THE FOLLOWING ARE ZON BARZEL SLAVES: IF THEY DIE, THEY ARE THE LOSS OF
THE HUSBAND AND, IF THEIR VALUE INCREASES, ARE A PROFIT TO HIM. SINCE HE IS RESPONSIBLE FOR THEM,⁸ THEY ARE PERMITTED TO EAT TERUMAH.

GEMARA. And MELOG SLAVES MAY NOT EAT TERUMAH! What is the reason? Let them rather be regarded as a possession that was acquired by one in his possession [who is permitted to eat terumah], for it was taught: Whence is it deduced that the wife whom a priest married or the slaves which he purchased may eat terumah.? It is said, But if a priest buy any soul the purchase of his money, he may eat of it.⁹ And whence is it deduced that if a woman¹⁰ purchased slaves¹¹ or if a priest’s slaves purchased¹² other slaves, these may eat terumah? It is said, But if a priest buy any soul, the purchase of his money, he may eat of it;⁹ a possession which his possession has acquired may eat!¹³ — Whosoever may himself eat may confer the right of eating upon others but whosoever may not himself eat may not confer the right of eating upon others.¹⁴ May he not, indeed?¹⁵ There is, surely, the case of¹⁶ an uncircumcised man and that of all levitically unclean persons who may not themselves eat terumah and yet confer the right of eating it upon others!¹⁷ — In those cases¹⁸ they are merely suffering pain in their mouths.¹⁹ But there is, surely, the case of¹⁶ the bastard²⁰ Who may not eat terumah himself²¹ and yet may confer the right of eating it upon others²² — Rabina replied. He speaks of an acquisition²³ that is permitted to eat: Any acquisition that may eat may confer the right of eating upon others, and any acquisition that may not eat may not confer the right upon others.

Raba, however, stated²⁴ that pentateuchally they²³ may in fact eat terumah; but it is the Rabbis who instituted the prohibition in order that the woman might complain, ‘I am not allowed to eat; my slaves are not allowed to eat; I am only his mistress!’;⁴ in consequence of which he would be likely to divorce her. R. Ashi stated:²⁴ The prohibition is a preventive measure against the possibility of her feeding them²⁶ with terumah after the death [of her husband].²⁶ Now, then,²⁷ a daughter of an Israelite who was married to a priest should also be forbidden to feed [her meleg slaves with terumah] as a preventive measure against her feeding them after [her husband’s] death²⁸ — But, said R. Ashi, [our Mishnah refers to] a priestly widow²⁹ who³⁰ might draw the following conclusion:³¹ ‘At first³² they³³ ate terumah at my paternal home;³⁴ and when I married this man³⁵ they³³ ate³⁶ of the terumah of my husband; they³³ should now,³⁷ therefore, revert to their former condition³⁸ and she would not know that at first³⁹ she had not made of herself a profaned woman⁴⁰ while now⁴¹ she has made herself a profaned woman.⁴² This explanation is quite satisfactory in the case of a priestly widow;⁴² what explanations however, is there in the case of a widow who is the daughter of an Israelite?⁴³

The Rabbis made no distinction between one widow and another.⁴⁴

It was stated: If a wife: who brought to her husband⁴⁶ appraised goods,⁴⁶ demands,⁴⁷ ‘I will accept only my own goods’⁴⁸ and he replies ‘I am only paying their value’⁴⁹ — in whose favour is judgment to be given? Rab Judah said:

(1) The two pairs of twins were children of R. Hiyya from Judith.
(2) So that she might be permitted to marry a free man, As a half slave she was not allowed to contract such a marriage. Now, since her master was compelled to give her the opportunity of marrying, it is obvious that the commandment of propagation applies to women also!
And marriage was her only protection; and this was the reason why her master was compelled to emancipate her.

Contracting thereby a forbidden union.

The reason is given in the Gemara.

Lit., ‘died for her’.

He or his heirs must restore them to his wife in a healthy condition should he divorce her or die.

The daughter of an Israelite, who married a priest.

Out of her melog property the principal of which is hers.

With a sum of money that was given to them as their absolute property. on the condition that their master was to have no claim whatsoever upon it.

The expression, ‘the purchase of his money is superfluous’ and the text is, therefore, expounded thus: If the purchase of his money, i.e., a priest's wife or slave (who is the priest's acquisition) buy any soul, he (i.e., the one purchased) ‘may eat of it’. Why then are not melog slaves, being an acquisition of the priest's wife, permitted to eat terumah?

The priest's wife in this case is not herself permitted to eat terumah, since her union with this priest is a forbidden one. V. Lev. XXI, 7,13 and supra p. 441, n. 1.

Lit., ‘and not’?

Lit., ‘and behold’.

Their slaves, e.g., are permitted to eat terumah. Cf. infra 70a.

Lit., ‘there’.

I.e., their disability is restricted to their mouth alone. They are only temporarily forbidden to eat the terumah. At the moment their unclean period is over or circumcision is performed their rights are fully restored. In the case of the priest's wife in our Mishnah, however, the disability is permanent, since by her forbidden marriage she remains for ever a profaned woman.

I.e., mamzer, (v. Glos.) the issue of a union between a slave or idolater and a woman who was the issue of a marriage between a priest and a daughter of an Israelite.

Since he is neither priest nor even a legitimate Israelite.

His grandmother, the wife of the priest, may continue to eat terumah even after the death of her husband so long as the bastard (being a descendant of her husband through their daughter) is alive. As the widow of a priest she would have lost the privilege of eating terumah on her husband's death had there been no surviving descendants. V. infra 69b.

Not of a descendant.

In explaining the reason why MELOG SLAVES MAY NOT EAT TERUMAH.

The melog slaves.

Believing that, as she was allowed to feed them with terumah during the lifetime of her husband though they were her property, she may continue to do so even after his death. In the case of zon barzel slaves, however, no such error need be feared since the slaves are not hers, but his absolute property until the moment when it is surrendered to her by her husband or heir, v. infra.

If such an error as suggested is to be feared.

But our Mishnah distinctly states that her melog slaves also may eat terumah!

The daughter of a priest who, as a widow, married a High Priest, and thus became profaned through their forbidden marriage.

If her melog slaves were permitted to eat terumah while she lived with the High Priest.

After the High Priest's death.

During her first widowhood.

The melog slaves.

As a widow she then returned to her father's priestly house and was again entitled to eat terumah herself and to feed her slaves with it.

The High Priest.

Cf. supra n. 8.

When the High Priest died, though she remained a profaned widow who is, in fact, forbidden to eat terumah.

To be allowed again, as before, to eat terumah.
During her first widowhood.

Halachah (v. Glos.) through her forbidden marriage.

Having married a High Priest to whom a widow is forbidden.

V. supra p. 443, n. 7.

The error mentioned cannot occur in her case; but as our Mishnah draws no distinction between the two, the question remains: Why should not her melog slaves be permitted to eat terumah?

Lit., ‘in her widowhood’. Were the feeding permitted in the case of the one, the other might erroneously be presumed to come under the same law.

As zon barzel property (v. Glos.).

Shum (v. Glos.). V. Ket. Sonc. ed. p 401. n. 11. In consideration of which he guarantees her a specified sum in her kethubah, which is recoverable by her at his death, or earlier if she is divorced.

When she claims her kethubah. v. supra n. 9.

I.e., the actual objects she had brought to her husband.

In accordance with the appraisement in the kethubah.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 66b

Judgment is to be given in her favour; and R. Ammi said: Judgment is to be given in his favour. ‘Rab Judah said: Judgment is to be given in her favour because [they represent] assets of her paternal property [which] belong to her. R. Ammi said: Judgment is to be given in his favour’ for, as the Master said, [THE FOLLOWING ARE ZON BARZEL SLAVES:] IF THEY DIE, THEY ARE THE LOSS OF THE HUSBAND AND, IF THEIR VALUE INCREASES- ARE A PROFIT TO HIM; [AND] SINCE HE IS RESPONSIBLE FOR THEM THEY ARE PERMITTED TO EAT TERUMAH [they are therefore obviously regarded as his own].

R. Safra said: Was it stated, ‘and they belong to him? The statements surely only reads, SINCE HE IS RESPONSIBLE FOR THEM! In fact, then, they may not belong to him at all. But [is it a fact that] those for whom he is responsible invariably eat terumah? Surely we learned: An Israelite who hired a cow from a priest may feed her on vetches of terumah. A priest, however, who hired a cow from an Israelite, though it is his duty to supply her with food, must not feed her on vetches of terumah — How could you understand it thus! Granted that he is liable for theft or loss, is he also liable for accidents, emaciation or reduction in value! The case in our Mishnah, surely, can only be compared to that in the final clause: An Israelite who hired a cow from a priest, guaranteeing him its appraised value, may not feed it on vetches of terumah. A priest, however, who hired a cow from an Israelite, guaranteeing him its appraised value, may feed it on vetches of terumah.

Rabbah and R. Joseph were sitting at their studies at the conclusion of R. Nahman's school session, and in the course of their sitting they made the following statement: [A Baraitha] was taught in agreement with Rab Judah; and [another Baraitha] was taught in agreement with R. Ammi. ‘A Baraitha] was taught in agreement with Rab Ammi’: Zon barzel slaves procure their freedom when the man, but not when the woman [struck out] a tooth or an eye.

‘A Baraitha] was taught in agreement with Rab Judah’: If a wife brought in to her husband appraised goods, the husband may not sell them even if it is his desire to do so. Furthermore, even if he brought in to her appraised goods of his own, he may not sell them even if he desired to do so. If either of them sold [any of the appraised goods] for their maintenance. Such an incident was once dealt with by R. Simeon b. Gamaliel, who ruled that the husband may seize them from the buyers.

Raba stated in the name of R. Nahman: The law is in agreement with Rab Judah. Said Raba to R. Nahman: But surely [a Baraitha] was taught in agreement with R. Ammi! Although [a Baraitha] was taught in agreement with R. Ammi, Rab Judah's view is more logical, since any asset of a woman's paternal property [should rightly belong to her].

A woman once brought in to her husband a robe of fine wool [which was appraised and included] in her kethubah. When the man died it was taken by the orphans and spread over the corpse. Raba ruled that the corpse had acquired it.\(^{21}\)

Said Nanai son of R. Joseph son of Raba to R. Kahana: But, surely, Raba\(^{22}\) stated in the name of R. Nahman that the law is in agreement with Rab Judah\(^{23}\). The other replied: Does not Rab Judah admit that the robe had still to be collected [by the wife]?\(^{24}\) Since it had still to be collected it remained in the husband's possession.\(^{25}\) [In this ruling] Raba acted in accordance with his view [elsewhere expressed]. For Raba stated: Consecration,\(^{26}\) leavened food\(^{26}\), and

(5) 'A.Z. 15a; which shews that even an animal for which a priest is responsible (v. supra n. 2) is not permitted to eat terumah. How, then, could it be said, SINCE HE IS RESPONSIBLE FOR THEM THEY ARE PERMITTED TO EAT?
(6) Certainly not. Such a restricted responsibility, therefore, is incomplete and does not confer the right to terumah.

(10) The animal being regarded as the priest's own property, in respect of its feeding on terumah, owing to his responsibility for the return of its full value. Thus it follows that, though an animal would be returned in body, should its value on the day of its return be equal to that of its appraised value, it is nevertheless, owing to the priest's complete responsibility, deemed to be the priest's property so long as it remains in his possession; so also in the case of zon barzel slaves: though they would ultimately be returned to the woman in body, they are regarded, in respect of terumah, as the property of the priest, who accepted full responsibility for them, so long as they remain with him.
(11) The husband, who is regarded, in agreement with R. Ammi, as the owner of the slaves.

Rab Judah stated: If a wife brought to her husband² two articles worth a thousand zuz, and their value increased to two thousand, she receives one³ in settlement of her kethubah;⁴ and for the other⁵ she pays its price and receives it, since it represents assets of her paternal property.⁶

What are we taught by this⁷ statement? That assets of her paternal property belong to her? This, surely, has already been stated by Rab Judah!⁸ — It might have been assumed that that statement⁸ applied only where she came to claim [paternal property] as part of her kethubah, but not where she desired to take it in return for payment of its value, hence we were taught [that she may also pay its price and receive it].

MISHNAH. IF THE DAUGHTER OF AN ISRAELITE WAS MARRIED TO A PRIEST WHO DIED AND LEFT HER PREGNANT, HE R'S SLAVES MAY NOT EAT TERUMAH⁹ IN VIRTUE OF THE SHARE OF THE EMBRYO,¹⁰ SINCE AN EMBRYO MAY DEPRIVE¹¹ [ITS MOTHER]¹² OF THE PRIVILEGE [OF EATING TERUMAH]¹³ BUT HAS NO POWER TO BESTOW IT UPON HER,¹⁴ SO R. JOSE. THEY¹⁵ SAID TO HIM: SINCE YOU HAVE TESTIFIED TO US IN RESPECT OF THE DAUGHTER OF AN ISRAELITE WHO WAS MARRIED TO A PRIEST,¹⁶ THE SLAVES OF THE DAUGHTER OF A PRIEST, WHO A MARRIED TO A PRIEST WHO DIED AND LEFT HER WITH CHILD, SHOULD ALSO BE FORBIDDEN TO EAT TERUMAH ON ACCOUNT OF THE SHARE OF THE EMBRYO!¹⁷

GEMARA. A question was raised: Is R. Jose's reason,¹⁸ because he is of the opinion that an embryo in the womb of a lay woman¹⁹ is regarded as a non-priest,²⁰ or is his reason because only the born may bestow the right of eating but the unborn may not? — In what respect could this difference matter?²¹ — In respect of an embryo in the womb of a priest's daughter.²² Now, what is the reason? Rabbah replied: R. Jose's reason is this. He is of the opinion that an embryo in the womb of a lay woman¹⁹ is regarded as a non-priest.²⁰ R. Joseph replied: The born may bestow the privilege of eating while the unborn may not.

An objection was raised: They said to R. Jose: Since you have testified to us in respect of the daughter of an Israelite who was married to a priest, what is the law in respect of the daughter of a priest who was married to a priest? ‘The first’,²³ he replied, ‘I heard;²⁴ but the other²⁵ I have not heard’.²⁶ Now, if you agree [that R. Jose's reason is because] an embryo in the womb of a lay woman²⁷ is regarded as a non-priest,²⁸ it was correct for him to say, ‘The first I heard, but the other I did not’. If you maintain, however, [that R. Jose's reason is because] the born may bestow the right of eating and the unborn may not, what [could he have meant by] ‘The first I have heard but the other I have not heard’, when the principle is the same! — This is indeed a difficulty.

Said Rab Judah in the name of Samuel: This²⁹ is the opinion of R. Jose; but the Sages said: If he³⁰ has children,³¹ they³² may eat [terumah] by virtue of his children,³³ if he has no children, they³² may eat by virtue of his³⁴ brothers, and if he has no brothers they³² may eat by virtue of the entire family.³⁵ ‘This’,³⁶ would imply that he³⁷ himself does not share the view;³⁸ but, surely, Samuel said to R. Hana of Bagdad, ‘Go bring me a group of ten men that I may tell you in their presence³⁹ that if title is conferred upon an embryo [through the agency of a third party], it does acquire ownership’!⁴⁰ The fact is that ‘this’ here denotes that he⁴¹ also holds the same opinion. What, then, does he⁴¹ teach us?⁴² That the Rabbis disagree with R. Jose! But do they, in fact, disagree? Surely R. Zakkai stated:⁴³ This evidence⁴⁴ was submitted by R. Jose in the name of Shemaiah and Abtalion and they⁴⁵ agreed with him! — R. Ashi replied: Does it read, ‘and they accepted’? It was only said, ‘and they agreed’, [which may only mean] that his view is logical.⁴⁶

left his widow with child,\(^52\) neither these nor the others\(^49\) may eat it.\(^53\) If he left children and also left his widow with child, the melog slaves may eat as she may eat;\(^54\) but the zon barzel slaves may not eat, on account of the share of the embryo which may deprive [its mother]\(^55\) of the privilege [of eating terumah] but has no power to bestow it;\(^56\) so R. Jose. R. Ishmael son of R. Jose stated in the name of his father: A daughter may bestow the right of eating; a son may not.\(^57\) R. Simeon b. Yohai said: [If the children\(^58\) are] males, all [the slaves] may eat.\(^59\) [If however they are] females, [the slaves] are not permitted to eat, since it is possible that the embryo might be a male;\(^60\) and daughters, where there is a son, have no share at all.\(^61\) What need was there to point to the possibility that the embryo might be a male when this might be equally deduced [from the fact] that [even when the embryo is] a female it deprives them of the privilege\(^64\) — He meant to say: There is one reason and also an additional one. ‘There is the one reason’ that a female embryo also deprives [the slaves] of the privilege; and, furthermore,\(^65\) ‘it is possible that the embryo might be a male and daughters, where there is a son, have no share at all’.

‘[If the children are] males, [the slaves] may eat’. But, surely, there is an embryo in existence\(^66\) — He is of the opinion

(50) The melog slaves are entitled to the privilege by virtue of the rights of the widow who is entitled to it by virtue of her surviving children; and the son barzel slaves are entitled to the privilege by virtue of the priest's living children who are now their owners.
(51) The deceased priest.
(52) And he is not survived by any other children.
(53) Since the embryo cannot bestow the privilege (cf. supra n. 4) either upon his mother or upon the slaves.
(54) The melog's slaves being the property of the widow and the embryo having no share in them. As by virtue of her living sons the widow is herself entitled to eat terumah she may also feed her slaves on it, Cf. supra n' 4.

(58) Who survived the deceased priest.
(59) On their account because the chances that the embryo will be a viable male and thus have a share in the slaves are so uneven that they may be disregarded. For, in the first instance, it is likely that the embryo will be a female and thus have no share at all in the slaves. And secondly, were it to be a male, it might yet be a miscarriage, which again would have no share in the slaves (v. infra).
(60) Who, when born, will become the owner of the slaves.
(61) The slaves, therefore, would be the property of the embryo which cannot bestow upon them the right of eating terumah.
(62) As a reason why the slaves are forbidden to eat terumah in the latter case.
(63) The prohibition upon the slaves.
(64) Since the female embryo, when born, would be entitled to a share among the other daughters and now, therefore, as an embryo, deprives the slaves of the privilege.
(65) Which is the other reason.
(66) And it, owing to its share in them, should deprive the slaves of the privilege.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 67b

that no provision need be made against the less usual cases.¹ Or if you prefer I might say that he² is of the opinion that provision in fact must be made against the less usual cases also, [but here] a special arrangement might be made³ in accordance with a ruling of R. Nahman in the name of Samuel. For R. Nahman stated in the name of Samuel: Where orphans wish to divide the property of their deceased father, Beth din appoint a guardian for every one of them, and each guardian chooses for his ward a suitable portion. As soon, however, as they reach their majority they are entitled to enter a protest. In his own name, however, R. Nahman stated: Even when they reach majority they are not entitled to protest, for otherwise what validity is there in the authority of a Beth din?

Must it be assumed that R. Nahman's ruling is a matter of dispute between Tannaim? — No; all accept R. Nahman's arrangement, but the dispute here centres on the question whether provision was to be made against the less usual cases.

'R. Ishmael', son of R. Jose, stated in the name of his father: A daughter may bestow the right of eating; a son may not. Wherein lies the difference between the son and the daughter? If a son may not bestow the right of eating on account of the share of the embryo, a daughter also should not be entitled to bestow the right of eating on account of the share of the embryo! — Abaye replied: Here we are dealing with a small estate and in a case where there is a son as well as a daughter, [so that the slaves may eat the terumah] whatever be the assumption [as to the sex of the embryo]. If the embryo is a son then he is not better than the one who is already born. And if it is a daughter, then why does a daughter eat at all? Surely by virtue of an ordinance of the Rabbis. But so long as she has not seen the light no provision for her has been made by the Rabbis. If you take it to refer to a small estate, [how will you] explain the final clause, ‘since it is possible that the embryo might be a male, and daughters, where there is a son, have no share at all’? On the contrary; a small estate belongs to the daughters! — The final clause refers to a large estate. But does a small estate belong to the daughters? Surely, R. Assi stated in the name of R. Johanan: Where male orphans forestalled [the ruling of Beth din] and sold a small estate, their sale is valid! — The fact is that by the mention of daughter ‘the mother’ is to be understood. The entire statement was made by R. Ishmael son of R. Jose.

MISHNAH. AN EMBRYO, A LEVIR, BETROTHAL, A DEAF-MUTE, AND A BOY WHO IS NINE YEARS AND ONE DAY OLD, DEPRIVE [A WOMAN] OF THE RIGHT [OF EATING TERUMAH], BUT CANNOT BESTOW THE PRIVILEGE UPON HER, EVEN WHEN IT IS A MATTER OF DOUBT WHETHER THE BOY IS NINE YEARS AND ONE DAY OLD OR NOT, OR WHETHER HE HAS PRODUCED TWO HAIRS OR NOT.

IF A HOUSE COLLAPSED UPON A MAN AND UPON HIS BROTHER'S DAUGHTER, AND IT IS NOT KNOWN WHICH OF THEM DIED FIRST, HER RIVAL MUST PERFORM HALIZAH BUT MAY NOT CONTRACT LEVIRATE MARRIAGE.

GEMARA. AN EMBRYO, for if its mother is the daughter of a priest who was married to an Israelite [the embryo] deprives her of the privilege, for it is written. As in her youth, which excludes one who is with child. And if she is the daughter of an Israelite [who was married] to a priest, the embryo does not bestow the privilege upon her, because the living child does bestow the privileged but not the unborn.

A LEVIR, for if his yebamah is the daughter of a priest who was married to an Israelite, [the levir] deprives her of the privileged [for it is written], and is returned unto her father's house, which excludes one who is awaiting the decision of the levir; and if she is the daughter of an Israelite [who was married] to a priest [the levir] does not bestow the privilege upon her, because the All Merciful said, The purchase of his money, while she is the purchase of his brother.

BETROTHAL, for if [the woman] is the daughter of a priest [who was betrothed] to an Israelite, [betrothal] deprives her of the privilege,
(1) Lit., ‘a minority’. I.e., against the possibility that the embryo might be born a viable male. Against the possibility of male births there is the equal possibility of female births, and by adding the minority of miscarrying women to the half of female births, the male births are found to form only a minority.

(2) R. Simeon.

(3) The embryo is allotted as his share a portion of the estate exclusive of the slaves, who consequently form a portion of the shares of the living brothers, who, as their owners, bestow upon the slaves the right of eating terumah. Where, however, there are only daughters, such an arrangement cannot be made, since in such a case the embryo, in case he is born a viable male, is the sole heir and owner.

(4) Who are minors.

(5) Against the original division, and to demand a new one. The validity of acceptance of the shares by the guardians extends only to the produce or yield of the estate up to the date of the protest.

(7) That R. Simeon, who permits the slaves to eat, in the case of sons, by adopting the arrangement mentioned, is of the same opinion as R. Nahman; while R. Jose, who forbids terumah to the slaves, maintaining as he evidently does that the arrangement is of no avail and that the division must be postponed until the heirs reach majority, is in disagreement with R. Nahman.

(8) Wherever such had been made,

(9) Between R. Jose and R. Simeon, supra 6a.

(10) Where R. Nahman's arrangement had not been made,

(11) R. Simeon permits the slaves to eat terumah, because he holds that no provision has to be made against the less usual cases (v. supra p. 451, n. 3) while R. Jose forbids them to eat it, because he maintains that provision must be made even against the less usual case.

(12) This is now assumed to mean that where there is a daughter but no son, she bestows the right of eating terumah upon the slaves, but where there is a son, the slaves are not permitted to eat the terumah.

(13) R. Ishmael's statement.

(14) Which, by an ordinance of the Rabbis, must be handed over to the daughters for their maintenance while the sons receive nothing. v. B.B, 139b.

(15) To whom the estate belongs in accordance with the Pentateuchal law.

(16) Lit., ‘exists’, ‘stands’. Since the Rabbis deprived the living son of his share and gave it to the daughters. they have, even more so, deprived the embryo of its share.

(17) From her father's estate, though he is also survived by sons’

(18) Pentateuchally she has no claim at all in the presence of a son.

(19) Lit., ‘came out into the air of the world’.

(20) The embryo, consequently, cannot possibly have a share in the slaves, who may. therefore, eat terumah by virtue of the rights of the living children. Had there been a daughter only and no son, the slaves would not have been permitted to eat terumah on account of the embryo, which, were it a female, would have had in the slaves an equal share with their sister.

(21) R. Ishmael's statement.

(22) Lit., ‘in what did you place it’.

(23) Which presumably deals with a similar case.

(24) Keth. 103a, Sotah 21b, B.B. 140a. Which proves that the estate, even when small, belongs to the sons also. How then could the slaves be permitted to eat terumah?

(25) I.e., the mother of the embryo may feed her melog slaves with terumah as she herself is permitted to eat it by virtue of her living sons. A son, however, may not feed the zon barzel slaves with terumah owing to the share of the embryo.

(26) Whose mother was (a) the daughter of a priest married to an Israelite, or (b) the daughter of an Israelite married to a priest, and whose father died before he (the embryo) was born.

