windpipe, since such a vital part of the animal was in his hand, it was as if the whole animal belonged to him and was therefore exempted from the law of the first-born.

(30) An animal afflicted with an organic disease or disability as e.g., the removal of a certain portion of the knee. v. Hul. 42a.

(31) And since the animal cannot live, it is as if it belonged completely to the gentile.

(32) The gentile consequently does not possess a vital part of the animal.

(33) R. Hisda and Raba however do differ.

(34) Even if the gentile has the share of an ear in it, the law of the first-born does not apply.

(35) And they differ as to whether the blemish must be of a nature which renders it nebelah or trefah.

(36) In the possession of the Israelite so as to be subject to the duty of the first-born.

(37) Where the ear belongs to the gentile.

(38) Where the gentile has an element in the animal which makes it either trefah or nebelah.

(39) Ex. XXXIV, 19, i.e. if the animal belongs entirely to you, then you are commanded to observe the law of the first-born.

(40) Between the mother and its first-born, and consequently R. Huna on the one hand and R. Hisda and Raba on the other, do actually differ.

(41) The case of a heathen having a share in an animal which renders it either trefah or nebelah.

(42) Ex. XIII, 12 (sheger) coming from the word שגר (shegor), the root being שב to dwell, sojourn. Or שגר that which it casts forth prematurely.

(43) In the case of premature first births.

(44) Shared by a heathen.

(45) Whatever is in the animal has the holiness of a firstling.

(46) In the case of the mother.

(47) Shared by a heathen.

(48) Which phrase denotes that any part shared by an Israelite makes it subject to the law of the first-born.

Talmud - Mas. Bechoroth 3b

Thus did R. Johanan say: Even if [the heathen's share in the firstling was only something constituting] a slight blemish,¹ And as to what we have learnt:² ‘A ewe which gave birth to a species of a goat or a goat which gave birth to a species of an ewe, is exempt from the duty of the firstling’.³ But if [the offspring] possessed some features [similar to the mother] it is subject to the [law of the firstling]. [Thereon R. Johanan commented that this⁴ means that] it is [like a firstling with] a permanent blemish, on account of which it is slaughtered.⁵ We well understand R. Johanan laying down a ruling with reference to a slight blemish, for this informs us that [the law] is according to R. Huna and excludes the rulings of R. Hisda and Raba. But his ruling regarding a permanent blemish — what new thing does he teach us therewith? Is it to inform us that since it [the animal] is abnormal this is regarded as a blemish? [Surely] we have [already] learnt [this ruling⁶ in a Mishnah]: Or if the firstling's mouth is like a pig, it is a blemish!⁷ And should you argue that [in the Mishnah just cited] the firstling has changed into a species [of animal] in which the sanctity of the firstling does not exist⁸ but here the firstling has changed into a species [of animal] in which the sanctity of the firstling does exist,⁹ this too we have learnt: If one of its eyes is large and one is small [it is a blemish].¹⁰ And a Tanna taught that ‘large’ means large like a calf's and ‘small’, small like that of a goose. Now, we may grant your argument as far as [the case of a firstling] with a small eye like a goose is concerned, this being a species¹¹ in which the sanctity of the firstling does not exist.¹² But in the case of a large eye like a calf's — this is a species in which the sanctity of the firstling does exist.¹³ Must you not therefore admit that [the reason is] that we say since [the animal] is abnormal, it is regarded as a blemish?¹⁴ — No. The reason is because it is a sarua’.¹⁵ This really also stands to reason. For we have learnt: The above mentioned blemishes, whether permanent or transitory, make also human beings unfit for the Priesthood. To these must be added in the case of blemishes of human beings, two large eyes or two small eyes. Because with reference only to human beings it is written: Whatsoever man of the seed of Aaron requiring 'man' among the seed of Aaron to be with normal [human features]. But the case of an animal, two large or two small eyes is not also regarded as a blemish. Now in the case of an animal with one large or one small eye what is the reason [why it is a blemish]? If because of the abnormality, then the same should apply to an animal with two large eyes or two small eyes? Then must you not admit that the reason [in the former case] is because of sarua’? — No. I can indeed still say that [the reason why an animal with one large and one small eye is blemished] is because of the abnormality. And as for your question that the [same ruling] should apply to the case of an animal with two large and two small eyes, [the answer is that] there [in the latter instance] if [the change is] because of the animal's extra obesity, the two eyes need to be large, and if because of its unusual leanness, then both [eyes] have to be lean [small].

There was a woman proselyte to whom the Achii gave an animal to fatten. She came before Raba. He said to her: There is no authority that pays any attention to the ruling of R. Judah who said: The partnership of a heathen [in an animal] is subject to the law of the firstling. R. Mari b. Rahel possessed a herd of animals. He used to transfer [to a heathen] possession of the ears [of the firstlings while still in the womb]. He [nevertheless] forbade the shearing and the working of the animals and gave them to the Priests. The herd of R. Mari b. Rahel died. Now, since he forbade the shearing and the working of the animals and gave them to the Priests, why did he give [a heathen] possession of the ears [of the firstlings]? — [It was] lest he should be led to commit an offence. If so, why did the herd of R. Mari die? — Because he deprived them of their holiness. But has not Rab Judah said: One is permitted to make a blemish in a firstling before it comes into the world? — There, [in the latter case] he deprives the animal of the holiness of being sacrificed on the altar but he does not deprive it of the holiness [of belonging to] the Priests. But in the former case, he even deprives it of the holiness [of belonging to] the Priests. Or, if you prefer, I may say that R. Mari b. Rahel knew how to make a valid transfer to a heathen. But we are afraid that another man may see this and go and do likewise, thinking that R. Mari did nothing significant [when transferring to a heathen]. And thus he will be lead to commit an offence.

MISHNAH. PRIESTS AND LEVITES ARE EXEMPT: IF THEY EXEMPTED THE FIRST-BORN BELONGING TO THE ISRAELITES IN THE WILDERNESS, IT FollowS A FORTIORI THAT THEY SHOULD EXEMPT THEIR OWN.

(1) Like the ear of the animal which is not a vital part, in which case the Israelite is exempt from the duty of the firstling.
(2) V. infra 16b.
(3) For Scripture says: Or the firstling of a goat. Num. XVIII, 17. Both the firstling and the mother must belong to the same species and class i.e. a goat.
(4) The ruling that it is subject to the law of the firstling.
(5) I.e., outside the Temple. And eaten like any other firstling which possesses a blemish. It is, however, not suitable for sacrifice on the altar. This was R. Johanan's novel ruling emanating also from the House of Study, i.e., that a change in the animal renders it blemished.
(6) That a change in the animal renders it blemished.
(7) Infra 402.
(8) That of a pig.
(9) And therefore this would be the novelty in the ruling of R. Johanan, that even in such an instance it is regarded as a blemish.
(10) Infra 40b.
(11) Birds being exempt from the law of the firstling.
(12) There is need therefore for R. Johanan to inform us that even in this case it is a blemish since there is a change in the animal.
(13) And even so it is regarded as blemished.
(14) What new thing consequently does R. Johanan tell us in his ruling that a change renders it blemished, since this may be inferred from the Mishnah?

(15) An animal whose one limb is larger than the other is called a sarua’. Therefore were it not stated in the House of Study that a change in the offspring e.g., where its wool resembles that of a goat, renders it blemished, I should not have been in a position to infer this from the Mishnah, as sarua’ is a permanent blemish explicitly mentioned in the Scripture.

(16) Infra 43a.

(17) Lev. XXII, 4.

(18) V. infra p. 289, n. 8.

(19) And it is not because of the change that an animal with one long and one short eye is regarded as blemished and therefore there is need for R. Johanan to inform us that elsewhere a change in the animal constitutes a blemish.

(20) So that two large or small eyes constitute no change. Now since we can after all deduce from the Mishnah that a change renders the animal blemished, one can still raise the question, what is there novel in R. Johanan's ruling? (R. Gershom).

(21) Certain heathens.

(22) To enquire whether the duty of the firstling applies.

(23) To be exempt from the law of the firstling.

(24) As if they were actually firstlings and holy.

(25) For in this manner he carried out the prohibitions in connection with the firstling.

(26) In case he should shear and work the animal. And therefore he rendered himself exempt by transferring a part of the embryo to a heathen.

(27) Since his motives were good.

(28) By transferring a share of them to heathens.

(29) As the sanctity of a firstling only begins after its birth.

(30) Like a firstling with a blemish whose shearing is forbidden and work with which is prohibited, still possessing a certain degree of holiness.

(31) Although he actually observes all the prohibitions with reference to a blemished firstling, it is really rendered, owing to the share of the heathens, an unconsecrated animal.

(32) To accept money from a heathen which is the valid method whereby a selling transaction is concluded with a gentile.

(33) Lit., 'did a mere word'.

(34) By means of words only the transference was effected and no money was paid i.e., he simply informed the heathen that he had given him possession.

(35) Presumably from the first-born of an ass.

(36) This at present understood as meaning that since the Levites themselves exempted the asses of the Israelites in the wilderness, how much more should they exempt their own asses.

Talmud - Mas. Bechoroth 4a

GEMARA. Did they [themselves] exempt?¹ [Surely] a man [a Levite] exempted a man [a first-born Israelite]; an animal [of a Levite] exempted an animal [an Israelite's first-born ass]. For it is written: ‘Take the Levites instead of all the first-born among the children of Israel and the cattle of the Levites instead of their cattle’?² — Said Abaye: The Mishnah means this: ‘As for priests and Levites, their animals are exempt a fortiori. If the animal [the sheep] of the Levites released the animal of the Israelites in the wilderness,³ it follows a fortiori that it should release their own’.⁴ Said Raba to him: But does not the Mishnah say: ‘THEY EXEMPT’ meaning the Levites] themselves? And further, if it is [as you state],⁵ they [the Levites] should be exempted even from [liabilities for] a clean animal?⁶ Why have we learnt: They [the Levites] are not exempted from the law of the firstling of a clean animal only from the redemption of the first-born male, and the first birth of an ass!⁷ No, said Raba; the [Mishnah] must be read thus: ‘Priests and Levites exempt themselves [from the redemption of the first-born] a fortiori’. If the holiness of the [non-first-born] Levites canceled the holiness of the first-born Israelite [in the wilderness], should it not cancel that of their own [first-born]? We thus find that man [the Levite first-born is exempt]. Whence do we know that this also applies to an unclean animal? The text says: Howbeit the first-born of man shalt thou surely redeem and the firstling of unclean beasts shalt thou redeem. Whosoever is required [to redeem] the first-born of a man, is required [to redeem] the firstling of an unclean animal. But whosoever is not required [to redeem] the first-born of a man is not required to redeem the firstling of an unclean animal. Said R. Safra to Abaye: According to your interpretation, which is that [the a fortiori argument] also refers to their [the Levites’] animals, a Levite who had a sheep in the wilderness to release [a first-born of an Israelite ass], could ipso facto release [his own], but he who did not possess a sheep to release [a first-born of an Israelite ass] could not release his own? Further, both according to your interpretation and Raba’s, [a Levite] of a month old who released [an Israelite first-born of a month old in the wilderness] should therefore release [himself from the necessity of redemption] while [a Levite first-born] less than a month old, who did not release [a first-born Israelite of the same age], should not therefore be able to release himself? Also, a Levite's daughter who gave birth to a first-born, should not be exempt [from redemption]. Why then did R. Adda b. Ahaba say: If a Levite's daughter [married to an Israelite] gave birth, her son is exempt from the five sela's? — That is no objection, as Mar the son of R. Joseph [explained in the name of Raba who said: Scripture says]: peter rehem [the opening of the womb]. The Divine Law makes [the duty of the first-born] depend on the opening of the womb. But what of Aaron since he was not included in that counting [of the Levites], then [the first-born of his asses] should not be released [from redemption]; (for it has been taught: Why is [the word] ‘Aaron’ dotted in the Book of Numbers? Because he [Aaron] was not in that numbering [of the Levites]?) — Scripture said ‘The Levites’ implying that all Levites are compared to one another. And whence do we know [that] Priests are included in the term Levite? — As R. Joshua the son of Levi explained. For said R. Joshua: In twenty-four places Priests are called Levites and the following [instance] is one of them: But the Priests the Levites the sons of Zadok.
first-born of the Israelites.

(20) Num. III, 39: All that were numbered of the Levies which Moses and Aaron numbered. For all dotings of a word have the purpose of limiting and excluding something.

(21) All Levites irrespective of age, including anybody performing sacred functions, such as the priests, all were exempt from redeeming the first-born of an ass. This answers all the questions raised above.

(22) Ezek. XLIV, 15.

(23) We see here therefore that the priests are described as Levites. Similarly where the word ‘Levites’ is mentioned by itself, it also embraces the priests.

Talmud - Mas. Bechoroth 4b

Whence do we know [that the exemptions] apply to all time? The text says: ‘And the Levites shall be mine’; and ‘they shall be’ means that they [the Levites] retain their status [for all time]. And whence [do we know] that [the Levite exempted the Israelite's first-born of asses in the wilderness] with a sheep? — Said R. Hisda: Money is written [in connection with the redemption of the first-born] for all time; and ‘a sheep’ is written [in connection with the redemption of the first-born of an ass] for all time. Just as with the money prescribed for all time, they both redeemed [the first-born] at all times and they redeemed at that particular time [in the wilderness], so with sheep prescribed for all time, they [the Levites] both redeemed [the firstlings] at all times and they redeemed at that particular time [in the wilderness]. But it may be objected, that the case of money is different, because with it we also redeem consecrated objects and the second [year's] tithing. Rather [we deduce from the following]. Scripture said: ‘Nevertheless the first-born of man thou shalt surely redeem and the firstling of unclean beasts shalt thou redeem’. Just as in the case of the first-born of a man you make no distinction between all time and that particular time [in the wilderness, the redemption in each case being] with money, so [in the case of an unclean animal], you shall not make a distinction between for all time and that particular time, [the redemption in each case being] with a sheep. R. Hanina said: One sheep of a Levite exempted many firstborn of the asses of the Israelites. Said Abaye: The proof is that Scripture numbers the surplus of men [over the Levites] but does not number the surplus [of Israelite] animals [over the Levites’ animals]. But what proof is this? Perhaps they [the Israelites in the wilderness] did not possess many animals [asses] to redeem? — That cannot enter your mind. For it is written: ‘Now the children of Reuben and the children of Gad had a very great multitude of cattle’. Perhaps even so the ordinary [non-first-born animals] of the Levites just corresponded with [the number] of the first-born of the Israelites? — Scripture says: And the cattle of the Levites instead of their cattle; one Levite animal instead of many [Israelite] animals [firstlings of asses]. But why can we not say that the word [‘cattle’] also implies many [animals]? — If so let Scripture write either ‘cattle instead of cattle’ or ‘their cattle instead of their cattle’. Why does Scripture write ‘cattle of . . . instead of their cattle’? Deduce from this that one [Levite] animal exempted many [Israelite] animals. Said Raba: We have also learnt [R. Hanina's ruling]: And he can redeem with it [the sheep] many times [the first-born of asses]. And R. Hanina? — He explains the reason of the Mishnah and what he means is this: What is the reason that he can redeem with it [the sheep] many times [the first-born of asses]? Because one sheep of a Levite exempted many firstborn of asses belonging to an Israelite. It was stated: R. Johanan said: The first-born in the wilderness were sanctified; Resh Lakish said: The first-born in the wilderness were not sanctified. R. Johanan said that the first-born were sanctified in the wilderness, for the Divine Law said that they should be sanctified, as it is written: Sanctify unto me all the first-born. Resh Lakish said that the first-born were not sanctified in the wilderness, since it is written: And it shall be when the Lord shall bring thee [into the land of the Canaanites] and it says subsequently: That thou shalt set apart [unto the Lord all that openeth the womb]. From this you can infer that previously [to their entering the land] it [the first-born] was not sanctified. R. Johanan raised an objection to Resh Lakish's [view]: Before the Sanctuary was erected, the High places were permitted and the service [was performed] by the first-born! — He replied to him: [The service was performed] by those [first-born] who departed from Egypt. It also stands to reason. For if you will not say so, is a one year old\(^{27}\) capable of performing the service? And [R. Johanan] how could he raise such a question at all?\(^{28}\) — This was his [R. Johanan's] objection [to Resh Lakish's view]. You would be right if you said that the holiness [of the first-born] did not cease [in the wilderness],\(^{29}\) because then those [first-born] also originally born [in Egypt], did not have their holiness canceled. But if you say that their holiness ceased,\(^{30}\) then those [firstborn] originally born in Egypt, should also have had their holiness canceled?\(^{31}\) And [what says] the other [to this]? — Those who were holy [the first-born of Egypt], remained holy\(^{32}\) and those who were not nitherto holy,\(^{33}\) [did not become] holy. He [R. Johanan] raised an objection: On the day on which the Sanctuary was erected, votive-offerings, freewill-offerings, sin-offerings, trespass-offerings, firstlings and the tithe of cattle, were sacrificed in Israel\(^{34}\) — Here, also, it refers to those [firstborn] who departed from Egypt. And [from the Baraita] itself we can deduce this: ‘On that day [firstlings] were sacrificed’, but after that, [in the wilderness], there was no sacrifice [of firstlings].\(^{35}\) Some there are who say, Resh Lakish cited against R. Johanan the following: ‘That day on which the Sanctuary was erected, votive-offerings, freewill-offerings, sin-offerings, trespass-offerings, firstlings, tithe of cattle were sacrificed in Israel’\(^{36}\) — From that day and onward’.\(^{37}\) And what does he tell us here? — That from that day [these sacrifices] were permitted but not at first, from which we are to infer that obligatory sacrifices were not sacrificed on a High place.\(^{38}\) Come and hear: ‘Consequently in three places were the firstborn sanctified for Israel: in Egypt, in the wilderness, and when they entered the Land. With reference to the first-born in Egypt, what does Scripture say? Sanctify unto me all the firstling.\(^{39}\) With reference to the firstling in the wilderness Scripture says: For the first-born of the children of Israel are mine.\(^{40}\) With reference to [the first-born] when they entered the Land, [Scripture] says: And it shall be when the Lord shall bring thee [into the land of the Canaanites] . . . That thou shalt set apart!\(^{41}\) Said R. Nahman b. Isaac: [This passage means] that in three places the Israelites were commanded concerning the sanctification of the first-born but they were not [actually] sanctified.\(^{42}\) And were not also the first-born sanctified in the wilderness? Behold it is written: Number all the first-born males of the children of Israel.\(^{46}\) Rather [if the above dispute was] stated, it was stated as follows: R. Johanan said: They [the first-born] were sanctified and did not cease [from their holiness].\(^{46}\) But Resh Lakish said that they were sanctified temporarily.

---

(1) For priests and Levites.
(2) And not limited to the wilderness.
(3) Num. III, 45.
(4) Perhaps the verse ‘And the cattle of the Levites instead of all the firstlings among the cattle of the children of Israel’, (Num. III, 41.) means that the first-born of the Levite's ass exempted the Israelite's firstling of an ass, but not the sheep, (R. Gershom).
(5) Num. XVIII, 16.
(6) Ex. XIII, 13.
(7) To this analogy between ‘money’ and ‘sheep’.
(8) Whereas we do not as a rule redeem sacred objects with a sheep. Consecrated objects are redeemed with money. V. Lev. XXVII, 15 and the second year's tithes are also redeemed with money, V. Deut. XIV, 25.
(9) Num. XVIII, 15.
(10) Of first-born Israelites who had to be redeemed with money. And since Scripture does not mention the surplus of Israelite animals over the Levites’ animals, we can infer that one Levite sheep exempted many Israelite animals.
(11) And this being the case, one Levite sheep did not have to redeem many first-born of asses.
(12) Ibid. XXXII, 1.
(13) So that there was no surplus and there is thus no evidence that the firstlings of the Israelites outnumbered the plain Levites’ animals.
Ibid. III, 45.

Infra 9a. If the sheep which he gave to the priest as a redemption for the first-born of an ass, comes back to him either through the priest selling or giving it as a present to him, he can redeem another first-born of an ass with the same sheep.

Since the Mishnah just cited teaches his ruling, then his is superfluous.

Both of men and animals and certainly those born in Egypt.

And Only the first-born in Egypt and those who were born when they entered the land were sanctified.

Ex. XIII, 2.

In the wilderness.

And the above verse ‘Sanctify unto me all the first-born’ will refer to those born in Egypt.

Both of men and animals and certainly those born in Egypt.

And Only the first-born in Egypt and those who were born when they entered the land were sanctified.

Ex. XIII, 11, 12.

In the wilderness.

Improvised and temporary altars.

We therefore see that the first-born in the wilderness were sanctified contrary to the ruling of Resh Lakish.

But the first-born born in the wilderness were not sanctified.

Since only one year had elapsed since the departure from Egypt and the erection of the Sanctuary.

Surely there could be only one explanation of the Mishnah in Zebahim.

That the first-born born in the wilderness were also sanctified.

For a period, namely, those first-born born in the wilderness.

And therefore the question is raised, according to Resh Lakish, how were the first-born permitted to offer sacrifices.

And their holiness never ceased.

The first-born born in the wilderness.

We therefore see that the first-born in the wilderness were sanctified contrary to the ruling of Resh Lakish.

Because, as Resh Lakish says, the first-born in the wilderness either of men or cattle were not sanctified and those of cattle offered on the day the Sanctuary was erected, were born in Egypt.

Which is contrary to the view of R. Johanan.

For the first-born were sanctified in the wilderness.

An improvised and temporary altar. Obligatory offerings are e.g. sin-offerings, firstlings, etc.

Ex. XIII, 2.

Num. VIII, 17.

Ex. XIII, 11, 12. We see therefore that contrary to the view of Resh Lakish the firstlings were sanctified in the wilderness.

Until they entered the land.

For this was agreed by all the above.

Those born in the wilderness.

Num. III, 40. The male first-born were to be numbered from a month and upwards and this took place in the wilderness.

After being numbered in the wilderness.

Talmud - Mas. Bechoroth 5a

and then ceased [from their holiness]. As to Resh Lakish it is well, for the reason stated above. But what is the reason of R. Johanan? — Said R. Eleazar: R. Johanan appeared to me in a dream telling me that I said an excellent thing, viz., Scripture said: Mine shall they be [denoting] that they [the first-born] shall remain in their status. And what does R. Johanan do with the verses [which follow:] And it shall be when the Lord shall bring thee unto the land . . . That thou shalt set apart unto the Lord? — That [textual proximity] is required [to deduce] what the School of R. Ishmael taught: Perform this Divine command, on account of which you will be worthy to enter the Land. Said R. Mordecai to R. Ashi: You reported it in this manner, we reversed the names; R. Johanan said: Firstlings were not sanctified in the wilderness. But Resh Lakish said: Firstlings were sanctified in the wilderness. He thereupon asked him: ‘And do you also propose to reverse [the name of the author] of the refutation together with R. Eleazar's statement? — He replied to him: [The words]
‘They were not sanctified’ [of R. Johanan] mean, there was no need for the firstlings to be sanctified [in the wilderness].

If so, then it is identical with our version [of the dispute between R. Johanan and Resh Lakish]? — It teaches us that a man must cite a ruling in the exact language of his master.

A Roman general Controcos questioned R. Johanan b. Zakkai. ‘In the detailed record of the numbering of the Levites, you find the total is twenty-two thousand three hundred, whereas in the sum total you only find twenty-two thousand. Where are the [remaining] three hundred?’ He replied to him: ‘The remaining three hundred were [Levite] first-born, and a first born cannot cancel the holiness of a first-born’. What is the reason? said Abaye: Because it is sufficient for a [Levite] first-born to cancel his own holiness. And again he questioned him: ‘With reference to the collection of the money, you count two hundred and one kikkar and eleven maneh for Scripture writes: A beka’ for every man, that is, half a shekel after the shekel of the Sanctuary, whereas when the money was given, you find only one hundred kikkar, for it is written: And the hundred talents of silver were for casting, etc.? Was Moses your teacher either a thief or a swindler or else a bad arithmetician? He gave a half, took a half, and did not [even] return a complete half? — He replied to him: ‘Moses our teacher was a trustworthy treasurer and a good arithmetician, only the sacred maneh was double the common’.

R. Ahi argued: What is his [the general’s] difficulty? It says: And the hundred talents that were for casting etc.; these were used for casting and those others, [the two hundred and one kikkar] were for the treasury! — [Scripture] wrote another verse: And the silver of them that were numbered of the congregation, was a hundred talents etc. But since Scripture does not record them except in units [of shekels], you may deduce from here that the sacred maneh was double the common. But perhaps it is only the sum total [of a hundred] kikkar that Scripture records but the odd amount [of only one kikkar or so], it does not record? Rather deduce then from here: And the brass of the offering was seventy talents and two thousand and four hundred shekels. For here are ninety-six maneh, and Scripture does not record them except in units [of shekels]. Deduce from here, therefore, that the sacred maneh was double the common. Perhaps, however, a large odd number [of kikkar] Scripture records but a small odd number it does not record? Rather said R. Hisda, Deduce from here: And the shekel shall be twenty gerahs; twenty shekels, five and twenty shekels, fifteen shekels, shall be your maneh. [1]

---

(1) The juxtaposition of the verses in Ex. XIII, 11 and 12.
(2) Num. III, 13, indicating that there was no break in their holiness, even in the wilderness.
(3) The law of the firstling.
(4) That it was R. Johanan who refuted Resh Lakish with reference to the Baraitha; ‘That day on which the sanctuary was erected etc.’ and not vice versa, as in our version.
(5) That he saw R. Johanan in a dream, and will you also alter this to Resh Lakish? Surely, it is more feasible to assume that it was R. Johanan, the teacher of R. Eleazar, who appeared to him in a dream.
(6) Since they were holy at birth, as R. Johanan maintains above that the first-born in the wilderness were sanctified.
(7) Although there may be no actual difference in the ruling.
(8) Rashi and Tosaf. in Hullin 27b read Contricon. There are a number of variants in the reading of this name, owing to corruptions. It is suggested that the name refers either to Quintus or Quietus. V. Hul., Sonc. ed., p. 141, n. 2.
(9) The families of Gershom numbered seven thousand and five hundred, the families of Kohath numbered eight thousand and six hundred, and the families of Merari numbered six thousand and two hundred, making a grand total of the families of the Levites of twenty-two thousand and three hundred.
(10) V. Num. III, 39.
(11) When every Israelite was bidden to give half a shekel.
(12) A weight of silver or gold, a talent. Now a kikkar contains sixty maneh, a maneh has twenty five selas or holy shekels, therefore we have one thousand and five hundred shekels in one kikkar. Six hundred and three thousand five hundred and fifty half shekels collected from the people make three hundred and one thousand seven hundred and seventy-five shekels. Divide one thousand and five hundred into this, we have two hundred and one kikkar with the remainder of two hundred and seventy-five shekels, i.e., eleven maneh.

(13) A weight in gold or silver of twenty-five common shekels.
(14) Ex. XXXVIII, 26.
(15) When Moses rendered the account to the Israelites.
(16) Ibid. 27.
(17) For a complete half would have been one hundred and a half kikkar and five and a half maneh and he only returned one hundred kikkar. And although Scripture says: ‘And of the thousand seven hundred seventy and five shekels he made hooks’ and consequently, he returned more than a half, the general did not mention this verse, for he wanted to catch him with words.
(18) There were therefore one hundred and twenty maneh in a kikkar. The hundred kikkar were therefore really two hundred and the remaining kikkar and eleven maneh, were the one thousand seven hundred and seventy-five shekel mentioned, from which hooks were made.
(19) And this would be separate from the two hundred and one kikkar mentioned.
(20) Ex. XXXVIII, 25. And here no mention is made of being used for casting purposes.
(21) A maneh containing twenty-five shekels; therefore one thousand seven hundred and seventy-five shekels make seventy-one maneh.
(22) If all maneh consisted of sixty shekels, then seventy-one maneh is one kikkar more, plus eleven maneh.
(23) And therefore the seventy-one maneh i.e. the one thousand seven hundred and seventy-five shekels, could not be counted in terms of kikkar, as there would then be one hundred and twenty maneh in a kikkar.
(24) It is not of sufficient importance to record in terms of kikkar, but the sacred maneh may still have the same value as the common. Therefore the point would once again arise that Moses received two hundred and one kikkar, and, when rendering the account, Scripture only mentions one hundred kikkar. (5) That the sacred maneh was double the common.
(25) Ibid. XXXVIII, 29.
(26) There being twenty-five shekels in a maneh.
(27) I.e., one hundred and twenty maneh in a kikkar, and therefore Scripture could not count this in terms of kikkar.
(28) Like seventy kikkar, although they cannot be counted in terms of one hundred kikkar.
(29) Like one kikkar; but a sacred kikkar may contain only sixty maneh as the common.
(30) That the sacred maneh was double the common.
(31) Ezek. XLV, 12. We therefore see there were sixty shekels in a maneh.

Talmud - Mas. Bechoroth 5b

Now would not this [maneh] be two hundred and forty [denars]?1 Therefore deduce from this that the sacred maneh was double [the common].2 And further deduce from here that we may add to the measures, but not more than a sixth part. And still further deduce from here, that the sixth part added, is a sixth of the total.3 Said R. Hanina: I asked [R. Eliezer] in the great School of Learning [Beth Hamidrash:] ‘Why were the first-born of asses different from the first-born of horses and camels?’ — He replied: ‘It is a decree of Scripture’.4 Moreover, they [the asses] helped the Israelites when they departed from Egypt, for there was not an Israelite who did not possess ninety Libyan asses laden with the silver and gold of Egypt. I also asked him: ‘What does the word "Rephidim" signify?’ And he told me: ‘Rephidim was the name [of a place]’. There is a difference between Tannaim. R. Eliezer says: ‘Rephidim’ was the name [of a place], but R. Joshua says, it means that they relaxed [rifu] their hold on the words of the Law. And so Scripture says: The fathers shall not look back to their children for [rifyon] feebleness of hand.5 And I asked him further: ‘What is the meaning of the word "Shittim"?’ And he told me: ‘Shittim was the name [of a place]’. Here too Tannaim differ. R. Eliezer says: ‘Shittim’ was the name of the place, whereas R. Joshua says, it means that they gave themselves up to lust.6 ‘And they called to the people unto the sacrifices of their gods.’7 R. Eliezer says, this verse means that they [the Israelites] came into contact with naked bodies.8 But R. Joshua says they all became polluted.9
MISHNAH. IF A COW GAVE BIRTH TO A SPECIES OF ASS, OR AN ASS GAVE BIRTH TO A SPECIES OF HORSE, IT IS EXEMPT FROM [THE LAW OF] THE FIRSTLING, FOR IT IS SAID: FIRSTLING [PETER] OF AN ASS’, TWICE [TO TEACH] [THAT THE LAW OF THE FIRSTBORN DOES NOT APPLY] UNTIL THAT WHICH GIVES BIRTH IS AN ASS AND THAT WHICH IS BORN IS AN ASS. AND WHAT IS THE LAW WITH REFERENCE TO EATING THEM? IF A CLEAN ANIMAL GAVE BIRTH TO A SPECIES OF UNCLEAN ANIMAL, IT IS PERMITTED TO BE EATEN. BUT IF AN UNCLEAN ANIMAL GAVE BIRTH TO A SPECIES OF A CLEAN ANIMAL, IT IS FORBIDDEN TO BE EATEN, FOR THAT WHICH GOES FORTH FROM THE UNCLEAN IS UNCLEAN AND THAT WHICH GOES FORTH FROM THE CLEAN IS CLEAN.

GEMARA. We have learnt elsewhere: If a ewe gave birth to a species of goat or a goat gave birth to a Species of ewe, it is exempt from [the law of] the firstling. But if the offspring possesses some marks [resembling the mother], it is subject to [the law of] the firstling. Whence is this proved? Said Rab Judah: Scripture says: ‘But the firstling of an ox’, meaning that it [the animal] should be an ox and its firstling must be an ox; ‘Firstling of a sheep’, indicating that [the animal] should be a sheep and its firstling must be a sheep; ‘Firstling of a goat’, indicating that [the animal] ‘Firstling of a goat’, [the law of the firstling does not apply] until it [the animal] is an ox and its firstling is an ox; ‘firstling of a sheep’: [the law of the firstling does not apply] until it [the animal] is a sheep and its firstling is a sheep; ‘firstling of a goat’: [the law of the firstling does not apply] until it [the animal] is a goat and its firstling is a goat. You might think that even if it [the offspring] possesses some marks [similar to its mother]? There the text stated ‘ak’ [but], intimating that there is a distinction. But does not the Tanna [of our Mishnah] derive the ruling [for the exemption] of a cow [which gave birth to a species of ass] from ‘peter’ [firstling] [‘peter’ [firstling]. — He [R. Judah] follows the view of R. Jose the Galilean. For it was taught: R. Jose the Galilean said: ‘But the firstling of an ox’: [the law of the firstling does not apply] until it [the animal] is an ox and its firstling is an ox; ‘firstling of a sheep’: [the law of the firstling does not apply] until it [the animal] is a sheep and its firstling is a sheep; ‘firstling of a goat’: [the law of the firstling does not apply] until it [the animal] is a goat and its firstling is a goat. You might think that even if it [the offspring] possesses some marks [similar to its mother]? The text states ‘ak’ intimating that there is a distinction. Wherein do they differ? — Our Tanna [in the Mishnah] holds that the Divine Law informs us in that case of that which is consecrated for its value [that a change in the offspring exempts it from the law of the firstling], and the same applies to an object consecrated as such. But R. Jose the Galilean maintains that the Divine Law informs us in connection with an object consecrated as such [that a change in the offspring exempts it from the law of the firstling] and the same principle applies in connection with an object which is consecrated for its value. And we derive an object which is consecrated for its value from an object which is consecrated as such. And our Tanna — what does he make of ‘bekor’ [firstling], ‘bekor’ [firstling]. — He requires it for R. Jose b. Hanina's [explanation]. For R. Jose b. Hanina said: Why does Scripture mention ‘emurim’ in connection with the firstling of an ox, emurim in connection with the firstling of a sheep, emurim in connection with the firstling of a goat? It is necessary. For if the Divine Law had written ‘emurim’ in connection with the firstling of an ox [only], [I might have said], the reason [for the emurim was] because there was an increased drink offering. [And if the Divine Law had written ‘emurim’] in connection with the firstling of a sheep [only], [I might have said] the reason [for the ‘emurim’ was] because of the fat-tail which was included [to be sacrificed together with the emurim]. [And if the Divine Law had written ‘emurim’] in connection with the firstling of a goat [only], [I might have said] the reason [for the ‘emurim’ was] because a goat was included as a suitable offering in the case of the sin of idolatry committed by an individual. You could not have derived ‘emurim’ in connection with any single case [of a firstling of an ox, firstling of a sheep or firstling of a goat] from any other single case. [Perhaps] you could derive however ‘emurim’ in a single case [of a firstling mentioned] from the remaining two cases; in connection with what case should the Divine Law have omitted to write ‘emurim’? Should the Divine Law not have written ['emurim'] in connection with the firstling of an ox, and should we have proceeded to derive this from the remaining two cases, [the firstling of a sheep and the firstling of a goat quoted above], [I might have raised the objection] that the two cases [mentioned where emurim was written], were different, for a sheep and a goat are included as suitable to be brought as Passover sacrifices. Or should the Divine Law have omitted [emurim] in connection with the firstling of a sheep and should we then have derived this from the remaining two cases [of the firstling of an ox and the firstling of a goat], [I might have raised the objection] that the cases [of an ox and a goat] were different, for they are included as suitable offerings for the sin of idolatry committed communally. Or should the Divine Law have omitted [emurim] in connection with the firstling of a goat and should we then have derived this from the remaining two cases [of the firstling of an ox and the firstling of a sheep], [I might have raised the objection] that the cases [of an ox and a sheep] were different, for they have the [common] point of an increased offering upon the altar. Therefore, all the three cases [to which the verse refers] are necessary. And R. Jose the Galilean? — [His answer is:] If so, let the Divine Law write: ‘But the firstling of an ox, sheep and goat’. What need is there for the words ‘bekor’ ‘bekor’? Hence you must deduce from here [the teaching also] that both [the animal] and its firstling must be an ox. And R. Jose the Galilean, what does he do with the texts ‘peter hamor’ ‘peter hamor’? — He requires this for what was taught. R. Jose the Galilean says: Because it is said in the Scriptures: Howbeit the firstborn of man shalt thou surely redeem and the firstling of unclean beasts shalt thou redeem. I might infer from the text that even the first-born of horses and camels [are liable to the law of the first-born]. Therefore, there the text stated ‘peter hamor’. I have only spoken to you [says Scripture] of firstlings of asses but not of the firstlings of horses and camels. I can still maintain, however, that the firstlings of asses are to be redeemed with a sheep but the firstlings of horses and camels may be redeemed with any object.

(1) And a maneh has only one hundred dear or zuz, for there are twenty-five shekels to a maneh and four denar to a shekel.
(2) I.e., fifty shekels would be the maneh. This is two hundred denar and the remaining forty were added subsequently.
(3) Lit., ‘from outside’. I.e., to each five portions, one is added, an addition of twenty per cent. And here, also, there was an addition to the two hundred denar which constitute the sacred maneh of twenty per cent, making a total of two hundred and forty denar. This addition of forty denar makes therefore a sixth part of the sum total, i.e., a sixth ‘from the outside’, although not a sixth part of the value of the sacred maneh as such, as forty denar would be a fifth part of two hundred denar.
(4) There is no special reason for this differentiation.
(5) Jer. XLVII, 3. The feebleness being due to their neglect of the Law.
(6) The word ‘Shetuth’ (a stupid thing, like lust) and the word ‘Shittim’, have a verbal resemblance.
(7) Num. XXV, 2.
(8) For lustful purposes. The word נָשָׁתֶת is also derived from the word הֵרֶפ to meet; they themselves, their bodies, met naked bodies in order to stimulate sexual desire.
(9) נָשָׁתֶת is connected here with the word הֵרֶפ meaning seminal pollution,
(10) Ex. XIII, 13.
(11) Ibid. XXXIV, 20.
(12) The animals born which do not resemble their mother.
(13) Supra 3b and infra 16b.
(14) Num. XVIII, 17.
(15) Ibid.
(16) Ibid. In connection with the words ‘ox’, ‘sheep’ and goat’, Scripture prefaces in each case the word בְּכָו (firstling) which in each case is superfluous, as it is clearly dealing with the subject of a firstling.
(17) That it is also excluded from the law of the firstling.
(18) But the firstling etc.
(19) Between total physical change in the offspring and where there is a partial resemblance to the mother, the word ‘ak’ having limiting qualifications.
(20) Why therefore does R. Judah bring his own Scriptural proof since what applies to a cow whose offspring changes species applies equally to a sheep whose offspring changes?
(21) Num. XVIII, 17.
(22) V. supra.
The Tanna in our Mishnah and R. Jose the Galilean.

The case of an ass which is not holy in itself and is redeemed with a sheep.

The case of a cow or any clean animal where it is holy as such, and is irredeemable. In such an instance, the law of the firstling should certainly only apply where the offspring resembles its mother, as since it is irredeemable, the offspring should be required all the more to resemble its mother.

In the Mishnah.

The threefold repetition of the word ‘bekor’ (firstling) in Num. XVIII, 17.

The portion of the animal sacrificed on the altar. Scripture says: Thou shalt dash their blood against the altar and shalt make their fat smoke for an offering made by fire, which verse refers to all the three cases of firstlings mentioned in the text. If Scripture had written ‘emurim’ in connection with one of the firstlings mentioned, I could have inferred the rest.

A half of a hin, whereas with reference to a goat or a sheep, the amount is only a quarter of a hin.

Unlike the case of a goat or an ox.

One of the references to ‘emurim’ would, then, be unnecessary.

Whereas an ox is not brought as a passover sacrifice.

A bull for a burnt offering and a goat for a sin-offering.

Compared with a goat. For an ox has an increased drink-offering and a sheep has, in addition, its fat-tail offered up on the altar.

Thou shalt dash their blood against the altar etc. quoted above.

Since he explains the verse: ‘But the firstling of an ox etc.’ quoted above, as teaching that the mother and its offspring must be of the same species, how does he then explain the references to ‘emurim’ in connection with the three cases of firstlings mentioned above?

That the verse only teaches what R. Jose b. Hanina says.

The threefold repetition of the word ‘bekor’ (‘firstling’).

Employed by our Mishnah as basis for its teaching.

Num. XVIII, 15.

As liable to redemption.

And the law of the firstling will apply to these as well.

The text therefore states ‘peter hamor’ ‘peter hamor’ twice, to intimate: ‘I have only spoken of the firstling of asses but not [at all] of the firstlings of horses and camels’. R. Ahai raised an objection. [There is need for the repetition of ‘peter hamor’]. For if the Divine Law had written only one [‘peter hamor’], I might have said that it [the law of the firstling of an ass requiring redemption] is a thing which was included in the general proposition and then made the subject of a special statement, so that the specification is not limited to itself alone but is to be applied to the whole class [of unclean animals], and so, in all cases, the redemption is indeed with a sheep. Therefore the Divine Law wrote in another text ‘peter hamor’ to intimate that only firstlings of asses are redeemed with a sheep but not the firstlings of horses and camels. But one might say that the limitation [with reference to horses etc.] only refers to [redemption] with a sheep, but, elsewhere, they may indeed be redeemed with any object? — If so, let the Divine Law write: ‘The firstling of an ass thou shalt redeem with a sheep’; ‘and an ass thou shalt redeem with a sheep’. Why [this repetition], ‘The firstling of an ass thou shalt redeem with a sheep’? It is to intimate, ‘I have only spoken to you of the firstlings of asses [as requiring redemption] but not of the firstlings of horses and camels’. And our Tanna of the Mishnah, whence does he derive a limitation of horses and camels [as being altogether exempt from the law of the firstlings]? — Said R. Papa: [Scripture says:] And of all the cattle thou shalt sanctify the males, this is a general proposition. ‘The firstling of an ox and sheep . . . And the firstling of an ass thou shalt redeem’, is a specification; and with a general proposition complemented by a specification the general proposition includes only the specification; thus teaching that an ox, sheep and an ass [are liable to the law of the firstling], but not any other animal. And R. Jose the Galilean?— [His answer is] that the word ‘peter’ interrupts the subject.9 And the Rabbis?10 — The letter waw11 joins it again to the previous verse. And R. Jose the Galilean? — Let not Scripture write neither the waw [which joins it with the previous verse] nor [write the word] ‘peter’ [which interrupts the subject].12 And the Rabbis? — Since the one part13 deals with objects consecrated in respect of their value and the other part with objects consecrated as such,14 Scripture, therefore, at first interrupts the subject and subsequently connects it again [with the previous verse]. The question was asked: If a cow gave birth to a species of ass and it possesses some marks similar [to its mother]; what is the ruling? If a goat gave birth to a species of ewe and a ewe gave birth to a species of goat, the ruling is that when it possesses some marks [similar to its mother] it is subject to the law of the firstling, the reason being that this one [the mother] is a clean animal and this one [the offspring] is a clean animal, this one [the mother] is an object consecrated as such and this one [the offspring] is also an object consecrated as such. But here, where this one [the offspring] is an unclean animal and this one [the mother] is a clean animal, this one [the mother] is an object consecrated as such and this one [the offspring] is an object consecrated for its value, the ruling should not be [the same]. Or, perhaps, since in both cases, [even in the case where the offspring is a species of ass and the mother is a cow], they belong to a category of animals possessing the sanctity of the first-born, shall we say that it is therefore sanctified?15 And should you maintain that since both cases mentioned above come under the law of the sanctity of the firstborn, therefore [where a cow gave birth to a species of ass which possesses some features akin to its mother] it is sanctified, what will be the ruling for an ass which gave birth to a species of horse? Here, surely, it16 does not belong to the category of animals which have the sanctity of the firstling. Or, are we perhaps to say that since [the horse] belongs to the same class of unclean animals,17 it is sanctified? And would you say that since it belongs to a class of unclean animals, it is sanctified, what will be the ruling regarding a cow which gave birth to a species of horse? Here, surely, this one [the cow] is a clean animal whereas this one [the offspring] is an unclean animal, this one [the cow] belongs to a category of animals which possess the sanctity of the firstling, whereas this one [the horse] does not belong to the category of animals which have the sanctity of the firstling. Or are we perhaps to say that marks [similar to the mother] are the decisive factor?18 — Come and hear: ‘A clean animal which gave birth to a species of unclean animal is exempted from he law of the firstling. If it possesses, however, some marks [similar to the parent], it is liable to the law of the firstling. What [does this mean]? Does this [the last clause] not refer to both cases mentioned?20 — No, it refers only to the case of a cow which gave birth to a species of ass.20 Come and hear: ‘If a cow gave birth to a species of ass or an ass gave birth to a species of horse, it is exempt from the law of the firstling. If it possesses, however, some marks [similar to the mother], it is liable to [the law of] the firstling’. What [does this mean]? Does this [the last clause] not refer to both cases mentioned?21 — No, it refers only to the case of a cow which gave birth to a species of ass. But the case of an ass which gave birth to a species of horse—why does it state this? Is it to exempt it [from the law of the first-born]? Is this not obvious? Since, in the case of a cow which gave birth to a species of ass, where both [the mother and its offspring] belong to a category of animals which have the sanctity of the firstling, you say if the ass has some marks [similar to its mother], it is sanctified, but if not, it is not sanctified, is there any question in the case of an ass which gave birth to a species of horse?22 — It is necessary to state this. You might be inclined to assume that there [in the case of a cow which gave birth to a species of ass] the reason is because the cow has horns but here the ass has no horns, here [the cow] its hoofs are cloven but there [the ass] its hoofs are closed.23 But here [in the case where an ass gave birth to a species of horse], since in both instances, they have no horns and the hoofs of both are closed, I might have said that the offspring [a species of horse] was merely a red ass.24 We are therefore informed [that this is not so].25 WHAT IS THE LAW WITH REFERENCE TO EATING THEM etc. What need is there [for the Mishnah] to lay down FOR THAT WHICH GOES’ FORTH etc.? — It is a mere [mnemonical] sign so that you should not change the version [of the Mishnah]26 and that you should not say ‘decide according to the offspring, and this is a perfectly clean animal and this is a perfectly unclean animal’.27 But we rather say, ‘Follow the mother’. Whence is this proved? — Because our Rabbis taught:
‘Nevertheless these shall ye not eat of them that chew the cud or28 of them that divide the hoof’.29 You have the case of an animal which chews the cud and has divided hoofs which you are, nevertheless, forbidden to eat. And what is it? This is the case of a clean animal born from an unclean animal. Perhaps, it is not so but [the verse] refers to the case of an unclean animal born from a clean animal? And what is the interpretation of the verse: ‘Of them that chew the cud or of them that divide the hoof’?

(1) As requiring redemption.
(2) In the verse, ‘And the firstling of unclean beasts shalt thou redeem’ cited supra.
(3) That the firstling of an ass must be redeemed with a sheep.
(4) Ex. XIII, 13.
(5) The repetition of the word דָּגָר (firstling) in Ex. XXXIV, 20.
(6) Because there is no holiness at all in regard to the firstlings of other unclean animals.
(7) Ibid. XXXIV, 19.
(8) Who infers the ruling that other animals beside the firstling of an ass, sheep and goat are not liable to the law of the firstborn from the repetition of ‘peter hamor’, why does he not derive this from the verse quoted by R. Papa and in the manner interpreted by the latter.
(9) We do not interpret the verse as a general proposition complemented by a specification, as the word ‘peter’ before the text ‘ox or sheep’ indicates a break in the subject.
(10) The majority of the Rabbis who dispute with him as to the derivations of the various teachings under discussion.
(11) The ‘waw’, a conjunction, meaning ‘and’ in the word דָּגָר which commences the following verse.
(12) If Scripture did not interrupt the theme with the word ‘Peter’, there would have been no need for the ‘waw’ to connect again.
(13) The general proposition: ‘All that openeth the womb is mine etc.’ which includes an ass, that is not holy as such and must be redeemed with a sheep.
(14) The firstlings of ox or sheep.
(15) A species of ass born from a cow is, therefore, holy if it has some features resembling its mother, for an ass although an unclean animal, is liable to the law of the firstling.
(16) A horse. Therefore, even if it has some marks like the mother, it should not be liable to the law of the firstling.
(17) Like an ass, which though unclean, is liable to the law of the firstling. Therefore, if the offspring is a species of horse, and if there is a measure of resemblance between it and its mother, we do not regard the change between the ass and its offspring of such great importance, as to exempt it altogether from the law of the firstling.
(18) And although the difference between the parent and the offspring is great, since the latter resembles the mother, it is liable to the law of the firstling.
(19) We therefore deduce that signs in the offspring akin to the parent are an important matter and the other points raised above are also, incidentally, thereby solved.
(20) But where there is such a gap between the Parent and its offspring as e.g. where a cow gave birth to a species of horse, it is exempt from the law of the firstling. Therefore, only one of the above queries can be solved.
(21) Where a cow gave birth to a species of ass and an ass gave birth to a species of horse, if the offspring had some marks like its mother, it is liable to the law of the firstling.
(22) If the horse does not possess signs resembling the ass, that it should be exempt?
(23) Therefore only if the ass has signs resembling the cow, is it liable to the law of the firstling.
(24) And not a horse at all. An ordinary horse is red in color and an ordinary ass is black. Consequently, if the horse had some features like its parents, we ought perhaps to regard it as a kind of red ass, thus making it liable to the law of the firstling.
(25) Since a horse’s color is generally red we regard it as a species of a horse and not as a freak ass. There is, consequently, no proof as to what is the ruling concerning an ass which gave birth to a species of horse.
(26) And say that a clean animal which gave birth to an unclean animal is forbidden to be eaten and an unclean animal which gave birth to a clean animal is permitted to be eaten. Clean animals are those which may be eaten according to the Jewish law and possess the necessary signs of a clean animal and unclean animals are those which do not possess these signs .
(27) Therefore where a clean animal is born from an unclean animal, it should be permitted to be eaten.
It means this: An object which proceeds from them which chew the cud and of them that divide the hoof, ye shall not eat! The text therefore states: The camel . . . he is unclean, intimating that he is unclean but an unclean animal born from a clean animal is not Unclean, but clean. R. Simeon says: The word ‘camel’ occurs twice, once referring to a camel born from a camel [as forbidden], and the other, to a camel born from a cow. And as to the Rabbis who differ from R. Simeon — what do they do with the repetition ‘camel’, ‘camel’? — One is to forbid [the camel itself] and the other to prohibit its milk. And whence does R. Simeon derive the prohibition of a camel's milk? — He derives it from the word ‘eth, [with] the camel’. And the Rabbis? — They do not stress the word eth [occurring in the Scriptures]. As it was taught: Simeon the Imsonite used to expound the word eth wherever it occurred in the Law. When he reached, however, the verse, eth [with] the Lord thy God thou shalt fear, he abstained. His pupils, thereupon, said to him: ‘Rabbi, every eth which you have expounded, — what will become of them?’ He replied to them: ‘Just as I have received reward for interpreting every eth, so I shall receive reward for abstaining’. Finally, however, R. Akiba came and taught that the verse: ‘eth [with] the Lord thy God thou shalt fear’, intimates that we must pay reverence to scholars next to God. Said R. Aha the son of Raba to R. Ashi: According to this, the reason of the Rabbis [why milk of an unclean animal is forbidden], is because of the repetition ‘camel’, ‘camel’, and that of R. Simeon is because of the text ‘eth [with] the camel’, but were it not so, I might have said that milk from an unclean animal is permitted. Why should it be different from what was taught: [The verse] These are the unclean implies the prohibition of their brine, their soup and their jelly! — It is necessary [to find another basis for milk]. For I might have been inclined to assume that since even the use of milk itself of a clean animal is an anomaly, for a Master said: The blood [during the nursing period] is disturbed [decomposed] and turns into milk; and since it is an anomaly, therefore even from an unclean animal the milk should be permitted. We are accordingly informed [that this is not so]. This would indeed hold good according to him who says that the blood [during the nursing period] is disturbed [decomposed] and turns into milk. But according to him who says [that the reason why there is no menstruation period while nursing is] because her limbs become disjointed and she does not become normal in herself for twenty-four months, what can you reply? — It is still necessary. I might have been inclined to assume, that since there is nothing which proceeds from a living being which the Divine Law permits and yet milk which is similar to a part from a living animal [is permitted], therefore even from an unclean animal the milk should be permitted. We are accordingly informed [that this is not so]. And whence do we derive that milk itself from a clean animal is permitted? Shall I say that since the Divine Law prohibits [the boiling of] milk and meat together, this implies that separately milk is permitted? But might I not still maintain that milk by itself is forbidden to be eaten though permitted for other general use, whereas in the case of boiling meat and milk together, it is also forbidden for any use. And even according to the view of R. Simeon who holds that meat and milk boiled together is permitted for general use, the prohibition can be explained as necessary to inflict lashes for the boiling! Rather, since the Divine Law states in connection with dedicated objects which became unfit, Notwithstanding thou mayest kill but not to use the shearing, ‘flesh’, but not the milk, this implies that milk from an unconsecrated animal is permitted. But may I not take the meaning to be that milk from an unconsecrated animal is forbidden to be eaten but may be used for other general use, whereas in the case of consecrated objects, it is forbidden even for any use? — Rather deduce [the law] from what [Scripture] has written, And thou shalt have goats’ milk enough for thy food, for the food of thy household, and for the maintenance of thy maidens. Perhaps, however, this only refers to business? Rather deduce this from what [Scripture] writes, And carry these ten cheeses unto the captain of their thousand. Perhaps, here also, it refers to business. Is it usual in war to sell [food to the enemy]? If you prefer, I may deduce from here: A land flowing with milk and honey. Now if milk were not permitted, would Scripture commend the country to us with something which is not fit to be eaten? Or, if you prefer, I may deduce it from here: Come ye buy and eat, yea, come buy wine and milk without money and without price. Now, according to this, the repetition ‘Rockbadger’, ‘Rockbadger’, ‘Hare’, ‘Hare’, ‘Swine’, ‘Swine’, — are these also come for some purpose? But [the object of these repetitions quoted] is really as was taught: Why is there a repetition [of the clean and unclean animals]? On account of shesu’ah. Why with reference to birds, [is there the same repetition in the Scripture]? On account of ra’ah. Then, perhaps, [the repetition of] ‘Camel’, ‘Camel’ also has the same purpose — All the same, wherever we can derive a lesson from the biblical text, we interpret it. Our Rabbis taught: If a ewe gave birth to a species of a goat or a goat gave birth to a species of a ewe, it is exempt from the law of the firstling. But if the offspring possesses some marks similar to its mother, it is liable to the law of the firstling. R. Simeon says [it is not liable to the law of the firstling] until the head and the greater part of the body resemble the mother. The following query was put forward. Does R. Simeon require, in order that the animal may be permitted to be eaten, the head and the greater part of the body, or not? In connection with a firstling, Scripture writes: ‘But the firstling of an ox’ indicating [that the law of the firstling does not apply] until the animal is an ox and its firstborn is an ox. But as regards permission for eating, the Divine Law says that only a camel is prohibited, but

(1) I.e., a species of an unclean animal born from a clean animal.
(2) Ibid.
(3) And usually camels are born from camels and, since Scripture emphasizes that ‘he’ is unclean etc., this implies that a camel, however, born from a cow, is clean.
(4) Once in Lev. XI, 4 and again in Deut. XIV, 7.
(5) המבול: The accusative article המבול can be rendered also ‘with’.
(7) Because the word eth means by implication an amplification and he felt that here he could not amplify the word so as to include fearing someone besides the Deity.
(8) Lev. XI, 31. The המבול before המבול meaning ‘the’. The superfluous letter suggests the inclusion of something else as unclean.
(9) And the sediments of boiled meat.
(10) This shows that blood, which ordinarily is prohibited, after a change is permitted, and the same is the case in connection with the milk of a clean animal.
(11) On account of the labor of childbirth.
(12) The period of nursing, and not because the blood is changed into milk. Therefore, the use of milk is not an anomaly and what need is there, consequently, for a special prohibition with reference to the milk of an unclean animal?
(13) I.e., to be sold to non-Jews.
(14) V. infra 10a.
(15) But milk by itself may still be forbidden, only, in addition, there is a penalty of forty lashes for boiling the meat and milk together.
(16) From the following verse, you may derive the permission for the use of milk.
(17) Deut. XII, 15.
(18) Although the animal is no longer fit for the purpose dedicated, even after its redemption, it possesses a measure of sanctity.
(19) Prov. XXVII, 27.
(20) To sell the milk profitably to non-Jews to maintain his family. But milk may be still prohibited for food.
(21) I Sam. XVII, 18. And Jesse instructs David to bring them to the captain of their thousand in the war, which shows that milk is permitted to be eaten.
(22) That the captain of their thousand might sell to the gentile enemy.
(23) Their intention being to destroy the enemy heathen, the Hebrews would not do business with them to increase their power of resistance. Therefore the cheeses must have been intended for the Hebrews.
(24) From the following verse, we can derive that milk is permitted.
(25) Ex. III, 8.
From the following verse, one can derive that milk is permitted.

Isa. LV, 1.

Both according to the Rabbis and R. Simeon who derive lessons from the repetition of ‘Camel’, ‘Camel’, although variously.

Once in Leviticus and again in Deuteronomy, the same applying to the other repetitions quoted.

What need is there for these repeated prohibitions?

In Leviticus and Deuteronomy.

A creature with two backs and two spinal columns, which is not mentioned in Leviticus as forbidden.

The name of an unclean bird, not mentioned in Leviticus.

The repetition having no object except for the inclusion of one new animal and bird left unmentioned in Leviticus.

And the reason why we infer that special deductions are made from ‘Camel’, ‘Camel’, and not from the repetition of ‘Rockbadger’, ‘Rockbadger’ etc., is because the word ‘Camel’ occurs first in the text.

In the case of an unclean animal born from a clean animal where R. Simeon forbids the eating, if the offspring has no marks similar to the mother, but permits it if there are marks similar to the mother, the question arises whether he requires that the offspring must be like the mother to the extent of its head and the greater part of the body?

Num. XVIII, 17.

I.e., the head and the greater part of the body to be similar to its mother.

Talmud - Mas. Bechoroth 7a

if it has changed from a camel, there is no objection. Or is there perhaps no difference? — Come and hear: If a clean animal gives birth to a species of unclean animal it is forbidden to be eaten, but if the head and the greater part of the body resemble its mother, it is liable to the law of the firstling. May we not deduce from here that even as regards permission to eat, R. Simeon requires the head and the greater part of the body to be [similar to its mother?] — No, only as regards [the law] of the firstling. I can also prove it. For he leaves [the first clause of the above passage] relating to eating [as it is] and places [the provision of the head and the greater part of the body] in conjunction with the firstling. We deduce from here, therefore, [do we not] that only in connection with the firstling does R. Simeon require the head and the greater part of the body, but not as regards permission for eating! — No. I may still tell you that also as regards eating, R. Simeon requires the head and the greater part of the body; and that it was necessary to state this with particular reference to the firstling. For I might be inclined to assume that since Scripture writes: ‘But the firstling of an ox’, [that the law of the firstling does not apply] until the animal is an ox and its first-born is an ox, and that therefore it is not sufficient for the offspring to resemble its mother to the extent only of its head and the greater part of its body, but the whole animal must resemble its mother. He accordingly informs us [that this is not so]. Come and hear: [Scripture says]: Nevertheless these shall ye not eat of them that chew the cud or of them that divide the hooft We infer that this you must not eat, but you may eat an animal which has one mark similar [to its mother]. And what is this which has one mark? This is an unclean animal which was born from a clean animal impregnated from a clean animal. I might think that this is the case even if it was impregnated from an unclean animal? The Text therefore states: ‘A sheep [born from a pair] of lambs’, ‘a goat [born from a pair] of goats’, intimating that the father must be a sheep and the mother must be a female sheep. These are the words of R. Joshua. R. Eliezer says: The object of the text is not to allow what is [already] permitted but to add to what is already permitted. And what is this? This is the case of an unclean animal born from a clean animal impregnated from an unclean animal. Or, shall I say that this is not the case, but its pregnancy must be from a clean animal? Scripture therefore states: ‘a sheep of lambs’, ‘a sheep of goats’ in any case. Now he describes [in the above passage] the animal as unclean, therein agreeing with R. Simeon, and proceeds to say, ‘But you may eat an animal which possesses one [clean] mark similar to its mother!’ — This Tanna [of the above passage] holds with R. Simeon in one thing but he differs from him in the other. Some there are who raise a question [with reference to the above Baraitha], and answer it. [The question was asked]. Can impregnation take place from an unclean animal? For R. Joshua b. Levi said: There can be no impregnation either of an unclean animal from a clean animal, or of a clean animal from an unclean animal, or of large cattle from small cattle, or of small cattle from large cattle, or of a domestic animal from a beast of chase, or a beast of chase from a domestic animal, except in the case of an unclean animal from a clean animal, or of a clean animal from an unclean animal, or of large cattle from small cattle, or of small cattle from large cattle, or of a domestic animal from a beast of chase, or a beast of chase from a domestic animal, except in the case discussed by R. Eliezer and his disputants, where all say that a beast of chase can become pregnant from a domestic animal. And R. Jeremiah explained that the animal became pregnant from a kalut born of a cow, adopting the view of R. Simeon. And the Baraitha states: But you may eat an animal which has one mark like its mother? — This Tanna [from the Baraitha] holds with R. Simeon in one thing but differs from him in the other. Does this mean to say that R. Eliezer holds that a product of two [heterogeneous] factors is permitted and that R. Joshua holds that a product of two such factors is forbidden? But have we not learnt the reverse of them? [For we have learnt]: The offspring of a trefah must not be offered upon the altar. But R. Joshua says it may be offered upon the altar — As a rule, R. Eliezer maintains that a product of two [heterogeneous] factors is forbidden, but the case is different here.
For if it were so, Scripture should write: The sheep of lambs and goats. Why is the repetition of ‘sheep’, ‘sheep’ needed? Deduce from here, therefore, ‘sheep’ in any circumstances. And R.
Joshua? — He will explain the matter to you [as follows]. In general, a product of two [heterogeneous] factors is permitted, but here [in the Baraitha], if this were the case, let Scripture write:
‘Ox’, ‘sheep of a lamb’, ‘sheep of a goat’. What need is there for the words ‘lambs’, ‘goats’?
Deduce, therefore, from here that the father must be a sheep and the mother must be a sheep.
Come and hear: R. Simeon says: [We find] ‘camel’, ‘camel’ twice; one refers to a camel born from a camel [as prohibited] and the other refers to a camel born from a cow. But if its head and the greater part of its body resemble the mother, it is permitted to be eaten. Deduce, therefore, from here that even for eating R. Simeon requires the head and the greater part of the body [to be similar to the mother]. This is proved. FOR THAT WHICH GOES FORTH FROM THE UNCLEAN, etc. A question was put to R. Shesheth. What is the ruling concerning the urine of an ass? Why should not the question be put [concerning the urine] of horses or camels? The question was not put [concerning the urine] of horses or camels, for it is not thick and, consequently, it is not similar to milk. [It is merely] water coming in, and water coming out. But the question does arise [concerning the urine] of an ass, because it is thick and is similar to milk. What is the ruling? Is the urine drained from the body of the ass itself and therefore it is forbidden, or, perhaps, [it is merely] water coming in and water coming out and its thickness is due to the exudations of the body? — R. Shesheth replied to his questioners. We have learnt it: FOR THAT WHICH GOES FORTH FROM THE UNCLEAN IS UNCLEAN, AND THAT WHICH GOES FORTH FROM THE CLEAN IS CLEAN. Now, it does not say ‘from what is Unclean’.

(1) But in some respects it is like its mother.
(2) Even for permission to eat, we require the head and the greater part of the body to be like the mother.
(3) For it is R. Simeon who holds that an unclean animal born from a clean animal is forbidden, and since the prohibition of eating is put in the proximity of the expression of the head and the greater part of the body, we therefore may conclude that for eating purposes, as well as for the law of the firstling, the offspring must resemble the mother as regards its head and the greater part of the body.
(4) Does R. Simeon require that the head and the greater part of the body must be similar to its mother.
(5) Num. XVIII, 17.
(6) Lev. XI, 4.
(7) E.g., a camel even born from a cow.
(8) So literally. Deut. XIV, 4.
(9) Where both parents are clean animals.
(10) From the repetition of the word ‘seh’, it is inferred that even if the unclean animal has only a mother which is a clean animal, the father being an unclean animal, it is still permitted.
(11) The language used, ‘an unclean animal’, in the Baraitha but not ‘that which issues from a clean animal’, is in accordance with the view of R. Simeon who forbids the offspring as definitely unclean, if it has not marks resembling its mother; and it says here that if it has one mark similar to its mother, it is permitted. Hence, we see that we do not require according to R. Simeon the head etc. to resemble its mother.
That an unclean animal born from a clean animal is unclean.

For R. Simeon requires the head and the greater part of the body to resemble its mother before it is permitted to be eaten.

And from the answer, our query whether R. Simeon requires the head etc. to be like the mother in order to be permitted to be eaten, can be solved.

A koy: (An antelope or bearded deer). The Rabbis are undecided whether it belongs to the genus of cattle or the beasts of the chase. This animal, however, comes from a he-goat, and a hind, and R. Eliezer and the majority of the Sages dispute whether the law forbidding the killing of the mother and its young on one day applies to it. But apparently they agree that impregnation is possible in such circumstances.

The unclean animal referred to in the Baraitha above, does not actually mean an unclean animal but a kalu! (closed), an animal with closed and uncloven hoofs born of a cow.

Since the Baraitha describes the kalut born of a cow as unclean, this indicates that its views are in accordance with R. Simeon who holds that an unclean animal born from a clean animal is unclean.

Hence we can infer that for eating purposes, R. Simeon does not require the head and the greater part of its body to be like its mother.

As regards requiring the head etc. to resemble its mother.

R. Eliezer who permits the offspring when the impregnation is from an unclean animal, because he maintains that since it is a product of combined causes and one of these, the mother, is a clean animal, it is permitted.

V. Glos.

If its sire is a clean animal, although the mother is trefah. V. Hul. 58a and Tem. 30b. We have here, consequently, a product of combined causes, one of which is a clean animal.

In the Baraitha quoted above.

Even where the pregnancy is from an unclean animal, the offspring is permitted.

Why are these words put in the plural.

The father must also belong to the same class.

Once in Leviticus and again in Deuteronomy.

When the animal drinks.

The phrase ‘from what is unclean’ would imply coming from the body itself, and therefore whether the substance which came forth was turgid or otherwise, it would be forbidden to be eaten.

Talmud - Mas. Bechoroth 7b

but FROM THE UNCLEAN,\(^1\) and this too [the urine of an ass thick as milk] is from that which is unclean. Some state the argument as follows: With reference to [the urine of] horses or animals, the question was not put forward, because it is not drunk.\(^2\) The question, however, arose concerning [the urine of an ass] which people drink and is good for jaundice. What is the ruling? — R. Shesheth replied to this. We have learnt this in the Mishnah: THAT WHICH GOES FORTH FROM THE UNCLEAN IS UNCLEAN, AND THAT WHICH GOES FORTH FROM THE CLEAN IS CLEAN, and this [urine] also comes from an unclean animal.\(^3\) An objection was raised. Why did [the Sages] say that honey from bees is permitted? Because the bees store it\(^4\) up in their bodies but do not drain it from their bodies.\(^5\) — He [the Tanna of the passage quoted above] holds with R. Jacob who said: The Divine Law expressly permitted honey.\(^6\) For it was taught: R. Jacob says: Yet these may ye eat of all the winged swarming things.\(^7\) This you may eat, but you are forbidden to eat an unclean winged swarming thing. But is not an unclean winged swarming thing expressly mentioned in the Scripture [as forbidden]? Rather we must explain [thus]: An unclean fowl that swarms you must not eat, but you may eat what an unclean fowl casts forth from its body. And what is this? This is bees’ honey.\(^8\) You might think that this also includes gazins’\(^9\) honey or hornets’ honey as permissible. You cannot, however, say this. And why should you include bees’ honey and exclude gazins’ honey or hornets’ honey? I include bees’ honey because it has no qualifying epithet\(^10\) but I exclude gazins’ honey or hornets’ honey, since they have a qualifying epithet. Whom does this dictum that has been taught follow: Gazins’ honey or hornets’ honey is clean and is permitted to be eaten? Not R. Jacob. [The Baraitha says concerning gazins’ or hornets’ honey] that it is clean, consequently, it requires the intention [of using it as a food].\(^7\) We infer from this that bees’ honey does not need the intention [of using it as a food].\(^11\) It has also been taught likewise: Honey in its hive becomes unclean\(^13\) with the uncleanness of food, even without the intention [of using it as a food]. With regard to ball-like concretions in a fallow-deer, the Rabbis in the presence of R. Safra proposed to lay down that they were real eggs and were therefore forbidden.\(^14\) Said R. Safra: It was really the seed of a deer which sought to couple with a hind, but since the latter’s womb is narrow and it is unable to copulate, the deer, therefore, seeks to couple with a fallow-deer, releasing its semen into the latter’s womb.\(^15\) Said R. Huna: The skin which is over the face of an ass at birth\(^16\) is permitted to be eaten.\(^17\) What is the reason? — It is a mere secretion [but no real skin]. Said R. Hisda to him. There is a [Baraita] taught which supports you: A skin which is over the face of a man, whether alive or dead, is clean.\(^18\) Now does not this mean whether both the offspring and its mother are alive, or whether both the offspring and its mother are dead?\(^19\) No. It means, whether the offspring is alive and its mother is dead, or whether the offspring is dead and its mother is alive.\(^20\) But has it not been taught: Whether the offspring and its mother are alive, or whether the offspring and its mother are dead, [the ruling is that the skin is clean]? If it has been actually taught in a Baraita, then it has been taught.\(^21\)

Mishnah. If an unclean fish swallowed a clean fish, it is permitted to be eaten. But if a clean fish has swallowed an unclean fish, the latter is forbidden to be eaten, because it is not [the clean fish’s] product.\(^22\)

Gemara. The reason\(^23\) is because we actually saw that it swallowed. But if we did not see that it swallowed, we would say that it was bred\(^24\) [by the unclean fish]. Whence do we know this? For it has been taught: An unclean fish breeds, whereas a clean fish lays eggs.\(^25\) If this is a fact, even if we see that it actually swallowed, we should say that the clean fish had been consumed and [the fish found inside] was bred by the unclean fish!\(^26\) — Said R. Shesheth: [It means,] if e.g., he found it in the secretory channel.\(^27\) R. Nahman said: if e.g., he found it whole.\(^28\) R. Ashi said:\(^29\) The majority of fish breed their own kind and therefore [when we discover a different kind of fish inside] it is as if we had witnessed the swallowing. Our Rabbis taught: An Unclean fish breeds, but a clean fish lays eggs. Whatsoever gives birth,\(^30\) gives suck.\(^31\) And whatsoever lays eggs, supports its brood by picking up [food for it], except the bat, for although it lays eggs, it gives suck [to its young].

---

\(^{11}\) The phrase ‘from the unclean’ implies something which proceeds from the inside of an unclean creature, and although it does not drain from the body itself, it is yet forbidden.

\(^{12}\) As a medicine. Therefore it is of little value and is not forbidden.

\(^{13}\) According to this version therefore, whether it is thick or otherwise, it is forbidden (R. Gershom).

\(^{14}\) From the sap of flowers and plants.

\(^{15}\) There is, therefore, an objection here according to both versions. According to the first version, if the substance which proceeds from an unclean creature is thick although it does not drain from the body, it is prohibited, whereas here, in the case of honey, the reason why it is allowed is because it does not drain the body. And according to the second version, honey, since it comes from an unclean creature, should be forbidden.

\(^{16}\) The Divine Law explicitly permits honey, although it may come from the body of the bee itself, and no reason is given for this.

\(^{17}\) Lev. XI, 21.

\(^{18}\) And is not like the embryo or offspring which is part of the creature itself.

\(^{19}\) A species of wild bees or locusts.

\(^{20}\) Bees’ honey is known briefly as honey, without any necessity to describe it as such.

\(^{21}\) Food, which is recognized as such, automatically receives the uncleanness pertaining to food when coming in contact with an unclean object such as a corpse or carcass. But, an object which is not ordinarily considered as food requires, in order to receive uncleanness, the intention that it is to be used as food.

\(^{22}\) For it is regarded as ordinary food and receives uncleanness in the usual manner. This passage is to be added with Sh. Mek.

\(^{23}\) For ordinary hives are used for bees, although the honey is still in the hive and the consumer has not as yet expressed his intention of using it as food.

(14) Like a limb from a living animal, having been communicated from the male organ to the womb.

(15) The semen, however, owing to the delay in copulation, has meanwhile hardened, and although it enters the womb, owing to its congealed state, it has no effect and issues later in the animal's excrements, in the form of ball concretions.

(16) A thin skin somewhat similar to the after-birth, but not actually the same.

(17) For it is not regarded as the after-birth in any way.

(18) He who touches or carries it remains clean.

(19) And even if both are dead, nevertheless, the skin is clean. Hence, we learn that the skin is a false membrane and is not considered as the after-birth of either the mother or the offspring.

(20) For the skin comes from both the mother and its offspring and therefore it is clean until both are dead. This is one explanation. Rashi's explanation, however, is that the Baraitha in both cases supposes the mother to be alive, only in one instance the offspring is also alive, therefore the skin is clean. But where both are dead, R. Hisda cannot find support for R. Huna's ruling.

(21) And nothing further need be said.

(22) For the unclean fish was swallowed alive, but if it was actually a growth of the clean fish, it would be permitted, as is the ruling with something which proceeds from a clean being.

(23) Why the Mishnah states that if an unclean fish swallowed a clean fish, the latter is permitted to be eaten.

(24) And we should then regard it as its progeny and as part of the unclean fish.

(25) And hatches them till the young emerge.

(26) And it should therefore be forbidden to be eaten, as the progeny of any unclean fish.

(27) And if it were an embryo, it should have been found in the womb.

(28) And if it were an embryo, it would have left the womb before now.

(29) The Mishnah does not refer to the case where we actually saw the swallowing.

(30) To an embryo or offspring, a creature like itself.

(31) I.e., possesses breasts.

Talmud - Mas. Bechoroth 8a

Dolphins are fruitful and multiply by coupling with human beings. What are dolphins? — Said Rab Judah: Humans of the sea.¹ In any species which has its male balls outside,² [the female] give birth [to its young]. But where the male balls are inside, [the female] lay eggs. It is not so. Did not Samuel Say: The domestic and wild goose are forbidden copulation?³ And we raised the point, what is the reason? Said Abaye: In one case, the male balls are outside, and in the other, the male balls are inside. Yet both lay eggs! — Rather say: Whatsoever has its male genital outside, gives birth, but whatsoever has its male genital inside lays eggs.⁴ Whatsoever copulates in the day time, gives birth in the day time. Whatsoever copulates in the night, gives birth in the night. Whatsoever copulates in the day and night time, gives birth both in the day and in the night. ‘Whatsoever copulates in the day time gives birth in the day time’: for instance, a cock. ‘Whatsoever copulates in the night, gives birth in the night’: for instance, a bat. ‘Whatsoever copulates in the day and night time, gives birth both in the day and in the night’: for instance, man and all beings resembling him. What is the practical rule [to be derived from this statement]? — The rule of R. Mari, the son of Kahana. For R. Mari, the son of Kahana said: If one searched a nest of chickens on the eve of a Festival and did not find an egg therein and on the morrow, he rose early⁵ and found there an egg, it is permitted to be eaten on the Festival.⁶ [But did he not search?]⁷ — You presume that he did not search thoroughly. But did he not search thoroughly? — You presume that the greater part [of the egg] came forth from the intestines of the chicken but returned,⁸ and this is in accordance with the ruling of R. Johanan. For R. Johanan said: An egg, the greater part of which came forth [from the intestines of a chicken] on the eve of a Festival and returned [to its intestines,] may be eaten on the Festival. All animals whose copulating and pregnancy are alike,⁹ give birth from one another, and nurse each other's young. All animals copulate with their faces against the back [of the female], except three, which copulate face to face, and these are a fish, man, and a serpent. And why are these three different? — When R. Dimi came [from Palestine] he said: In the West [Palestine] it was said: Because the Divine Presence spoke with them. In a Baraita it was taught: Camels [copulate] back to back. Our Rabbis taught: A hen lays its eggs after twenty-one days, and corresponding [to a hen] is the almond-tree among trees. A dog [goes with young] for fifty days, and corresponding [to a dog] is a fig-tree among trees. A cat [goes with young] for fifty-two days, and corresponding [to a cat] is a mulberry-tree among trees, whose fruit ripens fifty-two days after its blossoming. A pig [goes with young] for sixty days, and corresponding [to a pig] is an apple tree among trees. A fox and all kinds of reptiles [go with young] for six months, and corresponding [to a fox etc.] is wheat among trees. Small clean animals [go with young] for five months, and corresponding [to small animals] is a vine among trees. Large unclean cattle [go with young] for twelve months, and corresponding [to large unclean cattle] is a palm-tree among trees. Clean large cattle [go with young] for nine months, and corresponding [to clean large cattle] is an olive-tree among trees. The wolf, lion, bear, leopard, bardeles, elephant, monkey, and long-tailed ape [go with young] for three years, corresponding to them are white figs among trees. A viper [or adder] goes with young for Seventy years, and corresponding to it is the carob-tree among trees. From the time of the planting of the carob-tree to the ripening of its fruit, a period of seventy years elapses; and the time of its pregnancy, is three years. A serpent [goes with young] for seven years, and for that wicked animal there is no companion [among trees]. Some, however, say that [corresponding to a serpent] is a kind of white fig [among trees]. Whence is this proved? — Said Rab Judah in the name of Rab and they trace it in tradition up to the name of R. Joshua b. Hanania: Because [Scripture] says: Cursed art thou among all cattle and from among all the beasts of the field. Now if [the serpent] was cursed [to go with young for a period] longer than an animal, [how much] longer must this have been than that of a beast? But [the object of the verse is] to tell you: Just as the animal is cursed [to go with young] longer than a beast in the proportion of one to seven — and what is this? An ass which [goes with young] longer than a cat — so [the serpent] is cursed [to go with young] in the proportion of one to seven, which is seven years. But why not say, that just as the beast has been cursed [to go with young longer] than an animal in the proportion of one to three — and what is this? A lion [which goes with young longer] than an ass — so, [the serpent] has been cursed [to go with young] longer than the beast in the proportion of one to three, which is nine years?

(1) Half fish and half human.
(2) Outside its belly, i.e. animals and beasts.
(3) The coupling together of heterogeneous animals or birds is one form of kil’ayim.
(4) And as regards the domestic and wild goose, although the latter has its male balls outside, its male genital is inside. Therefore, in both instances, they lay eggs and do not give birth to their brood.
(5) Before dawn.
(6) For since a hen does not lay eggs at night, it must have been laid on the previous day. An egg newly laid on a festival is forbidden on that day. V. Bez. 2a.
(7) Inserted with Sh. Mek.
(8) The greater part of the egg came forth from the inside of the chicken on the eve of the Festival, but it returned, and therefore he did not find it when he searched for it at first in the nest. Consequently, even if, as in this case, it laid the egg at night, it is permitted to eat it on the Festival. But it does not, usually, lay eggs in the night time.
(9) Like sheep and goats, which copulate in a similar manner, their faces against the back of the female and whose period of pregnancy is five months.
(10) The serpent in the Genesis story and the fish in that of Jonah.
(11) After pregnancy from a cock, the egg takes this period for completion. Another explanation is that the hen hatches its eggs for a period of twenty-one days before the young ones emerge. (Rabbi Gershom.)
(12) From the time of its blossoming until the fruits are ripened, a period of twenty-one days elapse.
(13) Wheat is here described as a tree, in accordance with the authority who maintains that the tree from which Adam partook was wheat; v. Ber. 40a.
(14) V. supra n. 1.
(15) A spotted beast, either a leopard or a hyena.
(16) The time of the blossoming of the carob-tree until the ripening of its fruit extends over the last three years of the seventy years.
(17) A species of fig, inferior to white figs.
(18) That a serpent goes with young for seven years.
(20) For the least of animals, i.e., a goat, takes five months to produce its young, whereas the shortest period for a beast, i.e., a cat, is fifty-two days.
(21) If Scripture had written: ‘Cursed art thou from among all cattle’, this would have embraced the period also for which beasts are cursed to go with young.
(22) A cat goes with young for fifty-two days and an ass for one year, i.e., three hundred and sixty-five days, the proportion therefore being one to seven.
(23) Hence we infer that a serpent goes with young for seven years.
(24) An ass goes with young for one year and a lion for three years.

Talmud - Mas. Bechoroth 8b

— Does [Scripture] write: ‘From among all the beasts and from among all the cattle’? It writes [in the following order:] from among all the cattle and from among all the beasts. [The serpent] is cursed from among all the animals which are cursed [in that it takes longer to produce their young] than the beasts. But why not say: Just as the animal has been cursed [to go with young longer] than the beast in the proportion of one to three — and what is this? A goat [which goes with young longer] than a cat — so the serpent has been cursed in the proportion of one to three, which is fifteen months? — If you choose, I may reply that Scripture writes: ‘From among all cattle’. Or if you prefer [still another solution], it is a curse [which it is the object of the verse to inflict] and therefore we cast the [heaviest] curses possible [on the serpent]. The Emperor once asked R. Joshua b. Hanania: ‘How long is the period of gestation and birth of a serpent’? — He replied to him: ‘Seven years’. ‘But did not the Sages of the Athenian school couple’ [a male serpent with a female] and they gave birth in three years’? — ‘Those had already been pregnant for four years’. ‘But did they not have sexual contact’? — ‘Serpents have sexual intercourse in the same manner as human beings’. ‘But are not [the sages of Athens] wise men [and surely they must have ascertained the true facts about the serpent]’? ‘We are wiser than they’. ‘If you are wise’ said the Emperor, ‘go and defeat them [in argument], and bring them to me’. He asked him: ‘How many [are the Athenian sages]’? ‘Sixty persons’. Thereupon he said to him: ‘Make me a ship containing sixty compartments, each compartment containing sixty cushions’. He did this for him. When [R. Joshua] reached [their city], he went up to a slaughter-house. He found a certain man who was dressing an animal. He asked him: ‘Is thy head for sale’? The other replied ‘Yes’. Thereupon he asked him: ‘For how much’? And the man answered: ‘For a half a zuz’. He gave him [the money]. Eventually, he said to him: ‘Give me thy head’. [He gave him an animal's head]. Thereupon [R. Joshua] exclaimed: ‘Did I say the head of an animal? [I told thee, thy head]’. [R. Joshua] then said to him: ‘If you wish that I should leave thee alone, step in front of me and show me the door of the school of the Athenian sages’. Thereupon the man replied: ‘I am afraid, for whoever points them out, they put to death’. R. Joshua then said: ‘Take a bundle of reeds, and if you reach the spot, throw it down as if to rest’. He went and found guards inside and guards outside the school; for when the [wise men] saw somebody enter, they used to kill the outside guards, and when they saw someone leaving, they killed the inside guards. He reversed [the heel] of his shoe and they killed the inside guards. He then reversed the shoe [to its normal position] and they killed all of them. He proceeded and found the young men sitting high up [in the upper chamber] and the elders below. He said: ‘If I give greetings [to the elders], then [the young men] will kill me, the latter claiming "we are more important", [for we sit high up and they sit below]. [And if I give greetings to the young men, then the elders will kill me], the latter claiming "we are older and they are just youngsters"”. [R. Joshua] then said: ‘Peace to you’. They asked him: ‘What are you doing here’? He replied to them: ‘I am a sage of the Jews, I wish to learn wisdom from you’. ‘If so, we will ask you questions’ [said the Athenian wise men]. He answered them: ‘Very well. If you defeat me, then whatever you wish, do Unto me, but if I defeat you, eat bread with me in the ship’. They said to him: If a person wished to marry a woman and the consent was not given, is it feasible that he should seek a woman of higher birth? They took a peg and stuck it below [on the stone wall] and it would not join, and then he stuck it higher up, and it went in. He said:
‘Here also therefore, it- may happen that the second woman is his destined one’. ‘If a man lends money and is compelled to seize his debt by force, is it to be expected that he should lend again’? He replied to them: ‘A man goes into a forest, cuts the first load of wood and cannot [lift it]. He continues cutting, until somebody comes along and helps him to lift the bundle’. They said to him:
‘Tell us some stories’. He said to them: ‘There was a mule which gave birth, and round its neck was a document in which was written, "there is a claim against my father's house of [one hundred] thousand zuz"’. They asked him: ‘Can a mule give birth’? He answered them: ‘This is one of these stories’. ‘When salt becomes unsavory, wherewith is it salted’? He replied: ‘With the after-birth of a mule’. ‘And is there an after-birth of a mule’? ‘And can salt become unsavory’? ‘Build as a house in the sky’. He pronounced the Name [of the Deity], [suspended himself in the air] and hung between heaven and earth. He then said to them: ‘Bring me up bricks and clay from down there’. [They asked: ‘And is it possible to do this’? He replied: ‘And is it possible to build a house between heaven and earth’]. ‘Where is the centre of the world’? He raised his fingers and said to them: ‘Here’. They said to him: ‘How can you prove it’? He replied: ‘Bring ropes and measure’. They said: ‘We have a pit in the field. Bring it to the town’. He replied: ‘Knot ropes of bran flour for me and I will bring it in’. ‘We have a broken millstone. Mend it’. [He took a detached portion from it and threw it before them] saying: ‘Take out the threads for me, like a weaver, and I shall mend it’. ‘A bed of knives, wherewith can we cut it’? ‘With the horns of an ass’. They asked: ‘But has an ass horns’?
‘And is there a bed of knives’? [He replied:] They brought him two eggs. ‘Which is from the black cucking hen and which is from the white’? He himself brought them two cheeses and asked them:
‘Which is from a black goat and which from a white’? ‘A chicken dead in its shell-where has the spirit gone’? ‘From whence it came, thither it went’. ‘Show us an article whose value is not worth the loss it causes’. He brought a mat of reeds and spread it out. It could not get through the door [being too long and wide]. He then said: ‘Bring a rake [and pickaxe]’, and demolished [the door of the building]. ‘That is an example of an article whose value is not worth the loss it causes’. He brought them to eat in the ship, one by one to his Separate chamber. When they saw the sixty cushions, each one thought that all the companions would come to this chamber. He ordered the captain to set sail. As they were about to journey, he took some earth from their [native] soil.