(27) The widow of whose deceased brother was (a) the daughter of a priest (he and his brother being Israelites), or (b) the daughter of an Israelite (he and his brother being priests).

(28) Of (a) the daughter of a priest to an Israelite, or (b) the daughter of an Israelite to a priest.

(29) Who is (a) an Israelite married to the daughter of a priest, or (b) a priest married to the daughter of an Israelite.

(30) This is explained in the Gemara, infra.

(31) If she is (a) the daughter of a priest (cf. last four notes).
If she is (b) the daughter of an Israelite (cf. supra notes 6-9).

This has no reference to what follows and is explained in the Gemara.

Who betrothed the woman.

Which are the marks of puberty, when he becomes legally entitled to contract a marriage.

To whom he had been married and who, like himself, died childless.

With the daughter's father, the brother of the deceased. Though the dead woman was his forbidden relative, her rival becomes subject to the halizah because it is possible that the woman had been killed before the man, and when the man died her former rival was no longer related to her. V. infra note 6.

Because it is also possible that the man was killed first and that the rival consequently remained forbidden to the levir as the rival of his daughter.

Of eating terumah.

Lev. XXII, 13.

Only when she returned unto her father's house as in her youth (v. ibid.), i.e., if, like a virgin, she has no child at all, not even an embryo, may she eat of her father's bread (ibid.) i.e., terumah.

This is deduced from Such as are born in his house etc. (Lev. XXII, 11) by taking the Kal הנתן in the sense of Hif. הנן V Torath Kohanim, a.l., (v. Rashi).

Being dependent on the levir's will she cannot without his release, return to her father's house.

Lev. XXII, 11 emphasis on 'his.'

since he acquires her by the betrothal;¹ and if she is the daughter of an Israelite [who was betrothed] to a priest, the betrothal cannot bestow the privilege upon her, owing to the ruling of ‘Ulla.²

A DEAF-MUTE, for if [the woman] is the daughter of a priest [who was married] to [him³ who is] an Israelite, he deprives her of the privilege, since he⁴ acquired her by virtue of a Rabbinical enactment;⁵ and if she is the daughter of an Israelite [who was married] to [him³ who is] a priest, he cannot bestow the privilege upon her, because the All Merciful said, The purchase of his money,⁶ while he³ is not eligible to execute any kinyan.

AND A BOY WHO IS NINE YEARS etc. This was assumed⁷ to refer to the case of a yebamah who was awaiting the decision of a levir who was nine years and one day old.⁸ Now, in what respect?⁹ If in respect of depriving her¹⁰ of the privilege,¹¹ a younger child would also equally deprive her of the privilege! And if in respect of bestowing the privilege,¹² a grownup levir also cannot bestow this privilege!¹³ — Abaye replied: We are dealing here with a levir of the age of nine years and one day, who cohabited with his yebamah¹⁴ who, according to Pentateuchal law, becomes his kinyan. Since it might have been assumed that, as Pentateuchally she becomes his kinyan, and his cohabitation also is legal, he should be entitled to bestow the privilege upon her, hence we were taught that the cohabitation of a boy who is nine years and one day old has been given the same validity only as that of a ma'amar by an adult.¹⁵ Said Raba to him: If so,¹⁶ [why] is it stated in the final clause, [EVEN WHEN] IT IS A MATTER OF DOUBT WHETHER THE BOY IS NINE YEARS AND ONE DAY OLD, OR NOT? If a boy who is certainly of the age of nine cannot bestow the privilege, is there any need to speak of a boy whose age is in doubt! — No, said Raba, [the Mishnah] deals with a boy of the age of nine years and one day old belonging to one of the classes of disqualified persons who, by their cohabitation, deprive a woman¹⁷ of the privilege of eating terumah,¹⁸ as it was taught: An Ammonite,¹⁹ a Moabite,¹⁹ an Egyptian,²⁰ or an Idumean²⁰ proselyte, a Cuthean²¹, a nathin,²¹ a halal²¹ or a bastard, of the age of nine years and one day, who cohabits with the daughter of a priests of a Levite or of an Israelite, disqualifies her.²² But since it is stated in the final clause,²³ 'If they are not fit to enter the assembly of Israel they render [a woman] unfit', it may be inferred that the first clause does not deal with such disqualified persons! — The first clause speaks of those who are disqualified to enter the assembly, while the latter clause speaks of those who are disqualified to marry the daughter of a priest.²⁴

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 68a
[To turn to] the main text: An Ammonite, a Moabite, an Egyptian or an Idumean proselyte, a Cuthean, a nathin, a halal or a bastard, of the age of nine years and one day, who cohabits with the daughter of a priest, of a Levite or of an Israelite disqualifies her. R. Jose said: Anyone whose children are disqualified causes disqualification; he whose children are not disqualified does not cause disqualification. R. Simeon b. Gamaliel said: Whenever you may marry his daughter you may marry his widow, and whenever you may not marry his daughter you may not marry his widow.

Whence are these rulings deduced? — Rab Judah replied in the name of Rab: Scripture stated, And if a priest's daughter be married unto to a strange man as soon as she has had connubial relations with a disqualified person the latter disqualified her. But the text cited is surely required [for another] purpose, viz., that the All Merciful ordained that the daughter of a priest who was married to a layman may not eat terumah! — That may be deduced from the text, And is returned unto her father's house, as in her youth, she may eat of her father's bread. Since the All Merciful ordained, And is returned unto her father's house . . . she may eat, it follows that prior to that she was not permitted to eat. But if [deduction were to be made] from that text, one might have assumed that as a negative precept which is derived from a positive one it has only the force of a positive precept, hence did the All Merciful write the other text to [indicate that it is] a negative precept! — [That it is] a negative precept may be deduced from, There shall no strange man eat of the holy things.

(1) And being, therefore, deemed to be his legal wife she is forbidden to eat terumah. V. Lev. XXII, 12.
(2) Though Pentateuchally a woman who is betrothed to a priest is entitled to the privilege of eating terumah, she has been forbidden to eat it during the period of betrothal, when she is still in her father's house, as a preventive measure against the possibility of her treating to it a brother or a sister of hers. V. Keth. 57b.
(3) The deaf-mute.
(4) Though mentally defective and, therefore, Pentateuchally ineligible to execute any kinyan.
(5) V. infra 112b.
(6) Lev. XXII, 11, emphasis on purchase (kinyan).
(7) By him who raised the following objection.
(8) And with whom no connubial intercourse had taken place.
(9) Is the age mentioned of any consequence.
(10) If she is the daughter of a priest, and the levir is an Israelite.
(11) Of the eating of terumah; the purpose of the ruling being to indicate that the levirate bond comes into force simultaneously with the levir's capability of cohabitation.
(12) When he is a priest and she is the daughter of an Israelite; the purpose being to indicate that, though he is capable of cohabitation, his levirate bond is not powerful enough to bestow upon his yebamah the privilege of eating terumah.
(13) As was explicitly stated earlier in our Mishnah.
(14) An act which in the case of a levir who is of age is valid.
(15) Which does not constitute complete kinyan (cf. supra 50a). The boy of the age of nine years and one day CANNOT consequently BESTOW THE PRIVILEGE any more than the others enumerated in our Mishnah. The ruling as to ‘depriving a woman of the privilege’ applies only to the cases of the EMBRYO, THE LEVIR, BETROTHAL AND THE DEAF-MUTE but not to that of the boy of the age mentioned.
(16) That the boy of the age of nine years and one day was included only because of the ruling that he CANNOT BESTOW THE PRIVILEGE, and that the ruling of ‘depriving a woman of the privilege’ does not apply to him, cf. supra n. 2.
(17) If she is the daughter of a priest.
(18) The boy of the age of nine years and one day accordingly deprives a woman of the privilege; and it is because of this ruling that the case of the boy was included in our Mishnah. The second ruling that certain persons CANNOT BESTOW THE PRIVILEGE is not, of course, necessary in his case and applies only to the others enumerated, vi., THE EMBRYO, THE LEVIR, BETROTHAL AND A DEAF-MUTE.
(19) Who is forbidden to enter the congregation of the Lord. Cf. Deut. XXIII, 4.

(24) As e.g., a halal who is permitted to enter the assembly (i.e., to marry the daughter of an Israelite), but is forbidden to marry the daughter of a priest. (Cf. supra 37a). Though the expression ‘not fit to enter the assembly of Israel’ was used in the final clause also, it only implies marriage with the daughter of a priest, since otherwise this part of the Mishnah would have been a mere repetition of the first and, consequently, superfluous.

(52) Lev. XXII, 10.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 68b

But that text is required for its own purpose! The expression, ‘There shall no strange man’, is written twice. But still is not this required for the exposition of R. Jose b. Hanina? For R. Jose b.
Hanina stated: There shall no strange man implies, ‘I have imposed upon you a prohibition concerning non-priests only but not concerning onan’! R. Jose b. Hanina's exposition may be deduced from the Scriptural use of the longer expression ‘And there shall no strange man’ instead of ‘strange man’.5

But still is not this, required for the following which was taught:7 When she returns,9 she returns only to [the privilege of eating] terumah, but does not return to [the privilege of eating] the breast and shoulder.10 And11 R. Hisda stated in the name of Rabina b. R. Shila, ‘What Scriptural text proves this? It is written, but if a priest's daughter be married unto a strange man, she shall not eat of the terumah of the holy things, she must not eat of that which is set apart from the holy things’! If so, Scripture should have written. She shall not eat of the holy things’. why [then the longer expression], of the terumah of the holy things? Two deductions may, consequently be made.

We have now deduced [the law relating to] a priest's daughter, whence, however, is this deduced in respect of the daughter of a Levite or an Israelite? — As R. Abba stated in the name of Rab [that deduction is made from the Scriptural use of] ‘But a daughter’ [where only] ‘daughter’ [could have been used].\(^{19}\) so here also [deduction is made from the use of] ‘and a daughter’ [where only] ‘daughter’ [could have been used].\(^{20}\) In accordance with whose view?\(^{21}\) Is it Only in accordance with that of R. Akiba who bases expositions on [superfluous] Wawin!\(^{22}\) — It\(^{23}\) may be said to have been made even according to the view of the Rabbis, because the entire Scriptural expression, And a daughter\(^{24}\) is superfluous.\(^{25}\) [Thus the disqualification] in respect of terumah has been proved;\(^{26}\) whence, [however, is it deduced that the disqualification extends also] to the prohibition of marrying a priest?\(^{27}\) — Has not the daughter of a Levite or of an Israelite been included\(^{28}\) in respect of priestly marriage only? For, as regards terumah, neither of them is ever eligible to eat it.\(^{29}\)

Are they never eligible?\(^{30}\) Such eligibility surely occurs when [a mother]\(^{31}\) eats terumah\(^{32}\) by virtue of the rights of her son\(^{33}\) — [The case of a mother, who eats terumah] by virtue of the rights of her son, may be deduced by inference a minori ad majus: If the daughter of a priest who eats the terumah by virtue of her own sanctity becomes disqualified\(^{34}\) how much more so the daughter of a Levite or of an Israelite who eats it only by virtue of the rights of her son.\(^{35}\) [On the contrary], this [very point]\(^{36}\) provides the reason: A priest's daughter whose body is sacred is rightly disqualified,\(^{34}\) this woman, however, whose own body is not sacred might not become disqualified!\(^{38}\) — The fact is rather, that the prohibition\(^{39}\) to marry a priest may be deduced a minori ad majus from a divorced woman: If a divorced woman who is permitted to eat terumah is nevertheless forbidden to marry a priest, how much more reason is there that such a woman\(^{40}\) who is forbidden to eat terumah should be disqualified from marrying a priest.\(^{35}\)

May a prohibition, however, be deduced by logical argument!\(^{41}\)

This\(^{42}\) is a mere elucidation [of the law].\(^{43}\)

Might it not be suggested [that the statement,] ‘she had connubial relations with a disqualified person’\(^{44}\) [refers to persons cohabitation with whom is] subject to the penalty of kareth!\(^{45}\) — The All Merciful said, If. . . be married,\(^{46}\) only those with whom marriage is valid;\(^{47}\) with those who are subject to the penalty of kareth marriage is not valid.\(^{48}\) If so,\(^{49}\) no idolater or slave should cause disqualification\(^{50}\) — These cause disqualification in accordance with a ruling of R. Ishmael. For R. Johanan stated in the name of R. Ishmael: Whence is it deduced that if an idolater or a slave cohabits with the daughter of an Israelite, of a priest or of a Levite, he disqualifies her?\(^{51}\) — It was stated in, But if a priest's daughter be a widow or divorced etc.,\(^{52}\)

\(^{(1)}\) For the law concerning a non-priest. What proof then is there that a priest's daughter who married such a man is also subject to the same law?

\(^{(2)}\) Once in Lev. XXII, 10, which refers to any non-priest; and a second time, ibid. 13. which speaks of the daughter of a priest who returns to her father's house, and concludes with the expression, There shall no strange etc. referring to the priest's daughter who is married to such a man.

\(^{(3)}\) The second text, Lev. XXII, 13.

\(^{(4)}\) Infra 70b, 71a. דּוּבִיִּים the mourning of an onan, v. Glos.

\(^{(5)}\) The superfluous and serves the purpose of R. Jose's deduction, and the remainder of the clause, therefore, indicates the negative precept.

\(^{(6)}\) The text of Lev. XXII, 12.

\(^{(7)}\) Infra 87a.

\(^{(8)}\) The daughter of a priest who was divorced or became a widow and had no child.

\(^{(9)}\) To her father's house.

\(^{(10)}\) Which are also among the priestly gifts. Cf. Ex. XXIX, 27. Lev. VII, 34. X, 14.

\(^{(11)}\) In explanation of the Baraitha.
(12) Lev. XXII, 12.
(13) That only one of the deductions mentioned is to be made from this text.
(14) That a disqualified person disqualifies a priest's daughter with whom he cohabited (supra 68a), and (b) that when a priest's daughter returns as a widow or a divorcée to her father's house she is not permitted to eat of the breast and the shoulder of the peace-offerings.
(15) Lit., ‘we found’.
(16) V. supra n. 7 (a).
(17) Infra 6a, 87a.
(18) The superfluous ‘and’ indicates a comparison between the daughter of the priest and the daughter of a Levite or of an Israelite.
(19) Is the deduction made (v. n. 11).
(20) Since the context, But if a priest . . . and such as are born in his house (Lev. XXII, 11) speaks of the relatives of a priest, it would have been obvious to whom v. 12 referred even if a priest's daughter were omitted, reading only. If she be married etc.
(21) If a disqualified person cohabited with her. V. supra 68a.
(22) In the prohibition.
(23) To eat terumah. Lit., ‘why not’.
(24) The daughter of a Levite or of an Israelite.
(25) After the death of her husband who was a priest.
(26) Who survived his father. A Scriptural text might consequently have been required to forbid a woman in such circumstances from eating terumah if she cohabited with a disqualified person!
(27) Lit., ‘he (i.e., the disqualified man who cohabited with her) disqualifies her’.
(28) Hence no Scriptural text was needed to exclude her.
(29) The sacredness of the body of the priest's daughter.
(30) On the part of the daughter of a priest who cohabited with one of the disqualified persons mentioned.
(31) A brother, for instance, betrothal with whom is invalid. What proof, however, is there that persons, such as a Cuthean, a nathin or a bastard, cohabitation with whom is subject to flogging only and betrothal with whom is valid, also disqualify a priest's daughter from marrying a priest?
daughter of a Levite or an Israelite who was married to a priest who left her with children by virtue of whom she was entitled to the privilege of eating terumah.

(52) Lev. XXII, 13 which concludes, and is returned unto her father's house . . . she may eat of her father's bread, i.e., terumah.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 69a

only in the case of a man in relation to whom widowhood or divorce is applicable;¹ an idolater and a slave, however, are excluded, since in relation to them no widowhood or divorce is applicable.²

Thus we have found [the law concerning] the daughter of a priest;³ whence, however, [is the law concerning] the daughter of a Levite and of an Israelite to be inferred? — As R. Abba stated in the name of Rab [that deduction is made from the Scriptural use of] ‘And a daughter’, [where only] ‘daughter’ [could have been used],⁴ so here also [deduction is made from the use of] ‘And a daughter’, [where only] ‘daughter’ could have been used.⁵ In accordance with whose view?⁶ Is it only in accordance with that of R. Akiba, who bases expositions on [superfluous] Wawin!⁷ — It⁸ may be said to have been made even according to the view of the Rabbis, because the entire [Scriptural expression] And a daughter⁹ is a superfluous text.¹⁰ But might it be suggested that in the case of a man in relation to whom widowhood and divorce is possible,¹¹ [the woman]¹² may eat terumah if she¹³ has no children,¹⁴ and may not eat if she has children, but in the case of a man in relation to whom widowhood and divorce are not possible¹⁵ she may eat terumah even if she¹³ has children?¹⁶ — If so,¹⁷ what need was there to include the daughter of a Levite and of an Israelite!¹⁸

According to R. Akiba, however, who stated that betrothal with those whose intercourse involves the penalty of a negative commandment has no validity and that the meaning of¹⁹ If . . . be married²⁰ to a strange man²¹ is ‘if she cohabits’,²² what need was there²³ [for] ‘widow or divorced’?²⁴ — The widow was stated²⁵ in order to restrict her privilege;²⁶ and the divorced woman, in order to relax her restrictions.²⁷ And [both²⁸ were] required. For had only the widow been mentioned it might have been assumed that only a widow may eat terumah if she has no children because she is eligible to marry a priest but, a divorced woman who is ineligible to marry a priest may not eat it even if she has no children. And had the divorced woman only been mentioned it might have been suggested that only a divorced woman may not eat terumah if she has children because she is ineligible to marry a priest, but a widow who is eligible to marry a priest may eat it even if she has children. [Hence both were] necessary.

Might it not be suggested [that the statement], ‘She had connubial relations with a disqualified person’²⁹ refers also to one who remarried his divorced wife!³⁰ — The All Merciful said, To a strange man, only one who was formerly a stranger to her.³¹ Her former husband³² is excluded since he was not formerly a stranger to her.

If so, a halal,³³ who is not a stranger³⁴ to her,³⁵ should not cause her disqualification! Scripture stated, He shall not profane his seed among his people;³⁶ ‘his seed’³⁷ is compared to himself, as he disqualifies³⁸ so does his seed disqualify.³⁹

Might it be suggested [that the disqualification⁴⁰ is effected] from the moment of betrothal?⁴¹ — [His case⁴² must be] similar to that of a High Priest with a widow. As a High Priest, in the case of a widow, [causes her disqualification] by cohabitation only,⁴³ so does this [person⁴⁴ cause disqualification] by cohabitation only.

Might it be suggested [that disqualification⁴⁰ is effected] only where there was betrothal as well as cohabitation? — His case⁴² must be similar to that of a High Priest with a widow. As the High Priest, [when he marries] a widow, [causes her disqualification] by cohabitation alone⁴⁵ so does this
R. Jose however said: ‘Anyone whose children are disqualified causes disqualification, but he whose children are not disqualified does not cause disqualification’. What is the practical difference between the first Tanna and R. Jose? — R. Johanan replied: The difference between them is the case of an Egyptian proselyte of the second generation and an Idumean proselyte of the second generation. And both of them deduced their respective views from none other than [the disqualification] of a widow by a High Priest. The first Tanna reasons: As a High Priest whose cohabitation with a widow is forbidden causes her disqualification, so does this person also cause disqualification. R. Jose, however, reasons thus: Like a High Priest. As a High Priest whose seed is disqualified causes disqualification, so does any other person cause disqualification only when his seed is disqualified; an Egyptian proselyte of the second generation is thus excluded, since his children are not disqualified, for it is written, The children of the third generation that are born unto them may enter into the assembly of the Lord.

R. Simeon b. Gamaliel said: Whenever you may marry his daughter, you may marry his widow etc.’ What is the practical difference between R. Jose and R. Simeon b. Gamaliel? ‘Ullah replied: The difference between them is the case of an Ammonite and a Moabite proselyte. And both of them derived their respective views from none other than [the disqualification] of a widow by a High Priest. R. Jose reasons thus: As with a High Priest who married a widow, his seed is disqualified and he himself causes disqualification, so does any other person cause disqualification only when his seed is disqualified. R. Simeon b. Gamaliel, however, reasons thus: As with a High Priest who married a widow, all his seed is disqualified and he himself causes disqualification, so does only such a person cause disqualification, all whose seed is disqualified; an Ammonite and a Moabite are, therefore, excluded since not all their seed are disqualified. For a Master said: An Ammonite, but not an Ammonitess; a Moabite, but not a Moabitess. MISHNAH. THE VIOLATOR, THE SEDUCER AND THE IMBECILE CAN NEITHER DEPRIVE A WOMAN OF THE RIGHT OF EATING TERUMAH NOR CAN THEY BESTOW THE RIGHT UPON HER. IF THEY ARE, HOWEVER, UNFIT TO ENTER INTO THE ASSEMBLY OF ISRAEL THEY DO DEPRIVE A WOMAN OF HER RIGHT TO THE EATING OF TERUMAH. HOW? IF AN ISRAELITE HAD INTERCOURSE WITH THE DAUGHTER OF A PRIEST SHE MAY STILL CONTINUE TO EAT TERUMAH.

(1) Viz., a legitimate Israelite. Only in such a case does the widow or divorced woman regain her right of eating terumah.
(2) Their betrothal and marriage having no validity.
(3) That intercourse with a slave or an idolater causes her disqualification.

(11) A legitimate Israelite or Levite.
(12) A priest's daughter after she had been divorced by her husband or become a widow.

(15) An idolater, for instance, or a slave.
(16) The cohabitation with such a person having no legal effect whatsoever.
(17) That from the Scriptural text mentioned a relaxation of the law is to be deduced, its purpose being the indication that a priest's daughter is not disqualified even where she has issue from an idolater or a slave.

(18) If a priest's daughter is not disqualified, how much less the daughter of a Levite or of an Israelite. The purpose of the Scriptural text, therefore, must be taken to be the disqualification of the daughter of a priest. The inclusion of the daughter of a Levite and of an Israelite was, therefore, necessary to indicate that even if either of those was enjoying the privilege of eating terumah, by virtue of the rights of the children she had from a priest, she loses that privilege if she cohabited with an idolater or a slave even though the act resulted in no issue.

(25) Not for the purpose of the deduction made by R. Ishmael.
(26) To indicate that a priest's daughter who was the widow of an Israelite may not eat terumah if she has children, even after the death of her husband. Had no Scriptural text indicated this law it might have been assumed that she may eat terumah even if she had children from the Israelite.
(27) To allow her (cf. supra n. 4) to eat terumah where she has no issue from the Israelite. Had not Scripture indicated this law it might have been assumed that as the divorcee was forbidden to marry a priest so she was forbidden to eat terumah even if her union with the Israelite produced no issue.

XXII, 12) and consequently included among the persons who cause a woman's disqualification. Why, then, was it stated (supra 44b) that a woman so remarried to her first husband is permitted to marry a priest and, all the more, to eat terumah! (V. Rashi a.l. A BASTARD DEPRIVES A WOMAN¹³ OF THE PRIVILEGE OF EATING TERUMAH AND ALSO BESTOWS THE PRIVILEGE UPON HER.¹⁴ HOW? IF AN ISRAELITE'S DAUGHTER WAS MARRIED TO A PRIEST OR A PRIEST'S DAUGHTER WAS MARRIED TO AN ISRAELITE, AND SHE BORE A DAUGHTER BY HIM, AND THE DAUGHTER WENT AND MARRIED A SLAVE OR AN IDOLATER AND BORE A SON BY HIM, SUCH A SON IS A BASTARD; AND IF HIS MOTHER'S MOTHER WAS AN ISRAELITE'S DAUGHTER WHO WAS MARRIED TO A PRIEST, SHE MAY EAT TERUMAH; BUT IF SHE WAS A PRIEST'S DAUGHTER WHO WAS MARRIED TO AN ISRAELITE SHE MAY NOT EAT TERUMAH.

GEMARA. [Here] we learn what the Rabbis taught: If an imbecile or a minor married and died, their wives are exempt from halizah and from levirate marriage.

IF AN ISRAELITE HAD INTERCOURSE WITH THE DAUGHTER OF A PRIEST SHE MAY STILL CONTINUE TO EAT TERUMAH. IF SHE BECOMES PREGNANT SHE MAY NO LONGER EAT. Since she may not eat when she is definitely with child, precaution should be taken against the possibility that she might be with child? Did we not learn, ‘They must be kept apart for three months, since it is possible that they are pregnant”? Rabbah son of R. Huna replied: In respect of genealogy precautions were taken; in respect of terumah no such precautions were considered necessary. But was no such precaution considered necessary in respect of terumah? Surely, it was taught: ‘Here is your letter of divorce [which shall become effective] one hour before my death’, she is forbidden to eat terumah at once— In fact, said Rabbah son of R. Huna, precautions were taken in respect of legitimate marriage, but in respect of illegitimate intercourse no such precaution was considered necessary. But was such precaution, taken in respect of legitimate marriage? Surely, it was taught: If a priest’s daughter was married to an Israelite who died, she may perform her ritual immersion and eat terumah the same evening! — R. Hisda replied: She performs the immersion but may eat terumah only until the fortieth day. For if she is not found pregnant she never was pregnant; and if she is found pregnant, the semen, until the fortieth day, is only a mere fluid. Said Abaye to him: If so, read the final clause: If the embryo in her womb can be distinguished she is considered to have committed an offence retrospectively— The meaning is that she is considered to have committed an offence retrospectively to the fortieth day.