(1) That we should interpret the verse from among all beasts as meaning that the serpent was cursed in the same proportion as the beast is more cursed than the animal.
(2) Small clean cattle whose period of gestation is five months, while a cat's period is fifty-two days, the latter thus being to the former In the proportion of one to three.
(3) The animal most cursed, an unclean large animal, like an ass, going with young longer than the beast, i.e., the cat, constituting a ratio of one to seven, as stated above.
(4) We therefore multiply curses in the greatest degree, since it is the clear intention of the verse to heap curses upon the serpent.
(5) And once pregnant, an animal or beast does not take a male.
(6) Having sexual contact even after pregnancy.
(7) So Jast. Rashi and R. Gershom have here ‘chairs’, the latter adding that they were very ornamental.
(8) And thereby I shall know the place where the Athenians are located.
(9) Bran flour or dust was scattered over the threshold and the footsteps were visible of whosoever entered or departed.
The outside guards were put to death when a footstep was visible indicating that someone had entered, for which they were held responsible. On the other hand, when a footstep was visible indicating that someone had left, the inside guards were held responsible and put to death. The guards did not, however, put anybody to death unless he made a forced entry or an exit.
(10) The two footsteps seen on the threshold, pointing in different directions, suggested to the Athenians that there had been two persons, one leaving and the other entering, and consequently all the guards were punished and put to death.
This, of course, made it easy for R. Joshua to gain entrance unmolested.
If he was unable to obtain the woman of an inferior status, how much less would he be able to secure the hand of a woman coming from a better family?

In the spot where there was no opening and hole.

Where there was an opening in a space between the stones.

If the lender was constrained to claim his debt from the buyers of the debtor's lands, surely he would not be inclined to lend in future, for fear of meeting similar difficulties in the recovery of his money.

The wood being in such quantities, he is unable to lift it.

Similarly, although he had difficulties with his first debtor, he may be more fortunate with the next one.

Goldschmidt reads: one thousand.

Inserted from Bah.

And if you are unable to carry out my wish, then I cannot perform yours.

And the wall, until it was able to go in.

Talmud - Mas. Bechoroth 9a

When they reached the straits, they filled a jug of water from the waters of the straits. When they arrived, they were presented to the Emperor. He observed that they were depressed, [being far from their native land]. He said: ‘these are not the same [people]’. He, therefore, took a piece of the earth of their country and cast it at them. Thereupon, they grew haughty towards the King. He then said to R. Joshua: ‘Whatever you desire, do with them’. He fetched the water which [the Athenians] had taken from the straits and poured it into a ditch. He said to them: ‘Fill this and depart’. They tried to fill it by casting therein the water, one after the other, but it was absorbed. They went on filling until [the joints] of their shoulders became dislocated and they perished.

MISHNAH. IF A SHE-ASS THAT HAD NEVER BEFORE GIVEN BIRTH GAVE BIRTH TO TWO MALES, [THE ISRAELITE] GIVES ONE LAMB TO THE PRIEST AS A REDEMPTION. IF IT GAVE BIRTH TO] A MALE AND A FEMALE, HE SETS ASIDE ONE LAMB [WHICH REMAINS] FOR HIMSELF. IF TWO SHE-ASSES THAT HAD NEVER BEFORE GIVEN BIRTH GAVE BIRTH TO TWO MALES, HE GIVES TWO LAMBS TO THE PRIEST. [IF THEY GAVE BIRTH TO] A MALE AND A FEMALE OR TWO MALES AND A FEMALE, HE GIVES ONE LAMB TO THE PRIEST. [IF THEY GAVE BIRTH TO] TWO FEMALES AND A MALE OR TO TWO MALES AND TWO FEMALES THE PRIEST RECEIVES NOTHING. IF ONE SHE-ASS HAD GIVEN BIRTH BEFORE AND ONE HAD NOT GIVEN BIRTH BEFORE AND THEY GAVE BIRTH TO TWO MALES, HE GIVES ONE LAMB TO THE PRIEST. [IF THEY GAVE BIRTH TO] A MALE AND A FEMALE, HE SETS ASIDE ONE LAMB [WHICH REMAINS] FOR HIMSELF. FOR [SCRIPTURE] SAYS: AND THE FIRSTLING OF AN ASS THOU SHALT REDEEM WITH A LAMB. [THE LAMB CAN COME EITHER] FROM THE SHEEP OR THE GOATS MALE OR FEMALE, LARGE OR SMALL, UNBLEMISHED OR BLEMISHED. HE CAN REDEEM WITH THE SAME ONE MANY TIMES. AND THE LAMB ENTERS THE SHED TO BE TITHED. IF IT DIES, THE PRIEST CAN BENEFIT FROM IT. GEMARA. Who is the authority [of the first passage in the Mishnah]? R. Jeremiah said: It does not follow the opinion of R. Jose, the Galilean. For if it were the opinion of R. Jose the Galilean — did he not say that it is possible to ascertain exactly [that both heads came forth simultaneously]? Said Abaye: You may even assume that [the passage in the Mishnah] represents the opinion of R. Jose the Galilean, and that he makes a difference [in connection with the first-born of a clean animal], for [Scripture] writes: The males shall be the Lord’s. But why not infer [the case of the first-born of an unclean animal] from [the case of the firstborn of a clean animal]? — The Divine Law excludes this [by the definite article in the expression], ‘The males’. Some there are who say: Must we say that [the passage in the Mishnah] does not represent the view of R. Jose the Galilean? For if it were the opinion of R. Jose the Galilean — did he not say that it is possible to ascertain exactly [that both heads came forth simultaneously]? — Said Abaye: You may even assume that it is the opinion of R. Jose the Galilean and he makes a difference [in connection with the first-born of a clean animal], for [Scripture] writes: ‘The males shall be the Lord’s’. Now we can understand R. Jeremiah stating that [the passage in the Mishnah] does not follow R. Jose the Galilean; that is the reason why the [Mishnah] does not say: ‘And both their heads came forth simultaneously’. But according to Abaye, let it say: ‘And both heads came forth simultaneously’? Moreover, it has been taught: If his ass had never given birth before, and it gave birth to two males, and the two heads came forth simultaneously, R. Jose the Galilean says that they both belong to the priest, for Scripture Says: ‘The males are the Lord's.’ But is this not written in connection with [an animal] consecrated as such [which is a clean animal]? — Rather say, On account of what [Scripture] Says: ‘The males are the Lord's’. This is a refutation of Abaye. — It is a refutation.

(1) Probably Scylla and Charybdis (Jast.). Rashi explains that יַעֲבֹּד הָאָמָן refers to the ocean mostly the Mediterranean Sea which absorbs all the waters of the world which flow therein. The waters are then brought to the depths from which they are subsequently discharged. Other explanations (by R. Gershom) are that there is a particular spot in the sea that absorbs other waters or that it refers to Miriam's Well.

(2) After smelling their native earth, they imagined that they were back again in their own country.

(3) A vessel or an earthen jug (Rashi).

(4) Because, at all events, one of the offspring must be a first-birth.

(5) There is a doubt here as to whether the male ass was born before the female; so, by setting aside a lamb for redemption, he releases the animal from the prohibitions which attach to the first-birth of an ass, in case the male was born first. He is not required, however, to give the lamb to the priest, since the claim of the latter is purely that of a debt due to him as laid down in the Scripture, the lamb not possessing any sanctity, and being like the ass which it redeems. Consequently, the priest is in the position of a claimant who must produce the evidence, the evidence here being that the male was born prior to the female.

(6) One male must be a first-birth and the other, as there is a doubt whether the male was born before the female, therefore, he sets aside one lamb for redemption, which, however, remains for himself.

(7) Where two males and two females are born, the priest receives nothing, because the female might have been born prior to the males; also, where two females and a male are born, because here too there is a doubt, and the female might have been born before the male. The Israelite, however, must set aside two lambs which remain for himself.

(8) In case the she-ass which had never given birth before had given birth to the female.

(9) Ex. XIII, 13. From here we derive the general rule that the first-birth of an ass is redeemed with a sheep.

(10) If the lamb which the priest receives as a redemption for the first-birth of an ass was sold or returned to the Israelite as a present, it can exempt another first-birth of an ass. This process can be repeated in connection with many first-births of asses.

(11) The lamb which he sets aside is an absolutely unconsecrated animal and enters the shed to be tithed with the rest of his animals.

(12) As soon as the lamb is set aside, the Priest has a claim on it as belonging to him, and it is as if it were already in his possession. Therefore, if the lamb died before it was delivered to the priest, the latter benefits from its skin and carcass.

(13) That if a she-ass which had never before given birth, gave birth to two males, he only gives one lamb to the Priest.

(14) Infra 17a. If a ewe which had never given birth before gave birth to two males, R. Jose, the Galilean, says that both belong to the priest since both heads came forth at the same time.

(15) Ex. XIII, 12. The plural indicates two males, but in the case of the first-births of asses, where the singular is used throughout, even if it were possible to make sure that both heads came forth simultaneously, they are not sanctified.

(16) The superfluous התו (= the’) implies that only in the case of a clean animal do we apply the said law.

(17) As in the case of a clean animal, infra 17a.

(18) According to Abaye, it is possible to ascertain exactly that both heads came forth simultaneously, as the Mishnah is in accordance with R. Jose, only in the case of an unclean animal, it is different, because of the restrictive word ‘The males’. Why should not the Mishnah, therefore, state that even if both heads came forth simultaneously, only one lamb is given to the Priest?

(19) The inference from the verse is indirect. Since Scripture has indicated in this verse that it is possible to ascertain that both heads come forth simultaneously in connection with a clean animal, we apply the same to the first-birth of an ass. In any case we therefore clearly see here that R. Jose's ruling applies even to the first-birth of an ass.

Talmud - Mas. Bechoroth 9b
And as to the Rabbis,¹ must we say that the Rabbis hold that even if a portion of the womb touches [the firstling] it consecrates? For if it consecrates only when the whole womb touches [a firstling], granted it is impossible to ascertain that both heads came forth simultaneously, nevertheless, there is here an interposition?² — Said R. Ashi: Objects of a homogeneous kind are not reckoned as an Interposition [with reference to each other].³

IF IT GAVE BIRTH TO A MALE AND FEMALE, HE SETS ASIDE etc. Since it remains for himself what need is there to set it aside? — [In order] to release it from the prohibitions [attaching to the first-birth of an ass].⁴ Consequently, [we infer] that until it is released, it is forbidden to be used. Whose opinion does the Mishnah represent? It is the opinion of R. Judah. For it has been taught:⁵ IT IS FORBIDDEN TO MAKE ANY USE OF THE FIRST-BIRTH OF AN ASS. These are the words of R. Judah. But R. Simeon permits this. What is the reason of R. Judah? Said ‘Ulla: ‘Can you find an object which requires redemption and yet is permitted to be used while unredeemed?’ But is there not? What of the case of the first-born of a man who requires redemption and yet [even before redemption] one may derive benefit from him? — Rather argue [thus]: Is there an object concerning which the Torah particularly enjoined that redemption must be with a sheep and which was yet permitted to be used [before redemption]? And was [the Torah] indeed so particular? Did not R. Nehemiah the son of R. Joseph redeem [an ass] with boiled herbs of its equivalent value? — As regards an object of equivalent value, this is not referred to here.⁶ What we are speaking of is the redemption [of an object] not with its equivalent value. And ‘Ulla means this: Can you find an object concerning which the Torah was particular to release its prohibition only with a sheep even though not its equivalent in value and yet it is permitted to be used thereof [unredeemed]? — But what of the second tithing which the Torah was particular that the redemption must be with coined money, and yet we have learnt, R. Judah says: If he betrothed a woman [with second tithe] wilfully she is betrothed?⁷ — Also with a first-birth of an ass is a woman betrothed, as R. Eleazar [taught]. For R. Eleazar said: A woman knows that the second tithe is not rendered unconsecrated through her,⁸ and she, therefore, goes up to Jerusalem and eats it. Similarly, here also, a woman is aware that the first-birth of an ass is prohibited, she redeems it therefore with a lamb, and is betrothed with the difference between the value of the ass and the sheep].⁹ And as to R. Simeon, what is his reason? — Said ‘Ulla: Can you find an object whose ransom is permitted to be used while [the object itself] is forbidden? But can we not? What of [the fruit of] the Sabbatical year, whose ransom is permitted to be used and yet the fruit itself is forbidden?¹⁰ — Also with [the fruit of] the Sabbatical year is the ransom forbidden, for a Master said: The prohibitions attaching to the Sabbatical year take effect on the very last thing [bought].¹¹ Or, if you choose, I may say that R. Judah and R. Simeon differ in the interpretation of the following verse. For it has been taught: [Scripture says]: Thou shalt do no work with the firstling of thine ox;¹² but you may do work with a firstling which belongs [both] to you and to a gentile;¹³ nor shear the firstling of thy flock:¹⁴ but you may shear what belongs [both] to you and to a gentile. These are the words of R. Judah. But R. Simeon says: ‘Thou shalt do no work with the firstling of thine ox’, implying, but you may work with the first-born of a man; thou shalt not shear the firstling of thy sheep; implying, but you may shear the first-birth of an ass. We understand why, according to R. Simeon's interpretations Scripture needs to write both verses. But, according to R. Judah, what need is there for two verses to exclude a firstling which belongs [both] to you and to a gentile? And furthermore, according to R. Judah, the first-born of a man also should we say is forbidden [to work with before redemption]? Rather therefore, explain that all [the authorities mentioned] hold that the words, ‘thine ox’, have for their object the exclusion of the first-born of a man. The dispute, however, is in the interpretation of the words, ‘thy sheep’, for R. Judah is in agreement with his own dictum elsewhere, where he says: A partnership with a gentile is subject to the law of the first-born, so that there is need of a verse to make it permissible for shearing and working [of a firstling]. R. Simeon, however, holds that a partnership with a gentile is not subject to the law of the first-born. And, therefore, in respect to shearing and working, there is no necessity for a verse to make it permissible. The necessity, however, arises for a verse in respect to the first-birth of an ass. This is quite right on the view of R. Judah, for it is for the reason [stated above] that Scripture writes, ‘thy sheep’, and the words, ‘thine ox’, [Scripture adds merely] on account of the words, ‘thine ass’. But according to R. Simeon, what need is there for the words, ‘thine ox’, and ‘thy sheep’? This is indeed a difficulty. Rabbah said: R. Simeon agrees, however, that after the breaking of its neck, it is forbidden to use it. What is the reason? — He draws a conclusion by analogy between ‘arifah [the breaking of the neck] here and the "arifah’ [mentioned] in connection with the heifer that had its neck broken. Said Rabbah: On what evidence do I say this? Because it has been taught: The fruit of trees of the first three years, the mixed seeds in a vineyard, an ox that is to be put to death by stoning, or the heifer that has had its neck broken, the birds of the leper, the first-birth of an ass, and [the mixture] of meat and milk [boiled together], all of them receive the uncleanness relating to food. R. Simeon says: All of them do not receive the [levitical] uncleanness relating to food. R. Simeon, however, agrees with regard to the [mixture] of meat and milk, that it receives the uncleanness relating to food, since at one time, it was fit [to receive the uncleanness relating to food]. And R. Assi explained in the name of R. Johanan: What is the reason of R. Simeon? Scripture writes: All food therein which may be eaten. [We deduce] that food which you can give gentiles to eat is called food, but food which you are unable to give gentiles to eat is not called food.

(1) Of the Mishnah, who say that he gives one lamb to the priest, for we have explained that the Mishnah is not according to R. Jose and therefore it is the opinion of the majority of the Rabbis. Or the reference may be to the Rabbis who differ with R. Jose in the case of a clean animal that gave birth to two males, the Rabbis holding that one lamb must be given to the priest and one remains for himself.

(2) For before one male came forth entirely, the other was on its way out. Therefore, although one came forth prior to the other and was sacred, it did not have the whole womb to consecrate it, owing to the other male, which was coming out at the same time. There was, consequently, an interposition between the first male and the womb.

(3) And the two males are of the same kind.

(4) Of working with it and the restriction on its shearing.

(5) Kid. 57b.

(6) For it is not more restricted in respect of the manner of its redemption than other consecrated objects.

(7) v. Kid. 2b. Therefore, we see here that it is permitted to benefit from an object even before its appropriate redemption. Hence we conclude that according to R. Judah, it is permitted to use it.

(8) I.e., by giving her second tithe as kiddushin (token of betrothal).

(9) The ass being of greater value than the sheep. Therefore, no objection can be cited to ‘Ulla's interpretation of R. Judah's views from the case of second tithe.

(10) Here the lamb wherewith the ass is redeemed is permitted for all use.

(11) If one sold fruit of the Sabbatical year, the object purchased may be used, but the fruit itself is forbidden and must be removed from the house when the beasts in the field have consumed the fruit there.

(12) If one purchased flesh in exchange for the fruit of the Sabbatical year, both are liable to the law of removal pertaining to the Sabbatical year. If he then bought wine for the flesh, then the flesh may be used but not the wine. And if again he bought oil for the wine, the last thing purchased is forbidden to be used as well as the fruit itself of the Sabbatical year.

(13) Deut. XV, 19.

(14) In the case e.g., of a firstling of an animal in which a gentile has a share, although R. Judah requires the Israelite to give a half of its value to the priest, nevertheless working with the animal and the shearing thereof are permitted. Since the verse, however, does not exclude the first-birth of an ass, we do not permit its use prior to its redemption and it is on a par with a firstling of a clean animal.

(15) If Scripture had merely written: The firstling of an ox and The firstling of a sheep, R. Simeon could still have expounded the verse in the manner he does.

(16) If the law of redeeming the first birth of an ass with a lamb is not carried out, the law prescribes that its neck must be broken with a hatchet.

(17) In the case where an unknown man is found dead, the law requires the bringing of a heifer whose neck must be broken as an atonement, and here also for failing to redeem the ass with the lamb, the neck of the ass was broken. As in the former case, it is forbidden to be used, so here also by analogy, it is forbidden to be used.

(18) If it had been ritually killed after it was sentenced to death for killing a man.
Which was ritually slaughtered, after being brought down into the rough valley.

The two clean birds, one of which was killed, which the leper brought after his recovery.

Which was ritually slaughtered for a gentile, and as it was still struggling and not dead, it did not posses the uncleanness of nebelah (a carcass). Therefore, if a dead reptile came in contact with it, it received the uncleanness relating to food, so that if it touched other food, it causes levitical uncleanness. The ritual slaughtering, however, helped at least to make it fit to receive the uncleanness of food. Another interpretation is that even if the ass had its neck broken and it was, therefore, nebelah, we can still apply here the principle of the uncleanness of food, if e.g., there was less of the carcass in size than an olive which, although it did not become unclean as nebelah, may yet be supplemented with other food to the required size of an egg to make it receive the uncleanness of food.

And consequently forbidden for any use.

For although they are forbidden to be used, the uncleanness has the effect that should they come in contact with other food, the latter becomes unclean.

I.e., before its boiling.

Lev. XI, 34.

I.e., when it is forbidden to be used and therefore it does not receive the uncleanness relating to food.

Talmud - Mas. Bechoroth 10a

But if this is so, then in the case of [the mixture] of meat and milk, why should it be said that the reason that it receives levitical uncleanness is because, at one time, it was fit for the uncleanness relating to food? Why not derive this from the fact that it is a food which you can give to gentiles? For it has been taught: R. Simeon, the son of R. Judah says in the name of R. Simeon: [The mixture of] meat and milk is forbidden to be eaten but it is permitted for general use since [Scripture says]: For thou art a holy people unto the Lord thy God. And, in another place, Scripture says: And ye shall be holy men unto Me. As in that case, it is forbidden to be eaten but it may be used generally, so here [in connection with the mixture of meat and milk] it is forbidden to be eaten but it may be used generally! — R. Simeon gives one [reason] and still another [reason]. One [reason why it should receive the uncleanness of food is because it is a food] which can be given to gentiles. And still another [reason], because for [the Israelite] himself, too, there was a time [before its boiling] when it was fit to receive uncleanness. Now, if there is any substance in the opinion that after the ass's neck is broken it is permitted according to R. Simeon to be used, let the above [Baraitha] state: But R. Simeon agrees in connection with the first-birth of an ass and [the mixture of] meat and milk that they receive the levitical uncleanness relating to food? — [No]. If one had formed the intention [of using the ass as food], it would be so [as you argue] We are dealing here, however, in a case where he had not formed such an intention. And what is then the reason that [the majority of] the Rabbis, [R. Simeon's disputants], make it receive uncleanness? — Rabbis said the following in the presence of R. Shesheth: [The reason is that] its prohibition [by Scripture] renders it important [to be regarded as food]. But, do we say according to the Rabbis that the reason Is, since its prohibition renders it important? Have we not learnt [in a Mishnah]: Thirteen things were said with reference to the carcass of a clean bird, and this is one of them: it requires the intention [to be used as food], but it does not need to be rendered fit [to receive uncleanness]. Now, if its prohibition signalizes it [as food] [to receive uncleanness], what need is there for the intention of using it as food? — [The Mishnah just quoted] represents the opinion of R. Simeon. Come and hear: ‘The carcass of an unclean animal in all places, and the carcass of a clean bird and the fat [of the carcass of a clean animal] in the villages, require the intention [of being used as food in order to receive uncleanness], but they do not need to be rendered fit [to receive uncleanness]. Now, if you say that its prohibition renders it important [to receive uncleanness], what need is there for the intention [of using it as food]? — This, [too], represents the opinion of R. Simeon. Come and hear: The carcass of a clean animal in all places, or the carcass of a clean bird, or the fat [of a ritually slaughtered animal] in market places, do not require the intention [of being used as food]. Nor do they need to be rendered fit [to receive uncleanness of food]. This implies that an unclean animal does require the intention [of using it as food in order to receive uncleanness]. And should you say that this too represents the opinion of R. Simeon; surely since the second part [quoted below] is the opinion of R. Simeon, then the first part cannot be according to the opinion of R. Simeon. For the second part states: R. Simeon says: Also a camel, hare, rockbadger and swine, do not require the intention [of using them as food in order to receive uncleanness], nor need they be rendered fit [to receive uncleanness]. And R. Simeon [further] explained. What is the reason? Since [these animals mentioned] have marks of a clean animal! — No, said Rabbah: All [the authorities mentioned] agree that we do not say that its prohibition [by the Scriptures] renders it important [to receive the uncleanness relating to food]. And [as to your question, what is the reason of the Rabbis]? If the ass's neck has been broken, it would really be so.20

(1) Deut. XIV, 21, which is followed by the prohibition of seething a kid in its mother's milk.
(2) Ex. XXII, 30, in connection with the prohibition of trefah (ritually forbidden food).
(3) In the Scriptural verse: And ye shall be holy, etc., referring to trefah which may be used for general purposes as stated in the context: Ye shall cast it to the dogs.
(4) Unlike the case of the ox and heifer mentioned above, since they have a forbidden status when alive.
(5) Rabbah continued his argument.
(6) Since it can be given to gentiles for food. Hence Rabbah concludes that even R. Simeon admits that an ass whose neck was broken because its owner failed to redeem it, is forbidden to be used.
(7) That the ass with a broken neck would have received the uncleanness relating to food.
(8) And that is the reason why the Baraita does not include the case of an ass in the statement of R. Simeon as receiving the uncleanness of food, for ordinarily, without expressing the intention of regarding it as food, it is not considered as such.
(9) The very prohibition which Scripture imposes upon it indicates that it is food fit for gentiles to eat, otherwise, Scripture would not have considered it of sufficient importance to forbid it and, therefore, it receives the uncleanness relating to food even without the express Intention of using it as such.
(10) And if a dead reptile touched it and, in turn, it touched other food, it renders the latter unclean. This intention of using it as food is necessary, as the carcass of a clean bird has no uncleanness of touch, for it conveys uncleanness only in the gullet in the process of eating. Or, in the case where it is less in size than an olive and consequently there is no uncleanness as regards nebelah, it combines with other foods to make up the required size of an egg, in order to receive food uncleanness when it comes in contact with a dead reptile.
(11) Like seeds, by having water poured on it, since it already possesses a more stringent uncleanness by causing uncleanness to man and garments by eating it; v. Nid. 50b, Zeb. 105b.
(12) In the villages, where the inhabitants are poor and are not accustomed to eat birds or fat, the intention of using these as food to be given to gentiles is necessary before it can receive the uncleanness relating to food. With reference also to the carcass of a forbidden animal, the intention of using it as food is also necessary, for the reason that it is loathsome and, ordinarily, is not considered food even for gentiles.
(14) I.e., one which had not been ritually slaughtered.
(15) It is usually given to gentiles as food, for it is not loathsome and therefore it does not require the intention of using it as food.
(16) I.e., the towns, containing many people of means who are accustomed to eat birds or fat so that these are usually considered food.
(17) The carcass of a clean animal, because its uncleanness is of a more stringent character, and the fat, because the very act of ritual slaughter has made it fit to receive uncleanness, since the intention of using it as food is not required, v. ibid.
(18) And we do not maintain that its prohibition renders it important to receive food uncleanness, without the intention being expressed using it as food.
(19) Therefore the first passage with reference to the carcass of an unclean animal etc. requiring the intention of being used as food, must be in accordance with the view of the Rabbis., Hence we infer that the Rabbis do not hold that its prohibition marks it out as fit to receive food uncleanness and therefore the Baraita quoted above by Rabbah, where the Rabbis say that the first-birth of an ass receives the uncleanness relating to food, must deal with a case where he expressed the intention of Using it as food. And R. Simeon maintains that it does not receive uncleanness, because it is food which cannot be given to a gentile to eat, I.e., It is forbidden to be used. Rabbah consequently is able to deduce from this that an ass which had its neck broken because it was not redeemed is forbidden to be used.

(20) That the Rabbis would agree that it does not receive the uncleanness relating to food, since he had not intended to use it as food.

Talmud - Mas. Bechoroth 10b

But here we are dealing with a case where e.g., he ritually killed [the ass] to practice therewith [to kill ritually],¹ and the difference here corresponds to the difference of opinion of Nimos and R. Eleazar. For it has been taught: R. Jose said: Nimos, the brother of Joshua the grist-maker told me that if one killed a raven ritually in order to practice therewith, its blood renders food fit [to receive uncleanness].² [R. Eleazar] says: The blood of shechitah³ always renders fit [to receive uncleanness]. Now is not [R. Eleazar's] opinion identical with the first Tanna? We must suppose then that the difference between them is whether its prohibition⁴ renders it important [as fit to receive uncleanness]? The first Tanna holds: Its blood renders it fit [for conveying uncleanness] to other [food], but as regards [the raven itself], it requires the intention [of being used as food].⁵ Upon which [R. Eleazar] remarks: The blood of shechitah always renders it fit [to convey or receive uncleanness] and as regards the [raven] itself too, it does not require the intention [of using it as food] in order to receive [levitical uncleanness]. But how do you know [this]? Perhaps the reason of R. Eleazar there,⁶ is because the case of a raven is different, since it has marks of cleanness.⁷ And how do we know that marks of cleanness are of importance? — Because it says in connection with the Baraitha above,⁸ R. Simeon said: What is the reason? Since it has marks of cleanness. And should you object that if the reason is because of the marks of cleanness, why should it say [according to R. Eleazar] [that he killed the raven] in order to practice, since even if he unintentionally ritually killed it, the case should also be identical; the answer is, Yes, it is so, but it is on account of Nimos [that it does not state this].⁹ Abaye¹⁰ raised the following objection.¹¹ If he did not wish to redeem [the ass], he breaks its neck with a hatchet from the back and buries it, and it must not be used. These are the teachings of R. Judah. But R. Simeon permits it [to be used]?¹² — Explain [in the following manner]: When alive it is forbidden to use [the first-birth of an ass], but R. Simeon permits this. But since the second part [of the above passage] refers to it when alive, then the first part must refer to it when it is not alive? For the second part states: ‘He must not kill [the ass] with a cane, nor with a sickle, nor with a spade, nor with a saw. Nor may he let it enter an enclosure and lock the door on it, in order that it may die. And it is forbidden to shear it or to work with it. These are the teachings of R. Judah. But R. Simeon permits this!’¹ — The first and the second parts [we may explain] both refer to an ass when alive. The first part, however, refers to monetary benefit,¹³ and the second part refers to the benefit derived from its body.¹⁴ [And both parts] require [to be stated]. For if we had only the part referring to monetary benefit, I might have assumed that in that peculiar case R. Simeon permits, whereas with regard to the benefit derived from its body, I might have said that he agrees with R. Judah. And if we had only the part referring to the benefit derived from its body, I might have supposed that R. Judah forbids in that particular case, whereas in the case of monetary benefit, I might have said that he agrees with R. Simeon. [Therefore both parts] are necessary. And so R. Nahman reported in the name of Rabbah, the son of Abbuha: R. Simeon agrees that after the neck has been broken it is forbidden to be used. And R. Nahman said: On what evidence do I say this? Because it has been taught, [Scripture says]: Then thou shalt break its neck.¹⁵ Here [the word] "arifah"¹⁶ is used and above¹⁷ [the word] "arifah” is used; just as above it is forbidden to be used, so here also it is forbidden to be used. Whose opinion does this represent? Shall I say it is according to the opinion of R. Judah? Surely he prohibits it even when alive, Must you not therefore admit that it is the opinion of R. Simeon?¹⁸ — Said R. Shesheth to him: Safra our fellow-student interpreted it as follows: [The above Baraitha] can still be the opinion of R. Judah, and yet there is need [for stating it]. I might have assumed that since ‘arifah’ stands in the place of redemption, as redemption makes it permissible [to be used], so “arifah” is permitted. He consequently informs us [that it is not so]. Said R. Nahman: On what evidence do I say this?¹⁹ From what R. Levi taught, The Israelite causes a monetary loss to the priest,²⁰ therefore he should suffer a monetary loss.²¹ Whose opinion does this represent? Shall I say that it is the opinion of R. Judah? Surely his loss is of long standing!\(^{22}\) [Must we not therefore admit] that it is the opinion of R. Simeon? — If you choose I may say it is the opinion of R. Judah, and, if you choose, I may say that it is the opinion of R. Simeon. If you choose I may say that it is the opinion of R. Judah, and he speaks of the loss entailed in the difference.\(^{23}\) And if you choose I may say that it is the opinion of R. Simeon, and he speaks of the loss incurred by its death.\(^{24}\) And so did Resh Lakish say: R. Simeon agrees that the ass after its neck has been broken is forbidden to be used. But R. Johanan, (or as some say, R. Eleazar) says: The difference between the Rabbis and R. Simeon still prevails even in such circumstances.\(^{25}\) Some report this, R. Nahman's rulings,\(^{26}\) in connection with the following: If one betrothed a woman with the first-birth of an ass, she is not betrothed.\(^{27}\) Are we to say that the Mishnah is not according to the opinion of R. Simeon? — R. Nahman reported in the name of Rabbah the son of Abbuha: [The Mishnah refers to a case] where the neck had been broken and therefore agrees with all the authorities concerned. Some there are who Say: Whose opinion does this represent? Neither the opinion of R. Judah nor that of R. Simeon. For if it is the opinion of R. Simeon, let her become betrothed with the whole value of the ass.\(^{28}\) And if it is the opinion of R. Judah, let her become betrothed with the difference!\(^{29}\) — Said Rabbah b. Abbuha in the name of Rab: [The Mishnah] can still be the opinion of R. Judah, e.g., where the ass was of the value only of a shekel;\(^{30}\) and he holds according to the view of R. Jose b. Judah. For it has been taught, [Scripture says]: 'Thou shalt redeem’ . . . ‘Thou shalt redeem’.\(^{31}\) [One text] ‘Thou shalt redeem’ intimates immediately.\(^{32}\) [and the other text] ‘Thou shalt redeem’ intimates with whatever value.\(^{33}\) But R. Jose b. Judah says: There can be no redemption with less than the value of a shekel.\(^{34}\) The Master said. [Scripture says]: 'Thou shalt redeem, . . . Thou shalt redeem'. [The one text] 'Thou shalt redeem' intimates immediately [and the other text] 'Thou shalt redeem' intimates with whatever value'. Is not this obvious?\(^{35}\) — It is necessary [to state it]. I might have assumed that since an unclean animal is compared with the first-born of a man,\(^{36}\) just as in the case of a first-born of a man the redemption takes place after a period of thirty days and with the sum of five sela's,\(^{37}\) so here also the redemption should take place after a period of thirty days and with the sum of five sela's. [Therefore Scripture states]: ‘Thou shalt redeem, viz, immediately, ‘Thou shalt redeem’, viz., with whatever value. ‘R. Jose b. Judah says: There is no redemption with less than the value of one shekel’. But which way do you take it; if R. Jose compares an unclean animal with the first-born of a man, then the sum of five sela's is required for redemptions and if he does not compare [an unclean animal with the first-born of a man], whence does he derive that the redemption is with a shekel? — In fact he does not compare [an unclean animal with the first-born of a man]; [yet] said Rabba: Scripture says: And all thy valuations shall be according to the shekel of the Sanctuary,\(^{38}\) intimating that any valuations which you assess shall be no less in value than a shekel. And the Rabbis [who differ with R. Jose], what say they? —

---

(1) But not for the purpose of eating therefrom.
(2) If the blood fell on food or vegetables. And certainly this would be the case if he killed it ritually in order to eat therefrom; its blood would render itself and other food fit to receive levitical uncleanness.
(3) The act of ritual slaughter of an animal or bird.
(4) The prohibition referred to here in the context must be understood to mean the fact that it was not a proper shechitah, in the sense that it was not being killed for eating purposes but merely in order to practice.
(5) For its prohibition does not render it fit to receive uncleanness and its shechitah here is of no importance to cause it to be considered as food. R. Simeon, therefore, holds as regards the first-birth of an ass which was ritually killed, according to the view of Nimos that it does not receive the uncleanness of food, and the Rabbis agree with the opinion of R. Eleazar that the ritual killing, in itself, causes it to be regarded as food, without the express intention of regarding it as such.
(6) In the passage quoted above where R. Eleazar differs with Nimos in connection with a raven ritually killed for practice.
(7) A raven has a crop, which is one of the signs of a clean bird, and, therefore, it is considered as food as regards levitical uncleanness. But in the case of the first-birth of an ass, which does not possess any marks of cleanness, unless he intended to use it as food, the Rabbis would not hold that it receives the uncleanness pertaining to food, and R.
Simeon would maintain that even if he had thought of it as food, it receives no uncleanness, owing to the fact that it is forbidden to be used after its neck has been broken.

(8) A carcass of a clean animal in all places etc.

(9) To inform us that according to Nimos, although there was a deliberate ritual killing for practice purposes, nevertheless the raven itself does not receive the uncleanness relating to food. But as regards R. Eleazar, it is true that even if the raven was killed unintentionally, (the intention having been to cut some other object), the blood renders other food fit to receive uncleanness, and the raven itself also receives uncleanness. Consequently, you cannot explain the difference between the Rabbis and R. Simeon on the basis of the difference of Nimos and R. Eleazar. Therefore, the difference of the former disputants refers to the case where the ass's neck was broken, and the reason why R. Simeon maintains that it is not clean is because, as Rabbah explains, it is forbidden to be used.

(10) Inserted from Sh. Mek.

(11) Referring to the ruling of Rabbah concerning the ass which had its neck broken and which is forbidden to be used, for any purpose.

(12) Therefore we derive from here the reverse of the ruling of Rabbah.

(13) If he hired or sold it to others.

(14) I.e., the shearing and the working with it.

(15) Ex. XIII, 13.

(16) Indicating the broken neck of the first-birth of an ass.

(17) In connection with the ceremony of the heifer, whose neck was broken when an unknown man's body was found dead.

(18) We therefore see here that R. Simeon agrees that it is prohibited after its neck is broken.

(19) That R. Simeon agrees that it is forbidden for all use after its neck is broken.

(20) By not redeeming the ass with a lamb and giving it to the priest.

(21) The Beth din should therefore compel him to have its neck broken after thirty days.

(22) Even when the ass was alive it was forbidden to be used according to R. Judah.

(23) Between its value when alive and dead. For whereas when it was alive, although forbidden to be used, it could be redeemed, now he loses everything.

(24) For being dead it can only be given to dogs to eat and therefore, there has been a considerable loss.

(25) Where the neck of a first-born of an ass was broken.

(26) That after the ass's neck had been broken it was forbidden to use it and this was expressed not as separate and independent ruling but with reference to the following Mishnah.

(27) Kid. 56b.

(28) For the whole of it may be used.

(29) The difference between the ass of the value of a shekel and a sheep even of the value of a danka i.e., a sixth of a denar.

(30) And the sheep being not less in value than a shekel as stated below, there is no difference in value between it and the ass in order that a woman may be betrothed thereby.

(31) Ex. XIII, 13. There is a repetition of the text.

(32) Before the period of thirty days has elapsed.

(33) There is no fixed sum and redemption may therefore be carried out even for less than a shekel or selá'.

(34) The sheep must therefore posses at least the value of a shekel, so that there is no surplus left to effect a betrothal.

(35) For Scripture does not mention that redemption commences when the ass is a month old nor does it say that the lamb must be of some specific value.

(36) Howbeit the first-born of man shalt thou surely redeem and the firstling of unclean beasts shalt thou redeem. Num. XVIII, 15.

(37) A selá' is a coin equal to two common shekels.

(38) Lev. XXVII, 25.

Talmud - Mas. Bechoroth 11a

That [verse] refers to the amount of one's means.¹ Said R. Nahman: The halachah is according to the teachings of the Sages.² And how much [must be the value of the lamb]? — Said R. Joseph: Even a puny lamb worth no more than a dank,a.³ Said Raba: We have learnt this too: [The lamb for redemption can either be] large or small, without a blemish or blemished. Is this not evident?⁴ — You might have assumed that to that extent [i.e., that of a puny lamb etc.] it is not an adequate redemptions or indeed [which would be better], a puny lamb is not [an adequate redemption at all].⁵ [R. Joseph consequently] informs us [that it is an adequate redemption]. R. Judah the Prince had a first-birth of an ass. He sent it to R. Tarfon.⁶ He asked him, ‘How much am I required to give the Priest?’ He replied to him ‘Behold the Rabbis said: The liberal person redeems with a sela’ [four zuz], the stingy person redeems with a shkel [two zuz], an average person redeems with a rigia. Said Raba: The law [requires redemption] with a rigia. And how much is this? Three zuz, less than one and more than the other.⁷ Does not this ruling contradict the above?⁸ There is no difficulty.⁹ [We are dealing] here with the case when one comes to seek advice and the case there is where he redeems of his own accord.¹⁰ R. Isaac reported in the name of Resh Lakish: If one possesses a first-birth of an ass and he has not a lamb with which to redeem it, he redeems it for its equivalent value. According to whose opinion is this? Shall I say it is according to R. Judah?¹¹ Did he not say that the Torah was particular that the redemption must be with a sheep? You must then say it is according to the view of R. Simeon.¹² R. Ahah stated it thus. Rabina found a difficulty: [In a difference between] R. Judah and R. Simeon, the law is according to R. Judah; moreover, the Tanna [of our Mishnah]¹³ states the law anonymously in the sense of R. Judah; and still you declare the halachah is according to R. Simeon? But [rather say] that [R. Isaac's statement] accords even with the opinion of R. Judah. For let not [the redemption of the first-birth of an ass] be more stringent than other consecrated objects.¹⁴ Moreover the Torah did not propose [by the law of redeeming] with a lamb to make it severe for him,¹⁵ but, on the contrary, to make it easier for him.¹⁶ R. Nehemiah the son of R. Joseph redeemed the first-birth of an ass with boiled herbs of its equivalent value. R. Shizbi reported in the name of R. Huna: If one redeems the ass of his neighbor, it is a valid redemption. The question was raised: Is it a valid redemption as regards the person who redeems it, or does it mean that it is a valid redemption as regards the owner?¹⁷ According to the opinion of R. Simeon, there is no need to inquire, for, since he says that it is permitted to use the first-birth of an ass, it is the owner's money.¹⁸ The question does arise, however, according to the opinion of R. Judah who says that it is forbidden to use it. Does he compare it with a consecrated object concerning which the Divine Law says: And he shall give money and it shall be assured to him?²⁰ Or, perhaps since the owner possesses the difference [between the value of the ass and a sheep], it is not compared with a consecrated object?²¹ — Said R. Nahman: Come and hear: ‘If one stole the first-birth of an ass belonging to his neighbor, he pays double to the owner, for although he does not possess [the rights of ownership] now, he will possess subsequently.’²² Now, whose opinion does this represent? Shall I say that it is the opinion of R. Simeon? Why has he no rights of ownership now? Then obviously, it must be the opinion of R. Judah. Now if you were to assume that we compare it with a consecrated object, does not the Divine Law say: And it be stolen out of a man's house,²³ implying, but not from the possession of the sanctuary?²⁴ And there is nothing more to be said. IF ONE SHE-ASS HAD GIVEN BIRTH BEFORE AND ONE HAD NOT GIVEN BIRTH BEFORE etc. Our Rabbis taught. Under what circumstances did the Sages rule that IT ENTERS THE SHED TO BE TITHED? You cannot say that it means where the lamb came into the possession of the priest, [and then it was returned to the Israelite],²⁵ for we have learnt: An animal purchased, or which is given to him as a gift, is exempted from the law of the tithes of animals.²⁶ This must refer then to the case of an Israelite who had ten uncertain first births of asses²⁷ in his house. He sets aside on their behalf ten lambs, [makes them enter the shed],²⁸ tithes them, and they are his. [This] supports the opinion of R. Nahman. For R. Nahman reported in the name of Rabbah the son of Abbuh: If an Israelite had ten uncertain first-births of asses, he sets aside on their behalf ten lambs, tithes them and they are his. R. Nahman further reported in the name of Rabbah the son of Abbuh: If an Israelite has ten asses, distinctly first-births, in his house, which fell to him [as an inheritance] from his maternal grandfather, a priest, to whom this inheritance had fallen from his maternal grandfather, an Israelite,²⁹ he sets aside thirty ten lambs, tithes them and they are his.³¹
R. Nahman [further] reported in the name of Rabbah the son of Abbuha: If an Israelite who possessed tebel evenly piled up; in his house, which fell to him [as an inheritance] from his maternal grandfathers a priest, to whom it had fallen from his maternal grandfather an Israelite, he tithes it and it is his. And it was necessary [to teach both cases]. For had R. Nahman taught only the first case, [I might have assumed that the reason was] because it was already set aside. But, here, in the second case, since gifts for the priest, which have not yet been taken [by the priest] are not considered as having been given, I might have said it is not so. And if he had only taught the second case, [I might have assumed that the reason why the tithes are his] is because it is possible to tithe tebel as it is, for it lies [in one place], but in the other case, since the lamb comes from another place, we do not say that it is as if it were already set aside, and therefore I might have said that it was not [as stated]. It was therefore necessary [to state both cases]. R. Samuel b. Nathan reported in the name of R. Hanina: If one who buys untithed grain (1) A man who says ‘I vow my own value’ or according to Rabbenu Gershom, the value of a specified persona Scripture informs us here that we do not accept the valuation if his means are less than one shekel. But as regards the redemption of the first-born of an ass, redemption may be with whatever value, however small. (2) That its redemption with a sheep may be of any value no matter how insignificant. (3) A small Persian coin, the value of a sixth of a denar (Rashi), or, a sixth of a shekel (R. Gershom). (4) That a puny lamb is adequate for redemption, since the Rabbis state above that it can be of any value whatever. (5) For although a small lamb may be an adequate redemption, a lean lamb is not. (6) Who was a priest. (7) One zuz less than a selar which is the redemption of a liberal person and one more zuz than that of a stingy person, i.e., three zuz. Lit., ‘running this way and running that way’. (8) The above ruling that the law is according to the Sages who hold that even the worth of a danka is sufficient for redemption. (9) How much should be given to the priest. We accordingly advise him to give three zuz. (10) When he redeems the first-birth of an ass even with a lamb worth a danka, we do not compel him to give something of greater value. (11) This questioner quotes the view of R. Judah, which was mentioned above in the first instance, although it is not the final conclusion, namely, that only with a lamb can it be redeemed but not with any other object. (12) Who does not mention when giving his reason for the view he holds that the Torah was particular that the redemption must be with a sheep, thus implying that the first-birth of an ass may also be redeemed with its equivalent value. (13) Stated above, that the Israelite sets aside a lamb in order to release the first-birth of an ass from the prohibitions attaching to it, which is the opinion of R. Judah. (14) Which are redeemed with their equivalent value. (15) I.e., that only with a lamb is he allowed to redeem the ass. (16) If he wished to redeem it with a lamb, even a puny one, it is an adequate redemption. But he need not necessarily redeem with a lamb. (17) The person who redeems acquires the first-birth of the ass in virtue of the redemption. (18) The ass is redeemed, but the first-birth belongs to the owner. The person who redeems, consequently, is unable to dispose of it. (19) And the person who redeemed it cannot sell it and is not reimbursed. (20) Lev. XXVII, 19. The verse is given here in an abbreviated form, the full verse being Then he shall add a fifth part of the money and it shall be assured to him. V. Tosaf. on Shab. 128a, 1, 5. (21) And since a portion of it is the owner's money, if he redeems it, we account the whole of it as belonging to him. (22) After its redemption it will be his money. (23) Ex. XXII, 6. (24) Since, therefore, he pays double for the stolen first birth of an ass, we infer that it is not compared with a consecrated object. (25) Either in the form of a gift or it was sold to him. (26) V. infra 55b.
E.g., where he had ten she-asses and each gave birth to a male and a female and there was a doubt whether the males were born before the females. Ten sheep are therefore set aside on their behalf to release them from the prohibitions attaching to the first.birth of asses and these are unconsecrated animals, to be tithed in the ordinary manner. The same principle also applies to two or three uncertain first-births, but the reason why it mentions ten uncertain first.births is to inform us that although in the latter case they are entitled to be tithed on their own account, we still set aside the ten lambs to be tithed among the others in the shed.

(28) Supplemented from R. Gershom.

(29) These are certainly subject to the law of redemption, since they were born in the Israelite's possession.

(30) To redeem them from their prohibition as first-births.

(31) The present Israelite does exactly what the priest would have been required to do. As the priest who inherited from the Israelite would have been required to set aside the lambs on behalf of the first-births of the asses, since they were born in the possession of the Israelite, the present Israelite does the same. And just as the priest would have kept the lambs for himself, being a priest, so the Israelite who inherited from the priest retains these for himself, for it is as if the priest had bequeathed the lambs to him.

(32) Fruits or grain before the separation of the priestly and levitical dues.

(33) The even piling up or storing of the grain is the finishing touch which prepares it for tithing.

(34) He must give the tithe because it belonged to an Israelite and still belongs to an Israelite. But it is retained by him, since it came to him from a priest and therefore he sells the priestly gift to a priest and the tithes to a Levite.

(35) The lambs and the asses belong to different species and nothing special is required to be done; therefore it is as if the asses and the lambs had fallen to him from his maternal grandfather, a priest, already separated.

(36) And the tithes must be given to the priest. He therefore teaches us that the tithes belong to him and that he need not give the tithes to the priest.

(37) With the parts to be separated, and therefore it is considered as if it had been already separated and tithed and in the priest's possession, before it fell to the Israelite.

(38) For it requires a special action to bring the lamb in order to redeem whereas in the case of tebel, no effort is necessary.

Talmud - Mas. Bechoroth 11b

evenly piled up from a gentile, he tithes it and it is his.\(^1\) Who piled it up? Shall I say that a gentile piled it up? Surely the text says, 'thy corn' implying, but not the corn of a gentile?\(^2\) Rather we are dealing here with a case where the Israelites piled it up in the domain of a gentile.\(^3\) 'He tithes it', because a gentile has not the right of possession in Palestine to release [produce] from the obligation of tithing. 'And it is his', because he says to the priest, 'I have acquired my rights from a man with whom you cannot go to law'. We have learnt elsewhere: If a man deposits his fruits with a Cuthean,\(^4\) or with an 'am ha-arez,\(^5\) it may be presumed that they retain their former condition in respect of tithes and the sabbatical year,\(^6\) but if with a gentile, they are like [the gentile's] fruits.\(^7\) R. Simeon says: They are dem'ai.\(^8\) Said R. Eleazar: That [the priest's share] should be set aside all the authorities mentioned agree. Where they differ is on the question whether to give it\(^9\) to the priest. The first Tanna [mentioned] holds that he has certainly changed them and therefore he must give the priestly share to the priest, whereas R. Simeon maintains that they have the law of dem'ai. R. Dimi was once sitting and repeating this teaching. Said Abaye to him: The reason is because we are in doubt whether he changed them or not. But if he certainly changed the fruits, all the authorities [mentioned] would agree that he is required to give the priestly share to the priest, would they not? But surely did not R. Samuel report in the name of R. Hanina: If one bought untithed grain from a gentile piled up [in proper shape], he gives tithes and it is his? — Perhaps [he replied], the one\(^10\) refers to great terumah, and R. Samuel's report refers to the terumah of the tithe!\(^11\) [Said Abaye], This indeed reminds me of something [which supports your very explanation]. For R. Joshua the son of Levi said: Whence do we derive that a purchaser of untithed grain from a gentile piled up in proper shape is exempt from the terumah of the tithe? Because Scripture says: Moreover thou shalt speak unto the Levites and say unto them, when ye take of the children of Israel.\(^12\) [We infer that] from the untithed grain which you buy from the children of Israel, you separate the terumah of the tithe and give it to the priest. But from untithed grain which you buy from a gentile you do not separate terumah of the tithe and give it to the priest. AND IF IT DIED, HE BENEFITS THEREFROM. In what circumstances are we to suppose it to have died? Shall I say that it died in the possession of the priest and that he is permitted to benefit therefrom? This is obvious, since it is his own money. Again, if it means that it died in the possession of the owner and that he [the priest] is permitted to benefit therefrom, this too is obvious! — I might have assumed that as long as the animal has not reached the priest's hands, the latter does not really possess it. [The Mishnah] accordingly informs us that from the time that [the Israelite] has set it aside, it stands in the domain of the priest.

(1) And the priest's share of the crop he sells to a priest.
(2) What the Israelite stores and evenly piles up becomes subject to the priestly contribution, but not what is stored by a gentile. The text is in Deut. XIV, 23 and also in Deut. XVIII, 4.
(3) Where the Israelite is a tenant in a gentile's field, for which he takes a share of the produce, and the Israelite stored up the grain, R. Hanina therefore means by the words: 'One who buys untithed grain etc.', that the Israelite acquired it by virtue of his labour for him. Another explanation is that the Israelite bought the corn in the ear, and afterwards stored it up in the gentile's domain. (Tosaf.).
(4) Samaritan.
(5) V. Glos. A person suspected of not observing certain customs regarding tithes.
(6) We do not fear lest the fruits are not the same as those deposited and therefore are untitled. And, with reference to the sabbatical year, if he deposited with them the fruits of the sixth year and they are returned in the sabbatical year, we do not fear that the fruits returned have been exchanged and that, actually fruits of the sabbatical year are being restored, which fruit must not be sold and which require removal from the house after the fruits of the field have been consumed by the beasts.
(7) They are considered gentile's fruits, for we say that they have been undoubtedly exchanged.
(8) Fruits concerning which there is a suspicion as to the tithes being properly taken therefrom and, owing to this doubt, must be tithed, v. Dem'ai III, 4.
(9) The share of the priest from the fruits and grain. It is called 'great terumah', since it is the first sacred gift to be set aside and, also, to distinguish it from the terumah of the tithe, mentioned below.
(10) The teaching reported by R. Dimi from which Abaye made his deduction.
(11) The tithe of the tithe, which the Levite owes to the priest.
(12) Num. XVIII, 26.
(13) A physical disability of the animal, which renders it forbidden to be eaten.

Talmud - Mas. Bechoroth 12a

MISHNAH. WE DO NOT REDEEM A FIRST-BIRTH OF AN ASS EITHER WITH A CALF, A BEAST OF CHASE, AN ANIMAL RITUALLY KILLED, A TREFAH, KIL'AYIM OR A KOY. R. ELIEZER PERMITS HOWEVER [REDEMPTION] WITH KIL'AYIM BECAUSE IT IS ALSO DESCRIBED AS A LAMB. BUT HE FORBIDS WITH A KOY, BECAUSE ITS NATURE IS DOUBTFUL. IF HE GAVE [THE FIRST-BIRTH OF AN ASS] ITSELF TO THE PRIEST, THE LATTER MUST NOT RETAIN IT, UNLESS HE SETS ASIDE A LAMB IN ITS PLACE. GEMARA. Whose opinion does the Mishnah represent? It is that of Ben Bag Bag. For it has been taught: We read here, [in connection with the redemption of a first-birth], the word, lamb, and we read elsewhere, [with reference to the Paschal-offering] the word, lamb, just as there [Scripture] excludes all those named [in the Mishnah above as unsuitable for the Paschal-offering], so here also, it excludes all those named [as unsuitable for the object of redeeming]. [Now you might assume that] just as the Paschal-offering must be a male, without a blemish, and a year old, similarly here, [in connection with the redemption of the first-birth of an ass] it must be a male, without a blemish, and a year old. The text therefore states: 'Thou shalt redeem', [and repeats], 'Thou shalt redeem' to include [even other than a male etc.]. Now if the repetition: 'Thou shalt redeem', 'Thou shalt redeem', has for its purpose to include, then why not include also all those [animals named in the Mishnah, as being unsuitable to redeem? — If this were so, what is the use of [the analogy above between the words], ‘lamb’, ‘lamb’? The question was raised: What is the ruling as regards redeeming a first-birth with a ben peku’ah? According to the opinion of R. Meir, there is no need for you to ask, for since R. Meir said: ‘A ben peku’ah requires ritual slaughter’, it is a perfect lamb. But the question does arise according to the opinion of the Rabbis, who hold that its mother’s slaughtering makes it permitted to be eaten [without slaughtering] ‘so that it is like flesh in the pot’. Or are we to say that since at the moment it runs and walks, we can describe it as a lamb? — Mar Zutra said: We do not redeem [with it]. Said R. Ashi to Mar Zutra: What is your reason? Is it because you infer this from the Paschal-offering, [which cannot be a hen peku’ah]? Then why not say also, that as in the case of the Paschal-offering it must be a male, without a blemish, and a year old, so here [the animal for redeeming] must be a male, without a blemish and a year old? — [The text]: ‘Thou shalt redeem’ [and its repetition], ‘Thou shalt redeem’, includes [even other than a male etc.]. But if the repetition: ‘Thou shalt redeem’, ‘Thou shalt redeem’, has for its object to include, then why not include also ben peku’ah? If so, what need is there [for the analogy above derived from the words], ‘lamb’, ‘lamb’? The question was raised. What is the ruling as regards redeeming the first-birth of an ass with a nidmeh? You cannot ask according to R. Eliezer, for since according to him we may redeem with kil’ayim, how much more so with a nidmeh? The question does arise, however, according to the opinion of the Rabbis: Do we say that we are forbidden to redeem with kil’ayim, but we may redeem with a nidmeh? Or perhaps, there is no difference, [and in both cases we are forbidden to redeem with them]? Come and hear. ‘If a cow gave birth to something looking like a kid, we do not redeem [with it].’ From this we infer that if a ewe gave birth to what looks like a kid, we do redeem [with it]. Now whose opinion does this represent? Shall I assume it is the opinion of R. Eliezer? But do we not also redeem with kil’ayim [according to him]? You must then say that it is the opinion of the Rabbi! — No. You can still maintain that it is the opinion of R. Eliezer; and he teaches us this very thing, that if a cow gave birth to what looked like a kid, we do not redeem with it, and that you should not say, ‘decide according to the offspring itself’, and this is a genuine kid, but we rather say, ‘decide according to its mother’, and therefore it is a calf. Come and hear: For Rabbah b. Samuel learnt: What is kil’ayim? A ewe which gave birth to something that looked like a kid, though its father was a sheep. If the father was a sheep, is it kil’ayim? Is it not nidmeh? — Rather then put it in this way: What is that which is like kil’ayim, so that the Rabbis have placed it on a par with kil’ayim? A ewe which gave birth to what looked like a kid, though its father was a sheep. Now, for what purpose [does the Baraitha say that we liken nidmeh to kil’ayim]? If in respect of dedicating it as a sacrifice, surely [this is not necessary, since] from the text from which we derive the exclusion of kil’ayim [as unsuitable for a sacrifice on the altar], we also derive the exclusion of nidmeh. For it has been taught [Scripture says]: When a bullock or a sheep, intimating the exclusion of kil’ayim; ‘or a goat’ intimates the exclusion of nidmeh. Is it then in order [to exclude nidmeh] from the rule of the firstling? Surely the Divine Law says: But the firstling of an ox implying [that it is not subject to the law of the firstling] until the father is an ox and the offspring is an ox, [obviously excluding nidmeh]. Is it then from the rule of tithing [of animals]? The rule for [both nidmeh and kil’ayim] is expressly derived from the analogy of the words, ‘under’, ‘under’ [mentioned In both cases]. [You must say that it is] with regard to the first-birth of an ass? — No. The comparison of nidmeh with kil’ayim can still refer to tithing, and we suppose to a case where the nidmeh possesses certain marks [similar to its mother]. I might in this case assume that we draw an analogy between the ‘passing’ mentioned [in connection with tithing] and the ‘passing’ [mentioned] in connection with a firstling. Therefore, we are told that we rather draw the analogy between ‘under’ mentioned here and ‘under’ mentioned in connection with consecrated sacrifices. The question was raised: What is the ruling as regards [redeeming the first-birth of an ass] with dedicated sacrifices which became unfit [for the altar]? This question does not arise if we accept the opinion of R. Simeon, for since he holds that it is permitted to be used [before its redemption], it is unconsecrated. The question does arise, however, according to the opinion of R. Judah, who says that it is forbidden to be used [before its redemption]. What is the ruling? Since it is forbidden to be used, [do we apply the principle that] one prohibition does not take effect where another prohibition already exists;²⁸ or perhaps, since [the lamb] does not assume any sanctity,²⁹ do we say that the redemption has the purpose only of releasing the ass from a mere prohibition?³⁰ — Said R. Mari the son of Kahana, And is this which is written in connection with these, As the gazelle and the hart',³¹ a small matter? [Consequently] just as we do not redeem [the first-birth of an ass] with the gazelle or the hart,³² [being beasts], similarly, we do not redeem with dedicated sacrifices which became unfit for the altar! Now that you have arrived at this conclusion,

(1) Even a lamb.
(2) A lamb born from the coupling of a he-goat and a ewe.
(3) The offspring of a he-goat and a hind. There is, therefore, a doubt whether it is to be considered an animal or a beast.
(4) Thou shalt redeem with a lamb. (Ex. XIII, 13).
(5) Your lamb shall be without a blemish, a male of the first year. (Ex. XII, 5).
(6) A calf and a beast are excluded, because the text says: From the sheep and goats. A ritually slaughtered animal is excluded, because the killing must be specifically for the Passover, and kil'ayim is forbidden because a Paschal lamb must be suitable for offering on the altar.
(7) An animal taken alive out of the slaughtered mother's womb.
(8) It is on a par with a ritually slaughtered animal, and, like the latter, we are not permitted to redeem with it a first-birth of an ass.
(9) And all those cases enumerated in the Mishnah do not possess the equivalent value of the ass, for otherwise it would be permissible, as mentioned above, to redeem even with boiled herbs.
(10) And since something must be excluded, we rather include ben peku'ah as unsuitable to redeem with, than the case of a female etc., since, after all, the latter are lambs, whereas hen peku'ah is like a ritually slaughtered animal.
(11) An animal suspected to be a hybrid or looking like one. And in this case, although its sire is a ram and its mother a ewe, the offspring looks like some other species.
(12) If the offspring born from two different kinds of animals is permitted, how much more so this one.
(13) For we say it is a calf, with which, as the Mishnah states above, it is forbidden to redeem.
(14) As stated in the Mishnah above.
(15) Therefore we see that according to the Rabbis it is forbidden to redeem with a nidmeh.
(16) But not to deduce therefrom the ruling as regards redemption with offspring which looked like a kid given birth to by a ewe.
(17) That nidmeh may not be offered up on the altar as kil'ayim.
(18) Lev. XXII, 27.
(19) Num. XVIII, 17.
(20) It says in connection with dedicated sacrifices: Then it shall be seven days under its dam (Lev. XXII, 27). And in connection with the tithing of animals the text says: Even of whatsoever passeth under the rod (Lev. XXVII, 32). Just as nidmeh and kil'ayim are invalid to be brought as offerings in the case of consecrated sacrifices, they are similarly unsuitable in connection with the tithing of animals.
(21) And that nidmeh is unsuitable to redeem with, as is the case of kil'ayim, which answers the above query.
(22) There is no proof from here that the first-birth of an ass can be redeemed with a nidmeh.
(23) ‘Even whatsoever passeth under the rod’, the text in connection with tithing and the text in connection with the firstling, ‘That thou shalt cause to pass (set apart)’. As in the latter case, if it possesses some marks similar to its mother it is liable to the law of the firstling, so too with reference to its tithing.
(24) In the teaching reported by Rabbah b. Samuel.
(25) That we exclude nidmeh from animal tithing, comparing it with kil'ayim, even in such circumstance.
(26) And had been redeemed. Such an animal even after redemption retains some sanctity in that it may not be used for work and shearing.
(27) I.e., the first-birth of the ass. It can therefore be redeemed, for we apply here the principle that one prohibition cannot take legal hold where another already exists, as there exists no prohibition in the case of a first-birth.
(28) The prohibition attaching to the first-birth of an ass cannot be transferred to a dedicated animal unfit for the altar which is liable to the prohibitions regarding its shearing and working with it.
(29) As a result of the redemption of the first-birth of an ass.
(30) In order to render it permissible to be used, but not that its sanctity shall fall upon the object with which it is redeemed.

(31) Deut. XII, 22 with reference to sacrifices which became unfit for the altar.

Talmud - Mas. Bechoroth 12b

it may be that even according to the opinion of R. Simeon,¹ [it is forbidden to redeem with it], since the text says in connection with them: 'As the gazelle and the hart'. The question was raised: What is the ruling as regards redeeming with an animal bought with the fruits of the sabbatical year? With reference to an ass, distinctly a first-birth, there is no need for you to ask, since the Divine Law says [that the fruits of the sabbatical year are]: For food,² implying, but not to trade therewith.³ The question does arise regarding the uncertain [first-birth of an ass]. And according to the opinion of R. Simeon you need not ask, because he holds there is no uncertain [first-birth of an ass which requires redemption].⁴ The question does arise, however, according to the opinion of R. Judah. What is the ruling? Since he sets aside a lamb and it remains for himself, we can apply to it [the designation]: ‘For food’? Or perhaps, since as long as the ass's prohibition is not canceled it is not permitted,⁵ it is like trading [with the fruits of the sabbatical year]? — Come and hear: For R. Hisda said: If an animal has been purchased with the fruits of the sabbatical year, we are not permitted to redeem with it an ass, distinctly a first-birth, but it is permitted to redeem therewith an uncertain first-birth. R. Hisda further said: An animal bought with the fruits of the sabbatical year is not liable to the law of the firstling. It is subject, however, to the law of the gifts [which are the prerogative of the priest].⁶ It is not liable to the law of the firstling, because the Divine Law says: ‘For food’, implying, but not for burning.⁷ And it is subject to the law of gifts, for we can apply to it⁸ [the designation], ‘For food’. An objection was raised from the following: If one eats from the dough of the sabbatical year before the hallah⁹ has been taken, he incurs the guilt of death [at the hands of Heaven]. But why?¹⁰ Since, if it became levitically unclean, it is fit for burning, and the Divine Law says: ‘For food’, implying, but not for burning? — The case is different here, for it says: Throughout your generations.¹¹ It has been taught to the same effect: Whence do we derive that if one eats from the dough of the sabbatical year before its hallah is taken, he incurs the guilt of death? Because it is said: ‘Throughout your generations’. But why not derive [that the firstling bought with the fruits of the sabbatical year is liable to the law of the firstling], from the case [of hallah]?¹² — In the case of hallah [its separation] is mainly ‘for the eating [of the priests], [except when it receives uncleanness], but in the case of the firstling, [the portion for the altar] is mainly for burning.¹³ IF HE GAVE IT TO THE PRIEST etc. We have learnt here that which our Rabbis have taught: ‘If an Israelite had a first- birth of an ass in his house and the priest said to him, "Give it to me and I will redeem it", he should not give it to him, except [the priest] redeem it in his presence’. R. Nahman reported in the name of Rabbah the son of Abbuha: ‘This proves¹⁴ that the priests are suspected of neglecting the redemption of the first-births of asses’. Surely [this deduction] is evident? — You might have assumed that this is the case only where he is known to be suspected,¹⁵ but generally we do not suspect the priest. He therefore informs us that he usually decides that it is a legitimate act.¹⁶ MISHNAH.

MISHNAH.

GEMARA. Said R. Joseph: What is the reason of R. Eliezer? — Because Scripture writes: Nevertheless the first-born of man shalt thou surely redeem [and the firstling of unclean beasts shalt thou redeem]. Just as in the case of the first-born of a man, he is responsible [if the redemption money is lost], similarly, in the case of the first-born of an unclean animal, he is responsible [if the redemption lamb dies] — Said Abaye to him: [If the comparison be correct, then] as in the case of the first-born of a man, it is permitted to benefit [from his work before redemption], so in the case of an unclean animal, it should be permitted to benefit from it. And should you assume that this is so, have we not learnt in a Mishnah: IF THE FIRST-BIRTH OF AN ASS DIES, R. ELIEZER SAYS: IT SHALL BE BURIED? What does he mean by the phrase IT SHALL BE BURIED? Does he not mean that it is forbidden to use it? — No, It means, it shall be buried as in the case of the first-born of a man. But [am I to infer that on]y a first-born of a man requires burial, but that a plain Israelite does not require burial? And moreover, it has been taught: R. Eliezer agrees that if an Israelite has an uncertain first-birth of an ass in his house, he sets aside a lamb on its behalf and it is his? — Rather, said Raba; [the following is the reason of R. Eliezer]. Scripture says: Nevertheless the first-born of man shalt thou surely redeem. Scripture implies, ‘I have compared [an unclean animal with the first-born of a man] in connection with [the responsibility for] redemption, but not as regards any other matter. We have learnt elsewhere [in a Mishnah]: Valuations are according to their period; the redemption of the first-born takes place after thirty days and the redemption of the first-birth of an ass takes place immediately. But does the redemption of the first-birth of an ass take place immediately? Against this I quote the following in contradiction: The period of valuation or redemption of the first-born, or Naziriteship, or redemption of the first-birth of an ass, is in no case less than thirty days. But we can extend the time in each of these cases indefinitely! — Said R. from it, but owing to the fact that an unclean animal is compared with the first-born of man; and usually a dead first-born receives burial. Nahman: [The statement above, that the redemption of a first-birth takes place immediately means] to inform us that if he redeemed it, it is redeemed. This would imply that in the case of his first-born son, if he redeemed him within the thirty days he is not redeemed? Has it not been stated: If one redeems his son within the thirty days, Rab holds: his son is redeemed? — But surely has it not been stated in this connection: Raba said: All authorities agree [that if he said that the first-born should be redeemed] from now [before the expiry of the thirty days], then his son is not redeemed?

---

(1) For although it is permitted according to his view to benefit from the first-birth of an ass, we are, nevertheless, not allowed to redeem it with a dedicated animal which became unfit for the altar.

(2) Lev. XXV, 6.

(3) Redeeming the first-birth with an animal bought with the fruits of the sabbatical year is like trading with sabbatical fruits, and, moreover, while the fruits of the sabbatical year may be eaten by means of this redemption, he acquires an ass which cannot be eaten.

(4) An uncertain birth, e.g. where its mother gave birth to a male and a female and there was a doubt as to whether the male was born first. The Mishnah states above that in such a case, a lamb is set aside and it remains for himself. And according to R. Simeon, since he permits a first-birth of an ass to be used, (v. supra p. 9b), there is no need to set aside a lamb to release the first birth from any prohibition attaching to it.

(5) Unless he sets aside a lamb for redemption.

(6) The priestly share consisting of the shoulder, jaw and the maw. V. Deut. XVIII, 3.

(7) And if it be liable to the law of the firstling, certain portions are burnt on the altar.

(8) Sc. the animal.

(9) The priestly share of the dough; v. Num. XV, 18ff.

(10) Should the dough be liable to hallah on the sabbatical year?

(11) Num. XV, 21, implying that even on the sabbatical year, hallah must be given.

(12) I.e., why do we not make an exception in the application of the text ‘For food’, implying, ‘but not for burning’, with reference to a firstling, as we do in the case of hallah.

(13) And since it is burnt, we apply the text: ‘For food’, with its implication, ‘but not for burning’; whereas it is otherwise In connection with hallah.
Since the Mishnah says that he should not give the first-birth to the ‘priest unless the latter redeems it before him.
Where we have reason to suspect him. Or, where we actually saw him working the firstling of an ass prior to its redemption, either wilfully or through ignorance of the law on the matter.
Not to set aside a lamb to redeem it, as he argues that in any case the lamb remains with him.
Where if the redemption money is lost, it is not replaced.
For as R. Eliezer maintains that the Israelite is responsible, it is as if the lamb had not yet been set aside and the Israelite may therefore benefit from it. But the first-birth must be buried, since it is forbidden to use it, as is the case when alive.
Num. XVIII, 15.
Not because it is forbidden to benefit
And although with reference to an ass, distinctly a first-birth, he maintains that so long as the lamb is not in the possession of the priest it is not redeemed, he agrees with regard to an uncertain first-birth that he need not give its redemption to the priest but sets aside a lamb, thus implying that the first-birth of an ass is forbidden to be used otherwise. And since we do not compare an unclean animal with the first-born of man in this respect, the same should apply in respect of his responsibility for it. The question therefore remains, what is the reason of R. Eliezer in the opening passage of our Mishnah?
The limiting word ‘nevertheless’, indicates that only with regard to the responsibility for redemption is an unclean animal compared with the firstborn of a man.
Var. lec.: It has been taught, as the statement which follows is not a Mishnah but a Baraitha.
Between the ages of one month and five years, if one said, ‘I vow my valuation’ and he delayed till the age of six, when there is an increased valuation, he still only gives the original valuation, as laid down in Scripture. Some maintain that since a child of that age is not legally permitted to dedicate its valuation to the sanctuary, therefore it means hare that somebody else said, ‘I vow the child's valuation upon myself’. The unspecified vow of a Nazirite, i.e., one bound by a vow to abstain from wine etc., is at least for thirty days.
With reference to valuations, as the ages increase the valuation will correspondingly increase, as mentioned in Scripture. A Nazirite also can vow for a period of years and the first-birth of an ass may be redeemed even after the lapse of years and it is not necessary to give more because of the delay.
Although he has not carried out properly the religious command of redemption, the animal is redeemed.
And the difference of opinion only arises when he said, ‘I give the money now but its redemption shall only take effect after thirty days’.

R. Shesheth said: [The above Baraitha means] to inform us that he does not transgress on account of the first-birth. Rami the son of Hama raised an objection from the following: The duty of redemption is for the entire period of thirty days. After that, either he redeems it, or breaks its neck. What [does it mean]? Does it not mean that it is a religious duty to retain it for the whole period of thirty days? No, it means that it is a religious duty to redeem it all the thirty days. If this is the case, what it should say is: After that, either he redeems it or he transgresses [the command to redeem]! Rather, said Raba: There is no contradiction: the one statement [that redemption is after thirty days] gives the opinion of R. Eliezer who compares [an unclean animal with the first-born of a man], and the other statement [that redemption takes place immediately] gives the opinion of the Rabbis who do not make this comparison. MISHNAH. IF HE DOES NOT WISH TO REDEEM IT [THE FIRST-BIRTH OF AN ASS], HE BREAKS ITS NECK FROM BEHIND AND BURES IT. THE MIZWAH OF REDEMPTION IS PRIOR TO THE MIZWAH OF BREAKING ITS NECK, FOR IT SAYS: AND IF THOU WILT NOT REDEEM IT, THEN THOU SHALT BREAK ITS NECK. THE MIZWAH OF Y'UD IS PRIOR TO THE MIZWAH OF REDEMPTION, FOR IT SAYS: WHO HATH BETROTHED HER TO HIMSELF. THE MIZWAH OF YIBBUM IS PRIOR TO THE MIZWAH OF HALIZAH. THIS WAS THE CASE AT FIRST WHEN THE PARTIES CONCERNED USED TO CARRY OUT THE LAW WITH RELIGIOUS INTENTIONS. BUT NOW THAT THEY DO NOT CARRY OUT THE LAW RELIGIOUSLY, [RABBIS] HAVE SAID: THE MIZWAH OF HALIZAH IS PRIOR TO THE MIZWAH OF YIBBUM. THE

Talmud - Mas. Bechoroth 13a
MIZWAH OF REDEMPTION [OF AN UNCLEAN ANIMAL WHOSE VALUE IS DEDICATED TO THE SANCTUARY] RESTS WITH THE OWNER. HE IS FIRST, BEFORE ANY OTHER MAN, FOR IT SAYS: OR IF IT BE NOT REDEEMED, THEN IT SHALL BE SOLD ACCORDING TO THY VALUATION.¹⁵

CHAPTER II

MISHNAH. [AN ISRAELITE] WHO BUYS AN EMBRYO¹⁶ OF A COW BELONGING TO A HEATHEN, OR WHO SELLS ONE TO HIM, ALTHOUGH THIS IS NOT PERMITTED,¹⁷ OR WHO FORMS A PARTNERSHIP WITH HIM,¹⁸ OR WHO RECEIVES AN ANIMAL FROM HIM TO LOOK AFTER,¹⁹ OR WHO GIVES [HIS COW] TO HIM TO LOOK AFTER,²⁰ IS EXEMPT FROM THE LAW OF THE FIRSTLING, FOR IT SAYS: [I HALLOWED UNTO ME ALL THE FIRST-BORN] IN ISRAEL,²¹ BUT NOT IN GENTILES. PRIESTS AND LEVITES ARE SUBJECT [TO THE LAW OF THE FIRSTLING]. THEY ARE NOT EXEMPT FROM [THE LAW OF] THE FIRSTLING OF A CLEAN ANIMAL, BUT ONLY OF A FIRST-BORN SON AND THE FIRST-BORN OF AN ASS.

GEMARA. Why does [the redact or of the Mishnah] state the case of the embryo of an ass in the first [chapter],²² and subsequently [in the second chapter], the case of an embryo of a cow? Why not state in the first [chapter] the case of an embryo of a cow, since it is a case of an animal consecrated as such, and, subsequently, in the case of an embryo of an ass, as it is a case of an animal consecrated only for its value? — It was explained in the West [Palestine]:²³ If you choose, I may say the reason is because he dwelt with peculiar pleasure on this case, in the manner of R. Hanina [explained above].²⁴ Or if you prefer, I can say it is because the regulations concerning an unclean animal are relatively few;²⁵ [the redactor of the Mishnah] therefore cleared them out of the way first.

R. Isaac b. Nahmani reported in the name of Resh Lakish on behalf of R. Oshiah: If an Israelite gave money to a heathen for his animal, [we judge the transaction] according to their laws and even though he did not pull the animal,²⁶ he acquires possession and is subject to the law of the firstling. If a heathen gives money to an Israelite for his animal, [we also judge the transaction] according to their laws, and although he did not pull [the animal], he acquires possession and is exempt from the law of the firstling. The Master says: ‘If an Israelite gave money to a heathen, [we judge the transaction] according to their laws, and although he did not pull [the animal], he acquires possession and is subject to the law of the firstling’. What does ‘their laws’ mean? Shall we say that ‘according to their laws’ means, as regards the person [of the heathen], and we conclude a fortiori, that if the person [of a heathen] is acquired by the Israelite for money, as Scripture writes: To hold for possession²⁷ — [Scripture] compares a Canaanitish slave with a possession: as a possession is acquired by handing over the money to the seller, by a bill of sale, and taking possession,²⁸ so a Canaanitish slave is acquired with money — how much more so, therefore, is this the case with reference to a heathen's property?²⁹ If this were the case, then a heathen's property should also be acquired even by means of a bill of sale and taking possession? And, moreover, this idea can be confuted by the case of an Israelite [having a transaction] with an Israelite. For though the person [of an Israelite] is acquired with money, yet his property is acquired by means of meshikah!³⁰ Rather said Abaye: The expression ‘according to their laws’ means, those which the Torah laid down for them. [For Scripture says]: Or buy of thy neighbour's hand,³¹ [and we deduce from this that] from the hand of thy neighbour the way of acquiring possession is meshikah,³² but from the hand of a heathen the way of acquiring possession is with money. But why not deduce that from the hand of a heathen there is no way of acquiring possession at all?³³ — It was explained: You cannot assume this a fortiori: If [the heathen's] person can be acquired, how much more so his property! But perhaps say that in the case of a heathen, two ways of effecting possession are required?³⁴ — The answer was given: Have we not here an a fortiori [argument]? If his person is acquired only in one way, shall his property be acquired in two ways? But why not say that [a heathen acquires an object] either by means of one or the other? — [The method of his acquiring] must resemble [the form of acquiring mentioned in connection with the text] ‘thy neighbour’. Just as in the case of ‘thy neighbour’, [i.e., an Israelite], possession [can be acquired] only in one way, so in the case of a heathen only in one way.

The Master said: ‘But if a heathen gave money to an Israelite for his animal, [we judge the transaction according to their laws, and even though he did not pull [the animal], he acquires possession and is exempt from the law of the firstling’. What does ‘according to their laws’ mean? If the expression ‘according to their laws’ refers to the person [of the Israelite] who is acquired with money by a heathen and we infer a fortiori: If the person [of an Israelite] is acquired with money — for Scripture writes: Out of the money that he was bought for, — how much more so is [the Israelite’s] property [acquired by means of money by a gentile]? This can be refuted by the case of a transaction between Israelites, for his person is acquired with money and yet his property is acquired by meshikah! Rather, said Abaye: ‘According to their laws’ means those which the Torah laid down for them. [Scripture says]: ‘And if thou sell aught to thy neighbour’; [we infer from this] that ‘to thy neighbour’ the way of acquiring possession is by meshikah, but in the case of a gentile, possession is acquired with money. But why not say that for a heathen there is no way [for acquiring possession] at all? — I can answer, No. Have we not an a fortiori [argument]? If a heathen can acquire the person [of an Israelite] with money, how much more so is this the case with the property [of an Israelite]? But why not say that for a heathen there must be two ways of acquiring possession? — But is there not the a fortiori argument [to the contrary]? If a heathen acquires possession of the person [of an Israelite] by one act only, should the Israelite's property be acquired only by two acts? But why not say that [a heathen acquires possession of an Israelite's property] either by means of one or the other! — [The way of acquiring possession] must resemble [what is mentioned in connection with the text] ‘thy neighbour’.

(1) The duty to redeem the first-birth of an ass is indeed immediately after its birth, and the Baraitha which says that redemption does not take place for thirty days means that he does not transgress the command to redeem until the period of thirty days has elapsed.
(2) In accordance with the opinion of R. Nahman, who maintains that redemption does not take place before thirty days have elapsed. This seems to contradict the opinion of R. Shesheth.
(3) Var. lec.: He either breaks its neck. V. R. Gershom.
(4) And since it says: ‘Either he redeems it or breaks its neck’, we infer that redemption only commences after the thirty days and that during the thirty days it is a duty to retain it.
(5) We may indeed say that it is a religious duty to retain the first-birth for thirty days and still we do not explain the Baraitha cited by Rami b. Hama as being in accordance with R. Nahman's view (Rashi). Sh. Mek.: Raba's reply can be explained as being entirely independent of the opinions of R. Shesheth and R. Nahman and that it merely explains the conflicting statements regarding when redemption should take place.
(6) A religious act and duty.
(7) I.e., has precedence over.
(8) Ex. XIII, 13. The verse implies that redemption comes first.
(9) Designation, especially the betrothal of a Hebrew handmaid.
(10) Ex. XXI, 8. The verse implies that the first duty is to betroth her.
(11) To marry the wife of a brother who died without issue.
(12) The ceremony of taking off the brother-in-law's shoe after refusing to marry his brother's widow. Deut. XXV, (5-11).
(13) In order to preserve the name of the dead brother.
(14) But merely for sexual pleasure, and, since this is the case, it is sexual intercourse with a brother's wife, which is one of the forbidden relations.
(15) Lev. XXVII, 27. The verse therefore implies that redemption is a prior duty. Also redemption takes precedence, because where the owner redeems he has to add a fifth part, but in the case of another redeeming, there is no addition of a fifth for the benefit of the sanctuary, as Scripture says in the first part of the verse quoted in this connection: ‘And If it be of an unclean beast, then he shall ransom it according to thy valuation and shall add unto it the fifth part thereof.

(16) A firstling.

(17) It is forbidden to sell large cattle to a heathen, because the animal is worked on the Sabbath.

(18) Both purchasing an animal between them.

(19) The Israelite in return for attending to the animal receives half of the offspring, but the animal itself belongs to the heathen.

(20) The Israelite sharing a half or a third of the offspring.

(21) Num. III, 13. The text implies that where a gentile has a share in the mother or an offspring, the firstling is not holy.

(22) The first Mishnah in the first chapter of the tractate.

(23) Palestine is designated as the West, being so situated geographically relative to Babylon, where the Talmud Babli was evolved.

(24) Supra 5b.

(25) For only one chapter is devoted to the rules and regulations appertaining to an unclean animal, whereas the remainder of the tractate of Bekoroth deals with the firstling of a clean animal.

(26) Into his possession, which is one of the ways of effecting transference between Israelites, whereas with reference to a gentile, the handing over of the money effects transference; v. Glos. s.v. Meshikah.

(27) Lev. XXV, 46.

(28) Performing some kind of work on the estate. V. Kid, 26a.

(29) That it is acquired from him by handing over the purchase money.

(30) V. p. 90, n. 3 and Kid, 26a. Similarly, although the person of the heathen is acquired with money, his property may require another form of acquiring possession.

(31) Lev. XXV, 14.

(32) The expression ‘of thy neighbour's hand’ implies that the object has to be filled from the hands of the seller into the hands of the buyer.

(33) Short of actually bringing the object completely into the domain of the Israelite.

(34) Possession by means of money and meshikah, but not with money alone.

(35) Money or Meshikah.

(36) Lev. XXV, 51. And the verse deals with a gentile who purchases a Hebrew slave.

(37) Lev. XXV, 14.

(38) And that in order to secure possession of an Israelite's chattels, he must transfer them completely to his domain.

Talmud - Mas. Bechoroth 13b

As ‘thy neighbour’ [i.e., an Israelite] acquires possession only in one way,¹ so the heathen acquires possession only in one way.² It was argued: Now according to Amemar who said that meshikah effects possession in the case of a heathen, this might be right if he holds according to the opinion of R. Johanan who maintains that according to the Biblical law, money effects possession between Israelites, whereas meshikah does not effect possession;³ the text ‘to thy neighbour’ serves then the purpose of allowing us to deduce that ‘to thy neighbour’ [i.e., an Israelite] money effects possession, but for a heathen to effect possession meshikah is required. But if he holds according to the opinion of Resh Lakish, who maintains that meshikah is expressly mentioned in the Torah, [with the indicating result that] ‘to thy neighbour’ [an Israelite] with meshikah and for a heathen with meshikah, what need then is there for the text ‘to thy neighbour’? — It can be explained thus: The text means: ‘to thy neighbour’ you return an overcharge,⁴ but you do not return an overcharge to a Canaanite [a heathen] — But do we not derive [the exclusion of the law of overcharging in connection with] the Canaanite from the following text: Ye shall not oppress one another?⁵ — One text refers to a Canaanite and the other refers to sacred property.⁶ And it was necessary [to teach both cases]. For if the Divine Law had written only one text, I might have assumed that, as regards the Canaanite there is no law concerning overreaching, but in regard to sacred property the law of overreaching is enforced. Therefore Scripture teaches us [that this is not so]. This would hold good according to him who says that the robbed object of a Canaanite is forbidden [to be retained]; therefore a scriptural text is necessary to permit [the retention of] overreaching. But⁷ if be holds with him who says that the robbed object of a Canaanite is allowed [to be retained], can there be any question about permitting [to retain] overreaching? I can answer: If [Amemar] holds according to him who says that the robbed object of a Canaanite is allowed [to be retained], then perforce he will hold according to the view of R. Johanan. An objection was raised. If one buys broken pieces [of silver] from a heathen and finds among them an idol, if he made meshikah before he had given the purchase money, he should withdraw [from the transaction]. But if he made meshikah after he had given the money, he should carry the benefit derived therefrom to the Dead Sea. Now, if you hold that money effects possession, what need is there for meshikah? — We are dealing here with the case where [the heathen] undertook to act in the matter in accordance with Israelite law. If so, what need is there for money [as a means of effecting possession]? — This is what [the Baraitha] intends to say: Although he had given the money, if he made meshikah, [then he can withdraw], but if not, [he] cannot [do so]. If this is the case, there is a difficulty in the first part [of the Baraitha]? — Said Abaye: The reason of the first part [of the Baraitha] is because it was made in error. Raba said to him: ‘[You say that the reason of] the first part [of the Baraitha] is because it was made in error. But is the last part [of the Baraitha] also not a case of a purchase in error”? Rather, said Raba: Both the first and the last parts deal with the case of a purchase in error; but in [the case stated in] the first part where he had not yet given the money, the idol does not appear to have been in the possession of an Israelite, whereas in the last part [of the Baraitha], where he had given the money, the idol appears to have been in the possession of an Israelite. And Abaye? — He will explain thus. The first part is a case of a purchase made in error, for he did not know of the idol, since he had not yet paid the money. But the last part is a case of a purchase made in error, for since he had given the money, when he was [about] to make meshikah he should have examined the purchase and then made meshikah. R. Ashi said: Since in the first part [of the Baraitha], meshikah does not effect possession, in the last part also, meshikah does not effect possession. But as he mentions meshikah in the first part, he also states meshikah in the last part. Rabina said: Since in the last part meshikah effects possession, in the first part too meshikah effects possession. And what the first part says in effect is this: If he had not given the money, nor made meshikah, he withdraws. What is [then] meant by ‘he withdraws’? — That he can retract his words, for he [the Tanna of the Baraitha] maintains: To retract one's words indicates a want of honesty, but this is the case only with an Israelite dealing with gentiles, since the latter do not stand by their word, whereas in the case of an Israelite dealing with gentiles, since the latter do not stand by their word, it is not so.

(1) I.e., meshikah.
(2) I.e., with money and not meshikah, for the verse implies ‘thy neighbour’ with meshikah but not a heathen, and by analogy we assume that the same limitation applies in the case of the form of acquisition which exists for gentiles. i.e., money.
(3) B.M. 46b, Kid. 26a.
(4) The law of overcharging and overreaching being mentioned later in the same chapter of the Bible.
(5) Lev. XXV, 14. The text implies that for a heathen this law does not apply, as the words ‘one another’ refer to Israelites.
(6) To which also the law does not apply.
(7) An object dedicated for the Temple, or for some other sacred purpose, and I might have said that secular property should not have an advantage over sacred property in this respect.
(9) For since the robbed object of Canaanite may be retained, therefore there is no need to deduce the retention of the overreaching from the text, ‘Thy neighbour’. Consequently the text will imply that although money effects possession in a transaction between Israelites, in the case of heathens meshikah is required. Hence we see that Amemar must necessarily hold according to the opinion of R. Johanan.
(10) For an idol in the possession of an Israelite can never be freed from its prohibition, and it is therefore forbidden to derive any profit therefrom.
(11) Why should his withdrawal cancel the sale? Since he made meshikah, he should be required to carry the benefit to the Dead Sea!
For he did not know there was an idol and therefore the withdrawal cancels the sale.

And legally the withdrawal cancels the sale even under the circumstances mentioned in, the last part of the Baraitha, and meshikah is the form here of effecting possession, this having been agreed upon by the parties concerned.

On withdrawal he receives back his money from the heathen.

And before the purchase is handed over, the buyer does not usually trouble to examine the contents of a purchase.

And as he omitted to make the examination, the transaction was valid and, consequently, the meshikah was a genuine one.

On R. Ashi's view we are dealing here with a case where the parties did not agree to act according to Jewish law, and therefore money payment is the method of effecting possession of an object bought. And no difficulty can be raised from the last part of the Baraitha, by arguing that, if this be a fact what need is there for meshikah, for meshikah is mentioned here only because it is mentioned in the first part, and there it had to be mentioned to inform us, that it has no effect, since the purchase money was not handed over.

When e.g., the parties agree to act according to Jewish law, i.e., use meshikah as a form of transference.

Since neither meshikah nor money did take place.

GEMARA. The reason is because they were redeemed, but if they were not redeemed, they would have been exempt from [the law of] the firstling and from the [priestly] gifts, for [the Mishnah] holds that the consecration of an object consecrated for its value sets aside [the law of] the firstling and the duty of the [priestly] gifts.

AND THEY BECOME UNCONSECRATED etc. The reason is because they were redeemed, but if they were not redeemed, they would have been forbidden as regards shearing and working. This would confirm the opinion of R. Eleazar who said: Animals dedicated for keeping the Temple in repair, are forbidden as regards shearing and working! — [No]. It can he maintained that this is no proof. For an object consecrated for its value, eventually to be used for the altar, might be confused with an object which is itself consecrated for the altar, therefore the Rabbis enacted a prohibition. But in the case of an object dedicated for keeping the Temple in repair, the Rabbis did not enact a prohibition.

THEIR OFFSPRING AND MILK ARE PERMITTED etc. How is this to be understood? Shall I say that [we speak of where] they became pregnant and gave birth after their redemption? Surely this is obvious? They are unconsecrated animals! Rather what is meant is that they were pregnant before their redemption and gave birth after their redemption. This implies that before their redemption, [the offspring] are forbidden!?

(1) And the object of the dedication, since they possessed already a permanent blemish, was to sell them and purchase with the money sacrifices for the altar.

(2) The shoulder, jaw and maw, as is the case with genuine hullin (unconsecrated animals).

(3) For they are considered hullin, as they were blemished before dedication, and the law of dedicated sacrifices which had become unfit for the altar, where shearing and working are prohibited, does not apply to them.

(4) Even if they were pregnant before their redemption, for since they gave birth after their redemption, their offspring are permitted. V. Gemara.

(5) Even before their redemption, since the animals did not receive any sanctity from the outset, owing to their blemishes before dedication.

(6) V. Lev. XXVII, 10.

(7) In order to give the carcases to dogs to eat. Moreover, we are taught here also that they hold an inferior status compared with other dedicated sacrifices, which can only be redeemed when alive.

(8) A firstling, even with a permanent blemish, is sanctified as the passing through the womb consecrates it. And with reference also to tithing. Scripture ordains that whether it be good, i.e., without a blemish, or bad (blemished), the animal passes under the rod to be tithed.

(9) Why the first clause of the Mishnah says that they are liable to the law of the firstling.

(10) Why the Mishnah says that shearing and working are permissible.

(11) The dedicated animals are sold and the money is devoted to the repair of the Sanctuary.

(12) The money realized from its sale is used to purchase sacrifices for the altar, and we therefore prohibit its shearing and working.

(13) Because if in the former case we permit the shearing and working, we might be led to permit in the latter case.

(14) For there is little fear here that because in the one case we permit the shearing and working, we might be led to permit in connection with the object consecrated as such, as there is an obvious distinction between the two.

(15) To be used for any purpose without redemption, nor could they be offered up on the altar, since even their own mother is not fit for the altar.

Talmud - Mas. Bechoroth 14b

[The point then arises], can they be redeemed even when they are without a blemish, or, can they not be redeemed so long as they are without a blemish? — Come and hear: If one consecrated animals having a permanent blemish for the altar and they gave birth, they are to be sold and [the offspring] do not need a blemish, because they receive no sanctity. For we cannot be more stringent with the subsidiary than with the principal object.²

Now the reason [why the offspring do not require a blemish before redemption], is because we should not be more stringent with the subsidiary than with the principal, but if he consecrated a male³ animal for its value, it receives the sanctity of an animal consecrated as such. This would support Raba's teaching. For Raba said: If one consecrated a male animal for its value,⁴ it receives the sanctity of an animal which has been consecrated in itself.

HE WHO SLAUGHTERS THEM WITHOUT [THE TEMPLE COURT], DOES NOT INFLICT [THE PUNISHMENT OF EXCISION]. R. Eleazar quoted [with reference to this passage of the Mishnah]: He is culpable.⁵ and he explains [the word ‘WITHOUT’ in the Mishnah] as meaning that he slaughters them on a private altar.⁶ For R. Eleazar said: Whence do we deduce that he who slaughters a blemished animal on a private altar at a period when high places are used legitimately, is guilty of transgressing a negative precept? Scripture says: Thou shalt not sacrifice unto the Lord thy God an ox or a sheep wherein is a blemish.⁷ If this text has no bearing on a national altar,⁸ since Scripture has already stated: Blind or broken, ye shall not offer these unto the Lord,⁹ apply it to a private altar. Why not say that if the text has no bearing on dedicated sacrifices, apply it to a firstling? For I might have been inclined to assume that since it is holy even when blemished, [the shearing and working being forbidden], it should therefore be offered up even if blemished. Therefore Scripture teaches us that it is not so! — I might argue against this that in connection with a firstling. Scripture expressly states: Lame or blind thou shalt not sacrifice it. But why not say: If the above text has no bearing on dedicated sacrifices, let us apply it to animal tithes? For I might have been inclined to assume that since a tithed animal is holy even blemished, as Scripture writes, He shall not inquire whether it be good or bad, therefore we should offer it up even blemished, and Scripture consequently informs us that this is not so? — [In connection with] a tithed animal, too, we draw an analogy between ‘passing’ and ‘passing’ used in connection with a firstling. But why not then say: Let us apply the text above to an animal exchanged for a dedicated sacrifice? For I might have been inclined to assume that since it is sacred, even if blemished, since Scripture writes: Neither shall he alter it or change it etc. Therefore it should be offered up even blemished; and consequently Scripture teaches us that it is not so! Scripture says: Then it and that for which it is changed, shall be holy. It thus compares the exchanged animal with the animal itself; as the animal itself is unfit [for the altar] if blemished, so the exchanged animal with a blemish is unfit [for the altar]. R. Zera demurred: Why not say, apply the text to the blemished offspring [born of unblemished sacrifices]? For I might have been inclined to assume they are holy even blemished. through their mother, therefore they may be offered up even blemished, and Scripture therefore informs us that it is not so? — Said Raba: A Tanna of the school of R. Ishmael has already pronounced on the matter. For a Tanna of the School of R. Ishmael taught: Scripture says: Only thy holy things which thou hast and thy vows: ‘Only thy holy things’; this refers to exchanged animals, ‘which thou hast’: these are the offspring of dedicated sacrifices; ‘and thy vows’: Scripture here compares them with an animal vowed for a sacrifice: as an animal vowed for a sacrifice is unfit for the altar with a blemish, so these too are unfit with a blemish.

THE LAW OF SUBSTITUTE DOES NOT APPLY TO THEM etc. What is the reason? Because Scripture Says: He shall not alter it nor change it, a good for a bad or a bad for a good. Now, if a bad [i.e., a blemished consecrated animal] must not be exchanged for a good [an unblemished and unconsecrated animal], is it necessary to inform us concerning the prohibition of exchanging a good [an unblemished consecrated animal] for a bad [a blemished animal]? What is meant then is, that to an animal good [i.e., unblemished] from the start [before dedication] but which became blemished afterwards] the law of substitute applies, but to one bad [i.e., blemished] from the start [before dedication] the law of substitute does not apply.

AND IF THEY DIED, THEY MAY BE REDEEMED. Rab Judah reported in the name of Rab: This is the teaching of R. Simeon who said: Objects consecrated for the altar were [at first] included [in the law of] presentation and valuation, whereas objects consecrated for keeping the Temple in repair were not included in [the law of] presentation and valuation. For we have learnt: R. Simeon says: Objects consecrated for keeping the Temple in repair, if they die, are redeemed. R. Simeon agrees, however, that an animal blemished from the start [before dedication] may be redeemed. What is the reason? Because Scripture says: And [the priest shall value] it; the word ‘it’ excludes the case of an animal with a blemish from the start [before dedication]. But the Sages say: If they die they are to be buried. Who are the Sages referred to here? It is a Tanna of the School of Levi. For a Tanna of the School of Levi taught: All objects were [at first] included in [the law of] presentation and valuation, even an animal blemished from the start [before dedication]. And thus did the School of Levi teach in his Mishnah: Even a beast and even a bird. But does not Scripture say, ‘It’? — The word ‘It’, according to the opinion of the Tanna of the School of Levi, is a difficulty. But the Rabbis who differ from R. Simeon — what is the position? Is it a fact that they hold that if [the blemished dedicated animal] died, it is redeemed? If so,

(1) Must we delay until the offspring are blemished and then we can proceed to redeem them or, can they be redeemed as they are, without waiting?
(2) I.e., we cannot be more stringent with the offspring than with the mother, seeing that the offspring is holy only in virtue of its mother. And as the mother can be redeemed at all times, the same rule should apply to its offspring, which solves the question.
(3) I.e., a ram which was dedicated for its value and which has the sanctity of an animal consecrated as such, insofar that is does not become hullin without a blemish appearing on it. The same ruling applies to a female animal, but as later on he wishes to support Raba's opinion and Raba mentions a male, he speaks here of a male.
(4) And for its money, a burnt-offering is purchased. The reason why Raba mentions a male animal is because the majority of people who bring a sacrifice offer up a burnt-offering, which is a male.
(5) I.e, he is liable to forty lashes.
(6) Lit., ‘high place’. A temporary altar. Private altars were e.g., like those made by Manoah, Gideon and Samuel, in times when any individual could build an improvised altar for himself; v. Meg. 9b.
(7) Deut. XVII. 1.
(8) Lit., ‘great high place’. As the high places of Nob and Gibeon, which were national and public ones.
(9) Lev. XXII, 22.
(10) Therefore there is no proof that the text, Thou shalt not sacrifice etc., refers to a private altar.
(12) Since this is already provided for in Lev. XXII, 22.
(13) The text, therefore, may still refer to a national altar and not to a private altar,
(14) Lev. XXVII, 33. ‘Bad’, i.e., blemished, and even so, if it is the tenth, it is holy.
(15) Mentioned in regard to the tithing of animals, Even of whatsoever passeth and the text, Then thou shalt cause to pass (set apart), referring to a firstling.
(16) Ibid. XXVII,10.
(17) Ibid.
(18) Quoted by R. Eleazar.
(19) As unfit to be sacrificed on the altar.
(20) That the instances mentioned above as unfit for the altar if blemished, are derived from another verse. Therefore there is no need to deduce them from the above text, Thou shalt not sacrifice.
(21) Deut. XII, 26.
(22) Which Scripture informs us are sacrificed on the altar.
(23) Consequently, the verse ‘Thou shalt not sacrifice’ refers, as R. Eleazar explains, to a private altar.
(24) The statement of the Tanna of the Mishnah, that if they died, they may be redeemed.
(25) Before the priest of the object whose value is dedicated, as Scripture says: Then he shall present the beast before the priest. (Lev. XXVII, 11.)
(26) For although objects consecrated for the altar require presentation and valuation, and therefore, cannot be redeemed when dead, in the case here of a sacrifice blemished from the start, he agrees that it can be redeemed when dead, although there can be no presentation and valuation here; for it is like an object consecrated for Temple repairs. which was not included in the law of presentation and valuation.
(27) Lev. XXVII, 12.
(28) From the requirements of presentation and valuation.
(29) For they are not the same Sages who differ with R. Simeon in Tem. 32b.
(30) Levi compiled a collection of teachings.
(31) Whose value he dedicated for the keeping of the Temple in repair, as they are not suitable for the altar, require presentation and valuation.
(32) The Rabbis who dispute with R. Simeon in Tem. 32b, holding that both objects consecrated for the altar and objects consecrated for Temple repairs are included in the law of presentation and valuation, though they agree that an animal blemished from the start may be redeemed after its death.

Talmud - Mas. Bechoroth 15a

[in connection with Rab's observation above], what should be said is: This is the teaching of R. Simeon and those who dispute with him? — I can answer: Rab holds with R. Simeon the son of Lakish, who explained that according to the Rabbis [who differ with R. Simeon] objects dedicated for the keeping of the Temple in repair were [at first] included in [the law of] presentation and valuation, whereas objects dedicated for the altar were not included in [the law of] presentation and valuation. Therefore the Mishnah can not be explained [to agree completely] with the views of the Rabbis. For it states in the later clause: AND IF THEY DIED, THEY SHALL BE BURIED. But whence can we prove that the reason [of the Mishnah] why they shall be buried is because they are subject to the law of presentation and valuation? Perhaps the reason is because we may not redeem dedicated sacrifices in order to give food to dogs? — We can answer: If this is so, then, let the [Mishnah] state: If they become treifah, they shall be buried. Or if you choose [another solution]. I can say that Rab in fact holds with R. Johanan, and read [in the passage above]. This is the teaching both of R. Simeon and of those who dispute with him.

BUT IF THEIR DEDICATION PRECEDED etc. Whence is this proved? — Our Rabbis have taught: [Scripture says]: Howbeit as the gazelle and as a hart; as a gazelle is exempt from [the law of] the firstling, so dedicated sacrifices which have become unfit for the altar are also exempt from [the law of] the firstling. I would then exclude the firstling and not the priestly gifts! The text [therefore] states, ‘A hart’; as a hart is exempt from [the law of] a firstling and from [the duty of priestly] gifts, so blemished dedicated sacrifices are exempt from the law of the firstling and of [the priestly] gifts. Am I to say that just as the fat of the gazelle and a hart is permitted to be used, so the fat of [blemished dedicated sacrifices] is also permitted to be used? [For this reason] the text states ‘ak’ [‘howbeit’], which intimates a distinction.

The Master said: ‘I would then exclude the firstling but not [the priestly] gifts’! Now, what is the difference? — I exclude the firstling, because its law does not equally apply in all cases, whereas I do not exclude [the priestly] gifts, as their law applies equally in all cases. Hence Scripture states ‘A hart’. Said R. Papa to Abaye: Why not [say that] just as the law concerning the killing of the young with its mother on the same day does not apply to a gazelle and a hart so the law concerning the killing of the mother on the same day does not apply to dedicated sacrifices which have become unfit for the altar? — He replied to him: With what will you compare [blemished dedicated sacrifices, to render them exempt from the law regarding the killing of the young with its mother on the same day]? If you compare them with unconsecrated animals, then the law concerning the killing of the young with its mother on the same day should apply to them! And if you compare them with dedicated sacrifices, here [also] the law regarding the killing of the young with its mother on the same day should apply to them. — He replied to him: If so, then in regard to the fat of blemished dedicated sacrifices, why not say likewise, as follows: With what will you compare them? If with unconsecrated animals, their fat is forbidden, and if with dedicated sacrifices, their fat is forbidden? — But did you not say that the [word] ‘ak’ implies ‘but not their fat’? Then similarly adduce the word ‘ak’ as implying, ‘but the law regarding the killing of the young with its mother on the same day, is not [included in the analogy]’. Raba said: The word ‘ak’ serves [to exclude from the analogy] the law concerning the killing of the young with its mother on the same day, while as regards the fat of blemished dedicated sacrifices, we derive [the prohibition] from the words ‘the blood thereof’, for it is written: ‘Only thou shalt not eat the blood thereof’. What do the words ‘The blood thereof’ mean? You can hardly say that it actually means ‘the blood thereof’. For granting that it is only as the blood of the gazelle and a hart — is then the blood of a gazelle and a hart permitted? The words ‘The blood thereof’ then refer to its fat. And why does not Scripture expressly write ‘its fat’? — If the Divine Law had written the word ‘fat’, I might have assumed that both the analogy and the scriptural verse helped [to define the nature of the prohibition of the fat]. The analogy [between the word ‘fat’ and the words ‘as a gazelle and a hart’], helped to exclude it from [the punishment of] excision, for Scripture imposes the punishment of excision only on one who eats the fat of an animal, as it says: For whosoever eateth the fat of the animal. And the scriptural verse also helped to make [the eating of the fat of blemished sacrifices equivalent to the breaking of] a mere prohibition. Therefore the Divine Law used the expression ‘the blood thereof’, to teach you that as the eating of its blood is punishable with excision, so the eating of its fat is punishable with excision.

But does not the Tanna [above in the Baraitha] say that the word ‘ak’ implies ‘but not its fat’? — This is what [the Tanna] intends to say: If there were not a text ‘The blood thereof’, I might have said that [the word] ‘ak’ implies ‘but not its fat’. Now, however, that Scripture says ‘The blood thereof’, the word ‘ak’ serves [to exclude from the analogy] the law regarding the killing of the young with its mother [on the same day].

AND THEY DO NOT BECOME UNCONSECRATED. Whence is this derived — Our Rabbis taught. Scripture says: Notwithstanding thou mayest kill, implying, but not shear. [The text continues further], ‘flesh’, implying, ‘but not milk’. ‘And eat’, implying, ‘but not for dogs’. Hence we infer that we do not redeem dedicated sacrifices to give food to the dogs.

(1) From which we may infer that objects consecrated for the altar are included in the law of presentation and valuation, whereas the Rabbis hold the reverse view, according to the interpretation of R. Simeon b. Lakish.

(2) And not because the Mishnah holds that objects dedicated for the altar are included in the law of presentation and valuation.

(3) V. Glos.

(4) From which I could infer that, although it was possible to make presentation and valuation here, nevertheless since they were only fit for dogs, they must be buried. But since the Mishnah states, ‘IF THEY DIED etc.’, I deduce that the reason is because presentation and valuation cannot be carried out.

(5) Who says in Tem. 32b that according to the Rabbis, both objects dedicated for the altar and objects dedicated for keeping the Temple in repair were included in the law of presentation and valuation, and that an animal blemished from the start may be redeemed.

(6) Deut. XII, 22. And Scripture is dealing here with dedicated sacrifices which received their blemish after dedication, as the text says: The unclean and the clean shall eat of them alike, and they still retain some measure of holiness.

(7) For Scripture says: All the firstling males that come of thy herd and of thy flock, thou shalt sanctify. (Deut. XV, 19.)

(8) I.e., it warns us that the analogy is not complete and therefore the fat is forbidden.

(9) Deriving the limitation of a firstling from the first text, and requiring another text to exclude the priestly gifts.

(10) For the law of the firstling only applies to a male, whereas the duty of the priestly gifts applies to females as well.

(11) Lev XXII, 28.

(12) v. Hul. 78a.

(13) [This appears to be Abaye's reply].

(14) V. supra n. 1.

(15) Deut. XV, 23. The verse deals here with the case of a firstling with a blemish.

(16) Lev. VII, 25. It is also understandable that excision should be incurred only for eating the fat of an animal, as it is suitable for sacrifice on the altar.

(17) I.e., it excludes its fat from the analogy. How can Rab, therefore, maintain that the text ‘ak’ excludes from the analogy the law of killing the young with its mother on the same day, seeing that the Baraitha above says that ‘ak’ excludes the eating of the fat?

(18) Deut. XII, 15.

Talmud - Mas. Bechoroth 15b

Some there are who say: ‘Thou mayest kill and eat’: The permission of eating of blemished dedicated sacrifices is only from the time of their killing and thenceforward.¹ We may, however, redeem dedicated sacrifices to give food to dogs.²

THEIR OFFSPRING AND THEIR MILK ARE FORBIDDEN AFTER THEIR REDEMPTION. How is this to be understood? Shall I say that they became pregnant and gave birth after their redemption? Why [in that case should they be forbidden]? [The offspring] are [as] the gazelle and a hart!³ Rather what is meant is that they became pregnant before their redemption and give birth after their redemption. But if [they were born] before their redemption, they would indeed become holy. Whence is this proved? For our Rabbis taught: [Scripture says]: ‘Whether male’.\(^4\) This includes the offspring [of a peace-offering].\(^5\) [It goes on] ‘or a female’; this includes an animal [exchanged for a peace-offering].\(^6\) Now I can only infer from these unblemished offspring and unblemished exchanged animals. Whence, however, can I derive blemished offspring? and blemished exchanged animals? When Scripture says: ‘Whether a male’, it includes even blemished offspring and the text ‘or a female’, includes an exchanged blemished animal. Those young [which were in embryo before their redemption] and were born after their redemption — what shall become of them? Concerning those born before their redemption there is a difference of opinion. There is one authority who says they are so far holy as to be offered up, and there is another authority who says they are only so far holy as to be left to graze.\(^8\) But what is to be done with [the offspring] born after their redemption. — Said R. Huna: We put them in a vault and they die [of hunger]. For what are we to do? Shall we offer them up on the altar? They derive their status from a holiness which has been cancelled.\(^9\) Shall we redeem them? They are not qualified to receive redemption.\(^10\) In the West [Palestine] it was stated in the name of R. Hanina: Before their redemption he consecrates them for that particular sacrifice.\(^11\) ‘Before their redemption?’ Does this mean to say that they are capable of redemption? Explain rather [as follows]: Before the redemption of their mother,\(^12\) he consecrates them for that particular sacrifice. And what is the reason?\(^13\) — Said R. Levi: It is a preventive measure, lest he should rear of them flocks.\(^14\) Rabina asked of R. Shesheth: May he consecrate [the offspring] for any sacrifice that he chose? — He replied: He may not consecrate them, [except for the particular sacrifice of the mother]. What is the reason? — He said to him: There is an analogy between the words ‘within thy gates’\(^16\) [used in connection with blemished dedicated sacrifices] and the words ‘within thy gates’\(^17\) [used in connection with the firstling]: just as a firstling does not become consecrated after birth for any sacrifice which he chooses, because Scripture writes: Howbeit the firstling among the beasts which is born a firstling to the Lord, no man shall sanctify it,\(^18\) so these young ones do not become consecrated for any sacrifice he chooses. It has been taught in accordance with the opinion of R. Shesheth: Dedicated sacrifices which became permanently blemished before their dedication and were redeemed are subject to the law of the firstling and of the [priestly] gifts; whether before their redemption or after their redemption. one who shears them and works with them does not receive forty lashes; whether before their redemption or after their redemption, the law of substitute does not apply to them; before their redemption. the law of Sacrilege\(^19\) applies to them, but after their redemption it does not; their offspring are unblemished [even if in embryo before redemption and born after redemption]; they are redeemed unblemished\(^20\) and become consecrated for any sacrifice he chooses. The general rule in this matter is: They are like unblemished animals in all particulars. The only religious duty which applies to them is that of valuing them [for redemption].\(^21\) But if their dedication preceded their blemish, or if a transitory blemish [preceded] their dedication and after that there appeared on them a permanent blemish, and they were redeemed, they are exempt from the law of the firstling and from the [priestly] gifts; whether before their redemption or after their redemption, one who shears and works them receives forty lashes; whether before their redemption or after their redemption, the law of substitute applies to them; before their redemption the law of Sacrilege applies to them, but after their redemption it does not; their offspring are holy [if in embryo before redemption]; they are redeemed unblemished; and they do not become consecrated for any sacrifice that he chooses.\(^22\) The general rule in the matter is that they are like consecrated animals in all particulars. You have only the permission to eat them. Now the general rule of the first part [of the Baraitha above] is stated in order to include the rule that one who slaughters them without [the Temple Court] is exempt [from the punishment of excision]. The general rule of the second part [of the Baraitha]

---

(1) This excludes milking and shearing, and is deduced from the proximity of the texts referring to killing and eating. The word ‘flesh’ is on this view not expounded.

(2) As there is no special text to prohibit this.

(3) I. e. they are hullin (unconsecrated animals).
Lev. III, 1, with reference to peace offerings. The whole verse is superfluous, for unless it expressly stated that a peace-offering must be a male, as is the case with a burnt-offering. I should have known that there was no restriction as regards the sex of the animal.

(5) That it is offered as a peace-offering.

(6) V. n. 6.

(7) Whose dedication preceded their blemish.

(8) Until they become blemished. Then they are sold and their money is devoted for a freewill-offering. The reason for delaying until a blemish appears is because unblemished animals are not redeemed.

(9) The offspring possess two disqualifications. First, they are born from a mother which though once fit for the altar, has now lost its sanctity, owing to its blemish. Secondly, since the offspring were born after the mother's redemption, they cannot be invested with any sanctity so as to be sacrificed on the altar.

(10) For since they are redeemed through their mother, they retain no sanctity to enable redemption to render them hullin.

(11) That of the mother, and this holiness helps to make them capable of redemption.

(12) While she was still pregnant and before their birth, the offspring received the holiness of their mother's dedication, and in this way redemption, after a blemish appears on them, is required, as their mother's redemption did not cancel their sanctity.

(13) Of. R. Huna above, that they are condemned to die. Why not devise a method of redemption as R. Hanina suggests.

(14) If there were a remedy for the offspring of blemished dedicated offerings, we might raise flocks of these blemished animals, delay the redemption of their mothers, and even be led to eat them without the required redemption. Another explanation (quoted by Rashi) is: What is the reason of the authority who says that we condemn the offspring to die, and also, what is the reason of the other authority who maintains that we consecrate them for a sacrifice? Why did the Rabbis trouble in the matter at all? Could not the offspring be left in their forbidden state? The answer is that we fear lest one might raise flocks, that these offspring will in turn give birth to others and we might be led to commit an offence, whereas after redemption, we do not entertain any fears, as the offspring then are hullin. Still another explanation (quoted by Rashi) is: Why does the Mishnah say that the offspring are forbidden after redemption, seeing that their mother's holiness has been cancelled? And the reply given is because, if we permit the offspring to be used, we might raise flocks of blemished dedicated sacrifices for the sake of the offspring born after redemption and, thus might be led to transgress the law concerning shearing and working.

(15) Of blemished dedicated sacrifices.

(16) Deut. XII, 21.

(17) Ibid. XV, 22.

(18) Lev. XXVII, 26. The text continuing, No man shall sanctify it, indicates that no other holiness except that of a firstling attaches to it.

(19) To make an inappropriate use of a sacred object is Sacrilege (v. Lev. X, 15) and since he benefits therefrom, it is no worse a case than using an object dedicated to the keeping of the Temple in repair.

(20) If they were pregnant and gave birth before their redemption.

(21) The only restrictive enactment is that of redeeming the animal with money.

(22) For they are compared with ‘a gazelle and a hart’, but the shearing of them is forbidden.

(23) Which is the view of R. Shesheth.

Talmud - Mas. Bechoroth 16a

is adduced to include its milk.¹

The Master said: They are not redeemed unblemished and they do not become consecrated for any sacrifice he chooses. The unblemished are not redeemed; we infer from this that the blemished² are redeemed. Also for any sacrifice he chooses they are not consecrated; we infer from this that for that particular sacrifice they are consecrated. Now what do we find here? That they are consecrated for that particular sacrifice and are redeemed when blemished. Shall we say that this confutes R. Huna?³ — R. Huna can answer thus: The rule really is that blemished animals also are not redeemed, but, since the first part [of the Baraita] states: ‘They are redeemed unblemished’,⁴ therefore the second part [of the Baraita] also states: ‘they are not redeemed unblemished’. And also, since it states in the first part [of the Baraita]: For any sacrifice he chooses, the second part [in the Baraitha] also states: For any sacrifice he chooses. ‘And he who slaughters them without [the Temple Court] is not culpable’.\(^5\) R. Huna read [as in the Mishnah]:\(^6\) He is culpable, and he explains it, of a case where the blemished animal had a withered spot in the eye, [a cataract] and in accordance with the opinion of R. Akiba, who maintains: If they have been put on the altar, they must not be taken down again.\(^7\) ‘Both before its redemption and after its redemption, the law of substitute applies’. R. Nahman reported in the name of Rabba the son of Abbuha: And the exchanged animal after its redemption is left to die. What is the reason? — How are we to do? Shall we offer it up? The animal exchanged derives its status from cancelled holiness.\(^8\) Shall we redeem it? It is not qualified to receive redemption; therefore we leave it to die. R. Amram demurred. And why should the exchanged animal not be eaten by the owners when blemished? In what way is this different from an animal exchanged for a firstling and a tithed animal? For we have learnt: Animals exchanged for a firstling and a tithed animal, and also their offspring and their offspring's offspring until the end of time are like a firstling and a tithed animal and are eaten by their owners when blemished! \(^9\) Said Abaye to him: In this case it bears the name of its mother, and, in the other case, it bears the name of its mother. In this case it bears the name of its mother,\(^10\) for it is called the animal substituted for a firstling and a tithed animal; and, therefore, as a firstling and a tithed animal are eaten by their owners when blemished, so the exchanged animal is eaten under similar circumstances. And in the other case, it bears the name of its mother. It is called the animal exchanged for the dedicated sacrifice; and, as a dedicated sacrifice which became blemished may not be eaten unless redeemed, so also an animal exchanged for a dedicated sacrifice is not eaten unless redeemed. But in this present case, it is not qualified to receive redemption and, therefore, [it is left to die]. It has been taught in accordance with the opinion of R. Nahman: Whence do we derive that an animal exchanged for a blemished dedicated sacrifice is left to die? Because it says: ‘nevertheless these shall ye not eat of them that chew the cud, he is unclean to you’.\(^11\) But is this text not required to teach that there are five sin-offerings that are left to die?\(^12\) — The latter teaching we learn from [the continuation of the text]: ‘Of them that divide the hoof, he is unclean to you’.\(^13\) It has also been taught to the same effect: Whence do we derive that the five sin-offerings are left to die? Because it says: ‘All of them that divide the hoof, he is unclean’.\(^14\) But is not the rule of the five sin-offerings that are left to die learnt purely from tradition? — Rather the text comes to teach us concerning the animal exchanged for a guilt-offering that it pastures [until blemished]. But is not the rule of a guilt-offering also learnt purely from tradition, for wherever a sin-offering is left to die, in a corresponding case, a guilt-offering pastures?\(^15\) — The fact is that the text still refers to the rule of the five sin-offerings left to die, and both the text and the traditional law are necessary. For had I the text alone, I might have said that they are condemned to pasture. Therefore, the traditional law teaches us that they are to die. And had I the traditional law alone I might have said that if by chance he ate of these five sin-offerings, he performed a forbidden action, but he did not transgress a negative precept. Therefore a scriptural text teaches us that he transgresses a negative precept, [ye shall not eat]. Or if you wish, I may say that it is in order to compare an object the rule of which is derived from the text of them that chew the cud, with an object the rule of which is derived from the text of them that divide the hoof, so as to teach that, just as there, they are condemned to die, so here also they are condemned to die.\(^16\)

MISHNAH. IF ONE RECEIVES FLOCK FROM A HEATHEN ON ‘IRON TERMS’.\(^17\)

---

(1) As forbidden to be used, as the text says, And eat, implying, ‘but not milk’. There is no need to make the general rule of the first part of the Baraitha include milk as permissible, for since the offspring are permitted, all the more so is the milk. Again, the general rule in the second part of the Baraitha could not include the case of one who slaughters without the Temple Court as punishable with excision, for here, too, he may be exempt, for since the sacrifice cannot be offered up in the Temple, there is no prohibition of killing them outside the Temple Court.

(2) Those in embryo before redemption and born after redemption and consecrated for a sacrifice, i.e., for the particular sacrifice of the mother.

(3) For R. Huna holds that they are not subject to redemption at all and that they are condemned to die whereas from the Baraitha we deduce that they are subject to redemption and are consecrated for a particular sacrifice.

(4) Which is an anomaly, that an unblemished animal should be redeemed.

(5) Where the dedication preceded the blemish. This is the continuation of the latter part of the Baraitha above. V. Rashi and R. Gershom.

(6) So (Rashi), v. Sh. Mek.

(7) An animal with a cataract, if offered up in the Temple, is not disqualified as a sacrifice according to the view of R. Akiba, because, in the first place, a cataract is not considered a blemish in birds and, moreover, it is not a blemish of a prominent nature. But an animal with a prominent and permanent blemish, since it is invalid as a sacrifice in the Temple, is not forbidden to be slaughtered outside the Temple precincts.

(8) Of the blemished animal for which it was exchanged, the exchange having taken place after redemption.

(9) Tem. 21a.

(10) The expression ‘its mother’ used in this connection means, in virtue of the animal from which it derives its status. The expression also ‘eaten by their owners’ mentioned in connection with the firstling, means that if blemished it is eaten by the priests, whereas in connection with a tithed animal, ‘the owners’ refers to the Israelites.

(11) Lev. XI, 4. And we infer this that there is an animal possessing marks of cleanness and yet forbidden to be eaten, viz., an animal exchanged for a blemished sacrifice.

(12) V. Tem. 21b.

(13) V. Nazir 25b.

(14) There is no need for a scriptural text, for the rule of the five sin-offerings is a traditional law. The reason, however, why the Baraitha refers it to the text ‘of them that divide the hoof’ is because it wishes to draw an analogy between the animal exchanged for a blemished sacrifice after redemption, which is inferred from the text ‘of them that chew the cud’ and the rule of the five sin-offerings, inferring that just as the latter are condemned to die, so the former is condemned to die, thus confirming the view of R. Nahman.

(15) Lit., ‘flock of iron’. The terms are that the flock or their equivalent value should be restored to the heathen owner at the end of a stipulated period and that meanwhile the owner shares the offspring. The interests of the owner are consequently well protected against loss and the security is like barzel (iron). V. B.M., Sonc. ed., p. 405. n. 3.

Talmud - Mas. Bechoroth 16b

GEMARA. Does this mean to say that since the owner does not take money, therefore it is still the property of the owner? Against this I quote: One must not receive a flock from an Israelite on ‘iron terms’, because It is usury. This shows that it is in the ownership of the receiver?⁶ — Said Abaye: This is no difficulty. In the one case [our Mishnah] he [the heathen owner] took the risks of accidents and a fall in value while in the other he [the owner] did not take the risks of accidents and a fall in value. Raba said to him: If he took the risks of accidents and a fall in value, do you call this receiving a flock on ‘iron terms’,⁷ and, moreover, where is this distinction implied [in the context]? And, moreover, why does the second part [of the passage quoted above] state: ‘One may receive from a heathen a flock on "iron terms"’? Why not draw a distinction in the first part [itself, as follows]:
When does this apply? Where he [the owner] did not undertake the risks of accidents and a fall in value, but where he undertook the risks of accidents and a fall in value, it is permitted! — Rather said Raba, In both cases he [the owner] did not take the risks of accidents and a fall in value. But here, in connection with the firstling, this is the reason. If the heathen came and wanted money and the Israelite did not give it to him, he would seize the animal, and if he did not find the animal, he would seize its offspring. Therefore the heathen has a share in it, and wherever the heathen has a share [in an animal], it is exempt from [the law of] the firstling.

(IF THE ISRAELITE PUT THE OFFSPRING IN THE PLACE OF THEIR MOTHERS, THE OFFSPRING OF THE OFFSPRING ARE EXEMPT:) Said R. Huna: Their offspring are exempt from the law of the firstling, but the offspring of the offspring are liable to the law of the firstling. Rab Judah, however, said: The offspring of the offspring are also exempt, but the offspring of the offspring of the offspring are liable [to the law of the firstling]. We have learnt in a Mishnah: IF THE ISRAELITE PUT THE OFFSPRING IN THE PLACE OF THEIR MOTHERS, THE OFFSPRING OF THE OFFSPRING ARE EXEMPT. The reason for exemption is because he put them in place of their mothers. But if he did not do so, they would not be exempt. Now, is this not an argument against Rab Judah? — Rab Judah can answer: The same applies even if he did not put the offspring [in the place of the mothers], but the Mishnah, however, teaches us this, that even if he put [the offspring in the place of their mothers], since it is the custom of the heathen to seize the offspring [failing the mother], it is as if he had not put the offspring [in place of their mothers]. We are therefore informed [that even so] the offspring of the offspring are exempt, but the offspring of the offspring of the offspring are liable [to the law of the firstling].

We have learnt in the Mishnah: RABBAN SIMEON B. GAMALIEL SAYS: EVEN UNTO TEN GENERATIONS THE OFFSPRING ARE EXEMPT, SINCE THEY ARE PLEDGED TO THE HEATHEN.

(1) For, in the first place, a half of the offspring belongs to the heathen and secondly the latter will seize the offspring if he cannot have the flock (v. infra). The heathen therefore having an interest in the offspring, the Israelite is legally exempt from the law of the firstling.

(2) For the heathen will not go as far as to seize the third generation in place of the mother.

(3) The Israelite has expressly stipulated that if the flock died, the heathen could have the offspring.

(4) Since the owner has a hold on the succeeding generation of animals.

(5) For every time the heathen would lay hands on whatever he found.

(6) And therefore it is as if the giver in return for waiting for his money receives a share of the offspring, which is usury, whereas if the money remained in the possession of the giver, it would not be usury.

(7) For then there would be no security like ‘iron’ for the giver of the animal.

(8) The reason is not because it is in the possession of the heathen, but because it is a pledge with the Israelite.

(9) Lit., ‘the hand (finger) of the heathen is between’.

(10) [The bracketed passage is best left out. V. Marginal Gloss Z.K.]

(11) Referring to the first passage in the Mishnah.

(12) [No objection is raised from the first clause of our Mishnah, as the phrase ‘OFFSPRING OF THE OFFSPRING there may be of a more general connotation meaning simply that with certain later generations the liability begins. V. Sh. Mek. and p. 115. n. 1.]

(13) That the second generation of offspring are exempt from the law of the firstling.

(14) And thus mortgaged the first generation for the heathen, so that the latter ought not to have any further claim on successive generations of offspring.

(15) And therefore I might have said that successive generations of offspring should always be exempted.

(16) It is assumed that R. Simeon b. Gamaliel refers to the first clause.
[of offspring in exempting] that is why Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel said to him: EVEN UNTO TEN GENERATIONS THE OFFSPRING ARE EXEMPT.¹ But according to R. Huna who said that the first Tanna does not go up to [two] generations [of offspring in exempting], what does Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel mean by “unto ten generations”?² R. Huna can reply: R. Simeon b. Gamaliel refers to [the second clause] where the Israelite put [the offspring in the place of their mothers], and where the Tanna in question goes up to [two] generations [of offspring].³

Come and hear: If one received a flock from a heathen on ‘iron terms’, their offspring are exempt. but the offspring of the offspring are liable [to the law of the firstling].⁴ Now, is this not an argument against R. Judah? — R. Judah can reply: Read: They and their offspring.⁵ Some there are who say: ‘They and their offspring are exempt’. Now is this not an argument against R. Huna? — R. Huna can reply: Read: They,⁶ the offspring, are exempt, whereas the offspring of the offspring are liable to the law of the firstling.

IF A EWE GAVE BIRTH TO WHAT LOOKED LIKE A GOAT etc. R. Oshaia of Nehardea⁷ came bringing a Baraitha with him: A ewe born of a goat or a goat born of a ewe, is declared liable by R. Meir, whereas the Sages exempt it. Said R. Oshaia to Rabbah: When you go up into the presence of R. Huna, inquire from him: R. Meir makes it liable for what? Shall I say for [the law of] the firstling? Does not R. Meir hold that [when Scripture says]: But the firstling of an ox,⁸ it intimates that the law of the firstling does not apply until the sire is an ox and its firstling is an ox? [Shall I say] then, he means liable to the rule of [giving] the first shorn wool to the priest? [Hardly so], for does he not hold with the Tanna of the School of Ishmael who taught: Lambs whose wool is hard, are exempt from the rule of the first shorn wool, for it says: And if he were not warmed with the fleece of my sheep?⁹ He replied to him: Let us see, we are dealing here with a case where a ewe gave birth to what looked like a goat and its sire was a he-goat¹⁰ and the difference of opinion is whether we take into consideration the nature¹¹ of the sire in connection with the prohibition of killing the mother with its young on the same day.¹² For R. Meir holds that we take into consideration the nature of the sire, whereas the Rabbis hold that we do not take into consideration the nature of the sire.¹³ If so, let them also differ as to whether we take into consideration the nature of the sire in other cases, as in the dispute between Hanania and the Rabbis?¹⁴ Rather, the reference is indeed to the law of the firstling, and what we are dealing here with is the case of a ewe born of a ewe which, in turn, was born of a goat. One authority [R. Meir] maintains that we follow the mother and this is not a nidmeh,¹⁵ while the other authority maintains that we follow the mother's mother, and therefore this is a nidmeh. Or if you prefer I may say: It is a case of a ewe born of a goat which, in turn, was born of a ewe. One authority maintains that the sheep goes back to its former status¹⁶ whereas the other authority maintains that the sheep does not go back to its former status. R. Ahi said: We suppose it possesses certain marks [resembling the mother].¹⁷ And who are the Sages [who exempt]? — R. Simeon, who holds [that the law of the firstling does not apply] until its head and the greater part of the body resemble its mother. Said R. Johanan: R. Meir agrees however¹十八 that in the case of the goat for the New Moon, we require it to be the offspring of a she-goat. What is the reason? Because Scripture says: And one [he-goat],¹⁹ — the singled out since the six days of the Creation. And do we derive it from this text? Do we not derive it from another text as follows: [Scripture says]: a bullock or a sheep;²⁰ this excludes kil'ayim;²¹ [the words] ‘or a goat’ exclude nidmeh? — Both texts are necessary. For, from the latter text alone, I might have inferred that this is the case only when it has not returned to its original status,²² but where it has returned to its original status²³ I might have thought it is not a case of nidmeh. And from the former text alone I might have inferred that this is only the case with an obligatory sacrifice, but in the case of a freewill-offering there is no prohibition as regards nidmeh.²⁴ There is therefore a need [for both texts]. Said R. Aha b. Jacob: All [the authorities concerned, even R. Meir] agree that by using its wool one does not become liable to lashes for kil'ayim.²⁵ For Scripture says: Thou shalt not wear a mingled stuff wool and linen together;\textsuperscript{26} just as the linen must be proper linen,\textsuperscript{27} so the wool must be proper wool. Said R. Papa: All [the authorities concerned] agree that its wool is disqualified for purple blue.\textsuperscript{28} For Scripture says: Thou shalt not wear mingled stuff. Thou shalt make thee twisted cords; just as the flax must be proper flax, so the wool must be proper wool. Said R. Nahman b. Isaac: All [the authorities concerned] agree that its wool is disqualified for purple blue. For Scripture says: Whether it be a woollen garment or a linen garment;\textsuperscript{29} just as the flax must be proper flax, similarly the wool must be proper wool. Said R. Ashi: We will also say something [on similar lines]. If one trains a vine over a fig-tree, its wine is unfit for libations. What is the reason? Scripture says: A sacrifice and drink-offerings;\textsuperscript{30} just as the sacrifice must be a normal animal, similarly the drink-offerings must be a normal liquid. Rabina demurred to this.\textsuperscript{31} If one trains flax over a shrub does it cease to be proper flax? If this is so, then you cannot say that ‘just as flax must be proper flax’, since flax can also be transformed! — He replied to him: In the one case, the smell had altered,\textsuperscript{32} in the other, its smell has not altered.\textsuperscript{33}

MISHNAH. IF A EWE WHICH NEVER BEFORE HAD GIVEN BIRTH BORE TWO MALES AND BOTH HEADS CAME FORTH SIMULTANEOUSLY, R. JOSE THE GALILEAN SAYS: BOTH BELONG TO THE PRIEST FOR SCRIPTURE SAYS: THE MALES SHALL BE THE LORD’S\textsuperscript{34} WHEREAS THE SAGES SAY: IT IS IMPOSSIBLE TO ASCERTAIN EXACTLY [IF BOTH HEADS CAME FORTH SIMULTANEOUSLY]. ONE THEREFORE REMAINS [WITH THE ISRAELITE] AND THE OTHER IS FOR THE PRIEST. R. TARFON SAYS: THE PRIEST CHOOSES THE BETTER ONE.\textsuperscript{35} R. AKIBA SAYS: WE COMPROMISE BETWEEN THEM,\textsuperscript{36} AND THE SECOND ONE [IN THE ISRAELITE'S POSSESSION] IS LEFT TO PASTURE UNTIL IT BECOMES BLEMISHED.\textsuperscript{37}

(1) For not only are two generations of offspring exempted but even ten are exempted and even more.
(2) Since the first Tanna quoted in the Mishnah only exempts the offspring of the original flock, why does Rabban Simeon say, unto the tenth generation? Let him say that even the offspring of the offspring are exempt and I should have inferred that just as the offspring of the offspring are exempt, although they were not born of the flock, the same applies to successive generations, even unto ten.
(3) In order to exempt.
(4) [This is apparently the first clause of our Mishnah, cf. supra p. 113, n. 4. Var. lec.: ‘If one . . . they, their offspring etc.’ quoting a Baraita. ‘Their offspring’ is taken to be in apposition to ‘they’, thus implying that the offspring's offspring are liable contra Rab Judah. V. Sh. Mek.].
(5) Which indicates two generations as being exempt.
(6) The word ‘offspring’ being in apposition to the word ‘they’.
(7) A town in Babylonia, famous as the seat of a college founded by Samuel.
(8) Num. XVIII, 17.
(9) Job. XXXI, 20. Therefore only fleece that warms is called fleece, and the fleece of a goat born of a ewe is hard, goat's wool being hard; v. Hul. 137a.
(10) And he killed the sire with its offspring on the same day.
(11) Lit., ‘seed’.
(12) V. Lev. XXII, 28.
(13) And he is consequently exempt since we follow the mother and here it bears no resemblance to the mother.
(14) V. Hul. 78b, where Hanania says he transgresses the prohibition and the Sages absolve him.
(15) An animal suspected of looking like a hybrid.
(16) R. Meir holds that it must be given to the priest and that it is not a nidmeh. The ewe from a goat referred to here does not actually mean a ewe, for a female animal is not consecrated as a firstling, but it means an animal looking like a ewe.
(17) R. Meir holding that it is liable to the law of the firstling as the Mishnah states anonymously, whereas the Rabbis maintain that he is not liable.
(18) Although in respect of the law of the firstling R. Meir holds that the sheep goes back to its former status.
(19) Num. XXVIII, 15. We infer from this that the goat must belong to the family of goats all time.
Lev. XXII, 27.
An animal born from heterogeneous parents which exempted from the law of the firstling.
Lit., ‘it did not go back to its generation (species)’. A ewe born of a goat, which was in turn born of a goat and therefore a nidmeh.
I.e., if its grandmother was a ewe.
For the words, ‘a bullock or sheep’, refer to a freewill-offering. The obligatory sacrifice mentioned here includes not only a goat for the New Moon but also Festival goats as the word ‘One’ is used of those offerings as well.
The wearing of a garment containing a mixture of wool and linen.
Deut. XXII, 11.
Lit. ‘must not have been transformed’.
The purple-blue thread used for the fringes.
Lev. XIII, 47.
Ibid. XXIII, 37.
If by overhanging and training over the other, a transformation is effected, then the same might be said concerning flax.
The wine of that vine.
The training flax over a shrub does not alter its smell and, moreover, in the latter case a change in its smell is immaterial.
Ex. XIII, 12. The word ‘males’ implying two.
For the stronger one came forth first.
Whoever takes the fatter animal must give the other a half of its excess value, v. Gemara.
And after that he eats it, the reason being that it is a doubtful first-born and cannot therefore, be eaten unblemished. The same ruling applies also to the priest's animal, as we are dealing with firstlings in our day, after the destruction of the Temple. Or, indeed, it may, even deal with a firstling in Temple times; seeing that there is uncertainty as to whether the animal is a firstling, it cannot be killed in the Temple court.

Talmud - Mas. Bechoroth 17b

THE OWNER IS LIABLE FOR THE [PRIEST'S] GIFTS,¹ WHEREAS R. JOSE EXEMPTS HIM.² IF ONE OF THEM DIED, R. TARFON SAYS: THEY DIVIDE [THE LIVING ONE]. R. AKIABA SAYS: THE CLAIMANT MUST PRODUCE THE EVIDENCE. IF IT GAVE BIRTH TO A MALE AND A FEMALE, THE PRIEST RECEIVES NOTHING [IN SUCH CIRCUMSTANCES].³ GEMARA. The School of Jannai said: Of R. Jose the Galilean we have heard that he said: It is possible to ascertain [simultaneity] in natural processes,⁴ and, therefore, how much more so is it possible to ascertain exactly in human actions. The Rabbis [we know] hold that it is impossible to ascertain simultaneity in natural processes. What is their view with reference to human actions? — Come and hear: A red line went round the altar in order to divide between the blood to be sprinkled above and the blood to be sprinkled below.⁵ Now if you say that it is impossible to be exact in human actions, sometimes the priest might put the blood which should be above, below the [middle of] the altar?⁶ — The line is made somewhat wide.⁷ Come and hear. [Proof can be adduced] from the measurements of the furniture [of the Sanctuary] and from the measurements of the altar!⁸ — It is different there, since the Divine Law said: Do it, and in whatever manner you are able to do it, it will be satisfactory, as David said: All this the Lord made me understand in writing by His hand upon me.⁹ Said R. Kattina: Come and hear: [If an unclean oven] is divided into two and the parts are equal, both are unclean, for it is impossible to be exact!¹⁰ — R. Kahana replied: An earthen vessel is different because it has holes.¹¹ Come and hear: If [a slain body is] found at exactly the same distance between two cities, both bring two heifers.¹² These are the words of R. Eliezer. What is the reason? Is it not because he holds that it is possible to be exact in human actions¹³ and the words [the city] which is nearest¹⁴ imply [even the cities] which are nearest? — No. R. Eliezer

---

¹ For if it is a firstling, then the entire animal is the priest's and if not, then it is hullin and is liable for the priest's gifts.
² For it is as if the priest had taken possession of the animal and when blemished had returned it to the Israelite, in holds with R. Jose the Galilean who said: It is possible to ascertain simultaneity in natural processes, and how much more so in human actions.¹

May we say that Tannaim differ in this matter? If [a slain body was] found at the same distance between two cities, we do not perform the ceremony of breaking the heifer's neck.² R. Eliezer says: Both cities bring two heifers. Is not the difference of opinion based on this very point? For the first Tanna holds: that it is impossible to be exact,³ whereas R. Eliezer holds that it is possible to be exact! — But can you really say this? If the first Tanna holds that it is impossible to be exact, why did they not have the ceremony of breaking the heifer's neck? Let the two cities bring one heifer between them and make a stipulation?⁴ Rather, according to these Tannaim quoted above, they all hold that it is possible to be exact.⁵ The point at issue, however, is whether we hold that the words ‘[the city] which is nearest’, imply ‘but not [the cities] which are nearest’: The first Tanna holds: The words, ‘Which is nearest’ imply ‘but not [the cities] which are nearest’, whereas R. Eliezer holds: ‘[The city] which is nearest’, implies even [the cities] which are nearest. What do we decide?⁶ R. Hiyya b. Abin reported in the name of R. Amram: A Tanna taught: If a slain body is found at exactly the same distance between two cities, R. Eliezer says: Both cities bring two heifers, whereas the Sages say: They shall bring one heifer between them and make a stipulation. Now what is the reasoning of the Rabbis [Sages]? If the Rabbis hold that it is possible to be exact and the words ‘[The city] which is nearest’, imply also ‘[the cities] which are nearest’, then let them bring two heifers. And if the words ‘[The city] which is nearest’ imply ‘but not [the cities] which are nearest, then they should not bring even one heifer? You can, therefore, deduce from this that the Rabbis hold that it is impossible to be exact even in human actions. This is proved.

R. TARFON SAYS: THE PRIEST CHOOSES FOR HIMSELF THE BETTER ONE. What is the reason of R. Tarfon? — He holds that the animal which is stronger came forth first.
R. AKIBA SAYS: WE COMPROMISE BETWEEN THEM, etc. R. Hiyya b. Abba reported in the name of R. Johanan: The priest takes the lean one. Said R. Hiyya b. Abba to R. Johanan: But do we not read meshammenin? Seventh — He replied to him: While you were not yet eating date-berries in Babylonia, we expounded R. Akiba's statement from the latter part of the Mishnah. For the latter part of the Mishnah says: IF ONE OF THEM DIES, R. TARFON SAYS THEY DIVIDE IT. R. AKIBA SAYS: THE CLAIMANT MUST PRODUCE THE EVIDENCE. Now, if we were to assume that the word meshammenin etc. means that they are divided equally, here also let them divide the live animal equally! Rather what is meant by meshammenin is that the fat animal [remains to be divided] between them, for [the Israelite] says to the priest: Bring a proof that it is a firstling and take it. AND THE SECOND ONE [IN THE POSSESSION OF THE ISRAELITE] IS LEFT TO PASTURE UNTIL IT IS BLEMISHED

What is the reason of R. Meir? — Said R. Johanan: Because the priest can make a claim upon him from two sides. For he can say to him: If it is a firstling then it belongs to me entirely. And if it is not a firstling, give me the priest's gifts therefrom. And R. Jose — what is his reason? Said Raba: [The Rabbis] put one who had not taken possession, in the position of one who had taken possession. So although it had not reached the priest's hands, it is as if it had reached his hands and he had sold it to the Israelite when blemished. Said R. Eleazar: All the authorities concerned agree that an animal which is a doubtful first-born, since the priest has [a beast] in its stead, is liable for the priest's gifts. [You say] all the authorities concerned. Now, whose view does this represent? R. Jose's! But is not this obvious? For R. Jose exempts only where the priest has [a beast] in its stead, in which case [the Sages] put one who has not taken possession, in the position of one who had taken possession. But where the priest has nothing in its stead, it is not so? — You might have thought that the reason of R. Jose was because he held that if you make him liable for the priest's gifts he may come to shear and work [the animal], even where the priest has nothing in its stead. He consequently informs us [that we do not fear this]. But how can you say this? Have we not learnt [in the subsequent Mishnah]: For R. Jose used to say:

(1) Whereas our enquiry is with reference to the view of the Rabbis.
(2) For each city can maintain that it is not the nearest.
(3) And therefore there is no ceremony of breaking the heifer's neck at all.
(4) 'If', let each city say, 'I am the nearest then the heifer shall atone for me, and if my neighbour is the nearest, it shall atone for her'.
(5) For they concur with R. Jose.
(6) According to the Rabbis, is it possible to be precise in human actions or not?
(7) This is taken to be connected with rt. meaning 'fat', indicating that the difference in the value of the fat one is shared between the Israelite and the priest.
(8) I.e., while yet young.
(9) And the priest takes the lean one, failing the evidence that the fat one was a first-born.
(10) In the same way as in the latter part of the Mishnah according to R. Akiba, for we apply here the principle of money of doubtful ownership.
(11) I.e., the anonymous Mishnah which always represents the view of R. Meir.
(12) And then the priest received something in return, i.e the other animal, and a priest who sold a firstling to an Israelite is, according to the ruling (supra 12b) exempt from the priest's gifts.
(13) Where for example a female and a male are born and there is a doubt as to the first-birth, since the priest received nothing in its place, the animal grazes until it is blemished and is therefore liable for the priest's gifts, for in such a case you cannot argue that it is as if it had been acquired by the priest and subsequently sold to the Israelite, as the priest received nothing in return.
(14) That the reason of R. Jose was because of the fear of shearing and working the animal.

Talmud - Mas. Bechoroth 18b
Wherever the priest has [a beast] in its stead, he is exempt from the priest's gifts, whereas R. Meir makes him liable? The reason therefore is because the priest has [a beast] in its stead, but if the priest has nothing in its stead, it would be other wise! — You might have assumed that R. Jose was arguing according to the view of R. Meir [as follows]: My own view is that even if the priest has nothing in its stead [he is not liable for the gifts]. For if you render him liable for the priest's gifts, he may come to shear and work [the animal]. But according to your view, at least admit that where the priest has [a beast] in its stead, [the Sages] put one who had not taken possession in the position of one who had taken possession. To this R. Meir replied to him: It is not so.

Said R. Papa: All [the authorities concerned] agree with reference to a doubtfully tithed animal that it is exempted from the priest's gifts. You say 'all [the authorities concerned]'? Whose opinion is that? It is R. Meir's. But is not this obvious? For R. Meir only makes him liable for the priest's gifts in connection with an animal which is a doubtful first-born, since the priest can make claim upon him from two sides, but in the case of a doubtfully tithed animal, it is not so! — You might have assumed that the reason of R. Meir was that the law of the priest's gifts should not be forgotten and consequently even in the case of a doubtfully tithed animal, the ruling is the same. He therefore informs us [that it is not so]. But how can you say this? Have we not learnt: For R. Jose used to say that wherever the priest has [a beast] in its stead it is exempt, whereas R. Meir makes him liable — You might have assumed that R. Meir, even in the case of a doubtfully tithed animal, makes him liable, and the reason why they differ [in the matter where the priest has a beast] in its stead, is to show how far R. Jose is prepared to go, since he exempts even where the priest can make a claim upon him from two sides. He therefore informs us [that this is not so].

IF ONE DIES, R. TARFON SAYS: THEY DIVIDE THE LIVING ONE. Why should they divide [the living one]? Let us see. If the fat one died, it is the priest's [which has died], and the one remaining is the owner's. And if the lean one died, it is the owner's [which has died] and the one remaining is the priest's! — Said R. Ammi: R. Tarfon retracted.

R. AKIBA SAYS: THE CLAIMANT MUST PRODUCE THE EVIDENCE. Said R. Hiyya: On R. Tarfon's view, what does the position resemble? That of two men who gave [two animals] in charge of a shepherd and [one died], where the shepherd leaves the living one between them and departs. On the view of R. Akiba, to what can the position be compared? To that of a man who gave an animal in charge of an owner [of animals], where the claimant must produce the evidence. Then what is the point at issue? Will R. Akiba deny where two give [two animals] in charge of a shepherd, that the shepherd leaves [the living one] and departs? And will R. Tarfon differ in the case where one gave an animal in charge of an owner [of animals]? — Said Raba, or some say. R. Papa: All the authorities concerned agree that where two men gave [two animals] in charge of a shepherd, the shepherd leaves [the living one] between them and departs. Also in the case where one gave an animal in charge of an owner [of animals], that the claimant must produce the evidence. The point at issue, however, is where is the ground is the owner's and the priest is the shepherd. R. Tarfon holds: The owner gives possession to the priest in his ground since he is desirous that a mizwah should be performed through his property and therefore the position is that of two who gave [animals] in charge of a shepherd where the shepherd leaves [the living one] between them and departs. But R. Akiba says: Since he would suffer loss, he does not give him any possession, and it is therefore similar to the case of one who gave an animal in charge of the owner [of animals], where the claimant must produce the evidence.

GEMARA. [All these cases where R. Tarfon and R. Akiba differ] are necessary [to be stated]. For if we had been informed of the first case above, I might have assumed that in that case R. Akiba held that the claimant must produce the evidence, because two males came from one ewe, but in the case of two ewes which had never previously given birth, and where two animals [a male and a female] were born from one, and one [male] from the other, I might have said that he agrees with R. Tarfon that the animal which came forth singly is much the better one. And if he had stated only the latter case, I might have assumed that in this case R. Akiba [held that the claimant must produce the evidence], for neither had previously given birth, but where one ewe had given birth and the other had not given birth and they begot two males, I might have said that he agrees with R. Tarfon, (1) Thus we see It explicitly stated that the reason is because the priest has a beast in its stead.
(2) An animal numbered tenth in tithing, which jumped back among the untithed ones. There is in the case of each animal a doubt whether it is the tithed one and therefore the animals pasture until blemished, when they are eaten by the owners. (Infra 58b.)
(3) If it is a firstling, then it is entirely his, and if not, then it is hullin and subject to the priest's gifts.
(4) For the priest can only claim on the ground that it is hullin, an unconsecrated animal, since a tithed animal belongs to the owner.
(5) That the reason of R. Meir is lest the law of the priest's gifts be forgotten.
(6) Now, if the reason of R. Meir with reference to the firstling is because the priest can make his claim on two grounds and therefore R. Jose argues for exemption, maintaining that the priest cannot say that if it is a firstling then it belongs entirely to him, since he holds that it is as if the priest had, after acquiring the firstling, sold it to the Israelite. But if you maintain that the reason of R. Meir is lest the law of the priest's gifts be forgotten, why does R. Jose give the reason that the priest has a beast in its stead, since possibly R. Meir himself might have exempted him on that ground. (Rashi).
(7) For R. Tarfon holds that the Priest chooses the stronger one.
(8) From his view in the early part of the Mishnah where he declared that the priest chooses the stronger one.
(9) And similarly the Mishnah is dealing with a case where the surviving animal, a doubtful first-born, was given in charge of a shepherd, and both the owner and priest claim it. Here we cannot say that the claimant must produce the evidence, since the animal is in the possession of neither of them.
(10) Who placed it among his herd of animals, one of which died. The owner declares that it is not his animal that has died, and the other makes a similar assertion. Here, since the animal is in the possession of the owner, the priest is the claimant.
(11) Since each of these Tannaim refers to different circumstances.
(12) Here surely R. Akiba cannot maintain that the claimant must produce the evidence. And similarly, R. Tarfon cannot maintain that where one gave an animal in charge of an owner, the living animal is divided.
Where, e.g., the living firstling is in the ground of the owner and the priest is the shepherd of all his animals. A ground has the power to acquire chattels on behalf of its owner, v. B.M. 9b.

So that the priest might acquire the firstlings immediately after birth.

A good deed, by rearing the firstlings of the priest in his ground. Therefore it is as if the ground belonged to both. The ground also is like the shepherd in the case where two gave animals in charge of a shepherd and therefore they divide the surviving animal.

I.e., in the case of an animal of uncertain first-birth, the owner would suffer a loss if the ground was the priest's.

Of the ground.

For there was a female with it, and therefore one can say that the female came first.

And the priest takes the lean one. Heb. Meshammenim. V. supra p. 121 n. 1.

For one can say that each ewe gave birth to a male and a female and in each case there is a doubt as to whether the male came first.

Where the priest receives one of the animals of uncertain first-birth, the other animal is exempt from the priests’ gifts.

For the reason stated by Raba supra 18a.

Since perhaps the ewe which had never given birth begot the female, and the ewe which had given birth before begot the male.

Where a ewe begot two males.

And as there is a doubt, we say that the claimant must produce the evidence.

For the reason why this is the strong one is because it came forth without a companion and had more room in emerging; therefore it is undoubtedly the firstling.

Talmud - Mas. Bechoroth 19a

do that the one which had not given birth is much the better one.¹ There is need therefore [for the enumeration of all the instances where R. Tarfon and R. Akiba differ].

Mishnah. With regard to [an animal] extracted through the cesarean section and the firstling which came after it, R. Tarfon says: Both pasture until blemished and are eaten with their blemishes by the owners,² whereas R. Akiba says: In both cases the law of the firstling does not apply: in the first, because it is not the first-birth of the womb, and the second, because another [animal] preceded it.

Gemara. On what principle do they differ? — R. Tarfon is in doubt whether a firstling in only one respect is the firstling [of Scripture]. whereas R. Akiba is certain that a firstling in only one respect is not the firstling [of the Scripture].

Our Rabbis taught: [A lesson can be derived] from a general proposition which requires complementing by specification and from a specification which requires complementing by a general proposition. For Instance: [Scripture says]: Sanctify unto me all the first-born.³ I might understand from this that even a female is subject to the law of the firstling. Hence the text expressly states: All the firstling males⁴ [that are born].⁵ From the word males’, however, I might understand that even if a female came forth before it, [it is subject to the law of the firstling]. Hence the text expressly states: That openeth the womb.⁶ From the words ‘that openeth the womb’, however, I might understand that the law applies even if it came after an animal extracted through the cesarean section. Hence Scripture expressly states: The firstling.⁷ Said R. Sherabya to Abaye: In the first part [of the above passage],⁸ why does not the Talmud bring the text ‘The firstling’?⁹ From this we see that a firstling in only one respect is the firstling [of the Scripture]. And in the last part [of the above passage],¹⁰ the Talmud brings the text ‘firstling’. Consequently, we see that the firstling in only one respect is not the firstling [of the Scripture]?¹¹ He replied to him: Indeed a firstling in only one respect may still not be the firstling [of the Scripture]¹² and, in the first part [of the above passage], what he means to say is this: From the word ‘male’ in the text, however, I might infer that even a firstling extracted through the cesarean section is the firstling [of the Scripture]. Hence Scripture expressly states: The first-birth of the womb. Rabina said: Indeed a firstling in one respect may still be the firstling [of the Scripture]. and the last part [of the passage] means this: If you should assume that a firstling which came forth after one extracted through the cesarean section is sanctified, what need is there for the Divine Law to write the word ‘Firstling’?

---

(1) And therefore its offspring is the stronger and, consequently, the priest should claim it as the firstling.

(2) For they are animals of uncertain first-birth, according to R. Tarfon. In the case of the first animal, although it is the first of the offspring, it is not the first which came forth from the womb. And with regard to the second animal, although it is the first which left the womb, it is not the first of the offspring.

(3) Ex. XIII, 2. This first part is not an illustration of the general proposition which requires a specification to define it, as mentioned above (Rashi).

(4) Deut. XV, 19.

(5) This is an example of a general proposition followed by a specification in which the scope of the proposition is limited by the things specified.

(6) Here we have a case of a specification which is required to define and explain a general proposition as mentioned above. It is not, however, a genuine general proposition followed by a specification referred to in the first portion of the passage where there is no necessity to define the nature of a first-born, since a female can also be first of the womb, the specification, however, limiting the scope of the general proposition to males alone (Rashi).

(7) Ex. XIII, 2. Here we have an illustration of a specification requiring a general proposition to define it.

(8) Deut. XV, 19.

(9) This is an example of a general proposition followed by a specification in which the scope of the proposition is limited by the things specified.

(10) Here we have a case of a specification which is required to define and explain a general proposition as mentioned above. It is not, however, a genuine general proposition followed by a specification referred to in the first portion of the passage where there is no necessity to define the nature of a first-born, since a female can also be first of the womb, the specification, however, limiting the scope of the general proposition to males alone (Rashi).

(11) Ex. XIII, 2. Here we have an illustration of a specification requiring a general proposition to define it.

(12) He calls here the middle part of the above passage commencing ‘From the word males’ etc.’, the first part.

(13) If the law of the firstling only applied to an animal which is a firstling in every particular, why does not the Talmud, instead of saying ‘I might infer that even if a female came before’ etc., simply refer to the word ‘firstling’, in the text as excluding this assumption, since a genuine firstling must be such in all respects? Hence we may deduce that the scriptural firstling can be an animal which is so only in one respect.

(14) It says ‘one might infer that the animal which came after one extracted through the cesarean section, etc., from which we may conclude that the firstling in only one respect is not a genuine firstling. Thus there is a clear contradiction in the above passage.

(15) And here the Talmud could not adduce the text ‘Firstling’ to refute the inference, for in this case the animal is a firstling, since it had never given birth. Therefore he quotes the text. The first-birth of the womb’, which, at the same time, excludes the case of a female born previously through the womb (Rashi).

(16) And we do not derive the exclusion of an animal following one extracted through the cesarean Section from the scriptural word ‘Firstling’, as the latter also indicates that it is a firstling even if it is so in one particular only. But the exclusion is in fact derived from the addition of the word ‘Firstling’.

(17) Let Scripture write: The first-birth of the womb, a male, thou shalt sanctify.

Talmud - Mas. Bechoroth 19b

It cannot be for the purpose of excluding a case of a female which came before it, since this is derived from the text ‘The first-birth of the womb’. Deducce then from here that the additional word ‘Firstling’ excludes the case of an animal which came forth after one extracted through the cesarean section. Said R. Aha of Difti to Rabina: If you should assume that a firstling in one respect is the firstling [of the Scripture], we can well understand that if a male extracted through the cesarean section is followed by a male subsequently born from the womb, the latter is not sanctified, being excluded by the word ‘Firstling’, since we have here a firstling in respect of the womb but not as regards males and offspring. But in the case of a female extracted from the cesarean section and a male subsequently born from the womb, let it be sanctified, since here we have a firstling of males and the firstling of the womb? — The fact is that the best explanation is that of Abaye.
MISHNAH. IF ONE BUYS AN ANIMAL FROM A HEATHEN NOT KNOWING WHETHER IT HAD GIVEN BIRTH OR HAD NEVER YET GIVEN BIRTH, R. ISHMAEL SAYS: THAT BORN OF A GOAT IN ITS FIRST YEAR CERTAINLY BELONGS TO THE PRIEST; AFTER THAT, IT IS A QUESTIONABLE CASE [OF A FIRSTLING].6 THAT BORN OF A EWE TWO YEARS OLD CERTAINLY BELONGS TO THE PRIEST; AFTER THAT, IT IS A QUESTIONABLE CASE [OF A FIRSTLING]. THAT BORN OF A COW OR AN ASS THREE YEARS OLD CERTAINLY BELONGS TO THE PRIEST; AFTER THAT, IT IS A QUESTIONABLE CASE [OF A FIRSTLING].7 SAID R. AKIBA TO HIM: IF AN ANIMAL WERE EXEMPTED [FROM THE LAW OF THE FIRSTLING] ONLY WITH THE BIRTH OF [ACTUAL] OFFSPRING, IT WOULD BE AS YOU SAY. BUT THE FACT IS [AS THE RABBIS] SAID: THE SIGN OF OFFSPRING IN SMALL CATTLE IS A DISCHARGE [FROM THE WOMB].8 IN LARGE CATTLE, THE AFTER-BIRTH; IN A WOMAN, THE SIGNS ARE THE FOETUS AND THE AFTER-BIRTH. THIS IS THE GENERAL RULE: WHEREVER IT IS KNOWN THAT IT HAD GIVEN BIRTH,9 THE PRIEST RECEIVES NOTHING. WHEREVER IT HAD NEVER GIVEN BIRTH, IT BELONGS TO THE PRIEST. IF THERE IS A DOUBT, IT SHALL BE EATEN IN ITS BLEMISHED STATE BY THE OWNERS.

GEMARA. [The Mishnah says] that, after that, it is a questionable case [of a firstling]. Why is it a questionable case? Why not go by the majority of animals which become pregnant and beget in their first year, and [so we say that] this one certainly gave birth in the first year?10 May we, therefore, not say that R. Ishmael holds according to R. Meir, who takes into consideration the minority? — You may say that he even concurs with the Rabbis, for the Rabbis go by the majority only when it is the majority which is before us, as e.g. the case of the nine stalls11 and the Sanhedrin.12 But in the case of a majority which is not before us,13 the Rabbis do not go by the majority. But is there not the case of minors, a boy and a girl,14 which is a majority that is not before us, and still the Rabbis go by the majority? For we have learnt: Minors, whether boy or girl, do not perform the act of halizah15 nor the levirate marriage.16 This is the teaching of R. Meir. [The Rabbis] said to him: You rightly say that they do not perform the act of halizah, for Scripture says a man;17 and we put a woman on a level with a man [in this respect]. But what is the reason why they do not perform the levirate marriage? — He thereupon replied to them: A boy minor [is not allowed to do so]. lest he be found to be a eunuch,18 and a girl minor, lest she be discovered to be sterile19 and thus render it a case of contact with a forbidden relation.20 And the Rabbis? — We go by the majority of boys in the world, and the majority of boys are not eunuchs. We go by the majority of girls [in the world], and the majority of girl minors are not sterile!21 — Rather said Raba:

(1) That it is not sanctified, but in the case where a female was born before through the cesarean section, the male animal following, it is still the firstling of the Scripture, although it is not a firstling as regards birth, for a firstling need not be so in every respect.
(2) And an animal which was born after one which came through the cesarean section is excluded, not by the implication of the word ‘Firstling’, but owing to the addition of the word ‘Firstling’.
(3) It is logical to maintain that the additional word ‘Firstling’ would exclude a case of this character.
(4) For the additional word can only exclude one case, whereas the Baraitha above implies that in both instances, even where a female was extracted through the cesarean section and a male was born from the womb, it is not the Scriptural firstling.
(5) That the significance of the term ‘Firstling’ is that in every particular the animal must be a firstling and therefore all the cases cited above are excluded.
(6) The animal therefore grazes until it is blemished and it is then eaten by the owners.
(7) And in the case of an ass of a questionable first-birth, the Israelite separates a lamb on its behalf, which, however, he retains for himself.
(8) And we say that there is an abortion. We fear then lest it discharged in its first year, and therefore that born of a goat, even in its first year is a questionable case of a first-birth.
Either actual birth or a discharge from the womb.

Consequently, the animal born now should be regarded as genuine hullin, to be eaten unblemished.

Each selling meat killed ritually and one stall selling ritually forbidden meat. A piece of meat is found on the ground before one of these stalls and it is not known whether it is kosher (ritually fit to be eaten) or not. The ruling is that whatever comes out of a heterogeneous mass is presumed to come from the larger element in it and, in this instance, it is a majority which is before us, since the stalls are before us to witness.

In a court of law, where twelve judges absolve and eleven condemn and we are guided by the views of the majority. Here, too, the majority is one which is visible to us; v. Hul. 11a.

As in this case, where we argue that the majority of the animals the world over are pregnant, etc.

A boy under thirteen years of age, and a girl under twelve.

The ceremony of taking off the brother-in-law's shoe. (Deut. XXV, 5-11.)

To marry the wife of a brother who died without issue.

‘So shall it be done with that man’, (Deut. XXV, 9.) Excluding, therefore, a minor.

Impotent as regards a sexual act.

Incappable of conception.

A woman forbidden to marry a certain man and vice versa, owing to consanguinity.

This proves that the Rabbis follow also a majority which is not before.

Talmud - Mas. Bechoroth 20a

It is the best explanation [to say that] R. Ishmael holds according to R. Meir, who takes into consideration the minority. Rabina said: You may still say that he holds with the Rabbis, for the Rabbis go by the majority only in the case of a majority that does not depend on action, but in the case of a majority which depends on action, it is not so.

Our Rabbis taught: That born from a goat in its first year, certainly belongs to the priest; after that, it is a questionable case [of a firstling]. That born of a ewe two years old certainly belongs to the priest; after that, it is a questionable case. That born of a cow three years old certainly belongs to the priest; after that, it is a questionable case. The rule for a she-ass is the same as for a cow. R. Jose b. Judah, however, says that the offspring of a she-ass four years old [certainly belongs to the priest]. Thus far the teachings are those of R. Ishmael. When these teachings were reported to R. Joshua, he said to them: Go and say to R. Ishmael, you have made a mistake. If the animal were exempted only with the [actual] birth of an embryo, it would be as you say. But [the Sages] have declared: A sign of offspring in small cattle is a discharge [from the womb], in large cattle, the after-birth, and in a woman, the signs are the foetus and after-birth. I do not, however, hold with this. But [what I say is that] a goat which at six months discharged [from the womb] can give birth in its first year, that a ewe which discharged within its first year [from the womb], gives birth in its second year. Said R. Akiba: I have not got so far as this. But [what I say is that] wherever it is known that it had given birth, the priest receives nothing; wherever it had never given birth, it belongs to the priest, and if it is a questionable [firstling], it shall be eaten in its blemished state by the owner. What is the point at issue between R. Ishmael and R. Joshua? May we say that the point at issue is as to whether a discharge [from the womb] exempts [from the law of the firstling]. R. Ishmael holding that a discharge does not exempt, whereas R. Joshua holds that a discharge exempts? — [No]. If we actually saw it discharging, all the authorities would agree that a discharge exempts [from the law of the firstling]. The point at issue, however, is whether we take into consideration the possibility of its having discharged. R. Ishmael holds: We do not take into consideration the possibility of its having discharged, whereas R. Joshua holds that we take into consideration this possibility. But does not R. Ishmael take into consideration [such a possibility]. Did not Raba say above that it is obvious that R. Ishmael holds with R. Meir, who takes into consideration [the minority]? — R. Ishmael takes into consideration [the minority] when the object is to make the ruling more stringent. But when the object is to render the ruling more lenient, then he does not take into consideration the minority. And if you prefer [another solution], I may say: Whether it is to restrict or to make the ruling more lenient, he takes into consideration [the minority]. The difference of opinion, however, is [whether] where it discharges [from the womb] it can subsequently give birth in its first year. R. Ishmael held that an animal which discharges does not subsequently give birth in its first year and consequently this one, since it gave birth, certainly did not discharge. But R. Joshua held: An animal which discharges can give birth subsequently in its first year.

[It says above]: ‘I do not, however, hold with this. But a goat six months old which discharged gives birth in its first year, a ewe a year old when she discharged gives birth in its second year’. What is the difference between what he had on tradition and his own opinion? — Where e.g., the animal discharged at the end of six months, and they differ as to Ze’iri's dictum. For Ze’iri said: The period of discharge is not less than thirty days. What he had on traditions agrees with Ze’iri's dictum, whereas his own opinion does not agree with Ze’iri's dictum.

And if you prefer [another solution]. I may say: All [the authorities concerned] accept Ze’iri's dictum. The point at issue here, however, is whether an animal gives birth before the due number of months is completed.