It was stated: Where a man cohabited with his betrothed in the house of his [future] father-in-law, Rab said: The child is a bastard; and Samuel said: The child is a shethuki. Raba said: Rab's view is reasonable in the case where the betrothed woman was suspected of illicit relations with strangers. Where, however, she is not suspected of illicit relations with strangers the child is ascribed to him. Said Raba: Whence do I infer this? From the statement, IF, HOWEVER, SHE GAVE BIRTH TO A CHILD SHE MAY EAT. For how is this to be understood? If it be suggested to refer to a woman who is suspected of illicit relations with him only but not with strangers, why should she be allowed to eat terumah when she bore a child! Consequently it must refer to a woman who was suspected of illicit relations with him only but not with strangers. Now, if there where she is forbidden to the one as well as to the other, the child is regarded as his how much more so here where she is forbidden to all other men and permitted to him. Said Abaye to him: It may still be maintained that Rab is of the opinion that wherever she is suspected of illicit relations with him, the child is deemed to be a bastard even where she is not suspected of such relations with others. What is the reason? Because it is assumed that as she exposed herself to the man who betrothed her so she exposed herself to others also; but our Mishnah deals with the case where both of them were imprisoned in the same gaol.

Others say: Where he cohabited with her, no one disputes that the child is regarded as his; but the statement made was in the following form. Where a betrothed woman became pregnant, Rab ruled: Such a child is a bastard; and Samuel ruled: The child is a shethuki. Raba said: Rab's view is reasonable where the woman was not suspected of illicit relations with him, but was suspected of such relations with others.

While the latter, as a violator or seducer, cannot confer the privilege, the son can.

If she is a priest's daughter entitled to eat terumah.

As explained supra 68b.

If the slave is the offspring of a priest's daughter who was married to an Israelite now dead, he does not deprive her of the right of returning to the house of her father again to eat terumah. V. infra for further explanation.

The child of a bondwoman, though of an Israelite father, is deemed a slave, as deduced from Ex. XXI, 4.

If her husband and her son (the father of the slave) are dead. Though the son of a son (like a son) confers upon his grandmother the right of eating terumah (v. infra 70a), the offspring of a union between an Israelite and a bondwoman is not regarded as the legitimate son of his father but as the child of his mother.

The slave not being regarded as legitimate offspring (cf. supra n. 2) to deprive her of the privilege.

If she is a priest's daughter entitled to eat terumah.

If she was the daughter of an Israelite who was married to a priest now dead.

Even after the death of his father.

As the living offspring of an Israelite.

In the statement that an imbecile's betrothal neither confers upon a woman, nor deprives her of the right of eating terumah (v. our Mishnah), thus affirming that an imbecile's kinyan has no validity.

And should, in consequence, be forbidden to eat terumah immediately after intercourse had taken place. Why then was it stated, IF AN ISRAELITE HAD INTERCOURSE. . . SHE MAY STILL CONTINUE TO EAT TERUMAH?

Women who have been exchanged for one another. (V. the Mishnah, supra 33b).

I.e., they are forbidden to cohabit with their husbands.

Supra 33b. Similar precaution, then, should have been taken here also!

The Mishnah cited is concerned with safeguarding the status of a legitimate child by taking the necessary precautions to distinguish him from the illegitimate.

In the interests of the purity of family life special precautions were necessary.

To his wife, the daughter of an Israelite.

, but where she is suspected of illicit relations with him, the child is regarded as his, although she is also suspected of such relations with others. Said Raba: Whence do I derive this? From the Statement, IF, HOWEVER, SHE GAVE BIRTH TO A CHILD, SHE MAY EAT. For how is this to be understood? If it be suggested to refer to a woman who is suspected of illicit relations with him but not with strangers, was it at all necessary to state that she may eat terumah? Consequently it must refer to a woman who was suspected of illicit relations with strangers also. Now, if there, where she is forbidden to the one as well as to the other, how much more so here where she is forbidden to any other man and is permitted to him. Said Abaye to him: It may still be maintained that Rab is of the opinion that wherever she is suspected of illicit relations with strangers the child is deemed to be a bastard even if she is also suspected of such relations with him; and our Mishnah deals with one who had not been suspected at all.

A SLAVE, BY HIS COHABITATION, DEPRIVES A WOMAN OF THE PRIVILEGE OF EATING TERUMAH etc. What is the reason? — Scripture stated, The wife and her children shall be etc. So far I only know of her own child; whence her child's child? It was consequently stated, And have no child, implying ‘any child whatsoever’. So far I only know of a legitimate child; whence the illegitimate child? It was stated, And have no [en lah] child, which implies, ‘hold an enquiry concerning her.’ But from this text, surely, the deduction concerning a child's child was made! — No Scriptural text is really required for the inclusion of one's child's child, since children's children are like children; if a text is at all required it is for the inclusion of an illegitimate child.

A BASTARD DEPRIVES A WOMAN OF THE PRIVILEGE OF EATING TERUMAH AND ALSO BESTOWS THE PRIVILEGE UPON HER. Our Rabbis taught: And have no child. So far I only know of her own child; whence her child's child? It was consequently stated, And have no child, implying ‘any child whatsoever’. So far I only know of a legitimate child; whence the illegitimate child? It was stated, And have no [en lah] child, which implies, ‘hold an enquiry concerning her.’ But from this text, surely, the deduction concerning a child's child was made! — No Scriptural text is really required for the inclusion of one's child's child, since children's children are like children; if a text is at all required it is for the inclusion of an illegitimate child.

A HIGH PRIEST SOMETIMES DEPRIVES A WOMAN OF HER RIGHT. Our Rabbis taught:
[The grandmother might justly say], 'I would [willingly] be an atonement for my grandson, the little cruse who bestows upon me the privilege of eating terumah, but would not be an atonement for my grandson, the big jar who deprives me of the privilege of eating terumah.

CHAPTER VIII

GEMARA. It was taught: R. Eliezer stated, Whence is it deduced that an uncircumcised [priest] may not eat terumah? A sojourner and a hired servant were mentioned in connection with the paschal lamb, and A sojourner and a hired servant were also mentioned in respect of terumah, as the paschal lamb, in connection with which ‘A sojourner and a hired servant’ were mentioned, is forbidden to the uncircumcised, so is terumah, in respect of which ‘A sojourner and a hired servant’ were mentioned, forbidden to the uncircumcised. R. Akiba stated: This deduction is unnecessary. Since it was stated, What man soever, the uncircumcised also is included.

The Master said, 'R. Eliezer stated, "A sojourner and a hired servant were mentioned in connection with the paschal lamb, and "A sojourner and a hired servant" were also mentioned in respect of terumah," as the paschal lamb, in connection with which "A sojourner and a hired servant" were mentioned, is forbidden to the uncircumcised, so is terumah, in respect of which "A sojourner and a hired servant" were mentioned, forbidden to the uncircumcised. Is it free for deduction? For if it is not free, the objection might be raised that the paschal lamb may be different since in connection with it one may also incur penalties for pigul, nothar and uncleanness! — It is certainly free for the deduction. Which expression is free? Is it that of terumah? Surely it is required for its own purpose. For it was taught: A sojourner means one who is acquired for life and a hired servant means one who is acquired for a number of years. But let ‘sojourner’ only be mentioned and a ‘hired servant’ be omitted and one would infer: If one who is acquired for life is not permitted to eat terumah how much less one who is acquired only for a number of years! If so, it might have been assumed that ‘a sojourner’ means one who is acquired for a number of years [and that only he may not eat terumah], but that one who is acquired for life may eat, hence the insertion of the expression, ‘a hired servant’, which explains the meaning of sojourner, [viz.,] that it signifies one who, though acquired for life, may not eat! — But [in fact] the one mentioned in respect of the paschal lamb is free for deduction. For what could be the meaning of ‘A sojourner and a hired servant’ which the All Merciful wrote in connection with the paschal lamb? If it be suggested that it means the actual sojourner and hired servant [could it have been imagined] that [an Israelite] is exempt from the Paschal lamb because he is a sojourner or a hired servant? Surely, we have it as an established law in regard to terumah that such a person is not permitted to eat it.

(1) Certainly not; since the child is obviously the son of the priest.
(2) Lit., ‘but no’.
In our Mishnah.

Should the child be regarded as the son of the man who betrothed her.

The case of the betrothed.

The man who betrothed her.

Either in respect of the violator or seducer on the one hand or in respect of any others. All that our Mishnah teaches is that if cohabitation with the former took place, even if only once, the child is regarded as his.

Why is he not regarded as the offspring of the priest? V. our Mishnah and supra p. 466, n. 16.

Emphasis on her.

Against deducing terumah from the Paschal lamb.
From terumah, i.e., subject to greater restrictions.

Kareth if the transgression was wilful, and a sin-offering if unwitting.

How then could terumah which is not surrounded by such restrictions be deduced from it?

Of the two expressions, ‘A sojourner and a hired servant’.

Lev. XXII, 20.

Lit., ‘an everlasting possession’, i.e., a Hebrew servant who, on refusing to go out free, has had his ear bored. (Cf. Ex. XXI, 5f).

The ordinary Hebrew servant who remains the property of his master for six years only, after which he goes out free for nothing (v. Ex. XXI, 2).

Who is in fact his master's absolute property.

Since he is his master's absolute possession.

Since the absolute property of his master.

Since a hired servant implies one who is acquired for a period, the other expression cannot refer to the same class of servant, but to one acquired for life. E.V. a sojourner (rt. ישב ‘to abide’) implies longer service than that of the E.V., hired servant.

How, then, since the expression is required for the laws of terumah, could it be suggested that the expression, ‘a sojourner and a hired servant’, mentioned in connection with terumah, is free for deduction?

The expression ‘A sojourner and a hired servant’.

Ex. XII, 45, a sojourner . . . shall not eat thereof.

I.e., a Hebrew servant who (a) serves his master for life or (b) for a period of years. Cf. supra p. 474, nn. 14 and 15.

which proves¹ that his master does not acquire his person² so that here also³ his master does not acquire his person!⁴ [The expression]⁵ must consequently [have been written] for the purpose of the deduction.⁶

But is it⁷ not free in one direction only,⁸ while R. Eliezer⁹ was heard to state [that an analogy between expressions of which only] one¹⁰ is free¹¹ may be drawn, but may also be refuted!¹² — Since [the expressions]¹³ are not required [for their own context]¹⁴ one of them is allotted to the law¹⁵ in respect of which the inference is made¹⁶ and the other is allotted to the law from which the inference is made,¹⁷ so that a word analogy is obtained which is free in both directions.

Might⁸ [not the deduction be made:]¹⁹ As the paschal lamb is forbidden to an onan²⁰ so is terumah forbidden to an onan²¹ — R. Jose son of R. Hanina replied: Scripture stated, ‘There shall no common man,²² I commanded you concerning its prohibition to the common man²³ but not concerning that of the onan. But might it be suggested: But not the uncircumcised!²⁴ Surely ‘A sojourner and a hired servant’²⁵ was written,²⁶ And what reason do you see?²⁷ — It is logical to infer that the case of the uncircumcised is to be included, since²⁸ it involves the absence of an act²⁹ and that act is one affecting the man's own body; [the uncircumcised] is punishable by kareth;³⁰ the law²⁹ was in force before the Revelation;³¹ and the [non]-circumcision of one's male children and slaves debars [one from eating of the paschal lamb].³² On the contrary; the case of the onan should have been included,³³ since mourning is an ever-present possibility,³⁴ is common to men as well as to women, and no man has the power to cure himself of it!³⁵ — Those³⁶ are more in number.

Raba said: Even if those³⁶ were not more in number, you could not suggest that uncircumcision, which is actually mentioned in respect of the Paschal lamb, should be excluded³⁷ while the mourning of an onan, which in the case of the paschal lamb itself was deduced from that of the tithe,³⁸ should be deduced from it.

Might\(^3\) [it not be said:]\(^4\) As the [non]-circumcision of one's male children and slaves debars one from the eating of the paschal lamb, so should the [non]-circumcision of one's male children and slaves debar one from the eating of terumah! — Scripture stated, When thou hast circumcised him, then shall he eat thereof;\(^1\) the [non]-circumcision of one's male children and slaves debars one from the eating thereof, of the Paschal lamb only; the [non]-circumcision of one's male children and slaves does not, however, debar one from the eating of terumah. If so,\(^2\) [why not] say, But no uncircumcised person shall eat thereof\(^3\) [also implies:] He may not eat ‘thereof’ only but may eat terumah\(^4\) — Surely it was written A sojourner and a hired servant.\(^5\) And what reason do you see?\(^6\) — It is only logical to include a man's own circumcision, since the act is performed on his own person and its neglect is punishable by kareth. On the contrary; the circumcision of one's male children and slaves should have been excluded because it may occur at any time! — The former restrictions are more in number. And if you prefer I might say that even if those were not more in number your suggestion could not be entertained; for is there anything which is not debarred by his own state of uncircumcision but is debared by that of the other?

Now that it has been said that the expression. ‘Thereof,’ was introduced for expository purposes. what\(^7\) was the purpose of the text, There shall no alien eat of it?\(^8\) — Only with regard to it\(^9\)

\(^{1}\) Since a Canaanite slave, whose body is acquired by the master, may eat of his terumah.

\(^{6}\) The verse would then be referring to a non-jew, ‘a sojourner’ denoting a resident alien and ‘a hired servant’ an idolater. This, however, would be included in uncircumcised’ (Ex. Xli, 48) and ‘alien’ (verse 43). Consequently the verse must have been written for deduction (Tosaf.).

does apostasy disqualify,¹ but in respect of tithe, apostasy does not disqualify.

What was the purpose of. But no uncircumcised person shall eat thereof?²— ‘Thereof’³ only may he not eat, but he may eat of the unleavened bread and bitter herbs.⁴ And it was necessary for Scripture to specify ⁵ both ‘Uncircumcised’ and ‘There shall no alien.’ For had the All Merciful mentioned the ‘uncircumcised’ only it might have been assumed [that the prohibition applies only to him], because he is repulsive. but not to an alien who is not repulsive. And had the All Merciful written only ‘There shall no alien’ it might have been assumed [that only he is subject to the prohibition], because his heart is not directed towards heaven, but not the uncircumcised whose heart is directed towards heaven. [Hence both were] required.

What⁶ was the purpose of repeating the expression. ‘Of it’,⁷ twice? — As expounded by Rabbah in the name of R. Isaac.⁸

The Master said, ‘R. Akiba stated: This deduction is unneces sary. Since it was stated, What man soever,⁹ the uncircumcised also was included’.¹⁰ Might it be suggested that it¹¹ includes the onan?¹² R. Jose b. Hanina replied: Scripture stated, There shall no common man,¹³ I commanded you concerning its prohibition to a common man¹⁴ but not concerning that of an onan.¹² Might it be suggested: But not the uncircumcised?¹⁵ — Surely, what man soever’ was written.¹⁶ And what reason do you see?¹⁷ — It is logical that the case of the uncircumcised should be included, since¹⁸ it involves the absence of an act¹⁹ and that act is one affecting the man's own body; [the uncircumcised] is punishable by kareth;²⁰ the law²¹ was in force before the Revelation;²² and the [non]-circumcision of one's male children and slaves debars [one from eating the paschal lamb].²³ On the contrary; the case of the onan should have been included,²⁴ since mourning is an ever-present possibility;²⁵ is common to men as well as women, and no man has the power to cure himself of It.²⁶
— Those are more in number. Raba said: Even if those were not more in number, you could not make your suggestion. For Scripture stated, What man soever. Now what disability is it that is applicable to a man and not to a woman? You must, of course, say that it is uncircumcision.

What expository use does R. Akiba make of the expression A sojourner and a hired servant? R. Shemaia replied: To include a circumcised Arab and a circumcised Gibeonite. Are these, however, regarded as circumcised at all? Surely we learned: [If a man said]. ‘Konam, if I benefit from the uncircumcised’, he may benefit from uncircumcised Israelites but is forbidden to benefit from circumcised idolaters. [If he said]. ‘Konam, if I benefit from the circumcised’, he is permitted to benefit from circumcised idolaters but is forbidden to benefit from uncircumcised Israelites. — But In truth [the text referred to] includes a proselyte who had been circumcised but did not perform the prescribed ritual immersion; and a child who was born circumcised, holding that it is necessary to provide for a few drops of the blood of the covenant to flow; while R. Eliezer follows his own view, he having stated that ‘A proselyte who has been circumcised, though he has not performed his ritual immersion, is regarded as a proper proselyte’. and he is also of the opinion that it is not necessary to provide for any drops of the blood of the covenant to flow where a child was born circumcised.

What expository use, however, does R. Eliezer make of the expression. What man soever — The Torah, [he maintains], speaks in the language of [ordinary] men.

R. Hama b. Ukba inquired: May an uncircumcised child be anointed with the oil of terumah? Does non-circumcision in the pre-circumcision period constitute a bar or not? — R. Zera replied: Come and hear: I only know [of the command] concerning the circumcision of the male children [which he has] at the time of the preparation [of the paschal lamb]. and concerning the slaves [which he has] at the time of the eating thereof; whence, however, is it deduced that the restriction mentioned in respect of this category is to be applied to the other, and that of the other to this one? Then was specifically stated in both categories so that an analogy between the two might be drawn. Now, it is quite possible to imagine a man's slaves as being with him at the time of the eating of the paschal lamb but not at the time of its preparation, when, for instance, he bought them in the meantime. How is it possible, however, that a person's male children should be in existence during the eating and not during the preparation? Obviously only when birth occurred in the interval between the preparation and the eating. Thus it may be inferred that uncircumcision in the pre-circumcision period constitutes a legal status of uncircumcision. Said Rabbah: Do you understand this? The All Merciful said, Let all his males be circumcised, and then let him come near and keep it; but such a child is not fit to be circumcised. But what are we dealing with here? With a child who recovered from a fever. Then let him be granted [a period of convalescence of] full seven days. — Where he was already granted the seven days' period. He should, then, have been circumcised in the morning. — We require Scripture states, Let all his males (i.e., his children) be circumcised, and then let him (i.e., the master) . . . keep it (Ex. XII, 48); one's own keeping (v. supra n. 5) is thus made dependent on the circumcision of one's children.

Since Scripture stated, Every man's servant...when...circumcised. then shall he (i.e., his master) eat (Ex. XII, 44); one's own eating of the lamb is thus dependent on the circumcision of one's slaves.

(70) As soon as the child emerged into the air of the world the closed organ is opened and the opened is closed, for otherwise he could not survive even for one hour! — Here we deal with a case where the heat of the fever sustained him. Whose fever? If ‘his own fever’ be suggested, he should, if such was the case, be allowed a full period of seven days! — It means, where the fever of his mother sustained him. And if you prefer I might say that the statement applies only when the child does not cry. When, however, it cries it undoubtedly survives.

R. Johanan stated in the name of R. Bana'ah: An uncircumcised [Israelite] is eligible to receive sprinkling;\(^{18}\) for so we find that our ancestors\(^{19}\) received sprinkling\(^{20}\) while they were still uncircumcised, since it is said, And the people came up out of the Jordan on the tenth day of the first month,\(^{21}\) but on the tenth they were not circumcised owing to the fatigue of the journey; when, then, [could the sprinkling] have been performed?\(^{22}\) Obviously\(^{23}\) while they were still uncircumcised.\(^{24}\) But is it not possible that they prepared no Paschal lamb at all? — This suggestion cannot be entertained at all, since it is written, And they kept the Passover.\(^{25}\) Mar Zutra demurred: It is possible that it\(^{26}\) was a paschal lamb that was prepared in uncleanness!\(^{27}\) — R. Ashi retorted: It was explicitly taught: They were circumcised, they performed their ritual ablutions, and they prepared their paschal lambs in a state of cleanness.

Rabbah b. Isaac stated in the name of Rab: The commandment of uncovering the corona at circumcision\(^{28}\) was not given to Abraham; for it is said, At that time the Lord said unto Joshua: ‘Make thee knives of flint etc.’ \(^{19}\) But is it not possible [that this applied to] those who were not previously circumcised; for it is written, For all the people that came out were circumcised,\(^{29}\) but all the people that were born etc.?\(^{29}\) — If so,\(^{30}\) why the expression. ‘Again!’ Consequently\(^{31}\) it must apply to the uncovering of the corona.\(^{32}\) Why, then,\(^{33}\) the expression, ‘A second time?’\(^{34}\) — To compare the termination of the circumcision with its commencement; as the commencement of the circumcision is essential\(^{35}\) so is the termination of circumcision\(^{36}\) essential;\(^{37}\) for we learned, ‘These are the shreds which render circumcision invalid: Flesh which covers the greater part of the corona; and [a priest whose circumcision was so defective] is not permitted to eat terumah’; and Rabina, or it might be said, R. Jeremiah b. Abba, stated in the name of Rab: Flesh which covers the greater part of the height of the corona.\(^{38}\) and if you prefer I might say: Because the North wind¹ did not blow upon them. For it was taught: In all the forty years during which Israel was in the wilderness the North wind did not blow upon them. What was the reason? — If you wish I might say: Because they were under divine displeasure.² And if you prefer I might say: In order that the clouds of glory₃ might not be scattered.

R. Papa said: Hence, no circumcision may be performed on a cloudy day or on a day when the South wind⁴ blows; nor may one be bled⁵ on such a day. At the present time, however, since many people are in the habit of disregarding these precautions,⁶ The Lord preserveth the simple.⁷

Our Rabbis taught: In all the forty years during which Israel was in the wilderness⁸ there was not a day on which the North wind⁹ did not blow at the midnight hour; for it is said, And it came to pass at midnight, that the Lord smote all the firstborn etc.¹⁰ How is the deduction arrived at? — By this we were taught that an acceptable time¹¹ is an essential.¹²

R. Huna said: A mashuk¹³ is Pentateuchally permitted to eat terumah but has been forbidden to do so by Rabbinical ordinance, because he appears to be like one uncircumcised.

An objection was raised: The mashuk requires to be [re-] circumcised¹⁴ — Only by Rabbinical ordinance.
But he who raised the objection on what ground did he raise it, when it was definitely stated ‘requires’? — He misunderstood the final clause: R. Judah said, He should not be circumcised because such an operation is dangerous in his case. They said to him: ‘Surely many were circumcised in the days of Ben Koziba and yet gave birth to sons and daughters, [such circumcision being lawful] as, in fact, it is said in Scripture, Must needs be circumcised, even a hundred times. And, furthermore, it is said, He hath broken My covenant which includes the mashuk. What need was there for the additional text? — In case you might argue that Must needs be circumcised includes only the shreds which render a circumcision invalid so he added. Come and hear, He hath broken My covenant which includes the mashuk. He consequently thought that, as the Talmud made use of a Scriptural text, the law must be pentateuchal; but the fact is that it is only Rabbinical, and the Scriptural text is a mere prop.

An objection was raised: A tumtum may not eat terumah, but his women and slaves may eat of it. A mashuk and one born circumcised may eat of it. The hermaphrodite may eat terumah but not holy food while the tumtum may eat neither terumah nor holy food. At all events, it was taught here that the mashuk and one born circumcised may eat terumah; is not this a refutation against R. Huna? — It is indeed a refutation.

The Master said, ‘A tumtum may not eat terumah, but his women and slaves may eat of it’. By what legal act could a tumtum acquire his wives? If it be suggested, by betrothing them; for it was taught, ‘If a tumtum betrothed a woman, his betrothal is valid and if he was betrothed by a man his betrothal is also valid’, it might be retorted that the validity was intended only as a restrictive measure was it, however, intended also as a relaxation of a law? He is possibly a woman, and no woman, surely, may betroth a woman! — Abaye replied: Where his testes can be distinguished externally. Raba replied: ‘What is the meaning of “his women”? — His mother’. But [is not the case of his mother] self-evident? It might have been presumed that only one capable of procreation bestows the privilege of eating terumah, but one who is incapable does not bestow it, hence we were taught [that even a tumtum may bestow the privilege].

Come and hear: A tumtum may eat neither terumah nor holy food. According to Abaye, this is quite correct, since the first clause speaks of the certainly non-circumcised person while the final clause speaks of the doubtful one; according to Raba, however, what need was there for the mention of the tumtum in the final clause? — The meaning of tumtum is ‘the uncircumcised’. If, however, one whose status as a non-circumcised person is in doubt is not permitted to eat terumah, would any one who is definitely an uncircumcised person be permitted to eat it? — The final clause is an interpretation of the first: Why may not ‘a tumtum eat terumah”? Because he might have the status of an uncircumcised person, and a man who is uncircumcised ‘may eat neither terumah nor holy food’.

May it be assumed that this is a question in dispute among Tannaim: A mashuk, and a proselyte whose conversion took place while he was already circumcised, and a child, the proper time of whose circumcision had passed, and all other circumcised persons, this means to include one who has two foreskins, may be circumcised in the daytime only. R. Eleazar b. Simeon, however, said: At the proper time.

Ex. XII, 29.