(1) As e.g., the animal's pregnancy, which depends on the act of coupling with a male, so that there is the possibility that there was no coupling in this instance.
(2) I.e., to know whether an animal which discharged in six months can bear in a year, so that even if it bears in the first year we are not certain that the offspring is a firstling.
(3) That R. Ishmael who regards that born of a goat in the first year as certainly a firstling is of the opinion that even if it discharges in its first year, it is not thereby exempted.
(4) And he rules that the offspring, even after the first year, is a questionable firstling, for a minority of animals do not give birth in the first year, whereas if we went only by the majority, an animal born after the first year would be regarded as hullin, without any doubt as to whether it is a first-birth.
(5) As in the example here, if we were to take into consideration the minority that discharges and therefore regard the animal as a questionable firstling even in its first year, that would be making the law of the firstling more lenient.
(6) R. Joshua's statement ‘But the Sages said, etc’.
(7) Where he declares: But I do not hold with this.
(8) Where we actually saw the discharge commencing in the beginning of the seventh month.
(9) And for this period it is unable to couple with a male.
(10) Which does not say: That of a goat in its first year. thus implying that even if it gives birth on the first day of the second year. the offspring is a firstling, as we accept Ze’iri's dictum that its discharge is for thirty full days, after which there is a period of pregnancy of five complete months, so that it would give birth on the first day of the second year.
(11) Which says: But a goat six months old which discharges gives birth in its first year. It cannot, consequently, hold that the discharge lasts the full thirty days as laid down by Ze’iri's dictum, for then, allowing for the full months of pregnancy, it could not give birth in the first year.

Talmud - Mas. Bechoroth 20b

According to what we have on tradition, we do not maintain that it gives birth before the due number of months is completed, but according to his own opinion we maintain that it does give birth before the due number of months is completed. And if you still prefer [another solution], I may say: We do not maintain that an animal gives birth before the due number of months is completed. and the point at issue here is, however, whether a part of the day is considered as equivalent to the whole day. According to his own opinion, we say that a part of the day is considered equivalent to the whole day, whereas according to what he had on tradition we do not say that a part of the day is considered as the whole day.

‘Said R. Akiba: I have not come so far as this. But wherever it is known etc.’ What is the difference between R. Akiba and R. Joshua? — Said R. Hanina of Sura: The difference between them is whether milk exempts [from the law of the firstling]. R. Akiba holds: Milk exempts, for we go by the majority of animals and the majority of animals do not give milk unless they have given birth. But R. Joshua holds that there exists a minority of animals which give milk although they have not yet given birth. But does R. Joshua take into consideration the minority? Have we not learnt: If [a woman] had a mother-in-law, she need not fear, but if when she left the mother-in-law was pregnant, she must fear. R. Joshua, however, says: She need not fear. And we explained, what is the reason of R. Joshua — He holds: The majority of pregnant women actually gave birth, and only a minority miscarry. And of all who give birth, half bear males and half females. Add the minority of miscarriages to the half which bear females, then males are in the minority and we do not take into consideration a minority? — Rather, reverse the names above. And it has been taught similarly: Milk exempts from the law of the firstling: this is the teaching of R. Joshua. R. Akiba, however, says: Milk does not exempt.

Our Rabbis have taught: If a she-kid gave birth to three females and each female gave birth to three, all of them enter the shed to be tithed. Said R. Simeon: I saw a she-kid of which the offspring was tithed in its first year. What need is there for the Baraitha to state that each gave birth to three? Let it state that one gave birth to three and the rest each gave birth to two? — Since one animal must necessarily bear three, [the Baraitha] states in each of the cases mentioned that it gave birth to three. And what need is there for [the Baraitha] to state [that each gave birth to] three at all? Let it say that each [offspring] gave birth to two and the mother again gave birth together with them?

(1) And, therefore, it does not speak of having been born in the first year.
(2) The thirtieth day of the discharge, and the point is whether it is possible for the animal to commence pregnancy on that day.
(3) Which refers to being born in the first year.
(4) That a part of the last day of the discharge is considered as a whole day, and therefore we can say that it became pregnant on that very day, so that the animal was born on the last day of its first year, even after allowing for five full months for the pregnancy.
(5) Since according to both, where we do not know if it had given birth, the embryo is a questionable first-born.
(6) If it gives milk in its first year, or if it was born in the Israelite's house and we did not see it giving birth until after the first year, but meanwhile it gave milk.
(7) Who takes into consideration the minority of animals which discharge, also takes into consideration the minority of animals which give milk although they had never given birth. Therefore the offspring in this case is subject to the law of the firstling.
(8) Who with her husband had gone to some place where information regarding those left behind was not easy to obtain, and the husband died without children and left no brother (Yeb. 119a).
(9) Lest meanwhile, during their absence, the mother-in-law had given birth to a son whom the widow is now obliged under the levirate law to marry.
(10) Lest a son was born to her mother-in-law, and therefore she cannot marry another.
(11) V. Yeb. 119a.
(12) Who do not render the widow liable to the law of the levirate.
(13) So that it is R. Joshua who maintains that a discharge exempts, and the same applies to the giving of milk, whereas R. Akiba only exempts where it is definitely known that it had given birth, but when it is not known, even if it discharges or gives milk, it is a doubtful first-born.
(14) As is the case when it discharges from the womb.
(15) From the law of the firstling, unless it is known that it had not given birth.
(16) Simultaneously, at the end of its year.
(17) At the end of their year. The offspring were females, but if they had been males, there would have been three firstlings and there could then be no tithing. All of them would have to be born between one Elul and the next, as the month of Elul is reckoned the New Year for animal tithing and those born before Elul cannot be tithed with those born after Elul; v. R.H. 2a.
I.e., the offspring.

I.e., in the same year as the three daughters were born, and the daughters in turn gave birth, and the animals entered for tithing.

In order to make up the number ten to be subject to tithing, as the original she-kid is not tithed with the offspring because it belongs to a previous year.

So that there will be three mothers with their six offspring and the additional offspring of the she-kid.

May we say, therefore, that he holds that an animal which discharges, does not subsequently give birth in the year [of its discharging]?— [No], though you hold that an animal which discharges can give birth in the year [of its discharging], [you may still maintain that] if it gave birth, it cannot give birth again in the same year.

Said R. Simeon: ‘I saw a she-kid etc.’ What is the difference between the first Tanna [quoted above in the Baraitha] and R. Simeon?— They differ in accepting or rejecting the dictum of Ze’iri. For Ze’iri said: The period of discharging [from the womb] is not less than thirty days. The first Tanna [in the above Baraitha] accepts Ze’iri’s dictum, whereas R. Simeon does not accept Ze’iri’s teaching. And if you wish [another solution], I may say: All the authorities concerned agree with Ze’iri’s dictum, but the difference between them is whether an animal can give birth before the due number of months is completed. The first Tanna [of the above Baraitha] holds that an animal cannot give birth before the due number of months is completed, whereas, according to R. Simeon, It can give birth before the due number of months is completed. And if you wish [still another solution] I may say: All the authorities concerned maintain that an animal does not give birth before the due number of months is completed, and the difference of opinion is whether a part of the day is considered as equivalent to the whole day. According to the first Tanna [above] we do not maintain that a part of the day is considered like a whole day, whereas, according to R. Simeon, we maintain that a part of the day is considered like a whole day. And if you wish [still another solution], I may say: All the authorities concerned agree that a part of the day is considered like the whole day, and the point at issue here is whether animals may enter the shed to be tithed before its due time.

(1) Since the Baraitha above does not state that the mother gave birth again but that the ten animals for tithing are composed of each of the daughters giving birth to three.

(2) And in this case, it cannot bear, having given birth to three daughters in the beginning of the year. He mentions here ‘discharging’ because he also wishes to solve the dispute above between R. Ishmael and R. Joshua on the point whether there is a delay after a discharge as after an actual birth.

(3) I.e., that the period of discharging can be less than thirty days.

(4) And therefore the language of the Baraitha affords no proof with regard to discharging.

(5) For both agree that the she-kid, the grandmother, is not tithed with the rest.

(6) This passage is inserted from Sh. Mek.

(7) And these three daughters discharged in the beginning of the seventh month, continuing the discharge for thirty days, and therefore they could not give birth in the first year, but only at the beginning of the second year. For this reason the first Tanna does not use the expression ‘In the first year’.

(8) Who uses the phrase ‘In the first year’, certainly does not agree with Ze’iri, but maintains that discharging can last less than thirty days, so that they gave birth in the first year. (R. Gershom). According to Rashi the explanation is that the females discharged on the last day of the sixth month and not on the first day of the seventh month. Add to this the thirty days of Ze’iri and the five full months of pregnancy, then the animal enters the shed for tithing at the end of the first year. But R. Simeon who uses the expression ‘In the year’ does not accept Ze’iri's teaching and therefore the tithing can take place some days earlier, before the completion of the year. A further explanation of Rashi is: According to the first Tanna of the Baraitha above, even if it begins to discharge on the first day of the seventh month, and allowing the thirty full days of Ze’iri, it still gives birth on the first day of the second year. If the year is a leap-year the mothers and their daughters enter the shed to be tithed even in that case. Reckoning the year therefore from Elul to the following Elul, we could place the birth even on the first of Ab. But R. Simeon who uses the expression ‘In his first year’ does not accept Ze'iri’s reaching and they can therefore be tithed together, having been born on the last day of Ab.

(9) Before the eighth day from its birth. According to the first Tanna of the Baraitha they do not enter to be tithed before the completion of seven days after their birth, whereas according to R. Simeon, they can be tithed even before that time.

Talmud - Mas. Bechoroth 21b

And we have a Baraitha [confirming this]. R. Simeon the son of Judah reported in the name of R. Simeon: An animal, though immature,1 can enter the shed to be tithed, for it is like the case of a firstling: Just as a firstling is sanctified before its due time2 and is sacrificed when its time becomes due, so a tithing animal can be sanctified before its due time and offered up after its time becomes due. But why deduce [the case of a tithing animal] from the case of a firstling? Why not deduce it from the case of dedicated animals?3 — It is reasonable to infer [the case of a tithing animal] from the case of a firstling, because to both apply the rules regarding redemption,4 a blemish,5 exchange,6 and eating.7 On the contrary, according to this, [the Baraitha] ought to infer [the case of a tithing animal] from the case of dedicated animals, because to both apply the rules regarding a plain animal,8 a male,9 sanctification,10 and the priest's dues?11 The fact is that R. Simeon learns from [the analogy between] ‘passing’12 and ‘passing’.

What is the discharge [from the womb] like? — Rab said: As the shepherds of Zaltha said: The womb closes up.13 Samuel said: Casting up blood. And he is required to show it to a wise man [Sage].14 How does a wise man know? — Said R. Papa: [What is meant is] a wise shepherd. Said R. Hisda: Behold the Sages said: The period for the formation of an embryo in a woman is forty days.15 R. Hisda thereupon asked: How long is the period in the case of an animal?16 — Said R. Papa to Abaye: Is not this Ze'iri's dictum? For Ze'iri said: The period of discharging is not less than thirty days?17 This [statement] referred only to the receiving of a male for coupling.18 Now we have [in our Mishnah] the ruling concerning [an Israelite] purchasing [an animal] from a heathen. What is the ruling, however, where [an Israelite] purchases [an animal] from an Israelite? — Said Rab: It is surely a firstling, for if it had given birth, he would certainly have recommended it on this ground.19 But Samuel says: It is a questionable firstling, because the seller thinks the other needs it for slaughtering.20 R. Johanan said: The animal is genuine hullin.21 What is the reason? If it be a fact that it had never given birth, since we have here a prohibition,22 he would surely inform him.23 It has been taught in support of R. Johanan's ruling, who maintains that it is hullin: If24 he did not inform him,25 he can proceed to kill and need not refrain.26 May we assume [then] that this [Baraitha] is a refutation of Rab and Samuel?27 — There,28 it depends on the seller, whereas here the matter depends on the buyer.29 MISHNAH. R. ELIEZER B. JACOB SAYS: IF A LARGE DOMESTIC ANIMAL HAS DISCHARGED A CLOT OF BLOOD, IT [THE CLOT] SHALL BE BURIED,30 AND IT [THE MOTHER] IS EXEMPTED FROM THE LAW OF THE FIRSTLING.

GEMARA. R. Hiyya taught: [The clot of blood] does not make unclean with contact, nor by being carried. Now since it does not make [a person] unclean by contact nor the carrier unclean, why is it buried?31

---

1. I.e., too early for sacrifice, before the expiration of the seven days after birth.
2. From the time it leaves the womb.
3. Where not only is the animal disqualified for sacrifice before its due time but it is even not invested with any sanctity if consecrated before the expiration of the seven days after birth.
4. A firstling and a tithing animal cannot be redeemed from their sanctity, whereas blemished dedicated animals are capable of redemption.
5. A firstling, even born blemished, is sacred. A tithing animal is also sacred, even in a blemished state.
6. The animal for which a firstling or a tithed animal is exchanged is not holy, whereas with reference to dedicated animals, they and their exchanges are sacred.
(7) A firstling and a tithing animal are eaten by their owners, in the first case by the priest and in the second by the Israelite, whereas blemished dedicated objects must be redeemed. Tosaf. explains that all consecrated animals which have been disqualified from the altar may be bought in a shop and sold by the pound weight, which is forbidden in the case of a firstling and tithing animal.

(8) The rules of tithing and consecration apply to plain animals, i.e., not first-born.

(9) Consecration and tithing apply to both males and females, whereas the law of the firstling applies only to males.

(10) An act of consecration is required in the case of tithing animals and dedicated objects, whereas a firstling is sacred from birth.

(11) A tithing animal or a consecrated animal is not the priests’ due, whereas a firstling is the due of the priests.

(12) The text: ‘Thou shalt cause to pass (set apart) unto the Lord all that openeth the womb’. (Ex. XIII, 12) stated in connection with the law of the firstling, and the text that passeth under the rod’, mentioned in connection with the law of tithing animals.

(13) And the embryo was mashed.

(14) To ascertain whether there was an embryo and thus to be exempted from the law of the firstling.

(15) And should the woman, therefore, have a miscarriage before this period has elapsed. she is not required to keep the days of purity and impurity laid down by Scripture for a woman after childbirth.

(16) I.e., if it miscarried and is not therefore exempt from the law of the firstling.

(17) Apparently referring to the formation of the embryo.

(18) That it cannot take a male for coupling purpose for a period of thirty days, having commenced to discharge from the womb. But there is no indication here as regards the time it takes to form an embryo. Another explanation is that Ze’iri’s meaning is that before the animal becomes pregnant she discharges for thirty days, but there is nothing here with reference to the period of the formation of an embryo. (R. Gershom.)

(19) That the animal had already given birth and thus the priest had no further claim on the offspring.

(20) And the reason, therefore, why the seller is silent on this point is perhaps not because it had never given birth but because he thinks that the buyer desires to kill the animal and not to rear offspring, in which case there is no advantage in informing him. Consequently, it is a doubtful firstling.

(21) An unconsecrated animal.

(22) If the Israelite ate the firstling, since it belongs to the priest.

(23) That the animal had never given birth.

(24) Hul. 83a.

(25) In four periods of the year. the Mishnah says in Hul. 83b, a seller must inform prospective buyers that he had sold the mother or the young on that day, so as to safeguard the buyer from killing the mother with its young on the same day.

(26) Since he had not informed him about selling its mother or its young on that day. We see therefore that we construe silence as indicating that there is no infringement of the law.

(27) Who hold above respectively that the animal is a certain or a doubtful firstling, for here we see that it is regarded as genuine hullin.

(28) In the case of the Baraitha in Hul., the duty rests with the seller to inform the public and therefore the purchaser interprets the former's silence as indicating that there is no infringement of the law.

(29) It rests with the buyer of the animal to inquire whether it is a firstling or not, as Scripture says: All the firstling males that come of thy herd and thy flock etc. (Deut. XV. 19), indicating that the duty of separating the firstling devolves upon the person in whose possession the animal is. Consequently, as the necessary inquiries were not made, we regard the offspring as a case of a questionable firstling.

(30) For it is forbidden to use it profitably in case it was a male embryo which was mashed and was sanctified as a firstling.

(31) Since it does not cause levitical uncleanness; we see that we do not fear lest there was here an embryo at all!

Talmud - Mas. Bechoroth 22a

— In order to make known that the mother is exempted from [the law of] the firstling. Does not this mean to say that it is a genuine embryo? Then why does it not make unclean by contact nor make the carrier unclean? — R. Johanan answered: Because the principle of neutralisation by the larger portion is applied here.¹ And R. Johanan is in agreement here with the opinion he expressed elsewhere. For R. Johanan said: R. Eliezer b. Jacob and R. Simeon made similar statements. What is the statement of R. Eliezer b. Jacob? — That which we have learnt [in our Mishnah above]. What is R. Simeon's statement? — As we have learnt: If there is an after-birth in a house, the house is unclean. Not that the after-birth is considered an embryo, only because there cannot be an after-birth without an embryo. But R. Simeon says: The embryo was mashed before it came forth. We have learnt elsewhere: The opening of the uterus for untimely births is not until the embryo [on leaving the uterus] forms a round head like a coil. What kind of coil does this mean? — Like a coil of wool. Said Hyya b. Rab to R. Huna: Did Rabbi explain whether the coil of wool containing warp or containing woof is meant? — He replied to him: It has been taught: The coil of the warp. These are the words of R. Meir. R. Judah says: The coil of the woof. R. Eliezer b. Zadok says: From the time when the ring-like formations [at the mouth of the vagina] are visible. What are the ring-like formations like? — Rab Judah reported in the name of Samuel in behalf of R. Eliezer son of R. Zadok: In Jerusalem they used to explain it in this manner. Like a mule which bends to urinate, and it has the appearance of a coil coming forth out of a coil.

Said R. Huna: I learnt two sizes of coils, one of the warp and the other of the woof, and I am unable to explain. When R. Dimi came, [from Palestine], he reported in the name of R. Johanan: I learnt of three sizes of coils, one of the warp, another of the woof and one large coil, and again another of the sack-carriers, and I am unable to explain. When R. Abin came [from Palestine] he explained this in the name of R. Johanan. In the case of a woman, the coil is like a warp. In the case of an animal, the size of the coil is like the woof. As to a large-size coil of the sack-carriers, it is as we have learnt. A clod [of clay] from a beth ha-peras or a clod of imported clay must have the size of the great seal of the sack-carriers which is like the seal of leather bags. And of the same size is the top part of the stopper of the Bethlehem wine jug. Resh Lakish reported in the name of R. Judah the Prince: He who buys brine from an ‘am ha-arez must bring it in contact with water and it is then levitically clean. For in either case if the larger portion [of the brine] is water, since he brings it in contact with water, he has cleaned it; and if the larger part is brine, brine is not susceptible to levitical uncleanness. The only doubtful element is that small quantity of water [in the brine] and this is neutralized in the larger portion of the brine.

Said R. Jeremiah: This has been laid down only with regard to dipping bread in it but, for cooking purposes, the brine is not permitted since like attracts like and the uncleanness is aroused. R. Dimi was once sitting and repeating this statement of R. Jeremiah: Said Abaye to him: Can levitical uncleanness, once neutralized, be aroused again? — He replied to him: And do you not hold that this is reasonable? Have we not learnt: If a se'ah of unclean terumah has fallen

---

(1) The blood and the multi-coloured substance being the larger portion neutralizes the flesh of the embryo and therefore the latter is not susceptible of levitical uncleanness.
(2) Which a woman produced by a miscarriage and an embryo was not recognized therein.
(3) Which however was mashed. And nevertheless it made the house unclean since we fear lest the embryo was not mashed — and so neutralized — until after it came forth.
(4) V. Nid. 18a. And it was explained there that the reason why the house is not unclean was because we apply to it the principle of the greater proportion of blood etc., neutralizing the embryo before it came forth.
(5) If an embryo died inside a woman who sat on the travailing chair and her uterus was opened in one house but the embryo did not come forth in that house but in another, the first house is unclean, as if it had been born there, for impurity breaks through. v. Oh. VII.
(6) The thread of which is thin and small.
(7) The thread of which is thick.
(8) That there is a difference of opinion on this point.
(9) R. Eliezer differs from the first Tanna quoted above, for whereas the latter requires for constituting the opening of the uterus that the embryo should form a round head like a coil, the former holds that even if it had not formed a round head but in the period of travailing had reached the stage when ring-like formations were visible, indicating the passage of the embryo's head, we regard it as the opening of the uterus.
(10) The mule bends more than any other animal or beast, and while it does so, wrinkles are descernible on the vagina.
(11) To what each of these sizes of coil refers.
(12) This is the size which makes the woman subject to the law of one whose womb is open.
(13) If the embryo had not yet formed a round head of the size of the coil of the woof, then, if the embryo died inside the animal, and the shepherd stretched his hand inside, he does not receive levitical uncleanness.
(14) A field declared to be unclean on account of the crushed bones carried over it from a ploughed grave.
(15) Which has the same law as a beth ha-peras.
(16) The upward sloping portion of the seal, like a handle, is called the top part.
(17) Oh. VII, 5.
(18) V. Glos. A person who is suspected of not keeping either through ignorance or willfulness certain regulations or customs relating to impurity.
(19) The brine in a vessel is placed in a mikweh (ritual bath of purification), so as to make its surface level with the surface of the water into which it is dipped. This is a form of purification.
(20) And the brine is nullified in the larger part of the water, thus receiving uncleanness on account of the water.
(21) Of the mikweh and it is purified thereby. This method of purification applies only to unclean water but not to food and other liquids.
(22) Because it is just the moisture of the fish which issues when salted,
(23) Which receives impurity and for which contact with mikweh water is no purification, since the larger portion is brine and this method of purification does not apply to food.
(24) For the water in the brine combines with the water in the pot and the two together being now the larger portion, neutralize the brine, and make the latter unclean.
(25) Shaken from the law of neutralization. (So Rashi on A.Z. 73a.)
(26) A measure of volume for dry objects and for liquids. V. Ter. V, 2.
(27) The priest's share of the crop.

Talmud - Mas. Bechoroth 22b

into a hundred of clean hullin.\(^1\) R. Eliezer says: The terumah is separated and left to rot.\(^2\) For I maintain that the same se'ah which fell was separated. But the Sages say: A se'ah is separated and eaten in a mouldy state,\(^3\) parched, kneaded in fruit juice,\(^4\) or divided into [minute] loaves, so that there shall not be in one place the size of an egg.\(^5\) And it was taught in connection: As to that hullin

---

\(^1\) The unconsecrated portion, not belonging to the priest.
\(^2\) This being the law of unclean terumah, which is forbidden to be eaten.
\(^3\) From excessive dryness. Or it means, crumbled pieces less than the size of an egg. Although there is here clean and unclean food, nevertheless, so long as the former is not being made fit to receive levitical uncleanness, i.e. does not come in contact with a liquid, the mixture can be eaten in the manner set forth here.
\(^4\) For fruit juice does not make food susceptible to uncleanness.
\(^5\) This being the size which makes it fit to receive levitical uncleanness, v. Ter. V, 2.

Talmud - Mas. Bechoroth 23a

according to R. Eliezer, what shall become of it?\(^1\) — It shall be eaten in a mouldy state, parched, kneaded in fruit juice or be divided into [minute] loaves, so that there shall not be in one place more than the size of an egg. And 'Ulla further explained: What is the reason?\(^2\) It is a precautionary measure in case he brings a kab\(^3\) of unclean hullin from another source and a kab and a little over from this kind. He thinks that he neutralizes it by the larger portion, but since there is this minute quantity [of unclean terumah].\(^4\) like combines with like and the uncleanness is stirred up!\(^5\) — He said to him: If levitical uncleanness arouses uncleanness, shall therefore levitical cleanness stir up uncleanness.\(^6\) He [Abaye] raised an objection [to R. Jeremiah's views]: If ashes fit for lustration [from the red-heifer] were mixed with wood-ashes, we go by the larger portion to render unclean.\(^7\)

---

\(^1\) The priest's share of the crop.
\(^2\) It is a precautionary measure in case he brings a kab of unclean hullin from another source and a kab and a little over from this kind. He thinks that he neutralizes it by the larger portion, but since there is this minute quantity [of unclean terumah].
\(^3\) like combines with like and the uncleanness is stirred up.
\(^4\) He [Abaye] raised an objection [to R. Jeremiah's views]: If ashes fit for lustration [from the red-heifer] were mixed with wood-ashes, we go by the larger portion to render unclean.
But if the greater part is wood-ashes, they do not make unclean. Now, if you say that levitical uncleanness [which was neutralized] is considered as still existing, granted that it does not make uncleanness by contact,\(^6\) still let it make the carrier unclean?\(^7\) It was indeed stated on the subject: R. Jose son of R. Hanina said: [The word] ‘clean’ [in the above Mishnah] means that it is so far clean as not to make uncleanness by contact, but it still makes the carrier unclean. But did not R. Hisda say: Nebelah\(^8\) is neutralized by ritually cut meat,\(^9\) for it is impossible for ritually cut meat to become nebelah? Now,\(^10\) granted that it does not make unclean by contact, still let it make the carrier unclean? — He [R. Dimi] replied to him: You report this\(^11\) in connection with what R. Hisda said, we report it in connection with R. Hiyya. [For] R. Hiyya taught: Nebelah and ritually cut meat neutralize one another [when mixed together]. And it was stated on the subject: R. Jose son of R. Hanina said: It is so far clean as not to make unclean by contact, but it makes the carrier unclean. But have we not learnt: R. ELIEZER THE SON OF JACOB SAYS: IF A LARGE DOMESTIC ANIMAL DISCHARGED A CLOT OF BLOOD, IT SHALL BE BURIED, AND IT IS EXEMPT FROM THE LAW OF THE FIRSTLING. And R. Hiyya taught [in a Baraita]: It does not make unclean, neither by contact nor by carrying?\(^12\) Now [if a forbidden thing remains in existence even after neutralization], granted that it does not make unclean by contact, still let it make the carrier unclean? — He [R. Dimi] became silent. [Nevertheless. there is no difficulty]; perhaps it is different here because it is an uncleanness which is putrid.\(^13\) This would indeed hold good according to Bar Pada who said: A major uncleanness attaches to it as long as it is fit to be eaten by a stranger, whereas a minor uncleanness\(^14\) until as long as it is fit for a dog; and in the case here it is surely not fit for a stranger. But according to R. Johanan who said:

---

(1) For according to the Sages, he is permitted to eat both the hullin and the terumah in the conditions stated above.
(2) Why do we not regard the rest as genuine hullin according to R. Eliezer, since he holds that the se'ah which he separates is the terumah and therefore the rest should be real hullin?
(3) A small measure.
(4) Which must inevitably have mixed with the remainder, in spite of the fact that we maintain that the se'ah which is separated is the se'ah which fell into the hullin.
(5) And combine together and thus receive uncleanness. This proves that levitical uncleanness though once neutralized can be aroused again.
(6) That a minute quantity of uncleanness may stir up other uncleanness, as in the case of the terumah, is feasible; but in the case of the brine, we certainly do not assume that the clean water in the pot will combine with the small quantity of unclean water in the brine in order to neutralize the latter and thus make it unclean.
(7) So that if the larger portion of ashes belong to the red heifer, they make unclean by contact. v. Parah IX. 7.
(8) For since the ashes are mixed, we do not know which are the red heifer's and perhaps he did not touch the ashes belonging to the red heifer at all.
(9) For if he carried all the ashes, then he is bound to have carried the ashes of the red heifer, which make unclean.
(10) Ritually forbidden food, the animal not having been killed according to Jewish law.
(11) Where two or more pieces of ritually killed meat are mixed with one piece of nebelah.
(12) This is the correct version. A different version (cur. edd.) stating that it is impossible for nebelah to become etc. is incorrect, as it is possible for nebelah to be freed from its levitical uncleanness, if it becomes putrid and ceases to be regarded as edible food.
(13) If a forbidden thing, even after being neutralized, is still in existence and can be stirred up again.
(14) The ruling of R. Jose. [The meaning is not clear, nor is the text certain. The passage may also be explained: ‘You report this ruling in the name of R. Hisda and as such it could not have been commented on by R. Jose; we report it as a Baraita taught by R. Hiyya, and in connection with which R. Jose's statement was made’; cf. text in R. Gershom.]
(15) And we have explained above that the reason is because the larger portion of the blood etc. neutralizes the embryo.
(16) This is the answer suggested by the Talmud.
(17) Like the uncleanness of carrying.
(18) After which it does not cause uncleanness.
(19) Like the uncleanness of coming in contact.

Talmud - Mas. Bechoroth 23b
The one as well as the other,\(^1\) [attaches to it so long as] it is fit for a dog — in the case here is it not fit for a dog?\(^2\) — This is indeed a difficulty.

[The above] text [stated]: ‘Bar Pada said: A major uncleanness attaches to it as long as it is fit for a stranger, but a minor uncleanness, as long as it is fit for a dog. But R. Johanan said: In the one case as well as the other, so long as it is fit for a dog [it remains unclean]’. What is the reason of Bar Pada? — Scripture Says: Ye shall not eat of anything that dieth of itself; thou shalt give it unto the stranger.\(^3\) [We infer from this that] what is still suitable for a stranger [to eat] is called nebelah, whereas that which is no longer suitable for a stranger [to eat] is not called nebelah. And the other? — He explains [the Scriptural text] as excluding the case where it was putrid from the beginning.\(^4\) And [what says] the other [to this]? — Where it was putrid from the beginning there is no need for a Scriptural text to exclude, for it is mere dust. We have learnt: R. ELIEZER B. JACOB SAYS: IF A LARGE DOMESTIC ANIMAL DISCHARGED A CLOT OF BLOOD, IT SHALL BE BURIED, AND IT IS EXEMPTED FROM THE LAW OF THE FIRSTLING. And R. Hiiya taught [in a Baraitha]: It does not make unclean either with contact or by carrying it. And R. Johanan explained that we apply here the principle of the larger portion neutralizing [the other]. [The question therefore arises], what need is there for the neutralization by the larger portion? Why not deduce this from the fact that it was not fit at all [for a stranger]? — In this case, too, it was suitable to be eaten [by a stranger], on account of its mother.\(^5\)

We have learnt elsewhere: R. Eliezer b. Jacob says: Clear brine\(^6\) into which there fell a little water is levitically unclean.\(^7\) R. Nahman reported in the name of Rabbah b. Abbuha: This proves that the ‘amme ha-arez are suspected of mixing half water in brine.\(^8\) But why half? Why not even less than a half, for together with the little water here, it makes a half, and a half does not become neutralized?\(^9\) Read: Up to a half.\(^10\) And if you prefer [another solution] I may say: The levitical uncleanness imposed with reference to an ‘am ha-arez is a Rabbinic enactment, and the uncleanness of liquid is also a Rabbinic enactment. Therefore, in the case where the water is the greater portion, the Rabbis decreed uncleanness, but where there is half and half, the Rabbis did not decree uncleanness.

MISHNAH. R. SIMEON B. GAMALIEL SAYS: IF ONE BUYS AN ANIMAL GIVING SUCK FROM A GENTILE, HE NEED NOT FEAR THAT PERHAPS THE OFFSPRING BELONGS TO ANOTHER [ANIMAL].\(^11\) IF HE WENT AMONG HIS HERD AND SAW ANIMALS WHICH HAD GIVEN BIRTH FOR THE FIRST TIME GIVING SUCK AND ANIMALS WHICH HAD NOT GIVEN BIRTH FOR THE FIRST TIME GIVING SUCK, WE NEED NOT FEAR THAT PERHAPS THE OFFSPRING OF THIS ONE CAME TO THE OTHER OR PERHAPS THE OFFSPRING OF THE OTHER CAME TO THIS ONE.\(^12\)

GEMARA. R. Nahman reported in the name of Rab: The law is in accordance [with the Mishnah]\(^13\) in the whole chapter, except in the case where a difference of opinion is recorded. Said R. Shesheth: I say that Rab declared this tradition when he was half asleep. For to what does [Rab] refer? You can hardly say that he refers to the first part [of the chapter], for are there not differing opinions recorded of R. Ishmael and R. Akiba? Again if he refers [to the teaching of] R. Eliezer b. Jacob [in the preceding Mishnah] — is not the Mishnah of R. Eliezer b. Jacob little in quantity,\(^14\) but well sifted?\(^15\) And if he refers to [the teachings of] R. Simeon b. Gamaliel [in our Mishnah] — are there not differing opinions in the Baraitha?\(^16\) If he refers to [the teachings of] R. Jose b. ha-Meshullam [in a subsequent Mishnah], has not Rab, however, informed us of this once, for Rab said: The law is in accordance With R. Jose b. ha-Meshullam? And if he refers to [the subsequent Mishnah] in connection with the hair of a blemished [firstling], — are there not, however, different opinions recorded of Akabya b. Mahalalel and the Rabbis? — Indeed [Rab refers] to [the teachings of] R. Simeon b. Gamaliel, and this is what he teaches us, that [the difference of opinion] in the Baraitha is not considered a difference of opinion [to be taken into account]. But since Rab said: The law is according [to the Mishnah] in the whole chapter, except where there is a difference of opinion.

(1) Both in the case of a major uncleanness and a minor uncleanness, it makes unclean, until it is no longer suitable for a dog to eat.
(2) And should therefore make the carrier unclean. R. Jeremiah's ruling above is therefore refuted. [Thus R. Johanan is self-contradictory.] Sh. Mek, reads: ‘not fit at all to a stranger’.
(3) Deut. XIV, 21.
(4) Where e.g., the animal broke its ribs when alive and it commenced to decay. Although it is fit for dogs, it does not make the carrier unclean, for it never had this uncleanness. But where it was at first fit for a stranger and it possessed the power of making the carrier unclean, then it retains this uncleanness until it is unfit for a dog to eat.
(5) For if the animal did not discharge and it was slaughtered and a clot of blood was discovered, the clot would have been fit for a stranger along with the flesh, and since in this case it is made fit because of its mother, it is fit even now, when it has been discharged. Consequently. were it not for the fact that it is neutralized by the larger portion, it would have received uncleanness.
(6) Where the larger portion is not water.
(7) Having now received a little water, it becomes unclean and requires contact with mikweh water for purification.
(8) So that when a little more fell into the brine, the parts which were similar, combined, and the water, being more than the brine, therefore received levitical uncleanness.
(9) For only a small quantity of water we say above is neutralized by the larger portion, but not where the amount is a half.
(10) I.e., nearly a half of water the ‘amme ha-arez mix with their brine and this, together with the small quantity of water that fell in, makes up the half. Consequently, the water is not neutralized and it receives uncleanness.
(11) So as to consider the offspring which follows a doubtful firstling, as perhaps the animal had never given birth. And as for its giving milk, it is only a minority of animals which give milk without having given birth previously. We therefore consider the offspring as certainly belonging to the animal and the animal is thus exempted from the law of the firstling.
(12) But we presume that the offspring clinging to the animal belongs to it, and that there has been no mingling.
(13) Whether stated anonymously or as the pronouncement of a certain Tanna, where there is no difference of opinion.
(14) Lit., ‘a kab’, a small measure of capacity.
(15) Then what need is there for Rab's ruling. since in any case the law is in accordance with his views.
(16) V. infra 24a.

Talmud - Mas. Bechoroth 24a

what need is there for the ruling that the law is in accordance with R. Jose b. ha-Meshullam? — If he had said that the law was according [to the Mishnah] in the whole chapter and did not state subsequently that the law was in accordance with R. Jose b. ha-Meshullam. I might have thought that he referred to R. Jose b. ha-Meshullam. and that what [the expression] ‘the whole chapter’ meant was that R. Jose stated two things [in the subsequent Mishnah] and that the difference of opinion in the Baraitha [is considered] a genuine difference of opinion. Therefore Rab informs us that the law is in accordance with R. Jose. so as to intimate to us that [in the other statement] he refers to R. Simeon b. Gamaliel, and thus the difference of opinion in the Baraitha is not considered a difference of opinion [of any importance].

What is the Baraitha [referred to above]? — As it has been taught: If one buys an animal giving suck from a gentile, the young which follows it, is a doubtful firstling, because it can give suck even to one to which it had not given birth. R. Simeon b. Gamaliel however, says: We follow the natural presumption. And so R. Simeon b. Gamaliel used to say: If one goes among his herd at night and sees about ten or fifteen animals, both those which had not borne previously and those which had previously given birth, and, the next day, he rises early and finds the males clinging to the animals that had given birth previously and the females clinging to those which were now giving birth for the first time, he need not fear that perhaps the offspring of one came to the other. It was queried: Was the reason of R. Simeon b. Gamaliel's statement that we follow the natural presumption, because no dam gives suck [to a stranger] unless it has had a child of its own, but where it had given birth before, we do fear lest it gives suck to a stranger. Or perhaps was it that it gives suck to its own but it does not give suck to a stranger? What is the practical difference? To punish with lashes on its account for transgressing the prohibition of killing the mother and its young [on the same day]. If you say that it gives suck to its own but not to a stranger, then there is here a liability of lashes, whereas if you say that it gives suck also to a stranger, then there is no liability of lashes. — Come and hear: R. Simeon b. Gamaliel says: If one buys an animal from a gentle, he need not fear that perhaps it was the offspring of another! — [No]. Does R. Simeon say [that perhaps] it is? He says: [That perhaps] it was. What he means is this: He need not fear that perhaps it was the offspring of another, except when it had previously given birth. Come and hear: If one went among his herd and saw both the animals now bearing for the first time giving suck and those not now bearing for the first time giving suck, he need not fear that perhaps the offspring of this one came to the other or the offspring of the other came to this one. Why is this so? Why not fear lest it gave suck to a stranger? — Where it has its own offspring, it does not leave its own and give suck to a stranger. Come and hear: 'We follow the natural presumption'. And so. Now does not the first part [of the Baraitha above] resemble the second part, so that just as the second part refers to a case where the offspring is certainly its own, so the first part also refers to a case where [the offspring] is certainly its own? — Is this an argument? The first part deals with its own case and the second part deals with its own case. And what does [the Baraitha] mean [by the phrase] ‘and so’? It refers to the exemption from [the law of] the firstling. Rabbah b. Bar Hana reported in the name of R. Johanan: If one saw a swine clinging to a ewe, it is exempted from [the law] of the firstling, and it is forbidden to be eaten Until he come and teach righteousness unto you. [Say] ‘It is exempted from the law of the firstling’. Whose view is followed? The view of R. Simeon b. Gamaliel. [Say] ‘And it is forbidden to be eaten’. Whose view is followed? The view of the Rabbis. And, moreover, if it is according to the Rabbis, why ‘Until he come and teach righteousness to you’? ‘Until it be known to you’ is what is required? And should you say that R. Johanan is in doubt whether the law is in accordance with R. Simeon b. Gamaliel or the Rabbis, if R. Johanan is in doubt then why is it exempt from the law of the firstling? And further, is there a doubt? Did not Rabbah b. Bar Hana report in the name of R. Johanan: Wherever R. Simeon b. Gamaliel expressed a view in the Mishnah, the halachah is in accordance with him, with the exception of his view regarding suretyship. Sidon, and the last [case dealing with] evidence? — One may still say that R. Johanan is in no doubt that the law is in accordance with R. Simeon b. Gamaliel or the Rabbis, if R. Johanan is in doubt then why is it exempt from the law of the firstling? And further, is there a doubt? Did not Rabbah b. Bar Hana report in the name of R. Johanan: Wherever R. Simeon b. Gamaliel expressed a view in the Mishnah, the halachah is in accordance with him, with the exception of his view regarding suretyship. Sidon, and the last [case dealing with] evidence? — One may still say that R. Johanan is in no doubt that the law is in accordance with R. Simeon b. Gamaliel. He is in doubt, however, whether R. Simeon b. Gamaliel holds that an animal which has given birth, gives suck [even to a stranger], or whether it does not give suck [to a stranger]. If so, instead of stating [this ruling] in connection with the case of a swine, why not state it in connection with the case of a lamb, and as regards the punishment with lashes for infringing the prohibition of killing the mother and its young [on the same day]? — He had need to state [this ruling] in connection with the case of a swine. For if he had stated [this ruling] in connection with the case of a lamb, I might have thought that even if you assumed that R. Simeon holds that an animal which gives birth, gives suck [to a stranger], this only applies [to a stranger belonging] to its own species, but not to [an animal] not belonging to its own species. Consequently. R. Johanan states the case of a swine [to inform us that this ruling applies] although it does not belong to the species [of the ewe], for even here one can say that perhaps it gave suck. And this is what R. Johanan meant above.
Implying as it does a number of things.

One thing. that we make a clear space in the neck for the butcher's hatchet in order to kill the firstling, and secondly, that we tear the wool to show the blemish of a firstling.

Which would exclude the ruling of R. Simeon b. Gamaliel.

For it is possible that the animal had never before given birth, and the fact that it gives milk is not a conclusive proof, as there is a minority which gives milk without having yet given birth. It is thus a doubtful firstling.

That the offspring is surely its child and that therefore the succeeding offspring is exempted from the law of the firstling.

Who were born now, clinging to and being given suck by animals which had already been exempted from the law of the firstling. And the females born now, he found clinging to and being given suck by animals that had now given birth for the first time. In these cases, the priest receives nothing, for as we presume that each offspring is near its own mother, the law of the firstling is not here applicable, as the males come from animals already exempted and the females are not subject to the law of the firstling.

So as to impose a restriction and make them questionable firstlings, fearing lest the males belong to the animals which are giving birth for the first time. The reason why R. Simeon the son of Gamaliel speaks of entering at night etc. and does not state simply that if one entered his herd and saw males clinging etc., is in order to inform us of a striking thing, that although their birth certainly took place in the night when the dams did not as yet recognize their offspring and were, therefore, liable to make a mistake, nevertheless we do not fear lest the offspring of the one came to the other.

And R. Simeon refers to an animal which never gave birth previously.

For in either case, if it had given birth previously, whether it is its own offspring or a stranger, it is exempt from the law of the firstling.

That of the offspring which clings to the animal.

As we presume that it is not its own offspring.

But presumes that the offspring belongs to the animal. Consequently we see that in his opinion it does not give suck, except to its own offspring.

In which case we could properly have made this deduction.

And in either case it is exempt from the law of the firstling, for we only entertain a doubt that it might be a stranger if the animal had given birth previously. But in respect of the infringement of the prohibition of killing the animal and its young on the same day, there is a doubt.

Since they all possess offspring. Therefore the reason must surely be that even if it were not now bearing for the first time, it gives suck only to its own, thus solving the above query.

But where it has none of its own offspring, it may give suck even to a stranger, and so the above query remains.

V. supra.

Which says: If one buys an animal which gives suck from a gentile etc.

Viz., And so R. Simeon etc.

That each offspring clinging to the animal belongs to it For you explained above that where it possesses its own offspring, it does not give suck to a stranger.

And therefore with reference to the prohibition of killing the mother and the young on the same day. there is the liability of lashes, for we presume that it is certainly the animal's offspring.

In the second part of the Baraitha it is certainly its offspring, whereas there is a doubt in this respect in the first part.

Since they are not necessarily similar.

In that respect alone the two parts of the Baraitha are alike. For just as in the second part they are certainly exempt from the law of the firstling, as certainly the females cling to those which have now given birth for the first time, for they would not leave their own offspring and give suck to strangers, in the first part of the Baraitha also, they are exempted in the future from the law of the firstling. And in the first part, even if they are not their own offspring, they are exempted, having already given birth, since otherwise they would not have given suck to strangers. But in respect of the prohibition of killing the mother and its young on the same day, there may still be a doubt.

And being given suck by it.

And the succeeding offspring is not a firstling.

The word הָרַע הָרַע is used here in the sense that Elijah will teach. The usual rendering of the word, however, is ‘to cause to rain’.

Hosea X, 12.
(29) Who maintains that the animal only gives suck to its own offspring, and the swine itself is not sanctified, as it is a nidmeh.
(30) Who fear that the animal gives suck to a stranger. For if it were in accordance with the view of R. Simeon, it should be permitted to be eaten, as in the case of an unclean animal which comes from a clean animal. V. supra 5b.
(31) As this is not a question of pronouncing a legal decision but merely of revealing or intimating whether it is its offspring.
(32) And the text ‘Until he comes etc.’ means as follows: Until he comes and teaches whether the law is in accordance with R. Simeon and therefore it may be eaten or according to the Rabbis. It is, consequently, forbidden to be eaten because of the doubt that it perhaps gave suck to a stranger.
(33) B.B. 174a.
(34) Git. 77a.
(35) Sanh. 31a.
(36) That it is certainly exempted from the law of the firstling, for if the offspring were not its own, it would not have given suck unless it had already given birth.
(37) It is therefore exempt from the law of the firstling. For if the offspring belongs to the animal, then it is exempt. and if it is a stranger, then the animal must have already given birth, since it gives suck to strangers. It is also forbidden to be eaten, for the offspring might be a stranger and its own might have died,
(38) And it is therefore permitted to be eaten, for it certainly belongs to the animal to which it clings.
(39) I.e., a swine. And it is permitted to be eaten, for to one not belonging to the ewe species it would not give suck, and since the animal does give suck, it must of a certainty belong to it.

Talmud - Mas. Bechoroth 24b

Aha Beribi asked: How is it if one saw a swine clinging to a ewe? But what exactly does the question refer to? If it has reference to the law of the firstling and the query is whether the law is in accordance with the view of R. Simeon b. Gamaliel or according to the Rabbis, why not put this query with reference to the case of a lamb? — The query refers to the law of the firstling as laid down by the Rabbis and to the rule as to eating, as laid down by R. Simeon b. Gamaliel. The query refers to [the law] of the firstling, [thus]. [Do we say that] even in accordance with the Rabbis, who maintain that it gives suck [to a stranger], this is only the case [with an animal] belonging to its own species, but to one not belonging to its own species, it does not give suck? Or do we perhaps maintain that even [to offspring] that does not belong to its own species, the animal also gives suck? And also in connection with eating, [the query is put forward]: Do we say that even according to R. Simeon b. Gamaliel, granting that he holds that an animal which has begotten gives suck [even to a stranger], this is the case only when the offspring belongs to the same species [as the ewe], but where it does not belong to the same species, it does not [give suck]? Or perhaps even if the offspring does not belong to the species [of the ewe], do we say that it also gives suck [to it]? — Let this remain undecided.

GEMARA. Rab said: The halachah is according to R. Jose b. ha-Meshullam. [The scholars] asked R. Huna: What is the rule about acting similarly on a festival day? Is the reason of R. Jose b. ha-Meshullam because he maintains that tearing is not [considered] the same as shearing and yet on a festival day it is forbidden, for it would be detaching a thing from the place of its growth; or perhaps, does R. Jose b. ha-Meshullam as a rule main tain that tearing is [considered] the same as shearing, but the reason why he permits [in the Mishnah] is because it is a forbidden act which was produced without intent and a forbidden act which was produced without intent is permissible on a festival day? — He replied to them: ‘Go and ask R. Hananel. If he tells you that the halachah is in accordance with R. Jose b. ha-Meshullam, then I shall give you a definite answer’. They went and asked him. He replied to them: ‘Rab said this: The halachah is in accordance with R. Jose b. ha-Meshullam’. Then they came before R. Huna. He said to them: It is permitted to act in a corresponding manner on a festival day. It was also stated: R. Hananya b. Shalmia reported in the name of Rab: It is permitted to act in a corresponding manner on a festival day.

---

1 An eminent and prominent teacher in his generation. The term Beribi is frequently applied to the disciples of R. Judah ha-Nasi and his contemporaries and also to some of his predecessors.
2 Since it is in connection with this case that they differ.
3 For according to R. Simeon it is certainly exempted, for if it does not give suck to its own species unless it had already begotten, how much less is this the case where it does not belong to the species of animal to which it clings.
4 And certainly according to the Rabbis.
5 And the offspring in this case surely belongs to the ewe, and therefore the future offspring is exempted from the law of the firstling.
6 But if he held that an animal which already had given birth does not give suck to strangers, then in the case here, the offspring is certainly permitted to be eaten, for it is its child.
7 Hence in this case, the swine must be its offspring and permissible to be eaten, as it gives suck to it.
8 Since it had given suck previously. Consequently, the swine is forbidden to be eaten in case it is a stranger.
9 Clearing the hair in the place where the animal is to be slaughtered. The Mishnah mentions a butcher's hatchet and not an ordinary slaughtering knife, because in the former case there is more need to make a place and a larger one, than in the case of a slaughtering knife. The same applies to the slaughtering of dedicated animals, but as these are slaughtered in the Temple court where there are special knives, there is no need to clear a place when slaughtering. Moreover the Mishnah mentions here the case of a firstling because the law of the firstling is observed even in our days and also because a firstling's wool is probably thicker than that of an ordinary sacrifice, since the owner must wait until it is blemished before he slaughters it (Tosaf).
10 In the place where the cut is to be made, in order to avoid haladah (passing the knife under cover) which would render the animal nebelah (Rashi).
11 That it should not be said that he is shearing a firstling's wool, an action which is forbidden. Therefore he leaves the animal with its wool on both sides (Rashi).
12 The query is whether it is allowed to tear the hair on both sides in order to clear a place for the cut, in the case of an unconsecrated animal.
13 And in connection with a firstling. Scripture expresses only prohibited shearing.
14 And the Mishnah means by the expression ‘tearing etc.’ to pull the hair on both sides so as to clear a place but not with the intention of tearing or plucking, and that should this happen, there would be no infringement of the law.
15 A disciple of Rab.
16 The reason being because there was no intention of committing a breach of the law.

Talmud - Mas. Bechoroth 25a

But did Rab say this? Did not R. Hiyya b. Ashi say in the name of Rab: The stopper of the brewery boiler must not be squeezed in on a festival day? — In that case even R. Simeon would agree. For Abaye and Raba both said: R. Simeon admits where it is a case of ‘let his head be cut off, but let him not die’, that it is forbidden. But did not R. Hiyya b. Ashi report in the name of Rab: The halachah is in accordance with R. Judah, and R. Hanan b. Ami reported in the name of Samuel: The halachah is in accordance with R. Simeon, and R. Hiyya b. Abin taught without naming the authority as follows: Rab says: The halachah is in accordance with R. Judah, whereas Samuel says: The halachah is in accordance with R. Simeon? — Indeed Rab holds that a forbidden act which was produced without intent is prohibited [on a festival day] and that tearing is not [considered] the same as shearing, and the reason why it is permitted on a festival day is because it is detaching a thing from its place of growth in an unusual manner. But is not tearing [considered] the same as shearing? Has it not been taught: If one plucks a large feather from the wing [of a bird] and cuts off [its head], and smooths\(^8\) it, he is obliged to bring three sin-offerings.\(^9\) And Resh Lakish explained: He is guilty for the act of plucking it, because it comes under the category of shearing; he is guilty for the act of cutting, because it comes under the category of severing; and he is guilty for the act of smoothing, because it comes under the category of scraping?\(^{10}\) — [Plucking] a wing is different, for that is the usual thing.\(^{11}\) Now since Rab holds in accordance with R. Jose b. ha-Meshullam, then R. Jose b. ha-Meshullam holds in accordance with Rab.\(^{12}\) But does R. Jose b. ha-Meshullam hold that a forbidden act [which was produced] without intent is forbidden? Has it not been taught: If two hairs [of a Red Heifer] are red at the roots but black at the top. R. Jose b. ha-Meshullam says: He may shear with scissors without fear?\(^{13}\) — The case of a Red Heifer is different, for it does not belong to a class [of animals] that are sheared.\(^{14}\) But has it not been taught: [Scripture says]: Thou shalt do no work with the firstling of thine ox nor shear the firstling of thy flock.\(^{15}\) From this I can gather only that working an ox and shearing sheep are forbidden. Whence will you deduce that the expression used in connection with an ox applies equally to sheep and the expression used in connection with sheep applies equally to an ox? The text states: Thou shalt not work nor shear the firstling of thy flock\(^{16}\) — Rather [say] the case of a Red Heifer is different, for it is an offering for the Temple repair.\(^{17}\) But has not R. Elyiezer said: Offerings for Temple repair are forbidden in respect of shearing and work? — It is a Rabbinic enactment. But is there not still a Rabbinic prohibition?\(^{18}\) — The case of a Red Heifer is different, as it is a rare occurrence.\(^{19}\) But why not redeem the Red Heifer, bring it to a state of hullin [in order] to shear it and then again consecrate it?\(^{20}\) — Its price is high.\(^{21}\) But why not act here as Samuel taught. for Samuel said: A dedicated object worth a maneh\(^{22}\) which has been redeemed for the value of a perutah\(^{23}\) is considered redeemed? — Samuel's teaching refers only to a case where it has been done, but does he teach that it is directly permissible! If you wish I may say: Rab holds with R. Jose b. ha-Meshullam but R. Jose b. ha-Meshullam does not hold with Rab [that unintentional results caused by forbidden acts are prohibited].

AND TEARS THE HAIR PROVIDED HOWEVER HE DOES NOT REMOVE THE WOOL FROM ITS PLACE. R. Ashi reported in the name of Resh Lakish: They have taught this only with regard to tearing with the hand but with an instrument it is forbidden. But does not [the Mishnah] state: HE MAKES A PLACE WITH\(^{24}\) A BUTCHER'S HATCHET ON BOTH SIDES? — Read: FOR\(^{25}\) THE BUTCHER'S HATCHET. AND SIMILARLY IF ONE TEARS THE HAIR TO SHOW THE PLACE OF THE BLEMISH. It was queried: Does it mean that this is directly permitted\(^{26}\) or only condoned if it had been done?\(^{27}\) — Said R. Jeremiah. Come and hear: If wool is entangled in the ear,\(^{28}\) R. Jose b. ha-Meshullam says: He tears it and shows its blemish. Deduce from here therefore that it means a direct permission. This stands proved. Said R. Mari: We have also learnt: AND SIMILARLY IF ONE TEARS THE HAIR TO SHOW THE PLACE OF THE BLEMISH. What does the expression AND SIMILARLY indicate? If it is to tell us that he must not remove it from its place, since if he slaughters, where the slaughtering proves his intention,\(^{29}\) [you still say] that he must not remove its wool, can there be any question as regards showing the place of the blemish? Must you not therefore admit that it\(^{30}\) refers to the ‘tearing’.\(^{31}\) Deduce from this therefore that it is directly permissible. It stands proved.

MISHNAH. IF [A PORTION OF] THE HAIR OF A BLEMISHED FIRSTLING WAS TORN AWAY AND HE PLACED IT IN THE WINDOW,\(^{32}\) AND SUBSEQUENTLY SLAUGHTERED THE ANIMAL. AKABYA B. MAHALALEL ALLOWS\(^{33}\) IT

---

(1) Made of soft material, as rag.
(2) For fear of breaking the law against squeezing and wringing on a Holy Day, v. Keth. 6a.
(3) A dialectic term denoting the unavoidable result of an act. And here, since he closes the boiler with the stopper, it is inevitable that there should be squeezing and therefore even R. Simeon, who elsewhere holds that an unintentioned forbidden act is not prohibited, admits in such an Instance that it is prohibited.
(4) Who prohibits an unintentional act.
(5) Of. R. Hiyya or Hanan.
(6) And therefore Rab declared that the ruling was according to R. Jose b. ha-Meshullam in connection with a firstling.
(7) For it is not usual to tear or pluck wool, except to shear it.
(8) Tearing the hair from the windpipe and smoothing it away from the sides.
(9) V. Shab. 74b.
(10) We see, therefore, that plucking or tearing is considered the same as shearing.
(11) Whereas it is not a usual thing to shear it, and consequently plucking is considered the same as shearing. But plucking or tearing wool is not a usual thing and therefore it is not considered the same as shearing.
(12) That a forbidden act which was produced unintentionally, is forbidden.
(13) That he is shearing dedicated animals, even if he shears other hairs as well. (Tosef. Parah I). Consequently, where he does not intend to shear but merely to trim, it is permissible. for the unintentional results of an act are permitted. This remedy is only possible in this instance, but where the two hairs are wholly black, the Red Heifer is disqualified. Another version (Tosaf.) is: The roots are black and the heads are red and it teaches us that although the outside is all red yet it requires trimming.
(14) For cows have no wool and consequently shearing is not prohibited. But one can still maintain that a forbidden act produced without intent is forbidden.
(15) Deut. XV, 19.
(16) OF these the conjunction \( \text{נָּלַח} \) intimating that the prohibition of working and shearing refer to both the ox and the flock.
(17) And not for the altar and therefore shearing is permissible.
(18) Why therefore does the Baraitha state above that he need not fear?
(19) And for cases which occurred rarely the Rabbis did not enact their prohibitions.
(20) Why, therefore, shear the Red Heifer in its consecrated state?
(21) And it is therefore not easy to find the money with which to redeem it.
(22) A certain weight of gold and silver.
(23) A small coin.
(24) \( \text{הָפְקִית} \).
(25) \( \text{הָפְקִית} \).
(26) The expression AND SIMILARLY will then refer to the passage stating that it is permissible to tear on both sides for slaughtering and that just as it is allowed to do this, so there is a direct permission to tear the hair in order to show the blemish to the Sage, so that he may pronounce on the nature of the defect of the firstling.
(27) And the expression AND SIMILARLY refers therefore to the passage in the Mishnah stating that the wool must not be removed and that just as in the case of slaughtering the wool must not be removed, so when the blemish is shown to a Sage, the same rule applies. But this does not imply direct permission to tear the hair of the firstling to show its blemish.
(28) There being a blemish in that part of the body.
(29) That he does not do this for the sake of the wool, and still you say that it must not be removed. It should certainly therefore be so in the case where he tears the hair to show the blemish, since there is nothing to prove his intention, for the blemish is not visible to everybody.
(30) The expression AND SIMILARLY.
(31) That it is permissible in the first instance, even as it is in the first clause in our Mishnah.
(32) As the hair i.e., the wool, is forbidden to be used while the animal is alive, because it is the wool of an animal disqualified for the altar.
(33) The use of the wool by the priest, for just as the killing renders permissible the flesh, skin and the wool attached to the animal, so the part that becomes detached is also allowed to be used.

Talmud - Mas. Bechoroth 25b

WHEREAS THE SAGES DECLARE IT FORBIDDEN.\(^1\) THESE ARE THE WORDS OF R. JUDAH. R. JOSE SAID TO HIM: AKABYA B. MAHALALEL DID NOT ALLOW IN THIS CASE,\(^2\) BUT IT IS IN THE CASE WHERE THE HAIR OF A BLEMISHED FIRSTLING WHICH WAS TORN AWAY AND HE PLACED IT IN THE WINDOW, AND THE ANIMAL DIED SUBSEQUENTLY,\(^3\) THAT AKABYA B. MAHALALEL ALLOWS, WHEREAS THE SAGES DECLARE IT FORBIDDEN. WHERE THE WOOL OF A FIRSTLING IS LOOSELY CONNECTED [WITH THE SKIN], WITH [THE REST OF] THE WOOL IS PERMITTED, WHEREAS THAT WHICH DOES NOT APPEAR [ON A LEVEL] WITH [THE REST OF] THE WOOL IS FORBIDDEN.

GEMARA. [AKABYA B. MAHALALEL DID NOT ALLOW IN THIS CASE]. Is it to be deduced then that the wool is forbidden? If in the case of a dead [firstling] [the wool torn away] is allowed [to be used], is there any question that in the case where it is slaughtered, [the wool torn away is allowed]? What is meant then is: Not in this case does Akabya allow and the Sages declare it forbidden, but where he slaughtered it, all unanimously allow [the use of the wool]. They only differ in connection with the case of a dead [firstling].

R. Assi reported in the name of Resh Lakish: The difference of opinion relates to a case where the expert had permitted the firstling, one authority maintaining that we enact a prohibition as a precaution lest he should come to detain it, while the other authority maintains that we do not enact such a prohibition; but where the expert had not yet permitted it, all unanimously hold [that the wool] is forbidden.

R. Shesheth raised an objection: Blemished sacrifices [which became mixed up] with other sacrifices are forbidden whatever they may be; R. Jose however says: The case must be examined. And we raised the point: What does R. Jose mean by the statement ‘It must be examined’? You can hardly say that it refers to the blemished animal which is then to be taken away; for we should then infer that the first Tanna quoted above does not hold this? And R. Nahman answered in the name of Rabah b. Abbuh: We are dealing here with the wool of a blemished firstling [torn away while alive], which became mixed up with the wool of hullin? And who is the first Tanna quoted above? R. Judah [in our Mishnah] who said that where he slaughtered it the Rabbis declared it forbidden, whereas R. Jose adheres to his own view that if he slaughtered it the Rabbis allowed. And it states: ‘It shall be examined’. Now what does this expression ‘It shall be examined’ mean? Does it not mean that the examination is by the expert to see whether it possesses a permanent blemish [and then killing it, will make everything permissible to be used] or a transitory blemish?

— Said Raba: No. The expression ‘It shall be examined’ means that an examination is made if the expert had permitted [the firstling] before the wool was torn away; in that case [the wool] is allowed, but if not, then it is not [allowed].

When Rabin went up [from Babylonia to Palestine], he reported the dictum of R. Nahman before R. Jeremiah. The latter said: ‘The foolish Babylonians because they dwell in a dark country report an obscure tradition. Have they not heard what R. Hiyya b. Abba reported in the name of R. Johanan: The difference of opinion relates to a case where he searched and did not find the blemished animal, and they differ on the principle on which R. Meir and the Rabbis differ? For we have learnt, R. Meir used to say: Everything which has a presumption of levitical uncleanness continues for ever in that status until the uncleanness is revealed, whereas the Sages say: He digs until he reaches a rock or unbroken ground, [after which there is no further uncleanness]. But R. Assi says: The difference of opinion relates to a case where he searched and found [a blemished animal], and they differ on the principle on which Rabbi and R. Simeon b. Gamaliel differ. For it has been taught: If one enters a field in which a grave was lost he becomes unclean. If a grave is found therein, he is clean, for I maintain that the grave found is the identical one which was lost. These are the words of Rabbi, whereas R. Simeon b. Gamaliel says: The entire field must be searched. Why does not R. Assi concur with [the interpretation of] R. Hiyya b. Abba? — He can reply [as follows]: This would indeed hold good with regard to levitical uncleanness, for one can say that a raven or a mouse came and took it. But in the case of a blemished animal, where could it have gone? And the other authority [R. Hiyya]? — He will reply: One can say that it was a transitory blemish. And R. Hiyya b. Abba — what is his reason for not accepting the explanation of R. Assi? — He can answer to you [in this manner]: This indeed holds good with regard to a field in which a grave was lost, for just as it is possible for this man to bury there, so it is for another. But in the case of dedicated animals, once they have been examined, is it a usual thing that a blemish should occur in them? And the other [authority]? — [He answers]: Since animals attack each other, blemishes frequently occur even after an examination.

An objection was raised: If one plucks wool from an unblemished firstling, although there appeared on it subsequently a blemish and he slaughtered it, [the wool] is forbidden to be used. Now, the reason why [the wool] is forbidden is because the animal was unblemished

(1) For if you permit the use of wool plucked when the animal is alive, one may be led to detain the firstling in order to benefit from its wool, and this may eventually bring about a breaking of the law with reference to working and shearing.
(2) The Gemara later on explains this.
(3) But not slaughtered.
(4) I.e., it is entangled with the remaining wool and has not fallen.
(5) When it is slaughtered and sheared, it does not seem to be removed very much from the other wool.
(6) Where it is separated from the remainder of the wool in a marked degree. It is therefore considered as if it became detached while the animal was alive.
(7) Where the wool attached to it is forbidden to be used, as it requires burial.
(8) I.e., in this case there is no dispute.
(9) Before the wool was torn away.
(10) So that he can avail himself of its wool from time to time and in so doing he may come to break the law regarding working and shearing it.
(11) The expert having permitted its slaughter, we hold that he will not keep the animal.
(12) For it is like an unblemished firstling, and in such a case even Akabya agrees. For if the wool is allowed to be used, he will keep the animal until a blemish appears on it, thus preventing its sacrifice on the altar.
(13) No matter how few in number, so that even if one blemished animal became mixed up with a thousand. all are rendered unfit for sacrificial purposes.
(14) Surely not! For if the blemished animal can be recognized, what further doubt can there be?
(15) Unconsecrated animals, and we are not dealing here at all, with living animals.
(16) And there is no remedy in slaughtering it.
(17) According to R. Jose slaughtering the animal makes the wool permissible to be used even according to the Rabbis. Therefore, just as according to R. Jose, the Rabbis allow the use of the wool when the animal is slaughtered, whether the expert had permitted the firstling or not, for R. Jose says that the animal has yet to be examined, similarly Akabya with regard to a dead firstling makes no distinction whether the expert had permitted it or not, for Akabya makes no distinction between a case of slaughtering it and that of a dead firstling. Hence we see that even without the expert permitting the firstling, there is yet a difference of opinion. The text adopted is that of Sh. Mek. Cur. edd. read: the examination is whether it possesses a permanent blemish or a transitory blemish, though the expert did not permit it.
(18) The first Tanna quoted above and R. Jose differing in regard to living blemished sacrifices that became mixed up with others.
(19) If the lost grave is not found, though the whole field had been searched, similarly here, if the blemished animal cannot be identified, according to the first Tanna, all the animals are forbidden.
(20) For we fear, according to the first Tanna quoted above, lest the blemished animal found was really another, and, therefore, all the animals require examination, whereas R. Jose maintains that making a search is adequate and, having discovered a blemished animal, we presume that it is the one which became mixed up with the rest.
(21) The Rabbis maintaining the he digs until he reaches a rock etc. and this is sufficient, for although he does not find it, one may say that it was removed.
(22) Therefore R. Jose might not permit here, as the blemished animal is undoubtedly among them.
(23) And it healed up, and therefore he was not able to trace the blemished sacrifice.
(24) R. Simeon maintaining that a search should be made of the entire field.
(25) Where a blemished animal sacrifice became mixed up with others and it was found.
(26) And in such circumstances, the first Tanna mentioned above would not have prohibited.
but if it were blemished [the wool] would have been allowed\(^1\) [to be used], although the expert did not permit the firstling?\(^2\) — [Explain this as follows]: As long as the expert has not permitted it, the Tanna [in the Baraitha] describes it as an unblemished [firstling].\(^3\)

Must it be said that this\(^4\) is a difference of opinion among Tanna'im? If one plucks wool from an unblemished firstling, although subsequently there appeared a blemish on it and he slaughtered it, the wool is forbidden [to be used].\(^5\) If, however, wool was plucked from a blemished firstling and it died subsequently. Akabya b. Mahalalel allows, whereas the Sages declare it forbidden. Said R. Judah: Akabya b. Mahalalel does not permit in this case,\(^6\) but in the case where the hair of a blemished firstling became torn away and he placed it in the window, subsequently slaughtering it, Akabya b. Mahalalel allows whereas the Sages declare it forbidden. Said R. Jose: Abba Halafta\(^7\) agrees in this case\(^8\) that it is allowed. Indeed the Sages clearly said: He shall place it in the window, as perhaps there is hope [of being able to use it].\(^9\) If he slaughtered it, all unanimously agree that it is allowed. If [the firstling] died, Akabya b. Mahalalel allows [the use of the wool], whereas the Sages declare it forbidden. Now, is not the view of R. Jose identical with that of the first Tanna [quoted above]?\(^10\) Then must you not therefore admit that the difference is in respect of a case where the expert had permitted it, the first Tanna [quoted above] holding that if the expert permitted the firstling, [the wool] is allowed [to be used], but if not, it is not allowed,\(^11\) while R. Jose comes along and says that even though the expert had not permitted the firstling, [it is still allowed]?\(^12\) — Said Raba: No. All agree that if the expert had permitted [the animal, the wool] is allowed [to be used], and if the expert had not permitted it, it is not allowed to be used. There are however three differences of opinion in the matter. For the first Tanna [quoted above] holds that the difference of opinion between Akabya and the Sages refers to a dead firstling and the same applies in the case where he slaughtered it,\(^13\) and the reason why they differ in connection with a dead [firstling] is to show to what lengths Akabya is prepared to go. And R. Judah holds that in connection with a dead [firstling] all [the authorities concerned] prohibit, and that the difference of opinion is where he slaughtered it. Then R. Jose comes along and says: Where he slaughtered it, all agree that it is allowed but the difference of opinion is where the [firstling] died.

Said R. Nahman: The law is in accordance with R. Judah\(^14\) since we have learnt [in a Mishnah of] Bekirta\(^15\) in agreement with his view. For we have learnt: If the hair of a blemished firstling became torn away and he placed it in a window, subsequently slaughtering it, Akabya b. Mahalalel allows, whereas the Sages declare it forbidden. R. Nahman b. Isaac said: The [language of the] Mishnah also indicates this: IF WOOL OF A FIRSTLING IS LOOSELY CONNECTED [WITH THE SKIN], THAT WHICH APPEARS [ON A LEVEL] WITH [THE REST OF] THE WOOL IS ALLOWED. WHEREAS THAT WHICH DOES NOT APPEAR [ON A LEVEL] WITH [THE REST OF] THE WOOL IS FORBIDDEN. Whose opinion is this? Shall I say that it is R. Jose's? If so, in what circumstance is this the case? You can hardly say where he slaughtered [the firstling], for both Akabya and the Rabbis in both instances\(^16\) indeed allow. Does then this perhaps refer to the case of a dead [firstling]? But if the Mishnah gives the opinion of the Rabbis, then in both instances they indeed forbid\(^17\) and if it is Akabya's opinion, then the passage ought to be reversed as follows: If it appeared on a level with [the rest of] the wool, then it is forbidden, for death renders it prohibited, whereas if it did not appear on a level with [the rest of] the wool, then it is allowed,\(^18\) having been torn away previously! It is evident therefore that the Mishnah represents R. Judah's view. In what circumstances? You can hardly say in a case where [the firstling] died, for both Akabya and the Rabbis, in both instances, prohibit. What is meant then is, in a case where he slaughtered it, and if [the Mishnah represents] Akabya's view, in both instances he indeed allows. Must you not then admit that the Mishnah is the view of the Rabbis\(^19\) and deduce from this that the point at issue is where he slaughtered it? This stands proved. R. Jannai asked: How is it if one plucks wool from an unblemished burnt-offering? [But if one actually] plucks, is there any authority who allows? — Rather [the question is regarding] wool which became detached from an unblemished burnt-offering; what is the ruling? Concerning a sin-offering or trespass-offering, there is no need to ask, for since they come to atone, he would not detain them. And as regards a tithing animal, too, [there is no need to ask for], since it does not come to atone, he might detain it. The question does arise, however, concerning a burnt-offering. What is the ruling?

(1) And the Baraitha follows R. Jose who says that when he slaughtered it, the Rabbis allowed the use of the wool, or it follows Akabya in accordance with R. Judah's interpretation of the Mishnah, and even though the expert did not permit the firstling before the wool was plucked. Hence there is a difficulty here with reference to the ruling of Resh Lakish!

(2) Previously, but only after the wool had been plucked.

(3) Although it is in reality blemished, and the expression in the Baraitha 'although subsequently a blemish appeared on it' means after the expert had examined the blemish and pronounced it to be of a permanent character.

(4) The ruling of Resh Lakish.

(5) For in that case, even Akabya agrees that the wool is forbidden to be used, for we apprehend that he may be led to detain the firstling and prevent it from being offered up on the altar. The same ruling also applies to wool which has become detached from the animal.

(6) Where the firstling died.

(7) One of the Sages who dispute with Akabya.

(8) Where he slaughtered it.

(9) If he should slaughter it as it is stated in the next passage.

(10) From the first Tanna mentioned above we deduce that if he slaughtered a blemished firstling the wool is allowed to be used according to all the authorities concerned, and the difference of opinion relates to where the firstling dies. And R. Jose also declares that the point at issue is where the animal dies.

(11) As this Baraitha above was explained on the view of Resh Lakish as meaning that the expression 'unblemished firstling' meant a blemished firstling which had not yet been shown to the expert, and therefore the wool is forbidden according to all the authorities concerned, but if the expert had permitted the animal, then the wool torn previously is allowed to be used.

(12) For since R. Jose says that there is a hope in slaughtering it, this implies that the expert had not yet examined the animal. We see, therefore, that on the ruling of Resh Lakish there is a difference of opinion among Tannaim.

(13) Since we do not find it stated by the first Tanna quoted above, that where he slaughtered it all maintain that the wool is allowed to be used.

(14) That Akabya only allows the wool to be used where he slaughtered the firstling and that the difference of opinion does not refer to a dead firstling.

(15) That Akabya only allows the wool to be used where he slaughtered the firstling and that the difference of opinion does not refer to a dead firstling.

(16) Both where it is on a level with the rest of the wool and where it is not.

(17) For that which is attached to the dead animal requires burial according to all, and of that which is detached the Rabbis prohibit the use, even to place it in the window.

(18) For the wool of the dead firstling which is allowed is that which has fallen off before it died but not that which is plucked after its death.

(19) Who hold that the wool torn away before the slaughtering is forbidden to be used but after the slaughtering it is allowed, and the interpretation of the Mishnah which says: THAT WHICH APPEARS ON A LEVEL WITH etc., is that the wool which is attached to the skin, i.e., which remains after the killing, is allowed to be used, but 'that which is not on a level etc., i.e., that which has been detached previously. is forbidden.

(20) Since you cannot explain the Baraitha in any other way. And as R. Judah's view is stated anonymously in the Mishnah, therefore the law is in agreement with his interpretation, that the point at issue between Akabya and the Sages is where he slaughtered the firstling.

(21) When alive and it became blemished and was redeemed. What is the ruling according to the Rabbis? The inquiry does not concern a blemished burnt-offering, for since it requires an expert to examine it, there is a fear if the wool may be used, he may, in order to benefit from the wool, postpone the examination and thus possibly come to infringe the prohibitions of working and shearing a disqualified sacrifice.
According to the view of the Rabbis who declare it is forbidden, he is certainly a transgressor. Tosaf. adds that since we are dealing here with an unblemished animal, even Akabya would consider it wrong in accordance with the Baraita above.

And therefore there is no question but that the wool is forbidden.

Talmud - Mas. Bechoroth 26b

Since it is essentially not brought to atone, he might detain it, or since a burnt-offering also atones for a transgression of a positive precept. [do we say that] he would not detain it? — Come and hear: If one plucks wool from an unblemished firstling, although a blemish appeared on it subsequently and he slaughtered it, the wool is forbidden to be used. Now, the reason is because he actually plucks it, but if it became detached, it would be allowed; how much more so, therefore, in the case of a burnt-offering, [is it to be expected] that he would not detain it! — [No]. The same ruling applies if it became detached from an unblemished animal, that it is forbidden, and the reason, why [the Baraita states] ‘If one plucks’, is to show the length to which Akabya is prepared to go, that in the case of a blemished sacrifice, one is evenly allowed to pluck it. But have we not learnt: WHICH BECAME TORN AWAY’? — It says WHICH BECAME TORN AWAY, to show to what lengths the Rabbis are prepared to go [and] it says ‘If one plucks’, to show the lengths to which Akabya is prepared to go.

WOOL OF A FIRSTLING LOOSELY CONNECTED etc. How is the expression ‘THAT WHICH DOES NOT APPEAR WITH THE WOOL to he understood?R. Eleazar reported in the name of Resh Lakish: Wherever the root [of the wool] is turned towards its head. R. Nathan b. Oshaia says: Wherever it is not attached [to the skin] on a line with [the rest of] the wool. Why does not Resh Lakish give the explanation of R. Nathan b. Oshaia? — Said R. Ela: Resh Lakish holds [that the reason is] because it is impossible for wool to be free from loosely connected threads.

CHAPTER IV

MISHNAH. UP TO HOW LONG IS AN ISRAELITE BOUND TO ATTEND TO A FIRSTLING? — IN THE CASE OF SMALL CATTLE, UNTIL THIRTY DAYS, WITH LARGE CATTLE, [THE PERIOD] IS FIFTY DAYS. R. JOSE SAYS: IN THE CASE OF SMALL CATTLE [THE PERIOD] IS THREE MONTHS. IF THE PRIEST SAYS [TO THE ISRAELITE] DURING THIS PERIOD ‘GIVE IT TO ME’, HE MUST NOT GIVE IT TO HIM. BUT IF THE FIRSTLING WAS BLEMISHED AND THE PRIEST SAID TO HIM ‘GIVE IT TO ME SO THAT I MAY EAT IT’, THEN IT IS ALLOWED. AND IN TEMPLE TIMES, IF [THE FIRSTLING] WAS IN AN UNBLEMISHED STATE AND THE PRIEST SAID TO HIM ‘GIVE, AND I WILL OFFER IT UP IT WAS ALLOWED. A FIRSTLING IS EATEN YEAR BY YEAR BOTH IN AN UNBLEMISHED AS WELL AS IN A BLEMISHED STATE, FOR IT IS SAID: THOU SHALT EAT IT BEFORE THE LORD THY GOD YEAR BY YEAR. IF A BLEMISH APPEARED ON IT IN ITS FIRST YEAR, HE IS PERMITTED TO KEEP IT ALL THE TWELVE MONTHS, AFTER THE TWELVE MONTHS, HOWEVER, HE IS NOT PERMITTED TO KEEP IT EXCEPT FOR THIRTY DAYS.

GEMARA. Whence is this proved? — Said R. Kahana: Scripture says: The first-born of thy sons thou shalt give unto Me. Likewise shalt thou do] with thy sheep. Thou shalt not delay to offer of the fullness of thy harvest and of the outflow of thy presses. Likewise thou shalt do with thine oxen. And why not reverse this? — It is reasonable to assume that the part which comes first in the first text forms an analogy with that which comes first in the subsequent verse and that which comes later in the first text forms an analogy with that which comes later in the subsequent text. On the contrary, the text that is near to it should rather form an analogy with the text near to it? — Rather said Raba: The text says: ‘Thou shalt do’. Scripture adds [the duty of] another doing [i.e.,... attention] in connection with ‘Thine oxen’. Then why not say sixty days? Scripture refers you to the Sages [for the precise interpretation]. It has also been taught to this effect: Scripture says: ‘The firstborn of thy sons thou shalt give unto Me. Likewise thou shalt do with thy sheep’. I might [conclude from the Biblical text] that it applies also to ‘Thine oxen’? The text therefore states ‘Thou shalt do’, the text adds [the duty of] another doing [i.e., attention] in connection with an ox and Scripture refers you to the Sages [for the precise interpretation]. Hence [the Sages] said: Up to how long is the Israelite bound to attend to the firstling? In the case of small cattle, until thirty days and in the case of large cattle, fifty days. R. Jose Says: In the case of small cattle, [the period] is three months, because it requires extra attention. What does the expression ‘Because it requires extra attention’ mean? — A Tanna taught: Because its teeth are small.

IF THE PRIEST SAID TO HIM DURING THIS PERIOD: GIVE IT TO ME’, HE MUST NOT GIVE IT TO HIM. What is the reason? — Said R. Shesheth: Because it makes him appear like a priest who helps in the threshing floors.

Our Rabbis taught: If Priests, Levites and poor help in the house of the shepherds in the threshing floors, and in the slaughtering place, we do not give them the priests’ gifts, or tithes in reward; and if they acted thus, they render them hullin. And concerning these, Scripture says: Ye have corrupted the covenant of Levi. And Scripture further says: And ye shall not profane the holy things of the children of Israel, that ye die not. What need is there for a further text? — You might think that there is no death guilt. Come therefore and hear: There is a further text, ‘And ye shall not profane the holy things of the children of Israel that ye die not’. And the Sages wished to punish the owners by making them separate terumah [a second time] from their own. And what was the reason why they did not punish them? Lest [the owners] come to separate from what is exempt [from terumah] for what is subject [to terumah].

And in all these cases [mentioned above] the owners enjoy

(1) That its wool should be allowed to be used.
(2) That they forbid even if the wool became detached, but in reality according to Akabya, one may actually pluck the wool of a blemished firstling.
(3) The wool being folded up in the centre so that the two tops of the wool appear outside.
(4) Where some of it appears to be higher than the rest.
(5) The query is not raised why R. Nathan does not explain in the same way as Resh Lakish, because R. Nathan is more stringent in this connection than Resh Lakish.
(6) For it is a usual thing, and, consequently, if we adopted R. Nathan's interpretation, there would scarcely be any wool that would be allowed to be used in such circumstances.
(7) In our days, after the destruction of the Temple, for what length of time must the Israelite care for and feed the animal perforce the priest claims it?
(8) For whereas in the previous case where the priest asks for the unblemished firstling it is forbidden because it appears as if the priest receives the animal in exchange for looking after it until it becomes blemished, in this instance as the animal can be eaten immediately and there is no necessity for the priest to detain it, it is not so.
(9) In Temple times.
(10) In our days.
(12) From its birth.
(13) That the Israelite is bound to care for the firstling for a period of thirty days.
(14) And next to this verse, in Ex. XXII is the verse ‘Likewise . . . with thy sheep’ and we interpret the juxtaposition in the following manner: Just as in the case of a first-born son, redemption is necessary after thirty days, similarly in the case of a firstling of small cattle, the Israelite must keep the animal for thirty days.
(15) And next to this verse is another ‘Likewise . . . with thine oxen’. Here also we make a comparison as follows. Just as the fulness of thy harvest, i.e., the first-fruits, ripen on Passover and are brought to the Temple on Pentecost fifty days later, similarly the firstling of oxen, i.e., large cattle, must be looked after for a period of fifty days.

(16) I.e., draw the analogy between the text ‘The first-born of thy sons etc.’, and the text ‘Likewise shalt thou do with thy oxen’, and thus the firstling of large cattle will require only thirty days to be looked after.

(17) ‘Thou shalt not delay to offer of the fullness of thy harvest’.

(18) ‘Likewise shalt thou do with thy oxen’.

(19) ‘The first-born of thy sons’ we link up with the text ‘Likewise thou shalt do with thy sheep’.

(20) The text ‘The first-born of thy sons’ should form a comparison with the text ‘Likewise thou shalt do with thy oxen’ and thus large cattle would have a period of thirty days.

(21) The superfluous text ‘Thou shalt do’ denotes that in the case of an ox and large cattle in general, a longer period of doing for the animal is demanded than is the case with sheep.

(22) Since the text increases the period in connection with large cattle, why not say that the addition consists of double that of the period of a first-born’s redemption?

(23) Scripture does not state sixty days, but the Sages explain that fifty days are required, basing this on a comparison between the text ‘The fullness of thy harvest’ and the verse ‘Likewise thou shalt do with thy oxen’.

(24) This passage is inserted with Sh. Mek.

(25) And it is unable to eat grass and without its mother's care it dies. But after three months it is able to eat without its mother's help.

(26) For in our days a firstling is of no use until a blemish befalls it. As, therefore, the Israelite has to take trouble with the animal for fifty days, if the priest asks him to deliver the firstling to him during this period to look after, he thus saves the Israelite expense and labour, in consideration for which he takes possession of the firstling and thereby prevents any other priest claiming it. He thus seems to be on a par with a priest who helps with the threshing in order that he may receive the priestly dues for his services, which is forbidden. If, however, the firstling was blemished and the priest asked him for it so that he might eat it, this would be permissible.

(27) This applies only to the priest, who can receive the firstling.

(28) This applies to all the classes mentioned here, to the priests for terumah, to the Levites who receive the first tithes, and to the poor who are the recipients of the poor men's tithing every third year.

(29) Referring again to the priests who receive the gifts of the shoulder, the jaws and the maw.

(30) V. Marginal Gloss.

(31) The dues of the priests.

(32) The priestly and levitical dues become secularized, the owners having acted improperly and not having discharged their obligations.

(33) Mal. II, 8.

(34) Num. XVIII, 32. As applied to the case in question, the expression ‘death’ means that the owner is in danger of committing a sin which involves the penalty of death, not that he is actually guilty of such a sin.

(35) In a case, for example, where there are two se'ahs, one from which terumah has been separated while the terumah from the other was given to a priest who helped in the threshing. Now, if you say that the owner is compelled to give terumah a second time, then he may think that the second se'ah is regarded as if terumah had not been given from it at all, and he may separate this for the other. This would be separating from what is exempt etc., for the second se'ah is biblically exempt from terumah.

Talmud - Mas. Bechoroth 27a

the benefit for putting a person under an obligation.¹ In what way? — If an Israelite separated terumah from his pile and another Israelite found him and said to him: ‘Here is a sela’ for you and give it to the son of my daughter, a priest’, it is permitted. If, however, a priest [approached him] on behalf of another priest, it is forbidden.² And why does not the Tanna [of the Baraitha] also mention the case of the priest's gifts?³ — He can explain it to you [as follows]. When terumah is consecrated as such, since it is not redeemed, no mistake can be made with it.⁴ But in these cases [of the firstling and priest's gifts], since they are consecrated only for their value, the priest may make a mistake with them, thinking that their holiness is redeemed for the four zuz [i.e., the sela’] and thus will come to treat them after the manner of hullin.⁵
Raba said: Terumah from abroad is not subject to the ruling of a priest who helps in the threshing floors. R. Hama gave it to his attendant. Samuel said: Terumah from abroad is neutralized in a larger quantity. Rabbah neutralized it in a larger quantity and used to eat it in the days of his [levitical] impurity.

R. Huna the son of R. Joshua, when he happened to have wine of terumah [from abroad], used to mix two natla of hullin with one natla of terumah, and after that he would add one [natla] and take one.

Samuel further said: Terumah from abroad one may go on eating, leaving the separation for afterwards. Samuel further said: Terumah from abroad is forbidden only for one whose uncleanness issues from his body; and this is the case only as regards eating, but as regards touching, there is no objection.

Said Rabina: Therefore a woman during menstruation may separate the hallah and a priest who is a minor, eats it; and if there is not a priest who is a minor, she takes it on the point of the shovel and throws it in the oven, and then separates other hallah in order that the law of hallah may not be forgotten and an adult priest eats it.

R. Nahman, R. Amram and Rami b. Hama were sailing in a boat. R. Amram went away to ease himself. A certain woman came, approached and asked them: Is it allowed for one made unclean through a corpse that he should bathe and eat terumah from abroad? — Said R. Nahman to Rami b. Hama:

---

(1) Receiving in return a small amount for this privilege.
(2) For it looks as if the priest buys the right of the terumah on behalf of another priest, although he can claim it himself. It, therefore, comes under the category of the action of a priest who helped in the threshing floor.
(3) Of a butcher who separates the priest's gifts or that of a shepherd who gives up the firstling, in each of which cases he may receive a sela' from another Israelite who said to him: 'Here is a sela' and give it etc.'
(4) Since everybody is aware that terumah cannot lose its holiness, and therefore the priest on whose behalf the sela' was paid by the Israelite will not mistakenly use it as hullin.
(5) For if the priest chose to sell to an Israelite the firstling's flesh, or the shoulder etc., he can do so and the latter is no longer required to eat the flesh roasted and with mustard, the royal manner of eating, as the priest is compelled to do, and thus he may be led to give the flesh to dogs to eat, treating it as mere hullin.
(6) Lit., outside Palestine.
(7) The ruling mentioned here is not applied, because the giving of such terumah is only a Rabbinic enactment, and therefore we are not particular with reference to it.
(8) Who was a priest, in lieu of payment for his services, and he had no fears about its being similar to the case of a priest who helps in the threshing floor.
(9) One measure of terumah is nullified in two of hullin, and it is not required that the one measure of terumah should be neutralized in a hundred, as is the case with terumah in the Holy Land. Also, after being neutralized, the whole mixture may be eaten by a non-priest or by the priest himself in his days of levitical impurity.
(10) He was a priest, being a descendant from the House of Eli.
(11) A measure, one-fourth of a log.
(12) And proceeded to act thus until all the terumah was neutralized, there being always a greater quantity of hullin to neutralize the terumah. (R. Gershom.)
(13) Even delaying the separation until the end. According to Tosaf., however, there must remain a portion of the pile even after the separation, to carry out the principle of mukaf (lit., 'brought near') requiring that the terumah must be of a mass in close neighbourhood of the products from which it is set aside.
(14) E.g., one afflicted with gonorrhoea, or who has become defiled.
(15) And although he makes the terumah unclean, we do not trouble, as there is no obligation to preserve it in a state of cleanliness.
The Priest’s share of the dough, since as regards coming in contact, there is no restriction on a menstruant woman.  The woman herself being unclean through an uncleanness which issues from the body, and therefore only a minor but not an adult priest may eat it. And even an adult priest, if he bathes and purifies himself from pollution is considered as a minor in this respect. Another reason why it says ‘a minor’ is because a minor is not subject to pollution and thus did not become unclean. Still another reason is because hallah can be of a small quantity which is only sufficient for a minor, as the expression later on ‘on the point of a shovel’ indicates.

Avoiding direct contact, for we are endeavouring as far as possible to prevent her touching it (Rashi). Tosaf. observes that this refers to a baker’s shovel used in order to place it more easily in the oven and in the fire, for if according to Rashi’s explanations the difficulty arises that coming into direct contact, as we are taught above, is not forbidden at all.

This implies that where there is a minor who is a priests we do not demand the separation of two hallahs. In places, however, near the Holy Land, two hallahs are required to be separated, one for the fire and the other for the priest.

Without the sprinkling and waiting for sunset, for complete purification.

Talmud - Mas. Bechoroth 27b

And have we [in these days] sprinkling [on the unclean]?

Rami b. Hama replied to him: ‘Should we not take into consideration the views of the Elder’? While this was going on, R. Amram arrived. He said to them: This is what Rab said: One made unclean through a corpse, bathes and eats of the terumah from abroad. The law however is not in accordance with his view. Mar Zutra reported in the name of R. Shesheth: One made unclean through a reptile bathes and eats the terumah from abroad. The law however is not in accordance with his view.

A FIRSTLING IS EATEN YEAR BY YEAR etc. Since [the Mishnah] says: IF A BLEMISH APPEARED ON IT DURING ITS FIRST YEAR, we infer that we count according to its own year. Whence is this proved: As Rab Judah reported in the name of Rab: Scripture says: Thou shalt eat it before the Lord thy God, year by year. Now, what year is it which enters into another? One must say it is the year of a firstling. The school of Rabbi, however, taught: The text ‘year by year’ denotes one day in this year and one day in the next year, and teaches that a firstling may be eaten for two days and a night. And according to the school of Rabbi, whence do they derive this?

They infer it from dedicated sacrifices. And as regards to dedicated sacrifices themselves, whence do we deduce this? — Said R. Aha the son of Jacob, Scripture says: A lamb of the first year, implying the year of the lamb, but not the year counted according to the Creation. And whence does Rab derive that a firstling may be eaten for two days and a night? — He derives it from the text: And the flesh of them shall be thine as the wave-breast and as the right thigh: Scripture compares it to the wave-breast and the right thigh of peace-offerings. Just as there they may be eaten for two days and a night, so here it may be in accordance with his view.

____________________

(1) As there is no sprinkling there is no need for awaiting sunset.
(2) R. Amram. It is not proper to give a decision in his absence.
(3) And he does not need to wait for sunset in order to complete his purification.
(4) Which required him to bathe but even bathing is not necessary, since it is terumah from abroad (Tosaf.) According to Rashi, however, it appears that the law is that one made unclean through a corpse may not eat terumah from abroad and Rabbenu Gershom says explicitly that this is the case.
(5) So Sh. Mek.. Cur. edd. ‘For Mar Zutra’.
(6) So that if it was born in Nisan, he may keep it until the following Nisan, and we have not to consider that a new year commences in Tishri in this connection.
(7) Deut. XV, 20.
(8) For such a year enters into the new year commencing in Tishri.
(10) If he slaughters it on the last day of its first year he may continue eating it on the first day of the second.
(11) That the firstling’s year is counted from its birth.
From other dedicated sacrifices, which are offered up a year old counting from their birth.

Lev. XII, 6. Lit., ‘of its first year’.

I.e., commencing in Tishri.

Num. XVIII, 18. The text refers to a firstling.

And [what says] the other [to this]? — From that text one could say that it refers to the wave-breast and the right thigh of a thanksgiving offering.1 And the other? — Scripture says: ‘Shall be thine’ thus adding another ‘being’ in connection with the first-born.2 And the other? — If we go by that text, we could say that it teaches concerning a blemished firstling that he gives it to the priest,3 as we do not find this stated [explicitly] in the whole of the Torah.4 And the other?5 — It says: ‘And the flesh of them’, intimating that an unblemished as well as a blemished firstling [may be eaten]. And the other? — The text: ‘And the flesh of them’ refers to the firstlings of all the Israelites.6

IF A BLEMISH APPEARED ON IT DURING ITS FIRST YEAR, HE IS PERMITTED TO KEEP IT ALL THE TWELVE MONTHS. The query was put forward. What does [the Mishnah exactly] mean? Does it mean that if a blemish appeared on it during its first year, he is allowed to keep it all the twelve months and thirty days besides? Or does [the Mishnah] mean that where a blemish appeared on it during its first year, he is allowed to keep it all the twelve months but no longer, and where a blemish appeared on it after its first year, he is not allowed to keep it except for thirty days? — Come and hear: It was taught: A firstling in our days,7 so long as it is not fit to show to a Sage,8 is allowed to be kept for two or three years. And when it is fit to show to a Sage, if a blemish appeared on it during its first year, he is allowed to keep it all the twelve months, whereas after its first year, he is not allowed to keep it even one day nor even one hour.9 On the ground, however, of restoring a lost object to the owners,10 [the Rabbis] said that he is allowed to keep it for thirty days!11 But I can still however raise the question [concerning the Baraitha itself]: Does it mean thirty days after its first year12 or before its first year?13 — Come and hear: If a blemish appeared on it fifteen days during its first year, we complete for it fifteen days after its year.14 This proves it.15 This supports the views of R. Eleazar. For R. Eleazar said: We give it thirty days from the time when the blemish appeared on it. Some there are who read: R. Eleazar said: Whence do we know that if a blemish appeared on a firstling in its first year we give it thirty days after its year? It is said: Thou shalt eat it before the Lord thy God year by year.16 Now, what is the number of days which is reckoned [by all authorities] as a year? You must admit that it is thirty days. An objection was raised: [It is taught]: If a blemish appeared on it fifteen days in its first year, we complete for it fifteen days after its year. We deduce from here that we complete thirty days, but we do not give it [thirty full days after its first year]. This is a refutation of R. Eleazar! It is indeed a refutation.

MISHNAH. IF ONE SLAUGHTERED THE FIRSTLING AND SHOWED ITS BLEMISH [TO AN EXPERT],17 R. JUDAH PERMITS,18 WHEREAS R. MEIR SAYS: SINCE IT WAS NOT SLAUGHTERED BY THE INSTRUCTIONS OF THE EXPERT, IT IS FORBIDDEN.19 IF ONE WHO IS NOT AN EXPERT SEES THE FIRSTLING AND IT WAS SLAUGHTERED BY HIS INSTRUCTIONS, IN SUCH A CASE IT SHALL BE BURIED AND HE SHALL MAKE REPARATION OUT OF HIS OWN ESTATE.

GEMARA. Said Rabba b. Bar Hana: In the case of a blemish of withered spots in the eye,20 all agree that it is forbidden, for they change.21 They only differ regarding blemishes of the body.22 R. Meir maintaining that we prohibit blemishes of the body on account of withered spots in the eye, whereas R. Judah maintains that we do not prohibit blemishes of the body on account of withered spots in the eye. It has also been taught to the same effect: If one slaughtered a firstling and showed [an expert] its blemish [after its slaughter], R. Judah says: If there are withered spots in the eye, it is forbidden, since they change, whereas if there are bodily blemishes, it is permitted because they do not change. But R. Meir says: Both in the one case as in the other it is forbidden, because they change. [You say] ‘Because they change’ — you cannot mean that? Do bodily blemishes change? — Rather what R. Meir means is on account of those [blemishes] that change.²³ Said R. Nahman b. Isaac:

(1) Which can only be eaten for one day and a night. Therefore the school of Rabbi infers this from the text ‘Thou shalt eat it’ etc.

(2) Which shows that it is to be eaten for two days and a night, unlike some sacrifices,

(3) Therefore the school of Rabbi cannot derive the period of eating for a firstling from ‘Shall be thine’, as Rab maintains.

(4) Tosaf. however explains that this means that we do not find elsewhere that the priest should benefit from a sacrifice which became blemished, as is the case with regard to a firstling.

(5) Rab who deduces the period of two days and a night from ‘Shall be thine’ whence does he infer that a blemished firstling may be eaten?

(6) The text ‘And the flesh of them’ only refers to unblemished firstlings, and the plural ‘them’ alludes to the Israelites.

(7) When an unblemished firstling is not fit for anything.

(8) I.e., before a blemish appears on it so that he can show it to a Sage in order to decide whether it is a transitory or permanent blemish. Tosaf. explains the expression as meaning where a Sage is not at hand, for the Israelite is not compelled to go to distant parts to have the blemish examined.

(9) Now it is assumed that the Baraita deals here with a case where the blemish appeared in its first year.

(10) I.e., the priest, for if the firstling must not be kept for any period in the possession of the Israelite, he may not find a priest to whom to give it, and if he kills it, it will become putrid, thus making a loss for the priest. Therefore the Israelite must keep it for thirty days, after which period he is allowed to kill and salt it keeping it until he finds a priest. The comment of Tosaf., however, is that we are dealing where the firstling is in the possession of the priest, giving the latter a period of thirty days to hold it, in case he had no need for the flesh at the moment. But the Israelite must always wait until he finds a priest to receive the firstling.

(11) We consequently see that the thirty days of the Mishnah refers to a blemish in its first year.

(12) I.e., that the blemish appeared after its first year.

(13) The blemish appeared before the first year ended, and he keeps it for thirty days after its first year. The words ‘whereas after its first year’ can bear either interpretation.

(14) We give the animal thirty days from the time when a blemish appears on it, and if a blemish appeared after the year or a little while before the expiration of the year, we give it thirty days from the time of the blemish for the Israelite to keep it. And we also infer that if the blemish appeared a month or three months in its first year, the Israelite waits until the end of its year.

(15) That the thirty days of the Mishnah refers to where a blemish appears after its year, for if the blemish appeared in its first year even a day before its expiration, we do not give the animal thirty full days but only complete the period of thirty days.

(16) Deut. XV, 20. Which implies that it is not eaten in the year of its blemish.

(17) After its killing, and the expert discovered that it was a permanent blemish.

(18) Since the animal was after all seen by an expert.

(19) We punish him because he did not show it to an expert before its killing:

(20) If he showed it after its killing.

(21) Owing to its death agony the eye is liable to change and therefore although at the moment the blemish seems to be a permanent one, it is possible that if he had examined it when the animal was still alive, the blemish might have been found to be a transitory one.

(22) E.g., a slit in the ear.

(23) I.e., withered spots in the eye, we penalize the Israelite even in cases of bodily blemishes.

Talmud - Mas. Bechoroth 28b

I can prove it from our Mishnah.¹
R. MEIR SAYS: SINCE IT WAS NOT SLAUGHTERED ACCORDING TO THE INSTRUCTIONS OF AN EXPERT IT IS FORBIDDEN.2

Deduce from here that R. Meir does indeed penalize him. This stands proved.

The question was raised: Does [the statement above] ‘on account of those blemishes that change’, imply that all [the withered spots in the eye] change, or that some change and others do not change?3 What is the practical difference?4 — Whether we should declare the witnesses false or not.5 If you say that in all cases withered spots in the eye change, then they are false.6 But if you say that there are some that change and other do not, we rely on them. What is the ruling? — Come and hear. For Rabbah b. Bar Hana reported in the name of R. Johanan: R. Josiah of Usha told me: ‘Come and I will show you withered spots in the eye that change’. Now, since he said to him ‘Come and I will show you’, this implies that there are some that change and others which do not change.

IF ONE WHO WAS NOT AN EXPERT SEES THE FIRSTLING AND IT WAS SLAUGHTERED BY HIS INSTRUCTIONS, IN SUCH A CASE IT SHALL BE BURIED. May we say that the Mishnah states anonymously that the ruling is in accordance with R. Meir?7 — Perhaps it refers to a case of withered spots in the eye, and thus it will be according to the view of all the authorities concerned.8

AND HE SHALL MAKE REPARATION OUT OF HIS OWN ESTATE. A Tanna taught: When he pays [the priest], he pays a quarter [of the loss] for [a firstling of] small cattle and a half for [a firstling of] large cattle.9 What is the reason [for this disparity in reparation]? In one case the loss is great, whereas in the other it is small. If this be a fact, let him pay [the priest] in proportion to the loss?10 — R. Huna b. Manoah reported in the name of R. Aha b. Ika: They inflicted on him only [a quarter of the loss] because of the trouble of raising small cattle.11 MISHNAH. IF A JUDGE IN GIVING JUDGMENT HAS DECLARED INNOCENT A PERSON WHO WAS REALLY LIABLE OR MADE LIABLE A PERSON WHO WAS REALLY INNOCENT, DECLARED DEFILED A THING WHICH WAS LEVITICALLY CLEAN OR DECLARED CLEAN A THING WHICH WAS REALLY DEFILED, HIS DECISION STANDS BUT HE HAS TO MAKE REPARATION OUT OF HIS OWN ESTATE. IF, HOWEVER, THE JUDGE WAS AN EXPERT FOR THE BETH DIN,12 HE IS ABSOLVED FROM MAKING REPARATION.

GEMARA. May we say, the anonymous statement of the Mishnah is in accordance with R. Meir who is prepared to adjudicate liability for damage done indirectly?13 — R. Ela reported in the name of Rab: [We suppose that] he personally executed the judgment by his own hand.14 Now, this is quite intelligible where the judge made liable a person really innocent, [the explanation being] e.g., where he personally executed the judgment by his own hand; but where he declared innocent the person who was really liable, how are we to understand it? For if you say it means where he said to him: ‘You are innocent’, he does not personally execute the judgment by his own hand! — Said Rabina: The case deals here where e.g. [the creditor] had a pledge and [the judge] took it from him.15 The case also where he declared defiled a thing which was really clean, [can be explained], where he touched clean things with a [dead] reptile;16 and the case where he declared clean a thing which was really defiled, [can be explained] where he mixed them with his fruits.17 MISHNAH. IT HAPPENED ONCE THAT A COW'S WOMB WAS TAKEN AWAY AND R. TARFON GAVE IT TO THE DOGS TO EAT.18 THE MATTER CAME BEFORE THE SAGES AT JABNEH AND THEY PERMITTED THE ANIMAL [FOR] THEODOS THE PHYSICIAN HAD SAID: NO COW NOR SOW LEAVES ALEXANDRIA OF EGYPT BEFORE ITS WOMB IS CUT OUT IN ORDER THAT IT MAY NOT BREED.19 SAID R. TARFON: ‘YOUR ASS IS GONE, TARFON’.20 SAID R. AKIBA TO HIM: YOU ARE ABSOLVED, FOR YOU ARE AN EXPERT AND WHOEVER IS AN EXPERT FOR THE BETH DIN IS ABSOLVED FROM REPARATION.
GEMARA. And why does not [R. Akiba] infer this from the fact that he had erred in a matter where the Mishnah is explicit, and one who errs in a matter where the Mishnah is explicit can reconsider his decision? — He gave him one reason and then another: One reason for absolving is because you gave a wrong decision against an explicit law in the Mishnah. And another is that even if your mistake was made against the common practice, you are an expert for the Beth din, and whoever is an expert for the Beth din is absolved from reparation. MISHNAH. IF ONE TAKES PAYMENT FOR SEEING THE FIRSTLINGS, THEY MUST NOT BE SLAUGHTERED BY HIS INSTRUCTIONS, UNLESS HE WAS AN EXPERT

(1) That the controversy refers to bodily blemishes.
(2) Now, since R. Meir adduces as the reason for prohibiting that we penalize the Israelite because he did not show the blemished firstling to the expert before its killing, therefore if the difference of opinion applied also to the case of withered spots in the eye, then surely he would have given a more effective reason why he forbids, i.e., that the eye is liable to vary. Consequently, the controversy relates to bodily blemishes, and according to R. Meir we forbid in these cases on account of the case of withered spots in the eye, punishing him for not showing it to the expert.
(3) And yet in the case of bodily blemishes we forbid, on account of withered spots in the eye.
(4) Even in cases where the spots do not change, since we cannot be sure which change and which do not, the animals are forbidden in all cases if they are not examined previous to their killing!
(5) If he killed a firstling without previously consulting an expert, a permanent blemish being discovered now, and witnesses declare that the spots in the eye did not change and that they were the same when the animal was alive.
(6) And it is forbidden unanimously.
(7) For although after its killing it is discovered to possess a permanent blemish, nevertheless it is buried, which is according to the view of R. Meir, who punishes the Israelite in such circumstances.
(8) And spots in the eye are liable to change, and therefore the Mishnah says it shall be buried.
(9) He gives a half because it is money of doubtful ownership, as one might say that the Israelite made the priest suffer a complete loss, for had an expert seen the animal when it was alive, he might have permitted it, whereas now it has to be buried. On the other hand, perhaps there was no permanent blemish and an expert would not have permitted it, and also it may be that the firstling would have died without a blemish appearing on it at all.
(10) In one case a half of its larger value and in the other also, half of its smaller value.
(11) The firstling saved the priest considerable trouble as small cattle can only be raised on untilled land. Moreover, if the Israelite had shown it to another, he might not have permitted it and then the priest would have had to attend to it until it became blemished; hence the reparation is only a quarter. Another explanation why he only receives a quarter of its value is because he transgressed the prohibition enacted against raising small cattle in the Holy Land (v. B.K. 79b), and we are therefore dealing here with a case where it was the firstling of a priest's animal and the priest was raising small cattle.
(12) Court of Law. Another version is: An expert for the public.
(13) V. B.K. 100a. And here the judge by his words caused a damage.
(14) Taking the money from one and giving it to the other party of the suit.
(15) And exempted the debtor from any liability.
(16) In order that his decision might stand and that there should be no doubt in the matter.
(17) He took defiled fruits and declared them clean and then proceeded to mix them with fruit belonging to another, thus doing something direct in causing the damage.
(18) I.e., he caused it to be given to the dogs, having declared the animal trefah.
(19) For their cows and sows were highly rated, and therefore, to prevent them breeding elsewhere and thus compel buyers to come to Alexandria, they used to cut out the womb, and the animal did not suffer a fatal injury on account of this. We see, therefore, that the animal does not become trefah where the womb is absent.
(20) In order to make reparation for the cow which he had mistakenly made trefah.
(21) Absolving R. Tarfon from reparation.
(22) And therefore even if R. Tarfon were not an expert, he should be absolved, for there exists an explicit Mishnah in Hul. (54a) stating that an absent womb in an animal does not render the animal trefah. In this case therefore, if the cow were in existence, R. Tarfon could have permitted it, and consequently the person who gave it to the dogs to eat is himself responsible for the loss, v. supra n. 1.
Lit., ‘weighing of opinion’, in a case concerning which there are opposing views among Tannaim or Amoraim no definite ruling existing, but there being an established practice.

As we apprehend that he might be influenced to permit this by the hope of pecuniary gain.

Talmud - Mas. Bechoroth 29a

LIKE ILA\(^1\) IN JABNEH WHOM THE SAGES PERMITTED TO ACCEPT FOUR AS\(^2\) FOR SMALL CATTLE AND SIX AS FOR LARGE CATTLE, WHETHER UNBLEMISHED OR BLEMISHED.\(^3\)

GEMARA. What is the reason?\(^4\) — In one case, [i.e., of large cattle], he has much trouble,\(^5\) whereas in the other case, he has not much trouble.

WHETHER UNBLEMISHED OR BLEMISHED. Now, we quite understand this in the case of a blemished firstling,\(^6\) because in this case he permits it; but in the case of an unblemished firstling,\(^7\) why [does he take payment]? — The reason is that otherwise he might be suspected, and it might be said that the animal pronounced blemished is unblemished, and the reason he permits it is because he receives payment. If your argument is true, in the case of an unblemished firstling also it might be said that it is really blemished and the reason why he does not permit it is because he thinks that he might be able to take payment a second time? — The Rabbis enacted payment for the first examination but they did not enact payment twice [for the same firstling].\(^8\)

MISHNAH. IF ONE TAKES PAYMENT TO ACT AS A JUDGE, HIS JUDGMENTS ARE VOID; TO GIVE EVIDENCE, HIS EVIDENCE IS VOID; TO SPRINKLE\(^9\) OR TO SANCTIFY,\(^10\)
THE WATERS ARE CONSIDERED CAVE WATERS AND THE ASHES ARE CONSIDERED
CALCINED ASHES.\(^11\) IF HE\(^12\) WAS A PRIEST AND HE WAS MADE UNCLEAN
REGARDING HIS TERUMAH,\(^13\) HE\(^14\) MUST GIVE HIM FOOD AND DRINK AND RUB HIM WITH OIL. AND IF HE WAS AN OLD MAN, HE MOUNTS HIM ON AN ASS. HE ALSO PAYS
THE PRIEST AS HE WOULD A WORKMAN.\(^15\)

GEMARA. Whence is it proved?\(^16\) — Rab Judah reported in the name of Rab: Scripture says:
Behold I have taught you, etc.:\(^17\) Just as I teach gratuitously, so you should teach gratuitously. It has also been taught to the same effect. Scripture Says: Even as the Lord my God commanded me,\(^18\) [intimating], just as I teach gratuitously, so you should teach gratuitously. And whence do we derive that if he cannot find someone to teach him gratuitously, he must pay for learning? The text states:
Buy the truth.\(^19\) And whence do we infer that one should not say ‘as I learnt the Torah by paying, so I shall teach it for payment’? The text states: And sell it not.\(^19\)

TO SPRINKLE OR TO SANCTIFY, ITS WATERS ARE CONSIDERED CAVE WATERS AND ITS ASHES ARE CONSIDERED CALCINED ASHES. The following was cited in contradiction: If one betrothes a woman with the waters of purification or with the ashes of purification, she is betrothed, although he is an Israelite?\(^20\) — Said Abaye: This offers no difficulty. In the case mentioned above [in the Baraita] it is payment for bringing the ashes\(^21\) or filling the waters, whereas in the case [of the Mishnah] it is payment for actual sprinkling or sanctification.\(^22\)

I can also prove it. For here in our Mishnah it states: TO SPRINKLE OR TO SANCTIFY, whereas there [in the Baraita] it states: If one betrothes a woman with the waters of purification\(^23\) or with the ashes of purification. It stands proved.

IF HE WAS A PRIEST, AND HE WAS MADE UNCLEAN IN RESPECT OF HIS TERUMAH.
How could the priest go to a place of uncleanness?\(^24\) — He went to a beth ha-peras,\(^25\) the prohibition being a rabbinical enactment. For Rab Judah reported in the name of Rab: A man can blow away the bones of a beth ha-peras and may then proceed.26

(1) A pious person and above suspicion in these matters.
(2) A Roman coin usually of the value of one twenty-fourth of a denar.
(3) Whether he pronounced the firstling to be unblemished or possessing a permanent blemish, he used to take full payment for his examination.
(4) That for small cattle he took four as and for large cattle six as.
(5) To cast it on the ground in order to bind it so as to enable the expert to examine it.
(6) That the expert takes payment where he decides that it possesses a permanent blemish.
(7) Where the priest pronounces the animal unblemished or having only a transitory blemish.
(8) There is no fear, therefore, lest the firstling is really blemished and that it is pronounced unblemished in order that the priest might receive a further payment in a subsequent examination as there is no double payment for the same animal.
(9) The water of purification.
(10) To mix the ashes of purification with living water in a vessel.
(11) I.e., ordinary ashes.
(12) The expert, witness or judge.
(13) If the person who required the priest's services led him to inspect the firstling or to give evidence etc., through a path which inevitable caused the priest to become unclean. The latter cannot therefore now eat terumah, which is cheaper in price than hullin, since the latter can be eaten by everybody whereas terumah is only suitable for priests.
(14) The person who accompanies the priest.
(15) This is explained in the Gemara.
(16) That it is forbidden to take payment for giving decisions on Jewish Law and teaching the Torah.
(17) Deut. IV, 5.
(18) Ibid.
(19) Prov. XXIII, 23.
(20) For usually priests carry out these offices. Hence we see that one is permitted to take payment, for otherwise how could she be betrothed?
(21) From a distance to Jerusalem, and for the money earned in that manner he betrothes a woman.
(22) This being part of the preparation for the performance of the precept for which there is no reward.
(23) The language employed in the Baraita, i.e., ‘With the waters etc.’ suggests payment for bringing the waters, whereas the language used in the Mishnah indicates that the priest receives reward directly for sprinkling of sanctification.
(24) Thus transgressing the negative precept There shall none be defiled for the dead (Lev. XXI, 1).
(25) A field rendered unclean on account of crushed bones carried over it from a ploughed grave.
(26) To bring the Paschal lamb, since abstaining from this fear of uncleanness would render him liable to the guilt of excision; but in respect of terumah the rabbinic enactment stands.

Talmud - Mas. Bechoroth 29b

And R. Judah b. Ami reported in the name of Rab Judah: A beth ha-peras which has been trodden is levitically clean.1 Or, we may also say: [The Mishnah refers] to other impurities,2 concerning which he is not warned [against coming into contact].

IF HE WAS AN OLD MAN, HE MOUNTS HIM ON AN ASS. A Tanna taught: He receives payment on the scale of a workman with nothing to do. [What does the expression ‘an idle workman’ mean, since it does not render him idle?] — Abaye said: He pays the priest like a workman idle from his particular occupation.3 MISHNAH. IF ONE IS SUSPECTED IN CONNECTION WITH FIRSTLINGS,4 EVEN DEER'S FLESH5 WE MUST NOT BUY FROM HIM, NOR UNDRESSED HIDES. R. ELIEZER SAYS: FEMALE HIDES WE MAY BUY FROM HIM. WASHED OR DIRTY WOOL WE MUST NOT BUY FROM HIM BUT SPUN WOOL OR GARMENTS WE MAY BUY FROM HIM.
GEMARA. [The reason for prohibiting] deer's flesh is because it might be exchanged for calf's flesh. Undressed skins are forbidden [to be bought], thus implying that dressed skins we may buy. What is the reason? — If there was any substance in the suspicion that they might be of a firstling, he would not have troubled in the matter, reflecting thus: If the Rabbis heard about me, they would make me forfeit them.

R. ELIEZER SAYS: FEMALE HIDES WE MAY BUY FROM HIM. What is the reason? — It is easily recognized. And the first Tanna? If this be so, then in the case of a male also he might cut away the male genital and maintain that mice have devoured it. And the other? — The action of mice is easily recognized.

WASHED OR DIRTY WOOL WE MUST NOT BUY FROM HIM. If we must not purchase washed wool [from], him is there any question about dirty wool? — Rather this is stated as one case: Wool washed from its dirt.

BUT SPUN WOOL OR GARMENTS WE MAY BUY FROM HIM. Now if we must not buy spun wool, is there any question as to garments? — The kind of garments meant are felt spreadings.

MISHNAH. IF ONE IS SUSPECTED OF IGNORING THE SABBATICAL YEAR, FLAX MUST NOT BE BOUGHT FROM HIM, EVEN CARDED; BUT SPUN OR WOVEN WOOL MAY BE BOUGHT FROM HIM.

GEMARA. Now if spun wool may be bought, is there any question with regard to woven wool? — ‘Woven’ means here twists.

MISHNAH. IF ONE IS SUSPECTED OF SELLING TERUMAH AS HULLIN, EVEN WATER AND SALT MUST NOT BE BOUGHT FROM HIM. THESE ARE THE WORDS OF R. JUDAH. R. SIMEON SAYS: WHATEVER COMES UNDER THE OBLIGATION OF TERUMAH AND TITHES MUST NOT BE BOUGHT FROM HIM.

GEMARA. [The expression ‘WHATEVER’ of R. Simeon], what does it include? — It includes the entrails of fish in which oil is mixed.

(1) The field having been trodden by several people, it is impossible that a dead man's bone the size of a barley-corn could remain to cause uncleanness, v. Pes. 92b.
(2) E.g., coming in contact with a carcass or dead reptile, the negative precept cited above referring exclusively to a corpse.
(3) If, for example, he performs light work and earns a big wage, then the priest's compensation would only be slightly less than what he receives for his normal work. But if his work was of an arduous kind for which he received say, three zuz, then if he had invited him to take a zuz for much lighter work, he would probably have accepted the offer. This is therefore what the priest receives now for his services which prevented him following his occupation, but not the whole of his usual wages, as the work which the priest is performing for him is not arduous.
(4) E.g., of causing blemishes.
(5) The flesh being red, it can be exchanged for calf's flesh, and he might therefore sell him the flesh of an unblemished firstling calf, pretending that it is deer's flesh.
(6) That I took it from an unblemished firstling which requires burial. Therefore to spare himself unnecessary trouble, he would not dress the skins, if they came from firstlings.
(7) The difference between the skin of a male and a female. A female animal is not subject to the law of the firstling.
(8) In our Mishnah, who forbids the purchasing of skins of both sexes, as he makes no distinction. But surely one can observe a difference in the skins!
(9) And make the part look like a female organ and when questioned about the cut in the organ, he may ascribe it to the work of mice.
(10) Where one might have said that he would not take the trouble to wash the wool if it came from a firstling, for fear that the Rabbis might hear of the case and he would as a result have to forfeit it.
(11) Since we have already permitted it from the moment when the wool was spun.
(12) Which were never spun and therefore our Mishnah needs to inform us what the ruling is.
(13) I.e., of sowing or doing business with the spontaneous growth of the sabbatical year.
(14) And prepared with a comb.
(15) As we have already permitted the buying of the wool in the earlier stage of spinning.
(16) Ropes made from flax before they are spun.
(17) As a punishment.
(18) Oil being subject to the law of terumah.

Talmud - Mas. Bechoroth 30a

kidney fat for the fat of ileum. Raba punished him by forbidding him to sell even nuts. Said R. Papa to Raba: What opinion does this represent? R. Judah's! If it is the opinion of R. Judah, then the prohibition should apply even to water and salt? — It may still represent the opinion of R. Simeon, and we punish him through the very object which caused the offence. Young children are generally attracted by nuts. He goes and misleads the children of butchers, attracting them by means of nuts. They bring him kidney fat and he sells it for the fat of ileum.

GEMARA. What is the reason? — Fruits of the sabbatical year are not required to be eaten within the walls [of Jerusalem], whereas tithes are required to be eaten within the walls and therefore the rule is more stringent with regard to them.

ONE WHO IS SUSPECTED OF IGNORING TITHES. What is the reason? — The tithe can be redeemed, whereas fruit of the sabbatical year is forbidden to him and cannot be redeemed; and therefore the rule is more stringent in regard to it.

ONE WHO IS SUSPECTED OF IGNORING BOTH LAWS. Since he is suspected of ignoring both laws of biblical enactment, how much more so is he suspected of ignoring a rabbinic enactment [like eating hullin levitically prepared]?

AND IT IS POSSIBLE FOR ONE WHO IS SUSPECTED OF IGNORING THE RULES OF LEVITICAL PURITY. What is the reason? — Even though he is suspected of ignoring a rabbinic enactment, he is not suspected of ignoring a biblical enactment. The following was cited in contradiction: One who can be relied upon in respect of the rules of purity, is relied upon with respect to the sabbatical year and tithes. This allows the inference that one who is suspected of ignoring [the rules of levitical purity] is suspected [of ignoring the laws just cited]! — Said R. Elai: The Mishnah refers to a case where we saw him practise privately at home. R. Jannai son of R. Ishmael said: [The Baraitha refers to a case] where e.g., he was suspected of ignoring both the sabbatical year and levitical purity, and he came before the Rabbis and received a warning.
concerning both of them; and subsequently he was again suspected of ignoring one of them. We then hold that since he is suspected of ignoring the one, he is also suspected of ignoring the other.

Rabbah b. Bar Hana reported in the name of R. Johanan: Those are the words of R. Akiba, whose opinion has been adopted without naming him; but the Sages say: One who is suspected of ignoring the laws of the sabbatical year is suspected of ignoring the laws of tithes. Who are the Sages referred to? — R. Judah, for in the place of R. Judah the sabbatical year was strictly observed by the people. For there was a certain party who called after his companion: proselyte son of a proselyte, and the latter retorted ‘May I merit [divine reward] as I have not eaten the fruits of the sabbatical year like you’. Some there are who say: Rabbah b. Bar Hana reported in the name of R. Johanan: Those are the words of R. Akiba whose opinion has been adopted without naming him; but the Sages say: One who is suspected of ignoring tithes is suspected of ignoring the law of the sabbatical year. And who are the Sages referred to? It is R. Meir who said: One who is suspected of ignoring one religious law is suspected of disregarding the whole Torah.

R. Jonah and R. Jeremiah, the pupils of R. Ze'ira, or according to others, R. Jonah and R. Ze'ira, pupils of R. Johanan reported differently]. One said: But the Sages said: One who is suspected of ignoring the sabbatical year laws

(1) The former fat is prohibited, the latter permitted, v. Hul. 48b.
(2) Who punishes by forbidding to buy in all cases.
(3) And why therefore did Rabban penalize him only as regards nuts.
(4) Stolen from their father's houses.
(5) The fruits in other years, however, may be bought from him.
(6) Scripture saying: And thou shalt eat before the Lord thy God, etc. (Deut. XIV, 23).
(7) To do business with.
(8) For no matter how many successive exchanges of the fruit of the sabbatical year took place, only the last object is invested with restrictions of the sabbatical year whereas the fruit of the sabbatical year itself always remains forbidden (R. Gershom).
(9) For the eating of hullin (ordinary food and not terumah) with levitical cleanness is only a rabbinical injunction.
(10) The regulation pertaining to tithes and the sabbatical year and therefore the Mishnah states that he is not suspected of disregarding them in public, albeit he ignores the rules of levitical purity.
(11) That one who is suspected of ignoring the sabbatical year is not suspected of disregarding the law of tithes.
(12) Consequently, if one was suspected of disregarding the sabbatical law he was certainly suspected with regard to tithes, since the former was kept more strictly in R. Judah's locality.
(13) In the place of R. Judah.
(14) And since he boasts of this, we see that in that place, the sabbatical law was held strictly. Another explanation is: May a curse come to me if I partook of the fruits of the sabbatical year, as you have done.

Talmud - Mas. Bechoroth 30b

is suspected of ignoring the laws of tithes. And who are the Sages referred to? R. Judah, for in the place of R. Judah the sabbatical year law was kept strictly by the people. And the other said: One who is suspected of ignoring the laws of tithes is suspected of ignoring the sabbatical year laws. And who are the Sages referred to? — R. Meir, as it has been taught: An 'am ha-arez who accepted the obligations of a haber and who is suspected of ignoring one religious law is suspected of disregarding the whole Torah. But the Sages say: He is only suspected of ignoring that particular religious law. And a proselyte, who accepted the teachings of the Torah, though he is suspected of ignoring only one religious law, is suspected of disregarding the whole Torah, and he is considered as a non-observant Israelite. The difference would be that if he betrothes a woman, [even after his relapse], his betrothal is valid, [the woman thus requiring a divorce.]
Our Rabbis taught: If one is prepared to accept the obligation of a haber except one religious law, we must not receive him as a haber. If a heathen is prepared to accept the Torah except one religious law, we must not receive him [as an Israelite]. R. Jose son of R. Judah says: Even [if the exception be] one point of the special minutiae of the Scribes’ enactments. And similarly if a son of a Levite was prepared to accept the duties of the community of Levites except one religious law, we must not receive him [as a Levite]. If a priest was prepared to accept the duties of the priesthood except one religious law, we must not receive him [as a priest], as it is said, He [among the sons of Aaron] that offereth the blood etc., implying the [entire] service that is transmitted to the sons of Aaron and that any priest who does not acknowledge this has no share in [the privileges of] the priesthood.

Our Rabbis taught: If one applies to become a haber, if we saw him practising these privately at his house, we receive him and subsequently instruct him, but if not, we first instruct him and then receive him [as a haber]. But R. Simeon b. Yohai says: Both in the first case and the second, we receive him [as a haber] and he learns incidentally as he goes on.

Our Rabbis taught: We accept a haber if he promises to observe cleanness of hands and afterwards we accept him as one who will observe the other rules of levitical purity. If he said: I only promise to observe cleanness of hands, we receive him [as a haber, as his promise is important in connection with levitical purity]. If, however, he promised to observe the rules of levitical purity but not cleanness of hands, then even his promise to observe the rules of levitical purity is not regarded as a genuine promise.

Our Rabbis taught: How long is the period before we receive him [as a haber]? Beth Shammai say: As regards [the purity of his] liquids, [whose uncleanness is of a light character], the period is thirty days, but as regards the purity of [his] garment, the period is twelve months; whereas Beth Hillel say: Both in the one case as well as in the other, the period is twelve months. If this be so, then you have here a ruling where Beth Shammai is more lenient and Beth Hillel is the stricter? — Rather [read]: Beth Hillel Say: Both in the one case as well as in the other, the period is thirty days.

(Mnemonic: A Haber, Scholar, Purple-blue, Repent, Taxcollector.) Our Rabbis taught: One who desires to accept the obligations of a haber is required to do so in the presence of three haberim, whereas his sons and the members of his family are not required to accept [these obligations] in the presence of three haberim. But R. Simeon b. Gamaliel says: His sons and the members of his family are also required to accept [these obligations] in the presence of three haberim, because the case of a haber who accepts [these obligations] is not on a par with the case of the son of a haber who accepts [them].

Our Rabbis taught: One who desires to accept the obligations of a haber is required to accept them in the presence of three haberim, and even a talmid hakam [a scholar] is required to accept the obligations in the presence of three haberim. An elder, a member of a scholars’ council, is not required to accept [these obligations] in the presence of three haberim, having already accepted them from the time when he took his place at the council. Abba Saul says: Even a talmid hakam is not required to accept the obligations of a haber in the presence of three haberim. And not only this, but even others may accept the obligations of a haber in his presence. Said R. Johanan: In the days of the son of R. Hanina b. Antigonus was this teaching taught. For R. Judah and R. Jose were in doubt concerning a matter of levitical cleanness. They sent a pair of scholars to the son of R. Hanina b. Antigonus. They went and asked him to inquire into the matter. They found him carrying levitically prepared food. He seated some of his own disciples with them, while he stood up to look in to the question. They came and informed R. Judah and R. Jose of his conduct towards them. R. Judah said to them: His father held scholars in contempt and he also holds scholars in contempt. R. Jose replied to him: Let the dignity of the elder lie undisturbed in its place, but from the day that the Temple was destroyed, the priests guarded their dignity by not entrusting matters of levitical cleanness to everybody.25

Our Rabbis taught: [The wife of a haber is considered as a haber].26 If a haber dies, his wife and the members of the family retain their status until there is reason to suspect them.27 And similarly a court-yard in which tekeleth [purple-blue]28 was sold retains its status until it is disqualified.29 Our Rabbis taught: The wife of an ‘am ha-arez who was married to a haber, likewise a daughter of an ‘am ha-arez who was married to a haber, and similarly the slave of an ‘am ha-arez who was sold to a haber — all of these must first30 accept the obligations of a haber.31 But the wife of a haber who was married to an ‘am ha-arez, likewise the daughter of a haber who was married to an ‘am ha-arez and similarly the slave of a haber who was sold to an ‘am ha-arez, need not first accept the obligations of a haber.32 R. Simeon b. Eleazar says: Even the latter require first to accept the obligations of a haber. For R. Simeon b. Eleazar reported in the name of R. Meir: It happened with a certain woman who was married to a haber that she fastened the straps of the tefillin [phylacteries] on his hand and when afterwards married to a publican, she knotted the custom seals for him.33

---

(1) One who is not relied upon, especially in connection with terumah and tithes.
(2) A member of an order who were very scrupulous in the observance of the levitical laws in daily intercourse; v. Glos.
(3) Sh. Mek. adds, Or even if he is suspected of ignoring the whole Torah.
(4) And we do not maintain that he is considered as a real heathen, as if he had not become a proselyte.
(5) In regarding him as a non-observant Israelite and not as a real heathen.
(6) To sing, minister and serve as a gate-keeper of the Temple.
(7) The verse continues: Of the peace-offering and the fat, shall have the right thigh for a portion (Lev. VII, 33), thus teaching that the priest must practise all the laws devolving upon the sons of Aaron, and then only he is entitled to his dues.
(8) Prior to agreeing to observe them publicly so that he cannot be accused of doing so merely for show.
(9) Washing the hands before eating and before touching food of terumah.
(10) To partake of his terumah on the assumption of it being levitically clean.
(11) For, if he will not undertake to keep a simple matter like the washing of hands, then we can have no confidence in his promise to observe other levitical restrictions.
(12) During which he must practise the laws of levitical purity.
(13) The garment of an ‘am ha-arez is considered unclean by a person observant of the rules of levitical purity, through the former leaning and pressing on it.
(14) In ‘Ed. only six examples of these are quoted. This case would therefore constitute one more example.
(15) The father, a haber, will be more strict, as he publicly accepted in the presence of three haberim the obligations involved, whereas the son of a haber only sees his father practise these laws. Another interpretation is as follows: The reason, according to the first Tanna quoted above, why the sons and the members of the family of a haber are not required to accept these obligations is because the family of a haber actually seeing these levitical laws observed at home, are not suspected of disregarding them and therefore there is no necessity for them to accept these obligations in the presence of three haberim.
(16) That even a talmid hakam is required to accept the obligations of a haber in the presence of three haberim, for even he was suspected in such matters.
(17) Sh. Mek. has ‘guarding’.
(18) Who scrupulously observed the levitical rules regarding food.
(19) To keep an eye on his levitically prepared food, against the touch of the Rabbis who had been sent on the mission.
(20) That he did not trust them in matters of levitical purity.
(21) He said this in a temper, but this was not actually the case.
(22) I.e., the father and the son.
(23) Do not accuse him of despising scholars.
(24) R. Hanina b. Antigonus was a priest.
(25) It was not therefore because R. Hanina held scholars in contempt that he seated some of his disciples with the Rabbis.
(26) So Sh. Mek.
Of disregarding the rules of levitical cleanness.

For the fringes, in accordance with Num. XV, 38.

By selling therein a vegetable blue dye for genuine tekeleth.

Before we can receive them as haberim.

And although it is stated above that the members of the family are not required to accept the obligations of a haber, the case is different here because when acceptance took place the wife, daughter and slave were not with him and there is, consequently, the fear that earlier habits may still influence their conduct.

If they return to the sphere of the haber.

We see therefore that even a wife originally of a haber can alter her habits in a changed environment and the same applies to a slave, etc.

Talmud - Mas. Bechoroth 31a

Our Rabbis taught: And all of these if they repented must never be received. [These are] the words of R. Meir. R. Judah Says: If they repented only in secrecy, we must not receive them, but if publicly, they may be received. Some there are who say: If what they did was in secrecy, they may be received, but if publicly, they must not be received. But R. Simeon and R. Joshua b. Karha say: Both in the first case as in the other, they may be received because of what is said, Turn, O backsliding children.

R. Isaac of Kefar Acco reported in the name of R. Johanan: The halachah is in accordance with the view of that pair.

Our Rabbis taught: At first [the Sages] said: If a haber became a tax-collector he is expelled from the order. If he withdrew, he is not received [as a haber]. They subsequently declared: If he withdrew, he is regarded like any other person. The scholars required the teaching of R. Huna b. Hiyya. Rabbah and R. Joseph went in to him together with four hundred pairs of scholars. When he learnt that they were coming, he wreathed four hundred stools for them. Eventually they heard that he had become a tax-collector. Thereupon they sent him a message that he should adhere to his office. He went back to his former position, and sent back to them: ‘I have withdrawn’. R. Joseph did not go, but Rabbah went. R. Joseph said: We have learnt: If he withdrew from the office, he must not be received [as a haber]. Rabbah however says: We have learnt: They subsequently decided that if he withdrew, he is regarded like any other person.

Our Rabbis taught: A man may examine all firstlings, except his own; he may examine his holy sacrifices and his animal tithes. He also allows himself to be asked with reference to his levitically prepared food.

The master said: ‘A man may examine all firstlings except his own’. What are the circumstances? Shall I say that only one person [examines]? But is one person believed? Then we must suppose that three persons [examine]. But are three persons suspected [on his account]? Have we not learnt: If a woman made a declaration of protest or performed halizah before him [a scholar], the latter may marry her because he is of the Beth din? — I may still say it refers to one person and as R. Hisda reported in the name of R. Johanan elsewhere that it was a case of an individual expert, so also here it is the case of an individual expert [who examined the firstling]. ‘He may examine his holy sacrifices’, [the reason being] because if he wished, he could ask for their release [from a scholar]. And as regards ‘his [animal] tithes’, [the reason is] because if he wished, he could cast a blemish in the entire herd [of animals]. ‘He also allows himself to be asked with reference to his levitically prepared food’, [the reason being] because they are fit to eat during the period of his uncleanness.

CHAPTER V
MISHNAH. THE PROFIT ON ALL DEDICATED OBJECTS WHICH BECAME UNFIT [FOR THE ALTAR] GOES TO THE SANCTUARY. THEY ARE SOLD IN A MARKET, SLAUGHTERED IN A MARKET AND WEIGHED BY THE POUND, EXCEPT IN THE CASE OF A FIRSTLING OR A TITHING ANIMAL, AS THEIR PROFIT GOES TO THE OWNERS. THE PROFIT ON DEDICATED OBJECTS WHICH BECAME UNFIT [FOR THE PURPOSE CONSECRATED] GOES TO THE SANCTUARY. YOU MUST WEIGH ONE PIECE OF MEAT OF THE FIRST-BORN AGAINST ANOTHER PIECE OF ORDINARY MEAT OF ASCERTAINED WEIGHT.

(1) The reference is to the second clause of the Baraita in Tosef. Dem'rai. II, concerning one accepting the obligations of a haber except one religious law, a priest who accepts all priestly obligation except one, and similarly a Levite. Tosaf explains that it refers to an earlier clause in the Tosef. with reference to an ‘am ha-arez accepting the obligations of a haber, a heathen who accepts the teachings of the Torah and a priest who accepts the full obligations of the priesthood. Now, if any of these retracted, i.e., returned to their former habits, they are never received again, since they have shown their weakness, whereas R. Judah maintains that if this relapse was in secrecy, they must not be received because they are merely deceiving people and doing it for show, but if their relapse was both privately and publicly, then if they retracted, we accept them again as genuine penitents.

(2) I.e., ignoring the rules of levitically prepared food. Tosaf. interprets this as follows: If we recognized from the beginning, prior to their lapse, that they observed the obligations of a haber even privately, then we receive them when they return. But where we saw them keeping those obligations only in public but not privately, they must not be received back by us, as we suspect them merely of deceiving people.

(3) Jer. III, 14.

(4) [Caphare Accho in Lower Galilee; v. Hildesheimer, Beitrige, p. 81.]

(6) Publicans or customs-collectors had the taxes farmed out to them by the crown and as a rule recouped themselves by imposing insiquitous burdens on the people; consequently they were considered robbers in Jewish law.

(7) From the office of publican.

(8) In order to consult him on some point of Jewish law. Lit., ‘the time needed him’. Another explanation is that he fell ill and it was necessary for them to visit him.

(9) So Jast.

(10) Since he was already a publican, let him cling to the position, but as far as they were concerned, they would not visit him.

(11) I.e., resigned his office. Read הַקְצָת for קְצָת. So Jast. According to cur. edd. this was the continuation of the message, viz., that he should adhere ‘to his (new position) before him’.

(12) V. supra p. 196, n. 6.

(13) Explaining why he did not go.

(14) A priest is not allowed to inspect his own firstling and to permit it.

(15) Peace-offerings, in which a blemish appears in order to ascertain whether it is a permanent blemish, so as to redeem them as hullin.

(16) In which a permanent blemish appeared.

(17) If he is versed in such matters, and there is a doubt on some point, he need not go to a scholar to inquire.

(18) For even to permit firstlings belonging to others we require the decision of three persons.

(19) Against a marriage contracted during her minority; v. Glos. s.v. Mi’un.

(20) V. Glos.

(21) For he was not there alone, as a Beth din of three were present. Therefore we do not suspect him of permitting her for the purpose of marrying her.

(22) By pleading that the consecration was a mistake, thus finding a way out to free the animal from its sanctity. We therefore do not entertain the suspicion that he would declare the blemish to be a permanent one when it is transitory. This method, however, of releasing the animal from its holiness does not apply to a firstling which is hallowed from birth, and consequently there is room for suspicion here.

(23) Before tithing his herd, tithing taking effect even on blemished animals, and from the very beginning he could have released them from their holiness in the matter of eating them within the walls of Jerusalem.
He is consequently not suspected of declaring something which is unclean to be clean, since he can make use even of unclean food. This of course only refers to hullin, but unclean terumah is not suitable for him to eat even when he is levitically unclean, as it requires to be burnt.

Their profit is obtained by selling at a high price.

Lit. ‘Litara’, the Roman Libra, a pound, in the manner butchers who sell hullin.

In the case of a firstling, the owner is the priest, who sells its flesh to anybody. Since therefore the profit belongs to private people, it was not permitted to sell the meat and treat it lightly like hullin by selling it in the market etc., in order to gain more profit.

Talmud - Mas. Bechoroth 31b

GEMARA. [The Mishnah says that] the profit on all dedicated objects which have become unfit [for the object consecrated] goes to THE SANCTUARY. Now, when is this? Is it after redemption? Then why does it state that their profit belongs to THE SANCTUARY? Is not the profit on them for the owners? If again you maintain that [the Mishnah] refers to the period before redemption, why does it say THEY ARE SLAUGHTERED? Do they not require presentation and valuation? No difficulty arises according to him who says that objects consecrated for the altar are not included in the law of presentation and valuation; but according to him who holds that they are included in the law of presentation and valuation, what answer could you give? — You can still say that [the Mishnah] refers to the period after redemption, and what is meant then by the expression THEIR PROFIT BELONGS TO THE SANCTUARY? It means from the beginning. For since the Master permits them to be sold in the market, slaughtered in the market and weighed by the pound, the amount of the redemption is increased from the beginning.

EXCEPT IN THE CASE OF A FIRSTLING OR OF A TITHING ANIMAL, AS THEIR PROFIT BELONGS TO THE OWNERS. This is quite fair in the case of a firstling, which, although it must not be sold in the market, can be sold privately; but are animal tithes allowed to be sold privately? Has it not been taught: In connection with a firstling it is said: [But the firstling of an ox] . . . thou shalt not redeem, [intimating] that it may be sold alive and in connection with animal tithing, it says: It shall not be redeemed, [intimating] that it is forbidden to be sold either alive or ritually cut, whether unblemished or blemished? — This problem presented itself to R. Shesheth in the evening and he solved it the next morning by reference to a Baraitha [mentioned below]. We are dealing here [in the Mishnah] with a tithing animal belonging to orphans, [and by permitting in this case] we resort to the principle of restoring something lost. R. Idi was the attendant of R. Shesheth. He heard [this answer] from him and proceeded to mention it in the College, but did not cite it in his name. R. Shesheth heard of it and was annoyed. He exclaimed: ‘He who has bitten me, a scorpion should bite him’. And what practical difference did this make to R. Shesheth? — As Rab Judah reported in the name of Rab: What is the meaning of the scriptural text: I will dwell in Thy Tent in [both] worlds? Is it possible for a man to dwell in two worlds? What David meant is this: ‘Master of the Universe, may they cite a tradition in my name in this world’. For R. Johanan reported in the name of R. Simeon b. Yohai: When a tradition is cited in a scholar's name in this world, his lips murmur in the grave. And R. Isaac b. Zera also said: What is the meaning of the scriptural text: And the roof of thy mouth like the best wine that glideth smoothly for my beloved, moving gently the lips of those that are asleep? It is like a heated mass of grapes. Just as a heated mass of grapes drips as soon as you apply your finger, so do the lips of scholars in the graves murmur when sayings are cited in their name.

What is the Baraitha [referred to above]? — As it has been taught: A tithing animal belonging to orphans, we may sell. And as to the flesh of a ritually cut tithing animal he may also sell it in conjunction with its skin, fat, tendons and bones. What does [the Baraitha] mean? Abaye said: It means this: A tithing animal belonging to orphans may be sold. And how is it sold? In conjunction with its skin,\textsuperscript{14} fat, tendons and horns. This would therefore imply that in the case of an adult it is forbidden to sell a tithing animal in conjunction with other things. Now why is this different from the case we have learnt [as follows]: If one buys a lulab\textsuperscript{15} from another in the sabbatical year, he gives him at the same time the ethrog\textsuperscript{16} as a gift because he must not buy it\textsuperscript{17} in the sabbatical year. And we raised the point, what if we did not wish to give it to him as a gift? And R. Huna explained: He pays him indirectly the value of the ethrog in conjunction with the lulab? — There [in the Mishnah] the matter is not obvious,\textsuperscript{18} but here the matter is obvious.\textsuperscript{19} Said Raba: If this be so, then why does the Baraita above repeat the expression ‘tithing animal’?\textsuperscript{20} Rather said Rabba: It means this: A tithing animal belonging to orphans may be sold in the ordinary way, whereas in the case of a tithing animal belonging to an adult, which was ritually cut, he pays for the flesh in conjunction with its skin, fat, tendon and horns. Said Raba: Whence do I prove it? Because it is written, Then both it and that, for which it is changed shall be holy; it shall not be redeemed.\textsuperscript{21} Now, when does the law of substitution apply? When the animal is alive. Therefore [by analogy] when is a tithing animal not redeemed? When it is alive, thus implying that after being ritually cut, it may be redeemed, and it is but the Rabbis who have prohibited its selling after having been ritually cut in order to prevent its selling before it was ritually cut.\textsuperscript{22} Consequently in the case of an object which is valued when alive,\textsuperscript{23} the Rabbis prohibited its selling after having been ritually cut in order to prevent its selling before it was ritually cut;

\textsuperscript{1} Therefore how is it possible for him to sell it and make it hullin, for a dedicated animal cannot be redeemed except when alive, since it requires to be presented to the priest and valued by him (Lev. XXVII).
\textsuperscript{2} V. supra 32b.
\textsuperscript{3} When the owners redeem them originally from the sanctuary, the latter benefits if after redemption the flesh can be sold in the manner of hullin.
\textsuperscript{4} Num. XVIII, 17.
\textsuperscript{5} To others, having once come into the possession of the priest.
\textsuperscript{6} Lev. XXVII, 33.
\textsuperscript{7} In a blemished state.
\textsuperscript{8} As he is unable to eat the whole animal, it would become decomposed and be a loss if we forbade its disposal privately. But in the case of an adult, even private selling is prohibited.
\textsuperscript{9} I.e. not cited my name as the author.
\textsuperscript{10} So lit., E.V. ‘for ever’. Ps. LXI, 5.
\textsuperscript{11} Cant. VII, 10.
\textsuperscript{12} On which R. Shesheth based his reply.
\textsuperscript{13} At first it says that we may sell it, apparently in the normal way, and then it proceeds to say that the selling must be in an indirect manner.
\textsuperscript{14} He sells the skin for a high price, which includes the value of the flesh; the skin, horns etc. being permitted to be sold because they are not eatable things.
\textsuperscript{15} The palm branch, one of the Four Species taken on Sukkoth.
\textsuperscript{16} The citron, another of the Four Species.
\textsuperscript{17} Other fruit including the lulab, although gathered in the sabbatical year, may be bought because we go by the time when the fruit is formed, which is the sixth year. But in the case of the ethrog, we go by the time when the fruit matures, i.e., in the sabbatical year. and consequently we must not purchase an ethrog from an ‘am ha-arez as the latter might do business in the sabbatical year with the money thus obtained.
\textsuperscript{18} As the ethrog is only of slight value, so that it is not manifest that be is paying for it in connection with the lulab.
\textsuperscript{19} Since the price is high, it is clear that the money is not for the skin etc, but for the flesh.
\textsuperscript{20} Thus implying that the Baraita deals with two separate cases and does not merely consist of one clause dealing with a single case.
\textsuperscript{21} Lev. XXVII, 33.
\textsuperscript{22} As mentioned above, that ‘it is not sold either alive or slaughtered’.
\textsuperscript{23} I.e., the flesh which is the main part of the animal that is sold when alive.
but in the case of an object which is not valued when alive,¹ the Rabbis did not prohibit;² and in the case of orphans, the Rabbis let the law remain according to the biblical ruling.³ And R. Samuel son of R. Isaac also held Raba's view.⁴ For R. Samuel son of R. Isaac said: Whence is it proved that we may sell a tithing animal belonging to orphans in the ordinary way? Because it is said, Notwithstanding thou mayest kill and eat flesh within all thy gates after all the desire of thy soul [according to the blessing of the Lord thy God]⁵ Now which [dedicated] object has no blessing [from the dedication] when alive but only after being slaughtered? You must say that this is a tithing animal.⁶ The following query was put forward: What of selling its flesh in conjunction with the bones⁷ R. Hiyya and R. Simeon son of Rabbi differ [in this matter]. One says. he may sell indirectly, and the other says he must not sell indirectly: And they do not [really] differ. The teacher [who forbids] refers to the bones of small cattle, and the other refers to bones of large cattle.⁸ Or, if you prefer. I can say: In the one case as well as in the other it refers to large cattle, and yet there is no difference of opinion. One follows the custom of his place⁹ and the other that of his.¹⁰

The [above] text states: In connection with a firstling Scripture says: ‘Thou shalt not redeem’, implying that it may be sold when alive, and in connection with tithing, it is said in the Scriptures: ‘It shall not be redeemed’, intimating that it is forbidden to be sold either alive or ritually cut, whether unblemished or blemished. Whence is this proved?¹¹ — R. Hanina reported in the name of Rab and likewise when R. Dimi came he reported in the name of R. Johanan: It is said in connection with tithing the expression ‘It shall not be redeemed’, and we read in the Scriptures in connection with haramim¹² the expression It shall not be redeemed;¹³ just as the latter includes [the prohibition of] selling so the former includes selling. Said R. Nahman the son of Isaac to R. Huna son of Joshua: [The text ‘It shall not be redeemed’] is free [for interpretation], for if it were not free [for interpretation], it may be objected [against this analogy] that the case of haramim is different because they take effect upon everything.¹⁴ Is it not so? It is indeed open for interpretation. [For if Scripture] should not have stated ‘It shall not be redeemed’ in connection with haramim, one could have inferred this from the case of a firstling animal: just as a firstling animal is holy and is not redeemed, so haramim are holy and are not redeemed. What need therefore is there for [the words] ‘It shall not be redeemed’?¹⁵ Deduce from here consequently that it is free for interpretation. But it may be objected [to this analogy] that the case of a tithing animal is different because the animals which preceded and followed [the tenth in the counting] are all holy?¹⁶ Rather [argue thus]: [Scripture] should not have stated ‘It shall not be redeemed’¹⁷ in connection with haramim, and one could have inferred this from the case of the firstling; as a firstling is holy and is not redeemed, so haramim are holy and cannot be redeemed. What need then is there for [Scripture] to write ‘It shall not be redeemed’?¹⁸ This shows that it is free for interpretation. But it may still be objected that the case of a firstling is different because it is hallowed from birth!¹⁹ Rather [argue thus: Scripture] should not have used the expression ‘It shall not be redeemed’ in connection with a tithing animal, and one could have inferred this from the analogy between ‘passing’ here and passing mentioned in conjunction with a firstling; as a firstling is holy and is not redeemed, so a tithing animal is holy and is not redeemed. What need then is there for [Scripture] to write ‘It shall not be redeemed’?¹⁹ Deduce from here consequently that it is free for interpretation. But still [the expression] in connection with a tithing animal is not free, since we can refute the analogy as we did above?²⁰ — [The text That thou shalt cause to pass] is superfluous.²¹ But why not also make a comparison between the text ‘Thou shalt not redeem’ used in connection with a firstling and the text ‘It shall not be redeemed’ used in connection with haramim?²² — The ‘redemption’ mentioned in connection with tithing is free for interpretation²³ whereas the ‘redemption’ mentioned in connection with a firstling is not free [for interpretation].²⁴ But why do you see fit to say that the text mentioning ‘redemption’ in connection with a firstling is required for its own sake,²⁵ while the text ‘It shall not be redeemed’ in connection with tithing is free [for interpretation]?²⁶ Why not say that the text ‘It shall not be redeemed’ in connection with tithing is required for its own sake, while the text ‘Thou shalt not redeem’ referring to a firstling is free for interpretation? We compare the word ge'ulah with the word pediyah, whereas we do not compare the word pediyah [used in connection with a first-born], with the word ge'ulah [mentioned in connection with haramim]. But what is the practical difference? Did not a Tanna of the school of R. Ishmael teach: [Scripture says]: And the Priest shall come again and [later it says]: Then the Priest shall come, to show that the same rule applies to his coming [the second time] as to his entering [after a week]? This is the case only where no identical words are to be found [with which to compare], but where identical words are to be found, we rather make the comparison with identical words. But why not infer the case of a firstling from that of a tithing animal [by means of the analogy] between ‘passing’ and ‘passing’, for, as regards the [forbidding of the sale] of a tithing animal, we have already compared the word ge'ulah with the word ge'ulah mentioned in connection with haramim? Scripture excludes this in connection with haramim, [saying]: It is [most holy] implying ‘it is [most holy], but not a firstling’. But why not say that the text implies ‘it is [most holy] but not tithing?’ It is reasonable to maintain that the word ge'ulah is used [in connection with tithing] and the word ge'ulah is used [with reference to haramim] in order that the former may be compared with the latter.

Raba said: [The text] ‘It shall not be redeemed’ in connection with haramim is superfluous. For, where were [these haramim]? If in the possession of the owners, then they are holy. If in the possession of the priest, then they are hullin [and may be sold]. For it has been taught: So long as haramim are in the possession of the owners, they are considered as holy in all respects, for it is said: Every devoted thing is most holy unto the Lord. If however he gave them to the priest, they are considered as hullin in all respects, as it is said: Everything devoted in Israel shall be thine.

---

(1) E.g., the skin, etc.
(2) The value of the animal being not on account of these things, disposing of them indirectly is permissible even in the case of an adult.
(3) That after having been slaughtered a tithing animal may be sold even in the ordinary manner.
(4) That according to the biblical law a tithing animal may be sold after having been slaughtered.
(5) Deut. XII, 15. Sifri a.l. explains this verse as referring to consecrated animals that have received a blemish.
(6) For any other consecrated object with a blemish may after redemption be sold when alive to anybody. And the blessing referred to here means the permission of selling it just as the blessing denied when alive refers to its selling. Consequently we see that according to the biblical law, a tithing animal may be sold after having been slaughtered and there is only a rabbinic restriction which is not invoked when it belongs to orphans.
(7) The tithing animal belonging to an adult.
(8) Which may be fashioned into vessels or instruments like flutes, and therefore selling the flesh in conjunction with the bones is permissible, as it will be said that the price is for the bones, since these can be of use.
(9) Where flutes for example are made from bones, and therefore this teacher permits the selling of flesh in connection with the bones.
(10) Where these articles are not made from bones, and therefore when they are sold it is obvious that the money is for the flesh, which is forbidden.
(11) That a tithing animal must not be sold and that the expression ‘devoted things’. Dedications for use by the priests or the Temple.
(12) ‘Devoted things’. Even upon sacred objects as well, whereas tithing only has affect on hullin. Moreover herem applies to all the herd, whereas tithing only applies to every tenth animal of the herd.
(13) In connection with haramim.
(14) If, for example, he called the ninth animal the tenth and the eleventh the tenth, the three are holy.
(15) In connection with animal tithing.
(16) Whereas this is not the case with a tithing animal.
(17) ‘All that passeth under the rod’ Lev. XXVII, 32 in connection with tithing and ‘that thou shalt cause to pass (set apart)’ mentioned with reference to a first-born in Ex. XIII, 12.
(20) The case of a firstling being different, as it is hallowed from birth.
(21) It would have sufficed if Scripture had stated: All that openeth the womb is the Lord's. The term ‘cause to pass’ here is therefore free for the deduction of an analogy between it and the term used in connection with tithing, as we do not refute an analogy drawn from congruent expressions, since the latter is a tradition. Therefore the text ‘It shall not be redeemed’ is redundant, and we consequently compare it with a similar text in connection with haramim, deducing that tithes must not be sold as well as not redeemed.
(22) That a firstling must not be sold, though the Hebrew expressions in each are different, in the one and in the other, identical in meaning.
(23) Therefore we make the analogy of firstling with haramim.
(24) In the first place, it is required for its own sake, to show that the animal cannot be redeemed, and secondly for the analogy between ‘passing’ and ‘passing’.
(25) And for the analogy with tithing.
(26) To compare with haramim with regard to selling.
(27) That just as in the case of haramim selling is forbidden, so a firstling must not be sold.
(28) Mentioned in connection with haramim and tithing respectively.
(29) V. supra p. 205, n. 3.
(30) Since both the words pediyah and ge'ulah mean the same thing.
(31) Lev. XIV. 39 and 44 (with reference to leprosy of house).
(32) Although the words are not identical, yet the ruling is the same. v. Hul 85a.
(33) That it must not be sold.
(34) Lev. XXVII. 28.
(35) And is forbidden to be sold.
(36) As regards the prohibition of selling, and to exclude the case of a firstling, since the expression used there is pediyah.
(37) And cannot therefore unless blemished be redeemed.
(38) Num. XVIII, 14.

Talmud - Mas. Bechoroth 32b

What need then is there for the text ‘It shall not be redeemed’? If it has no bearing on the subject of haramim, make it bear on the subject of tithing [as regards selling]. But why not say: Make it bear on the subject of a firstling? — It is reasonable to maintain that the word ge'ulah used in connection with haramim is [to be applied to tithing since the identical word] ge'ulah [is used with reference to tithing] as with the former.

R. Ashi says: ‘It shall not be redeemed’ mentioned in connection with tithing means that it shall not be sold. Said R. Ashi: Whence can I prove this? [Scripture writes]: Then both it and that for which it is exchanged shall be holy; it shall not be redeemed. Now, when is it that the law of Substitution applies? When [the animal] is alive. Therefore, when may it not be redeemed? When it is alive, thus implying that after having been slaughtered it may be redeemed. But does it not require presentation and valuation? Therefore you must deduce from here that the text ‘It shall not be redeemed’ means that it shall not be sold. This would indeed hold good according to him who holds that objects consecrated for the altar are included in the law of presentation and valuation. But according to him who holds that objects consecrated for the altar are not included in the law of presentation and valuation, what can you reply? — We mean this [R. Ashi argues]: Is there any object which cannot be redeemed when alive and can yet be redeemed after being slaughtered! — But why not? [It is natural that] when an object is alive, its holiness being strong, it cannot be redeemed, whereas after its slaughtering, its holiness having been weakened, it may be that it can be redeemed! — But is it not a matter of course? For if when the animal is alive, when it is qualified to effect redemption [Scripture says that] it cannot be redeemed, after having been slaughtered, when it has not the strength to effect redemption, how much more so is it the case that it cannot be redeemed? Consequently [we deduce from here that] the text ‘It shall not be redeemed’ means that it shall not be sold. But why does not the Divine Law then write explicitly ‘It shall not be sold’? — If the Divine Law had written ‘It shall not be sold’. I might have thought that it cannot indeed be sold, since he performed a secular action [in exchanging], but it can be redeemed, because its money enters [the coffers of] the Sanctuary, the Divine Law therefore writes ‘It shall not be redeemed’ teaching that it can neither be sold nor redeemed.

MISHNAH. BETH SHAMMAI SAY: AN ISRAELITE MUST NOT BE INVITED TO SHARE [A BLEMISHED FIRSTLING] WITH A PRIEST, WHEREAS BETH HILLEL PERMIT THIS.
EVEN IN THE CASE OF A HEATHEN.

GEMARA. Whose view does the Mishnah represent? — That of R. Akiba. For it has been taught:
Only a company all of whom are priests may enter for a share of a firstling. These are the words of Beth Shammai. But Beth Hillel permit even strangers. R. Akiba permits [according to Beth Hillel] even heathens. What is the reason of Beth Shammai? — It is written, And the flesh of them shall be thine, as the wave-breast and as the right shoulder [are thine]. Just as there priests may [eat] but not a lay Israelite, so here priests are allowed [to eat] but not an Israelite.

(1) Rashi for various reasons rejects this version and gives the following version: Without the analogy between tithing and haramim one can infer that tithing must not be sold, for the text ‘It shall not be sold’ in connection with haramim is not necessary, for if haramim are in the possession of the owners then they are holy, and if in the possession of the priest, then they are hullin. We therefore, declares Raba, maintain that the text ‘It shall not be sold’ refers to tithing.
(2) Lev. XXVII. 33.
(3) Therefore you must admit it does not come under the law of redemption and that its value does not assume any holiness, the selling being prohibited because a secular action was performed with the animal.
(4) I.e., non-priests.
(5) Num. XVIII, 18.
(6) In connection with the wave-breast and shoulder.
(7) For Scripture writes, Thou and thy sons and thy daughters with thee, thus excluding a lay Israelite.

Talmud - Mas. Bechoroth 33a

And Beth Hillel? — This is only the case in connection with an unblemished firstling but with reference to a blemished firstling, the text says. The unclean and the clean person shall eat it alike.
Now, if an unclean person who is forbidden to eat sacrifices of a minor grade may eat a firstling, how much more should a non-priest who may eat sacrifices of a minor grade be allowed to eat a firstling! But this argument can be refuted. The case of an unclean person is different, for he was permitted [and exempted] from the general rule in that he may officiate in the Temple service for the public.

And Beth Hillel? — Does [the Baraita] refer to Temple service? We are speaking of eating, and as regards eating, a non-priest has a better right!

‘And R. Akiba permits even in the case of a gentile’. What is the reason of R. Akiba? —
[Scripture says]: As the gazelle and as the hart: as the gazelle and the hart are permitted to be eaten by a gentile, so a firstling is permitted to be eaten by a gentile. And the other authority? — There are three texts [in Deuteronomy] mentioning the gazelle and the hart. One text is for what R. Isaac and R. Oshaiah taught, the other for what R. Eleazar ha-Kappar taught, and the last [to interpret as follows]: As a gazelle and hart are not subject to the law of the firstling and the priest's gift, so consecrated objects rendered unfit for sacrifices are not subject to the law of the firstling and the priest's gifts.

Our Rabbis taught: A firstling must not be given to eat to menstruant women. These are the words of Beth Shammai, whereas Beth Hillel say: We are allowed to give it to eat to menstruant women. What is the reason of Beth Shammai? — Scripture writes [with reference to a firstling]: ‘And the flesh of them shall be thine [as the wave-breast and as the right shoulder]’;¹¹ as there [in the case of the wave-breast etc.] menstruant women are forbidden to eat, so here menstruant women are forbidden to eat [the firstling]. And Beth Hillel!¹² This is only the case with an unblemished firstling, but as regards a blemished firstling, ‘the unclean as well as the clean may eat it alike’. And Beth Shammai? — This is only the case [that an unclean person may eat it] where the impurity does not issue from the body, but where the impurity issues from the body, it is not so, for we find that the Divine Law makes a distinction between impurity which issues from the body and impurity which does not issue from the body. For we have learnt: The paschal lamb which is offered [by those] in a state of uncleanness must not be eaten by zabim, zaboth,¹³ menstruant women or confined women.¹⁴ And Beth Hillel? There, [zabim etc. are forbidden to eat the paschal lamb] because Scripture explicitly made this clear in the text: ‘By reason of a dead body’,¹⁵ whereas here in connection with a firstling, the text says: ‘The unclean person’ in general, implying, without any distinction.

Our Rabbis taught: We must not flay an animal from the feet on a Holy Day;¹⁶ nor [on a weekday] when the animal is a firstborn [even blemished]; nor sacrifices rendered unfit.¹⁷ Now, we understand this as regards a Holy Day. because he undertakes a labour of which he can make no use [on that day], but as regards a firstling, who is the authority [for the law just quoted]? — Said R. Hisda: It is the view of Beth Shammai,¹⁸ who say: We must not give it to eat to menstruant women. ‘Nor sacrifices rendered unfit’. Who is the authority [for this]? — Said R. Hisda: It is the opinion of R. Eleazar b. R. Simeon.¹⁹ For it has been taught: If he has two sin-offerings in front of him, one unblemished and the other blemished, the unblemished one shall be offered up and the blemished one shall be redeemed.²¹ If, however, the blemished one was slaughtered before the blood of the unblemished animal was sprinkled, it may be eaten;²³ but [if it was slaughtered] after the blood of the unblemished animal was sprinkled, it is forbidden [to be eaten].²⁴ R. Eleazar b. R. Simeon however says: Even if the flesh [of the blemished one] is already in the pot, if the blood of the unblemished one had been sprinkled, it is forbidden [to be eaten].²⁵ And why does not R. Hisda interpret [the above Baraitha] altogether in accordance with Beth Shammai?²⁶ — Perhaps Beth Shammai is stringent only with reference to a firstling, since its holiness is from birth, but in the case of sacrifices which have become unfit, whose holiness is not from birth, the case is different.

(1) What is their reason?
(2) Only in this case do we compare it with the wave-breast and shoulder, as the text there deals with an unblemished animal.
(3) Deut. XV, 22.
(4) If there was no priest levitically clean in that particular priests’ division on duty, the Temple service on behalf of the community may be performed by a priest even in a state of levitical uncleanness, there being a scriptural text, ‘In its appointed season’, which implies that even on the Sabbath or in a state of uncleanness the Paschal lamb may sometimes be brought. v. Pes. 66b.
(5) To eat than an unclean priest, as stated above, for there is no example where an unclean priest is allowed to eat and a non-priest is forbidden.
(6) The first Tanna who states that according to Beth Hillel the permission only refers to an Israelite but not to a gentile.
(7) Deut. XV, 22.
(8) Ibid. XII. 15. 22; XV, 22.
(9) In Mak. 22a; v. Tosaf. a.l.
(10) Hul. 28a.
(11) Num. XVIII, 18.
(12) How will they interpret this text?
(13) Men and women afflicted with gonorrhoea.
(14) For although where the greater part of the community is unclean, the Paschal lamb may still be brought, this only applies to those who were unclean through handling a corpse; Pes. 95b.

(15) Num. IX, 10.

(16) For the purpose of making e.g., a mechanics’ bellows with it.

(17) Although they were redeemed and ritually cut for food.

(18) Who hold that a blemished first-born remains holy even after its slaughtering, and since in the case of an unblemished firstling, flaying in this manner would be prohibited because he impairs the flesh for fear of cutting the skin, so the same ruling applies to a blemished firstling.

(19) Who imposes restrictions on sacrifices rendered unfit for the altar.

(20) Setting two animals apart so that in case one is lost or becomes blemished, the other would take its place.

(21) And the money is placed in the special Temple chest for free will-offerings.

(22) After its redemption.

(23) And although the sprinkling of the blood of the unblemished animal took place before the flesh of the blemished animal was eaten, it is still permissible to eat the latter, once it has been permitted to be eaten when slaughtered.

(24) Not even to benefit therefrom in any way, for it is a sin-offering whose owner has already been atoned for and is therefore condemned to die.

(25) Although its slaughtering took place before the sprinkling of the blood of the unblemished animal and although the flesh in the pot is considered as boiled, since it was not to be eaten till after the sprinkling of the other animal, it is forbidden to be eaten altogether, for it is like a sin-offering whose owner has already atoned for, retaining its holy status even after its slaughtering, v. Tem. 24a.

(26) It is now assumed that just as Beth Shammai are stringent with regard to a firstling, so they are stringent with regard to other unfit sacrifices after being slaughtered.

Talmud - Mas. Bechoroth 33b

And why not interpret [the above Baraitha] altogether in accordance with R. Eleazar son of R. Simeon? — Perhaps R. Eleazar son of R. Simeon holds that it is forbidden only in the case of sacrifices which have become unfit, for they are competent to be redeemed, but in the case of a firstling which is not competent to be redeemed, it is different. But does not R. Eleazar son of R. Simeon accept [the preceding Mishnah]: All consecrated objects which become unfit may be sold in the market, slaughtered in the market and weighed by the pound? From this We see that since there is a benefit for the Sanctuary, the Rabbis permitted it; here also then, since there is a benefit for the Sanctuary, let the Rabbis permit its flaying? — Said R. Mari the son of R. Kahana: What benefit he obtains through selling the skin [at a high price], he loses by spoiling the flesh. In the Palestinian colleges it was said in the name of Rabina: [The reason is] because it appears like doing work with sacrificial animals. R. Jose b. Abin says: [It is a precautionary measure] lest he raise herds from them.

MISHNAH. IF A FIRSTLING HAS AN ATTACK OF CONGESTION WE MUST NOT LET ITS BLOOD EVEN IF IT DIES [AS A RESULT]. THESE ARE THE WORDS OF R. JUDAH. BUT THE SAGES SAY: HE MAY LET BLOOD. ONLY HE MUST NOT MAKE A BLEMISH. AND IF HE MADE A BLEMISH, HE MUST NOT SLAUGHTER IT ON ACCOUNT OF THIS. R. SIMEON HOWEVER SAYS: HE MAY LET BLOOD, EVEN THOUGH HE MAKES A BLEMISH.

GEMARA. Our Rabbis taught: We may let blood of a firstling which had an attack of congestion, in a part [of the body] where it is not made blemished, but we must not let blood in a part [of the body] where a blemish is caused. These are the words of R. Meir. But the Sages say: He may let blood even in a part which makes it blemished, only he must not slaughter it on account of that blemish. R. Simeon however says: It may also be slaughtered on account of that blemish. R. Judah says: We must not let blood for it even if it dies [as a result]. R. Eleazar taught his son as follows: A similar difference of opinion exists with reference to a jug of terumah. For we have learnt: If there is a jug of terumah concerning which there is a doubt as to its levitical cleanness, R. Eliezer says: If it was lying in a filthy place, he must put it in a cleanly place, and if it was open, he must cover it. R. Joshua says: If it was lying in a clean place, he must put it in a filthy place and if it was covered, he must open it, while R. Gamaliel says: He must not introduce any new factor. Now R. Meir will hold the view of R. Eliezer, the Rabbis will hold according to the view of R. Joshua and R. Judah will hold the view of R. Gamaliel. But whence [is this proven]? It may be that R. Meir holds this view only here because he does it directly, but there, where the effect is caused indirectly, he holds the view of R. Joshua. And it may be that R. Eliezer holds this view only [in connection with doubtful terumah], in case Elijah should come and pronounce it clean, but in this case, where if you leave it the animal dies, he holds the view of the Rabbis! And [perhaps] the Rabbis hold their view only here, for if he leaves it, it dies, but there, in case Elijah should come and pronounce it clean, they hold with R. Eliezer! [And perhaps R. Joshua holds his view only there because the effect is caused indirectly, but here, where the effect is direct, he may even hold the view of R. Eliezer!]

And [perhaps] R. Judah holds his view only here, for he does it directly, but where the effect is merely caused indirectly, he may agree with R. Joshua. And [perhaps] R. Gamaliel may hold his view only there, in case Elijah should come and pronounce it clean, but here if he leaves the animal, it dies, he agrees with the Rabbis! And moreover the difference of opinion here is with reference to the interpretation of Scriptural texts, and there too the difference of opinion is with reference to the interpretation of Scriptural texts! for R. Hiyya b. Abba reported in the name of R. Johanan: All are agreed that one who added a transgression to the leavening effected by another person is guilty [of breaking the law in this connection]. for Scripture says: It shall not be baked with leaven. No meal-offering . . . shall be made with leaven. All are also agreed in the case of one who adds [a transgression] to the mutilation caused by another person that he is guilty for Scripture writes: That which hath its stones bruised or crushed or torn or cut, [ye shall not offer unto the Lord]. Now if he is guilty for cutting [the stones], how much more so is he guilty for tearing them! The purpose of the text is therefore to include the case of tearing after another person had cut as rendering him guilty. The point at issue, however, is with reference to causing a blemish to a blemished animal, R. Meir holding [that we emphasize the text]: There shall be no blemish therein, whereas the Rabbis hold [that we emphasize the full beginning]: It shall be perfect to be accepted. All that does R. Meir do with the text: ‘It shall be perfect to be accepted’? — He requires it to exclude the case of an animal which possessed a blemish originally. But is not the case of an originally blemished animal obviously excluded, since it is just a palm-tree? Rather it is required to exclude the case of sacrifices rendered unfit [for the altar] after their redemption. You might be inclined to assume that since they must not be shorn or worked, they are also forbidden to be blemished. He therefore informs us [that it is not so]. And as regards the Rabbis, does not Scripture write: ‘There shall be no blemish therein’? — [This text] forbids causing a blemish even indirectly, for it has been taught: Scripture says: ‘There shall be no blemish therein’. I am here told

(1) As he holds that unfit sacrifices retain holiness even after having been slaughtered, and it is the same with a blemished firstling.
(2) And therefore one may flay the skin of a firstling from its feet.
(3) We see therefore that the animal does not retain its holy status because of the advantage to hekdesh in allowing it to be sold in the market etc.
(4) Cutting away some of the flesh together with the skin.
(5) Lit. ‘the West’.
(6) Preparing the skin for a bellows when it is still on the sacrificial animal, and one can still say that the Baraita above which forbids the flaying of the skin from the feet expresses the view of all the authorities concerned.
(7) The prohibition of flaying from the feet is according to all the authorities concerned.
(8) If you permit him to flay the skin from the feet from the unfit sacrifices he may delay killing the animals until he finds somebody who wants whole skins, meanwhile rearing stocks from these disqualified sacrificial animals. This might eventually lead to committing the offence of shearing or working them. Hence the flaying from the feet is prohibited by all the authorities concerned.
Of not letting blood. It is forbidden even in a part of the animal where it can heal again, for if you permit in this case, since the owner's property is at stake, he may do the same in the case where an actual blemish might be caused.