Midnight.
children may be circumcised in the daytime only; and if not at the proper time they may be circumcised both by day and by night,1 Do they not differ on the following principle: While one Master2 is of the opinion that the circumcision of a mashuk is a pentateuchal law, the other Master3 is of the opinion that the circumcision of the mashuk is only a Rabbinical ordinance?4 — And can you understand this?5 Is there any authority who maintains that the duty to circumcise a child whose proper time of circumcision had passed6 is only Rabbinical!7 But the fact is that both8 agree that the circumcision of a mashuk is a Rabbinical ordinance,9 and that the duty to circumcise a child whose proper time of circumcision had passed, is Pentateuchal. Here,10 however, their difference depends on the following principle: One Master11 holds that [the conjunctive in the expression]. And in the day12 is to be expounded;13 and the other Master3 is of the opinion that [the conjunctive in] And in the day12 is not to be expounded.14 [The exposition here is of the same nature] as the following:15 When R. Johanan was once sitting [at his studies] and expounding that ‘nothar16 at its proper time may be burned in the daytime only, and if not at its proper time, it may be burned either in the day or in the night’. R. Eleazar raised an objection: I only know that a child whose circumcision takes place on the eighth day must be circumcised in the daytime only; whence, however, is it deduced that the case of a child whose circumcision takes place on the ninth, tenth, eleventh or twelfth17 is also included? Because it was expressly stated, ‘And in the day’;18 and even he19 who bases no expositions on a Waw does base his exposition on the basis of a Waw and a He20 who, though forbidden to eat terumah, is permitted to prepare the red heifer.21 The case of the tebul yom,22 however, might be different, since he is also permitted to eat tithe!23 — Are we speaking of eating?24 We speak only of touching: If a tebul yom who is forbidden to touch terumah is permitted [to occupy himself] with the red heifer,25 how much more so the uncircumcised who is permitted to touch terumah!

R. Eleazar stated: The sprinkling26 performed28 by an uncircumcised person is valid, for his status is similar to that of a tebul yom29 who, though forbidden to eat terumah, is permitted to prepare30 the red heifer.31

The case of the tebul yom,29 however, might be different, since he is also permitted to eat tithe!32 — Are we speaking of eating?33 We speak only of touching: If a tebul yom who is forbidden to touch terumah is permitted [to occupy himself] with the red heifer,30 how much more so the uncircumcised who is permitted to touch terumah!

The same [law] was also taught [elsewhere]: The sprinkling34 performed35 by an uncircumcised man is valid; and such an incident once happened, and the Sages declared his sprinkling to be valid.
An objection was raised: If a tumtum performed sanctification, his sanctification is invalid, because he [has the status of the person whose uncircumcision is a matter of doubt, and such a person is forbidden to perform sanctification. If an hermaphrodite, however, performed sanctification, his sanctification is valid. R. Judah said: Even if an hermaphrodite performed sanctification his act has no validity, because [his sex might] possibly be that of a woman, and a woman is ineligible to perform sanctification. At all events it was taught here that the uncircumcised or the person whose uncircumcision is a matter of doubt is forbidden to perform sanctification. R. Joseph replied: This Tanna is one of the school of R. Akiba who include the uncircumcised in the same prohibition as that of the unclean; as it was taught: R. Akiba said, ‘What man soever includes also the uncircumcised’. Raba related: I was once sitting before R. Joseph when I raised the following difficulty: Then the Tanna should not have omitted to state. ‘The uncircumcised and the unclean’, and one would at once suggest that the author was R. Akiba — But does he not? Surely it was taught: The uncircumcised and the unclean are exempt from appearing at the Festivals! — There [the case is different], because he is a repulsive person.

They follow their own respective views. For it was taught: All are permitted to perform sanctification, with the exception of the deaf, the imbecile and the minor. R. Judah permits in the case of the minor but regards a woman and an hermaphrodite as unfit. What is the Rabbi’s reason? — Because it is written, And for the unclean they shall take of the ashes of the burning of the purification from sin, those who are ineligible for the gathering are also ineligible for the sanctification, but those who are eligible for the gathering are also eligible for the sanctification, And R. Judah — He can answer you: If so, Scripture should have used the expression ‘He shall take’, why then, And they shall take? To indicate that even those who are ineligible there are eligible here. If so, a woman also should be eligible! Shall he put but not ‘Shall she put’. And the Rabbis? — Had it been written, ‘He shall take’ and ‘Shall he put’, it might have been assumed that only one individual must take and only one must put, hence did the All Merciful write, And they shall take. And had the All Merciful written, ‘And they shall take’ and also ‘Shall they put’. it might have been assumed that two must take and two must put, hence did the All Merciful write, And they shall take and Shall he put. [to indicate that the rites are duly performed] even if two take and one put.

(13) Since the statement, In the eighth day the flesh of his foreskin shall be circumcised (ibid.) would have sufficiently indicated that circumcision must be performed in the daytime, the addition of the conjunction waw is regarded as an indication that even a circumcision that takes place after its proper time must be performed in the daytime only. And the case of the mashuk was, by Rabbinical ordinance, given the same force as that of the child.
(14) Nothing may be inferred from the use of the conjunctive Waw, not even the case of the child whose proper time of circumcision had passed, much less that of the circumcision of the mashuk, which is altogether a Rabbinical enactment. The circumcision of either may consequently be performed in the night also.

And the clean person shall sprinkle upon the unclean,1 [since] clean [was mentioned]2 the implication must be that he is [somewhat unclean.3 Thus it was taught that a tebul yom4 is permitted to prepare the red heifer.

R. Shesheth was asked: Is an uncircumcised person permitted to eat tithe.5 Is tithe deduced from the paschal lamb in the case of circumcision6 as the paschal lamb is deduced from tithe in the case of the mourning of an onan,7 or may only the major [sanctity] be deduced from the minor but not the minor from the major [sanctity]? He replied. You have learned this: In respect of terumah and the first ripe fruits8 one may incur the penalties of death9 and a fifth;10 these furthermore are forbidden to non-priests, they are the [undisputed] property of the priest,11 they are neutralized12 in one hundred and one,13 and they require washing of the hands,14 and sunset,15 All these restrictions apply to terumah and bikkurim only but not to tithe.16 Now, if that were so,17 it should have been stated here, ‘The uncircumcised is forbidden to eat of them, which prohibition is not applicable to tithe’!18 — He might have taught some19 and omitted others.20

What else did he omit that he should have omitted this?21 — He omitted the following. In the final clause while it was stated: ‘Some restrictions apply to tithe and the first ripe fruits, but not to terumah, since tithe and the first ripe fruits must be brought to the appointed place,22 they require confession23 and are forbidden to an onan, and R. Simeon permits [the bikkurim to an onan]; they are,24 furthermore, subject to removal;25 but R. Simeon exempts them’,26 [the laws that] they may not be burned27 even when levitically unclean.28 and that the man¹ who eats of them while they themselves are levitically unclean is to be flogged,² and that these laws do not apply to terumah, were not stated.³ This proves clearly that only some were taught and others were omitted.⁴

The Master said,⁵ ‘And are forbidden to an onan, and R. Simeon permits [the bikkurim to an onan]’.⁶ Whence do they derive their views? — From the Scriptural text, Thou mayest not eat within thy gates the tithe of thy corn, or of thy wine, or of thine oil or the firstlings of thy herd⁵ etc. nor the offering of thy hand,² and a Master said that ‘the offering of thy hand’ refers to bikkurim;⁷ and bikkurim were compared to tithe: As tithe is forbidden to the onan so are bikkurim also forbidden to the onan. And R. Simeon?⁸ — The All Merciful called them terumah: As terumah is permitted to the onan⁹ so are bikkurim permitted to the onan.

‘They are, furthermore, subject to removal; but R. Simeon permits them’. One Master¹⁰ compares [bikkurim to tithe]¹¹ and the other Master does not.

‘They may not be burned when levitically unclean, and the man who eats of them while they themselves are levitically unclean is to be flogged’. Whence is this derived? — From what was taught: R. Simeon said, Neither have I burned¹² thereof, being unclean,¹³ whether I was unclean and it was clean or I was clean and it was unclean. I do not know, however, where one was forbidden to eat it’.¹⁴ (But, surely, in relation to it, the uncleanness of the body was specifically stated: The soul that touches any such shall be unclean until the even, and shall not eat of the holy things,¹⁵ unless he bathe his flesh in waters — This is the question: Whence the prohibition [to eat it] where the thing itself is unclean?¹⁶ It was expressly stated,¹⁷ Thou mayest not eat within thy gates the tithe of thy corn¹⁸ but further on¹⁹ it was stated. Thou shalt eat it within thy gates; the unclean and the clean may eat it alike as the gazelle, and as the hart,²⁰ and at the school of R. Ishmael it was taught that the unclean and the clean may eat together even on the same table, and the same plate, and no precautions need be taken. Thus the All Merciful stated, ‘That, concerning which I told you there, Thou shalt eat it within thy gates, thou may not eat here’.

‘That these laws do not apply to terumah’. Whence do we derive this? — R. Abbahu replied in the name of R. Johanan: Scripture stated, Neither have I burnt thereof, being unclean, you may not burn ‘thereof’, but you may burn the oil of terumah if it has become unclean. Might it not be suggested: You may not burn any ‘thereof’. but you may burn holy oil that became unclean? — This, surely, may be inferred a minori ad majus: If in respect of the tithe, the sanctity of which is of a minor character, the Torah stated, Neither have I burnt thereof, being unclean, how much more so in respect of holy food the Sanctity of which is of a major character. If so, terumah also might be inferred a minori ad majus! — Surely ‘thereof’ was written. And what reason do you see? It is logical that holy food should not be excluded, since [the following restrictions also apply to it:] piggul, nothar, sacrifice, me’ilah, kareth, and it is also forbidden to an onan. On the contrary; terumah should not be excluded since [to it apply the restrictions of] death. a fifth, it cannot be redeemed and it is forbidden to non-priests! Those are more in number. And if you prefer I might say: Kareth is regarded as being of greater importance.

‘The man that eats of them while they themselves are leviitically unclean is to be flogged, and that these laws do not apply to terumah’. He is apparently exempt only from flogging, but a prohibition remains. Whence is this derived? — Scripture stated. Thou shalt eat it within thy gates. only ‘it’ but not any other; and a negative precept that is derived from a positive one [has only the force of] a positive.

R. Ashi said: From the first clause also you may infer that the Tanna taught some and omitted others, since he did not state

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 74a

‘And they apply in all the years of the septennial cycle and cannot be redeemed’, and that ‘this does not apply to the [second] tithe’. This proves it.

Come and hear: ‘If shreds which render the circumcision invalid remain, he may not eat terumah, nor the paschal lamb, nor holy food, nor tithe’. Does not tithe refer to the tithe of the corn? — No; the tithe of cattle. But is not the tithe of cattle the same as holy food? — Even on your view are we not told here of the paschal lamb and yet ‘holy food’ also is mentioned! — One can well understand why it was necessary to mention both the paschal lamb and holy food; for if the paschal lamb only had been stated it might have been assumed that it only is forbidden, because uncircumcision was written in Scripture in connection with the paschal lamb, but not holy food. And if holy food only had been stated it might have been assumed that what was meant by holy food was the paschal lamb. What need, however, was there for the mention here of the tithe of cattle? — [No, say,] rather, tithe refers to the first tithe; and this [teaching] is that of R. Meir who holds that the first tithe is forbidden to non-priests.

Come and hear: Since R. Hiyya b. Rab of Difti has learned, ‘An uncircumcised is forbidden to eat of both tithes’, is not one the tithe of the corn and the other the tithe of the cattle! — Here also the first tithe was meant and the ruling is that of R. Meir.

Come and hear: ‘An onan is forbidden to eat of tithe but is permitted to eat terumah, and [to engage] in the [preparation of] the red heifer; a tebul yom is forbidden to eat terumah, but is permitted [to engage] in [the preparation of] the red heifer, and to eat tithe; and he who was still short of atonement is forbidden [to engage] in [the preparation of] the red heifer, but is permitted to eat terumah and tithe'. Now, if it were so,\textsuperscript{13} it should have been stated, ‘The uncircumcised is forbidden to eat terumah but is permitted to engage in [the preparation of] the red heifer\textsuperscript{14} and to eat tithe!’\textsuperscript{15} — This represents the view of a Tanna of the school of R. Akiba, who includes the uncircumcised, like the unclean, in the prohibition.\textsuperscript{16} As it was taught: Any man soever\textsuperscript{17} includes the uncircumcised.

Who is the Tanna who differs from R. Akiba?\textsuperscript{18} — It is the Tanna who [is in disagreement with] R. Joseph the Babylonian. For it was taught: The burning\textsuperscript{19} by an onan or by one who is still short of atonement is valid; but R. Joseph the Babylonian said: That of the onan is valid but that of him who is short of atonement is not valid.\textsuperscript{20}

R. Isaac also is of the opinion that the uncircumcised is forbidden to eat [second] tithe. For R. Isaac stated: Whence is it deduced that the uncircumcised is forbidden to eat [second] tithe? ‘Thereof’ was stated in respect of [the] tithe,\textsuperscript{21} and ‘thereof’ was also stated in respect of the paschal lamb;\textsuperscript{21} as the paschal lamb, in respect of which ‘thereof’ was used, is forbidden to the uncircumcised, so is [the] tithe, in respect of which ‘thereof’ was used, forbidden to the uncircumcised. Is it\textsuperscript{22} free for deduction? For if it is not free, it could be objected: The Paschal lamb is rightly subject to the restriction\textsuperscript{23} since one may incur in respect of it the penalties for piggul,\textsuperscript{24} nothar’\textsuperscript{25} and levitical uncleanness;\textsuperscript{26} — It is indeed free for the deduction. Which\textsuperscript{26} is free? Raba replied in the name of R. Isaac: ‘Thereof’ is written three times in connection with the paschal lamb.\textsuperscript{27} One is required for the paschal lamb itself;\textsuperscript{28} one for the analogy;\textsuperscript{29} and as to the third, according to him who maintains that Scripture intended\textsuperscript{30} a positive precept to follow a negative\textsuperscript{31} one,\textsuperscript{32} ‘thereof’ was written [a second time],\textsuperscript{33} because nothar was written [a second time];\textsuperscript{33} and according to him who maintains [that the repetition of until the morning\textsuperscript{34} was intended] to allow a second morning for its burning,\textsuperscript{35} ‘thereof’ was written [a second time],\textsuperscript{36} because until the morning\textsuperscript{34} had to be written [a second time]. Also, in connection with tithe, ‘thereof’ was written three times. One is required for its own purpose;\textsuperscript{37} one is required for the deduction which R. Abbahu made in the name of R. Johanan;\textsuperscript{38} and the third is required for the exposition made by Resh Lakish. For Resh Lakish stated in the name of R. Simya: Whence is it deduced that second tithe which has become levitically unclean may be used for anointing? It is said, Nor have I given thereof for the dead,\textsuperscript{39} only for a dead man have I not given, but I have given for a living man in the same manner as for the dead. Now, what is it that may be equally applied to the living and to the dead? You must say that it is anointing.\textsuperscript{40} Mar Zutra demurred: It might be suggested to refer to the purchase for the dead of a coffin and shrouds\textsuperscript{41} — R. Huna son of R. Joshua replied: ‘Thereof’ means of the tithe itself.\textsuperscript{42} R. Ashi replied: Nor have I given\textsuperscript{39} must be analogous to I have not eaten,\textsuperscript{39} as there\textsuperscript{43} it refers to the tithe itself so here also\textsuperscript{44} it must refer to the tithe itself. But still it\textsuperscript{45} is free, however, in one direction only\textsuperscript{46} [The analogy is] quite satisfactory according to him who maintains that deduction may be made [even in such a case], and may not be refuted.\textsuperscript{47} According to him, however, who is of the opinion that deduction may be made but also refuted, what can be said?\textsuperscript{48} — R. Abbahu’s deduction\textsuperscript{49} may be inferred from the text cited in the statement which R. Nahman made in the name of Rabbah b. Abbuha. For R. Nahman stated in the name of Rabbah b. Abbuha: What was meant by the Scriptural text, And I, behold, I have given thee the charge of My heave-offerings?\textsuperscript{50} Scripture speaks of two kinds of terumah. One, clean terumah, and the other, unclean terumah; and concerning these the All Merciful said, ‘It shall be thine,\textsuperscript{50} even for burning under your dish.’\textsuperscript{52}

AND ALL LEVITICALLY UNCLEAN PERSONS etc. Whence is this deduced? — R. Johanan replied in the name of R. Ishmael: Scripture stated, What man soever of the seed of Aaron is a leper, or hath an issue etc.\textsuperscript{53} Now, what is it that is equally

(1) Terumah and bikkurim.
(2) Lit., ‘other’, i.e., even in the third and sixth. V. next note.
(3) And not only, like the second tithe, in the first, second, fourth and fifth years of the cycle.

(4) Of the corona.

(5) Which solves the question put to R. Shesheth.

(6) Which is already mentioned.

(7) Both were therefore necessary.

(8) Which is included in ‘holy food’. V. supra n. 2. Hence ‘tithe’ must mean second tithe, which solves the question put to R. Shesheth.

(9) And owing to its sanctity it was also forbidden to the uncircumcised.

(10) Since it is not offered on the altar, its sanctity is of a lesser degree.

(11) V. Glos.

(12) An unclean person the requirements of whose purification have, with the exception of the sacrifice prescribed for the unclean, been satisfied.

(13) That the uncircumcised is permitted to eat second tithe.

(14) As stated supra 72b.

(15) Since this, however, was omitted it must be assumed that the omission was due to the fact that tithe is permitted to the uncircumcised!

(16) To engage even in the preparation of the red heifer (supra 72b).

(17) Lev. XXII, 4., lit., ‘man man’.

(18) And maintains (v. supra 72b) that the uncircumcised may deal with the red heifer.

(19) Of the red heifer. V. Num. XIX, 5.

(20) As the first Tanna differs from R. Joseph in respect of the man who was short of atonement, he presumably differs also in respect of the uncircumcised.

(22) The expression ‘thereof’ used in the analogy.

(23) Its prohibition to the uncircumcised.

(24) V. Glos.

(25) Hence no analogy between it and tithe would be justified.

(26) Of the expressions, ‘thereof’.

(27) Ex. XII, 9,10.

(31) Ye shall let nothing thereof remain (ibid.).

(32) In order to exempt the transgressor from the penalty of flogging. V. Mak. 4b.

(33) In Ex. XII, 20., cf. previous note.

(34) Ibid. Earlier in the text it was already stated, And ye shall let nothing thereof remain until the morning.

(35) The morning after the first day of the Passover. V. Pes. 83b.

(36) In Ex. XII. 10.

(37) [The first ‘thereof’ to exclude the first tithe from the restriction in regard to onan (v. Glos)].

(38) Permitting the burning of unclean oil of terumah for lighting purposes. V. supra 73b.

(39) Deut. XXVI, 24.

(40) It cannot refer to eating which is, of course, inapplicable to the dead.

(41) And not to anointing. The deduction, consequently, would be that though unclean tithe may not be exchanged for money wherewith to buy the requirements of the dead, it being unfit as food, it may be exchanged for the purpose of buying anything for the living.

(42) Not with the money for which it was exchanged.

(43) In respect of eating.

(44) The ‘giving’.

(45) The expression. ‘Thereof’.

(46) In that of the Paschal lamb; those occurring in the section of tithe being required for other deductions.

(47) Nid. 22b.
In view of the objection that the Paschal lamb is subject to restrictions which are inapplicable to the second tithe.

From one of the expressions of ‘thereof’.

Num. XVIII, 8.

Since R. Abbahu’s deduction may be made from this text, one of the expressions of ‘thereof’ remains free for the purpose of the analogy.

Lev. XXII, 4.

applicable to all the seed of Aaron? You must say that it is terumah. But might it not be assumed to refer to the breast and the shoulder? — [These are] not [permitted] to [a woman] who returns. But terumah also is not permitted to a halalah! A halalah is not regarded as of the seed of Aaron. And whence is it inferred that until he be clean means ‘until sunset’, perhaps it means, ‘until the atonement is brought’? — This cannot be entertained. For a Tanna of the school of R. Ishmael [taught] that Scripture speaks of a zab who noticed only two issues, and of a leper while under observation, both being cases similar to that of one who is unclean by the dead; as he who is unclean by the dead is not liable to bring an atonement so are these such as are not liable to bring an atonement. Let it be said, then, that this applies only to those who are not liable to bring an atonement, but that for those who are liable to an atonement, purification is incomplete until the atonement has been brought! Furthermore, in respect of what we learned, ‘If he performed the prescribed ablution and came up from his bathing he may eat of the [second] tithe; after sunset he may eat terumah; and after he has brought his atonement he may also eat of the holy food’, whence, it may also be asked, are these laws derived? — Raba replied in the name of R. Hisda: Three Scriptural texts are recorded: It is written, And shall not eat of the holy things, unless he bathe his flesh in water, implying if he bathed, however, he is clean. It is also written, And when the sun is down, he shall be clean, and afterwards he may eat of the holy things. And finally, it’s written, And the priest shall make atonement for her, and she shall be clean. How, [then, are these contradictory conditions to be reconciled]? The first refers to [second] tithe; the second to terumah, and the third to holy food. Might not these be reversed? It is reasonable that terumah should be subject to the greater restriction, since it is also subject to the restrictions of the death penalty, the fifth, it cannot be redeemed and is also forbidden to the non-priest. On the contrary; [second] tithe might be regarded as subject to the greater restriction, since it has to be brought to the appointed place, requires confession, is forbidden to an onan, must not be burned [even] when unclean, the penalty of flogging is incurred for eating it when it is unclean, and it is also subject to the law of removal. — The penalty of death, nevertheless, is of the greatest severity. Raba said: Apart from the fact that the death penalty is of the greatest severity it could not be said so, for Scripture stated, soul. Now, what is it that is equally [permitted] to every soul? You must admit that it is tithe. Still, this might apply only to one who is not liable to bring an atonement; but where a man is liable to an atonement it might be said that [purification is not complete] until he has brought the atonement! — Abaye replied: Two Scriptural texts are recorded in the case of a woman in childbirth. It is written, Until the days of her purification be fulfilled, as soon as her days are fulfilled she is clean; and it is also written, And the priest shall make atonement for her, and she shall be clean, how, [then, are the two to be reconciled]? The former applies to terumah, the latter to holy food.

But might not these be reversed? — It stands to reason that holy food should be subject to the greater restriction, since it is also subject to the restrictions of piggul, nothar, sacrifice, me'ilah, kareth, and is also forbidden to an onan. On the contrary, terumah should be subject to the greater restriction, since it is also subject to the restrictions of the death penalty, the fifth, it cannot be redeemed, and is also forbidden to the non-priest! — Those are more in number.
Raba said: Apart from the fact that those are more in number this could not be maintained. For Scripture stated, And the priest shall make atonement for her, and she shall be clean, which implies that [until that moment] she was unclean. Now, were it to be assumed that this text speaks of holy food, the text, And the flesh that toucheth any unclean thing shall not be eaten should apply to it. It must, therefore, be concluded that the text speaks of terumah.

R. Shisha son of R. Idi demurred: How could it be said that the law of terumah was prescribed in this text? Surely it was taught: [From the text]. Speak unto the children of Israel, one would only learn [that these laws are applicable to] the children of Israel; whence, however, is one to infer that they also apply to a proselyte or an emancipated slave? Scripture consequently stated, Woman. Now, if it were to be assumed that the text speaks of terumah, are a proselyte and an emancipated slave, [it may be asked,] permitted to eat terumah!

Said Raba: But does it not?

(31) While the man is clean.
Surely it is written,¹ She shall touch no hallowed thing² [which] includes terumah!³ The fact, however, is that Scripture enumerated a number of distinct subjects.⁴ Now what need was there for three distinct texts⁵ in respect of terumah! — They are all required. For were terumah to be deduced from Until he be clean,⁶ it would not be known whereby,⁷ hence did the All Merciful write, And when the sun is down, he shall be clean.⁸ And if the All Merciful had written only And when the sun is down,⁸ it might have been assumed [to apply to such a person] as is not liable to bring a sacrifice, but in the case of one who is liable it might have been presumed that cleanness is not effected before he has brought his atonement, hence the All Merciful wrote, Until. . . be fulfilled.⁹ And had the All Merciful written only, Until . . . be fulfilled,⁹ it might have been presumed that cleanness may be effected even without ablution, hence did the All Merciful write, Until he be clean.

According, however, to that Tanna who disagrees with the Tanna of the school of R. Ishmael, maintaining that the text speaks of a zab who had three attacks of gonorrhoea and of a confirmed leper, and that the deduction from Until he be clean is 'until he brings his atonement,' what need was there for two texts in respect of holy food? — [They are both] required. For had the All Merciful written about the woman after childbirth only, the law might have been said to apply to her only because her uncleanness is of long duration, but not to a zab. And had the All Merciful written the law in connection with a zab only, it might have been assumed to apply to him only since his uncleanness does not automatically cease, but not to a woman after childbirth. [Hence both texts were necessary.]