Not to cut nor damage the ear or lip, parts which cannot heal.

Since he was responsible for the blemish, but must wait for another blemish to appear.

For R. Simeon holds that a forbidden act done unintentionally is not penalized.

For he must not let it die.

Var. lec. Hiyya b. Abba taught his son.

V. Ter. VIII, 8.

For R. Meir, in order to save the animal, permits blood-letting where a blemish is not caused, and similarly R. Eliezer maintains that we must avoid increasing uncleanness and must put the terumah in a clean place.

For the Rabbis permit making a blemish in order that it may be fit for food like R. Joshua who holds that he put the terumah in a filthy place so that it may become unclean and its liquid contents become fit for aromatic sprinkling.

R. Judah who holds that, although the firstling dies without blood-letting, he must do neither one thing nor the other, is in accord with R. Gamaliel.

Actually making a blemish. Therefore he maintains that, rather than do this, he must let the animal die.

As he merely leaves it in a filthy place and thus causes it to become unclean eventually.

By declaring that, for example, no dead reptile touched the terumah.

Inserted with Sh. Mek.

Even the Rabbis, although they maintain that blood-letting of a first-born is not the same as causing a blemish to an animal; for what animal can be more blemished than one which might die without blood-letting?

Viz., by baking it.

Lev. VI. 10.

Baking is included in making leaven, and Scripture means to inform us that just as baking is a single act and one is guilty on account of it, so any single act in connection with leavening, involves guilt.

Ibid. II, 11. Baking is included in making leaven, and Scripture means to inform us that just as baking is a single act and one is guilty on account of it, so any single act in connection with leavening, involves guilt.

Ibid. XXII, 24.

Scripture subsequently saying: Neither shall ye do thus in your land.

E.g., a first-born which had an attack of congestion.

Lev. XXII, 21, the word $\text{אכ}^4$, implying that any blemish is forbidden, even in an already blemished animal.

Continuing: There shall be no etc., intimating that the prohibition of blemishing refers to a sound animal.

I.e., before the animal's consecration.

Possessing no sanctification at all.

Talmud - Mas. Bechoroth 34a

only that he must not cause a blemish directly; whence is it learnt that he must not bring a case of pressed figs or dough and put it on the ear so that a dog may come and eat it, [with the possibility of a blemish being caused]? Therefore the text says ‘There shall be no blemish’. [It says] blemish and [it adds] ‘there shall be no blemish’.¹

And there also the difference of opinion is in the interpretation of Scriptural texts. For Rab Judah reported in the name of Samuel, and so did Resh Lakish say, and likewise R. Nahman reported in the name of Rabbah b. Abbuha: [Scripture says]: And I, behold. I have given thee the charge of My heave-offerings.² R. Eliezer holds that Scripture refers to two kinds of terumah,³ one clean terumah and the other terumah held in suspense,⁴ and the Divine Law says: ‘keep charge of it’ [not to make it unnecessarily unclean]. And [how does] R. Joshua [explain this]? — The written text is ‘My offering’.⁵ Does this mean to say that R. Eliezer holds that the traditional reading [vowels] must guide us? The following was cited in contradiction. [Scripture says]: Seeing that he hath dealt deceitfully with her,⁶ since he spread his cloth over her,⁷ he is not permitted to sell her again. These are the words of R. Akiba, whereas R. Eliezer says: ‘Since he hath dealt deceitfully with her’,⁸ he cannot sell her again! Rather here the difference of opinion is in connection with the text ‘Thee’ [for Scripture⁹ says: And I, behold, I have given thee the charge of My heave-offerings]. R. Joshua holds the interpretation is: The terumah that is fit [to be eaten] by ‘thee’, protect from further uncleanness, whereas that which is not fit for thee, thou needest not protect. And [how does] R. Eliezer [interpret it]? — Doubtful terumah is also fit terumah for thee, in case Elijah comes and pronounces it clean.

Rab Judah reported in the name of Samuel: The halachah is like R. Simeon. R. Nahman b. Isaac demurred: Which R. Simeon? Is it the R. Simeon of the Mishnah? But has not Samuel already informed us that a forbidden act effected unintentionally is permissible? Did not R. Hiyya b. Ashi report in the name of Rab that the halachah was according to Rab Judah, whereas R. Hanin b. Ashi reported in the name of Samuel that the halachah is according to R. Simeon? And R. Hiyya b. Abin taught without naming any authorities: Rab says, the opinion of R. Simeon is the rule, whereas Samuel says: The opinion of R. Simeon is the rule? — Rather you must say that it refers to the R. Simeon of the Baraita. And R. Shisha b. Idid taught this explicitly: Rab Judah reported in the name of Samuel: The halachah is like R. Simeon of the Baraita.

MISHNAH. IF ONE MAKES A SLIT IN THE EAR OF A FIRSTBORN ANIMAL. HE MUST NEVER SLAUGHTER IT. THESE ARE THE WORDS OF R. ELIEZER. WHEREAS THE SAGES SAY: HE MAY SLAUGHTER IT ON ACCOUNT OF ANOTHER BLEMISH, WHEN IT APPEARS ON IT.

GEMARA. And does R. Eliezer penalize in perpetuity? The following was cited in contradiction: If one had a baḥereth

1 One text referring to a direct blemish and the other to an indirect blemish.
2 Num. XVIII, 8.
3 The emphasis is on the plural ‘heave-offerings’.
4 Neither eaten nor burnt, there being a doubt concerning its levitical purity.
5 The word is written defectively. הַנֵּר הָרִים not הַנֵּר הָרִים referring only to one terminal, viz. clean.
6 Ex. XXI. 8.
7 Since the master has taken her under his protection by espousing her unto himself for a wife, the father has no further claim on her, even if she became divorced. The word דַּבֵּנָה, here is derived from the word דַּבֵּנָה, a garment, the pointing being authoritative.
8 Having sold her as a maid-servant, the father is not allowed to sell her again as a maid-servant, but he may sell her again if she became divorced. R. Eliezer holds that we follow the lettering of the text which is without a yod as if from the word דַּבֵּנָה, R. Eliezer reads דַּבֵּנָה (Rashi). V. Kid. 18b.
9 So Sh. Mek. Cur. edd.: The difference is in the following.
10 Who holds in the Mishnah that he may let blood although he makes a blemish, but he does not state that he may slaughter the firstling on account of this.
11 Who holds that a forbidden act produced unintentionally is forbidden.
12 R. Hiyya and R. Hanan.
13 V. supra 25a.
14 Who says that one may even slaughter the firstling on account of the blemish caused unintentionally.
15 Viz., a priest.
16 A bright white spot on the skin, ultimately one of the symptoms of leprosy.

Talmud - Mas. Bechoroth 34b

and it was cut off [unintentionally] he becomes clean. If, however, he cut it off intentionally. R. Eliezer says: When another plague spot appears on him [from which he is pronounced clean], then he is cleansed from [the first]. But the Sages say: [In order for him to be clean], either [the second plague] must break out all over his flesh, or [before the cutting off of the first leprous spot], it must have decreased to less than the size of a bean? — Rabbah and R. Joseph both replied: R. Eliezer penalizes thus only where a person's property is concerned, not where his body is concerned. As regards his property [i.e. the firstling], one can say that he may do it [in either case] but as regards his body, can it be said that he would do it in either case?⁴ Said Raba: Is there only a contradiction between R. Eliezer here [in the Mishnah] and R. Eliezer [in Nega'im]? Is there not a similar contradiction between the Rabbis [in the Mishnah] and the Rabbis [in Nega'im]?⁵ The difficulty with regard to R. Eliezer has already been solved and as regards the difficulty in the case of the Rabbis, this is also no problem. In the one case we punish him for what he did, and in the other also we punish him for what he did. In one case, [that of a firstling], we punish him for what he did, for how did he intend to make it permitted? By means of this blemish. The Rabbis therefore punished him by ordering that the firstling should not be permitted on account of this very blemish.⁶ In the other case we punish him for what he did. For how did he intend to make himself appear clean? By cutting off this [bahereth]. The Rabbis therefore punished him for this very cut.⁷

R. Papa inquired: Does it mean ‘He shall become clean’⁸ or ‘And then he shall become clean’? What is the practical difference?⁹ In the case of a bridegroom on whom there appeared this [second] leprous spot. For we learnt: In the case of a bridegroom on whom there appears a plague spot, we give him seven days [of the wedding week not to see the priest] — to him, to his garment and to his covering.¹⁰ And likewise in the case of any person on a Festival, we give him the whole Festival [in which not to see a priest].¹¹ Now if you say that it means ‘He shall become clean’ then he is clean¹² from the first plague and as regards the second, we wait seven days for him. But if you say that it means ‘And then he shall become clean’ of what avail is it that he is not unclean from the second plague, if he remains unclean by reason of the first plague?¹³ What [is the answer]? — Let [the question] stand over.

R. Jeremiah inquired from R. Ze'ira: If one slit the ear of a firstling and he died, what is the ruling as regards penalizing his son? Should you take as a guide the rule that if a man sells his slave to a heathen and he dies, his son is penalized after him, the reason [there] may be because every day he is prevented from carrying out commandments.¹⁴ And should you be guided by the rule that if a man plans some work for [the intermediate days of] the Festival and dies, his son is not penalized after him, the reason [there] may be because he did not actually do anything forbidden.¹⁵ What then is the ruling here?¹⁶ Did the Rabbis penalize the man himself and he is no more, or perhaps does the penalty of the Rabbis apply to his property and this is still in existence? — He replied to him: We have learnt this [in a Mishnah]: A field which had its thorns removed in the sabbatical year may be sown in the period beginning with the end of the sabbatical year.¹⁷ If, however, the field had been improved or manured with [the excrement of cattle], it must not be sown in the period beginning with the end of the sabbatical year.¹⁸ And R. Jose b. Hanina said: We hold a tradition: If he improved the field and died, his son may sow it. Consequently we see that the Rabbis punished the man himself, but the Rabbis did not punish his son; here also the Rabbis punish the man himself but not his son. Said Abaye: We hold a tradition:

(1) For this proves that the first leprous spot would also have healed had it not been cut off.
(2) Scripture saying: If the leprosy have covered all the flesh, he shall pronounce him clean. Lev. XIII. 13.
(3) But if the bahereth was of the size of a bean before being cut off, he is never clean. (Neg. VII, 5). Consequently, we see that R. Eliezer does not condemn him to be unclean for ever.
(4) For we argue that if by causing the blemish he is permitted to slaughter the animal, then he benefits thereby, and if he has to wait till another blemish appears, then he has lost nothing, as in any case he intended waiting for another blemish to appear. We therefore condemn him never to slaughter the firstling, so as to prevent him causing blemishes.
(5) That, if we do not make him unclean for ever, he will cut off the bahereth, and put himself in a doubtful position and wait for the next plague. He will not do so, first because if there does not appear another plague spot he will never be clean, and secondly, because even if there appears another plague spot what benefit is it to him, since he is afflicted as before? It is therefore better for him not to cut off the bahereth and to wait in case it heals.
(6) Who evidently condemn him to be unclean for ever unless it spreads over the whole flesh or it decreased etc.
(7) Treating the firstling as if nothing at all had been done to it.
Regarding him as if he had never cut off the bahereth at all, so that even if he becomes clean from the second plague, he is not clean from the first, unless the latter plague covers all his flesh.

Implying that directly there appears a second plague, he is clean from the first.

Since in any case he remains unclean until the second plague heals, even if he is clean from the first.

Should a plague appear on it.

Neg. III. 2.

Immediately when the other appears, and he is not unclean on account of the latter, as we wait until after the wedding week or after the Festival.

Of what use is it that we wait in connection with the second plague, not allowing the priest to examine it, seeing that he is not clean from the first until the second is healed?

There being a penalty for one who sells his slave to a heathen, the owner being required to redeem him even up to ten times his price.

In his non-Jewish environment.

To cut e.g., the grapes of his vineyard, since if a real loss would be entailed through not working during the Festival, the work is permitted, but this man deliberately arranged for this work to be done during the intermediate days, though he could have done it earlier.

For he died before the Festival.

Where he actually committed an offence in causing a blemish to a firstling.

By tilling oftener than usual or by unloading manure on it.

Since the work is important, and we therefore punish him.

Talmud - Mas. Bechoroth 35a

If a man made unclean food levitically prepared and died, his son is not punished after him. What is the reason? A damage not discernible [in the object itself] is not regarded as a tangible damage. It is therefore only a rabbinical penalty. Thus the Rabbis imposed a penalty upon the man himself, whereas the Rabbis did not impose a penalty upon his son.

GEMARA. CHILDREN WERE ONCE PLAYING etc. It is necessary [to state both these cases in the Mishnah]. For if it had informed us only of the case of the heathen, I might have thought that the reason was because there can be no fear [if we permit] that he will acquire the habit [of making blemishes], but in the case of a minor, where he might acquire the habit [of making blemishes], I might have said that it was forbidden. And if it had informed us only of the case of a minor, I might have thought that the reason was because one would not mistake [the case of a minor] for an adult, but in the case of the quaestor, where one might mistake this for the case of any adult, I might have said that it was forbidden. There is need [therefore for the Mishnah to state both cases].

R. Hisda reported in the name of Kattina: This was taught only when they replied to him [in the words]: ‘Until it has a blemish’, but if they reply to him in the words: ‘Until it was made blemished’, it is as if they had told him: ‘Go, make a blemish’. Said Raba: Now does not the permission come automatically? What difference then is it whether they replied to him in the words: ‘Until it has a blemish’ or ‘Until it was made blemished’? Even if they replied to him in the words ‘Until it was made blemished’ the permission comes automatically and thus there is no difference.

THIS IS THE RULE: WHEREVER THE BLEMISH IS CAUSED WITH THE KNOWLEDGE AND CONSENT [OF THE OWNER], IT IS FORBIDDEN. What does this include? — It includes the case where the blemish was caused indirectly.

BUT IF IT IS NOT WITH HIS KNOWLEDGE. This includes the case where they casually mentioned the fact.

MISHNAH. IF A FIRSTLING WAS RUNNING AFTER HIM AND HE KICKED IT AND THEREBY BLEMISHED IT. HE MAY SLAUGHTER IT ON ACCOUNT OF THIS.

GEMARA. Said R. Papa: This was taught only when he kicked it while it was running, but if he kicked it after it had stopped running, it is not so. But is not this obvious? — I might have assumed that the reason why he kicked it was because he recalled his distress. He therefore teaches us [that this was not the reason]. Some there are who say: R. Papa said, Do not say that this applies only while it was running, but not after it had stopped running; for even after it had stopped running [the same law applies], for the reason that he recalled his distress.

Said Rab Judah: It is permitted to cause a blemish to a firstling before it is born. Said Raba: [E.g.,] a kid in its ears and a lamb in its lips. Some there are who say: A lamb even in its ears; for one can say that the animal came forth [from the womb] with its temples first. Said R. Papa: If when the animal eats, [the defect] is not visible, but when it bleats the defect is visible, it is considered a blemish. What does he wish to teach us? We have already learnt this [in a Mishnah]: If the incisors were broken off or levelled [with the gum] or if the molars were torn out [completely], it is considered a blemish. Now, what is the reason in the latter case? Is it not because when the animal bleats [the defect is visible]? — Said Raba: R. Papa also merely explains the Mishnah [as follows]: Why is it that if they were torn out they are considered a blemish? Because when the animal bleats, the defect is visible.

MISHNAH. IN RESPECT OF ALL BLEMISHES WHICH MIGHT COME THROUGH THE AGENCY OF A MAN, LAY ISRAELITE SHEPHERDS ARE TRUSTWORTHY WHEREAS PRIESTS SHEPHERDS ARE NOT TRUSTWORTHY.

R. Simeon b. Gamaliel says: He is trustworthy as regards somebody else’s firstling, but he is not trustworthy as regards his own. R. Meir says: One who is suspected of neglecting any religious matter must not pronounce judgment on it nor give evidence concerning it.

GEMARA. R. Johanan and R. Eleazar [differ as to the interpretation of the Mishnah]. One explains it [as follows]: The expression ‘LAY ISRAELITE SHEPHERDS’ means [lay Israelites] in the employ of priests are trustworthy, for we do not apprehend that their testimony may be influenced by their bread and butter. The expression ‘PRIESTS’ SHEPHERDS means: [shepherds who are priests] in the employ of Israelites are not trustworthy, since the shepherd might say, ‘Since I work for him, he will not pass over me and give it to another’. And the same ruling [of the testimony being untrustworthy] applies to [a shepherd who was] a priest with reference to [the firstling of] another priest for we suspect them of favouring each other. And thereupon R. Simeon comes and says: HE IS TRUSTWORTHY AS REGARDS SOMEBODY ELSE'S FIRSTLING; BUT HE IS NOT TRUSTWORTHY AS REGARDS HIS OWN. And R. Meir then adds: HE WHO IS SUSPECTED OF DISREGARDING ANY RELIGIOUS MATTER MUST NOT PRONOUNCE JUDGMENT ON IT NOR GIVE EVIDENCE CONCERNING IT. But the other [teacher] explains it [as follows]: The expression ISRAELITE SHEPHERDS means: [Shepherds of Israelite sheep] even if priests, are trustworthy.

(1) By being condemned to make compensation, although the man himself is compelled to do so.
(2) For the food lies before him and no visible damage is perceived.
(3) On this whole passage v. Git. 44a-b.
(4) Having never been shorn, because it was a firstling.
(5) That the animal was allowed to grow so old?
(6) For one cannot say that the heathen planned to make it permissible.
(7) I.e., where the owner gave instructions.
(8) Therefore, in the cases of the quaestor and the children, the animals were permitted. When, however, other firstlings had their ears slit, the Sages forbade them, because the owners did not prevent this, and therefore it is as if this were done with their knowledge.
(9) Of the quaestor and of the children.
(10) Since he is a heathen, and in any case he is in the habit of doing forbidden things.
(11) Therefore if you permit the case of the first animal when he makes a blemish, he may go on repeating this.
(12) For it will not be said that because a blemish brought about by a minor is allowed, therefore the same ruling applies to an adult.
(13) For an observer might mistake this gentile who causes the blemish for an Israelite, and might say that as it is permitted in one case it is permitted in all adult cases.
(14) That the firstling is permitted through the heathen's action.
(15) Implying that a blemish appeared automatically on the animal, for we cannot then say that the heathen will infer from their words that firstlings are rendered permitted when blemished by human action.
(16) Implying, blemished by a man.
(17) The heathen, not being aware that the animal is permitted on account of his action, did not intend to make it permitted.
(18) E.g., where he placed dough or pressed dates on its ear and a dog came and took it.
(19) Where the quaestor did not ask them anything, but they on their own accord innocently pointed out to him that the old firstling was not permitted unless it was blemished.
(20) For he simply intended to save himself, and even in the case of a priest it is allowed that the animal is permitted.
(21) How the animal ran after him but his intention was not to cause a blemish.
(22) Lit., 'came-forth into the lighted space of the world'. The reason is because a first-born is only hallowed after leaving the womb.
(23) Its ears being long, they emerge before the whole head leaves the womb, and therefore it is allowed to blemish them.
(24) Its lips appearing before its head, whereas the ears being small do not appear until after the head has come forth, when, of course, the animal becomes sanctified.
(25) The ears also coming forth before the other limbs.
(26) Sh. Mek. cur. edd. Raba.
(27) The cut in the lips. Firstlings may only be slaughtered on account of open blemishes or defects.
(28) But if they were merely broken or levelled, this is not considered a blemish.
(29) V. infra 39b.
(30) So Sh. Mek. cur. edd. R. Papa said: Raba also.
(31) That a man is capable of doing. e.g., blinding the eyes, slitting the ear, or breaking a leg.
(32) To declare that the blemished came of themselves.
For they are suspected of deliberately bringing about a blemish.

I.e., by their dependence on their employers. \( נו\) ; means lit., ‘quaffing’, and in general eating and drinking. Alter: by the share they would have in the firstling when slaughtered.

And therefore we suspect them like the priest owners of causing a blemish.

Thinking that by giving favourable evidence for his firstling now, he will on some future occasion be repaid when having obtained an unblemished firstling from an Israelite, he will make it blemished and this priest will testify that the blemish appeared of itself on the animal.

Whether his master's or belonging to another.

Where an Israelite had already given him a firstling.

1

2

3

4

5

6

7

8

9

10

11

12

13

14

15

16

17

Talmud - Mas. Bechoroth 35b

for the shepherd might indeed say: ‘My employer will not pass over a priest who is a rabbinic student, to give it to me’. The expression PRIESTS’ ANIMALS means, [animals of priests], and even if the shepherds are Israelites, they are not trustworthy, for we fear lest their testimony may be influenced by their bread and butter. And how much more so is this the case with a [shepherd] priest working for [an employer] priest, that the former's testimony is untrustworthy, for we suspect them of favouring each other as well as being apprehensive of their bread and butter. Thereupon R. SIMEON SAYS: HE IS TRUSTWORTHY AS REGARDS SOMEBODY ELSE’S FIRSTLING, BUT HE IS NOT TRUSTWORTHY AS REGARDS HIS OWN. And R. Meir comes and adds: HE WHO IS SUSPECTED OF DISREGARDING A CERTAIN RELIGIOUS MATTER MUST NOT PRONOUNCE JUDGMENT ON IT NOR GIVE HIS TESTIMONY CONCERNING IT.

Now there is no difficulty according to him who says that the expression ‘ISRAELITE SHEPHERDS’ means shepherds of [Israelite animals] and, even if priests, they are trustworthy, it is for this reason that R. Meir thereupon says: HE WHO IS SUSPECTED OF IGNORING A CERTAIN RELIGIOUS MATTER MUST NOT PRONOUNCE JUDGMENT ON IT NOR GIVE EVIDENCE CONCERNING IT. But according to him who holds that the expression ‘PRIESTS’ SHEPHERDS’ means [that shepherds who are priests] in the employ of Israelites are not trustworthy, what does R. Meir teach us [here]? Is not his view identical with that of the first Tanna quoted above? — The difference between them is the ruling of R. Joshua the son of Kapusai. For it has been taught: R. Joshua the son of Kapusai says: Two independent witnesses are required to testify as regards a firstling in the possession of the priest. R. Simeon b. Gamaliel says: Even his son or his daughter may give evidence. Rabbi says: Even the evidence of ten people is not accepted if they are members of his household. According to which authority will be the ruling which R. Hisda reported in the name of R. Kattina, [who said]: An uncertain firstling born in the possession of an Israelite requires two independent persons to give evidence? [You ask] according to which authority? — It is, of course, according to that of R. Joshua the son of Kapusai. R. Nahman says: The owners are permitted to give evidence [in respect to an uncertain firstling]. If you will not say so, [but that an Israelite is suspected], how according to the view of R. Meir can he give evidence with reference to [the blemish of] a tithing animal? But surely with regard to a tithing animal [even the owner] is trustworthy, since if he wished he could have maimed the entire herd before tithing? Rather question [as follows]: In a case of an uncertain firstling, who can testify according to the view of R. Meir? And if you will say ‘indeed it is so that there is no remedy [in these circumstances], have we not learnt: For R. Jose used to say: Wherever there is another [animal] in its stead in the hands of the priest, the Israelite is exempt from the priests’ gifts. whereas R. Meir declares him liable? Hence, therefore, we can deduce that the owners are permitted to give evidence [with reference to a doubtful firstling], priests alone being suspected as regards blemishes, whereas Israelites are not suspected as regards blemishes.

It has been stated: R. Nahman says: The halachah is like R. Simeon b. Gamaliel. Raba says, however: The halachah is like Rabbi. But did Raba [actually] state this? Did not Raba say: If the owner [of a firstling] was with us outside the house, and the animal entered whole and emerged injured, they can testify concerning it? Read: All its owners were with us we have no apprehension. If this be the case, what need is there to state it? — You might be under the impression that we entertain a suspicion. He therefore teaches us [that it is not so]. And the law is in agreement with the view of R. Simeon b. Gamaliel; and only in the case of his son and his daughter is the testimony believed, but not in the case of his wife. What is the reason? — His wife is considered like himself.

Said R. Papa to Abaye: According to the view of R. Meir who holds that one who is suspected of disregarding a religious matter must not pronounce judgment on it nor give evidence concerning it, and who also maintains that one who is suspected of disregarding one religious matter is suspected of disregarding the whole Torah, then a priest should not be able to act as a judge: But is it not written: And by their word shall every controversy and every stroke be?

(1) As a rule, shepherds were ignorant people. We therefore trust him, for why should he lie since he will not benefit?
(2) In the case of a priestly shepherd with a master who is also a priest, the shepherd's testimony is believed.
(3) As priests are suspected with reference to firstlings of causing them blemishes.
(4) Differing with R. Simeon who permits even the testimony of a shepherd priest working for a priestly master, and also differing with the first Tanna above who holds that even a shepherd who is a priest looking after Israelite animals is trustworthy, whereas R. Meir holds that shepherds who are priests are always suspected.
(5) Lit., ‘from the market’. Two persons who have no connection with the priest and who may even be priests themselves.
(6) R. Simeon's view is in accordance with his ruling above that one is trustworthy with reference to a firstling belonging to another but not his own, and his father's is also not his own.
(7) Whereas even one independent person is trustworthy in these matters, or according to R. Joshua, two independent persons. Now the first Tanna mentioned above is in agreement with the view of R. Joshua. for the first Tanna holds that shepherds who are priests, whether with Israelite or priestly employers, are not trustworthy, but independent priests are trustworthy, even as regards firstlings of priests. R. Meir says that even an independent priest is suspected, a view which is opposed to that of R. Joshua. Rabbenu Gershom interprets this as follows: The first Tanna who says that Israelite shepherds even in the employ of priests are trustworthy does not agree with R. Joshua's view, for according to the latter only independent priests are trustworthy. But R. Meir agrees with R. Joshua that we only suspect the priest's testimony where there is dependence on others, but the evidence of two independent priests is accepted.
(8) E.g., a ewe which gave birth to two males, the Mishnah (17a) stating that one belongs to the priest and the other remains in the possession of the Israelite as a doubtful firstling which is left to pasture until it is blemished and is then eaten.
(9) That the blemish was not caused intentionally.
(10) For just as he holds that two independent persons are necessary to give evidence where the master is a priest, similarly two independent persons are required to give evidence with reference to a doubtful firstling in the possession of an Israelite.
(11) For only priests are suspected but not Israelites.
(12) For R. Meir maintains that in a matter which one is suspected of disregarding, one is not believed even with reference to others, as according to R. Meir, even independent priests are not trustworthy (Rashi).
(13) And this could have been done legitimately, as the animals were hullin. Therefore, why not believe him that he did not maim the animal?
(14) If the owners are suspected, then Israelite owners are suspected in the case of a firstling of causing a blemish, and certainly priests who possess an uncertain firstling in their herd would be suspected.
(15) V. supra 18b for notes.
(16) We therefore see that according to R. Meir a doubtful firstling after becoming blemished is regarded as positive hullin.
(17) That even his son and daughter are trustworthy.
(18) That the blemish came of itself. This is assumed to refer to the other members of the household. We see, therefore, that only the priestly owner of a firstling is suspected and not the other members of the household.
Who have any connection with the animal, i.e., all the members of the household; and the shepherd within testifies with reference to the blemish.

That the shepherd himself caused the blemish, or that, after all, a member of the household remained within the house (Tosaf.). Another interpretation is: If witnesses testify that all the members of the household were outside when the animal emerged maimed, then their evidence is considered trustworthy and we do not suspect that the members of the household had been instrumental before leaving in bringing about the blemish by e.g., opening a pit or putting pressed dates on its ear so that a dog came and caused a blemish.

Deut. XXI, 5.

Talmud - Mas. Bechoroth 36a

R. Meir meant that we have fear, but did he actually presume [that he is to be suspected]?

The following query was put: Is the testimony of a witness reporting another witness considered as evidence in connection with a firstling — R. Ammi forbids, whereas R. Assi permits. Said R. Assi to R. Ammi: Did not the Tanna of the school of Manasseh teach: Only in connection with a woman is the evidence of a witness reporting an eye-witness valid? — Explain this [as follows]: It is valid only in respect of testimony which a woman is allowed to give. R. Yemar permitted the evidence of a witness reporting an eye-witness to be valid in connection with a firstling. Meremar designated to him the expression. ‘Yemar, the one who permits firstlings’. And the law is that the evidence of a witness reporting an eye-witness in connection with a firstling is valid.

Said R. Elai: If an animal was not thought to be a firstling and its owner [a priest] came and declared that it was a firstling with a blemish on it, he is believed. What does he teach us? ‘The mouth that bound is the mouth that loosens’. But have we not learnt this: A woman who said, ‘I was a married woman, but now I am divorced’ is believed, for ‘the mouth which bound is the mouth which loosens’? — You might be under the impression that there she is believed because if she wished she need not have said anything; but here, since it is impossible that he should not inform [the expert] — for [the priest] would not eat consecrated [unblemished] animals without the Temple walls — I might not have applied [the principle] ‘the mouth which bound is the mouth which loosens’. He therefore informs us [that he is believed]. For, if this were really so, he would have inflicted on it a recognizable blemish and have eaten it then. Mar b. Rab Ashi demurred to this ruling. Why should this be different from the following case? Once, someone hired out an ass to a person and he said to him: ‘Do not go the way of Nehar Pekod, where there is water; go the way of Naresh where there is no water’. But he went the way of Nehar Pekod and the ass died. He then came before Raba and said to him: ‘Indeed I went the way of Nehar Pekod, but there was no water [and still the ass died]. Said Raba: Why should he lie? If he wished he could say ‘I went the way of Naresh’. And Abaye explained: We do not apply the principle ‘why should he lie’ where there are witnesses! — But is the analogy correct? There [we are witnesses that] there certainly was water [on the way of Nehar Pekod], but here, [in connection with the firstling], is it certain that he caused the blemish? It is only a fear, and where there is only a question of a fear we do say ‘why should he lie’.

Rabina sat [lecturing] and reported this tradition without mentioning the authority. Said Raba junior to Rabina: We learnt this in the name of R. Ela.

R. Zadok had a firstling. He set down barley for it in wicker baskets of peeled willow twigs. As it was eating, its lip was slit. He came before R. Joshua. He said to him: ‘Have we made any difference between [a priest] who is a haber and [a priest] who is an ‘am ha-arez’? R. Joshua replied ‘Yes’. He thereupon came before Rabban Gamaliel. He said to him: ‘Have we made any difference between [a priest] who is a haber and a priest who is an ‘am ha-arez’? Rabban Gamaliel replied ‘No’.

R. Zadok said to him: ‘But R. Joshua told me "Yes"!’ He said: ‘Wait until the great debaters enter the Beth Hamidrash'. When they entered the Beth Hamidrash, the questioner arised and asked: ‘Have we made any difference between [a priest] who is a haber and one who is an ‘am ha-arez’? R. Joshua replied ‘No’. Thereupon Rabban Gamaliel said: ‘Was not the answer "Yes" reported to me in your name? Joshua, stand on your feet and let them testify against you’. R. Joshua stood up on his feet and said: ‘How shall I act? If indeed I were alive and he were dead, the living can contradict the dead. But since both he and I are alive, how can the living contradict the living?’ And Rabban Gamaliel was sitting and discoursing while R. Joshua stood on his feet, until all the people murmured and said to Huzspith the interpreter. ‘Silence’. And he was silent.

MISHNAH. A PRIEST'S WORD IS TAKEN IF HE SAYS ‘I HAVE SHOWN THIS FIRSTLING AND IT IS BLEMISHED’.

GEMARA. Rab Judah said that Rab said: A priest's word is taken if he says [to an expert]. ‘an Israelite gave me this firstling with a blemish on it’. What is the reason? ‘People are not presumed to tell a lie which is likely to be found out’. Said Raba: We have also learnt this: A PRIEST'S WORD IS TAKEN IF HE SAYS ‘I HAVE SHOWN THIS FIRSTLING AND IT IS BLEMISHED’. Now, what is the reason? Is it not because we say ‘people are not presumed to tell a lie which is likely to be found out’? — [No]. Where it is a case of consecrated animals without the Temple precincts, he will not eat but here, since priests are suspected, they are suspected.

R. Shizbi raised an objection: He who says to one who is not trustworthy with reference to tithing, ‘Purchase on my behalf produce from one who is trustworthy or from one who tithes’, he is not believed. Now why [is this so]? Let us adopt the principle that ‘people are not presumed to tell a lie which is likely to be found out’? — The case is different there,

(1) In ruling that one who is suspected of disregarding a certain religious matter is regarded as suspect in respect of the whole Torah.
(2) I.e., we entertain a fear and apprehension concerning other matters about which we have no ground for suspicion.
(3) Without some positive ground to go upon.
(4) To give evidence that the blemish was not caused intentionally.
(5) That her husband had died abroad, so that she can remarry. V. Shab. 145b.
(6) And with reference to a firstling, a woman's word is taken if she declares that a certain blemish was not brought about deliberately.
(7) Meant in a disparaging sense.
(8) The same person who said it was a firstling also said that it had a blemish on it for which he was not responsible and which he shows to the medical expert.
(9) The woman not being held to be married.
(10) And she may remarry.
(11) V. Keth. 22a.
(12) In the case of the woman.
(13) Since it was presumed that she was unmarried; therefore if there was a suspicion that she proposed marrying during her husband's lifetime without a divorce, she could have remained silent.
(14) In connection with a firstling.
(15) That the animal is a first-born, in order that the expert might inform him whether the blemish was a permanent or transitory one.
(16) As the penalty for this is excision, whereas maiming a firstling is only violating a negative precept.
(17) That we suspect the priest of causing the blemish.
(18) Which even an ignorant person would have recognized as such, and therefore, there would have been no need to bring the animal before us for the expert to declare that it was a permanent blemish, for no other person knew that he had a firstling. But where we are aware that the animal is a firstling, we do not believe him when he declares that the blemish was not caused by himself on the ground that he need not have come before us at all, for if he had slaughtered the animal without the expert's instructions, as everybody knew that he had a firstling, he would have been suspected of maiming
the animal,

(20) For we are witnesses that water is there all the time, and similarly here also, since we are witnesses that priests are suspected concerning blemishes, we should not say ‘why should he lie’?

(21) That he caused a blemish.

(22) Of R. Ela.

(23) R. Zadok.

(24) To submit the case to his decision.

(25) R. Zadok. He was a Tanna of priestly descent.

(26) There is a difference, and therefore being a haber you are not suspected.

(27) Tosaf. comments that this is the law, and there is in fact no distinction between a priest who is a haber or an ‘am ha-arez.

(28) Lit., ‘shield-bearers’, the great defenders of the Torah and the scholars.

(29) R. Zadok (R. Gershom).

(30) Not wishing to give a contrary decision in the presence of Rabban Gamaliel.

(31) He intended to annoy him.

(32) Tosaf. omits the expression. ‘Let them testify’ etc as having no bearing in this connection.

(33) ‘I therefore certainly said it and withdraw’ (Rashi). Tosaf. explains however as follows: ‘I meant to conceal what I said but I am unable to do so now.

(34) Became rebellious.

(35) Of R. Gamaliel. He was one of the martyrs of the Hadrianic persecutions.

(36) Lit., ‘stand’.

(37) To a medical expert.

(38) I.e., that it possesses a permanent blemish provided that there are witnesses to testify that the blemish was not caused intentionally.

(39) Lit., ‘with its blemish’.

(40) Lit., ‘likely to be revealed’, And here the Israelite can be asked. V. R.H. 22b, Zeb. 93b.

(41) I.e., by inquiry from the expert.

(42) One may still say that we cannot deduce from the Mishnah the principle ‘people are not presumed to tell a lie’ etc., and the reason why he is believed is as follows.

(43) Unblemished consecrated animals. Consequently, unless the expert had permitted the firstling on the evidence of witnesses, he would not have declared that the firstling was permitted to be slaughtered by him.

(44) Of causing blemishes to firstlings.

(45) Even in this case of causing a blemish and pretending that an Israelite gave an animal to him in a blemished state.

(46) Who is known not to be observant as regards tithing.

(47) Not to purchase produce from an ‘am ha-arez or, if he does so, to give dem'ai (v. Glos.) before selling it.

(48) On saying that he bought from a person trustworthy in these matters (Dem'ai IV, 5).

Talmud - Mas. Bechoroth 36b

for\(^1\) he can excuse himself by some subterfuge, [saying, ‘As far as I am concerned, his word is taken’].\(^2\) The second clause however [of the Mishnah just cited] certainly supports [Rab Judah’s view], for it says: From that man,\(^3\) then he is believed!\(^4\) — There [again] since there is an inquirer, he is afraid.\(^5\)

Said R. Jeremiah b. Abba: Whence does R. Judah know this?\(^6\) [It is my own ruling]. I taught it to Giddul\(^7\) and Giddul taught it to [R. Judah]. And this is how I imparted it to him: An Israelite’s word is taken when he says: ‘This firstling I gave to a priest with a blemish on it’. [If it refers to] an Israelite,\(^8\) surely this is obvious! — No. The statement is required for the case where [the animal] was small [when he gave it to the priest] and it grew up. You might have the impression that the Israelite cannot now establish the identity [of the animal].\(^9\) He therefore teaches us [that it is not so]. In Sura they reported this in the last version,\(^10\) whereas in Pumbeditha [they reported this] in the former version. The law is decided in accordance even with the first version.

Rafram of Pumbeditha possessed a firstling which he gave to a priest without a blemish. The latter made it blemished. One day his\textsuperscript{11} eyes were affected. [The priest] brought the [same] animal before him,\textsuperscript{12} and said to him, ‘This firstling an Israelite gave to me with a blemish on it!’ He [forcefully] opened his eyes [wide] and perceived his fraud.\textsuperscript{13} He said to him: ‘Was it not I who gave it to you?’ Nevertheless, the incident did not make Rafram anxious,\textsuperscript{15} [because he held that] this priest happened to be impudent\textsuperscript{16} but everybody was not impudent.

Once a case of sarua\textsuperscript{17} came before R. Ashi.\textsuperscript{18} He said: What can we fear in connection [with the animal]? For whether [the owner be] a priest or Israelite, here is a firstling with a blemish on it.\textsuperscript{19} Said Rabina to R. Ashi: But perhaps [the animal] belongs to an Israelite and Rab Judah ruled: A firstling of an Israelite must not be examined unless a priest is present?\textsuperscript{20} — He replied to him: But is the analogy correct? There,\textsuperscript{21} granted that he will not eat consecrated animals without [the Temple precincts],\textsuperscript{22} he is nevertheless suspected as regards the priest's property;\textsuperscript{23} but here, well, he knew that this blemish was a well-marked one, and why did he bring it before the Rabbis? Out of respect for the Sage. Now, if he did not neglect showing respect to the Sage, will he actually commit an offence?\textsuperscript{24}

MISHNAH. ALL ARE TRUST WORTHY\textsuperscript{25} AS REGARDS THE BLEMISHES OF A TITHING ANIMAL.

GEMARA. What is the reason? — Because if he wished he could cause a blemish originally [before the tithing]. But how does he know which goes out [through the door]?\textsuperscript{26} And if you will say that he brings out an animal as the tenth\textsuperscript{27} and blemishes it, does not the Divine Law say: He shall not search whether it be good or bad?\textsuperscript{28} — Rather explain thus: If he wished he could have caused a blemish to the whole herd [of animals before tithing].\textsuperscript{29} MISHNAH. A FIRSTLING WHOSE EYE WAS BLINDED\textsuperscript{30} OR WHOSE FORE-FOOT WAS CUT OFF, OR WHOSE HIND-LEG WAS BROKEN, MAY BE SLAUGHTERED WITH THE APPROVAL OF THREE [PERSONS] OF THE SYNAGOGUE.\textsuperscript{31} BUT R. JOSE SAYS: EVEN IF A HIGH PRIEST WERE PRESENT, A FIRSTLING MUST NOT BE SLAUGHTERED EXCEPT WITH THE APPROVAL OF AN EXPERT.

GEMARA. Both R. Simlai and R. Judah the Prince reported in the name of R. Joshua b. Levi, (another version is: R. Simlai and R. Joshua b. Levi both reported in the name of R. Judah the Prince): The permitting of a firstling\textsuperscript{32} abroad\textsuperscript{33} is by three persons of the Synagogue. Said Raba: This is so [even] in the case of prominent blemishes. What does he teach us? We have learnt this: A FIRSTLING WHOSE EYE WAS BLINDED OR WHOSE FORE-FOOT WAS CUT OFF OR WHOSE HIND LEG WAS BROKEN, MAY BE SLAUGHTERED WITH THE APPROVAL OF THREE [PERSONS] OF THE SYNAGOGUE?\textsuperscript{34} From the Mishnah I might have thought that even where an expert is available, [three ordinary persons are required to permit it]. He therefore informs us that in a place where there is no expert it is [as the Mishnah states], but in a place where there is an expert, it is not so.

Rab Judah said that he was in doubt whether R. Jeremiah reported in the name of Rab or in the name of Samuel [the following ruling]: Three [ordinary] persons are required to permit a firstling [to be slaughtered when blemished] in a place where there is no expert. What does it teach us? We have learnt this: THE ANIMAL MAY BE SLAUGHTERED WITH THE APPROVAL OF THREE [PERSONS] OF THE SYNAGOGUE? From the Mishnah I might have said that even where an expert is available, [three ordinary persons are required to permit it]. He therefore informs us that in a place where there is no expert it is [as the Mishnah states], but in a place where there is an expert, it is not so.
R. Hiyya b. Abin reported that R. Amram said: Three persons are necessary to permit a firstling [to be slaughtered] in a place where there is no expert. Three persons are required to annul vows, where there is no Sage. ‘Three persons are necessary to permit a firstling in a place where there is no expert’;

(1) When inquiries are made and it is discovered that he bought the produce from an untrustworthy person.
(2) That although the seller may not be trustworthy in the sender's opinion, he is regarded as trustworthy by his agent. Therefore the agent has no fear of being found out. The bracketed words are inserted from Sh. Mek.
(3) Whose name the sender explicitly mentioned.
(4) For there is the fear here that the sender might make investigations as to whether his instructions were carried out. Therefore it is here a confirmation of Rab Judah's view.
(5) Since he sees that the sender is particular, having mentioned a specific name, he is aware that the sender will certainly make inquiries, and therefore the agent is believed, but not for the reason which Rab Judah states. In the case, however, of the firstling, the priest is not afraid, thinking that nobody will trouble to ascertain whether his statement is correct.
(6) That a priest is trustworthy to declare that an Israelite etc.
(7) The name of a rabbinic teacher. Another explanation of the word Giddul is ‘a great’ man, from the word קושד.
(8) And not to a priest who said ‘this firstling an Israelite gave to me with its blemish’.
(9) The animal having grown up. And therefore it might not be the same one which the Priest gave him, and thus it is possible that the Israelite actually caused the blemish. Rabbenu Gershom explains that יאם refers to an Israelite who was young when he gave the animal to the priest, and now when grown up he testifies that he gave the animal with a blemish on it. We are therefore informed that we trust the Israelite and we do not fear that he may not recollect whether or not it had a blemish when he received it.
(10) That an Israelite is trustworthy to say ‘this firstling etc.’
(11) Rafram's.
(12) For Rafram to decide whether the blemish was of a permanent character, the priest thinking that now that Rafram's eyes were bad, he would not recognize the animal.
(13) Recognizing that it was the firstling he had given him and that the priest was responsible for the blemish.
(14) Rafram.
(15) To decree that a priest in no circumstances should be believed when he declares that an Israelite gave him a blemished firstling.
(16) For he exhibited inordinate impudence, in the first place in causing the blemish, and secondly in showing the firstling to the person who gave him the animal instead of to another expert.
(17) An animal with one eye abnormally small and the other large.
(18) To give a decision on the animal.
(19) For in either case there can be no suspicion. since it was born with this defect.
(20) Lit., ‘with him’. The reason is because we fear that when the blemish is pronounced a permanent one, he will eat it himself and deprive the priest of his due.
(21) With reference to Rab Judah's ruling.
(22) As we see that he would not slaughter the animal before he showed it to the expert.
(23) For the penalty is not as severe as for eating consecrated animals outside the Temple, which involves kareth, and therefore the priest must be present when the examination takes place.
(24) Of stealing, which is a much more serious thing than not showing respect to the expert by not showing him the animal in the case under discussion.
(25) To testify that the blemish was not caused deliberately. The Mishnah refers to a doubtful tithing animal, e.g., where he called the ninth animal, when counting the tenth, the law being that it is not eaten unless blemished, v. infra 59a.
(26) I.e., the tenth, so that he might cause a blemish at the outset.
(27) Lit., ‘the beginning of ten’.
(28) Lev. XXVII. 33. Implying that he must not bring out the animal but it must go out by itself.
(29) When the animals are all hullin, and this is permissible. He can then proceed to tithe, for tithing takes effect even with blemished animals, the text saying ‘Good or bad’, i.e., unblemished or blemished. Therefore we believe him when he declares that the blemish on the doubtfully tithed animal was not caused intentionally.

(30) i.e., a prominent and visible blemish.

(31) Who are not necessarily experts.

(32) To be slaughtered in consequence of a blemish.

(33) Lit., ‘outside the Land’ (of Palestine.) The reason is because even in Temple-times it was not fit to be sacrificed.

(34) And these are prominent blemishes. The Mishnahs here also deal with a firstling abroad and nowadays, a previous Mishnah speaking of an old male firstling with long wool etc’. Now if it referred to Temple-times and in Palestine, why did not the Priest offer it up?

Talmud - Mas. Bechoroth 37a

this excludes the ruling of R. Jose [in the Mishnah]. ‘Three persons are required to annul vows in a place where there is no Sage’; this excludes the ruling of R. Judah. For it has been taught: The annulment of vows requires three persons; ‘R. Judah rules: One of them must be a Sage’. ‘In the place where there is no Sage’. Who, for example?1 — Said R. Nahman: for example, myself. ‘R.
Judah rules: One of them must be a Sage’. Does this imply, therefore, that the rest can be people of any kind?2 — Said Rabina: They3 are explained to them and they understand.

BUT R. JOSE SAYS: EVEN IF A HIGH PRIEST WERE PRESENT etc. R. Hananel reported in the name of Rab: The halachah is not in accordance with R. Jose. Surely this is obvious, for ‘where a single opinion is opposed to the opinion of more than one, the law follows the latter’4 — You might have thought that we must adopt R. Jose's opinion, because he is known to have deep reasons [for his rulings]. He therefore informs us [that it is not so]. You may now infer from this5 that the former ruling6 was stated in the name of Samuel. For if it were in the name of Rab, what need is there for the repetition?7 — ‘One ruling was derived by implication’ from the other.8 MISHNAH. IF ONE SLAUGHTERED A FIRSTLING9 AND IT BECAME KNOWN THAT HE HAD NOT SHOWN IT [TO A SCHOLAR]. AS REGARDS WHAT [THE PURCHASERS] HAVE EATEN, THERE IS NO
REMEDY10 AND HE MUST RETURN THE MONEY TO THEM.11 AS REGARDS, HOWEVER, WHAT THEY HAVE NOT YET EATEN, THE FLESH MUST BE BURIED12 AND HE MUST RETURN THE MONEY TO THEM. AND LIKewise IF ONE SLAUGHTERED A COW AND SOLD IT AND IT BECAME KNOWN THAT IT WAS TREFAH, AS REGARDS WHAT [THE PURCHASERS] HAVE EATEN THERE IS NO REMEDY, AND AS REGARDS WHAT THEY HAVE NOT EATEN, THEY RETURN THE FLESH TO HIM AND HE MUST RETURN THE MONEY TO THEM. IF [THE PURCHASERS] [IN THEIR TURN] SOLD IT TO HEATHENS OR CAST IT TO DOGS, THEY MUST PAY HIM THE PRICE OF TREFAH.13

GEMARA. Our Rabbis taught: If one sells flesh to another which turned out to be flesh of a firstling, or if one sells produce and it turns out to be untithed or if one sells wine and it turns out to be forbidden wine,14 what [the purchasers] have eaten cannot be remedied and he must return the money to them. R. Simeon b. Eleazar, however, says: In the case of objects for which a man has a loathing, he must return the money to them, [as there was no benefit to them after knowing], whereas in the case of objects for which a man has not a loathing, he deducts from the price [what had been eaten]. And the following are the objects for which a person has a loathing: Carcases, trefahs, forbidden animals and reptiles. And the following are objects for which a person has no loathing:
Firstlings, untithed products and forbidden wine. [Do you therefore say that in the case of] a firstling
[he deducts]? But why should not [the buyer] say to [the seller] ‘What loss have I caused you’?15 —
No; the statement is required for the case where he sold him the flesh from the place where the blemish was, for he says to him: ‘Had you not eaten it, I would have shown it to [a scholar] and he might have permitted it, in accordance with the ruling of R. Judah.16 As regards untithed things,17 he can say: ‘I might have prepared them [ritually] and eaten them’. With reference to forbidden wine,18 [one can explain that he sold it to him] mixed [with permitted wine], [and had he not consumed it he would have been able to benefit by it] according to the ruling of R. Simeon b. Gamaliel. For we have learnt: If forbidden wine falls into a vat [of permitted wine], it is forbidden to profit from the whole of it. R. Simeon b. Gamaliel, however, says: He can sell the whole of it to a heathen, except for the value of the forbidden wine in it.19

CHAPTER VI

MISHNAH. THESE ARE THE BLEMISHES IN CONSEQUENCE OF WHICH A FIRST-BORN ANIMAL MAY BE SLAUGHTERED:20 IF ITS EAR HAS BECOME DEFECTIVE, [BEING CUT OR BORED THROUGH] FROM THE CARTILAGES [INWARD] BUT NOT IF THE DEFECT IS IN THE EAR-LAP;21 IF IT IS SLIT ALTHOUGH THERE WAS NO LOSS [OF SUBSTANCE]; IF IT IS PERFORATED WITH A HOLE AS LARGE AS A KARSHINAH22 OR IF [THE EAR] HAS BECOME DRY. WHAT IS CALLED ‘BECOMING DRY’? IF IT IS PERFORATED NO DROP OF BLOOD WOULD ISSUE. R. JOSE B. HA-MESHULLAM SAYS: [IT] IS CALLED DRY WHEN IT IS LIABLE TO CRUMBLE.

GEMARA. Why is this so?23 Does not Scripture say ‘Lame or blind’?24 It also writes: And if there be any blemish therein.25 But why not argue that [the text] ‘And if there be any blemish therein’ is a general statement while ‘lame or blind’ is a specification; and where a general statement is followed by a specification the scope of the general statement is limited by the things specified, so that only lameness or blindness [in a firstling] are [legal blemishes], but other [defects] are not [legal blemishes]? — [The text]: ‘Any ill blemishes whatsoever’26 is another general statement. We have, therefore, a general statement followed by the enumeration of specifications which are in turn followed by a general statement and in such a case we include only such things as are similar to those specified. Hence, just as the specifications27 are exposed blemishes which cannot become sound again, so all [legal] blemishes must be exposed and unable to become sound again. But why not reason: As the specifications are exposed blemishes which render the animal incapable of carrying out its normal functions28 and cannot become sound again. so all [legal] blemishes must be exposed rendering the animal incapable of carrying out its normal functions and unable to become sound again? Why then have we learnt: IF THE EAR IS DEFECTIVE FROM THE CARTILAGES,29 BUT NOT IF THE DEFECT IS IN THE EAR-LAP? — [The text]: ‘Any ill blemish whatsoever’ is a widening of the scope of what constitutes a blemish. If this be so, why not also [slaughter a firstling] in consequence of hidden blemishes? Why then have we learnt: If the incisors are broken off or levelled [to the gum] or the molars are torn out [completely].31

(1) Is meant by the term Sage?
(2) Even ignorant people. But how can we take their views into consideration?
(3) The rules and regulations appertaining to vows.
(4) Ber. 9a.
(5) The ruling of R. Hananel.
(6) Which Rab Judah reported that R. Jeremiah gave. viz., that three Persons are required to permit a firstling.
(7) By declaring in the name of Rab that the law is not in accordance with the ruling of R. Jose, R. Hananel indicates that three persons are required, and therefore, if the former statement had been reported in the name of Rab, there would be two similar rulings by the same authority. Hence we can solve the doubt whether R. Jeremiah reported in the name of Rab or Samuel; it must have been in the name of Samuel.
(8) The above ruling of Rab Judah may still have been reported to him by R. Jeremiah in the name of Rab, and there is no difficulty, for R. Hananel's statement here in the name of Rab may be only an inference from Rab Judah's earlier ruling and not an explicit statement on the part of Rab.
(9) And sold of its flesh.
(10) Lit., ‘what they have eaten they have eaten’.
(11) For being instrumental in causing them to eat forbidden food he is penalized.
(12) As it is forbidden to benefit from an unblemished firstling.
(13) Since they did not eat the trefah, they must pay him the cheap price of trefah and he compensates them for the rest, as they paid the higher price for kosher flesh.

(14) Wine of idolatrous libation.

(15) For even if it were in your possession, it would have required burial, having been slaughtered in an unblemished state.

(16) V. supra 28a.

(17) The question also arises, why should the seller take a part of the money, since in any case he could not have used the untithed produce.

(18) Cf. previous note mutatis mutandis.

(19) I.e., he deducts the value from the price, so as not to benefit from the forbidden wine.

(20) After the destruction of the Temple.

(21) Lit., ‘from the skin’, because a blemish at this spot can become sound again.

(22) A species of vetch, probably horse-bean.

(23) Why should the defects enumerated in the Mishnah be regarded as legal blemishes in connection with a firstling?

(24) Deut. XV, 21. As being blemishes in consequence of which a firstling may be killed, the text continuing ‘Thou shalt eat it within thy gates’. This implies that no other defects are considered legal blemishes.

(25) The opening passage of the text just cited; from this we deduce that there are other blemishes which have the same ruling as lameness and blindness.

(26) A continuation of the above text.

(27) Lameness and blindness.

(28) The lame not being able to walk and the blind to see. Lit., ‘idle from its work’.

(29) Why should this be considered a blemish, since the animal is not in consequence deprived of hearing.

(30) The word ֐ is a comprehensive term which includes other defects as blemishes.

(31) Infra 39a.

Talmud - Mas. Bechoroth 37b

[thus implying that] when torn out completely [they are blemishes] but not where they are broken off or levelled [to the gum]?⁴ — We require [that it should appear] ‘an ill blemish’, ⁵ which is not the case [where it is not torn out]. If this be so, ⁶ why should not [a firstling be slaughtered] in consequence of a transitory blemish?⁷ Why have we learnt: BUT NOT IF THE DEFECT IS IN THE EAR-LAP? — There is a logical reason [why we do not slaughter a firstling] in consequence of a transitory blemish, for seeing that we do not redeem [a consecrated animal] ⁸ in consequence [of a transitory blemish], shall we slaughter in consequence of it?" For it has been taught: [Scripture says]: And if it be any unclean beast of which they may not bring an offering unto the Lord. ⁹ The text deals here with sacrifices rendered unfit which were redeemed. You say sacrifices rendered unfit. Perhaps it is really not so, but it speaks actually of an unclean animal? Since it says: ‘And if it be of an unclean beast, then he shall ransom it according to thy valuation’ ¹⁰ the case of an unclean animal is already stated. How then do I interpret the text ‘Of which they may not bring an offering unto the Lord”? You must say that it refers to sacrifices rendered unfit which were redeemed. I might, however, conclude that one may redeem in consequence of a transitory blemish, hence Scripture explicitly states: ‘Of which they may not bring an offering unto the Lord’, thus intimating [that it refers to] a sacrifice which is completely unfit [for the altar], but excluding this case of a transitory blemish, which although unfit for sacrifice today, is fit tomorrow. And if you prefer [another solution]¹¹ I may say: If this be a fact [that a transitory defect is a legal blemish] then of what avail is the text ‘Lame and blind’ [which implies only permanent blemishes]? ¹²

IF IT WAS SLIT, ALTHOUGH THERE WAS NOT ANY LOSS [OF SUBSTANCE]. Our Rabbis taught: A slit may be as small as you please. ¹³ A defect [a cut] may be either through the agency of man or by nature.¹⁴ Does this imply that a slit has not the same ruling when brought about by nature? — Rather state it thus: A slit may be as small as you please, and both a slit and a cut may be either through the agency of man or by nature. And how large is a cut? — A notch deep enough to stop the finger nail.¹⁵
IF IT WAS PERFORATED AS LARGE etc. Our Rabbis taught: How large is the perforation of the ear? — As large as a karshinah. R. Jose son of R. Judah says: As large as a lentil. Ha-meshullam says: [It is called] ‘dry’ as long as it is liable to crumble. A Tanna taught: Their views are nearly alike. Whose views [are meant]? Shall I say the views of the first Tanna [quoted above] and R. Jose b. Ha-meshullam? Surely there is a considerable difference! — Rather you must say, the views of the first Tanna [quoted above] and R. Jose son of R. Judah. [But does R. Jose son of R. Judah maintain that a blemish is constituted] by [a hole] the size of a lentil and not by less than the size of a lentil? Against this I quote: Scripture says ‘An awl’. I have here mentioned only an awl [wherewith to bore the ear of a slave]; whence do you include also a prick, a thorn, a borer, and a stylus? Hence the text states: Then thou shalt take, thus including everything which can be taken in a hand. This is the view of R. Jose son of R. Judah. Rabbi says, [Since the text says] ‘An awl’, we infer that as an awl is exclusively of metal, so anything used must be of metal. And it is stated in the following clause: Said R. Eleazar: Judan the son of Rabbis used to expound as follows: The boring is only done through the ear-lap. The Sages, however, rule: A Hebrew slave who is a priest must not have his ear bored, because he becomes blemished. Now if you maintain that the boring was done through the ear-lap, then the Hebrew slave who is a priest cannot become blemished, hence we only bore through the top part of the ear! — Said Rab Hana b. Kattina: This offers no difficulty. Here for the purpose of slaughtering, the size of a lentil is required but there in the case of causing a disqualification [even a needle can render the animal blemished for the altar]. What is karshinah? Said R. Sherabya: Indian vetch. R. Oshaiah inquired from R. Huna the Great: [Must the hole be] of a size so that the karshinah may enter and come out [with ease] or as to contain a karshinah [only with difficulty]? — He replied to him: I have not heard the answer to this particular query, but I have heard [a solution of] a similar query. For we have learnt: A spinal column and a skull which have shrunk [do not cause uncleanness]. And how great must be the shrinkage in the spinal column in order not to cause uncleanness? Beth Shammai say: Two vertebrae, whereas Beth Hillel say: One vertebra. And as regards the skull, Beth Shammai say: [The amount of the shrinkage] must be equal to a borer; and Beth Hillel say: As much as is required to be taken away from a living person in order to prove fatal. Now R. Hisda sat discoursing and inquired: [You say] as much as is required to be taken from a living person [so as to prove fatal]. And how much would this be? — R. Tahlifa b. Abudimi said to him: Thus did Samuel say: As much as a sela’. (And it was stated; R. Safra said: [R. Tahlifa] reported to [R. Hisda] a ruling [in the name of Samuel], whereas Rab Samuel b. Judah says: [R. Tahlifa] quoted [to Rab Hisda] a Baraitha [reported by Samuel]. And the way to remember this is by the sentence: R. Samuel b. Judah reported a Baraitha). Said R. Hisda: And this [fist] is as large as a big head of a man. If [the light-hole], however, was made by the agency of man, [the Sages] fixed the size to be as large as a hole made with the large [carpenter’s borer kept in the Temple cell, which is as large as an Italian dupondium or as large as a Neronian sela’]. And it has

---

1. I.e., only hidden blemishes.
2. And therefore there must be a complete tearing out, as ‘an ill blemish’ is only when it is seen.
3. That the word כף is an extension of the scope of what is a blemish.
4. Since such a defect appears to be an ill blemish.
5. Which became unfit for sacrifice. (11) A firstling outside Palestine.
7. Ibid XXVII, 27.
8. To the question why, in view of the word כף we should not be allowed to slaughter a firstling by reason of a transitory blemish?
9. Lit., ‘whatever it may be’.
10. Said R. Jose: And this [fist] is as large as a big head of a man. If [the light-hole], however, was made by the agency of man, [the Sages] fixed the size to be as large as a hole made with the large carpenter’s borer kept in the Temple cell, which is as large as an Italian dupondium or as large as a Neronian sela’. And it has Lit., ‘By the hands of heaven’, i.e., born with a defect.

When passing over its edge as with a slaughtering knife.

Between the two views set forth.

For a karshinah is only slightly larger than a lentil.

A name applied to a great scholar, v. J.E. s.v.

I.e., from the cartilage inward. Nevertheless we see that the boring causes a blemish. R. Jose holding that even a needle's point which makes a hole much smaller than a lentil, is capable of maiming.

Outside the Temple.

Lit., ‘a karshinah which stands’.

The spinal column and the skull cause levitical uncleanness, rendering any object unclean under their shelter, like the greater number of the limbs of a dead body or the greater part of a dead body. If however, they are not complete, they do not cause this uncleanness.

V. Oh. II, 3.

Defined infra p. 38a.

A weight and a coin.

Lit., ‘And thy sign’ so as not to make a mistake who said it was a ruling and who said it was a Baraitha.

For we find elsewhere R. Samuel b. Judah frequently quoting a Baraitha.

That Beth Hillel say a sel'a.

A wall breaking a little of itself between two houses, thus making an opening letting in light.

So as to bring uncleanness from one house to the other. As this was not made by the agency of a man, therefore less than this size does not bring about impurity.

Nephew of R. Johanan b. Zakkai, one of the leaders of the terrorists during the siege of Jerusalem by the Romans. He was a big man physically.

For purposes of Temple repair.

V. Glos.

The sel'a or the Dupondium.

Talmud - Mas. Bechoroth 38a

[a size] as large as a hole of a yoke! — He was silent. Said R. Hisda to him: perhaps what we have learnt refers to the borer and [the removal of] what stopped up [the hole]. Thereupon R. Tahlifa said to him: You should not say ‘perhaps’, it certainly refers to the borer and [the removal of] what stopped up [the hole], and you can confidently accept this explanation as we accept the evidence of Hezekiah the father of Ikkesh. For it has been taught: This which follows is the evidence given by Hezekiah the father of Ikkesh before Rabban Gamaliel in Jabneh which he reported in the name of Rabban Gamaliel the Elder: Wherever an earthen vessel has no inside, it has no back which is treated independently. If then its inside becomes unclean, its back becomes unclean, and if the back becomes unclean, the inside becomes unclean. But did not the Divine Law teach that the uncleanness of an earthen vessel depends on the inside? If it has an inside then it is unclean, but if it has no inside, then it does not become unclean? — Said R. Isaac b. Abin: This is what is meant: Wherever an earthen vessel has no inside in a corresponding case with a rinsing vessel it has no back which is treated independently. If then its inside becomes unclean, its back becomes unclean, and if the back becomes unclean, then its inside is unclean. What need however is there to make it depend on an earthen vessel? Let him say as follows: Wherever in the case of a rinsing vessel there is no inside, there is no back which is treated independently? — He informs us of this very thing, that if it has an inside, then it is like an earthen vessel, as much as [to say]: As in the case of an earthen vessel, if the inside becomes unclean, then the back becomes unclean, and if the back becomes unclean, the inside does not become unclean, so it is in the case of a rinsing vessel, if the inside becomes unclean then the back becomes unclean, and if the back becomes unclean, the inside does not become unclean. Now we may readily grant this in the case of an earthen vessel, the Divine Law having revealed explicitly in that connection that uncleanness depends on the inside [receiving uncleanness]; but as regards a rinsing vessel, did the Divine Law reveal explicitly that uncleanness depends on the inside [receiving uncleanness]? — If we were referring to a case of biblical uncleanness, it would indeed be so. We are dealing here however with unclean liquids [which have come in contact with a rinsing vessel], the resulting uncleanness being due to a rabbinic enactment. For we have learnt: If the back [outside] of a vessel has been defiled by unclean liquids, its back becomes unclean, but its inside, its edge, its handle and its projectors remain clean. If its inside however becomes unclean, the whole vessel becomes unclean; for according to the biblical law, food cannot make a vessel unclean nor can unclean liquid make a vessel unclean, and only the Rabbis have declared uncleanness on account of the liquid of a zab and a zabah. The Rabbis consequently declared it to have uncleanness of an earthen vessel but they did not declare it [in this particular instance] to be biblically unclean on its own account, the Rabbis differentiating in order that terumah and holy objects might not be burnt on its account. But if this be so, where there is no inside, let there also be a distinction made? Since where there is an inside, the Rabbis differentiated, it will indeed be known that where there is no inside the uncleanness is a rabbinic enactment [and that therefore terumah must not be burnt in consequence of it].

But with regard to a rinsing vessel, where there is no inside, is it susceptible of becoming unclean according to the biblical law? For we do not require [in order that a vessel may become unclean] that it should resemble a sack that is [to say], As a sack is handled either fully or empty, so anything [in order to receive uncleanness] must be in a condition to be handled either full or empty? — It refers to those [articles] which are fit to be used as seats. If this be so, then why not also declare an earthen vessel unclean [rabbinically]? — Midras is not employed with an earthen vessel, [for fear of breaking it].

R. Papa says: The Mishnah above states distinctly a ‘large borer’, from which we can deduce that an ordinary borer is smaller than a sela'. This would indeed hold good according to the view of R. Meir but according to the view of the Rabbis, what answer would you give? For we have learnt: To what kind of borer did Beth Shammai refer? To a small one, belonging to doctors. The Sages said however: They refer to the large [carpenter’s] borer kept in the Temple cell. But is it satisfactory even according to the view of R. Meir? Would this not then be a case where the ruling of Beth Shammai would be easier and the ruling of Beth Hillel severer; and [as regards examples of this kind of ruling] what we have learnt we accept and what we have not learnt in the Mishnah we do not accept! — Said R. Nahman: A Neronian sela’ is distinctly mentioned above. A Neronian sela’ is as large as a large borer, but an ordinary sela’ is even smaller than an ordinary borer.

(1) In which a peg is fastened in order to bind the straps (v. Kel. XVII, 12). Consequently we see that the carpenter's borer is the size of a sela’ and, therefore, what is the difference between Beth Hillel and Beth Shammai?
(2) Rab Tahlifa.
(3) The ‘borer’ referred to above in connection with the skull.
(4) The borer being narrow below and wide at the top, some scraping away of the hole is necessary in order that it may enter and come out freely. This would therefore make the hole larger than a sela’ and, therefore, Beth Shammai and Beth Hillel would differ in the extent of the diminution required in the case of the skull. Incidentally this would solve R. Oshaiah's query above.

(5) Though his statement which follows appeared difficult, every effort was made to explain it, since it was known to have been reliable in substance.

(6) i.e., is not hollowed out so as to be capable of containing something.

(7) Lit., 'a back for distinction', i.e., its back (outside) cannot become unclean independently of its inside or vice versa. The inside here would mean the part which is customarily used (Tosaf.).

(8) v. Lev. XI, 32.

(9) i.e., a wooden vessel, as Scripture writes: And every vessel of wood shall be rinsed in water. (Lev. XV, 12.) A suggestion that the vessel referred to here is a metal one is refuted by Rashi.

(10) So Sh. Mek. Cur. edd. ‘if the back does not become’.

(11) That if the outside of a rinsing vessel becomes unclean, the inside too becomes unclean, whether it is capable of containing or not.

(12) When we say that where it is capable of containing and the outside becomes unclean, the inside does not become unclean as in the case of an earthen vessel, and where it is incapable of containing, Hezekiah requires to inform us that there is no distinction as regards the back and inside and whichever becomes unclean, the other also becomes unclean.

(13) Or its basin (Rashi).

(14) Kelim XXV, 6.

(15) One afflicted with gonorrhoea. His or her spittle is one of the direct causes of levitical impurity and it makes a vessel unclean biblically, whereas other unclean liquids cannot do so, but only make the vessel rabbinically unclean.

(16) A rinsing vessel.

(17) Thus not causing unnecessary burning of holy things.

(18) If the uncleanness here be a rabbinic enactment and therefore a distinction between the inside and the back was made, just as in the case of an earthen vessel, in order not to burn holy things unnecessarily.

(19) That where the back becomes unclean, the inside does not become unclean.

(20) That there should be need to take a precaution in case an unclean liquid comes in contact with it. Moreover, it states above that if the case were one of biblical uncleanness etc. The objection therefore arises that where it is not capable of containing there can be no uncleanness biblically!

(21) Scripture saying. ‘It shall be unclean whether it be any vessel of wood, or raiment, or skin or sack (Lev. XI, 32).

(22) i.e., capable of containing.

(23) As couches, stools or chairs.

(24) Without an inside, but fit to be used as a chair etc.

(25) According to the view of R. Isaac b. Abin above.

(26) Causing uncleanness by treading, lying or sitting on it.

(27) The difficulty you raised above concerning Beth Shammai and Beth Hillel apparently holding the same view, can be solved in the following manner.

(28) And Beth Shammai in connection with the passage above referring to the loss in the skull mean by the term ‘borer’ the ordinary one, which is smaller than a sela’. Therefore the measurements of the two schools are not alike.

(29) Who explains below that a physician's borer is meant in the statement referring to the size of the shrinkage in the skull. This is less than a sela’, and thus there is a difference between Beth Shammai and Beth Hillel.

(30) With which the head is bored when a wound has to be examined.

(31) For Beth Shammai would then hold that a smaller portion is required in order to free the skull from uncleanness of ohel, whereas Beth Hillel would demand a greater decrease.

(32) In 'Ed. V, I, where only six cases are enumerated in which Beth Shammai are more lenient in their rulings than Beth Hillel.

(33) Lit., ‘we have learnt’.

(34) Explaining the view of R. Meir.

(35) In the Mishnah referring to the light-hole etc.

(36) Therefore Beth Shammai, requiring a shrinkage in the skull of the size of a borer before it can be exempt from the impurity of overshadowing would be severer in their ruling than Beth Hillel, who only require the decrease of the size of an ordinary sela’, which is even less than the size of an ordinary borer.

(37) Explained below in the Gemara.
GEMARA. What is the meaning of the RIS? R. Papa said: The eyelid.

OR IF IT HAS A CATARACT OR A TEBALLUL. Our Rabbis taught: A cataract which causes the eye to sink is a [disqualifying] blemish, but if it is floating, it is not a disqualifying blemish. But has not the opposite been taught? — This offers no difficulty. One statement refers to the black part of the eye, and the other case to the white. But surely blemishes in the white of the eye do not disqualify! One statement then refers to a white spot, and the other to a black spot. For Rabbah b. Bar Hana said: R. Oshaiah of Usha told me, A black spot which causes the eye to sink is a [disqualifying] blemish, but if it is floating it is not a [disqualifying] blemish. A white spot if it causes the eye to sink is not a disqualifying blemish, but if it is floating, it is a disqualifying blemish. And mnemonic for this is, barka.

HALAZON, NAHASH AND A GROWTH IN THE EYE. A query was put forward: Does [the Mishnah mean that] HALAZON is the same thing as NAHASH or does it mean halazon or nahash? — Come and hear: For Rabbah b. Bar Hana said: R. Johanan b. Eleazar told me: A certain old man [a priest] lived in our quarter whose name was R. Simeon b. Jose b. Lekunia. Never had I passed in front of him. Once, however, I passed in front of him. He said to me: Sit down my son, sit. This halazon is a permanent blemish, in consequence of which [the animal] may be slaughtered and this is what the Sages called nahash. And although the Sages have said: A man must not examine his own [animals] to discover their blemishes, yet he is allowed to teach the rule to his pupils and the pupils are permitted to examine. But surely it is not so! For did not R. Abba say that R. Huna reported in the name of Rab: Wherever a scholar comes before us and teaches a [new] rule, if he enunciated it before a practical case arose for the application of the rule, then we listen to him, but if not, we do not listen to him? — He too came to us and taught it before the case arose.

WHAT DOES TEBALLUL MEAN? THE WHITE OF THE EYE BREAKING THROUGH THE RING AND ENCROACHING ON THE BLACK. Whose opinion does this represent? — It is that of R. Jose. For it was taught: If the white of the eye encroaches on the black or if the black encroaches on the white, it is a disqualifying blemish. This is the view of R. Meir. R. Jose says: If the white encroaches on the black it is a blemish, whereas if the black of the eye encroaches on the white, it is not a blemish, for blemishes do not disqualify in the white of the eye. Said Rab: What is the reason of R. Jose? Scripture says: Their eyes stand forth from fatness. [The white of the eye] is called the fat of the eye, but not simply their eyes. And what is the reason of R. Meir? — Said Raba: What is the meaning of teballul? — Anything which disturbs [mebalbel] the action of the eye. MISHNAH. HAWARWAR [WHITE SPOTS] ON THE CORNEA AND WATER CONSTANTLY DRIPPING FROM THE EYE, [ARE DISQUALIFYING BLEMISHES]. WHAT DO WE MEAN BY A PERMANENT HAWARWAR? IF IT REMAINED FOR A PERIOD OF EIGHTY DAYS. R. Hanina b. Antigonus said: WE MUST EXAMINE IT THREE TIMES IN THE EIGHTY DAYS. AND THE FOLLOWING ARE CASES OF CONSTANT DRIPPING FROM THE EYE [AND HOW TO TEST ITS PERMANENCY]: IF IT ATE [FOR A CURE] FRESH [FODDER] AND DRY [FODDER] FROM A FIELD SUFFICIENTLY WATERED BY RAIN, OR FRESH [FODDER] AND DRY [FODDER] FROM A FIELD REQUIRING ARTIFICIAL IRRIGATION, [IT IS A PERMANENT BLEMISH, IF NOT CURED]. IF IT ATE DRY [FODDER] FIRST AND THEN FRESH [FODDER] IT IS NOT A BLEMISH. UNLESS IT EATS DRY [FODDER] AFTER THE FRESH.

GEMARA. What opinion does our Mishnah represent? — It is that of R. Judah. For it has been taught: A permanent hawarwar must remain for forty days, and water constantly dripping [from the eye] must remain so for eighty days. This is the view of R. Meir. But R. Judah says: A permanent hawarwar must remain for eighty days. And the following are cases of permanent hawarwar [and how to test their permanency]: if it ate fresh [fodder] with dry [fodder] from a field sufficiently watered by rain, but not fresh [fodder] and dry from a field requiring irrigation. Or if it ate dry [fodder] followed by fresh, it is not a blemish, unless it ate dry [fodder] after fresh. And this [treatment] must last for three months. But have we not learnt both [kinds of fields]:

IF IT ATE FRESH [FODDER] AND DRY [FODDER] FROM A FIELD SUFFICIENTLY WATERED BY RAIN, OF IF IT ATE FRESH [FODDER] AND DRY [FODDER] FROM A FIELD REQUIRING IRRIGATION? — There is a lacuna in the Mishnah and it should read thus: IF IT ATE THE FRESH [FODDER] AND DRY [FODDER] FROM A FIELD SUFFICIENTLY WATERED BY RAIN, it is a blemish. [IF IT ATE FROM A FIELD REQUIRING IRRIGATION, it is not a blemish, [EVEN IF IT DID NOT BECOME CURED]. [And even in the case of a field] watered by rain, IF IT ATE DRY [FODDER] AND AFTERWARDS FRESH IT IS NOT A BLEMISH, UNLESS IT ATE DRY [FODDER] AFTER FRESH.

‘And this treatment must last for three months.’ But surely this is not so! Has not R. Idi b. Abin reported in the name of R. Isaac b. Ashian: [In] Adar and Nisan [it is given] fresh [fodder], in Elul and Tishri dry [fodder]? — Read rather as follows: [In] Adar and a half of Nisan fresh [fodder], [in] Elul and half of Tishri dry.

The following query was put forward: [Does the Mishnah mean that] the fresh [fodder] [given to the firstling to eat for a cure] must be in the period of fresh [fodder] and, similarly, the dry in the period of dry, or [does the Mishnah mean that] we give it to eat fresh [fodder] together with dry in the period of fresh [fodder]? — Come and hear: For R. Idi b. Abin reported in the name of R. Isaac b. Ashian: [In] Adar and Nisan [it is given] fresh [fodder] and [in] Elul and Tishri dry. It may be, however, that this passage means that the [dry] produce of Elul and Tishri is given to the animal to eat in Adar and Nisan.

And how much [of this] do we give it to eat daily? — R. Johanan reported in the name of R. Phinehas b. Aruba: The size of a dry fig. Said ‘Ulla: In the Palestinian colleges it was asked: Does the amount mentioned refer only to the animal's first meal,

(1) Mentioned in the Mishnah above as being a blemish.
(2) Lit., ‘the outer row of the eye’.
(3) The first impression was that the passage referred to the two parts of the eye.
(4) By which to remember which of the two affections of the eye is considered a blemish.
(5) An affection of the eye-sight occasioned by lightning which is white and cataract and similarly the floating white spot in the eye is a disqualifying blemish.
(6) He being a great man of his generation.
(7) He possessed a firstling which had a halazon.
(8) Since it is on account of the case that he is induced to pronounce the new rule. And here also how can we listen to him when he says that the animal has a permanent blemish?
(9) The Mishnah which states that a blemish does not disqualify the white part of the eye.
(10) Ps. LXXIII, 7. The wicked man has become degenerate because of the excessive fatness in his eye, and the fatness of the eye is in the white part.
(11) The white part has therefore a qualification, ‘fat’, implying that it is not actually the eye. R. Jose therefore maintains that a blemish does not disqualify in the white part of the eye.
(12) Added with Sh. Mek.
(13) Or a membrane (Gershom).
(14) Without diminishing from what it was originally.
(15) And failing this examination, even if the white spots are found on the eightieth day, they are not considered a blemish, as probably during this period the defect disappeared and has now returned. This defect would, therefore, be a natural thing.

(16) Lit., ‘dry’ grass which grows in Tishri, the fresh grass (lit., ‘moist’) growing in Nisan.

(17) And although it was not cured, it is not a blemish, as this is not the way to cure the animal.

(18) So Sh. Mek. cur. edd. ‘and after’.

(19) And if the animal is not cured then, it is a blemish.

(20) Which says that a permanent hawarwar must remain so for eighty days.

(21) This is for the purpose of curing the animal.

(22) For it is not the way of curing it.

(23) The animal eating the fresh fodder and then the dry for the period mentioned.

(24) How then can you say that the Mishnah is the view of R. Judah?

(25) If it did not become cured thereby.

(26) That only three months are required for the treatment in order to ascertain whether it is a permanent blemish or a transitory one.

(27) We therefore see that more than three months are necessary for the treatment.

(28) I.e., three months are required in all.

(29) I.e., in Adar and Nisan.

(30) I.e., in Elul and Tishri, and we do not slaughter the firstling until the ‘whole summer has passed; thus the animal is tested with both foods.

(31) V. note 7.

(32) A solution, that the fresh fodder we give to eat in Adar and Nisan and the dry in Elul and Tishri.

(33) There is consequently no proof here that the foods must be given at the particular periods of their growth.

(34) Lit., ‘the West’.

(35) Which it eats daily as a cure.

Talmud - Mas. Bechoroth 39a

or to every single meal? If you say that the first meal is meant, then the question arises, has it to be given before the meal or after the meal. — [The treatment] before a meal certainly does the animal good, like medicine. But suppose it is given after eating? — It certainly does it more good when it is unloosened. But suppose it is tied? Also, [we ask,] do we give it [the treatment] when it is by itself or together with another animal? Further, [do we give it] in the city or in the field? R. Ashi inquired: If you will say that [it is preferable] in the field, what is the ruling as regards a garden adjacent to a field? Let all this stand undecided.

R. HANINA B. ANTIGONUS SAYS, etc. Said R. Nahman b. Isaac. Provided that the cure is administered at three intervals [during the eighty days]. Phinehas the brother of Mar Samuel inquired of Samuel: If the firstling [ate this for a cure] and did not get better, is it considered a blemish retrospectively or is it considered a blemish only from then onwards? What is the practical difference? For deciding whether the law of Sacrilege applies to redemption money, [if it is redeemed within the three months]. If you say therefore that it is a disqualifying blemish retrospectively, then he commits sacrilege. But if it counts as a blemish only from then onwards, there is no Sacrilege. What is the ruling? — Samuel applied [to R. Phinehas] the verse: The lame take the prey.
MISHNAH. IF ITS NOSE IS PERFORATED, NIPPED, OR SLIT, OR ITS UPPER LIP PERFORATED, MUTILATED, OR SLIT [THESE ARE DISQUALIFYING BLEMISHES].

GEMARA. Our Rabbis have taught: If the partitions of the nostrils are perforated right through from the outside, this is a disqualifying blemish, if the perforation is inside, it is not considered a blemish.\(^\text{16}\)

IF ITS UPPER LIP WHICH IS PERFORATED, MUTILATED, OR SLIT. Said R. Papa: The outer line [edge] of its lip is meant.\(^\text{19}\)

MISHNAH. IF THE INCISORS ARE BROKEN OFF OR LEVELLED [TO THE GUM] OR THE MOLARS ARE TORN OUT [COMPLETELY], [THESE ARE DISQUALIFYING BLEMISHES IN A FIRSTLING]. BUT R. HANINA B. ANTIGONUS SAID: WE DO NOT EXAMINE BEHIND THE MOLARS,\(^\text{20}\) NOR THE MOLARS THEMSELVES.\(^\text{21}\)

GEMARA. Our Rabbis have taught: Which are the molars? Inside from the molars, the molars themselves being considered like the inside. R. Joshua b. Kapuzai\(^\text{22}\) says: We are permitted to slaughter the firstling in consequence only of [a defect in] the incisors.\(^\text{24}\) R. Hanina b. Antigonus says: We pay no attention whatever to the molars.\(^\text{25}\) Moreover, is not the view of R. Joshua b. Kapuzai the same as that of the first Tanna [quoted above]? — There is a lacuna [in the Baraitha] and it should read thus: Which are regarded as the inside teeth?\(^\text{27}\) Inside from the molars, and the molars themselves, are all regarded as the inside teeth. When does this rule apply? When they were broken off or levelled [to the gum], but if they were torn away [completely], we may slaughter [the firstling as a consequence]. R. Joshua b. Kapuzai says: We must not slaughter [the firstling] except in consequence of the incisors [becoming defective]. But if the molars were torn away [completely], we must not in consequence of this, slaughter [the firstling], though they do disqualify.\(^\text{28}\) R. Hanina b. Antigonus, however, says: We do not pay any attention whatever to the molar teeth and they do not even disqualify.