What was the need for the text, It must be put into water, and it shall be unclean until the even? — R. Zera replied: In respect of touch, as it was taught: And it shall be unclean might have been taken to refer to all cases, hence it was stated, Then shall it be clean. And if only Then shall it be clean had been stated it might have been assumed to refer to all cases, hence it was stated, And it shall be unclean. How then [are the two to be reconciled]? The one refers to [second] tithe and the other to terumah. But might not the deduction be reversed? — It stands to reason that as the eating of terumah is more restricted than the eating of tithe, so shall the touching of terumah be more restricted than the touching of tithe.

If you prefer I might say that the prohibition against the touching of terumah is deduced from the following. It was taught: She shall touch no hallowed thing is a warning against its consumption. Perhaps it is not so, but against touching it? It was stated, She shall touch no hallowed thing, nor come into the sanctuary; the hallowed thing is thus compared to the sanctuary; as [an offence against] the sanctuary involves loss of life, so [must the offence against] the hallowed thing be such as involves loss of life, while in respect of touch no loss of life is involved; and the reason [why eating] was expressed by a term denoting touch is to indicate that touching and eating are equally [forbidden].

[A PRIEST WHO IS] WOUNDED IN HIS STONES etc. Who is it that taught: A woman subject to a pentateuchally forbidden cohabitation may eat terumah? — R. Eleazar replied: This question is the subject of a dispute, and the ruling here is that of R. Eleazar and R. Simeon. R. Johanan said: [The ruling here] may even be that of R. Meir, the circumstances here being different, since the woman has already been eating. And R. Eleazar? — The argument, ‘since she has already been eating’ cannot be entertained; for should you not admit this, a daughter of an Israelite who was married to a priest and whose husband subsequently died, should also be permitted to eat terumah since she has already been eating it. And R. Johanan? — There, his kinyan had completely lapsed; here, however, his kinyan did not lapse.

WHAT IS TERMED A PEZU'A? Our Rabbis taught: What is termed a pezu'a dakkah? A man both of whose stones were wounded or even only one of them; even though they were only punctured, crushed, or simply defective. Said R. Ishmael son of R. Johanan b. Beroka: I heard from the mouth of the Sages at the Vineyard at Jabneh that one having only one stone is a natural born eunuch and is, therefore, a fit person. How could it be said that such a person is a natural born eunuch! — Say rather, he is like a natural born eunuch and is, therefore, fit.

Is [a man whose stones are] punctured incapable of procreation? Surely, a man once climbed up a palm tree

Lev. XI, 32, which, also making the consummation of cleanness dependent on sunset, must, like Lev. XXII, 7 refer to terumah.

Before sunset on the day of purification no terumah may come in contact with the unclean vessel; and the same restriction applies to the tebul yom (v. Glos.). This could not have been deduced from Lev. XXII, 7 which does not speak of touch or contact but of eating.

and a thorn pierced his stones, [his semen] issued like a thread of pus, and, [despite the accident], he begat children! — In that case, as a matter of fact, Samuel sent word to Rab, telling him, ‘Institute enquiries respecting the parentage of his children’.

Rab Judah stated in the name of Samuel: A man whose stones have been injured by a supernatural agency is regarded as a fit person. Said Raba: This is the reason why the Scriptural text reads, Who is wounded and not ‘the wounded’.

In a Baraitha it was taught: It was said in Scripture. He who is wounded . . . shall not enter and it was also said, A bastard shall not enter, as the latter is the result of human action, so is the former the result of human action.

Raba stated: Wounded applies to all, crushed applies to all, and cut off applies to all. ‘Wounded applies to all’: Whether the membrum, the stones or the spermatic cords of the stones were injured. ‘Crushed applies to all’: Whether the membrum, the stones or the spermatic cords were crushed. ‘Cut off applies to all’: Whether the membrum, the stones or the spermatic cords were cut off.

A certain Rabbi asked Raba: Whence is it inferred that the expression pezu'a dakkah refers to an injury in the privy parts; might it not be said to refer to the head? The other replied: As no number of generations is mentioned, it may be inferred that the reference is to the privy parts. But is it not possible that the reason why no number of generations is given in this case is because only he himself is forbidden, while his son and the son of his son are permitted! — [This must be] similar to the case of him whose membrum is cut off; as the latter involves the privy parts, so must the former involve those parts.

And whence is it inferred that the injury of the keruth shafekah himself involves his privy parts? Might it not be one involving his lips? — Shafekah is written, implying, ‘at the spot where it discharges’, but might it not refer to one's nose? — It is not written, ‘[Cut] at the organ that discharges’, but ‘a cut organ that discharges’; thus implying that organ which in consequence of a cut discharges, and in the absence of a cut does not discharge but flows out. This excludes the nose which in either case emits a discharge.

In a Baraitha it was taught: It was said in Scripture. He who is wounded in his stones shall not enter, and it was also said, A bastard shall not enter, as the latter refers to the privy parts, so does the former refer to the privy parts.

In a case where a puncture beginning below the corona terminated at the other end of it above the corona, R. Hiyya b. Abba desired to declare the sufferer as fit. Said R. Assi to him: Thus ruled R. Joshua b. Levi, ‘[A perforation of] any size in the corona constitutes a bar [against fitness]’.

If, however, any part of the corona remained etc. Rabina, while sitting at his studies, raised the following question: Must the hair's breadth of which they spoke extend over the entire circumference thereof or only over its greater part? — ‘The HAIR'S BREADTH’, said Rabbah23 Tosfa'ah to Rabina, must extend over the greater part of it and towards its upper section’.24

R. Huna ruled: If it25 is cut away like a reed pen it constitutes no disqualification; if like a gutter26 it causes disqualification. For in the latter case the air penetrates;27 in the former it does not. R. Hisda, however, ruled: [If the cut was] in the shape of a gutter no disqualification is constituted; if it had the shape of a reed pen disqualification is constituted. For in the first case friction may be produced; in the latter it cannot.

Raba said: It is reasonable to adopt the view of R. Huna that in the latter case the air penetrates while in the former it does not. For in regard to friction it is only like a bung in a cask.28

Said Rabina to Meremar: Thus said Mar Zutra in the name of R. Papa, ‘The law is that no disqualification is constituted whether the corona was cut away like a reed pen or like a gutter He raised, however, the question. [whether such a cut must be] below the corona or may even be above it?24 — It is obvious that it may even be above it; for were it to be below the corona, the man would be regarded as fit even if the entire membraux ther had been cut off. Rabina, however,29 only desired to test Meremar.

Such an incident30 once occurred at Matha Mehasia, and R. Ashi arranged for the corona to be cut into the shape of a reed pen, and then declared the man to be fit. It once happened at Pumbeditha that a man had his semen duct blocked, and the discharge of the semen made its way through the urinal duct. R. Bibi b. Abaye intended to declare the man fit. R. Papi, however, said to him, ‘Because you are yourselves

(22) Since one end of the perforation is below the corona.
(23) So Emden. Cur. edd. ‘Raba’.
(24) Which is nearer to the body.
(25) The corona.
The cut running across the centre and leaving the sides intact.

Cooling the membrum and preventing the flow of the semen.

Though the bung is cut away at its lower end it nevertheless closes the hole with its upper part which comes in contact with the sides of the bung hole. The contact produced by the upper part of the membrum is sufficient for the generation of the heat required for fertilization.

In raising a question the answer to which was so obvious. The cut having taken the shape of a gutter.

Rab Judah stated in the name of Samuel: If it had a small perforation which was closed up, the man is deemed to be unfit if the wound re-opens when semen is emitted, but if it does not re-open the man is regarded as fit.

In respect of this ruling Raba raised the question: Where? If the perforation is below the corona, [the man should remain fit] even if it were cut off! — It means, in the corona itself. So it was also stated elsewhere: R. Mari b. Mar said in the name of Mar Ukba in the name of Samuel: If a hole that has been made in the corona itself is closed, the man is disqualified if it re-opens when semen is emitted; but if it does not [re-open the man is deemed to be] fit.

Raba the son of Rabbah sent to R. Joseph: Will our Master instruct us how to proceed. The other replied: Warm barley bread is procured, and placed upon the man's anus. Thereby the flow of semen sets in, and the effect can be observed. Said Abaye: Is everybody like our father Jacob concerning whom it is written, My might, and the first-fruits of my strength, because he never before experienced the emission of semen! — No, said Abaye, coloured garments are dangled before him. Said Raba: Is everybody then like Barzillai the Gileadite! — In fact it is obvious that the original answer is to be maintained.

Our Rabbis taught: If it was punctured [the man is regarded as] unfit, because the flow is sluggish. If it was closed up [he is deemed to be] fit, because he is then capable of production. And this is a case where the unfit may return to his former state of fitness. What does the expression ‘this’ exclude? — It excludes the case where a membrane was formed on the lungs in consequence of a wound; since such cannot be regarded as a proper membrane.

R. Idi b. Abin sent the following question to Abaye: How are we to proceed — A grain of barley is to be procured wherewith the spot is lacerated. Tallow is rubbed in, and a big ant, procured for the purpose, is allowed to bite in, and its head is severed. It must be a grain of barley; an iron instrument would cause inflammation. This procedure, furthermore, applies only to a small perforation; a large one would peel off.

Rabbah son of R. Huna stated: A man who urinates at two points is an unfit person.

Said Raba: The law is in agreement neither with the view of the son nor with that of the father. As to the son, there is the statement just mentioned. As to the father? — Since R. Huna said: Women who practise lewdness with one another are disqualified from marrying a priest. And even according to R. Eleazar, who stated that an unmarried man who cohabited with an unmarried woman with no matrimonial intention renders her thereby a harlot, this disqualification ensues only it, the case of a man; but when it is that of a woman the action is regarded as mere obscenity.
MISHNAH. A MAN WHO IS WOUNDED IN HIS STONES, AND ONE WHOSE MEMBRUM IS CUT OFF, ARE PERMITTED TO MARRY A PROSELYTE OR AN EMANCIPATED SLAVE. THEY ARE ONLY FORBIDDEN TO ENTER INTO THE ASSEMBLY, AS IT IS SAID IN SCRIPTURE, HE THAT IS WOUNDED IN HIS STONES OR HATH HIS PRIVY MEMBRUM CUT OFF SHALL NOT ENTER INTO THE ASSEMBLY OF THE LORD.

GEMARA. R. Shesheth was asked: May a priest who is wounded in his stones marry a proselyte or an emancipated slave; does he remain in his state of holiness and is consequently forbidden or does he not remain in his state of holiness and is consequently permitted — R. Shesheth replied: You have learned this [law in the following]. ‘An Israelite who is wounded in his stones is permitted to marry a nethinah’. Now, were it to be assumed that he retains his holiness, the text, Neither shalt thou make marriages with them should be applicable here. — Raba: Is the law due at all to sanctity or non-sanctity? [It is merely due to] the possibility that he might beget a child who would proceed to worship idols. This, then, is applicable only when they are still idol worshippers. When, however, they are converted, they are undoubtedly permitted, and it was only the Rabbis who placed them under a prohibition as a preventive measure. But such a preventive measure was instituted by the Rabbis in respect of those only who are capable of procreation, not in respect of those who are incapable of procreation.

Now, then, a bastard also, since he is capable of procreation should also be forbidden, while in fact, we have learned, ‘Bastards and nethinim may intermarry with one another’! — In fact [this is the explanation:] the Rabbis instituted a preventive measure only in the case of the fit but not in that of the unfit.

Subsequently Raba stated: What I said is of no consequence. For while they are still idolaters their marriages are invalid; only when they are converted are their marriages valid.

R. Joseph raised an objection: And Solomon became allied to Pharaoh King of Egypt by marriage, and took Pharaoh's daughter! — He caused her to be converted. But, surely, no proselytes were accepted either in the days of David or in the days of Solomon! — Was there any reason for it but [that the motive of the proselytes might be the benefits] of the royal table?

R. Bibi was a descendant of the house of Eli who were condemned to die young (v. I Sam. II, 32f). The expression may also, like a similar root in Arabic, bear the meaning of ‘foolishness’. (Cf. B.B. Sonc. ed. p. 582, n. 6).

Deut. VII, 3.

How, then, is an Israelite permitted to marry a nethinah! Since, however, the law does permit him to marry such a woman it is obvious that a disabled man loses his sanctity. As the disabled Israelite loses his sanctity so does the disabled priest lose his.

In the case of marriage between a fit or disabled Israelite and an idolatress or a nethinah.

Pentateuchally. Cur. edd., 'In Israel' should be omitted with the 1509 Pesaro ed. (cf. Golds.).

The nethinah as well as the idolatress.

V. infra 78b.

This is the reason why a disabled Israelite is permitted to marry a nethinah. No inference, therefore, may be drawn from this in respect of a disabled priest.

Since in respect of those who are capable of procreation the Rabbis did institute a preventive measure.

And is Pentateuchally forbidden to marry an idolatress.

To marry a nethinah, as a preventive measure of the Rabbis.

Kid. 6.

V. Bah. That Deut. VII, 3 refers to idolaters only and not to proselytes.

Deut. VII, 3, must consequently refer to proselytes, the prohibition being due to the Israelite's sanctity. As the nethinah was not forbidden to the disabled Israelite it follows that a disabled man, be he priest or Israelite, loses his sanctity; as at first suggested supra.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 76b

Such a woman obviously was in no need of it. But let the inference be drawn from the fact that she was an Egyptian of the first generation! And were you to reply that those had already departed, and these are others; surely, it may be pointed out, it was taught: R. Judah stated, ‘Menjamin, an Egyptian proselyte, was one of my colleagues among the disciples of R. Akiba, and he told me: I am an Egyptian of the first generation and married an Egyptian woman of the first generation; I shall arrange for my son to marry an Egyptian of the second generation in order that my grandson may be enabled to enter into the congregation of Israel!’ R. Papa replied: Are we to take our directions from Solomon! Solomon did not marry at all, for it is written, Of the nations concerning which the Lord said unto the Children of Israel: ‘Ye shall not go among them, neither shall they come among you; for surely they will turn away your heart after their gods’; Solomon did cleave unto them in love. The expression. And he become allied. . . . in marriage, however, presents a difficulty! — On account of his excessive love for her. Scripture regards him as if he had become allied by marriage to her. Said Rabina to R. Ashi: Surely we learned A MAN WHO IS WOUNDED IN HIS STONES, AND ONE WHOSE MEMBRUM VIRILE IS CUT OFF, ARE PERMITTED TO MARRY A PROSELYTE OR AN EMANCIPATED SLAVE, [from which it follows] that they are forbidden to marry a nethinah! — The other replied: According to your view, read the final clause, THEM ARE ONLY FORBIDDEN TO ENTER INTO THE ASSEMBLY, [from which it follows] that they are permitted to marry a nethinah! But [the fact is that] no inference may be drawn from this Mishnah.

MISHNAH. AN AMMONITE AND A MOABITE ARE FORBIDDEN! AND THEIR PROHIBITION IS FOR EVER, THEIR WOMEN, HOWEVER, ARE PERMITTED AT ONCE. AN EGYPTIAN AND AN EDOMITE ARE FORBIDDEN ONLY UNTIL THE THIRD GENERATION. WHETHER THEY ARE MALES OR FEMALES. R. SIMEON, HOWEVER, PERMITS THEIR WOMEN FORTHWITH. SAID R. SIMEON: THIS LAW MIGHT BE INFERRED A MINORI AD MAJUS: IF WHERE THE MALES ARE FORBIDDEN FOR ALL TIME THE FEMALES ARE PERMITTED FORTHWITH, HOW MUCH MORE SHOULD THE FEMALES BE PERMITTED FORTHWITH WHERE THE MALES ARE FORBIDDEN UNTIL THE THIRD GENERATION ONLY. THEY REPLIED: IF THIS IS AN HALACHAH, WE SHALL ACCEPT IT; BUT IF IT IS ONLY AN INFERENCE, AN OBJECTION CAN BE POINTED OUT. HE REPLIED: NOT SO. [BUT IN FACT] IT IS AN HALACHAH THAT I AM REPORTING.

GEMARA. Whence are these laws inferred? — R. Johanan replied: Scripture stated, And when Saul saw David go forth against the Philistine, he said into Abner, the captain of the host: ‘Abner, whose son is this youth’? And Abner said: ‘As thy soul liveth, O King, I cannot tell’. But did he not know him? Surely it is written, And he loved him greatly; and he became his armour bearer! He rather made the inquiry concerning his father. But did he not know his father? Surely it is written, And the man was an old man in the days of Saul, stricken in years among them; and Rab or, it might be said, R. Abba, stated that this referred to the father of David, Jesse, who came in with an army and went out with an army — It is this that Saul meant: Whether he descended from Perez or from Zerah. If he descended from Perez he would be king, for a king breaks for himself a way and no one can hinder him. If, however, he is descended from Zerah he would only be an important man. What is the reason why he gave instructions that enquiry be made concerning him? — Because it is written, And Saul clad David with his apparel. Being of the same size as his, and about Saul it is written, From his shoulders and upward he was higher than any of the people. Doeg the Edomite then said to him, ‘Instead of enquiring whether he is fit to be king or not, enquire rather whether he is permitted to enter the assembly or not’! ‘What is the reason’? ‘Because he is descended from Ruth the Moabitess’. Said Abner to him, ‘We learned: An Ammonite, but not an Ammonitess; A Moabite, but not a Moabitess! But in that case a bastard would imply: But not a female bastard?’ — ‘It is written mamzer [Which implies] anyone objectionable’. ‘Does then Egyptian exclude the Egyptian woman’? — ‘Here it is different, since the reason for the Scriptural text is explicitly stated: Because they met you not with bread and with water; it is customary for a man to meet [wayfarers]; It is not, however, customary for a woman to meet [them]’.

‘The men should have met the men and the women the women!’

He remained silent, Thereupon. the King said, ‘Inquire thou whose son the stripling is’. Elsewhere he calls him youth; and here he calls him, stripling! It is this that he implied, ‘You have overlooked an halachah,’ go and enquire at the college!’ On enquiry, he was told: An Ammonite, but not an Ammonitess; A Moabite, but not a Moabitess.

As, however, Doeg submitted to them all those objections and they eventually remained silent, he desired to make a public announcement against him. Presently [an incident occurred]: Now Amasa was the son of a man, whose name was Ithna the Israelite, that went in to Abigal but elsewhere it is written, Jether the Ishmaelite This teaches, Raba explained, that he girded on his sword like an Ishmaelite and exclaimed, ‘Whosoever will not obey the following halachah will be stabbed with the sword; I have this tradition from the Beth din of Samuel the Ramathite: An Ammonite but not an Ammonitess; A Moabite, but not a Moabitess! Could he, however, be trusted? Surely R. Abba stated in the name of Rab: Whenever a learned man gives directions on a point of law, and such a point comes up [for a practical decision], he is obeyed if his statement was made before the event; but if it was not so made he is not obeyed! Here the case was different, since Samuel and his Beth din were still living.

The difficulty, however, still remains! — The following interpretation was given: All glorious is the king’s daughter within. In the West it was explained. others quote it in the name of R. Isaac: Scripture said, And they said unto him: ‘Where is Sarah thy wife?’ etc.

The question is a matter in dispute between Tannaim: An Ammonite, but not an Ammonitess; A Moabite, but not a Moabitess. So R. Judah. R. Simeon, however, said: Because they met you not with bread and with water; it is customary for a man to meet etc.

Raba made the following exposition: What was meant by, Thou hast loosed my bonds David said to the Holy One, blessed be He, ‘O Master of the world! Two bonds were fastened on me, and you loosed them: Ruth the Moabitess and Naamah the Ammonitess.

Raba made the following exposition: What was meant by the Scriptural text, Many things hast Thou done, O Lord my God, even Thy wondrous works, and Thy thoughts toward us? It is not written, ‘toward me’, but toward us. This teaches that Rehoboam sat on the lap of David when the latter said to him. ‘Those two Scriptural verses were said concerning me and you.’

Raba made the following exposition: What was meant by the Scriptural text, Then said I: ‘Lo, I am come with the roll of a book which is prescribed for me’? David said, ‘I thought I have come only now; but I did not know that in the Roll of the Book it was already written about me’. For there it is written, That are found, and here it is written. I have found David My servant; with My holy oil have I anointed him.

‘Ulla said in the name of R. Johanan: The daughter of an Ammonite proselyte is eligible to marry a priest. Said Raba b. ‘Ulla to ‘Ulla: In accordance with [whose view is your statement made]? If in accordance with that of R. Judah, he surely had stated that the daughter of a male proselyte is like the daughter of a male halal! And if in accordance with the view of R. Jose, your statement is self-evident,for surely he had stated: Even where a male proselyte had married a female proselyte his daughter is eligible to marry a priest! And were you to reply that this applies to such as are fit to enter the assembly but not to this man who is not fit to enter the assembly whence [it may he asked] is this distinction [inferred]? — It is inferred from the case of a High Priest who married a widow. [But it may be objected] the marriage between a High Priest and a widow is different, since his cohabitation constitutes a transgression! — [Then the case of the] halal proves it! [But it may be objected that] a halal is different since his formation was in sin! — [Then the case of the] High Priest proves it; and thus the argument will go round, though the aspect of the one is unlike that of the other and the aspect of the other is unlike that of the first, their common characteristic is that either of them is unlike the majority of the assembly and his daughter is ineligible. so here also since he is unlike the majority of the assembly, his daughter should be ineligible. [But it may again be objected] their common characteristic\(^{55}\) is different, since it also involves an aspect of sin!\(^{56}\) Did you possibly\(^{57}\) speak of an Ammonite who married the daughter of an Israelite\(^{58}\) [informing us that], though his cohabitation is an act of transgression, his daughter is nevertheless eligible? — The other replied: Yes; for when Rabin came\(^{59}\) he reported in the name of R. Johanan on the daughter of an Ammonite proselyte\(^{60}\) and the daughter of an Egyptian of the second generation\(^{60}\) that R. Johanan declared her eligible\(^{61}\) while Resh Lakish maintained that she was ineligible.\(^{61}\)

‘Resh Lakish maintained that she was ineligible’, for he infers this case from that of a High Priest who married a widow. ‘R. Johanan declared her eligible’.

as R. Zakkai recited¹ in the presence of R. Johanan, ‘[The expression,] But a virgin of his own people shall he take to wife,² includes a woman who is fundamentally a proselyte³ who is eligible to marry a priest’, and the other said to him, ‘I learn: [“Since. instead of] ‘His people’. Of his people [was written], a virgin who descended from two peoples⁴ is also included", and you mention only a fundamental proselyte and no other!” Now, what is meant by ‘two peoples’? If it be suggested that it refers to the case of an Ammonite who married an Ammonitess. and that these are described as of ‘two peoples’ because the males are forbidden and the females are permitted, such a case [it may be objected] is the same as that of a fundamental proselyte! Consequently it must refer to an Ammonite who married the daughter of an Israelite.⁵ Others say: He said to him: ‘I learn: [“Since, instead of] ‘His people’. Of his people, a virgin who is descended from two peoples and from a people consisting of two groups of people is included’, and you mention only a fundamental proselyte and no other!'¹⁹

According to this latter version, however, whence is it inferred that the daughter of an Egyptian of the second generation is eligible to marry a priest? And should you suggest that this might be inferred from the case of an Ammonite who married the daughter of an Israelite, [it may be objected that] the case of the Ammonite who married the daughter of an Israelite is different since the Ammonite females are eligible. — An Egyptian of the second generation who married an Egyptian woman of the second generation might prove it. But [it may be objected that the case] of an Egyptian of the second generation who married an Egyptian woman of the second generation is different since his cohabitation constitutes no transgression? — An Ammonite who married the daughter of an Israelite might prove it, and thus the argument would go round etc.¹⁵

Said R. Joseph: This then it is that I heard Rab Judah expounding on ‘His people. Of his people’ and I did not [at the time] understand what he meant.¹⁷

When R. Samuel b. Judah came, he stated: Thus he recited in his presence: An Ammonite woman is eligible; her son that is born from an Ammonite is ineligible; and her daughter that is born from an Ammonite is eligible. This, however, applies only to an Ammonite and an Ammonitess who were converted; but her daughter that was born from an Ammonite is ineligible. [On hearing] the other said to him, ‘Go recite this outside. For your statement that “an Ammonite woman is eligible” [is quite acceptable, since] Ammonite excludes the Ammonitess. That “her son that is born from an Ammonite is ineligible” [is also correct] since he is in fact an Ammonite. In what respect, however, is “her daughter that was born from an Ammonite eligible”? If in respect of entering the assembly, is there, now that her mother is eligible, any need to mention her! The eligibility must consequently be in respect of marrying a priest. [But then what of the statement], “this, however, applies only to an Ammonite and an Ammonitess who were converted; but her daughter that was born from an Ammonite is ineligible”? What is meant by “her daughter that was born of an Ammonite”? If it be suggested that it refers to an Ammonite who married an Ammonitess, then this is the same case as that of a fundamental proselyte. Consequently it must refer to an Ammonite who married the daughter of an Israelite. [Concerning this] he told him. ‘Go recite this outside’.²⁵

AN EGYPTIAN AND AN EDOMITE ARE FORBIDDEN ONLY etc. What is the OBJECTION? — Raba b. Bar Hana replied in the name of R. Johanan: Because it may be said that the case of forbidden relatives proves it, since in respect of them the prohibition extends to the third generation only [and is nevertheless applicable to] both males and females. [But can it not be argued that the case] of forbidden relatives is different. since in their case the penalty of kareth is involved? — [The case of the] bastard proves it. [But can it not be suggested that the case] of the bastard is different since he is forever ineligible to enter the congregation? — [The case of] forbidden relatives proves it. Thus the argument could go round. The aspects of one are unlike those of the other and the aspects of the other are unlike those of the first. Their common characteristic, however, is that both males and females are equally forbidden; so might one also include the Egyptian man and the Egyptian woman so that in their case also both males and females should be equally forbidden. This common characteristic, however, [it may be retorted,] is different since in one respect it also involves kareth. And the Rabbis? They infer it from the halal who is the offspring of a union between those who through it, are guilty of transgressing a positive commandment; and in accordance with the view of R. Eliezer b. Jacob. Then what is meant by, NOT SO — It is this that he said to them: As far as I am concerned, I do not accept the view of R. Eliezer b. Jacob, but according to you, since your view is that of R. Eliezer b. Jacob, [my reply is that] IT IS AN HALACHAH THAT I AM REPORTING.
It was taught: R. Simeon said to them,48 ‘I am reporting an halachah and, moreover, a Scriptural text supports my view, [it having been written] sons49 but not daughters’.

Our Rabbis taught: Sons,49 but not daughters; so R. Simeon. R. Judah, however, said: Behold it is said in Scripture. The sons of the third generation that are born unto them;50 Scripture has made them dependent on birth.51

R. Johanan said: Had not R. Judah declared, ‘Scripture made them dependent on birth’,52 he would not have found his hands and feet at the house of study.53 For as a Master said that a congregation of proselytes is also called an assembly.54

(1) I.e., from this statement it is deduced what was R. Johanan's view.
(2) Lev. XXI, 14.
(3) Or ‘a proselyte of her own status’ (Jast.). who was a proselyte from her birth, i.e., when her father and mother were converted after their marriage and before her birth. Where an Ammonite proselyte marries the daughter of an Israelite, the offspring of such a union is not fundamentally a proselyte and is ineligible to marry a priest since the union was a forbidden one.
(4) This is explained presently.
(5) Thus it is proved (v. supra n. 4) that, in the opinion of R. Johanan, such a case is eligible.
(6) R. Johanan to R. Zakkai.
(7) From the daughter of an Israelite who married an Ammonite proselyte.
(8) I.e., whose father is the Ammonite proselyte, a descendant of a people whose males are forbidden and whose females are permitted.
(9) According to this version, unlike the former where it was arrived at by inference. R. Johanan's view is explicitly stated.
(10) Since the case of the Ammonite only was mentioned. (Cf. supra n. 2).
(11) Who married the daughter of an Israelite and thus contracted a forbidden union.
(12) While the Egyptian females, like the man, are forbidden for three generations.
(13) His daughter is permitted since she belongs to the third generation, although she also belongs to the Egyptian people whose males and females are equally forbidden. As this latter restriction is no bar in this case it should form no bar in the case of an Egyptian of the second generation who married the daughter of an Israelite.
(14) His daughter is eligible though his marriage constitutes a transgression.
(15) Continued as supra 77a.
(16) The ruling permitting the daughter of an Ammonite proselyte who married the daughter of an Israelite.
(17) R. Joseph, as a result of a serious illness, lost his memory and only dimly recollected some of the rulings and expositions of his teachers.
(18) R. Zakkai. V. supra.
(19) R. Johanan's.
(20) This is explained presently.
(21) Deut. XXIII, 4.
(22) Who were converted prior to the birth of their daughter.
(23) Who, as stated in the first clause, is eligible!
(24) The daughter being ineligible because of the forbidden marriage of her parents.
(25) In such a case also the daughter is eligible as deduced supra from the expression, Of his people (Lev. XXI. 14) instead of ‘his people’.
(26) That can be advanced, according to the Rabbis, against R. Simeon's argument in our Mishnah.
(27) That R. Simeon's argument is untenable.
(28) Both in the ascending and the descending line.
(29) Similarly in the case of the Egyptian and the Edomite.
(30) I.e., it is more restricted than that of marriage with an Egyptian etc.
(31) Since they are subject to the one restriction (kareth) they are also subject to the other (equal prohibition of males and females). The case of the Egyptian and the Edomite, however, which does not involve kareth might not include the females either!

(32) Cohabitation with whom is not subject to the penalty of kareth, and both males and females are nevertheless equally subject to the prohibition.

(33) I.e., it is more restricted than that of marriage with an Egyptian etc.

(34) As he is subject to this restriction he is also subject to the other (cf. supra n. 1).

(35) Who are only forbidden to intermarr with each other, but are severally permitted to all the other members of the congregation.

(36) Should objection be raised against the case of the forbidden relatives, that of the bastard could be adduced as proof; and should objection be raised against that of the bastard, that of the forbidden relatives might be adduced as proof.

(37) This then, is the objection which the Rabbis could raise against R. Simeon's a minori argument.

(38) Even in the case of the bastard, kareth is involved as the penalty of his parents for the action which was the origin of his birth. In the case of the Egyptian and Edomite, however, there is no aspect whatsoever involving this penalty. The latter, therefore, cannot be deduced from the others.

(39) How could they still maintain their objection against R. Simeon's argument.

(40) The prohibition of the females.

(41) And not, as has previously been assumed, from the bastard.

(42) When, e.g., a High Priest married a seduced woman (cf. supra 60a) who is forbidden to him by virtue of the positive precept of Lev. XXI. 13.

(43) Who, contrary to the view of the Sages, regards such a child as halal (supra 59b and 60a). Thus it has been proved that even where no kareth is involved, both males and females (the halalah like the halal) are included in the prohibition. Similarly in the case of the Egyptians and the Edomites.

(44) The objection of the Rabbis is strong enough!

(45) Cf. supra p. 523. n. 13. ab. init., R. Simeon being of the opinion that the offspring of a union between those who are thereby guilty of transgressing a positive precept only is not regarded as a halal.

(46) And consequently you might derive the prohibition of the females from the law of the halal.

(47) And an objection is of no validity in the face of a definite tradition.

(48) The Rabbis of our Mishnah.

(49) לִבְנֵית Deut. XXIII, 9.

(50) Ibid. emphasis on are born.

(51) Irrespective of sex. Had the law applied to males only the clause ‘that are born etc.’ should have been omitted.

(52) I.e., that the females also are forbidden.

(53) His position would have been untenable.

(54) The assembly of the Lord (cf. Deut. XXIII, 2, 3, 4, 9. and Kid. 73a.).

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 78a

how1 could an Egyptian of the second generation ever attain purity12 But is not this possible when he transgressed and did marry one?3 — Scripture4 would not have written of a case of ‘when’. 5 Behold the case of the bastard which is one of ‘when’6 and yet Scripture did write it!7 — It wrote of a ‘when’ [leading] to a prohibition; 8 it would not have written of a ‘when’ [if it led] to permissibility. 9 Behold the case of the man who remarried his divorced wife,10 which involves a ‘when’ [leading] to a permitted act11 and yet did Scripture write it! — In that case it was written mainly for the purpose of the original prohibition.12

Our Rabbis taught: If the expression of sons13 was used, why was also that of generations13 used; and if that of generations was used, why also that of sons?14 If the expression of ‘sons’ had been used and not that of ‘generations” 15 it might have been assumed that only the first and second son is forbidden but that the third16 is permitted, the expression of ‘generations” 17 was, therefore, used. And had the expression of ‘generations’ only been used and not that of sons,18 it might have been assumed that the precept was given only to those who stood at Mount Sinai, 19 the expression of sons’ was therefore used.20 Unto them,21 Count from them.22 Unto them.23 Be guided by the status of the ineligible among them.

It was necessary [for Scripture] to write unto them and it was also necessary for it to write, That are born. For had the All Merciful written only, ‘That are born’, it might have been presumed that the counting must begin from their children, hence did the All Merciful write ‘Unto them’. And had the All Merciful written only ‘Unto them’, it might have been presumed that, where a pregnant Egyptian woman became a proselyte, she and her child are regarded as one generation, hence did the All Merciful write, ‘That are born’.

It was, furthermore, necessary to write unto them in this case, and Unto him in respect of the bastard. For had the All Merciful used the expression here only, the restriction might have been assumed to apply to this case only, because the child descended from a tainted origin, but not to a bastard, since he is descended from an untainted origin. And had the All Merciful written the expression in respect of the bastard, because he is for all time unfit to enter into the assembly, but not in this case. [Both texts were, therefore, required.]

Rabbah b. Bar Hana stated in the name of R. Johanan: If an Egyptian of the second generation married an Egyptian woman of the first generation, her son is [regarded as belonging to the] third generation. From this it is obvious that he is of the opinion that the child is ascribed to him.

R. Joseph raised an objection: R. Tarfon said, ‘Bastards may attain to purity. How? If a bastard married a female slave, their child is a slave. When, however, he is emancipated he becomes a free man’. This clearly proves that the child is ascribed to her! — There it is different, because Scripture said, ‘The wife and her children shall be her master’s’.

Raba raised an objection: R. Judah related, ‘Menjamin, an Egyptian proselyte, was one of my colleagues among the disciples of R. Akiba, and he once told me: I am an Egyptian of the first generation and married an Egyptian wife of the first generation; and I shall arrange for my son to marry an Egyptian wife of the second generation in order that my grandson shall be eligible to enter the congregation’. Now, if it could be assumed that the child is ascribed to his father, [he could have married a wife] even of the first generation! — The fact is that R. Johanan said to the Tanna: Read, ‘[a woman of the] first generation’.

When R. Dimi came he stated in the name of R. Johanan: If an Egyptian of the second generation married an Egyptian wife of the first generation, her son is [regarded as belonging to the] second generation. From this it is obvious that a child is ascribed to his mother.

Said Abaye to him: What then of the following statement of R. Johanan. ‘If a man set aside a pregnant beast as a sin-offering and it then gave birth, his atonement may be made, if he desires, with the beast itself, and, if he prefers, his atonement may be made with her young’. This law would be intelligible if you admit that an embryo is not regarded as a part of its mother, since this case would be similar to that of one who set aside as a security two sin-offerings, in respect of which R. Oshaia had stated that a man who set aside two sin-offerings as a security is to be atoned for with either of them, while the other goes to the pasture. If you maintain, however, that an embryo is a part of its mother, the former is like the young of a sin-offering, and the young of a sin-offering is sent to die! The other remained silent. ‘Is it not possible’, the first said to him, ‘that there it is different. since it is written That are born, Scripture made it dependent on birth’? — ‘Clever man’, the other replied, ‘I saw your chief between the pillars when R. Johanan gave the following traditional ruling: The reason here is because it was written, That are born, elsewhere, however, the child is ascribed to the father’.
What, however, of the following statement of Raba. ‘If a pregnant gentile woman was converted, there is no need for her son to perform ritual immersion’.

Why is there no need for him to perform immersion? Should you reply that it is due to a ruling of R. Isaac; for R. Isaac stated: Pentateuchally [a covering of] the greater part, if one objects to it, constitutes legally an interposition, and if one does not object to, no legal interposition is constituted;

(1) If Egyptian women were not included in the prohibition to enter the assembly.

(2) Entry into the assembly. Egyptian women proselytes being regarded, like Israelites, as an assembly (v. supra n. 12), no Egyptian male proselyte of the first or second generations would ever be permitted to marry them. How then, since he can marry neither a woman of Israel nor a proselyte of his own people, would he ever produce a third generation (v. Deut. XXIII, 9) that would be fit to enter the assembly?

(11) The children of such a marriage, as deduced from Deut. XXIV, 4, are eligible. (Kid. 77a and supra 11b).

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 78b

surely [it may be retorted] R. Kahana stated: This applies only in respect of its greater part, but when the whole of it is effected a legal interposition is constituted! — The case of the embryo is different since its position is that of its natural growth.

When Rabina came, he stated in the name of R. Johanan: Among the other nations follow the male. If they are converted follow the more tainted of the two.

‘Among the other nations follow the male, as it was taught: Whence is it deduced that if one of the other nations cohabited with a Canaanitish woman and begat a son, that son may be purchased as a slave? It is said, Moreover of the children of the strangers that do sojourn among you, of them may ye buy. As it might have been assumed that even if one of the Canaanites had cohabited with one of the women of the other [gentile] nations and begat a son, you may buy that son as a slave, it was explicitly stated, That they have begotten in your land; only from those who were begotten.
in your land, but not from those who dwell in your land. 14

‘If they are converted, follow the more tainted of the two’. In what case? If it be suggested that it refers to an Egyptian who married an Ammonitess, how could the expression ‘the more tainted of the two’, be applicable when Scripture explicitly said, An Ammonite, but not an Ammonitess? — Rather, the reference is to an Ammonite who married an Egyptian wife. If [the child of such a marriage] is a male, he is ascribed to the Ammonite; if it is a female, she is ascribed to the Egyptian.

MISHNAH. BASTARDS AND NETHINI! ARE INELIGIBLE, AND THEIR INELIGIBILITY IS FOR ALL TIME, WHETHER THEY BE MALES OR FEMALES.

GEMARA. Resh Lakish said: A woman bastard is eligible after ten generations. This is derived from an analogy between tenth and tenth mentioned in respect of the Ammonite and the Moabite; as in the latter case the females are permitted so are they permitted in the former case. Should you suggest that as in the latter case eligibility begins forthwith so it does in the former case, [it may be replied] that the analogy can only be effective in respect of the generations after the tenth. But, surely, we learned, BASTARDS AND NETHINI! ARE INELIGIBLE, AND THEIR INELIGIBILITY IS FOR ALL TIME, WHETHER THEY BE MALES OR FEMALES! — This is no difficulty: One statement is in agreement with him who holds that a deduction is carried through in all respects, while the other is in agreement with him who maintains that a deduction is restricted by its original basis.

R. Eliezer was asked: What is the legal position of a female bastard after ten generations? ‘Were anyone to present to me’, he replied, ‘a third generation. I would declare it pure!’ He is obviously of the opinion that the stock of a bastard does not survive. So also did R. Huna state: A bastard's stock does not survive. Did we not learn, however, BASTARDS ARE INELIGIBLE, AND THEIR INELIGIBILITY IS FOR ALL TIME? — R. Zera replied: It was explained to me by Rab Judah that those who are known survive; those who are not known do not survive; and those who are partly known and partly unknown survive for three generations but no longer.

A certain man once lived in the neighbourhood of R. Ammi. and the latter made a public announcement that he was a bastard. As the other was bewailing the action, [the Master] said to him: I have given you life.

R. Hana b. Adda stated: David issued the decree of prohibition against the nethinim, for it is said, And the king called the Gibeonites, and said unto them—now the Gibeonites were not of the children of Israel etc. Why did he issue the decree against them? — Because it is written. And there was a famine in the days of David three years. year after year. In the first year he said to them, ‘It is possible that there are idolaters among you, for it is written, And serve other gods, and worship them . . . and he will shut up the heaven, so that there shall be no rain etc.’ They instituted enquiries but could not discover any idolaters. In the second year he said to them, ‘There may be transgressors among you, for it is written, Therefore the showers have been withheld and there hath been no latter rain; yet thou hadst a harlot's forehead etc.’ Enquiries were made but none was found. In the third year he said to them, ‘There might be among you men who announce specified sums for charity in public but do not give them, as it is written, As vapours and wind without rain, so is he that boasteth himself of a false gift’. Enquiries were made but none was found. ‘The matter’, he concluded, ‘depends entirely upon me; Immediately, he sought the face of the Lord. What does this mean? — Resh Lakish explained: He enquired of the Urim and Tummim. How is this inferred? R. Eleazar replied: It is arrived at by an analogy between two occurrences of the expression of ‘countenance of’; for here it is written, And David sought the countenance of the Lord, \(^{46}\) and elsewhere it is written, Who shall enquire for him by the judgment of the Urim before the countenance of the Lord.\(^{51}\) And the Lord said: ‘It is for Saul and his bloody house, because he put to death the Gibeonites’.\(^{52}\) ‘For Saul’, because he was not mourned for in a proper manner; ‘and his bloody house, because he put to death the Gibeonites’. Where, however, do we find that Saul ‘put to death the Gibeonites’? The truth is that, as he killed the inhabitants of Nob, the city of the priests who were supplying them\(^{53}\) with water and food, Scripture regards it as if he himself had killed them.

Justice is demanded for Saul because he was not properly mourned for, and justice is demanded because he put to death the Gibeonites\(^{54}\) — Yes; for Resh Lakish stated: What is meant by the Scriptural text, Seek ye the Lord, all ye humble of the earth, that have executed His ordinance?\(^{55}\) Where there is his ordinance,\(^{56}\) there are also his executions.\(^{57}\)

David said: As to Saul, there have already elapsed

(33) Lit., ‘judge from it and from it’, i.e., all that applies to the case from which deduction is made is also applicable to the case deduced. As the case of the bastard is deduced from that of the Ammonite in one respect, it must also agree with it in all other respects, including eligibility of the females after the tenth generation, as Resh Lakish ruled. It is only in respect of the first ten generations which are explicitly forbidden in Scripture that deduction could not be made (cf. supra p. 532, n. 15).

(34) The ruling in our Mishnah.

(35) Lit., ‘judge from it and set it in its (original) place’, i.e., the rules of the case deduced limit the scope of the deduction. Though the case of the bastard is deduced from that of the Ammonite in respect of forbidding the former, like the latter, for all time, the exclusion of the females, though applicable to the latter, does not apply to the former, and female bastards (cf. supra p. 532, n. 15) remain, therefore, forbidden for all time.

the twelve months of the [first] year and it would be unusual to arrange for his mourning now. As to the nethinim, however, let them be summoned and we shall pacify them. Immediately the king called the Gibeonites, and said unto them . . . ‘What shall I do for you? and wherewith should I make atonement, that ye may bless the inheritance of the Lord’? And the Gibeonites said to him: ‘It is no matter of silver or gold between us and Saul, or his house,’ neither is it for us [to put] any man etc. . . . Let seven men of his sons be delivered unto us and we will hang them up unto the Lord etc. He tried to pacify them but they would not be pacified. Thereupon he said to them: This nation is distinguished by three characteristics: They are merciful, bashful and benevolent. ‘Merciful’, for is is written, And shew thee mercy, and have compassion upon thee, and multiply thee. ‘Bashful’, for it is written, That His fear may be before you. ‘Benevolent’, for it is written, That he may command his children and his household etc. Only he who cultivates these three characteristics is fit to join this nation.
But the king took the two sons of Rizpah the daughter of Aiah, whom she bore into Saul, Armoni and Mephibosheth; and the five sons of Michal the daughter of Saul, whom she bore to Adriel the son of Barzillai the Meholathite. Why just these? — R. Huna replied: They were made to pass before the Holy Ark. He whom the Ark retained [was condemned] to death and he whom the Ark did not retain was saved alive.

R. Hana b. Kattina raised an objection: But the king spared Mephibosheth, the son of Jonathan the son of Saul! — He did not allow him to pass. Was there favouritism then! — In fact he did let him pass and it retained him, but he invoked on his behalf divine mercy and it released him. But here, too, favouritism is involved! — The fact, however, is that he invoked divine mercy that the Ark should not retain him. But, surely, it is written, The fathers shall not be pit to death for the children etc. — R. Hiyya b. Abba replied in the name of R. Johanan: It is better that a letter be rooted out of the Torah than that the Divine name shall be publicly profaned.

And Rizpah the daughter of Aiah took sackcloth, and spread it for her upon the rock, from the beginning of harvest until water was poured upon them from heaven; and she suffered neither the birds of the air to rest on them by day, nor the beast of the field by night. But, surely, it is written, His body shall not remain all night upon the tree! — R. Johanan replied in the name of R. Simeon b. Jehozadak: It is proper that a letter be rooted out of the Torah so that thereby the heavenly name shall be publicly hallowed. For passers-by were enquiring, ‘What kind of men are these?’ — ‘These are royal princes’ — ‘And what have they done?’ — ‘They laid their hands upon unattached strangers’ — Then they exclaimed: ‘There is no nation in existence which one ought to join as much as this one. If [the punishment of] royal princes was so great. how much more that of common people; and if such [was the justice done for] unattached proselytes, how much more so for Israelites.

A hundred and fifty thousand men immediately joined Israel; as it is said, And Solomon had threescore and ten thousand that bore burdens, and fourscore thousand that were hewers in the mountain. Might not these have been Israelites? — This cannot be assumed, for it is written, But of the children of Israel did Solomon make no bondservants. But that might have represented mere public service! — [The deduction,] however, [is made] from the following: And Solomon numbered all the strangers that were in the Land of Israel, etc. And they were found a hundred and fifty thousand etc. And he set threescore and ten thousand of them to bear burdens, and fourscore thousand to be hewers in the mountains.

Was it David, however, who issued the decree of prohibition against the nethinim? Moses, surely, issued that decree, for it is written, from the hewer of thy wood to the drawer of thy water! — Moses issued a decree against that generation only while David issued a decree against all generations.

But Joshua, in fact, issued the decree against them, for it is written, And Joshua made them that day hewers of wood and drawers of water for the congregation, and for the altar of the Lord! — Joshua made his decree for the period during which the Sanctuary was in existence while David made his decree for the time during which the Sanctuary was not in existence.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 79b

In the days of Rabbi there was a desire to permit the nethinim.¹ Said Rabbi to them, ‘We could very well surrender our portion; who could surrender the portion of the altar?’² He³ is thus in disagreement with R. Hiyya b. Abba. For R. Hiyya b. Abba stated in the name of R. Johanan: The portion of the congregation is forbidden for ever,⁴ and the portion of the altar is forbidden only when the Sanctuary is in existence, but when the Sanctuary is not in existence it is permitted.

MISHNAH. R. JOSHUA STATED: I HAVE HEARD⁵ THAT A SARIS⁶ SUBMITS TO HALIZAH⁸ AND THAT HALIZAH IS ARRANGED FOR HIS WIFE, AND ALSO THAT A SARIS⁸ DOES NOT SUBMIT TO HALIZAH AND THAT NO HALIZAH IS TO BE ARRANGED FOR HIS WIFE, AND I AM UNABLE TO EXPLAIN THIS.⁷ R. AKIBA SAID, I WILL EXPLAIN IT: A MAN-MADE SARIS⁸ SUBMITS TO HALIZAH AND HALIZAH IS ALSO ARRANGED FOR HIS WIFE, BECAUSE THERE WAS A TIME WHEN HE WAS IN A STATE OF FITNESS. A SARIS BY NATURE⁹ NEITHER SUBMITS TO HALIZAH NOR IS HALIZAH ARRANGED FOR HIS WIFE, SINE THERE NEVER WAS A TIME WHEN HE WAS FIT. R. ELIEZER SAID: NOT SO, BUT A SARIS BY NATURE⁹ SUBMITS TO HALIZAH AND HALIZAH IS ALSO ARRANGED FOR HIS WIFE, BECAUSE HE MAY BE CURED. A MAN-MADE SARIS¹⁰ NEITHER SUBMITS TO HALIZAH NOR IS HALIZAH ARRANGED FOR HIS WIFE, SINCE HE CANNOT BE CURED. R. JOSHUA B. BATHYRA TESTIFIED CONCERNING BEN MEGOSATH, WHO WAS A MAN-MADE SARIS LIVING IN JERUSALEM. THAT HIS WIFE WAS ALLOWED TO BE MARRIED BY THE LEVIR, THUS CONFIRMING THE OPINION OF R. AKIBA.

THE SARIS NEITHER SUBMITS TO HALIZAH NOR CONTRACTS THE LEVIRATE
MARRIAGE, AND SO ALSO A WOMAN WHO IS INCAPABLE OF PROCREATION MUST NEITHER PERFORM HALIZAH NOR BE TAKEN IN LEVIRATE MARRIAGE.

IF A SARIS SUBMITTED TO HALIZAH FROM HIS SISTER-IN-LAW, HE DOES NOT THEREBY CAUSE HER TO BE DISQUALIFIED. IF, HOWEVER, HE COHABITED WITH HER HE CAUSES HER TO BE DISQUALIFIED. SINCE HIS ACT IS SHEER PROSTITUTION, SIMILARLY, WHERE BROTHERS SUBMITTED TO HALIZAH FROM A WOMAN INCAPABLE OF PROCREATION, THEY DO NOT THEREBY CAUSE HER TO BE DISQUALIFIED. IF, HOWEVER, THEY COHABITED WITH HER, THEY CAUSE HER TO BE DISQUALIFIED. SINCE COHABITATION WITH HER IS AN ACT OF PROSTITUTION.

GEMARA. Observe! R. Akiba was heard to state that ‘Those who are subject to the penalty of negative precepts are on a par with those who are subject to the penalties of kareth’; but those who are subject to the penalty of kareth are not eligible for halizah or levirate marriage! — R. Ammi replied: ‘What we are dealing with here is with a case, for instance, where his brother had married a proselyte; and R. Akiba is of the same opinion as R. Jose, who stated that an assembly of proselytes is not regarded as an assembly.’ If so, he should also be permitted to contract levirate marriage! — The law is so indeed; only because R. Joshua used the expression ‘SUBMITS TO HALIZAH’ he [R. Akiba] also used the expression ‘SUBMITS TO HALIZAH’. This may also be proved by inference; for it was stated, R. JOSHUA B. BATHYRA TESTIFIED CONCERNING BEN MEGOSATH, WHO WAS A MAN-MADE SARIS LIVING IN JERUSALEM, THAT HIS WIFE WAS ALLOWED TO BE MARRIED BY THE LEVIR, THUS CONFIRMING THE OPINION OF R. AKIBA. This proves it.