R. Ahadboi b. Ammi asked: Does [the law of] the loss of a limb apply to what is inside [an animal], or does [the law of] a loss of a limb not apply to the inside [of an animal]? To what does this query refer? If to a firstling, does not Scripture write: ‘Lame or blind’?\(^\text{30}\) If to a sacrificial animal, does not Scripture write: ‘Blind or broken’?\(^\text{31}\) I am not inquiring as regards slaughtering or redeeming [a sacrificial offering].\(^\text{33}\) My inquiry relates to disqualifying [the animal from the altar]."What is the ruling? The Divine Law says: It shall be perfect to be accepted.\(^\text{34}\) This implies that if it is ‘perfect’ then it is valid [as a sacrifice], but if there is anything missing [even inside the animal], then it is not so. Or shall I say while the text 'It shall be perfect to be accepted', is inclusive, the text ‘There shall be no blemishes therein’ [informs us] that as a blemish is from the outside, so anything must be missing from the outside [in order to disqualify the animal]? — Come and hear: [Scripture says]: ‘And the two kidneys’\(^\text{35}\) implying that an animal with one kidney or with three kidneys [is not offered up]. And another [Baraitha] taught, [Scripture says]: ‘He shall remove it’\(^\text{36}\) which includes a sacrificial animal possessing one kidney only, [as fit for the altar]. Now, all [the authorities concerned here] hold that a living creature is not created with one kidney only, and in the case here there was a definite loss of a kidney. Shall it therefore be said that this is the point at issue, that one Master holds that a deficiency inside the animal is considered a loss [which can disqualify], whereas the other Master holds that a deficiency inside the animal is not considered a deficiency [to disqualify]? — Said R. Hiyya b. Joseph: All [the authorities] agree that a living creature can be created with one kidney only, and the deficiency inside is considered a deficiency; and still there is no difficulty.\(^\text{37}\) In one case,\(^\text{39}\) we are dealing with an animal which was created with two [kidneys] and there was a loss [of a kidney], whereas in the other case, it speaks of where it was created originally with one kidney only [and therefore the animal was not disqualified from the altar]. But is not the case [of one kidney]\(^\text{39}\) stated to be similar to the case of three kidneys; consequently as three kidneys were created originally, so one kidney was created originally? Rather the point at issue here is whether a living creature can be created [with one kidney only]. One Master holds that a living creature can be created with one kidney only [and therefore an animal with one kidney is permitted for the altar] whereas the other holds that a living creature cannot be created with one kidney only. R. Johanan however said: All agree that a living creature [cannot be created] with one [kidney] only, and that the deficiency [of a limb] inside an animal is considered a deficiency. And still there is no difficulty [as regards the two Baraithas above]. In one case, the loss took place before it was slaughtered, and in the other, after the slaughtering. But even if the loss took place after the slaughtering, only before the blood was received [in a vessel] is it permitted [to offer it]?

(1) For if we adopt the view that every single meal is meant, then it is immaterial whether before or after the meal, since when the second meal arrives, although it is after a meal (the first one), we still give it this food to eat.

(2) This does not apply to a firstling to which no redemption money applies, but to consecrated animals in general.

(3) Which is usually given before a meal, and it does more good then than after a meal.

(4) Do we regard this as a satisfactory test so that if it is not cured the defect is pronounced a disqualifying blemish.

(5) It being the custom of clean animals to eat barley before drinking, as it does them more good then than after drinking.

(6) Do the fresh and dry fodder have any good effect?

(7) The animal being more content when it eats in such a condition.

(8) Enjoying its food better in company.

(9) The animal preferring the open space of the field.

(10) Where the animal is fed with fodder (fresh and dry) for a cure. Does it enjoy the air here as well as in a field?

(11) That it is examined for example, to-day and at the end of twenty-six and a half days, then further at the end of twenty-six and a half days and subsequently at the end of the period of twenty-seven days. There is usually a change at these three particular periods, and consequently if he did not examine the animal at these specific times, then we cannot declare that the animal had a permanent blemish. Tosaf, explains it as meaning that the examination must take place at the commencement of the eighty days, at the conclusion of the period and in the middle, a three-fold examination.

(12) If it is used for a secular purpose.

(13) The defect of the dripping eye.

(14) If he has derived a benefit from the redemption money and he must bring a suitable sacrifice.

(15) Isa. XXXIII, 23.

(16) The verse states something almost incredible, viz., that the lame take prey. Similarly although Samuel was the much greater scholar then Phinehas, yet the latter asked him a question which he confessed was beyond him.

(17) The partition which divides the nose inside.

(18) For it is in a hidden part.

(19) I.e., but not its breadth.

(20) Lit., ‘from the molars and within’, as in those teeth a defect is not recognized either when the animal cats or bleats. The molar is called (twin) from its shape, each tooth possessing two roots and looking like two.

(21) If they were completely torn out, as it is not a blemish from the inside.

(22) This passage is explained below in the Gemara.

(23) Var. lec. Kapusai.

(24) In the centre of the mouth.

(25) Even for the altar the animal is not disqualified.

(26) The Baraitha asking the question, What are the molar teeth? and then proceeding to say, ‘From the molars etc’.

(27) With reference to which the Mishnah says, If they were torn away it is a blemish and if they were broken off it is not a blemish.

(28) The animal for offering up on the altar, and he must wait until another blemish occurs, after which he may slaughter it.

(29) E.g., the loss of a kidney or milt.

(30) Implying that only open defects are disqualifying blemishes. The verse is in Deut. XV, 21.

(31) Again implying that only open defects are regarded as blemishes. The verse is in Lev. XXII, 22.

(32) A firstling, in consequence of a loss inside the animal.

(33) For to such an extent it would not be a blemish.
For the altar. The verse is in Lev. XXII, 21.

Lev. VII, 4 in connection with sacrifices.

Ibid. Emphasis on the singular ‘it’.

As regards a contradiction between the two Baraithas.

The Baraitha which disqualifies an animal where there is the loss of a kidney.

In the Baraitha where it says that an animal with one kidney or three kidneys is disqualified.

And still it disqualifies the animal.

And therefore if we find only one kidney, we say that the animal originally possessed two kidneys and has been deprived of one, thereby becoming disqualified from the altar.

The loss therefore disqualifies the animal from the altar.

For sprinkling purposes.

Talmud - Mas. Bechoroth 39b

Has not R. Ze'ira said in the name of Rab. If one makes a slit in the ear of the bull and subsequently receives its bloods, it is disqualified, as it is written in the Scriptures: And he shall take of the blood of the bullock, [implying] the bullock as it had been before? Rather [the explanation] is that in one case, the loss took place before the blood was received, and in the other after the blood was received. But is a defect in the sacrifice after the blood was received, but before the sprinkling permitted? Has it not been taught: [Scripture says]: Your lamb shall be without blemish, a male of the first year. [This intimates] that it must be unblemished and a year old at the time of slaughtering. Whence do we infer that the same rule applies at the time of the receiving of the blood, its carrying [to the altar] and its sprinkling? Because the text states: ‘It shall be’, [implying] that it must be unblemished and a year old in all the phases [of the sacrificial rite]? — Explain this to refer only to the law of a year old. It also stands to reason. For it was taught, R. Joshua said: In all the sacrificial animals mentioned in the Torah, if there is left [a piece of flesh] the size of an olive or [a piece of fat] the size of an olive, the blood may be sprinkled.

But does there exist an object which at the time of slaughtering is a year old and at the time when the blood is received and carried is two years old? — Said Raba: This proves that [even] hours disqualify in the case of sacrifices.

Shall we say [that R. Ahadobi's query above] goes back to Tannaim? [For it was taught, Scripture says]: That which hath its stones bruised or crushed or torn or cut, all these blemishes must be in the stones. This is the view of R. Judah. [Do you say] ‘in the stones’ but not in the membrum virile? — Read then: Also in the stones. This is the view of R. Judah. R. Eleazar b. Jacob says: All these blemishes must be in the membrum. R. Jose however says: ‘Bruised or crushed’ can be in the stones also, whereas ‘torn or cut’ in the membrum is [a blemish], but in the stones is not [a blemish]. What does it mean? Does it not mean that the point at issue is that one Master holds that a deficiency inside [the animal] is considered a deficiency, whereas the other Master holds that a deficiency inside [the animal] is not considered a deficiency! But do you consider this as reasonable? What in this case does R. Jose hold? If he holds: A deficiency inside [an animal] is considered a deficiency, then ‘torn or cut’ should apply [to all parts]. And if he holds: A deficiency inside [an animal] is not considered a deficiency, then even ‘bruised or crushed’ should not apply [to all parts]! Rather [explain that] the point at issue here is whether they are open blemishes. R. Judah holds: ‘Bruised or crushed’ are blemishes because [the stones or membrum] shrink afterwards. ‘Torn or cut’ are blemishes because they are hanging. R. Eleazar b. Jacob, however, holds: ‘Bruised or crushed’ are not blemishes, for originally [when the animal is well] they also sometimes shrink. ‘Torn or cut’ are not blemishes, for originally [when the animal is well] they some times also hang. And R. Jose holds: ‘Bruised or crushed’ are blemishes, for they are not in existence now. ‘Torn or cut’ however, are not blemishes because they are still in existence.
MISHNAH. [OTHER BLEMISHES ARE] IF THE BAG IS MUTILATED OR THE GENITALS OF A FEMALE ANIMAL IN THE CASE OF SACRIFICIAL OFFERINGS: IF THE TAIL IS MUTILATED FROM THE BONE but not from the joint; or if the top end [root] of the tail divides the bone or if there is flesh between one joint and another [in the tail] to the amount of a finger's breadth.

GEMARA. Said R. Eleazar: [The Mishnah particularly means a bag] which is mutilated, but not if it is removed. [The mutilation also only applies to] the bag, but not to the membrum itself. It has been taught likewise: [If the bag was] mutilated [it is a blemish], but not if it was removed. [The mutilation applies to] the bag and not to the membrum. Said R. Jose b. ha-Meshullam: It happened at En-Bul that a wolf took [the whole bag] of one and it returned to its normal condition.

IF THE TAIL IS MUTILATED FROM THE BONE etc. A Tanna taught: The measurement of a finger's breadth mentioned [by the Sages] is one-fourth of any man's handbreadth, [i.e., a thumb's breadth]. What is the legal import of this? Said Raba: It is in connection with the subject of purple blue. For it has been taught: How many threads does he put into [the hole of the corner for fringes]? Beth Shammai say: Four; whereas Beth Hillel say: Three. And how far must the threads of the show-fringes hang down [beyond the border]? — Beth Shammai say: Four finger-breadths, whereas Beth Hillel say: Three finger-breadths. And the three finger-breadths mentioned by Beth Hillel are each equal to one of the four finger-breadths of any man's hand.

R. Huna son of R. Joshua says: [The measurement of a fingerbreadth here mentioned has reference to] the two standard-cubits, as we have learnt: Two standard-cubits were deposited

(1) Belonging to the anointed priest, after its slaughter but before the receiving of the blood.
(2) Lev. XVI, 14.
(3) And just as at the slaughtering the bullock was unblemished, so it must be perfect when its blood is received in the vessel.
(4) When it says that a loss inside the animal disqualifies.
(5) Ex. XII, 5.
(6) The statement just cited: In all phases etc.
(7) But as regards the rule of being unblemished, this is only necessary at the slaughtering and receiving of the blood.
(8) That the loss after receiving the blood does not disqualify the animal.
(9) For since the size of an olive remains of the flesh, which is sufficient for the eating of a man, and the size of an olive of fat, which is adequate for burning on the altar, we may proceed to sprinkle the blood. If, however, nothing remains, then there cannot be any sprinkling. We thus see that if everything is lost except the size of an olive of flesh and fat, we can still conclude the sacrificial rite. Therefore the statement that ‘in all phases it must be perfect’ quoted in the Baraitha just mentioned, can only refer to the law of its being a year old.
(10) Hence, for example. if the lamb was born last year on the fourteenth of Nisan at the eighth hour, he must be careful to slaughter and sprinkle its blood before the ninth hour, for the ninth hour disqualifies it and it is as if it had entered the second year.
(11) I.e., Tannaim differ in the matter.
(12) E.g. with stones (Rashi).
(13) Completely by hand, only still hanging on to the bag.
(14) With a knife, only still hanging on to the bag. Lev. XXII, 24.
(15) Surely since the latter is more open and visible a blemish in it should certainly disqualify.
(16) R. Judah.
(17) That the point at issue is as you say.
(18) All unanimously hold that a loss of a limb inside the animal is not considered a loss, and the reason of the authority who disqualifies the balls is not because it is considered a loss but because it is regarded as a blemish.
(19) Knocking against the bag and being visible outside, since not attached above.
(20) The stones
(21) And therefore it is a loss.
(22) Containing the male animal's membrum.
(23) This cannot refer to a first-born animal, as the law of a first-born only applies to a male.
(24) This is a blemish because it cannot recover.
(25) i.e., between the joints, for this can heal.
(26) i.e., if the backbone is branched at the place where the tail begins appearing like two tails. Rashi explains 'peels' the backbone, i.e., if the end of the backbone is bare of skin and flesh.
(27) For then it can return to its normal condition.
(28) As this is hidden and can heal.
(29) N.W. of Saffed.
(30) Has the measure of a finger's breadth been mentioned?
(31) The fringes, which require the blue show-fringes.
(32) Another explanation is: What is the length of the twisted thread, independently of the show-fringes? And the word מַשְׁלָשָׁה is employed to indicate that it is a third of the whole, i.e., that the show-fringes together with the twisted thread are twelve finger-breadths, that is three handbreadths.
(33) Making altogether the size of three thumbs.

Talmud - Mas. Bechoroth 40a

in [the gate called] the Castle of Shushan, one in the north-east corner, and the other in the south-east corner. That in the northeast corner was larger than the Mosaic cubit by half a finger's breadth and that of the south-east corner was larger than its companion by half a finger's breadth. Consequently the latter was a finger's breadth larger than the Mosaic cubit. And why were there a large and small standard-cubit? So that while the workmen used to undertake their tasks according to the smaller cubit [of Moses] but executed in accordance with the large, in order that it should not come to commit sacrilege. And what need was there for two standard-cubits? — One standard-cubit [which was half a finger's breadth larger than that of Moses] was used for measuring gold and silver and the other [which was a whole finger's-breadth larger] was used for building [the wall]. R. Nahman b. Isaac or you may say R. Huna b. Nathan, said: [The exact measurement of a finger's breadth mentioned above has] reference to what we have learnt: OR IF THERE IS FLESH BETWEEN ONE JOINT AND ANOTHER TO THE AMOUNT OF A FINGER'S BREADTH.

GEMARA. If in a case where it only has one stone, you say [in the Mishnah] that it is a blemish, in a case where it has no stones at all, is there any question? — Something is omitted, and it must read thus: IF [THE FIRSTLING] HAS NOT the two STONES in two bags, only in one bag, OR IF IT HAS two bags containing ONLY ONE STONE, IT IS A BLEMISH. R. ISHMAEL SAYS: IF IT HAS TWO BAGS, IT CERTAINLY HAS TWO STONES. IF HOWEVER IT HAS ONLY ONE BAG, IT IS AS IF IT HAS ONLY ONE STONE. WHEREUPON R. AKIBA SAYS: We do not say ‘it certainly has’ BUT WE PLACE THE ANIMAL ON ITS BUTTOCK AND RUB [THE BAG] AND IF THERE IS A STONE [INSIDE] THEN IT COMES OUT EVENTUALLY.

IF HAPPENED THAT HE RUBBED IT AND THE STONE DID NOT COME OUT etc. It has been taught: Said R. Jose: It happened at Peran in the house of Menahem that he rubbed [the bag]... and [the stone] did not come out. When however it was slaughtered, the stone was found attached to ritually cut it? — Rather [R. Johanan] must have said trefahs.14 But it is not a case here of the prohibition of trefahs! Then [this is what he said to R. Akiba]: How long will you allow Israel to eat consecrated sacrifices without [the wall of Jerusalem]?15

MISHNAH. IF [A FIRSTLING] HAS FIVE FEET OR IF IT HAS ONLY THREE FEET OR IF ITS FEET ARE CLOSED16 LIKE THAT OF AN ASS OR A SHAHUL OR A KASUL [THESE ARE BLEMISHES]. WHAT IS MEANT BY SHAHUL? [AN ANIMAL] WITH A DISLOCATED HIP [WITHOUT THE SINEWS BEING SEVERED]. WHAT IS MEANT BY KASUL? [AN ANIMAL] ONE OF WHOSE HIPS IS HIGHER THAN THE OTHER.

GEMARA. Said Rab Huna: This17 is meant only when [the animal] has one foot too few or one too many in front;18 but if behind, it is also trefah,19 for ‘every addition is considered equal to the entire absence [of the respective limb]’.20

OR WHOSE FEET ARE CLOSED LIKE THAT OF AN ASS. Said R. Papa: You should not say that they are round as well as not cloven,21 but even if their feet are only round [like that of an ass] although they are not cloven, [it is a blemish].22

A SHAHUL OR A KASUL etc. Our Rabbis taught: What is meant by kasul and what is meant by shahul? Shahul means [an animal] whose hip became dislocated [without the severing of the sinews].
Kasul means [an animal] one of whose legs is fixed in the loin23 and the other over the loin.

A Tanna taught: What is meant by a sarua’ or a kalut? Sarua’ means [an animal] one of whose legs is longer than the other, kalut means one whose feet are uncloven like that of an ass or a horse.

GEMARA. You say EVEN THOUGH IT WAS NOT NOTICEABLE. But is it then a blemish? — Said R. Papa: [The break] is not noticeable in itself but it is noticeable owing to the animal's inability to carry out its normal functions.27

THESE BLEMISHES ILA RECORDED etc. Does this mean to say that this is not a usual thing?28 The following was cited in contradiction. If a woman gives birth to a kind of animal, beast or bird, whether clean or unclean, if it is a male she must observe the regulations relating to the birth of a male,29 and if it is a female she must observe the regulations relating to the birth of a female.30 If [the sex], however, is not known, then she must keep the regulations relating both to a male and a female.31 These are the words of R. Meir. And Rabba b. Bar Hana reported in the name of R.
Johanan: What is the reason of R. Meir?32 Since its eyeball is round like that of a man.33 — Said R.
Joseph: This offers no difficulty. In one case the shape of the black of the eye is meant,34 and in the other the slit [in which the eye is seated is meant].

OR HAS A MOUTH LIKE THAT OF A SWINE. Said R. Papa: You should not say that the mouth must be pointed besides the lip being parted, but if [the lip] is parted, even though the mouth is not pointed.

OR ONE WHICH HAD THE GREATER PART OF THE ANTERIOR OF THE TONGUE REMOVED. Whose opinion does this represent? — It is that of R. Judah. For it has been taught: And one which has the greater part of the tongue removed; R. Judah, however, says: The greater part of the anterior of the tongue.

GEMARA. What has he taught that he cites an incident — Since we have learnt [in the previous] Mishnah: Or its mouth was like that of a swine, and the Rabbis differ from R. [Ila]. And it is with reference to this that we are now told that the Rabbis differ from R. [Ila] only where the upper lip is larger than the lower one, but where the lower lip is larger than the upper one, [they agree that] this is a [disqualifying] blemish.

(1) The eastern gate of the Temple mount on which the picture of the Castle of Shushan was sculptured, v. Mid, I, 3.
(2) Illegally benefiting from a sacred object. For if the workmen followed the Mosaic cubit, since it is not always possible to be exact, there was a fear that what was actually holy might be used in a secular manner.
(3) The Mosaic cubit being stipulated but the workmen in executing the work, giving the larger cubit.
(4) Lit., ‘hollow, arched pitcher’.
(5) And the loins, as a test.
(6) To be eaten, for it was a blemish, owing to the fact that it was not in its place.
(7) Since the stone was eventually found.
(8) About its being a blemish?
(9) In the Mishnah.
(10) R. Ishmael differs therefore only as regards the second clause of the Mishnah, but as regards the first, he agrees that where the animal has only one bag it is a blemish, for it is as if there was only one stone.
(11) The name of a village (Rashi). Tosaf. renders the passage מְלִישַׁת בַּמַּיִים ‘It happened in the stables of the house of Menahem’ etc. deriving פְּרָה מִי from פְּרָה מִי.
(12) For since you forbid the eating of the animal as an unblemished firstling without Jerusalem, there is no other remedy except burying it.
(13) Animals not ritually slaughtered or which died of themselves.
(14) Animals afflicted with a fatal organic disease.
(15) For it is an unblemished firstling which can only be eaten in Jerusalem and, according to your ruling, it will be eaten outside the walls of Jerusalem.
(16) I.e., unclenched hoofs.
(17) The statement of the Mishnah, A FIRSTLING WHICH HAS FIVE FEET etc.
(18) E.g., if in the one case it has three fore-feet as well as its two hind-feet, and in the other, it has the two hind-feet and one fore-foot. The reason is that trefah does not apply to the fore-foot.
(19) As well as being a blemish.
(20) And the law is that if the part from the knee upwards is cut then the animal is trefah.
(21) I.e., that in every respect it must resemble an ass in order to constitute a blemish.
(22) For the hoofs of a clean animal are not round.
(23) Normally the leg of an animal is attached to the fat-tail in proximity of the loin but not over it.
(24) This is explained in the Gemara below.
(26) Contrary to the Sages above who oppose the additional cases of blemishes mentioned by Ila.
(27) Of walking naturally, as at present it limps.
(28) That the eyeball should be round?
(29) I.e., seven days of impurity and then the continuation for thirty-three days in blood of purification. Lit., ‘she sits’.
(30) I.e., fourteen impure days and then continue with sixty-six days of the blood of purification.
(31) The stricter rules of both sexes i.e., fourteen impure days and only thirty-three pure days.
(32) Who maintains that if a woman gives birth to a species of animal etc. it is considered as a genuine offspring.
(33) We therefore see that a round eyeball is not an abnormal feature.
(34) Which is a usual thing.
(35) It is unusual for this to be round. The reading of the text is כירבה, according to Rashi and R. Gershom. R. Hananel has כירבה, referring to the red parts surrounding the black of the eye. Cur. edd. כירבה, ‘the white part’.
(36) That we compare it with the swine in all particulars in order to constitute a blemish.
(37) It is a blemish. Another interpretation of יפרוח דषף given by Rashi is: The mouth is round besides the upper lip and upper jaws overlapping the lower jaws.
(38) And since the Mishnah speaks of the anterior part of the tongue, must represent the view of R. Judah and not that of the first Tanna quoted.
(39) Similar to that quoted in the Mishnah and on a similar subject.
(40) When they declare above: We have only heard these already mentioned etc.

Talmud - Mas. Bechoroth 40b

AND IT HAPPENED also THAT THE LOWER JAW WAS LARGER THAN THE UPPER ONE, AND R. SIMEON B. GAMALIEL ASKED THE SAGES [FOR A RULING], AND THEY SAID: THIS IS A BLEMISH. But did we not learn of this [blemish] only with reference to a human being:¹ ‘If the upper lip is larger than the lower one or the lower lip is larger than the upper one, this is a blemish”? Now only with reference to a human being does Scripture write: What man soever of the seed of Aaron,² [implying] that among the seed of Aaron man must be normal but not with regard to a beast? Said R. Papa: This offers no difficulty. In one case there is a bone,³ whereas in the other there is no bone.⁴ MISHNAH. IN REGARD TO THE EAR OF A KID WHICH WAS DOUBLED,⁵ THE SAGES RULED [AS FOLLOWS]: IF IT IS ALL ONE BONE,⁶ IT IS A BLEMISH, BUT IF IT IS NOT ALL ONE BONE,⁷ IT IS NOT A BLEMISH.

R. HANINA THE SON OF GAMALIEL SAYS: IF THE TAIL OF A KID IS LIKE THAT OF A SWINE, OR IF THE TAIL DOES NOT POSSESS THREE VERTEBRAE, THIS IS A BLEMISH.

GEMARA. Our Rabbis taught: If a firstling’s mouth is shrunk⁸ or if its feet are shrunk, if it is on account of [lack of] room⁹ then it is not a blemish, but if it is on account of the bone,¹⁰ it is a blemish. Doubled ears with one system of cartilages constitute a blemish, but with two systems of cartilages are not a blemish.

R. GAMALIEL SAYS: THE TAIL OF A KID WHICH WAS LIKE THAT OF A SWINE. Said R. Papa: Do not say that it must be round as well as [very] thin,¹¹ enough if it is round, even though it is thick.

OR IF THE TAIL DOES NOT POSSESS THREE VERTEBRAE etc. Said R. Huna: In a kid, two vertebrae in the tail constitute a blemish, but three are not a blemish. But in a lamb, three vertebrae constitute a blemish, whereas four are not a blemish. An objection was raised: In a kid, one vertebra in the tail is a blemish, whereas two are not a blemish. But in a lamb two vertebrae are a blemish while three are not a blemish. Is not this a refutation of R. Huna? How then does R. Huna [explain his position]? — Our Mishnah misled him. He was under the impression that just as the first part¹² [of the Mishnah] referred to a kid, similarly the second part¹³ referred to a kid. It is not so, however. The first part refers to a kid, whereas the second part refers to a lamb.

GEMARA. Does this mean to say that a yabeleth is a [disqualifying] blemish? Against this I quote the following: We must not slaughter a firstling either in the Temple\(^18\) or in the country\(^19\) in consequence of the following blemishes: One affected with garab,\(^20\) or yabeleth!\(^21\) — But do you consider it reasonable [that yabeleth should not be a real blemish]? Is there not a text ‘or yabeleth’\(^22\) in Scripture? — There is no contradiction. In the one case,\(^23\) the body is referred to and in the other [our Mishnah], the eye. But let us see now. Holy Writ makes no distinction; what difference then does it make whether the blemish is in the eye or on the body? — Rather say that there is no difficulty [for the following reason].\(^24\) In one case it has a bone and in the other it has no bone. [The yabeleth of] the text refers to where it has a bone.\(^25\) [The yabeleth of] our Mishnah,\(^26\) however, refers to where it has no bone. Therefore [if it is] in its eye, it is considered a [disqualifying] blemish, but on its body, it is not a [disqualifying] blemish.

But if there is no bone on the body, does it really disqualify [from the altar]? Is it not then a mere wart? For it has been taught: R. Eleazar says: Those with warts, if human beings, are unfit for the altar, if beasts, they are fit for the altar? — Rather explain as follows: In one case as well as in the other,\(^27\) it refers to the eye, and yet there is no difficulty. In one case\(^28\) it refers to the black part [of the eye] and in the other it refers to the white.\(^29\) But surely blemishes do not disqualify in the white part of the eye?\(^30\) — Rather explain this [as follows]: In one case as well as in the other\(^31\) we are dealing with the white part of the eye, [nevertheless] said Resh Lakish: It offers no difficulty. In one case [the yabeleth] has hair on it,\(^32\) in the other, it has no hair on it.\(^33\)

ITS ONE EYE WAS ABNORMALLY LARGE etc. A Tanna taught: ‘Large’ means as large as that of a calf, and ‘small’ means as small as that of a goose.

ITS ONE EAR WAS ABNORMALLY LARGE etc. And the Rabbis,\(^34\) what is their limit?\(^35\) — It was taught, Others say: Even if the second stone is only the size of a bean, it is permitted.\(^36\)

---

(1) A priest. How then can we compare the two things?
(2) Lev. XXII, 4.
(3) If the bone of the lower jaw is larger than the upper one, it is regarded as a blemish even in an animal.
(4) Only the lower lip overlaps and is larger than the upper. This is a blemish in a human being but not in an animal.
(5) It has two ears on one side, an ear within an ear. The Mishnah speaks here of a kid, because this animal often has its ear somewhat folded and doubled.
(6) I.e., if the tip of the outside ear is bent over and is connected with the inside ear. We do not regard this as a case of an additional limb, because the deformity is not visible.
(7) So Rashi. I.e., if the tips of the outside ear and the inside one are not connected. According to this interpretation, the word יֵעַלְסָּה refers to the הָעִון ‘tip of the ear’, and the reason why it is called ‘a bone’ is because it is a hard physical substance, like that of a bone. Maimonides, however, apparently reads: ‘If it is another’ and explains it as follows: If the external ear appears like a separate and distinct member, then it is a blemish, but if it does not seem like an extra member, then it is not a blemish. This interpretation would remove the difficulty why according to Rashi’s version it is not regarded as an additional limb where it is ‘one bone’. Cur. edd.: If it has no bone.

(8) Or swollen (Rashi).

(9) In the mouth, so that the animal is not able to open its mouth well.

(10) The animal opens its mouth well, but the jaws are tight and prevent it from opening the mouth wide enough. According to Rashi’s second explanation the meaning is: If the swelling is due to the air, (reading רָאוֹ) which it breathes, then it is not blemished and it will recover. But if it is because of the bone being unduly thick, it is a blemish.

(11) That it is required to be like that of a swine in every way, in order to be a disqualifying blemish.

(12) THE EAR OF A KID etc.

(13) OR IF THE TAIL etc.

(14) An excrescence or large warts on the skin.

(15) For this defect is noticeable. The case where it was broken has already been stated previously.

(16) I.e., the jaw (R. Gershom), not the teeth.

(17) For if it is not recognized by sight as a deformity but is only found to be so by measurement, then it is not a disqualifying blemish, since a disqualifying blemish must be visible and noticeable.

(18) To offer it on the altar, since it is disqualified.

(19) A term used in contra distinction to the Sanctuary and Temple. It is forbidden to slaughter a firstling under such circumstances, unless it is actually blemished.

(20) A scurf or itch.

(21) Infra 41a. We see therefore that it is not regarded as a genuine blemish.

(22) Lev. XXII, 22.

(23) That of the text and also of the Mishnah quoted.

(24) In reality even in the body yabeleth is a blemish.

(25) Therefore even in the body yabeleth is considered a blemish.

(26) And also the Mishnah quoted. Therefore a yabeleth in the eye is a blemish, as our Mishnah holds, even without a bone, and as the other Mishnah refers to the body, a yabeleth in such a case is not a disqualifying blemish, since it has no bone.

(27) I.e., in both the other Mishnah and the Baraita, but not to the scriptural text.

(28) Our Mishnah which regards yabeleth as a blemish.

(29) A yabeleth in the white part of the eye only renders an animal unfit for the Temple.

(30) V. supra 38a.

(31) The Mishnah infra 41a, like the statement of the quoted Mishnah that no blemishes disqualify the white part of the eye.

(32) Therefore although it is in the white part, since there is hair on the yabeleth it is not acceptable for a sacrifice.

(33) Therefore the rule of the Mishnah stands that blemishes do not disqualify in the white part of the eye. Our Mishnah here however which declares a yabeleth to be a real blemish refers to a case where it is in the black part of the eye, even without a bone, while the scriptural text refers to where there is a bone; consequently both on the body and in the eye, a yabeleth constitutes a blemish.

(34) Who do not agree with Rabbi Judah in connection with the case of one ball being as large as two of the other (Rashi).

(35) How small may its companion stone be and still not be regarded as a blemish.

(36) But if it is less, then it is a blemish.

(37) Explained later in the Gemara.

(38) To reach the ‘arkub, and if not, it is a blemish. Another version (Tosaf. Yom Tob.) is that the tail does not usually reach the ‘arkub and therefore if it is short of the ‘arkub, it is not a blemish.

Talmud - Mas. Bechoroth 41a
GEMARA. It has been taught: The upper joint, [the inner part of the knee] not the lower joint [knuckle]. And the corresponding part in a camel is [easily] recognized.

MISHNAH. IN CONSEQUENCE OF THESE BLEMISHES WE MAY SLAUGHTER A FIRSTBORN ANIMAL, AND CONSECRATED ANIMALS RENDERED UNFIT [FOR THE ALTAR] IN CONSEQUENCE OF THESE BLEMISHES MAY BE REDEEMED.

GEMARA. What need is there to state this again? Has not [the Tanna] stated this in a previous part [as follows]: In consequence of these blemishes we may slaughter the first-born animal?—There was need [for the Tanna to state this] on account of the second clause in our Mishnah: CONSECRATED ANIMALS RENDERED UNFIT [FOR THE ALTAR] IN CONSEQUENCE OF THESE BLEMISHES MAY BE REDEEMED. But surely this too is obvious, for if we may slaughter [the animal in consequence of these blemishes], is there any question about redeeming it? Rather [the explanation is as follows]: Since it stated [in a previous Mishnah]: [Ila] also added three cases of blemishes, and the Sages said to him: We have only heard of these [already mentioned], the [Tanna] then proceeds [in subsequent Mishnahs] to give the opinions of individual teachers. Therefore he states without mentioning names in reference to all these [individual rulings]: IN CONSEQUENCE OF THESE BLEMISHES WE MAY SLAUGHTER A FIRST-BORN ANIMAL, AND CONSECRATED ANIMALS RENDERED UNFIT [FOR THE ALTAR] IN CONSEQUENCE OF THESE BLEMISHES MAY BE REDEEMED.

GEMARA. And is not garab [a blemish]? Is it not written in the Scriptures: ‘or a garab’? And also, is not hazzazith [a blemish]? Is it not written in the Scriptures ‘or yallefeth’? For it has been taught: Garab is the same as heres, yallefeth is the same as the Egyptian hazzazith? And Resh Lakish explained: Why is it called yallefeth? Because it continues to cling [to the body] to the day of death. Now there is no difficulty as regards [different meanings of] the hazzazith [of the text] and the hazzazith [of our Mishnah], as here the text refers to Egyptian hazzazith and [the Mishnah] refers to a general hazzazith. But does not the [interpretation of] garab [in the text] and garab [of the Mishnah] present a contradiction? — The [different interpretations of] garab of the text and garab [of our Mishnah] also offer no difficulty, for in one case it refers to where it is moist and in the other to where it is dry, the moist healing whereas the dry does not heal, [and therefore it is a blemish]. But does the moist garab heal? Is it not written: The Lord will smite thee with the boil of Egypt and with the emerods and with the garab [scab] and with heres [itch] and since it says: ‘And with heres’ [a dry eruption], then the garab [scab] must be moist, and the text continues: ‘Whereof thou canst not be healed’? — Rather explain that there are three kinds of garab. The garab of the text refers [to a scab] which is dry both inside and outside. The garab of our Mishnah refers to where it is moist both inside and outside. The garab of Egypt is where it is dry inside and moist outside, for R. Joshua b. Levi said: The boil which the Holy One, blessed be He, brought upon the Egyptians was moist... outside and dry inside, for it is written: And it became a boil breaking forth with blains upon man and upon beast.26

AN OLD ANIMAL OR A SICK ONE OR AN ANIMAL OF OFFENSIVE SMELL OR SIGHT. Whence is it proven?27 — Our Rabbis taught: Scripture says: Of28 the flock, ‘or of the sheep’, ‘or of the goats’, [intimating] the exclusion of an old [animal], a sick one, and one with an offensive [smell or appearance]. And all [the three restrictive texts] are necessary. For if the Divine Law had only written [one restrictive text] [I would say it is] to exclude the case of an old animal [from Temple sacrifice], I might have thought that this was because it cannot recover its former strength, but as regards a sick animal, since it may recover its health, I might have said that it is not so.29 Or if the Divine Law had only written [one restrictive text] [I would say it is]30 to exclude the case of a sick animal, I might have thought that the reason was because it is not usual for an animal to be ill, but in regard to an old animal, since it is a usual thing,31 I might have said it is not so. And if the Divine Law had written [two restrictive texts], [I might have thought that] they only excluded the two cases where [the animals] are weak, but as regards an animal with an offensive smell or sight but which is not [physically] weak, I might have said that it was not so. And even if [a scriptural text had been written] to exclude the case of [an animal] with an offensive smell or appearance, I might have thought that the reason was because it was repulsive, but in the case of the other animals which are not repulsive, I might have said that it was not so. There is need therefore [for the three restrictive texts].

OR AN ANIMAL WITH WHICH A TRANSGRESSION HAD BEEN COMMITTED etc. Whence is it proven [that we must not slaughter it in the Temple]? — Our Rabbis taught: [Scripture says]: Of the cattle32 intimating the exclusion of an animal which covered33 [a woman] and the animal that was covered [by a man]; ‘even of the herd’34 [intimates] the exclusion of an animal which was worshipped as an idol; ‘of the flock’ [intimates] the exclusion of one designated for idolatrous purposes. The text ‘or of the flock’ intimates one which has gored a person [to death]. But are not these35 liable to the penalty of death? — The reference here is to cases where there is only one witness or where the owners confess.36

[A TUMTUM OR A HERMAPHRODITE]. Now we quite understand a tumtum being disqualified for the Temple, the reason being in case it is a female.37 It is also disqualified without the Temple, in case it is a male and not blemished.38 As regards a hermaphrodite also, we understand its being disqualified for the Temple, in case it is a male. But in regard to slaughtering it without the Temple, granted that it is a male, let it at least be regarded as having a depression at its female genitals, in consequence of which he may slaughter the animal? — Said Abaye: Scripture says: ‘Or broken’, ‘or haruz’,39 [intimating] that ‘haruz’ must be like ‘broken’; just as ‘broken’ must be in a bone, [in order to disqualify], so ‘haruz’ must be in a bone, [but not in a fleshy part].

Raba says: Even without [the comparison] with ‘broken’, you could not say that a depression in the fleshy part is considered a blemish. For if you were to assume that a depression in the fleshy part is a blemish, since a Master said: garab,40 [a dry scab], is the same as heres,41 [a dry scab] is cut into [deeper than the surface],42 for Scripture says: ‘And the appearance thereof be deeper than the skin’,43 like the sun-lit spots which have a semblance of being deeper than the shaded spots [which appear to be raised]. Consequently, let Scripture write haruz44 and then there would be no need to write garab, for I would argue, if haruz [in the fleshy part] which is not repulsive is yet regarded as a blemish, how much more so ought this to be the case with garab, which is repulsive? The Divine Law therefore mentions garab, [intimating] that a depression in the fleshy part is not a blemish.45

R. ISHMAEL SAYS: THERE IS NO GREATER BLEMISH [THAN THAT OF A HERMAPHRODITE]. He does not hold the opinion of Abaye, for we do not draw the analogy between haruz to ‘broken’.46 He also does not hold the opinion of Raba, for it may be that a depression in the fleshy part is not a blemish where the haruz is not distinguishable, but where it is distinguishable, we apply the scriptural text 'I'll blemish'.

(1) The upper joint, as it has there a bone projecting outside, and also because its 'arkub is very thick (R. Gershom). Another interpretation (Rashi) is: The 'arkub of a camel is noticeable, as its tail reaches that part. V. Hul., Sonc. ed., 76a.

(2) After which the animal becomes genuine hullin (v. Glos.).

(3) V. supra 37a.

(4) V. supra 40a.

(5) R. Hanina b. Antigonus and R. Hanina b. Gamaliel who mention several blemishes in connection with a firstling. One might therefore have thought that the Rabbis do not accept as blemishes also those cited by these teachers.

(6) Thus teaching that the view of R. Hanina b. Antigonus and that of R. Hanina b. Gamaliel are legal decisions. There was therefore need for stating the Mishnah.

(7) As the animals cannot be regarded as unblemished.

(9) V. Gemara.

(10) An excrescence or large wart, having, however, no bone, for otherwise it would be a real blemish, v. supra 40b.

(11) Scabs or swollen lumps.

(12) Having copulated with a human being.

(13) For where there are two witnesses of the copulation or the boring, then the animal is stoned and no benefit can be derived from it.

(14) Where the sex of the animal is unknown, as the genitals are covered with a skin.

(15) The animal possessing both the male and the female characteristics. Both in this case and that of a tumtum we are uncertain whether we should regard the animal as a male or a female.

(16) The passage CAN NEITHER BE SLAUGHTERED etc. is repeated here by the Tanna to teach us that even in the case of a tumtum or a hermaphrodite, we may not slaughter it in the Temple or outside the Temple in consequence of this defect, as it is not a genuine blemish, unlike the view of R. Ishmael which follows.

(17) For in the sexual part it is virtually blemished. It has therefore the law of a blemished firstling which may be slaughtered, but shearing or working with it is prohibited.

(18) For we regard it as a special type of animal, distinct from all others.

(19) Lev. XXII, 22. E.V. ‘scabbed’.

(20) E.V.’ scurvy’.

(21) A dry eruption of the skin, as hard as a potsherd.

(22) היפוס comes from the word to cling, to join, the word ייפוס (in Ex. XXXVI) being translated in Targum Onkelos ייפוס.

(23) Deut. XXVIII, 27.

(24) Lev. XXII, 22.

(25) Mentioned in the imprecations in Deut. XXVIII.

(26) Ex. IX, 10 The word ייפוס in the text is connected with יבש ‘pouring forth’, implying something wet and moist.

(27) That we must not slaughter these animals in the Temple.

(28) Lev. I, 2, 10. The word יבש (of) in each case is partitive implying that some cattle, herd etc. cannot be offered up on the altar.

(29) And that it is not disqualified for the Temple.

(30) Cf. Sh. Mek.

(31) A normal thing for an animal which grows old not to retain its former vigour and therefore this should not be regarded as a disability.

(33) I.e., had connection with a beast.

(34) Ibid.

(35) A goring animal, one which covered a woman and which was covered by a man.

(36) The animal is not stoned in such circumstances, as the law is that one who confesses an act which entails a fine is exempt from the fine; and the stoning of an animal is a fine on its owner.
And if he brings it as a first-born, when it is not consecrated as such, since a firstling must be a male, he brings hullin into the Temple court.

In which case it should be brought to the Temple.

Lev. XXII, 22. E.V. ‘Maimed’ by a deep incision or abnormal cavity and depression.

A dry eruption, or scab.

And is therefore a skin plague.

V. supra n. 4.

Which shows that garab is a blemish, not because of the depression, as it is in the fleshy part, and that haruz only applies to a bone.

But hold that even in a fleshy part it is a haruz.

As for example, in the case of the female genitals, although it is the fleshy part.

Deut. XV, 21. As the kind of animal which must not be offered in the Temple.

Talmud - Mas. Bechoroth 41b

Raba enquired.¹ What is the reason of R. Ishmael? Is he convinced that a hermaphrodite is a firstling [male] with a blemish² or is it because he has a doubt [as to its sex], and he means [to permit it to be slaughtered] by using an argument of the form ‘If you assume’ [as follows]: If you assume that it is a firstling, it should be permitted, since it has a blemish. What is the practical difference? — [The difference is] as regards liability to the punishment of lashes, in consequence of shearing it or working with it,³ or indeed, as regards giving it to the priest.⁴ Come and hear: R. Ila'i reported in the name of R. Ishmael: A hermaphrodite is a firstling with a blemish. Deduce then from this that R. Ishmael is convinced [that it is a firstling]. But perhaps he permits it by using the argument ‘If you assume’, [though in reality he has a doubt concerning its sex]!

Come and hear: [Scripture says]: ‘A male’,⁵ [implying] but not a female. When it, however, repeats later [the words] ‘A male’,⁶ which were not necessary, it intimates the exclusion of a tumtum and a hermaphrodite. Now whose opinion⁷ does this represent? Shall I say it is that of the first Tanna [of our Mishnah]? But since he holds [that a hermaphrodite] is a doubtful case [as regards its sex], is there any need for a scriptural text for the exclusion of a case of doubt?⁸ Again if it is the opinion of the last Rabbis [quoted in the Mishnah],⁹ but why not infer this¹⁰ from a single scriptural text, for in connection with [the law of] a firstling, there is only one scriptural text ‘A male’ and yet we derive all therefrom. [Why then is there need for the latter text ‘A male’]? Plainly then [the above passage] represents the opinion of R. Ishmael [in the Mishnah].¹¹ Now this is quite intelligible if you say that R. Ishmael was convinced that [a hermaphrodite] is a firstling; for that reason there was need for the scriptural text to exclude the case of a hermaphrodite.¹² But if you say that R. Ishmael had a doubt [as to its sex], is there any need for the exclusion of a case where there exists a doubt?¹³ — The above passage may still represent the view of the last Rabbis,¹⁴ And with reference to [the law of] a firstling also Scripture has two texts, ‘The male’¹⁵ and ‘The males shall be the Lord’s’.¹⁶

BUT THE SAGES SAY IT HAS NOT THE LAW OF THE FIRSTLING etc. Said R. Hisda: The difference of opinion¹⁷ relates only to a hermaphrodite but as regards a tumtum all agree that there is a doubt as to its sex¹⁸ and therefore it is hallowed by reason of this uncertainty [its shearing and slaughtering being therefore prohibited]. Said Raba to him: According to this, the law of valuation¹⁹ should apply to a tumtum?

¹ According to one commentator this enquiry will follow immediately after the citation of R. Ishmael's ruling from the Mishnah. R. Gershom, however, reads the ruling of R. Ishmael before ‘He does not hold the opinion of Abaye’, etc.
² Lit., ‘And its blemish with it’.
³ For it is forbidden to shear the wool or work with even a blemished firstling. In the case of a doubtful firstling,
Talmud - Mas. Bechoroth 42a

Why then is it taught: [Scripture says]: ‘Of the male’,¹ [intimating] the exclusion of a tumtum and a hermaphrodite?² — Delete tumtum from this [Baraitha].

Come and hear: You might think that the case of a tumtum or that of a hermaphrodite is not included in the [law of] valuation relating to a man but is included in the law of valuation of a woman.³ There are two texts, therefore, ‘Of the male’, ‘And if it be a female’,⁴ [intimating] the exclusion of tumtum and hermaphrodite. — Delete tumtum from this [Baraitha].⁵

Come and hear: [Scripture says]: ‘Whether it be a male or a female’,⁶ [intimating], the exclusion of a tumtum and a hermaphrodite?⁷ — Delete tumtum from this [Baraitha]. Come and hear: [Scripture says]: ‘A male’,⁸ [intimating] but not a female. When therefore [Scripture] repeats below ‘a male’⁹ which there is no need to say, it intimates the exclusion of a tumtum and a hermaphrodite.¹⁰ — Delete tumtum from [the Baraitha].

Come and hear: [Doves] worshipped as an idol or assigned to idolatrous purposes or a harlot's hire [as an offering] or the price obtaining by selling a harlot [and brought as an offering], or a tumtum or a hermaphrodite, — all these make garments unclean by [contact with one's] oesophagus.¹¹

R. Eleazar says: tumtum and a hermaphrodite do not make the garments unclean of one who eats them. For R. Eleazar used to say: Wherever you find [in the Scriptures] ‘Male’ or ‘Female’, you exclude the case of a tumtum or a hermaphrodite therefrom. But in the case of a bird, since [Scripture] does not in that connection mention ‘Male’ or ‘Female’, you do not exclude the case of a
Come and hear: R. Eleazar said: trefah, kil'ayim, a foetus extracted by means of the caesarean section, tumtum and a hermaphrodite cannot become consecrated, nor can they cause consecration. And Samuel explained this as follows: They do not become consecrated in substitution nor do they cause consecration by effecting substitution. — Delete tumtum from this passage.

Come and hear: R. Eleazar says: There are five instances where animals do not become consecrated nor cause consecration and they are these’ Trefah, kil'ayim. a foetus extracted by means of the caesarean section, tumtum and a hermaphrodite. And were you to assume that here also the answer is ‘Delete tumtum from here,’ then R. Eleazar has only brought four instances? — Omit tumtum and include the case of an orphaned animal.

May we say that Tannaim differ on this point? [For it was taught]: R. Elai reported in the name of R. Ishmael: A hermaphrodite is considered a firstling with a blemish, whereas the Sages say: Holiness cannot attach to it. R. Simeon b. Judah reported in the name of R. Simeon: Scripture says that ‘The male’ and wherever the text says ‘A male’ its object is to exclude tumtum and a hermaphrodite. And should you say ‘Delete tumtum from this passage’ then the view of R. Simeon b. Judah would be identical with that of the Rabbis? Must you not therefore say that the difference between them lies in the case of a tumtum, the first Tanna [quoted above], [the Sages] maintaining that the ruling ‘Holiness cannot attach to it’ refers to a hermaphrodite, whereas a tumtum is considered a doubtful animal [as regards sex], and therefore it can be holy owing to this uncertainty. Thereupon comes R. Simeon

---

(1) Lev. XXVII, 3.
(2) We therefore see that a tumtum is not included in the law of valuation.
(3) There being a difference in the valuation between the sexes.
(4) Ibid. 4. And from the additional [in the text] we derive the law of tumtum and hermaphrodite. The text cannot therefore exclude this for the reason that it is a doubtful animal as to sex, for there is no doubt before Heaven, the revealer of the Law. Therefore the exclusion of a tumtum must be, because it is considered a creature apart, so that this raises a difficulty with reference to R. Hisda's ruling above.
(5) As, from the text, we can only exclude the case of a hermaphrodite.
(7) And the exclusion here of a tumtum cannot be because of the uncertainty of its sex, since a peace-offering is brought from either sex. The reason therefore must be because a tumtum is regarded as a creature apart and distinct from others.
(8) Lev. I, 3 with reference to a burnt-offering.
(9) Ibid. 10.
(10) V. supra 41b.
(11) I.e., in the process of eating it. This is the manner of defilement by the nebelah (carcase) of a clean bird. The pinching (v. Lev. I, 15) is not recognized as valid, since the birds are not regarded as consecrated sacrifices. But except for the fact that we regard a tumtum as a creature apart, why should not the pinching be valid, for in the case of birds the sex is immaterial?
(12) And an objection to R. Hisda can be urged even from R. Eleazar's teaching, for only with reference to birds does he not exclude tumtum etc. but otherwise where the text says ‘Male’ or ‘Female’, tumtum and a hermaphrodite are excluded, the reason clearly being because they are regarded as creatures apart; v. Yeb. 83b.
(13) The product of a cross-breeding of animals.
(14) V. Yeb. 83b and Tem. 11a, 13a.
(15) Even a substitution which has effect on a blemished animal both becoming holy, has no effect on the cases enumerated here.
(16) If they are holy (having received their holiness through their mothers, as the offspring of consecrated animals) they do not cause the other animal improperly substituted for them to become holy as well. Now if a tumtum is a doubtful animal as regards sex, why should it not become holy?
The case of an animal whose mother died during or soon after childbirth, which is disqualified as a sacrifice. V. Hul. 38b.

Viz., R. Hisda’s ruling, one Tanna holding that it is a different creature, entirely, and the other that it is a doubtful animal as regards sex.

For it is regarded as a creature apart.

For a tumtum is also a creature apart. V. supra 41b and notes.

Talmud - Mas. Bechoroth 42b

b. Judah and says: A tumtum is a creature apart and therefore it cannot be holy? — No. All [the authorities] agree that there is no doubt that a tumtum should be considered a creature apart. The doubt is only whether it is to be regarded as a male or a female. Now if it urinates in the male part, then all agree that it is a male. The doubt arises however if it urinates in the female part. One teacher holds: We fear lest his male sex may have changed into a female sex, whereas the other teacher holds: We have no apprehension of such a thing. This agrees with what is told of R. Elai who gave a decision that a tumtum animal which urinates in the female part is hullin and R. Johanan was thereupon astonished, and exclaimed: ‘Which authority is it which does not take into consideration the first Tanna [quoted in our Mishnah above] and R. Ishmael?’ But let R. Johanan also say: Who is the authority that does not take into consideration the view of the last Rabbis [in the Mishnah]? For R. Hisda said: The difference of opinion in the Mishnah relates only to a hermaphrodite, but as regards a tumtum all agree that it is a case of a doubtful animal [as to sex]. — R. Johanan does not hold R. Hisda's opinion. But if R. Johanan does not hold R. Hisda's opinion, why does he not explain that he [Elai] follows the view of the last Rabbis [mentioned in the Mishnah]? This is [precisely] what R. Johanan means: Who is the authority that ignores the views of two teachers and follows the view of a single teacher? And as regards R. Elai whose view does he follow? — It is that of Resh Lakish [as follows]: The ruling that a tumtum is a doubtful case [as regards sex] relates only to a human being, since his male and female parts are in the same place. But in the case of an animal, if it urinates in the male part, then it is a male, whereas if it urinates in the female part, it is a female. To this R. Oshaiah demurred: And why not apprehend lest its male sex may have changed to female? — Said [Abaye] to him: Whose view will this question represent? Will it be R. Meir's, who takes into consideration the minority? Both Abaye b. Abin and R. Hanania b. Abin said: You may even say that this question arises also on the view of the Rabbis [the disputants of R. Meir]. for since its condition has changed, there is a different animal? — [The question can be met in this way]: One authority [the first Tanna quoted in the above Baraitha] holds: Since its condition has changed, it is a different animal [and therefore it possesses holiness] whereas the other authority, [R. Simeon] holds: We do not say [with reference to an animal] that since its condition has changed, it is therefore a different animal.

May we say that the principle that the change of condition makes a different [human being or animal] is a matter in which Tannaim differ? For it has been taught: If a tumtum betrothes a woman, his betrothal is valid. If he was betrothed, the betrothal is valid. He submits to halizah, his wife must be released by halizah and his brother may marry his wife. And another [Baraitha] taught: The wife of a tumtum must be released by halizah but she must not marry her brother-in-law. Now it was assumed that all agree with R. Akiba who said: A born saris does not submit to halizah, nor perform levirate marriage? The point at issue will therefore be [as follows]: According to the [Tanna of the Baraitha] who holds that a tumtum submits to halizah, that his wife must be released by halizah and his brother may marry his wife, we do not maintain that since the status has been changed, therefore he is a different person, and according [to the Tanna in the Baraitha] who holds: The wife of a tumtum must be released by halizah but must not marry his brother, we maintain that since the status has changed, he is a different person — No. All [the authorities concerned] agree that we maintain that since the status is changed, he is a different person. [One Baraitha] is in accordance with the view of R. Eleazar and the [other Baraitha] is in accordance with the view... of R. Akiba. And who [of R. Akiba's pupils is the Tanna] who holds this opinion according to R. Akiba? Shall I say it is R. Judah? But does he not declare a tumtum to be a sure saris? For we have learnt, R. Judah says: A tumtum [whose skin covering the sexual part] was torn and who was discovered to be a male, need not submit to halizah because he is like a saris. — Rather it is R. Jose b. Judah. For it has been taught, R. Jose b. Judah says: A tumtum does not release his sister-in-law by halizah lest the skin is torn and he will be found to be a born saris.

[But is the Tanna sure that he will be discovered to be a male]? Do you mean to say that when the skin is torn he might be discovered to be a male but never a female? Rather [the explanation is]: [R. Judah means that there are two possibilities]. [First], his skin may be torn and it will be found that he is a female. Secondly, even if he is indeed a male, there is a possibility that he will be found to be a born saris. What is the practical difference? — Said Raba:

(1) As there is no question that it is not considered a creature apart and thus we cannot speak of Tannaim differing on this point.
(2) The first Tanna (the Sages).
(3) R. Simeon. And when it urinates in the male or female part R. Hisda also admits that according to one Tanna it is a sure male or female respectively and not merely a doubtful animal. R. Hisda, however, when he says that all agree that it is a doubtful animal, refers to the view of the last Rabbis in the Mishnah above, explaining that one should not say that the reason for the view of the last Rabbis is because the tumtum is a creature apart and thus it can never receive holiness, as all the authorities are agreed that a tumtum is at least a case of a doubtful animal.
(4) But we maintain that it is a sure female and that therefore it possesses no holiness of a first-born.
(5) Rashi has the reading הַגְּהֵקָה . He was an Amora and not the R. Ilai of the Baraita above who reported in the name of R. Ishmael.
(6) An unconsecrated animal. It is considered a sure female, as we entertain no fears about the sex being changed, and the law of the firstling does not apply to a female.
(7) At this decision of R. Elai.
(8) Who holds that a tumtum is neither slaughtered in the Temple nor without the Temple, because it is a doubtful animal as regards sex.
(9) As R. Ishmael's ruling in the Mishnah only relates to a hermaphrodite and not to a tumtum.
(10) But that the ruling of the last Rabbis in the Mishnah refers also to a tumtum, which is regarded as a creature apart and not a firstling at all.
(11) Why then is R. Johanan astonished at R. Elai's decision, since the latter only follows the ruling of the last Rabbis in the Mishnah.
(12) The first Tanna and R. Ishmael.
(13) Urination therefore does not provide a test. In the case of a tumtum animal, however, there need be no doubt as to its sex according to all the authorities concerned. The first Tanna in the Mishnah who says that the animal must not be slaughtered, refers to where it urinates in the male part, and then it is assuredly holy and therefore it must not be slaughtered outside the Temple. It is also not suitable for sacrifice in the Temple, for it has the appearance of a blemished animal, as it does not possess male genitals, a defect which Scripture excludes by the text ‘A male’. And both R. Ishmael and the last Rabbis only refer to a hermaphrodite, but as regards a tumtum they are all agreed that if the animal urinates in the male part, then it is a male, and if in the female part, then it is a female. R. Elai's decision will thus be in accordance with the views of all the authorities concerned. Tosaf. however maintains that Resh Lakish's view will not be shared by all the authorities; the ruling of the first Tanna of the Mishnah, for example, that it is a doubtful animal, will not be in accordance with the view of Resh Lakish who will concur with the view of R. Simeon b. Judah. .
(14) Both according to R. Elai and Resh Lakish.
(15) So Sh. Mek.
(16) I.e., the possibility of rares cases, v. supra 19b. And surely we do not follow the view of the individual as against that of the majority!
(17) It being a tumtum.
(18) Its male part changing into a female. Lit., ‘Since it has changed (in one direction), it has changed also in another direction’.
(19) And therefore we maintain that the animal was originally a female, in which case there is no holiness whatsoever. R. Elai will consequently agree with R. Simeon.

(20) The woman requires a Get (a divorce bill) and also his near relations are forbidden in marriage to her, in case he is a male.

(21) And the party who betrothed him is forbidden in marriage to the tumtum's relations, e.g., his mother and sister for fear that he might, after all, be a female.

(22) V. Glos. As a restrictive measure, that where there is no other brother his sister-in-law must be released by him before she can be married.

(23) Another merely restrictive measure, for fear that he might be a male.

(24) For if he is a male, then his brother rightly marries her according to the law of yabam (levir). And if he is a female, then the brother of the tumtum is betrothing an unmarried woman.

(25) A eunuch. מרים אדム means lit., ‘from seeing the sun’, i.e., a eunuch from birth, in contradistinction to מרים אדום by the agency of man.

(26) V. Yeb. 79b.

(27) The deceased brother becoming a tumtum.

(28) That even if the skin were torn and he were found to be a male, we have no fear that it might be discovered that he is a saris, a different person entirely, the wife of a saris not being able to marry a deceased husband's brother.

(29) In case he is a born saris, even if he be a male. She therefore cannot marry her deceased husband's brother, for as he is as male, the betrothal is valid, but since he is a born saris, his wife is not subject to yibbum. She is therefore like a woman who has children and the brother would be marrying a sister-in-law of that status, this being one of the forbidden marriages of consanguinity. Halizah, however, would be necessary, in case he is not a saris.

(30) We therefore have a doubt as to whether he is a born saris in addition to being a male.

(31) Which says that the husband's brother may marry the tumtum's wife.

(32) Who holds that the wife of a born saris marries her husband's brother, as there are similar cases in Alexandria which recover. Therefore whether a tumtum is a female or male, this would be permissible.

(33) Which says she must not marry her husband's brother.

(34) That she is released by halizah and must not marry her brother-in-law, for R. Akiba himself maintains that a born saris can neither release his sister-in-law by halizah nor marry her.

(35) And even halizah is not then necessary, as there are no levirate ties in such circumstances.

(36) V. Yeb. 88a.

(37) Who holds that he is not a sure saris but that there is a possibility of him being one and, therefore, halizah is necessary, in case the tumtum is a male and not a saris. He cannot, however, marry his sister-in-law, lest he be a saris as well as a male, in which case she is not subject to yibbum.

(38) And where there are other suitable brothers, we may say that he does not give halizah merely as a restrictive measure, in case he is a born saris and the woman is not then subject to yibbum. Where, however, there is no other suitable brother, he must give her halizah, in case he is not a saris. His own wife, therefore, requires halizah, as he may not have been a saris, but she must not marry her brother-in-law, as her husband may have been a saris.

(39) That only uncertainty is as regards him being discovered a born saris, and that there is no possibility of the tumtum being found to be a female.

(40) Between R. Judah and R. Jose, for in the matter of a tumtum whose brother died, both maintain that he need not release his sister-in-law by halizah.

Talmud - Mas. Bechoroth 43a

The difference is with reference to disqualifying [the woman] where there are suitable brothers.\(^1\) There is also a difference as to whether halizah should be performed where there are no other brothers.\(^2\)

C H A P T E R  V I I

MISHNAH. THESE BLEMISHES [NAMED ABOVE], WHETHER PERMANENT OR TRANSITORY, MAKE HUMAN BEINGS UNFIT.\(^3\) TO THEM MUST BE ADDED [IN THE

GEMARA. But why [do these blemishes make a human being unfit]? And is there not the case of yabeleth, which is not written in the Scriptures in connection with the blemishes of a human being? And, moreover, dak and teballul, [mentioned above as blemishes in regard to a firstling], are not mentioned in the Law in connection with the blemishes of an animal? — We infer one from the other. For it was taught: In connection with a human being, yabeleth is not stated [as a blemish] and in connection with an animal, dak and teballul are not stated as blemishes. Whence do we infer that we apply the expressions used in connection with one to the other and vice versa? The text states ‘garab’, [a dry scab], [in connection with a human being] and repeats ‘garab’ [in connection with an animal]; also ‘yallefeth’, [lichen] is stated [in connection with a human being] and ‘yallefeth’ is repeated [in connection with an animal], in order to conclude a gezarah shawah. Now [these] expressions are free [for interpretation]. For if they were not free [for interpretation], it can be objected [as follows]: We cannot infer [the blemishes in connection with] a human being from those of an animal, for in the latter case the animal itself is offered on the altar. Again we cannot infer [blemishes in connection with an] animal from those in connection with a human being, as the latter has many commands to carry out. Surely it is so? [These expressions] are indeed free [for interpretation]. For the Divine Law should say that ‘yallefeth’ is a blemish, and there would be no need to state ‘garab’, as I would have argued [as follows]: If ‘yallefeth’, which is not repulsive, is yet considered a disqualifying blemish, how much more so is this the case with reference to garab, which is repulsive? They must consequently be free [for interpretation]. And why does not the Divine Law state all the blemishes in one connection and ‘garab’ and ‘yallefeth’ both here [in connection with a human being] and there [in connection with an animal], and then we would have inferred one [section of blemishes] from the other [section]? — In connection with which [section of blemishes] should the Divine Law have stated [all the blemishes]? If it had stated them in connection with a human being, I might have thought that whatever blemish disqualifies a human being also disqualifies an animal; closed hoofs and defective teeth, however, which do not apply to a human being, do not make the animal unfit either. And if the Divine Law had stated all [the blemishes] in connection with an animal, I might have thought that whatever makes an animal unfit makes a human being unfit, but the blemishes of a defective eyebrow or flat nose, which do not apply to an animal, do not make a human being unfit either. And why does not the Divine Law state all the [appropriate] blemishes in connection with one [section of blemishes], and those blemishes which do not apply to a human being, let the Divine Law mention in connection with [the blemishes of] an animal and let those blemishes which do not apply to an animal be stated in connection with human blemishes, together with garab and yallefeth written both here [among the blemishes of a human being] and there [among the blemishes of an animal], so that one may be inferred from the other? — Rather [the explanation is] as a Tanna of the school of R. Ishmael taught. For a Tanna of the school of R. Ishmael taught: Wherever a section of the Law is taught and afterwards repeated, the section is repeated for the sake of a new point added.

Said Raba: What need is there for the Divine Law to state blemishes in connection with a human being, [a priest], consecrated sacrifices, and a first-born animal? It was necessary [to state all these sections of blemishes]. For if the Divine Law had only stated the section of blemishes in connection with a human being, we might have thought that the reason was because he carries out many commands. We cannot again infer [the blemishes] of a human being from those of a first-born animal, as we might have thought that the reason in the latter case was because the animal itself was offered up on the altar.\textsuperscript{30} You cannot either infer [the blemishes of] consecrated animals from those of a first-born animal,\textsuperscript{31} as we might have thought that the reason in the latter case was because it was consecrated from the womb.\textsuperscript{32} Nor can you infer [the blemishes of] a human being from those of consecrated animals,\textsuperscript{33} as we might have thought that the reason in the case of the latter was that they themselves are sacrificed. Neither can you infer [the blemishes of] a first-born animal from those of consecrated animals, for we might have thought that the reason in the case of the latter was because the holiness [of a consecrated animal] has a wider scope.\textsuperscript{34} We cannot therefore infer one [section of blemishes] from another single [section of blemishes]. Why not, however, infer one [section of blemishes] from the other two?\textsuperscript{35} — Which [section] should the Divine Law have omitted? Should the Divine Law have omitted [the section relating to blemishes of] the first-born animal, leaving it to be inferred from the other [two sections of blemishes]?\textsuperscript{36} We might then have thought that the other [two sections] are different, seeing that their holiness has a wider scope and that they also apply to plain, [non-first-born].\textsuperscript{37} Should the Divine Law have omitted [the section of blemishes relating to] consecrated animals, leaving me to infer it from the other two [sections]?\textsuperscript{38} We might then have thought that the reason in the latter case was because they are holy on their own accord.\textsuperscript{39} Should the Divine Law have omitted [the section of blemishes relating to] a human being, which we would then have inferred from the other two sections?\textsuperscript{40} I might have thought that the reason in the latter case was because they themselves are sacrificed on the altar. Hence it was necessary [to state the three sections of blemishes].

TO THESE MUST BE ADDED IN CONNECTION WITH BLEMISHES OF HUMAN BEINGS. Whence is this proven? Said R. Johanan: Scripture says: ‘No man of the seed of Aaron the Priest that hath a blemish’,\textsuperscript{41} [intimating] that a man who is like the seed of Aaron\textsuperscript{42} [is rendered unfit by a blemish].\textsuperscript{43}

\textsuperscript{(1)} If there are other suitable brothers and the tumtum hastens to release his sister-in-law by halizah. Now according to R. Judah his action is of no consequence and it does not prevent one of the others from carrying out the halizah ceremony, or marrying her; whereas according to R. Jose, since we only have a doubt lest the tumtum should be a saris, the action of the tumtum disqualifies her for the brothers, as it may be that the halizah is valid and, therefore, none of the brothers may marry her. They have, in consequence, to give her halizah again.

\textsuperscript{(2)} If there are no other suitable brothers except the tumtum. According to R. Judah, the woman is released without halizah, for we regard him as a sure saris; whereas according to R. Jose, halizah is necessary in case he is not a saris. For R. Jose when he states in the Baraitha above that a tumtum gives no halizah, refers to a case where there are other suitable brothers who can perform the ceremony of halizah.

\textsuperscript{(3)} For Temple services in the case of priests.

\textsuperscript{(4)} V. Gemara.

\textsuperscript{(5)} For Temple services.

\textsuperscript{(6)} A wart or withered excrescence.

\textsuperscript{(7)} And is yet mentioned in connection with the blemishes of an animal?

\textsuperscript{(8)} A cataract (Lev. XXI, 20).

\textsuperscript{(9)} The white of the eye encroaching on the black and vice versa. Ibid.

\textsuperscript{(10)} But are mentioned only among the blemishes of a human being. For, as regards some of the blemishes mentioned in the above Mishnahs, these are derived from the text ‘ill blemish’. But with reference to dak and teballul, one might object that since the law laid them down explicitly in connection with a human being and not in connection with the blemishes of an animal, then one can conclude that they do not apply to animals.

\textsuperscript{(11)} The blemishes of an animal from the blemishes of a human being, and therefore, the Tanna records them all in connection with the blemishes of an animal. We also infer the blemishes of a human being from the blemishes of an animal, in a similar manner.

\textsuperscript{(12)} An analogy based on a similarity of expression. V. Glos.

\textsuperscript{(13)} And therefore the law is more stringent as regards its blemishes.

\textsuperscript{(14)} The priest has many religious duties to observe and we therefore are particular concerning his blemishes.
A garab being as dry as a potsherd, sunk in the flesh and making indentations.

The garab stated in connection with the blemishes of a human being, and the other garab mentioned in connection with the blemishes of an animal.

Including dak, teballul and yallefeth.

Either in connection with that of a human being or with that of an animal.

Why, therefore, does Scripture mention ‘Blind’, ‘Broken’ and ‘Lame’ in both cases?

For a human being i.e., a priest, is not required to possess cloven hoofs, nor, since his teeth are not so prominent and open as is the case with an animal, does a defect in them make him unfit for carrying out the priestly duties.

Therefore the Torah had to enumerate blemishes in connection with animals and include closed hoofs, and defective teeth which comes under the category of \( \text{Rashi} \).

An animal does not possess eyebrows, nor has it a nose between its eyes so that a flat nose might render it unfit.

Either with reference to a human being or to an animal. V. Marginal Gloss. Cur. edd. ‘to the other’.

I.e., cloven hoofs and defective teeth.

Animal blemishes from human blemishes and vice versa.

Those which are appropriate to each. The question therefore still remains, what need is there for a repetition in both sections, of blemishes like ‘Blind’, ‘Broken’ etc.?

Therefore although several blemishes are repeated in both sections, yet because of the blemishes which are new that are taught, in the case of either a human being or an animal, Scripture does not refrain from repeating them.

In Deut. XV. Could not we have deduced one section of blemishes from the other or one section from the other two?

And therefore these blemishes make him unfit.

And therefore we are particular with reference to its blemishes.

I.e., if Scripture had only taught the blemishes of a firstborn, we should not have concluded therefrom the blemishes of consecrated animals and those of a human being.

I.e., born holy, unlike sacrifices which must be sanctified before they become holy.

If Scripture had written only the sections relating to the blemishes of consecrated animals and not the other two sections of blemishes, we could not have inferred the latter from the former.

Applying to a female as well as to a male, whereas a first-born animal must be a male. Also there are different kinds of sacrifices i.e., burnt-sacrifices, peace-sacrifices, trespass-sacrifices, etc.

And therefore one section would not be necessary for Scripture to state.

I.e. that of consecrated animals and that of a human being.

Whether of human beings or animals.

Those of a first-born animal and a human being.

A priest being born as such and the same applies to a firstborn animal.

Those of consecrated sacrifices and a first-born animal.

Lev. XXI, 21.

I.e., normal in appearance, as human beings are in general.

But a man who is not like the seed of Aaron is disqualified even without a blemish (Rashi). [Aliter: We require a man of symmetrical features (normal) with the seed of Aaron, v. supra p. 14, n. 1].

Talmud - Mas. Bechoroth 43b

What is the practical difference between [a priest] with a blemish and one ‘who is not like the seed of Aaron’? — The difference is whether the Temple-service is profaned. If it is an actual blemish, the service is profaned, for it is written: ‘Because he hath a blemish, that he profane not’.1 If, however, it is a case of not being ‘like the seed of Aaron’, then the Temple-service is not profaned. What is also the difference between the case of one ‘who is not like the seed of Aaron’ and of a priest who is unfit ‘for appearance sake’?2 — The difference is as regards the transgression of a positive precept.3

KILON is one whose head has the shape of a basket [akla].4

---

1. Lev. XXI, 21
2. Lev. XXI, 21
3. Lev. XXI, 21
4. Lev. XXI, 21
LIFTAN is one whose head resembles a slice of turnip [lifta].

MAKKABAN is one whose head resembles a mallet [makkaban].

ONE WHOSE HEAD IS ANGULAR means, in the front of the head.

SEKIFAS means, the hinder part of the head. A Tanna taught: ['One whose head is angular’ means, in the front, whereas Sekifas means to the hinder part], as people say, a piece is taken off. A Tanna taught: One whose neck is shakut or shamut. Shakut is one whose neck is sunk, and shamut is one whose neck is long and thin.

AS TO HUMP-BACKED MEN, R. JUDAH etc. If he has [a hump] in which there is a bone, all the authorities concerned agree that he is unfit [for priestly service]. The dispute arises with [a hump] in which there is no bone. One Master holds: This is a case where ‘he is not like the seed of Aaron’ and the other Master [R. Judah] holds: It is merely an elevation of the flesh [swelling].

A BALD-HEADED PERSON IS UNFIT. Said Raba: This is meant only where he has not a line of hair from ear to ear in the hinder part, but he has it in the front; but where he has this both in the hinder and in the front parts, he is fit [for Temple service]. And this is certainly the case where he has a line of hair in the hinder part and not in the front part. Some there are who refer Raba's explanation to the second clause: IF HE HAS, THEN HE IS FIT. Said Raba: This is meant only where he has the line of hair in the hinder part but not in the front part, but where he has this both in the hinder and front parts, he is unfit. And this is certainly the case where he has the line of hair in the front part and not in the hinder part. And [this is also certainly the case] where he has no line of hair at all, [that he is unfit].

Said R. Johanan: Bald-heads, dwarfs and the blear-eyed are unfit [for the priesthood] because ‘they are not like the seed of Aaron’. But have we not already learnt both the cases of baldheads and dwarfs [in the Mishnah]? — R. Johanan needs to teach us the case of the blear-eyed [not mentioned in the Mishnah]. And even with regard to the rest, you might have thought that their unfitness was ‘for appearance sake’. But does not the Tanna already state explicitly wherever it is a case ‘for appearance sake’, for it says: If his eyelids are hairless, he is unfit ‘for appearance sake’? — You might however have assumed that he states one case, but the same applies to the rest. But does not the Tanna wher ever there is an example of unfitness for appearance sake, repeat this [as in the following]: One whose teeth were removed is unfit [for the priesthood] ‘for appearance sake’? — Rather [the explanation is that the purpose of R. Johanan is] to exclude what has been taught: Bald-heads, dwarfs, and the blear-eyed are fit [for the priesthood] and they have been stated to be disqualified only ‘for appearance sake’. Who is this Tanna? — It is R. Judah. For it has been taught, R. Judah says: Scripture says: ‘The priests’, [intimating] the inclusion of bald-heads [as fit for priestly service].

MISHNAH. ONE WHO HAS NO EYEBROWS OR HAS ONLY ONE EYEBROW [IS UNFIT], THIS BEING THE GIBBEN OF THE BIBLE. R. DOSA SAYS: ONE WHOSE EYEBROWS LIE FLAT [OVERSHADOWING THE EYES]. R. HANINA B. ANTIGONUS SAYS: ONE WHO HAS A DOUBLE BACK OR A DOUBLE SPINE.

GEMARA. But does gibben [by itself] imply that he has no eyebrows? Against this I quote the following: Gibben implies that he has many eyebrows. Whence do we know [that a priest is unfit for the priesthood] if he has no eyebrows or only one eyebrow? The text states: Or a gibben! — Said Raba: This is what is deduced by interpretation from: or a gibben.
R. DOSA SAYS etc. Does this mean that he can live? Has it not been stated: In the case of a birth given to a creature which possesses a double back or a double spine, Rab said: If it was a woman [who miscarried], it is not regarded as an offspring; if an animal [miscarried], the creature born is forbidden to be eaten. — This objection has already been raised by R. Shimi b. Hiyya.

And the former answered him: ‘Are you the Shimi [famed for your wisdom]? [The Mishnah here means] where the spine was curved [thus appearing a double spine]’.

MISHNAH. A HARUM IS UNFIT [FOR THE PRIESTHOOD]. WHAT IS HARUM? ONE WHO CAN PAINT BOTH OF HIS EYES WITH ONE MOVEMENT. ONE WHOSE TWO EYES ARE ABOVE OR WHOSE TWO EYES ARE BELOW; A PERSON WHOSE ONE EYE SEES ABOVE AND THE OTHER BELOW; ONE WHO TAKES IN THE ROOM AND THE CEILING IN ONE GLANCE; ONE WHO COVERS [HIS EYES] FROM THE SUN; A ZAGDAN AND A ZIRAN — [ALL THESE ARE UNFIT FOR THE PRIESTHOOD]. ONE WHOSE EYELIDS HAVE FALLEN OFF IS UNFIT [FOR THE PRIESTHOOD] FOR APPEARANCE SAKE.

GEMARA. Our Rabbis taught: Harum is one whose nose is sunk [above, between the eyes]. Whence do we know that one whose nose is turned up [snub-nosed] or obstructed, or whose nose overhangs [his lips is unfit for the priesthood]? There is a scriptural text: or a harum. R. Jose says: Harum only refers to one who paints both his eyes with one movement. [The Rabbis] said to him: You have exaggerated, others too is because ‘they are not like the seed of Aaron.

(19) Infra 44a. And we do not say that the reason which applies in one case, applies also to the other. Similarly, how could we have assumed that the reason ‘for appearance sake’ applies to the blemishes enumerated in the second clause of our Mishnah? We must consequently maintain that only where the reason ‘for appearance sake’ is stated explicitly do we accept that reason, but where it does not say so, we do not hold that the unfitness is ‘for appearance sake’. What need, therefore, is there for R. Johanan's explanation?

(20) R. Johanan thus teaches us that the law is in accordance with the ruling of the Mishnah which makes the priest unfit because he ‘is not like the seed of Aaron’.

(21) Who holds that a bald-headed person is fit for the priesthood?

(22) Lev. I, 8. The word הָעַרְבִּי, is not necessary, since the text has already said ‘the sons of Aaron’.

(23) Lev. XXI, 20. ‘One eyebrow’ means that both eyebrows are joined together above the nose and appear as one.

(24) The following is the Gibban of the Bible.

(25) This is the biblical Gibban. The Tannaim in the Mishnah here agree that all the blemishes mentioned disqualify a priest. The difference between them, however, as to what precisely is the biblical Gibban.

(26) The two eyebrows appearing as one eyebrow.

(27) Lev. XXI, 20. We therefore see that the word Gibban by itself does not mean one who has no eyebrows or only one eyebrow.

(28) The case of one eyebrow.

(29) By the first Tanna in the Mishnah but not from Gibban itself. R. Dosa however differs and does not interpret the particle ‘or’.

(30) One with a double back or double spine.

(31) The laws concerning a birth are not observed.

(32) Like Nebelah, for it is an abortion, and therefore there can be no ritual slaughtering.

(33) Elsewhere in Nid. 24a.

(34) Possessing no nose, so that nothing prevents him proceeding to paint the other eye in one movement.

(35) Explained in the Gemara.

(36) Or ‘the room and the upper chamber’.

(37) הָעַרְבִּי from the word הָעַרְבִּי meaning ‘to cover’, one who is unable to look at the sun.

(38) This blemish and the others which follow are explained below in the Gemara.

(39) This reason only applies to the case of hairless eyelids.

(40) Lev. XXI, 18. (E.V. ‘or that hath anything maimed’), from which we include all the blemishes just enumerated.

Talmud - Mas. Bechoroth 44a

for although he cannot paint both his eyes with one movement,¹ he is still a harum.

ONE WHOSE TWO EYES ARE ABOVE OR WHOSE TWO EYES ARE BELOW. What [does the Mishnah mean by the expression] BOTH EYES ABOVE AND BOTH EYES BELOW? Shall I say BOTH EYES ABOVE mean that they [continuously] see above, the expression BOTH EYES BELOW, that they see below; and ONE EYE ABOVE AND ONE EYE BELOW [means] that one eye sees below and the other above?² Then the latter case would be identical with the case ONE WHO TAKES IN THE ROOM AND THE CEILING IN ONE GLANCE [mentioned later in the Mishnah]? — Rather this is the explanation: The expression BOTH EYES ABOVE means that they stand above,³ [the expression] BOTH EYES BELOW means that they stand below, [the expression] ONE EYE ABOVE AND ONE EYE BELOW means that one eye stands above and one eye below. And even where the eyes are in their normal places, there is a case of unfitness where ONE TAKES IN THE ROOM AND THE CEILING IN ONE GLANCE. Whence do we prove this? — Our Rabbis taught. Scripture says: ‘In his eye’,⁴ every [defect] in connection with the eye. Hence [the Sages] say: One who has both eyes below or both eyes above or one eye above and one eye below or one who takes in the room and the ceiling in one glance or one who speaks with his friend, and another says, ‘He is looking at me’ — [all these defects render a priest unfit for the priesthood].
Our Rabbis taught. The text: ‘Blind’ means blind in both eyes or in one eye. Whence do we derive the case of white spots [on the cornea] and eyes dripping with water, [both defects being] of a permanent character? There is a scriptural text: ‘[A blind] man.’ Said Raba: What need is there for the Divine Law to write: ‘blind man’, ‘dak’, ‘tebullal in his eye’? — It is necessary [to state all these cases]. For if the Divine Law had only said ‘Blind’, we might have thought that the reason was because the eyes were not there, but in the cases of white spots on the cornea and of dripping eyes, [both defects being] of a permanent character where the eyes are there, this is not so. Therefore Scripture says ‘[Blind] man’. And if the Divine Law had said ‘Man’ we might have thought that the reason was because the eyes cannot see at all [although they are there], but where however there was only defective vision, it is not so. Therefore the Divine Law says ‘Dak.’ And if the Divine Law had said [only] Dak, we might have thought that the reason was because there was defective vision, but where there was confusion [of the colours in the eye] it is not so, therefore the Divine Law says ‘tebullal’. And if the Divine Law had only said teballul, we might have thought that the reason was because of the confusion [of the colours in the eye], but where It was a case of a different location [of the eyes], it is not so. Therefore the Divine Law says: ‘In his eye’. Said Raba: Consequently, every case of blindness we derive from the text ‘Man’. Every case of defective vision, we derive from the text ‘dak’. Every case of confusion [of colours in the eye] we derive from the text ‘teballul’, and every case of a different location [in the two eyes] we derive from the text ‘In his eye’.

ONE WHO COVERS [HIS EYES] FROM THE SUN. R. Joseph taught: One who hates the sun [a blinkard]. ZAGDAN. R. Huna showed by gestures, one eye like ours and the other, like theirs. Rab Judah was annoyed.

An objection was raised: Shakbonah is one whose eyebrows overshadow [his eyes]. Zagdan is one who has one black and one white [eyebrow]. A Tanna taught: Any pair [of eyes] which is not properly matched is called zagdan.

ZIRAN. It has been taught: One whose eyes are bleared and granulated; weeping, dripping and running. A Tanna taught: Zewir, lufyon, and tamir are blemishes. Zewir is one whose eyes are unsteady [mezawar]. Lufyon is one having thick and connected eyebrows, and tamir is one whose eyebrows are gone. And is the latter defect reckoned among disqualifying blemishes? Have we not learnt: ONE WHOSE EYELIDS ARE HAIRLESS IS UNFIT [FOR THE PRIESTHOOD] ‘FOR APPEARANCE SAKE’? — This offers no difficulty. In the one case, the root remains, in the other, it does not remain.

MISHNAH. ONE WHOSE EYES ARE AS LARGE AS A CALF’S OR AS SMALL AS THOSE OF A GOOSE; OR WHOSE BODY IS [UNDULY] LARGE FOR HIS LIMBS; [UNDULY] SMALL FOR HIS LIMBS; OR WHOSE NOSE IS [UNDULY] LARGE FOR HIS LIMBS; OR WHOSE NOSE IS [UNDULY] SMALL FOR HIS LIMBS; ZOMEM AND ZOMEA’. WHAT IS ZOMEM? ONE WHOSE AURICLES RESEMBLE A SPONGE. IF THE UPPER LIP OVERLAPS THE LOWER OR THE LOWER LIP OVERLAPS THE UPPER, THIS IS A BLEMISH. ONE WHOSE TEETH HAVE FALLEN OUT IS UNFIT [FOR THE PRIESTHOOD] FOR APPEARANCE SAKE.

GEMARA. Said Rab: Moses our teacher was ten cubits in height, for it is said: And he spread abroad the tent over the tabernacle. Now who spread it? Moses our teacher; and Scripture says: Ten cubits shall be the length of the board. Said R. Shimi b. Hiyya to Rab: If so, you have made out that Moses was a blemished person, for we have learnt: ONE WHOSE BODY IS UNDULY LARGE FOR HIS LIMBS OR UNDULY SMALL FOR HIS LIMBS. — He replied to him: ‘Are you the Shimi [famed for your wisdom]. I refer to the cubit of the tabernacle.’

ONE WHOSE NOSE WAS UNDULY LARGE etc. A Tanna taught: As [the width of] a small finger. ZOMEM AND ZOMEA’. A Tanna taught: [In addition to the blemishes mentioned] zimmeah is also a blemish. The Rabbis did not know what zimmeah was. They heard an Arab trader call out: Who wants a zimmeah? And it was found to be a shaggy goat.

Said R. Hisda: A goat which has no horns and a ewe which has horns are fit for the altar. So indeed it has been taught: There are some defects [in a firstling] which appear like blemishes but are not actually blemishes and in consequence of which we slaughter the animal in the Temple but not without the Temple. And they are the following: A goat which has no horns and an ewe which has horns, a zimmeah, a zummum and a zomea’. R. Hisda reported in the name of Abimi: If its horns together with the bony inside [of the horns] have been removed, the animal is unfit for the altar, but may not be redeemed by reason of it. If its hoofs together with the bony inside [of the hoofs] have been removed, the animal is unfit, and may be redeemed by reason of it.