Rabbah raised an objection: He who is wounded in the stones or has his privy member cut off, a man-made saris, and an old man, may either participate in halizah or contract levirate marriage. How? If these died and were survived by wives and brothers, and those brothers addressed a ma'amor to the wives, or gave them letters of divorce, or participated with them in halizah, their actions are legally valid; if they cohabited with them, the widows become their lawful wives. If the brothers died and they addressed a ma'amor to their wives, or gave them divorce, or participated with them in halizah, their actions are valid; and if they cohabited with them the widows become their lawful wives, but they may not retain them, because it is said in Scripture. He that is wounded in the stones or hath his privy member cut off shall not enter into the assembly of the Lord. This clearly proves that we are dealing with members of the assembly! — The fact is, said Rabbah, that this is a case where the widow became subject to him first and he was subsequently maimed. Said Abaye to him: Let the prohibition against the maimed man override the positive precept of the levirate marriage! Did we not learn [of a similar case]: R. Gamaliel said, If she made a declaration of refusal well and good; and if not, let [the elder sister] wait until the minor grows up and she will then be exempt as his wife's sister. Thus it follows that the prohibition against a wife's sister has the force of overriding [that of the levirate marriage]; here also, then, let the prohibition against the maimed man have the force of overriding it! — But, said R. Joseph. this Tanna represents the view of the Tanna of the school of R. Akiba, who maintains that [the issue] of a union which is subject to the penalty of negative precepts owing to consanguinity is regarded as a bastard, but [the issue] of a union that is merely subject to the penalty of negative precepts is not a bastard.

The text, ‘To raise up unto his brother a name should be applicable to this case also, but he surely, is incapable of raising it! — Raba replied: If so, there exists no woman who is eligible for the levirate marriage whose husband was not a saris by nature for a short time, at least, prior to his death. Against R. Eliezer, however, Raba's reply presents a [valid] objection! — There it is only a
What are we to understand by A SARIS BY NATURE? — R. Isaac b. Joseph replied in the name of R. Johanan: Any man

(1) To enter into the congregation.
(2) Both the congregation and the altar have shares in them (cf. Josh. ibid.).

(9) lit., a ‘eunuch of the sun’, one who was a eunuch from the time he first saw the sun, i.e., a congenital eunuch.
(10) V. p. 538, n. 10.
(11) To marry a priest.
(12) The woman being forbidden to him as ‘his brother's wife’.
(13) Cf. supra n. 3.
(14) A man-made saris is one of these, since cohabitation with him is forbidden by a negative precept in Deut. XXIII, 2.
(15) V. supra 49a.
(16) How then could R. Akiba maintain in our Mishnah that A MAN-MADE SARIS SUBMITS TO HALIZAH.
(17) The deceased brother of the saris.
(18) A proselyte, not being included in the term assembly (v. Deut. XXIII. 2) she is permitted to the saris. Hence he submits to her halizah.
(19) V. supra n. 1.
(20) Why then was only halizah mentioned?
(21) According to R. Joshua, who regards an assembly of proselytes as a congregation, marriage is in fact forbidden. Only halizah is permitted because in his opinion it is applicable in the case of those a union between whom is subject to the penalty of a negative precept.
(22) That according to R. Akiba even the levirate marriage is permitted.
(23) Levirate marriage. V. supra n. 5.
(24) I.e., in what connection is this law applicable?
(26) Lit., ‘what they did they have done’; after their ma'amor, a divorce is required; after their divorce, no marriage may take place; and their halizah is valid.
(27) Lit., ‘they acquired’.

(31) Those that are maimed. The old man is excluded. V. infra.

(33) In regarding the halizah and marriage with an impotent person as valid.
(34) How then could it be suggested that R. Akiba speaks of women proselytes who are not included in the term ‘assembly?’
(35) R. Akiba's statement in our Mishnah.
(36) As his deceased brother's wife.
(37) Since the obligation arose while the man was still in a state of potency, halizah with him is both necessary and valid.
(38) A minor who was given away in marriage by her mother or brothers after the death of her father and whose elder sister has now become subject to the levirate marriage of her husband.
(39) Mi’un (v. Glos.). No divorce is needed in the case of such a minor's marriage.
(40) Lit., ‘she refused’. Her marriage becomes null and void retrospectively, and, as she has thus never been the legal wife of the levir, her sister (who is now no more the levir's wife's sister) may well contract with him the levirate marriage.

(41) Supra 18a, infra 109a.

(42) Who, in fact, deals with a case where the impotency had set in prior to the obligation and yet permits the halizah.

(43) Of the contracting parties.

(44) This Tanna, like the Tanna of our Mishnah, thus draws a distinction between two classes of trespass that are subject to the penalty of negative precepts: (a) cases due to consanguinity and (b) other cases. While the former are subject to the restrictions of those who are liable to kareth, the latter are not. Maimed persons belong to the latter class and are consequently subject to the levirate law. Cf. supra 49a.

(45) Deut. XXV, 7.

(46) The maimed levir.

(47) Owing to his impotency at the time of the halizah.

(48) Though at some earlier period he might have been; why then should he be subject to halizah?

(49) If his former potency is not to be taken into consideration.

(50) Approaching death deprives a person of his generating powers, and he may then be regarded virtually as a saris.

(51) The widow of such a saris should consequently be exempt from halizah (v. our Mishnah). How, then, would a widow ever be subject to halizah? It must, therefore, be admitted that a person's former capacity for propagation is taken into consideration even though that capacity was subsequently lost.

(52) Who maintains that a manmade saris does not submit to halizah, though prior to his incapacitation he was capable of propagation.

(53) Which proves the contrary of R. Eliezer's statement (cf. supra n. 6).

(54) Where the power of propagation is lost on approaching death.

(55) Which precedes death.

(56) And this cannot at all be compared with the case of an actual saris whose incapacity is due to a definite defect in his generative organs.

who has not experienced a moment [of life] in a state of fitness.¹ How could this² be ascertained? — Abaye replied: [By observing whether] when he urinates no arch is formed. What are the causes?³ — That the child's mother baked at noon⁴ and drank strong⁵ beer.

R. Joseph said: It must have been such a saris⁶ of whom I heard Ammi saying, ‘He who is afflicted from birth’,⁷ and I did not know [at the time] to whom he was referring. But should we not take into consideration the possibility that he might have recovered in the meantime?⁸ — Since he suffered from affliction in his early as well as in his later life, no [possible interval of recovery] need be taken into consideration

R. Mari raised an objection: R. Hanina b. Antigonos stated, ‘It⁹ is to be examined¹⁰ three times in eighty days’¹¹ — Precautions are to be taken in respect of one limb;¹² in respect of the entire body¹³ no such precautions need be taken.¹⁴

R. ELIEZER SAID: NOT SO etc. A contradiction may be pointed out: If at the age of twenty he¹⁵ did not produce two hairs,¹⁶ they¹⁷ must bring evidence that he is twenty years of age and he, being confirmed as a saris,¹⁸ neither submits to halizah nor performs the levirate marriage. If the woman¹⁹ at the age of twenty did not produce two hairs,²⁰ they²¹ must bring evidence that she is twenty years of age and she, being confirmed as a woman who is incapable of procreation neither performs halizah nor is taken in levirate marriage; so Beth Hillel. But Beth Shammai maintain that with the one as well as with the other [this takes place at] the age of eighteen. R. Eliezer said. In the case of the male, the law is in accordance with Beth Hillel and in the case Of the female, the law is in accordance with Beth Shammai because a woman matures earlier than a man²² Rami b. Dikuli replied in the name Of Samuel: R. Eliezer changed his view.²³
The question was raised: From which statement did he withdraw? — Come and hear what was taught: R. Eliezer said. A congenital saris submits to halizah, and halizah is arranged for his wife, because cases of such a nature are cured in Alexandria in Egypt.

R. Eleazar said: As a matter of fact he did not change his view at all, but that statement was taught in respect of the age of punishment.

It was stated: If a person between the age of twelve years and one day and that of eighteen years ate forbidden fat, and after the marks of a saris had appeared, he grew two hairs. Rab ruled that the person is deemed to be a saris retrospectively. But Samuel ruled [that the person is regarded as] having been a minor at that time.

R. Joseph demurred against Rab: According to R. Meir, a woman who is incapable of procreation should be entitled to a fine! — Abaye replied: She passes from her minority into adolescence. The other said to him: May all such fine sayings be reported in my name. For so it was taught: A saris is not tried as a stubborn and rebellious son, because no stubborn and rebellious son is tried unless he bears the mark of the pubic hair. Nor is a woman who is incapable of procreation tried as a betrothed damsel because from her minority she passes into adolescence.

R. Abbahu stated: On the basis of the marks of a saris, of a woman incapable of procreation, and of an eight-[month] child no decision is made until they attain the age of twenty. Is, however, an eight-[month] child viable? Surely it was taught: An eight-month child is like a stone, and it is forbidden to move him; only his mother may bend over him and nurse him.

in order to avert danger! — Here we are dealing with one whose marks have not been developed. For it was taught: Who is an eight-month child? He whose months [of conception] have not been completed. Rabbi said: The marks, his hair and nails which were not developed, would indicate it. The reason then is because they were not developed, but had they been developed it would have been assumed that the child was a seven-month one only his [birth] was somewhat delayed.

With reference, however, to the practical decision which Raba Tosfa'ah gave in the case of a woman whose husband had gone to a country beyond the sea and remained there for a full year of twelve months, where he declared the child legitimate, in accordance with whose [view did he act]? [Was it] in accordance with that of Rabbi who maintains that [birth] may be delayed? — Since R. Simeon b. Gamaliel also maintains that [birth] may be delayed. he acted in agreement with a majority. For it was taught: R. Simeon b. Gamaliel said: Any human child that lingers for thirty days can not be regarded as a miscarriage.

Our Rabbis taught: Who is a congenital saris? Any person who is twenty years of age and has not produced two pubic hairs. And even if he produced them afterwards he is deemed to be a saris in all respects. And these are his characteristics: He has no beard, his hair is lank, and his skin is smooth. R. Simeon b. Gamaliel said in the name of R. Judah b. Jair: Any person whose urine produces no froth; some say: He who urinates without forming an arch; some say: He whose semen is watery; and some say: He whose urine does not ferment. Others say: He whose body does not steam after bathing in the winter season. R. Simeon b. Eleazar said: He whose voice is abnormal so that one cannot distinguish whether it is that of a man or of a woman.

What woman is deemed to be incapable of procreation? — Any woman who is twenty years of age and has not produced two pubic hairs. And even if she produces them afterwards she is deemed to be a woman incapable of procreation in all respects. And these are her characteristics: She has no breasts and suffers pain during copulation. R. Simeon b. Gamaliel said: One who has no mons veneris like other women. R. Simeon b. Eleazar said: One whose voice is deep so that one cannot distinguish whether it is that of a man or of a woman.

It was stated: As to the characteristics of a saris, R. Huna stated, [Impotency cannot be established] unless they are all present. R. Johanan, however, stated: Even if only one of them is present. Where two hairs were produced all agree that impotency cannot be established unless all characteristics are displayed. They only differ in the case where these were not produced. With reference, however, to what Rabbah b. Abbuha said to the Rabbis, ‘Examine R. Nahman. and if his body steams I will allow him to marry my daughter’; in accordance with whose view [was he acting]? [Was it] according to R. Huna! — No; R. Nahman had some stray hairs.

THE SARIS NEITHER SUBMITS TO HALIZAH NOR CONTRACTS THE LEVIRATE MARRIAGE, AND SO ALSO A WOMAN WHO IS INCAPABLE OF PROCREATION etc. The saris was mentioned in the same way as the woman who is incapable of procreation; as the woman's incapacity is due to an act of heaven so must that of the saris be an act of heaven; and this anonymous [Mishnah] is in agreement with R. Akiba who stated [that halizah applies] only to a man-made [saris but] not [to one afflicted] by the hand of heaven.

IF A SARIS SUBMITTED TO HALIZAH FROM HIS SISTER-IN-LAW, HE DOES NOT THEREBY CAUSE HER TO BE DISQUALIFIED etc. The reason then [why when HE COHABITED WITH HER HE CAUSES HER TO BE DISQUALIFIED] is because he cohabited with her; another man, however, does not.

Tosaf. however, retains the reading of our text and consequently draws a distinction between hairs of the beard and on any other part of the body. The former in themselves, unlike the latter, are not sufficient to establish potency. V. Tosaf. s.v. סריס].

is this, then, an objection to the view of R. Hannuna who stated that a widow awaiting the decision of her levir who committed adultery \(^1\) is disqualified [from marrying her] brother-in-law \(^2\) — No; the same law \(^3\) is applicable to [the case of cohabitation with] another man also; Only because the first clause was taught in respect of himself, \(^4\) the latter clause also was taught in respect of himself.

SIMILARLY, WHERE BROTHERS SUBMITTED TO HALIZAH FROM A WOMAN INCAPABLE OF PROCREATION etc. The reason then [why when THEY COHABITED WITH HER THEY CAUSE HER TO BE DISQUALIFIED] is because they cohabited with her, but had they not cohabited with her they would not; \(^5\) in accordance with whose view [is this statement made]? — Not in accordance with that of R. Judah; for should it [be suggested that it is in agreement with] R. Judah, he, surely, [it might be objected,] stated that a woman incapable of procreation is regarded as a harlot. \(^6\)

MISHNAH. IF A PRIEST WHO WAS A SARIS BY NATURE \(^7\) MARRIED THE DAUGHTER OF AN ISRAELITE, HE CONFFERS UPON HER THE RIGHT OF EATING TERUMAH. R. JOSE AND R. SIMEON STATED: IF A PRIEST WHO WAS AN HERMAPHRODITE MARRIED THE DAUGHTER OF AN ISRAELITE, HE CONFFERS UPON HER THE RIGHT TO EAT TERUMAH.
R. JUDAH STATED: IF A TUMTUM,\(^8\) WAS OPERATED UPON\(^9\) AND HE WAS FOUND TO BE A MALE, HE MUST NOT PARTICIPATE IN HALIZAH,\(^10\) BECAUSE HE HAS THE SAME STATUS AS A SARIS. THE HERMAPHRODITE MAY MARRY [A WIFE] BUT MAY NOT BE MARRIED [BY A MAN].\(^11\) R. ELIEZER\(^12\) STATED: [FOR COPULATION] WITH AN HERMAPHRODITE THE PENALTY OF STONING IS INCURRED AS [IF HE WERE] A MALE.\(^13\)

GEMARA. [Is not this]\(^14\) obvious!\(^15\) — It might have been assumed that only one who is capable of propagation is entitled to bestow the right of eating\(^16\) and that he who is not capable of propagating is not entitled to bestow the right of eating; hence we were taught [that even the sarsi may bestow the right].

R. JOSE AND R. SIMEON STATED . . . HERMAPHRODITE. Resh Lakish said: He CONFERS UPON HER THE RIGHT OF EATING TERUMAH but does not confer upon her the right to eat of the breast and the shoulder.\(^17\) R. Johanan, however, said: He also confers upon her the right to eat of the breast and shoulder.\(^17\)

According to Resh Lakish,\(^18\) why is the breast and the shoulder different?\(^19\) [Obviously] because [it was] Pentateuchally [ordained].\(^20\) [Was not] terumah, [however]. also Pentateuchally [ordained]? — We are dealing here with terumah at the present time,\(^21\) which [is only a] Rabbinical [ordinance].\(^22\) What is the law, however, when the Sanctuary is in existence?\(^23\) [Obviously that terumah may] not [be eaten]:\(^24\) Why, then, did he state, 'But does not confer the right of eating the breast and the shoulder'?\(^25\) He should rather have drawn the distinction in respect of the terumah itself, thus: This\(^26\) applies only to Rabbinical terumah,\(^27\) but not to terumah that has been Pentateuchally ordained!\(^28\) — It is this, in fact, that he meant: When he\(^29\) confers upon her\(^30\) the right of eating, he enables her to eat terumah at the present time\(^27\) only when it is a Rabbinical ordinance;\(^31\) he is not entitled, however, to confer upon her the right of eating terumah at the time when the law of the breast and the shoulder is in force,\(^32\) even if the terumah is only Rabbinical,\(^33\) for she might in consequence also come to eat of Pentateuchal terumah.\(^34\)

‘R. Johanan, however, said: He also confers upon her the right to eat of the breast and the shoulder’. Said R. Johanan to Resh Lakish: Do you\(^35\) maintain that terumah at the present time is only a Rabbinical ordinance? — ‘Yes’, the other replied, ‘for I read:\(^36\) A cake of figs\(^37\) among cakes of figs is neutralised’.\(^38\) ‘But I’, said the first, ‘read, "A piece\(^39\) among pieces\(^40\) is neutralized";\(^41\) you obviously believe that the reading\(^42\) is, "Whatsoever\(^43\) one is wont to count";\(^44\) the reading in fact is, "That which one is wont to count"'.\(^45\)

What [Mishnah]\(^46\) is it? — That wherein we learned: If a man had bundles of fenugrec of kil'ayim\(^47\) of the vineyard\(^48\) they must be burned.\(^49\) If these were mixed up with others,\(^50\)

(38) If such a cake of terumah was mixed up with a hundred non-consecrated cakes of the same size, or if a cake of terumah that was levitically unclean was mixed up with a hundred such cakes of clean terumah, the entire quantity is permitted. in the latter case, to clean priests and, in the former case, to Israelites also. This proves that terumah at the present time is only a Rabbinical ordinance, since such neutralization, had the ordinance been Pentateuchal, would not, owing to its comparative importance (its high commercial value, v. infra), have been permitted. Though the terumah of figs, like that of all other fruit of trees, is at all times a Rabbinical ordinance only, its neutralization would not have been permitted at the present time had there been any Pentateuchal terumah in existence at the same time. The neutralization of the former would have been forbidden as a preventive measure against the possible assumption that the ‘latter also might be neutralized.

As a piece of meat which is Pentateuchally forbidden (v. supra n. 5) may be neutralized, even though its importance, owing to its commercial value, may be as high as that of a cake of figs, so may any food be neutralized even though its prohibition is Pentateuchal.
(42) Cf. the Mishnah cited infra.
(43) Any objects which any person whatsoever sells by counting the units. V. infra n. 11.
(44) Cannot be neutralized.
(45) ‘Whatsoever’ is more comprehensive than ‘that’. According to the former reading, neutralization is not permitted in the case of any objects which are regarded as of sufficiently high commercial value to be sold not in bulk but in units. According to the latter reading, neutralization is permitted in all cases except those where the units are of such a high value that they are not sold save by counting single units. Now, since cakes of figs are not invariably sold in units they may of course be neutralized even though they consist of Pentateuchal terumah (cf. supra n. 7). Resh Lakish, therefore, remains with no proof whatsoever that terumah at the present time is a mere Rabbinical ordinance. [This interpretation which follows Rashi does not account for the phrase ‘one is wont etc’, mentioned also with the latter reading. Me'iri explains the former as including whatever is being sold as a rule by counting among the poor, whereas the latter requires the sale by counting to be the general practice among the rich as well as the poor. On either reading it is the general practice rather than the invariable rule which is the determining factor].

they must all be burned;¹ so R. Meir. The Sages, however, stated: They are neutralized in [a mixture of] two hundred and one.² R. Meir, [in his ruling,] is of the opinion that whatever³ might be counted causes forfeiture,⁴ while the Sages are of the opinion that only six things cause forfeiture.⁵ R. Akiba said: Seven. They are the following: Crack-nuts,⁶ the pomegranates of Badan,⁷ sealed jugs [of wine], young shoots of beet,⁸ cabbage roots and the Grecian gourd. R. Akiba adds also home made⁹ bread.¹⁰ Those which are subject to the law of ‘orlah¹¹ [impart the prohibition of] ‘orlah¹² [and those which are subject] to the law of kil’ayim of the vineyard¹³ [impart¹² that of the] kil’ayim of the vineyard.¹⁴ R. Johanan holds the view that the reading¹⁵ was, ‘That which one is wont to count’¹⁶ while Resh Lakish holds the view that the reading was ‘Whosoever one is wont to count’.¹⁷

What [is the Baraitha about the] piece?¹⁸ — It was taught: A piece of a levitically unclean sin-offering that was mixed up with a hundred pieces of clean sin-offerings and, similarly, a piece of levitically unclean shewbread¹⁹ that was mixed up with a hundred pieces of clean shewbread is neutralized.²⁰ R. Judah said: It is not neutralized.²¹ If, however, a piece of a levitically clean sin offering was mixed up with a hundred pieces of clean and unconsecrated meat, and similarly if a piece of levitically clean shewbread was mixed up with a hundred pieces of clean unconsecrated bread, all agree that neutralization cannot take place.²² Now in the first clause, at any rate, it was stated that it ‘is neutralized’²³ — R. Hyya son of R. Huna replied: In [the case where it was] crushed.²⁴ If so,²⁵ what is R. Judah's reason?²⁶

(1) The forbidden kil'ayim cannot be neutralized. The reason is given infra.
(2) I.e., if the permitted food is two hundred times the quantity of the forbidden kil'ayim.
(3) V. supra p. 551. n. 9.

(15) In the Mishnah cited.
(16) Cf. supra p. 551, n. 11. Only such objects cannot be neutralized. Cakes of figs and pieces of meat, however, since some people do not always sell them singly but in bulk, are of less commercial importance and may, therefore, be Cf. supra p. 551, nn. 7 and 8. As cakes of figs are sometimes sold by being counted singly, they are regarded as commercially important objects which, were they Pentateuchally forbidden, could never be neutralized. As it was stated, however, that a cake of figs of terumah may be neutralized, it follows, according to Resh Lakish, that terumah at the present time is only a Rabbinical, and not a Pentateuchal ordinance.

(20) The entire mixture is regarded as clean sin-offering meat and clean shewbread respectively.

(21) The reason is discussed infra.

(22) Neutralization would have removed a Pentateuchal prohibition (that of eating consecrated food by a non-priest) from the piece of the sin-offering or from that of the shewbread. As, however, the entire mixture, which consists of pieces that are sometimes sold by number, may be eaten even without recourse to neutralization by a priest to whom it could be sold, though this might have to be done at a reduced cost, the law of neutralization, which is applied even in such circumstances whenever the prohibition is Rabbinical, as in the case of the cake of figs (supra), is not applied here where it is Pentateuchal.

(23) Though these objects are sometimes sold in units. This obviously proves that the reading was, as R. Johanan stated, ‘That which one is wont to count. How, then, could Resh Lakish maintain that the reading was ‘Whatsoever one is wont to count’?

(24) When it is no longer sold in units but in bulk.

(25) Why does he in such a case object to neutralization?

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 82a

— R. Judah follows his own view; for he stated: 1 The law of neutralization takes no effect in homogeneous objects. 2 [Had the piece] not been crushed, however, what [would have been the law]? Assuming that it could not be neutralized! Why, then, was it taught. ‘If, however, a piece of a levitically clean sin-offering was mixed up with a hundred pieces of clean and unconsecrated meat . . . neutralization cannot take place’? 3 Let the distinction be drawn in [the case of consecrated meat] itself, thus: This 4 applies only where it 5 was crushed; but when it was not crushed it may not be neutralized! — He preferred [to speak of] a mixture of clean with clean. 6

According to Resh Lakish, 7 wherein lies the difference between the first clause and the final clause? 8 — R. Shisha the son of R. Idi replied: The first clause deals with uncleanness that was due to liquids, 9 which is only Rabbinical, 10 while the final clause [deals with a prohibition] 11 which is Pentateuchal. 12 What, however, [would be the law in the case of] uncleanness through a reptile? 13 Assuming that no neutralization is permitted! Why, then, did he state in the final clause, ‘If, however, a piece of levitically clean sin-offering was mixed up with a hundred pieces of clean and unconsecrated meat . . . neutralization cannot take place’? 14 Let the distinction rather be drawn in [respect of consecrated meat] itself, thus: This 15 applies only to uncleanness due to liquids, but when it is due to a reptile it may not be neutralized! — He preferred [to speak of] a mixture of clean with clean. 16

Rabbah replied: 17 The first clause [deals with] a prohibition under a negative precept 18 while the final clause [deals with] one that involves the penalty of kareth. 19 But surely was it not Rabbah who stated that in all Pentateuchal prohibitions there is no difference 20 between a prohibition that is due to a negative precept and one that involves kareth! 21 — This is a difficulty.