An objection was raised: If the horns and hoofs together with their bony insides were removed, the animal is unfit, and may be redeemed by reason of it! This presents no difficulty. In the one case [the horns] were uprooted and in the other [the horns] were levelled. But if the horns were only levelled, is it even unfit [for the altar]? The following was cited in contradiction: If a [red] heifer has horns and hoofs which are black, let him lop off [the black top of the horns and hoofs]. — Explain this as follows: [The lopping off] is from the top part of their bony inside.

(1) There is no need for the nose to be so deeply sunk in order to make him unfit for the priesthood.
(2) But in each of these instances the eyes are in their normal and usual places.
(3) In the top of the forehead which is an actual change of position.
(4) Lev. XXI, 20. Scripture could have said dak (a cataract), teballul a blending of the black and white of the eye alone and I would have known that the eye is meant, for these blemishes only concern the eye. The text therefore ‘In his eye’ is superfluous, unless for the purpose of deriving other cases therefrom.
(6) And we infer this from the additional word ‘Man’.
(7) V. p. 294, n. 5. Could we not have inferred one or two of these blemishes from the other?
(8) As the word ‘Blind’ implies that the eyes have been removed.
(9) But that there is a certain amount of vision left.
(10) Where the white of an eye invades the black and vice versa, the vision of the eye, however, not being decreased thereby.
(11) As, for example, where both eyes are in the forehead or below the normal places etc.
(12) Not being able to see at all, like the cases of white spots on the cornea and dripping eyes.
(13) Changing the word מפרן into נפרן which means hating.
(14) A normal one.
(15) Those sitting opposite me among whom was Rab Judah whose eyes were abnormal. Tosaf. adds that Rab Judah’s eyes were abnormal in this respect, that one eye was unduly large.
(17) Whether in colour or size.
(18) Discharging briny liquid. Rashi says: Round or pivot shaped.
(19) ‘Running’ is more than ‘dripping’ and the latter is more than weeping’. Aruch has for מפרן restless, constantly twinkling. Another opinion is, shutting with great trouble.
(20) We therefore see that it is not an actual blemish.
(21) The Mishnah which says that he is unfit merely for appearance sake.
(22) The Tanna who states that it is a real blemish. R. Gershom interprets this passage as follows: The authority in the Baraitha refers to a case where the root of the eyebrow and eyelid remains and even so he is unfit for the priesthood, whereas the Mishnah refers to where nothing remains of the root, and therefore the unfitness is only ‘for appearance sake’.
(23) I.e., his legs, hands and shoulders.
(24) It is assumed, a cubit being the measurement of the fore-arm, that the standard of measurement was Moses’
The following text is a natural representation of the document:

For then his body would be out of all proportion to his arms ten to one, whereas the proportion of the average person's body to his arm is only three to one.

[I.e., the ordinary cubit measure used in the Tabernacle. The ten cubits of Moses were with reference not to his own fore-arm, but somewhat to that of an ordinary person (the cubit used in the Tabernacle being slightly longer than an ordinary cubit, v. supra 40a). The reading is that of Sh. Mek. and R. Gershom. Cur. edd.; he refers to the cubit (for the measurement) of the board. The meaning is however the same.]

If it is smaller or larger than this measurement, then he is rendered unfit as a priest, supposing he is of average height.

With long lumps of hair and long depending ears.

Because they are not regarded as disqualifying blemishes.

These three terms have been explained above in the Gemara.

If it is a consecrated animal and not a first-born. It is not redeemed because it is considered a blemish only with regard to disqualifying for the altar.

This Baraita therefore contradicts Rab Hisda's ruling.

The Baraita just quoted.

And a depression is visible on the top.

The case referred to by Rab Hisda.

But the stump remained.

There is at the point of the horn, on the top, a piece of two or three finger-breadths to which the bony inside does not extend; if then the black did not reach the bony inside, he may lop it off, and this does not make the animal blemished.

Talmud - Mas. Bechoroth 44b

MISHNAH. IF ONE HAS LARGE BREASTS LIKE THOSE OF A WOMAN, ONE WHOSE BELLY IS SWOLLEN, ONE WHOSE NAVAL PROJECTS, [OWING TO ILLNESS], ONE WHO IS SUBJECT TO EPILEPTIC SPELLS EVEN AT INFREQUENT INTERVALS, ONE WHO IS SUBJECT TO ASTHMATIC SPELLS, A ME'USHBAN AND A BA'AL GEBER [ALL THESE ARE UNFIT FOR THE PRIESTHOOD].

GEMARA. R. Abba b. R. Hiyya b. Abba reported in the name of R. Johanan: It is permitted to urinate in public, whereas it is not permitted to drink water in public. So indeed it has been taught: It is permitted to urinate in public, whereas it is not permitted to drink water in public. And it once happened that someone wanted to urinate and forewent it, and it was found that his belly was swollen. Samuel needed to urinate on a Sabbath preceding a Festival. He spread his cloak [as a screen between his audience and himself]. He came before his father [and reported this to him]. He [the latter] then said to him: ‘I will give you four hundred zuz to retract this ruling, for you were able to spread a cloak, but one who is not able to do so, shall he delay and expose himself to the danger?’

Mar son of R. Ashi was walking on the junction of a landing bridge when he needed [to ease himself]. They said to him. ‘Your mother-in-law comes’. He replied to them, ‘Even in her ear’. But may I not assume that the swelling of his belly arose from swallowing a leech— [We are dealing here in a case] when he discharged urine [laxly].

Our Rabbis taught: Two channels are in the membrum of a human being, one of which discharges urine and the other semen, and the distance between them is no more than the peel of garlic. If then a person needs to ease himself, and one channel interferes with the other, he is found to be impotent.
Said Resh Lakish: What is the interpretation of the Scriptural text: There shall not be male and female barren among you or among your cattle?\textsuperscript{13} It is as follows: When will there not be a male barren among you? If you put yourself on a level with an animal.\textsuperscript{14} Said R. Joshua b. Levi: The words ‘There shall not be male barren’ mean that your house shall not be deprived of scholars. The words ‘Or female barren’ mean that your prayers shall not be fruitless before the Lord.\textsuperscript{15} And when will this be the case? If you place yourself on a level with an animal.\textsuperscript{16} Said R. Papa: One must not urinate in an earthen tub\textsuperscript{17} nor in a hard spot.\textsuperscript{18} For Rab said: The drains of Babylon carry water to En Etam.

Said Abaye: A woman must not stand actually before a child and urinate.\textsuperscript{19} [If she urinates] sideways, however,\textsuperscript{20} there is no objection.

We have learnt [in a Baraitha]: R. Simeon b. Gamaliel says, A suppressed discharge produces dropsy. To force back the urine in the urinary duct produces jaundices. R. Kattina reported in the name of Resh Lakish: If blood is allowed to increase,\textsuperscript{21} skin disease will develop. If semen is allowed to increase,\textsuperscript{22} leprosy develops. If excrement is allowed to increase, dropsy increases. If one allows the urine to increase [through neglect], jaundice develops.

ONE WHO IS SUBJECT TO ASTHMATIC SPELLS. What is this?\textsuperscript{23} — Nala.\textsuperscript{24} A Tanna taught: The spirit of ben nefalim\textsuperscript{25} comes upon him.

A ME'USHBAN AND A BA'AL GEBER. A Tanna taught: ME'USHBAN is in the stones and BA'AL GEBER is in the membrum. It has been taught: Me'ushban is the kayyan, and arbatha is the ba'al kik. Kayyan means stones [which are abnormally large] and arbatha means the membrum [which is abnormally large]. And of what size? Rab Judah indicated this as up to the knee. It has been taught: R. Eliezer b. Jacob says: The membrum which reaches up to the knee makes the priest unfit, but if it is above the knee, he is fit. Some there are who say: If the membrum reaches up to the knee the priest is fit, whereas if it comes below the knee he is unfit [for the priesthood].

MISHNAH. IF HE HAS NO STONES AT ALL OR ONLY ONE STONE, THIS IS THE BIBLICAL MER_0AH ASHEK.\textsuperscript{26} R. ISHEMAEL SAYS: IF HE HAS HIS TESTICLES CRUSHED.\textsuperscript{27} R. AKIBA SAYS: IF HE HAS WIND IN HIS TESTICLES. R. HANINA B. ANTIGONUS SAYS: [MEROAH ASHEK MEANS]: IF HE HAS A BLACK COMPLEXION.\textsuperscript{28}

GEMARA. R. Ishmael [who differs from the opinion of the first Tanna in the Mishnah] found this opinion difficult to accept, [for if so], ‘it ought to read: Hasar ashek.’\textsuperscript{29} Therefore he teaches: IF HE HAS HIS TESTICLES CRUSHED. R. Akiba also [who in turn differs from R. Ishmael] found this opinion difficult to accept, [for if so], it ought to read: Memarah ashek.\textsuperscript{30} He therefore teaches: IF ONE HAS WIND IN HIS TESTICLES. R. Hanina also [who differs from the opinion of R. Akiba] found this opinion difficult to accept, [for if so], it ought to read: ruah ashek.\textsuperscript{31} He therefore teaches: IF HE HAS A BLACK COMPLEXION. For he maintains: We may take away one letter from one word of the text and add to another and thus interpret [the Law].\textsuperscript{32} But then is this not [according to R. Hanina] the case of one who is like an Ethiopian?\textsuperscript{33} — R. Hanina b. Antigonus does not teach the case of one abnormally dark-complexioned.\textsuperscript{34}

MISHNAH. IF ONE KNOCKS HIS ANKLES [AGAINST EACH OTHER, IN WALKING] OR RUBS HIS LEGS [AGAINST EACH OTHER]\textsuperscript{35} (1) Lit., ‘lying’ on his body, hanging downwards.
(2) Lit., ‘Even once in many days’, although at fixed periods.
(3) Lit., ‘a short breath causes departure’. Aliter: ‘a spirit of Kazrah (Al. Kazruth or Kazrith) comes on him’; a demon believed to be responsible for this ailment.
Lit., ‘in the presence of many’, because a delay may endanger health.

(5) Because it is customary for a scholar to exercise privacy in his eating and drinking.

(6) It being the usual practice for a period of thirty days before a Festival to discourse on the rules and regulations appertaining to the forthcoming Festival; v. Meg. 4a.

(7) To urinate in their presence and thus proclaim that it was not necessary to exercise privacy when requiring to urinate.

(8) Owing to your honoured position. R. Gershom explains this as follows: You possess a cloak but what about those who do not own one?

(9) ‘I would have urinated if I had no other spot, rather than wait, and certainly in her presence’.

(10) In the incident reported above.

(11) And not because of the delay in making water.

(12) Which proves that his belly swelled owing to the delay.

(14) As regards urinating in any place, even in public, like the animal which does not possess a sense of decency.

(15) When praying for children, you will be answered.

(16) Prayer in general must be offered up in a humble spirit. One must therefore put himself on a level with an animal regarding himself as an insignificant creature (Tosaf.).

(17) Because the urine is thrown into the nearest river and the rivers of Babylon proceed to mingle with En Etam, a fountain in which the high priest used to bathe himself on the Day of Atonement, v. Shab. 245b and Yoma 31a.

(18) Because since that spot does not absorb the urine, it flows on the ground until it reaches a declivity, whence it runs into the river.

(19) Even if she does not expose herself, it is an act of brazenness (Tosaf.).

(20) Without any intention of doing so before the child.

(21) If bleeding is neglected.

(22) Neglecting sexual intercourse when married.

(23) What is the spirit which is believed to cause this ailment?

(24) A spirit of stupidity brought about by a demon.

(25) The name of a demon which causes nervous prostration.

(26) Lev. XXI, 20; E.V. ‘he that hath his stones broken’.

(27) This is the biblical meroah.

(28) The blemishes mentioned in the Mishnah disqualify a priest from the priesthood according to all the Tannaim, and the difference of opinion is only with reference to the precise interpretation of the words meroah ashek.

(29) If the first Tanna were correct, that the Bible means that the testicles were absent, then it should have said hasar etc., i.e., deficient in testicles.

(30) If R. Ishmael's interpretation were correct. מְרוֹהַ אָשֵׁק participle passive is required, v. Jast. cur. edd.

(31) If R. Akiba's opinion were correct, that meroah means he who has wind in his testicles, then the word for wind מַרְאוֹ הָאָשֵׁק ought to be used.

(32) And here too we take away the מְרוֹהַ מְרוֹהַ and the אָשֵׁק אָשֵׁק adding the מְרוֹהַ to the latter word and אָשֵׁק to the former, thus making מַרְאוֹ הָאָשֵׁק viz., black-complexioned.

(33) A blemish explicitly mentioned below in the Mishnah infra 45b as disqualifying a priest.

(34) He omits ‘Ethiopian’ from the Mishnah below and thus there is no repetition.

(35) Because his legs are bent outwards.

(36) His feet being bent outward.

Talmud - Mas. Bechoroth 45a

A BA'AL HA-PIHIN AND AN ‘IKKEL — [ALL THESE DEFECTS RENDER A PRIEST UNFIT]. WHAT IS AN ‘IKKEL? ONE WHOSE LEGS DO NOT TOUCH EACH OTHER WHEN HE PUTS HIS FEET TOGETHER, [BANDY LEGGED]. IF HE HAS A LUMP PROJECTING FROM HIS THUMB, OR IF HIS HEEL PROJECTS BEHIND, OR IF HIS FEET ARE WIDE LIKE THOSE OF A GOOSE OR IF HIS FINGERS LIE ONE ABOVE THE OTHER OR IF THEY ARE GROWN TOGETHER UP TO THE ROOT [THE MIDDLE JOINT], HE IS FIT [FOR THE PRIESTHOOD]; IF BELOW THE ROOT,\(^3\) IF HE CUTS IT,\(^4\) HE IS ALSO FIT. IF HE HAS AN ADDITIONAL FINGER AND HE CUT IT OFF, IF THERE WAS A BONE IN IT, HE IS UNFIT,\(^5\) BUT IF NOT, HE IS FIT. IF HE HAS ADDITIONAL FINGERS AND ADDITIONAL TOES, ON EACH HAND AND FOOT SIX FINGERS AND SIX TOES, [MAKING ALTOGETHER TWENTY-FOUR [FINGERS AND TOES], R. JUDAH DECLARES SUCH A PRIEST FIT FOR THE PRIESTHOOD,\(^6\) WHEREAS THE SAGES DECLARE HIM UNFIT. IF ONE HAS EQUAL STRENGTH IN BOTH HANDS, RABBI DECLARES HIM UNFIT,\(^7\) WHEREAS THE SAGES DECLARE HIM FIT.\(^8\)

GEMARA. Our Rabbis taught: [Scripture says]: Broken-footed.\(^9\) I have here mentioned only the case of broken-footed [as making a priest unfit for the priesthood]. Whence do we deduce the inclusion of one who knocks his ankles against each other or one who is club-footed? The text states, ‘Or broken-footed’. A Tanna taught: Ba'al ha-pikin and shufnor. R. Hiyya b. Abba reported in the name of R. Johanan: Ba'al ha-pikin is one who has many calves\(^10\) and shufnor is one without calves.\(^11\)

IF HE HAS A LUMP PROJECTING FROM THE THUMB, OR IF HIS HEEL PROJECTS BEHIND. Said R. Eleazar: This [latter defect] means the leg coming out in the middle of the foot.\(^12\)

OR IF HIS FEET WERE AS WIDE AS THOSE OF A GOOSE. Said R. Papa: You should not say that the feet must be thin\(^13\) as well as not separated; even if they are only thin, although separated [they make a priest unfit for the priesthood].

OR IF HIS FINGERS LIE ONE ABOVE THE OTHER OR ARE GROWN TOGETHER. Our Rabbis taught: [Scripture says]: Broken-handed.\(^14\) I have here mentioned only the case of broken-handed [as making a priest unfit]. Whence do we deduce that if his fingers lie one above the other or are grown together above\(^15\) the root and he cut them that he is unfit? But did you not say [in the Mishnah that in the latter instance] he is fit? — Rather read ‘he did not cut them’. Whence then do we derive these cases? — The text states: ‘Or broken-handed’\(^\text{16}\).

IF HE HAS AN ADDITIONAL FINGER AND HE CUT IT OFF, IF THERE WAS A BONE IN IT HE IS UNFIT. BUT IF NOT, HE IS FIT. Rabbah b. bar Hana reported in the name of R. Johanan: Provided the additional finger is counted with the others.\(^17\) Our Rabbis taught: An additional [finger] if it has a bone in it, even without a nail,\(^18\) makes a person unclean by contact and by carrying it.\(^19\) It also causes tent uncleanness,\(^20\) and is counted in the number of one hundred and twenty-five [limbs].\(^21\) Rabbah b. Bar Hana reported in the name of R. Johanan: Provided the additional finger is counted with the others. Said R. Hisda: The following ruling was taught by our great Master [Rab], may the Lord be his support! An additional finger if there is a bone in it, even without a nail, makes a person unclean by contact and by carrying it but it does not cause tent uncleanness.\(^22\) Said Rabbah b. Bar Hana: Provided the additional finger is not counted with the others. Said R. Hanina: They have put their teaching on the level with prophecy.\(^24\) For in either case [the ruling just quoted is difficult to understand]. If the additional finger is considered a limb [legally], then it should even cause tent uncleanness; and if it is not a limb [legally], then it should not even make a person unclean by contact and by carrying it! — Said R. Huna b. Manoah in the name of R. Aha b. Ika: The Rabbis applied here the rule of a bone which is the size of a barleycorn.\(^25\) R. Papa says: We declare him unclean in the case where the additional finger was not counted with the others on account of the case where the additional finger is counted with the others.\(^26\) But if this be so, then in the case where the additional finger is not counted with the others, it should also cause tent uncleanness? — The Rabbis made a distinction in order that terumah and consecrated objects might not be burnt [unnecessarily] on account of it.\(^27\)

We have learnt elsewhere: The greater portion\(^28\) of a corpse [as measured by size of limbs] and the larger number of joints and limbs, even though there is not among them one quarter of a kab\(^{29}\) of bones, convey tent uncleanness.\(^{30}\)

Our Rabbis taught: What is the greater part of a corpse? Two legs and a thigh, since this is the greater part of the height of a tall person.\(^{31}\) What is the larger number of joints and limbs? One hundred and twenty-five [limbs]. Said Rabina\(^{32}\) to Raba: Is it the object of the Tanna to teach us calculation?\(^{33}\) He replied to him: He informs us of the following as it was taught: If a person is defective [in the number of joints], having only two hundred,\(^{34}\) or if one\(^{35}\) has additional limbs, having two hundred and eighty-one, all these joints are counted in the number of one hundred and twenty-five.\(^{36}\) What is the reason? Follow the majority of people [who have only two hundred and forty-eight joints and limbs].

R. Judah related in the name of Samuel: The disciples of R. Ishmael once dissected the body of a prostitute who had been condemned to be burnt by the king. They examined and found two hundred and fifty-two joints and limbs. [They came and inquired of R. Ishmael: ‘How many joints has the human body?’ He replied to them: ‘Two hundred and forty-eight.’]\(^{37}\) Thereupon they said to him: ‘But we have examined and found two hundred and fifty-two’? He replied to them: ‘Perhaps you made the postmortem examination on a woman, in whose case Scripture adds two hinges [in her sexual organ] and two doors\(^{38}\) of the womb’.

It was taught: R. Eleazar said: As a house has hinges,\(^{39}\) so a woman's body has hinges [in her sexual organ], as it is written in the Scriptures: She\(^{40}\) bowed herself and brought forth, for her pains [zireha] came suddenly upon her.\(^{41}\)

R. Joshua says: As a house has doors, so a woman's womb has doors,\(^{38}\) as it is said in the Scriptures: Because it shut not up the doors of my mother's womb.\(^{42}\) R. Akiba says: As a house has a key, so a woman has a key, [the womb], as it is written in the Scriptures: And opened her womb.\(^{43}\) According to the opinion of R. Akiba, is there not a difficulty in connection with what R. Ishmael's disciples discovered?\(^{44}\) — It may be that since it is small, it was dissolved in the course of dissecting. Said Rab.\(^{45}\) And all these\(^{46}\) do not cause tent uncleanness, for it is said in the Scriptures: This is the law when a man dieth in a tent,\(^{47}\) [implying], a thing which is common to all human beings [causes tent uncleanness].\(^{48}\) Said Abaye to him: And has not a man also [some of these additional limbs]?\(^{49}\) Does not Scripture say: Pangs, [zirim]\(^{50}\) have taken hold upon me as the pangs of a woman that travailleth?\(^{51}\) These are hinges of flesh.\(^{52}\) But does not Scripture say: O my lord, by reason of the vision my pains, [zirai], have come upon me?\(^{53}\) — Here again the verse refers to ‘hinges’ of flesh. It also stands to reason. For if you will not say so,\(^{54}\) to whom then will you apply the accepted statement that there exist two hundred and forty-eight limbs [in the human body], for it can apply neither to a man nor to a woman.\(^{55}\)

---

1. It is almost like an additional finger.
2. As thin as those of a goose and their length and width are alike.
3. Viz., towards the nail, the fingers being all attached to each other.
4. In order to divide the fingers.
5. For the priesthood, for it is like losing a limb.
6. Since the fingers are equal in number.
7. As they hold that a portion of the vigour of the right hand has gone to the left.
8. Holding that additional strength was given to the left hand.
10. Appearing as if possessing many calves on his legs, very thick-fleshed.
12. Half of the foot is in the front and the other half in the rear.
13. So Rashi understands מַרְיֵם here. The Arukh says that מַרְיֵם means: The length and width of the feet are alike. Rashi in his commentary on the Mishnah appears to combine both interpretations. Tosaf. Yom Tob suggests that Rashi on the Mishnah means that they are either thin or that their length etc.

(14) Lev. XXI, 19.
(15) The ‘above’ here has the same meaning as ‘below’ in the Mishnah.
(16) From the additional word ‘or’ we make this deduction.
(17) I.e., is in line with the rest of the fingers, it is then that the Mishnah regards it as a limb.
(18) Although it does not possess a nail, the additional finger of a corpse is still considered a limb, since it is in line with the rest of the fingers.
(19) Where, for example, it has a small quantity of flesh attached to it, even it be less than the size of an olive. For if there were a piece of flesh the size of an olive on the bone, then even if the additional finger were not in line with the rest of the fingers or even if there were not a bone in the additional finger, it would have caused tent uncleanness, for the rule is that the flesh of a corpse the size of an olive causes tent uncleanness. Again, if there were not any flesh at all on the bone, then even if the additional finger were in line with the rest, it would not have been considered a limb, since bones as such do not cause tent uncleanness, unless where there is a majority of the joints or the greater part of the corpse. But now since there is a small portion of flesh, even though not the size of an olive, the additional finger of a corpse causes uncleanness because it is in line with the rest and is legally recognized as a limb.
(20) Tent uncleanness is uncleanness arising from being under the same tent and shelter with, or forming a tent and shelter over, a corpse; v. Num. XIX, 14.
(21) If there is no flesh the size of an olive, the additional finger is counted as a limb among the one hundred and twenty-five limbs and joints, as this constitutes the greater number of limbs of the two hundred and forty-eight limbs and joints of which the human body is composed, the law being that the majority of the joints and limbs of a corpse causes tent uncleanness.
(22) Where the additional finger is not in line with the rest, as explained below, there being here two disqualifications; first that there are no nails, and secondly its not being in line with the rest of the fingers. But if it has a nail in it, the additional finger makes tent uncleanness although it is not in line.
(23) So Sh. Mek. cur. edd. R. Johanan.
(24) Just as the Prophets are not required to give reasons for their utterances, so the teachers in the passage just quoted also give no reason for their ruling.
(25) Which makes a person unclean either by carrying it or coming in contact with it, but does not cause tent uncleanness.
(26) Legally where the additional finger is not in line with the rest, there is no uncleanness, only for fear that this might bring about laxity in a case where the additional finger is in line, where it legally causes uncleanness, the Rabbis declared uncleanness also in the former case.
(27) Had every form of uncleanness been declared, including that of ohel, one might have been led to believe that an additional finger not in line is a genuine limb, and therefore terumah etc. might come to be wrongly burnt as a consequence.
(28) Lit., ‘structure’.
(29) A small measure of capacity.
(30) Oh. II, 1.
(31) Without reckoning the head, for as regards the frame of a corpse, the head is not taken into consideration. This measurement applies to a tall person only but not to a small person.
(33) For since there are two hundred and forty-eight joints in the human body, it is obvious that the majority is one hundred and twenty-five, and what need is there for the Tanna of the Baraita to teach us this?
(34) A man born with two fingers missing on each hand and two toes on each leg i.e., eight members. Now since every finger has six bones, this makes altogether a total of forty-eight joints of which this man is short. Thus he has only two hundred joints of the two hundred and forty-eight which the human body contains.
(35) If a woman is born with two additional fingers on her hands and two additional toes on her legs and each one has six bones, we have a total of twenty-four additional limbs. In addition, there are five extra limbs in the case of a woman, viz. two hinges, two doors and the womb (v. infra). We have therefore altogether twenty-nine additional limbs. Add this to two hundred and forty-eight, and we have a grand total of two hundred and seventy-seven. Rashi says that he cannot account for the other four so as to make up the number to two hundred and eighty-one. R. Gershom however explains that for every six bones in a finger there is a corresponding extra bone in the arm. Consequently, as there are four additional fingers and toes, we have a further four limbs, which bring the number of joints to two hundred and eighty-one.

(36) The Tanna therefore informs us that although one hundred and twenty-five is not the actual majority of limbs in the case of a woman who has additional fingers or the bare majority in the case of one who has less than the usual number of limbs, we accept the number in all cases as the greater number of limbs causes tent uncleanness.

(37) Inserted from Sh. Mek.

(38) I.e., the muscles.

(39) Doors moving in sockets.

(40) The word הַיָּרִים (her pains) coming from the word יָרִים literally rendered means ‘hinges’.

(41) I Sam. IV, 19.

(42) Job. III, 10.

(43) Gen. XXX, 22.

(44) Who only found two hundred and fifty-two limbs in a woman's body, while according to R. Akiba who mentions that the womb was an extra limb, there is another limb, making two hundred and fifty-three in all.

(45) Var. lec. Raba.

(46) The five additional limbs of a woman.

(47) Num. XIX, 14.

(48) But a thing which is not common to both men and women does not cause tent uncleanness, the word מִלְשָׁנָה meaning human being in general and not exclusively a man.

(49) Which we say belong only to a woman—the ‘hinges’.

(50) Isa. XXI, 3.

(51) V. p. 307, supra n. 5.

(52) Which have no bones and are therefore not regarded as genuine limbs.

(53) Dan. X, 16.

(54) That zirim written in connection with a man is not an additional limb and thus there would be another limb in the case of a man.

Talmud - Mas. Bechoroth 45b

IF HE HAS ADDITIONAL FINGERS AND ADDITIONAL TOES ON HIS HANDS AND FEET etc. Said R. Isaac: And both derive their views from [the interpretation of] the same verse: And there was yet a battle in Gath where there was a man of great stature that had on every hand six fingers and on every foot six toes, four and twenty in number. One Master holds that Scripture means to disparage him, while the other Master [R. Judah] holds that Scripture means to praise him. Said Rabbah: Why does Scripture say: ‘Six’, ‘six’ and ‘twenty-four in number’? It was necessary to state all these numbers. For if the Divine Law had only said ‘six’ [fingers] and ‘six’ [toes], I might have thought that the one word ‘six’ referred to one hand and the other ‘six’ referred to one leg. Therefore the Divine Law says: Twenty-four. And if the Divine Law had said only ‘twenty-four’, I might have thought that it meant five fingers on one hand and seven fingers on the other, [the same applying to the feet]. Therefore the Divine Law says: ‘Six’, ‘six’ ‘in number’ teaching us that the case here is one where the additional fingers are counted with the others.

It has been taught: R. Judah says: A man once came before R. Tarfon with additional fingers and toes, six on each, making altogether twenty-four. He said to him: May the like of you increase in Israel! Said R. Jose to him: Do you bring a proof from this incident? This is really what R. Tarfon said to him. May through people like you bastards and nethinim diminish in Israel!

IF ONE HAS EQUAL STRENGTH IN BOTH HANDS. Our Rabbis taught: If one is left-handed or left-legged, Rabbi declares him unfit [for the priesthood] whereas the Sages declare him fit. One Master holds that it is due to an unusual weakness which has befallen the right hand, and the other Mishnah. [If one is like an] Ethiopian, a Gihur, a Labkan, a Kippeah, a dwarf, a deaf-mute, an imbecile, intoxicated, or afflicted with plague marks which are clean — [these defects] disqualify in human beings but not in animals. R. Simeon b. Gamaliel says: One should not for choice sacrifice a mad animal. R. Eleazar says: Also those afflicted with warts are unfit in human beings but are fit in animals.

Gemara. [One who is like] an Ethiopian, is one abnormally black-complexioned. Gihur is one who is [abnormally] white-spotted in the face. Labkan is one who is [abnormally] red-spotted in the face. Now is this really so? Was there not a man who cried out: ‘Who wants to buy levkoioms’? and it was found to be white flowers, [snowflakes]? Rather [the following are the correct definitions]: ONE LIKE AN ETHIOPIAN is one who is [abnormally] black-complexioned. Gihur is one who is [abnormally red-spotted in the face], as people call gihia flame-red. Labkan is one who is [abnormally] white-spotted in the face, as we know from one who cried out: ‘Who wants levkoioms’? and it was found to be white flowers.

Kippeah. R. Zebid taught: This means [extremely] tall. Now is it really so? Has not R. Abbuhu taught: Whence do we know that the Holy One, blessed be He, takes pride in men of high stature? Because it is written in the Scriptures: Yet I destroyed the Amorite before them whose height was like the height of the cedars? — Said R. Papa: Kippeah is a tall, thin and unshapely person.

Said Resh Lakish: An abnormally tall man should not marry an abnormally tall woman, lest their offspring be [like] a mast. A male dwarf should not marry a female dwarf, lest their offspring be a dwarf of the smallest size. A man abnormally white-complexioned should not marry an equally white-complexioned woman, lest their offspring be excessively white-complexioned. A very dark-complexioned man should not marry an equally very dark-complexioned woman, lest their offspring may be pitch black.

A deaf-mute person, an imbecile, an intoxicated person. But does not an intoxicated priest profane the Temple-service? Should not this defect then be mentioned in connection with the disqualifying blemishes [of a priest]? — [The Mishnah] refers to other things from which one can become intoxicated, and this will not be in accordance with the opinion of Rabbi Judah. For it was taught: A priest who ate preserved figs from Keilah and drank milk and fermented honey, if he entered the Temple, incurs liability [to excision].

Mishnah. The following are fit in the case of human beings, but unfit in the case of animals: A father with its son, a trefa, an animal extracted by means of the caesarean section, a priest who contracts an illegal marriage is unfit [for the priesthood] until he vows not to derive any benefit from the woman. Also one who makes himself unclean through contact with the dead is unfit, until he undertakes that he will no longer make himself unclean through the dead.

Gemara. The following are fit in a human being etc. What does the Mishnah mean by the expression A FATHER WITH ITS SON? Shall I say that it refers to Aaron and his son, to which the corresponding case in an animal would be a he-goat and its young? But does this law apply in such circumstances? Has it not been taught: The law prohibiting the killing of an animal and its young on the same day applies only to females and their young, but not to males and their young? — Rather the Mishnah refers to a she-goat and its young. Would not then a parallel case in human beings be a priestess and her son? But is a priestess suitable for Temple-service? — One may still say that the Mishnah refers to Aaron and his son and that the corresponding case here is a he-goat and its young. For it was explained in the West in the name of R. Jose b. Abin [as follows]:
This proves that Hanania taught this Mishnah. For we have learnt [in a Baraita]: The law prohibiting the killing of an animal and its young on the same day refers only to females and their young but not to males and their young. But Hanania says: It applies to males and their young as well as to females.

A PRIEST WHO CONTRACTS AN ILLEGAL MARRIAGE etc. A Tanna taught: He vows, performs the Temple-services [even before divorce] and then leaves the Temple-service to divorce her. But why do we not fear lest he may go to a Sage and obtain release from his vow? — He holds the opinion: A vow must be specified in detail [before it can be invalidated].

This is no difficulty according to him who says that a vow is required to be specified [before it can be invalidated]. But according to him who says that there is no need to specify in detail a vow before it can be invalidated, what answer would you give? — We make him interdict himself by vow in public.

This is no difficulty according to him who holds that an interdiction by vow imposed on a person in public can not be invalidated. But according to him who holds that an interdiction by a vow imposed on a person in public can be invalidated — what answer would you give? — We impose an interdiction by vow

(1) R. Judah and the Sages.
(2) II Sam. XXI, 20.
(3) Could I not have inferred one number from the other?
(4) But not to two legs and two hands.
(5) Proving that additional fingers are marks of strength.
(6) The offspring of Nathin, a descendant of the Gibeonites. David decreed their exclusion from the Israelitish community with regard to inter-marriage.
(7) May nethinim and bastards like you possessing additional fingers and toes be multiplied, so as eventually to cause a decrease in their number, for they would then be distinguishable and marked off from the rest of the community (R. Gershom.)
(8) A left-handed priest is unfit for the priesthood because Scripture says: And the Priest shall dip his right finger, (Lev. XIV, 16) from which we infer that wherever Scripture says finger with reference to a priest, it means that of the right hand. And a left-legged priest is unfit because Scripture says: To stand and to serve, (Deut. XVII, 12) intimating that the serving must be in the normal manner of standing, viz., on the right leg, v. Zeb. 24a.
(9) Rabbi.
(10) The Sages.
(11) Left-handedness is therefore no defect.
(12) These terms are explained in the Gemara.
(13) E.g., a sore or a rising on the skin. There is no need for the Mishnah to mention that a priest with an unclean skin disease is disqualified, for in that case he is forbidden to enter the Temple-court on pain of excision.
(14) Viz. priests.
(15) Bah. adds, b. Jacob.
(16) So Just. Rashi has here The Aruch has .
(17) White lambs (Rashi.).
(18) V. e. giha.
(20) lit. ‘loose’; one whose height is out of all proportion to his breadth, and on account of this, he sags and his joints seem to be ‘loose.’
(21) Tall and slim.
(22) Lit., ‘a fingerlet’.
(23) Which is almost a skin plague. Another explanation of the word is: One glistening (with unsteady eyes), albino (Jast.)
(24) , a black earthenware pot.
(25) Because Scripture says: Do not drink wine nor strong drink (Lev. X, 9), and it continues: And that ye may put a difference between holy and unholy etc., thus service in that condition profanes, v. Zeb. 17b.
(26) Instead of mentioning it in connection with defects which are ‘not like the seed of Aaron’ and which do not render service in the Temple actually invalid.
(27) Who maintains that other things from which a man can become intoxicated have the same rule as drinking wine, which is explicitly stated (in Ker. 13b) as profaning the service.
(28) The name of a town in the lowland district of Judea. The figs which come from there are intoxicating.
(29) So Sh. Mek. cur. ‘or’.
(30) V. Ker. 13b and Sanh. 70b. The Mishnah therefore teaches us that only in the case of wine does he incur the guilt of excision, but with regard to other things which can make a man intoxicated, there is only a negative prohibition, derived from the text ‘And strong drink thou shalt not drink’.
(31) Viz., priests.
(32) Whereas a priest and his son may officiate in the Temple on the same day, in the case of an animal it is forbidden to sacrifice an animal and its young on the same day.
(33) Whereas a priest who is trefah etc. is fit to carry out his duties.
(34) Viz., a high priest who married a widow or a plain priest who married a divorcee or a woman released by halizah.
(35) I.e., until he divorces her.
(36) I.e., a male and his offspring must not officiate on the same day.
(37) Hul. 78b.
(38) The Palestine colleges.
(39) Not to derive any benefit from his wife till he divorces her.
(40) Lit., ‘descends’, sc. from the altar.
(41) We should not therefore permit him to perform his duties in the Temple after making the vow in case he subsequently consents a wise man in order to nullify the vow.
(42) This being the case, the Sage, being informed of the reasons which prompted the vow, will not invalidate it.
(43) Before ten persons, and the wise man cannot invalidate a vow made in such circumstances without knowing the nature of the vow.

Talmud - Mas. Bechoroth 46a

on him and make it dependent on the wishes of the public.¹ Said Amemar: The law is as follows: Even according to him who holds that an interdict by vow imposed on a person in public can be invalidated, a vow made dependent on the wishes of the public cannot be invalidated. But this is only the case with a vow made for a secular purpose, whereas if made for a religious purpose, it can be invalidated,² a case in point being that of a teacher whom R. Aha prohibited by vow from teaching any longer because he maltreated the children, but whom Rabina reinstated, as there was not to be found one who taught so efficiently.

AND ONE WHO MAKES HIMSELF UNEFFECT THROUGH THE DEAD etc. What is the difference between the case here, where merely an undertaking suffices and there [where a priest contracts an illegal marriage] that we impose a votary prohibition on him? — There [in the latter case] his passion overpowers him.³

CHAPTER VIII

MISHNAH. THERE IS ONE WHO IS [COUNTED AS] A FIRSTBORN [WITH RESPECT TO] INHERITANCE⁴ BUT NOT WITH RESPECT TO REDEMPTION FROM A PRIEST;⁵ A FIRST-BORN WITH RESPECT TO REDEMPTION FROM A PRIEST BUT NOT A FIRST-BORN [WITH RESPECT] TO INHERITANCE; A FIRSTBORN [WITH RESPECT BOTH] TO INHERITANCE AND TO REDEMPTION FROM A PRIEST; AND [AS] A FIRST-BORN [IN RESPECT NEITHER] TO INHERITANCE NOR REDEMPTION FROM A PRIEST. WHICH IS A FIRST-BORN [IN RESPECT] OF INHERITANCE BUT NOT OF REDEMPTION FROM A

(1) We urge him to vow not to derive any benefit from his wife without the consent of the public and the public of course we assume wish him to observe his vow, (Rashi Git. 36a) so as to be free of the illegal union. Tosaf. explains that he must vow with obligation to at least three members of the public whose names must be specified, although they are not present. But if he vowed without explicitly mentioning the names of at least three of the public, then the vow is of no importance.

(2) As we assume that public opinion would be agreeable to this.

(3) Therefore we do not merely rely on an undertaking that he will divorce her but there must be a votary prohibition forbidding any benefit to be derived from her. But where this consideration is absent, we rely on an undertaking given by him.

(4) Receiving a double share.

(5) Who receives five sela's for the redemption.

(6) In a case of twins, one a non-viable child and the other a viable one, where the former put forth its head alive and withdrew it and its companion anticipated it in coming out, the latter child is considered a first-born with the privileges of inheritance, the former not having prejudiced it in this respect. For although the emergence of the head of an embryo is considered a genuine birth, yet since Scripture calls the first-born who inherits: The beginning of his strength (Deut. XXI, 17) which is interpreted to mean, a child over whose death his father’s heart is grieved, and since the untimely birth cannot live, the condition of inheritance i.e., being a first-born over which a father grieves. does not exist. The latter offspring, however, is exempted from the redemption from a priest, for what matters here is the opening of the womb, and this was done by the first offspring.

(7) And was then withdrawn, the companion coming out subsequently. The first offspring therefore exempts the latter from redemption, but since it is dead, the latter offspring is the first-born as regards inheritance.
The discharge is regarded as the opening of the womb to release the second offspring from redemption, but it is of no importance as regards inheritance.

And if not, the offspring which follows is a first-born also as regards redemption, for only the issue of the actual form of a human being is considered an opening of the womb exempting succeeding offspring from the law of redemption.

Not having any shape of limbs whatever.

There is no placenta except there be an embryo, only it has become mashed.

Together with its sac.

Limb by limb, but since the whole came forth, it is regarded as an opening of the womb. But if the head of the infant alone came forth by pieces, this is not considered an opening of the womb if its companion came forth afterwards before the majority of the limbs and pieces managed to emerge, and the latter offspring is regarded also as a first-born to be redeemed from a priest.

The infant in this case is a first-born in respect of inheritance but not of redemption, since the right of inheritance is determined by the father, Scripture saying: ‘The beginning of his strength’, whereas for redemption it is the opening of the womb which is necessary.

Since he did not have children previously, the present infant is a first-born as regards inheritance, but is not a first-born to be released by redemption. as the Hebrew woman, the gentile woman and the maid-servant have already had children.

Ex. XIII, 2.

It is only then that its birth is considered an opening of the womb to exempt future offspring from the law of redemption. The children therefore born when the woman was a gentile or a slave are not accounted as opening the womb.

Together with her husband and she gave birth, her offspring is regarded as a first-born to be redeemed by the priest, since the opening of the womb was of Israel, after the parents came under the influence of the law of Israel, but not as a first-born in respect of inheritance, since the conception of the infant was not in holiness and it is not therefore eligible for inheritance.

If an Israelite woman giving birth for the first time and a priestess giving birth for the first time had their offspring mixed and it was not known which was the child of the Israelite. The offspring of a priest is exempt from the law of redemption.

A daughter of a Levite or a Levite's wife is also exempted from redeeming a son.

If the child of a woman who had already given birth previously was mixed up with a first-born infant, and the latter could not be identified, we are here informed that the husband of the woman who gave birth for the first time is yet obliged to give five sela's redemption money to the priest, for at all events he has a first-born male son somewhere, whereas in the case of inheritance as he does not know who is the first-born, there can therefore be no first-born privileges of inheritance.

When he grows up, he redeems himself.

Because it is not know whose first-born he is and from what inheritance he should take a double portion.

Talmud - Mas. Bechoroth 46b

GEMARA. Said Samuel: [The putting forth of] the head of an untimely birth does not release [the offspring which follows from redemption from a priest]. What is the reason? [Scripture says]: All in whose nostrils was the breath of life, that wherever there is the breath of life in the nostrils, the head is of importance. [exempting the successor from redemption] but otherwise, the head is not considered of importance. We have learnt: ONE WHO FOLLOWS AN UNTIMELY BIRTH WHOSE HEAD CAME FORTH ALIVE OR ONE BORN IN THE NINTH MONTH WHOSE HEAD CAME FORTH DEAD. At all events the Mishnah says: ‘WHOSE HEAD’? — ‘WHOSE HEAD means its greater part. Why then not say its greater part? — By rights [the Tanna of our Mishnah] should have stated ‘its greater part’. But as he had to state in the second clause OR ONE BORN IN THE NINTH MONTH WHOSE HEAD CAME FORTH DEAD, and he wishes to argue that the reason is because its head was dead but that if its head was alive, the one who follows is not even a first-born [with the privileges] of inheritance, he therefore also states in the first clause ‘WHOSE HEAD’. Now what then does the Mishnah inform us? That since he put forth his head it is considered a birth. But have we not learnt this already: If the embryo put forth its head, although he withdrew it again, it is considered a birth? And should you reply that [the Tanna] teaches us this ruling separately both for the case of an animal and for that of a human being, because we do not infer the case of a human being from that of an animal, as the latter has no forepart of female genitals, and again we do not infer the case of an animal from that of a human being, as the latter's full face is important — have we not learnt this too in a Mishnah: If an infant came forth in the natural way, [it is not considered a birth] till the greater part of its head comes forth? And what is the greater part of its head? When its forehead comes forth. Shall we then say that this confutes Samuel? — It is indeed a refutation.

Said R. Simeon b. Lakish: The emergence of forehead is regarded as birth in all cases except in that of inheritance. What is the reason? — But he shall acknowledge the first-born, says the Divine Law. But R. Johanan says: Even as regards inheritance. What does ‘in all cases’ imply? — It implies what our Rabbis have taught: In the case of a proselyte woman, if the forehead of her infant came forth from the womb when she was a heathen and she subsequently became a proselyte, we do not subject her to periods of impurity and purity and she does not bring the offering for confinement.

An objection was raised. Scripture says: But he shall acknowledge, [this intimates] the recognition of the face. And what is a recognizable face? The full face with the nose! — Read: ‘Unto the nose’. Come and hear: Evidence may not be given [in identification of a corpse] save by [proof afforded by] the face with the nose, Read: Unto the nose. Come and hear: No evidence may be given [by identification of] the forehead without the face or the face without the forehead; it must be by both together with the nose. And Abaye said, or as some say, R. Kahana: Where is the scriptural authority for this? Scripture says: The show of their countenance doth witness against them. It is different with regard to testimony on behalf of a woman, as the Rabbis made the law stringent in her case. But have the Rabbis indeed made it stringent? Have we not learnt: If they were generally presumed established to permit a woman to re-marry on the evidence of a witness testifying to what he heard from an eye-witness, or from a woman, from a slave or a bondwoman — The Rabbis were only lenient in the end but were not lenient in the beginning. And if you prefer [another solution] I may say:

(1) If an embryo in its eighth month put forth its head alive and withdrew it and its twin companion then anticipated it in coming forth, the latter is a firstborn to be redeemed from the priest, because a non-viable birth does not exempt its successor from redemption until the head and the greater part of the body came forth.

(2) Gen. VII, 22.

(3) Rashi in his interpretation appears to divide the text as follows: Wherever there is a breath of life i.e. a viable birth, then go after its head (having also the meaning of face, Jast.), regarding the head of importance. but if it is a non-viable birth its head is of no importance for exempting its successor from redemption.

(4) Implying that an untimely birth releases his successor from redemption with the putting forth of the head, thus contradicting the opinion of Samuel.

(5) But where only the embryo's head emerged, it does not exempt the one who follows from redemption from a priest.

(6) And here he could not have stated ‘its greater part’ for the reason that follows.

(7) Now if the Tanna of the Mishnah had said ‘its greater part came forth dead’ in the second clause, I should have inferred that if the greater part came forth alive then the latter offspring would not even be a first-born in respect of inheritance, but I could not have deduced that where the head came forth alive the latter offspring loses the privilege of inheritance, which is a well-established rule. It is therefore for this reason that both in the first and second clauses mention is only made of the head, although in the second clause itself the ‘head’ means the head together with the greater part of the body.

(8) If the Mishnah means specifically the head and so teaches us that the head of an untimely birth releases the offspring which follows from redemption, in the second clause it mentions the head on account of the first clause. But if you maintain that the mention of the head in the first clause is not strictly meant, since the head does not release from redemption in the case of non-viable births, then from the second clause we are enabled to make the following inference: The reason why it is not a first-born of inheritance is because its head came forth dead, but if the head came forth alive the successor is not a first-born as regards inheritance, for since an embryo in the ninth month is not an untimely birth, the emergence of the head, even if it is again withdrawn, is considered a genuine birth.

(9) And therefore the ritual slaughtering of the mother does not make the offspring permissible to be eaten, Hul. 68a.
(10) That the coming forth of the head constitutes a birth.
(11) As in the Mishnah in Hul.
(12) As in the Mishnah above.
(13) Lit., ‘ante-chamber’. Its vagina does not lie between the feet and therefore the coming forth of the head is accounted a birth, for it is open, whereas in the case of a woman, since the legs cover it, the putting forth of the head is not accounted a birth.
(14) That the putting forth of the head of a human being is regarded as a birth.
(15) I.e., the head coming first and not the legs.
(16) And although the head was withdrawn, and the infant is not born till the next day, we count the period of pure and impure days from the first day when the forehead came forth (Nid. 28a). Therefore there is no need even in the second clause of the Mishnah to teach us that the putting forth of the head in a human being constitutes a birth, as this is already stated in the Mishnah in Niddah. Why then does the first clause in our Mishnah say ‘its head’? Therefore it must not be on account of the second clause, and the reference to the head in the first clause is meant to be taken exactly. Therefore we can deduce from this clause that the emergence of the head of a non-viable birth is considered a birth, exempting the offspring which follows from redemption, contrary to the opinion of Samuel (R. Gershom).

(17) As assuredly the reference to the head in the first clause is meant to be taken in its exact sense.
(18) Lit., ‘the forehead exempts’.
(19) I.e., the one who follows is the first-born with the privileges of inheritance, unless the face of the first infant came forth (Rashi).
(20) Deut. XXI, 17. And where only the forehead comes forth, the face is not ‘recognized’, the literal meaning of בְּי הַגְּדנה.
(21) The coming forth of the forehead is regarded as a birth even for this purpose.
(22) Before the face and the other part of the body came forth.
(23) The period when discharges of blood make her impure and the period when such discharges do not make her impure. The reason is because the putting forth of the forehead is regarded as a birth and therefore she was confined when she was a heathen, in which state she is not subject to the laws of confinement. Tosaf. observes that R. Simeon b. Lakish needed to inform us that he agrees with the Baraita. For you might have thought that although the putting forth of the head is regarded as a birth, the coming forth of the rest of the body, when the mother is already a proselyte, should also be regarded as a birth and therefore she should be subject to the laws of confinement.
(24) Whoever's face is first recognized is the firstborn as regards inheritance.
(25) There is consequently here a difficulty regarding R. Johanan's view, for we see that the putting forth of the forehead alone is not regarded as a birth.
(26) Of a dead husband, so that the woman can re-marry.
(27) Yeb. 120a.
(28) Isa. III,9. Scripture therefore teaches us that the showing of the full face is alone counted as an identification. There is again a difficulty here as regards R. Johanan's opinion.
(29) To declare her a widow and enable her to marry again.
(30) And therefore the full face must be recognized, but elsewhere, as in in the case of a birth, only the forehead might be sufficient.
(31) Yeb. 86b, 122a.
(32) Once the body of the husband is claimed to have been clearly identified, the Sages were lenient as regards who gave the evidence to that effect.
(33) The actual identification of the dead husband must be clear beyond the peradventure of a doubt.
[The phrase] ‘But he shall acknowledge’ is one thing\(^1\) and the phrase ‘The show of their countenance’ is another.\(^2\)

It has been stated: If he had children while he was a heathen and he became a proselyte, R. Johanan says: He cannot have a first-born [with the privileges of] inheritance, whereas R. Simeon b. Lakish says: He can have a first-born with respect to inheritance. R. Johanan holds that he cannot have a first-born with respect to inheritance, for he already had ‘the beginning of his strength’, whereas R. Simeon b. Lakish says that he can have a first-born [now] with the privilege of inheritance, because a stranger who became a proselyte is like a newly-born child. And they both follow their own line of reasoning elsewhere. For it has been stated: If he had children while he was a heathen and he became a proselyte, R. Johanan says: He cannot have a first-born with respect to inheritance, whereas R. Simeon b. Lakish says: He can have a first-born with respect to inheritance.

And it is necessary [to state both these instances where R. Johanan and R. Simeon differ]. For if [the difference of opinion between them] had been stated only in the first case,\(^5\) we might have said that only there does R. Simeon b. Lakish hold that he can have a first-born as regards inheritance because heathens are not legal heirs,\(^6\) but here we might have thought that he agrees with R. Johanan that [we apply] ‘He hath created it not in vain, he formed it to be inhabited’, for he has helped to people the earth [by the children he had previously]. And if [the difference of opinion between them] had been stated only in the second case,\(^7\) we might have said that only in that case does R. Johanan hold this opinion, but with reference to the first case [of inheritance] we might have thought that he agreed with R. Simeon b. Lakish. It was therefore necessary [to mention that they differ in both instances].

We have learnt: IF ONE WHO NEVER HAD CHILDREN BEFORE, MARRIED A WOMAN WHO HAD ALREADY GIVEN BIRTH PREVIOUSLY OR ONE WHO HAD GIVEN BIRTH WHEN SHE WAS A BONDWOMAN BUT IS NOW FREED, OR ONE WHO GAVE BIRTH WHEN SHE WAS A HEATHEN AND HAS SINCE BECOME A PROSELYTE, AND IF WHEN SHE CAME TO THE ISRAELITE SHE BORE A FIRST-BORN THE INFANT IS CONSIDERED A FIRST-BORN [WITH RESPECT] TO INHERITANCE BUT NOT A FIRST-BORN TO BE REDEEMED FROM A PRIEST. Now from whom did she give birth?\(^8\) Shall I say from an Israelite who had no children? Why then should [the Mishnah] mention a proselyte and a bondwoman,\(^9\) since this would be the case even with a daughter of Israel?\(^10\) Then\(^11\) you must say that she gave birth from a stranger who had children and became a proselyte; and yet it says: THE INFANT IS A FIRST-BORN [WITH RESPECT] TO INHERITANCE, [which confutes R. Johanan's opinion]! — No. I may still say that [the Mishnah] means that she gave birth from an Israelite who had no children,\(^12\) and it has to inform us that the infant is not a first-born to be released by redemption, to exclude the ruling of R. Jose the Galilean who said: THE INFANT IS BOTH A FIRST-BORN WITH RESPECT TO INHERITANCE AND ALSO ONE WHO MUST BE REDEEMED FROM A PRIEST, BECAUSE IT IS SAID IN THE SCRIPTURES: OPENETH THE WOMB AMONG THE CHILDREN OF ISRAEL\(^13\) [IMPLIED] UNTIL THE OPENING OF THE WOMB IS OF [THE CHILDREN OF] ISRAEL. [The Mishnah] therefore informs us that it is not so.

Come and hear: If he had children when he was a heathen and he became a proselyte, the infant has the status of a first-born [with respect to inheritance]?\(^14\) — Said Rabina, or, as some say, R. Aha b. Raba: This\(^15\) is certainly the opinion of R. Jose the Galilean, who holds: [Scripture says] ‘WHOSOEVER OPENETH THE WOMB, UNTIL THE OPENING OF THE WOMB IS OF THE CHILDREN OF ISRAEL, and we infer the case of the husband from that of the woman.¹⁶

R. Adda b. Ahabah said: If a Levite's daughter gave birth, her son is not subject to the law of redemption [from a priest] with five sela's. Now from whom did she conceive? Shall I say that she conceived from a priest or a Levite? Why then mention a Levite's daughter, since this is the case even with an Israelite's daughter?¹⁷ Again you should say that she conceived from an Israelite. But is it not written: After their families, by house of their fathers?¹⁸ — Said R. Papa: The case here then is where she conceived from a gentile.¹⁹ And you should not say that this holds good only for him who maintains that the child is not rejected [as the child of a gentile];¹²¹ but even according to him who holds that the child is rejected, the son of a Levite's daughter is exempted, for it is called an unfit Levite.²² Mar son of R. Joseph reported in the name of Raba: I may say still [that the Levite's daughter] conceived from an Israelite, and the case is different there [with reference to redemption from a priest], as Scripture says: ‘Whatsoever openeth the womb’: the Law makes it depend on the opening of the womb.²³

We have learnt: IF ONE HAD CHILDREN ALREADY AND MARRIED A WOMAN WHO HAD NEVER GIVEN BIRTH PREVIOUSLY, OR IF SHE BECAME A PROSELYTE WHEN PREGNANT OR WAS FREED WHEN PREGNANT AND SHE GAVE BIRTH, OR [IF CONFUSION AROSE BETWEEN] HER AND A PRIESTESS, BETWEEN HER AND A LEVITE'S DAUGHTER, BETWEEN HER AND A WOMAN WHO HAD ALREADY GIVEN BIRTH; AND LIKewise IF A WOMAN WHO DID NOT WAIT THREE MONTHS AFTER HER HUSBAND'S DEATH MARRIED AND GAVE BIRTH AND IT IS NOT KNOWN IF THE INFANT WAS BORN IN THE NINTH MONTH AFTER THE DEATH OF THE FIRST HUSBAND OR IN THE SEVENTH MONTH SINCE SHE MARRIED THE SECOND, THE CHILD IS A FIRST-BORN TO BE REDEEMED BY A PRIEST BUT NOT A FIRST-BORN [WITH RESPECT] TO INHERITANCE. We infer from this that the priestess and the Levite's daughter are not subject to the law of redemption.²⁴ Now from whom did she conceive? Shall I say that she conceived from a priest or a Levite? Why mention [in the Mishnah] the cases of a priestess and a Levite's daughter, since the case is the same with a daughter of an Israelite?²⁵ Again you should say that she conceived from a gentile. But is a priestess [in such circumstances] exempt [from redeeming her son]? Has not R. Papa said: Raba examined us [in laws] as follows: ‘If a priestess conceived from a gentile, what is the ruling’?²⁶ And I answered him: ‘Is this not analogous to the ruling of R. Adda b. Ahaba Who said: If a Levite's daughter gave birth, her son is not subject to the law of redemption with five sela's’?²⁷ And he said to me: But is the analogy correct? This is no difficulty as regards the case of a Levite's daughter, for she retains her sacred status.²⁸ For it has been taught: If a Levite's daughter was made a captive or if she had intercourse of a licentious character, we nevertheless give her of the tithe and she may eat.²⁹ But in the case of a priestess, as soon as she has intercourse with a gentile, she becomes a 'stranger'³⁰ This might be right according to Mar son of R. Joseph who said³¹ that the Levite's daughter conceived from an Israelite; we can then explain that the Mishnah also refers to a case where the priestess conceived from an Israelite. But according to R. Papa,³² how will you explain the Mishnah? — I may still say that she conceived from a priest, she herself however being a daughter of an Israelite³⁴ and the reason why [the Mishnah] describes her as a priestess is because her son is a priest.³⁵

---

¹¹ Since it does not mention ‘Countenance’ (םָכַל) therefore even the coming forth of the forehead is an identification of birth for purposes of inheritance.
²² Since Scripture adds here ‘countenance’ (םָכַל) this shows that the full face is required in the case of identification.
³⁴ Isa. XLV, 18. And this he has carried out through the children he has already had.
³⁵ That of inheritance.
³⁶ For heathens are not legal inheritors of their fathers’ estates after becoming proselytes (Rashi). Tosaf. explains that a heathen can also inherit his father's estate according to biblical law (v. Kid. 17b) and that the Gemara here means that a heathen does not come under the law of the first-born.
(7) Where a gentile has children and he becomes a proselyte.
(8) For the Mishnah says that if she gave birth when she came to the Israelite, the infant was a first-born as regards inheritance.
(9) Implying that the reason why the offspring was a first-born for inheritance was because the children born when she was a gentile were of no account legally.
(10) Where the children born previously are considered genuine children. The infant born now would still be a first-born of inheritance because in the case of inheritance the matter depends on the father, and not on the mother, and as far as he is concerned this infant is his first-born, ‘the beginning of his strength’.
(11) The expression AND WHEN SHE CAME TO THE ISRAELITE SHE BORE A FIRST-BORN does not then refer to an Israelite who had no children, but is a separate statement meaning that if a heathen woman had had children and then together with her husband became a proselyte and gave birth to an infant after having come under the influence of Jewish law, it is regarded as a first-born for inheritance.
(12) And there is, as you say, no need for the Mishnah to mention particularly the case of a proselyte as regards inheritance. But it wishes to teach us that the infant is not a first-born to be released from redemption, thus informing us that the previous children are considered as having opened the womb.
(13) Ex. XIII, 2.
(14) This is therefore a confutation of R. Johanan's opinion.
(15) The Baraitha which states that the child is a first-born for inheritance.
(16) That just as in the case of a woman, the previous children do not count legally and therefore the infant is regarded as a first-born and as opening the womb, so in the case of the husband as regards inheritance, the previous children do not count legally and thus this infant is the first-born for inheritance.
(17) Supra 3b, where it says that priests and Levites are exempt from redeeming their first-born.
(18) Num. I, 2. Thus we go after the family of the father but not after that of the mother, and as the father is an Israelite, why is she exempt from redeeming her son?
(19) Who possesses no legal relationship, and it is therefore more appropriate in this case to go after the mother than after the father who is a gentile. We therefore exempt her son from the law of redemption.
(20) Of a marriage between a gentile and a Hebrew woman.
(21) As it is considered legitimate, for we go after the mother, and therefore the son of a Levite's daughter is obviously exempted from the law of redemption. There is a difference of opinion on the subject recorded in Yeb. 45a.
(22) For although we go after the father and the child is not considered legitimate, the son is yet exempt from the law of redemption, for in this matter we go after the mother (R. Gershom) and the child is considered a disqualified Levite.
(23) I.e., on the mother, in the matter of redemption. Tosaf. observes that we accept as binding the opinion of Mar b. Rab Joseph and that therefore the son of a Levite's daughter or of a priestess who is the wife of an Israelite is exempt from the law of redemption.
(24) For the Mishnah informs us of a new point that although there had been a mixing of the two children and one is subject to redemption and the other exempt, it is the parent whose child is subject to redemption who must give the priest the redemption money and not the priestess or Levite's daughter. The questioner is for the present under the impression that the ‘priestess’ of the Mishnah means the daughter of a priest.
(25) For since the father is a priest or a Levite, her son is exempt from redemption, even if she be an Israelite's daughter.
(26) Is her son exempt from redemption or not?
(27) And just as a Levite's daughter is exempt from redeeming her son, similarly a priestess is also exempt.
(28) Although she had intercourse with a gentile. And therefore when we ‘cast’ her son after her, he is like an unfit Levite who is exempt from redemption.
(29) Referring to the first tithe, which is eaten by the Levites.
(30) Yeb. 91a.
(31) Scripture says: And the priest's daughter be married to a stranger, (Lev. XXII, 12) from which we infer (Yeb. 68a) that as soon as she has intercourse with one unfit to marry her, she becomes disqualified from consecrated objects. But a Levite's daughter in similar circumstances is only debarred from marrying a priest and eating terumah (v. Glos.), but she retains her status of belonging to the Levite community. And since the priestess here is regarded as a ‘stranger’, her son is subject to the law of redemption, like an Israelite. Consequently one cannot explain that the Mishnah refers to a case where she conceived from a gentile.
(32) Above, in his explanation of the ruling of R. Adda b. Ahabah.
(33) Who explained the ruling of R. Adda to refer to a Levite's daughter who conceived from a gentile.
(34) And not the daughter of a priest.
(35) But a priest's daughter, unless she conceived from a priest, is not exempted from redeeming her first-born, because we do not go after the mother except in the case of a Levite's daughter who conceived from a gentile.

Talmud - Mas. Bechoroth 47b

It was stated: If a priest dies and leaves a son who is a halal1 R. Hisda said: The son is obliged to redeem himself;2 but Rabbah son of R. Huna said: The son is not obliged to redeem himself. ‘Wherever the father dies after thirty days [from the son's birth],3 all agree that the son is not obliged to redeem himself, for his father has acquired possession of his redemption [money].4 The point at issue however is where the father dies within the thirty days. R. Hisda says: The son is obliged to redeem himself, since the father did not acquire possession of his redemption.5 But Rabbah son of R. Huna said: The son is not obliged to redeem himself, for he can say to the priest: ‘I come on the strength of a man with whom you cannot go to law’.6

We have learnt: OR IF SHE BECAME A PROSELYTE WHEN PREGNANT,7 [THE INFANT] IS A FIRST-BORN TO BE REDEEMED FROM A PRIEST. But why so? Why cannot [the son] say [to the priest who claims]: ‘I come on the strength of a man [a gentile] with whom you cannot go to law’!8 The case of a heathen is different, because he has no legal relationship.9

It has been stated: R. Simeon Yasinia reported in the name of R. Simeon b. Lakish: If a priest dies within thirty days [of the birth of his child] and leaves a son who is a halal, the son is obliged to redeem himself, for the father did not acquire possession of his redemption. If he dies, however, after thirty days [from the son's birth] the son is not obliged to redeem himself, for the father acquired possession of his redemption and the son inherited the redemption money.

AND LIKewise A WOMAN WHO DID NOT WAIT THREE MONTHS AFTER HER HUSBAND'S DEATH etc. [The Mishnah says that] he is not a first-born inheritance, implying however that he takes his share as a plain son [i.e., a non first-born]. But why should this be so? Let him go to [the sons] of this one10 and they can reject [his claim]11 and let him go to the sons of the other and they too can reject his claim?12 — Said R. Jeremiah: It would not have been necessary [for the Mishnah] to mention this13 except for the case of the one who follows him,14 the meaning being as follows: He is a first-born to be redeemed from a priest15 and the one who follows him is not a first-born for inheritance.16 But let [both the doubtful son and the one who follows him] write out the power of attorney to each other?17 And should you say that the Mishnah [which says that he is not a first-born of inheritance] refers to a case where no power of attorney was given, is not [the Mishnah] explained later [in this chapter] as referring to a case where a power of attorney was written out, [thus proving that the power of attorney here does not help at all]? — [The Mishnah] supports the opinion of R. Jannai. For R. Jannai says: If the children [belonging to two women and two husbands] were identified in the beginning but in the end became mixed, they can write out a power of attorney to each other,18 but if they were not identified in the beginning and in the end became mixed, they cannot write out a power of attorney to each other.19

REDEMPTION FROM A PRIEST. NEITHER A FOETUS EXTRACTED BY MEANS OF THE CAESAREAN SECTION\(^{23}\) NOR THE INFANT WHICH FOLLOWS\(^{24}\) IS EITHER A FIRST-BORN FOR INHERITANCE OR A FIRST-BORN TO BE REDEEMED FROM A PRIEST. R. SIMEON HOWEVER SAYS: THE FIRST\(^{25}\) IS A FIRST-BORN OF INHERITANCE AND THE SECOND IS A FIRST-BORN AS REGARDS THE REDEMPTION WITH FIVE SELA'S.

GEMARA. The first is not a first-born of inheritance because the condition required by Scripture is: And they have borne him,\(^{26}\) It is also not a first-born [as regards redemption] with five sela's because the condition required [by Scripture] is: Openeth the womb.\(^{27}\) The second offspring is not a first-born of inheritance because the condition required [by Scripture] is: ‘The first-fruits of his strength’. He is also not a first-born as regards redemption with five sela's because [the Tanna in the Mishnah] holds: A firstborn in one respect only [i.e., as regards the womb alone] is not considered a [legal] first-born.

R. SIMEON HOWEVER SAYS: THE FIRST IS A FIRST-BORN FOR INHERITANCE AND THE SECOND IS A FIRST-BORN AS REGARDS REDEMPTION WITH FIVE SELA'S. R. Simeon here follows his line of reasoning elsewhere,\(^{28}\) when he said: [Scripture says], But if she bear,\(^{29}\) intimating the inclusion of a foetus extracted by means of the caesarean section. And the second is a first-born as regards redemption with five sela's because he holds: A firstborn in one respect only is considered a [legal] first-born.\(^{30}\)

---

\(^{1}\) Lit., ‘profane’. One unfit for the priesthood on account of his father's illegitimate connection.

\(^{2}\) Because he is on a par with an Israelite and is therefore subject to the law of the first-born.

\(^{3}\) The period from which redemption of a first-born takes place, Scripture saying: And those that are to be redeemed from a month (Num. XVIII, 16).

\(^{4}\) For even if the father had set aside the five sela's, being a priest he could have taken them for himself. Since therefore his father acquired the redemption money he leaves it to his son, together with his other estate.

\(^{5}\) For since he died before the redemption was due, his father did not acquire the redemption money at all so that the son might inherit it.

\(^{6}\) ‘Because if my father were alive, you could not claim the five sela's. For if he died within the thirty days of my birth, there is no obligation to redeem, and if after the thirty days, then my father acquired possession of the redemption money, seeing that he was a priest himself and I have inherited it. Consequently coming in his place. I claim exemption’.

\(^{7}\) And she had never born children previously.

\(^{8}\) Since a gentile is not subject to the law of the first-born.

\(^{9}\) As far as the first-born is concerned the heathen father has no legal relationship, because a proselyte is considered as a newly-born child, and therefore it is not a case of claiming on his behalf.

\(^{10}\) E.g., of the first husband.

\(^{11}\) Maintaining that he is a son of the second husband.

\(^{12}\) The children of the second husband can assert that he was the son of the first. Why therefore does the Mishnah imply that he at least receives his share as an ordinary son, even if not as a first-born?

\(^{13}\) That he is not a first-born for inheritance.

\(^{14}\) The son concerning whom there is a doubt whether he was born in the ninth month of the first husband or in the seventh month of the second husband does not even receive the portion of an ordinary son, for each of the sons on both sides can reject his claim. The Mishnah here however refers to the son who follows the doubtful one.

\(^{15}\) The doubtful son in any case has opened the womb and is therefore a first-born in this respect, to be redeemed later by himself.

\(^{16}\) Because his other brothers can say to him that the doubtful son was the son of their father and that therefore the one who follows is not the first-born.

\(^{17}\) Concerning the share of each so that the doubtful son can claim the first-born's share in either case, as follows: ‘If I am a first-born then give it to me for my own sake, and if my brother is a first-born, then give it to me for my brother's sake’, because one of the two must be a first-born.

\(^{18}\) When they all come to inherit, each can reject the claim of the other, maintaining that he is not his brother. They therefore write out a power of attorney to each other, and approach the inheritors of the two fathers and say to each of them: ‘If I am your brother, give me my share, and if this one is your brother, give me his share’.

(19) And the Mishnah here also refers to a case where the children who became mixed were never originally identified as to who was the first-born, so that no-one acquired any claim on the estate as a first-born. This therefore confirms the opinion of R. Jannai, v. B.B. 127a.

(20) Receiving a double share of the estate.

(21) Because fish and locusts are not regarded as offspring because Scripture in Genesis does not use in connection with them the expression ‘he formed’ יָכַד, as it does in connection with man.

(22) Because until the morrow of the fortieth day of conception the foetus is considered as mere water, an embryo taking more than forty days to form.

(23) Lit., ‘one who is brought out from the side’ (of his mother).

(24) By way of the womb.

(25) The foetus extracted by means of the caesarean section.

(26) Impliedly that in the case of inheritance the offspring must be born in the normal way, by way of the womb (Deut. XXI, 15).

(27) Ex. XIII, 2.

(28) In Nid. 40a where it says that one born by means of the caesarean section is regarded as a genuine birth, for which the mother must observe the pure and impure periods of confinement. Therefore when it says: And they have borne etc., a caesarean birth is also regarded as a genuine birth, this being inferred from the former case.

(29) Lev. XII, 5.

(30) As for example here, the second offspring is only the first-born of the womb and is yet considered a legal first-born, whereas the first offspring, although it is the first of the males and the offspring, is nevertheless not considered a genuine first-born, as a primary condition is absent, i.e., that of being the first to open the womb, Scripture making a legal first-born depend on the opening of the womb.

Talmud - Mas. Bechoroth 48a

GEMARA. When did the father die? Shall I say that he died after thirty days [from the offspring's birth]? Would R. Meir say in this case that when they have divided up [the property] they are exempt from the five sela's? [How can this be] seeing that the property is mortgaged to the priest [for the five selas]? Then you must say that he died within the thirty days. What then is the reason why where they have divided up [the property the sons are exempt]? [Presumably] because if he [the priest] goes to one, his claim can be rejected, and if he goes to the other, his claim can again be rejected! Why then should not the same apply to the case where they did not divide up the property, for if [the priest] goes to one, his claim can be rejected and if he goes to the other, his claim can be rejected? — Said R. Jeremiah: This proves that if there were two men of the name of Joseph b. Simeon in one city and they purchased a field in partnership, a creditor can claim it from them, for he can say to either: ‘If my claim is against you, I am taking your maneh, and if my claim is against your friend, I am taking the maneh of your friend’. Said Raba: Let us see. A man's property is surety for him. Can there be a case where one is not able to claim against a man himself and can yet make a claim on his surety?

Have we not learnt: If one loans money to his neighbour through a surety, he cannot collect from the surety. And it was established by us that the expression ‘He cannot collect’ meant that he cannot collect first from the surety?" But no, said Raba. I may still say that he [the father] died after thirty days; and if there is much property, then indeed [the priest] takes his due. The case before us, however, is one in which e.g., there are only five sela's. Now all the authorities concerned agree with the ruling of R. Assi. For R. Assi said: After the brothers [heirs] have divided up the estate, with regards to a half of it they are considered as heirs and with regards the other half, they are considered purchasers from one another. Moreover, all agree that a [pecuniary] obligation arising from a rule of the Torah

(1) Since one of them must be a first-born.
(2) From redeeming the survivor with five sela's, as he can maintain that it was the first-born which died and the priest is in the position of a claimant. A similar exemption applies to the surviving son, and the reason why the Mishnah refers to the father is because it wishes to mention in a later clause: IF THE FATHER DIES etc.
(3) I.e., they cannot demand the return of the five sela's as they are legally bound to pay the redemption money which is considered a debt on the property. Lit., ‘they have given’.
(4) As perhaps the female came forth first. The priest being the claimant, it is for him to prove that the male came forth first.
(5) When the obligation of redemption commenced.
(6) Since it is a real debt.
(7) Saying: ‘I am not the first-born but my brother’.
(8) Against one of whom a man produces a note of indebtedness and each of them declares that the other and not he is the debtor.
(9) And here also the priest seizes the five sela's, his debt, from the joint property and says to them: ‘If you are the first-born, I am taking from your portion, and if your brother is the first-born, I am taking from his portion, and you can settle the matter among yourselves’.
(10) It can be attached.
(11) B.B. 174a.
(12) Until he claims from the debtor and the latter has not the means to pay. We therefore say that the first claim is on the debtor. Here, since the father died within the thirty days of the offspring's birth, the priest's claim cannot be made on the actual debtor, and therefore it cannot be made on his surety, i.e., his property.
(13) Because the property was pledged for the five sela's during the father's life-time, and although the loan is only verbal, the priest can claim from the heirs if there is sufficient inheritance to meet the debt.
(14) For there is a doubt whether we accept the principle of bererah i.e., whether a subsequent disposal has or has not a retrospective legal effect (v. Glos.) and consequently whether after having divided the estate the brothers stand to each other in the relation of co-heirs, or of vendees, each one having so to speak bought the share that fell to him from the other. Therefore in the case here, as we are in doubt, when the estate is subsequently divided up, we maintain that a half which the sons receive is as if they had received it at the beginning, their status being that of inheritors.
(15) In case we do not accept the principle of bererah.
(16) E.g., the duty of redeeming the first-born, valuation and civil damages. Tosaf. adds that this refers only to cases where without a specific command of the Torah, I might not have imposed any liability.

Talmud - Mas. Bechoroth 48b is not on a par with an obligation in a note. Again, all agree with the ruling of R. Papa. For R. Papa said: One can claim repayment of a verbal loan from the heirs but not from the purchasers. And the point at issue here is whether the [biblical] five sela's rules out a half of five sela's [as a redemption]. R. Meir holds: Scripture says five sela's, thus ruling out a half of five sela's whereas R. Judah holds: Five sela's and even a half of five sela's. If this be the case, why does [the Mishnah say], R. JUDAH HOWEVER SAYS: THERE IS A CLAIM ON THE PROPERTY? Should it not read as follows: ‘There is a claim on the person’? And moreover it has been taught: R. Judah says: After the brothers [the heirs] have divided up the property, if there are ten zuz for one and ten zuz for the other, they must be redeemed from the priest, but if not, they are exempt. Now what does R. Judah mean by the expression ‘ten zuz for one and ten zuz for the other’? Shall I say that he refers to both the portion [that comes to them] as inheritance and to that part in regard to which the heirs are considered vendes? If this be the case, why does R. Judah mention ten zuz, for the same also applies to less than ten zuz? Then he certainly means that there are ten zuz [coming] as inheritance to one and ten zuz [coming] as inheritance to the other. Consequently we see that he holds that the [biblical] five sela's excludes [redemption with] half the five sela's! Rather [explain thus]: All the authorities concerned agree that the five sela's [of redemption] excludes [a redemption] with half of five sela's, and here they differ on the points raised by R. Assi and R. Papa.

Some report this [whole argument] in connection with the latter clause [in our Mishnah as follows]. R. JUDAH SAYS: THERE IS A CLAIM ON THE PROPERTY. Now when did the father die? Shall I say that he died after thirty days? This would imply that R. Meir holds that when the property is divided up they are exempt from redemption. But is not the property pledged for redemption? Then we must say that he died within thirty days. But why then does R. Judah make the survivor liable to redemption, for if the priest goes to one his claim can be rejected, and if he goes to the other, his claim can again be rejected? — Said R. Jeremiah: This proves that if there were two men of the name of Joseph b. Simeon in one city and one purchased a field from the other, a creditor can claim from him for he can say to him: ‘If my claim is against you, I am taking your maneh, and if the claim is against your friend, the property is pledged to me for the debt before your claim’. Said Raba: Now a man's property is surety for him etc., as in the first version.

GEMARA. What is the reason that in the case of two priests the redemption money cannot be recovered? Presumably because if he [the father] goes to one priest his claim can be rejected, and if he goes to the other his claim can again be rejected. Why then should we not apply the same principle to the case of one priest, so that if one father goes to the priest the latter can reject his demand [to return the money]? and if the other goes to the priest, the latter can also reject his demand? — Said Samuel:

(1) But is regarded as a verbal loan.
(2) Consequently the inheritors are exempt. For half of their share is considered as belonging to them as vendees and there is thus no inheritance left except two-and-a-half sela's, and the priest is not able to claim this, since a verbal loan cannot be claimed from property in the hands of the buyers.
(3) And the priest can therefore take the half which is considered as the inheritance.
(4) If you say that we are dealing here with the case where he died after the thirty days.
(5) The father. For since we are referring to a case where the father died after the thirty days when there was a duty upon him to redeem, it would have been more appropriate for R. Judah to declare there is a liability standing against the father which the survivors must discharge.
(6) And both the brothers are cases of doubtful first-born.
(7) I.e., two-and-a-half- sela's; a sela’ == four zuz.
(8) If there are not ten zuz for each survivor.
(9) And when R. Judah declares that they are obliged to be redeemed from the priest, he means from the portion of the inheritance, since you say that all hold the view of R. Assi and R. Papa. Consequently we infer from this that R. Judah maintains that one can redeem a first-born with even less than the statutory five sela's of the Bible.
(10) Even for example, if each brother had only eight zuz, making four sela's in all, of which the priest would receive two, as the other half is considered as property bought from each other, the law would be the same. Consequently what need is there for R. Judah to mention specially the figure of ten zuz, for, since the whole of the redemption money cannot be paid, a third or a fourth of the sum is also valid.
(11) Apart from the half of the property in regard to which they are considered vendees, making five sela's as the portion that comes to them as inheritance.
(12) R. Meir holds with both R. Assi and R. Papa, and as there is not more than five sela's altogether, the priest takes nothing. for the five sela's of the Bible is strictly meant and one cannot therefore effect redemption with less than this sum. As for R. Judah, if he agrees with R. Assi that in regard to half of the property they are considered vendees, and not with the opinion of R. Papa, that a verbal loan cannot be claimed from property in the hands of buyers. the priest takes the whole. And if he does not agree with the opinion of R. Assi, but holds that in regard to the entire property they are regarded as heirs, then, whether he agrees with R. Papa or not, the priest takes the whole of the five sela's. According to this explanation we therefore interpret the Baraitha as follows: If there are ten zuz altogether for each brother, they must give all their property for redemption, but if there is not property of the value of five sela's, the survivors are exempt from the duty of redemption, for the statutory five sela's exclude a redemption of less than this amount (Rashi).
(13) As here where R. Judah holds that heirs who have divided up the property are considered as buyers.
(14) To the end of the argumentation.
(15) Married to one husband.
(16) Because since one child died within thirty days of its birth, then clearly the child was an untimely birth and therefore the priest is is not entitled to receive redemption money (Rashi). According to Tosaf. 49a s.v. הַגְּהָה the reason why the money is returned is not because the child was a non-viable birth, for even if it was a viable birth, since it died within thirty days, there is exemption, the Torah making redemption of the first-born dependent on its being a month old.
(17) Because each priest can rebut the father's claim by declaring 'I am retaining the redemption money on account of the living child'.
(18) In a hiding place, and the children became mixed and the identity of each child could not be ascertained.
(19) As in any case one child must be a first-born. For if one woman gave birth to two males, the first male is the first-born, and if one woman gave birth to a male and a female, then the other gave birth to a male alone which is therefore the first-born, the male which was born with the female being exempt from the law of the firstborn in case the female came forth first.
(20) As we can say in each case that the female came forth first.
As only one child can he a first-born, since one woman had already given birth previously.

From redemption with five sela's, because he can maintain that it was the offspring of the woman who had never before given birth which had died.

And the two fathers divide the money between them.

For each priest can claim: 'I am retaining the money on account of the living child, as the child on whose behalf I received the money did not die', and the burden of proof is on the claimant, the father.

Because each father can say to the priest that the female offspring belongs to him.

In the case of two females and a male, each one can say that one woman gave birth to the female and the other to a male and a female, the female coming forth first. And with reference also to the case of two females and two males, each can say that the woman gave birth to a female first in each case.

In case the female was born to the woman who had never given birth previously.

Saying: 'It is not your male son which died but your neighbour's, and therefore I am entitled to the five sela's'.

Talmud - Mas. Bechoroth 49a

We are dealing here with a case where [the fathers] wrote out a power of attorney. But did not the Nehardeans say: We do not write out a private authorization to take possession of movables? — This is the case only where the debtor denies indebtedness [to the creditor] but where there is no such denial, we do write.

A MALE AND A FEMALE THE FATHERS ARE EXEMPT etc. R. Huna learnt: If they gave birth to two males and a female [in a hiding place and the children became mixed], the priest receives nothing. And our Tanna — Since this is the case only where there are two husbands but not where there is only one husband and two women, he does not teach this.

GEMARA. What is the reason of the Rabbis? — We draw an analogy between the expression 'month' and 'month' mentioned in the Book of Numbers; just as there [in the latter case] it says 'And upward' so here also in the case of redemption it means 'and upward'. And [what does] R. Akiba [say to this]? — He is in doubt. For since it was necessary to write 'and upward' in connection with the law of valuation and did not leave us to infer this [from the expression 'and upward'] in the Book of Numbers, we have therefore two verses teaching the same thing, and wherever we have two verses teaching the same thing, they cannot serve as an illustration for other cases. Yet perhaps [on the other hand] we may say that the rule that the two verses which teach the same thing cannot serve as an illustration for other cases only applies to such cases as are totally different, but where the same subject is dealt with, the verses do serve as an illustration and consequently he [R. Akiba] is in doubt.

Said R. Ashi: All the authorities concerned agree that as regards the laws of mourning the thirtieth day is counted as being like the previous day, for Samuel said: The law is in accordance with the authority who is lenient in matters of mourning.

MISHNAH. IF THE FATHER DIES WITHIN THIRTY DAYS, [THE INFANT] IS UNDER THE PRESUMPTION OF NOT HAVING BEEN REDEEMED UNTIL PROOF IS BROUGHT THAT IT HAS BEEN REDEEMED. IF THE FATHER, HOWEVER, DIES AFTER THIRTY DAYS, IT IS UNDER THE PRESUMPTION OF HAVING BEEN REDEEMED UNTIL HE [THE

GEMARA. It has been stated: If one redeems his son within thirty days [of his birth], Rab said: His son is [regarded as] redeemed, whereas Samuel says: His son is not redeemed. Said Rab bah: All [the authorities concerned] agree that if he said that his son's redemption should take effect ‘from now’ his son is not redeemed.\(^{30}\) Again [if he said to the priest within the thirty days] that the redemption should take effect after the thirty days and the money is still then in existence, the son is certainly regarded as redeemed, [for it is as if he had given it now].\(^{31}\) Where they differ is where [he said] after the thirty days and the money had been used [by that time].\(^{32}\) [In such a case] Rab said: His son is redeemed, for this is on a par with the law of betrothal of a woman.\(^{33}\) There [in the case of betrothal] although the money was used, is not the betrothal yet valid?

\(^{1}\) To each other and therefore one of them can come and claim as follows: ‘If mine died, return my redemption money, and if the child of my neighbour died, return me his five sela's, for I have his authorization’.

\(^{2}\) To a creditor to collect or take possession of one's debt.

\(^{3}\) Since the movables are not in sight, the declaration has the appearance of a falsehood, in case the debtor does not posses the articles at all, and therefore the witnesses seem to be signing falsely.

\(^{4}\) The creditor cannot have an authorization written out in such circumstances, for it has the appearance of a falsehood.

\(^{5}\) V. Sheb. 33b.