R. Ashi replied: 17 [The law 22 in the] final clause is due to the fact that [the consecrated food] is an object which may be made 23 permissible, 24 and any object which [in certain circumstances] becomes permitted 24 cannot be neutralized even in a thousand. 25 This statement of R. Ashi, however, is mere fiction. 26 For to whom [would the mixture become permitted]? 27 To whom 28 the priest it is permitted [all the time]; 29 to the Israelite 28 it is for ever forbidden! 30 The statement of R. Ashi must consequently be regarded as mere fiction. But is R. Johanan of the opinion that terumah at the present time\textsuperscript{31} is Pentateuchal?\textsuperscript{32} Surely it was taught: If in front of two baskets, one of which contained unconsecrated fruit and the other that of terumah, were two se'ah measures, one containing unconsecrated fruit and the other of terumah, and the latter fell into the former, behold these are permitted,\textsuperscript{33} for it is assumed that the terumah fell into the terumah and the unconsecrated fruit fell into the unconsecrated fruit.\textsuperscript{34} And [in reference to this ruling] Resh Lakish stated: ‘Only if the unconsecrated fruit\textsuperscript{35} was more than that of the terumah’;\textsuperscript{36} while R. Johanan stated, ‘Even if the unconsecrated fruit were no more than the terumah’.\textsuperscript{37} Now, according to Resh Lakish\textsuperscript{38} the ruling\textsuperscript{39} may well be justified since he may hold the opinion that with Rabbinically [forbidden food] also it is necessary\textsuperscript{40} to have a larger quantity [of the permitted food]. According to R. Johanan,\textsuperscript{41} however, a difficulty arises!\textsuperscript{42} This\textsuperscript{43} [R. Johanan may reply] ‘is the view of\textsuperscript{44} the Rabbis,\textsuperscript{45}’
(32) As stated supra 81a.
(33) Even an Israelite may eat from the basket that contained the unconsecrated fruit.
(34) Tosef. Ter. VI end; Pes. 9b, 44a; Naz. 36b.
(35) In the basket.
(36) In the se'ah measure. Only in such a case is the assumption mentioned made, because the terumah representing the smaller quantity might be regarded as neutralized even if it had fallen into the basket of the unconsecrated fruit.
(37) No excess of unconsecrated fruit is necessary since the assumption mentioned is alone sufficient to establish the permissibility of the unconsecrated fruit.
(38) Who, as stated supra, regards terumah at the present time as Rabbinical.
(39) In the Baraita cited.
(40) To make the mentioned assumption.
(41) In whose opinion terumah is Pentateuchal at the present time also.
(42) How could the assumption mentioned be made in the case of a prohibition which is Pentateuchal!
(43) The ruling in the Baraita cited.
(44) Lit., ‘this according to whom?’
(45) Who hold that terumah at the present time is only Rabbinical.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 82b

while I maintain the view of R. Jose’.¹ For it was taught in Seder ‘Olam:² Which thy fathers possessed, and thou shalt possess it,³ they had a first,⁴ and a second⁵ possession,⁶ but they had no third one;⁷ and R. Johanan stated, ‘Who is the author of Seder ‘Olam? R. Jose’.⁸

But is R. Johanan of the opinion that in respect of a Rabbinically forbidden object no excess is required?⁹ Surely we learned: A ritual bath containing exactly forty se'ah [of water]¹⁰ to which one se'ah¹¹ was added and from which one se'ah¹² was taken off, is deemed to be ritually fit.¹³ And R. Judah b. Shila stated in the name of R. Assi in the name of R. Johanan. ‘As much as its greater part’.¹⁴ Does not this mean that the greater part must remain?¹⁵ — No; that the greater part must not be removed.¹⁶ And if you prefer I might say: Here¹⁷ it is different,¹⁸ since it may be said, ‘For it is assumed’.¹⁹

We learned, THE HERMAPHRODITE MAY MARRY [A WIFE]²⁰ — Read, ‘If he married’,²¹ But, surely, it was stated MAY MARRY²² — And even in accordance with your view what is the meaning of BUT MAY NOT BE MARRIED [BY A MAN]²³ Consequently it must be granted that as MAY . . . BE MARRIED²³ implies an act that had already been performed, so also MAY MARRY implies an act that had already been performed. It may still be urged: No;²⁴ MAY MARRY implies that the act is permissible; but MAY NOT BE MARRIED²³ implies, not even if the act had already been performed.²⁵ But surely since it was taught in the final clause, R. ELIEZER STATED: [FOR COPULATION WITH] AN HERMAPHRODITE THE PENALTY OF STONING IS INCURRED AS [IF HE WERE] A MALE, it is to be inferred that the first Tanna was doubtful on the point!²⁶ — The law²⁷ was clear to the one Master as well as to the other Master; the only difference between them was the question of stoning through either of his two organs. One Master²⁸ was of the opinion that the penalty of stoning is incurred by copulation through either of the two organs,²⁹ while the other Master³⁰ was of the opinion [that it is incurred through the male organ only] AS [IF HE WERE] A MALE.

Rab said:

(1) Who stated in our Mishnah that the hermaphrodite may confer upon his wife the right of eating terumah. It was in reference to this that R. Johanan had stated that the hermaphrodite may also confer upon his wife the right of eating the breast and the shoulder, which are Pentateuchally ordained, since terumah also according to R. Jose is even at the present time a Pentateuchal ordinance.

8 To effect neutralization. It is now assumed that the reason why R. Johanan maintains that 'even if the unconsecrated fruit were no more than the terumah’ it is permitted is because, in the case of a Rabbinical prohibition, neutralization is effected by the mere accident of the mixing of consecrated with unconsecrated fruit even though the latter did not form the larger part and not because he relies on the above mentioned assumption.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 83a

Our Mishnah cannot be maintained in the presence of the following Baraitha. For it was taught: R. Jose stated, ‘The hermaphrodite is a creature sui generis, and the Sages did not determine whether he is a male or a female’. On the contrary; the Baraitha cannot be maintained in the face of our Mishnah\(^3\) — As R. Jose left his colleague\(^4\) it may be inferred that he changed his opinion.\(^5\)

Samuel, however, said: The Baraita\(^2\) cannot be maintained in the face of our Mishnah.\(^3\) On the contrary; our Mishnah\(^3\) cannot be maintained in the face of the Baraita,\(^2\) since Samuel was heard to take note of an individual opinion\(^6\) — This\(^7\) applies only to a case where the Mishnah is not thereby uprooted; when the Mishnah, however, is thereby uprooted it need not be taken into consideration.

At the school of Rab it was stated in the name of Rab that the halachah is in agreement with R. Jose in respect of the hermaphrodite and grafting; and Samuel stated: In respect of protracted labour and forfeiture.

As to the ‘hermaphrodite’, there is the ruling just mentioned.\(^8\) ‘Grafting’? — As we have learned: There must be no planting, no sinking\(^9\) and no grafting on the eve of the Sabbatical Year\(^10\) within thirty days before the new year; and if one planted or sank or grafted, the tree must be uprooted.\(^11\) R. Judah said: Any grafting\(^12\) which takes no root within three days will never take root. R. Jose and R. Simeon stated: [Within] two weeks.\(^13\) And, [in reference to this.] R. Nahman stated in the name of Rabbah b. Abbuha that according to him who stated, ‘thirty days’, thirty and thirty are required; according to him who stated ‘three days’, three and thirty are required;\(^14\) and according to him who stated ‘two weeks’, two weeks and thirty days are required.\(^14\)

‘And Samuel stated: In respect of protracted labour and forfeiture’. ‘Protracted labour’? — As we learned: How long does the period of protracted labour\(^15\) continue? R. Meir said: Forty or fifty days.\(^16\) R. Judah said: Her [ninth] month is sufficient.\(^17\) R. Jose and R. Simeon said: Protracted labour cannot extend beyond two weeks.\(^18\) ‘Forfeiture’? As we have learned: If one causes his vine to overhang\(^19\) above the crops of his neighbour, behold he causes thereby their forfeiture,\(^20\) and he is liable to make compensation; so R. Meir. R. Jose and R. Simeon said:

(1) Which attributes to R. Jose the opinion that the hermaphrodite bestows upon his wife the right of eating terumah.
(2) Tosef. Bik. II. Since his sex is a matter of doubt he cannot obviously bestow the right(v. p. 558, n. 12) upon his wife.
(3) V. p. 558. n. 12.
(4) In his statement in the Baraita where he alone appears as the author. In the Mishnah both R. Jose and R. Simeon appear as the authors.
(5) Which he first expressed in our Mishnah.
(6) If that opinion is more rigid. (Cf. supra 41a Meg. 18b). Here too R. Jose's opinion in the Baraita is more restrictive than his opinion in our Mishnah and should therefore be taken into consideration!
(7) That an individual opinion is to be taken into consideration.
(8) In our Mishnah (cf. Rashi a.l.).
(9) The sinking of a branch under the ground while one end of it remains attached to the tree and the other end is made to protrude from the ground so that in due course it may develop into an independent tree.
(10) Cf. Lev. XXV, 4ff.
(11) A tree does not take root according to this view, before thirty days from the day of its planting have elapsed, and by that time the Sabbatical Year has already begun where all such agricultural activities are forbidden.
(12) And similarly any planting or sinking.
(13) Sheb. II, 6.
(14) Since the last thirty days of the eve of the Sabbatical Year are regarded as part of the next Sabbatical Year (v. M.K. 3b), the plant, in order that it may be permitted, must have taken root prior to these last thirty days.
(15) During this period a woman is not subject to the restrictions of a zabah (v. Glos.), if the flow occurred during the eleven days that intervene between her menstrual periods, even if the discharge continued for three consecutive days. Such a continuous discharge at any other time, when it cannot be attributed to labour, subjects a woman to the uncleanness of a zabah. As in this case, however, the discharge may be regarded as that attendant on labour, the woman must observe only the days prescribed for one after childbirth (cf. Lev. XII, 2ff) and not those prescribed for a zabah (cf. ibid. XV, 25ff). V. Nid. 36b.
Prior to the birth of the child. Should the flow begin prior to the ninth month and continue for three consecutive days she is regarded as a zabah.

Nid. 36b.

Lit., ‘to cover’. ‘to make a shadow’.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 83b

No man can impose a prohibition upon that which is not his.

The question was raised: What would Samuel have said with regard to the hermaphrodite? — Come and hear what Samuel said to R. Anan: The Baraita cannot be maintained in the face of our Mishnah.

What would Samuel have said in respect of grafting? — Come and hear what Samuel said to R. Anan: Teach in accordance with the view of him who stated ‘three and thirty’.

What is the opinion of Rab in respect of protracted labour? — This is undecided.

What is Rab's Opinion in respect of forfeiture? R. Joseph replied. Come and hear what R. Huna stated in the name of Rab: The halachah is not in agreement with R. Jose.

Said Abaye to him: What reason do you see for relying upon this statement? Rely rather on that which R. Adda made in the name of Rab: The halachah is in agreement with R. Jose! — Who is it [that is referred to by the phrase] ‘At the school of Rab it was stated’? R. Huna [of course], and R. Huna it was who stated that the halachah is not in agreement [with R. Jose].

R. JUDAH STATED: A TUMTUM etc. R. Ammi remarked: What would R. Judah have done with a case like that of the tumtum of Bairi, who, after having been placed upon the operating table and operated upon, begat seven children? And R Judah? — He could tell you: An enquiry should be made as to the origin of his children.

It was taught: R. Jose son of R. Judah stated that a tumtum must not participate in halizah, since it is possible that on being operated upon he may be found to be a congenital saris. Is everyone then, who is operated upon a male! — It is this that he meant: It is possible that on being operated upon he may be found to be a female; and were he found to be a male, it is even then possible that he might be found to be a congenital saris. What is the practical difference between them? — Raba replied: The practical difference between them is the question of disqualification where other brothers are in existence, and that of halizah where no other brothers exist.

R. Samuel son of R. Judah said in the name of R. Abba, the brother of R. Judah b. Zabdi, in the name of Rab Judah in the name of Rab: In respect of the hermaphrodite the penalty of stoning is incurred through either of his organs.

An objection was raised: R. Eliezer stated, ‘In respect of the hermaphrodite the penalty of stoning is incurred as in the case of a male. This, however, applies only to his male organ; but in respect of his female organ no penalty is incurred’. Raba holds the same opinion as the following Tanna. For it was taught: R. Simai stated that in respect of the hermaphrodite the penalty of stoning is incurred through either of his organs. What is R. Simai's reason? — Raba replied: Bar Hamduri has explained it to me as follows: And thou shalt not lie with a male, as well as with womankind; what male is it that is capable of two manners of lying? Obviously the hermaphrodite. And the Rabbis? — Though he is capable of two manners of lying it is nevertheless written in Scripture.
With a male.\textsuperscript{30} Whence, however, do the Rabbis\textsuperscript{31} derive the law concerning an ordinary male? — From And.\textsuperscript{32} Whence\textsuperscript{33} the prohibition in respect of unnatural intercourse with a woman? — From Woman.\textsuperscript{34}

R. Shezbi stated in the name of R. Hisda: It is not in all respects that R. Eliezer maintains that the hermaphrodite is a proper male. Since, were you to say so, [such an animal]\textsuperscript{35} would be fit for consecration.\textsuperscript{36} And whence is it derived that it\textsuperscript{37} may not be consecrated? — From what the Rabbis taught: [A bird] that was covered,\textsuperscript{38} set aside [for idolatrous purposes], or worshipped, that was the hire of a harlot\textsuperscript{39} or the price of a dog,\textsuperscript{39} a tumtum or hermaphrodite, causes the defilement of one's clothes\textsuperscript{40} by [contact with one's] oesophagus.\textsuperscript{41} R. Eliezer said: [A bird that was] a tumtum or hermaphrodite does not impart the defilement of clothes through contact with one's oesophagus; for R. Eliezer maintained that wherever male and female were mentioned,\textsuperscript{42} the tumtum and hermaphrodite are to be excluded; but [in the case of the sacrifice of a] bird, since in respect of it no mention was made of male or female, the tumtum and hermaphrodite are not to be excluded.\textsuperscript{43}

R. Nahman b. Isaac said: We also learned [a similar Baraita]: R. Eliezer stated:

According to R. Jose, however, the widow is disqualified. since the tumtum might possibly be a male and his halizah might be valid.

The hermaphrodite.

Used for bestiality.

Cf. Deut. XXIII. 19.

If the bird was offered up as a sacrifice in consequence of which its head is pinched off (cf. Lev. I, 15). As for the reasons stated, the bird is unfit for the altar, pinching (which is not the ritual mode of slaughter for unconsecrated birds) renders the bird nebelah (v. Glos.) which imparts uncleanness to one's clothes. V. infra n. 10.

I.e., through eating it. It is in this manner, and not by touch, that the nebelah of a clean bird (cf. Deut. XIV, 11) imparts uncleanness to a person.

In the Torah.

Bek. 42a, Zeb. 85b. Since in the case of sacrifices of beasts, male and female were mentioned, it is obvious that, according to R. Eliezer, no tumtum or hermaphrodite is suitable.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 84a

A hybrid, terefah, one that was extracted through the abdominal wall, the tumtum and the hermaphrodite can neither become sacred nor can they impart sanctity to others; is and Samuel explained: They neither become sacred by means of exchange, nor do they impart sanctity [to any other beast] by causing it to become an exchange. This proves [what has been said].

R. ELIEZER STATED . . . THE PENALTY OF STONING IS INCURRED AS [IF HE WERE] A MALE. It was taught: Rabbi related, ‘When I went to learn Torah at [the school of] R. Eleazar b. Shammu'a, his disciples combined against me like the cocks of Beth Bukya and did not let me learn more than this single thing in our Mishnah: R. ELIEZER STATED: [FOR COPULATION WITH] AN HERMAPHRODITE THE PENALTY OF STONING IS INCURRED AS [IF HE WERE] A MALE.

CHAPTER IX

MISHNAH. SOME WOMEN ARE PERMITTED TO THEIR HUSBANDS AND FORBIDDEN TO THEIR LEVIRS, OTHERS ARE PERMITTED TO THEIR LEVIRS AND FORBIDDEN TO THEIR HUSBANDS, OTHERS ARE PERMITTED TO BOTH THE FORMER AND THE LATTER, WHILE OTHERS ARE FORBIDDEN TO THE FORMER AS WELL AS TO THE LATTER. IN THE FOLLOWING CASES THE WOMEN ARE PERMITTED TO THEIR HUSBANDS AND FORBIDDEN TO THEIR LEVIRS: IF A COMMON PRIEST WHO MARRIED A WIDOW HAD A BROTHER A HIGH PRIEST; IF A HALAL WHO MARRIED A WOMAN OF LEGITIMATE STATUS HAD A BROTHER OF LEGITIMATE STATUS; IF AN ISRAELITE WHO MARRIED THE DAUGHTER OF AN ISRAELITE HAD A BROTHER A BASTARD, ‘OR IF A BASTARD WHO MARRIED A BASTARD HAD A BROTHER AN ISRAELITE, [IN ALL THESE CASES THE WOMEN] ARE PERMITTED TO THEIR HUSBANDS AND FORBIDDEN TO THEIR LEVIRS.

THE FOLLOWING ARE PERMITTED TO THEIR LEVIRS AND FORBIDDEN TO THEIR HUSBANDS: IF A HIGH PRIEST WHO BETROTHED A WIDOW HAD A BROTHER A COMMON PRIEST; IF ONE OF LEGITIMATE STATUS WHO MARRIED A HALALAH HAD A BROTHER A HALAL; IF AN ISRAELITE WHO MARRIED A BASTARD HAD A BROTHER A BASTARD, OR IF A BASTARD WHO MARRIED THE DAUGHTER OF AN ISRAELITE HAD A BROTHER AN ISRAELITE, [IN ALL THESE CASES THE WOMEN] ARE PERMITTED TO THEIR LEVIRS AND FORBIDDEN TO THEIR HUSBANDS.

THE FOLLOWING ARE FORBIDDEN TO BOTH THE FORMER AND THE LATTER: IF A HIGH PRIEST WHO MARRIED A WIDOW HAD A BROTHER A HIGH PRIEST, OR IF A COMMON PRIEST OF LEGITIMATE STATUS WHO MARRIED A HALALAH HAD A BROTHER OF LEGITIMATE STATUS, OR IF AN ISRAELITE WHO MARRIED A BASTARD HAD A BROTHER AN ISRAELITE, OR IF A BASTARD WHO MARRIED THE DAUGHTER OF AN ISRAELITE HAD A BROTHER A BASTARD, [IN ALL THESE CASES THE WOMEN] ARE FORBIDDEN TO BOTH THE FORMER AND THE LATTER. ALL OTHER WOMEN ARE PERMITTED TO BOTH THEIR HUSBANDS AND THEIR LEVIRS.

[IN RESPECT OF] RELATIVES OF THE SECOND GRADE, [WHO ARE FORBIDDEN] BY THE ORDINANCES OF THE SCRIBES, A WOMAN WHO IS WITHIN THE SECOND GRADE OF KINSHIP TO THE HUSBAND BUT NOT WITHIN THE SECOND GRADE OF KINSHIP TO THE LEVIR, IS FORBIDDEN TO THE HUSBAND AND PERMITTED TO THE LEVIR; [A WOMAN WHO IS WITHIN] THE SECOND GRADE OF KINSHIP TO THE LEVIR BUT NOT WITHIN THE SECOND GRADE OF KINSHIP TO THE HUSBAND IS FORBIDDEN TO THE LEVIR AND PERMITTED TO THE HUSBAND; [WHILE ONE WHO IS WITHIN] THE SECOND GRADE OF KINSHIP TO THE ONE AND TO THE OTHER IS FORBIDDEN TO THE ONE AS WELL AS TO THE OTHER. SHE CANNOT CLAIM EITHER KETHUBAH, OR USUFRUCT, OR ALIMONY, OR HER WORN CLOTHES. [SHOULD A] CHILD [BE BORN] IS ELIGIBLE [FOR THE PRIESTHOOD]; BUT THE HUSBAND MUST BE COMPELLED TO DIVORCE HER. A WIDOW, HOWEVER, WHO WAS MARRIED TO A HIGH PRIEST, A DIVORCEE OR HALUZAH WHO WAS MARRIED TO A COMMON PRIEST, A BASTARD OR A NETHINAH WHO WAS MARRIED TO AN ISRAELITE, OR THE DAUGHTER OF AN ISRAELITE WHO WAS MARRIED TO A NATHIN OR A BASTARD IS ENTITLED TO HER KETHUBAH.

GEMARA. What was the point in teaching MARRIED? He could have taught: ‘Betrothed’! And were you to reply that the reason [for the prohibition is only] because he MARRIED, since [in that case] a positive as well as a negative precept is involved, but where betrothal only took place the positive precept does override the negative, but [it could be retorted] the whole of our section deals with a positive versus a negative precept, and the positive nevertheless does not override the negative! — As it was desired to state in the final clause, A HIGH PRIEST WHO MARRIED A WIDOW, [who is forbidden] only where [the High Priest] MARRIED her, since in that case he caused her to be a halalah, but [not where he only] betrothed [her in which case] she is permitted [to his brother], he taught in the first clause also: MARRIED.

But why should the expression be determined by the final clause? Let it be determined by the middle clause: IF A HIGH PRIEST WHO BETROTHED A WIDOW HAD A BROTHER A COMMON PRIEST! — The determining factor, rather, is the case immediately following in the same context. As it was desired to teach, IF A HALAL WHO MARRIED A WOMAN OF LEGITIMATE STATUS, where the reason [for her prohibition is] because [the halal] MARRIED her and thus caused her to become a halalah, but where he had only betrothed her she would have been permitted to him; MARRIED was, therefore, taught [here also].

What point, however, was there in teaching, A widow? He should have taught: ‘A virgin!’
V. Glos.

By means of the ‘Caesarean operation’. (15) Tem. 17a. V. also op. cit. 11a and Bek. 42a.

If any of these was exchanged for a consecrated beast. (Cf. Lev. XXVII, 10). That these cannot be directly consecrated is obvious. Cf. Bek. 14a.

If they themselves were sacred. In the case of the hybrid, tumtum and hermaphrodite their sanctity is possible only where they were born from a consecrated beast. In the case of the terefah and the one extracted by means of the Caesarean operation sanctity is possible if the former was consecrated before it became terefah and the latter while it was still in its embryonic state.

Cf. Lev. XXVII, 10.

A town in Upper Galilee notorious for its fierce cocks who do not allow the intrusion of a strange cock among them (Rashi).

In marriage.

If their husbands died without issue when, in ordinary cases, it is the duty of the levir to marry his deceased brother's widow.

Lit., ‘and these’.

Eligible to marry a priest.

Of pure priestly stock.

But did not marry her. If marriage took place the woman would in consequence be ineligible to marry even a common priest.

Lit, ‘and these’.

In marriage.

Lit., ‘to these and to these’.

Of pure priestly stock.

v. Glos.

Cf. supra 201, 211.

If, for instance, the woman was the husband's mother's mother and the levir was his paternal, but not his maternal brother.

Which the husband had consumed. The reason is given infra 89a.

Which she brought to her husband at their marriage. She has no claim upon such clothes even if they were still available (Rashi). According to Tosaf. (infra 85a, s.v. התרף) she is entitled to such clothes, and the ruling here applies to compensation for clothes which have been completely worn out. Cf Keth. 201a.

In the first section of our Mishnah.

Even if only betrothal had taken place the woman would be permitted to her husband and forbidden to the levir.

Of the levirate marriage.

Where the levir is a High Priest.

A virgin . . . shall (positive) he take (Lev. XXI, 14) but not a widow (negative). A negative derived from a positive has only the force of a positive.

A widow . . . shall he not (negative) take (ibid.).

Were the levirate marriage to take place two precepts would have been overridden by the single positive precept of the levirate marriage.

V. supra n. 7. The positive precept. A virgin . . . shall he take (v. supra note 6) is not in this case infringed, since a widow after a betrothal is still in her virginity.

Of the levirate marriage.

A bastard, for instance, to an Israelite.

To his brother who is a common priest.

Lit., ‘to him’.

In the first section of our Mishnah.

Lit., ‘and instead of teaching on account of’.

Lit., ‘let him teach on account of’.

Where the expression used was BETROTHED, and not ‘married’.
And should you reply that this Tanna holds the opinion that the original marriage causes the subjection; behold, [it may be pointed out, the case of] the HALAL WHO MARRIED A WOMAN OF LEGITIMATE STATUS where it is not said that ‘the original marriage causes the subjection’! — This is certainly due to the final clause. As it was desired to teach in the final clause, IF A HIGH PRIEST WHO MARRIED A WIDOW HAD A BROTHER A HIGH PRIEST OR A COMMON PRIEST, where [the prohibition applies to] a WIDOW only but [not to] a virgin who is eligible to marry him, therefore, WIDOW was taught [here also].

R. Papa demurred: If the law is in agreement with the following ruling which R. Dimi, when he came, reported in the name of R. Johanan, viz., that if an Egyptian of the second generation married an Egyptian woman of the first generation her son is regarded as belonging to the second generation, [our Mishnah] should also have taught: If an Egyptian of the second generation married two Egyptian women, one of the first, and the other of the second generation, and he had sons from the first and from the second, [the wives of these sons], if they married in the proper manner, are permitted to their husbands but forbidden to their levirs, and if they married in the reverse order the wives are permitted to their levirs and forbidden to their husbands; proselyte women are permitted to the one as well as to the other, and women who are incapable of procreation are forbidden to the one as well as to the other! — He taught some cases and omitted others. What else did he omit that he should have omitted this also? — He omitted [the case of the man] wounded in the stones. If this is all that can be pointed out, the case of the man wounded in the stones cannot be regarded as an instance of an omission, since those that are subject to the penalty of negative precepts were [already] mentioned! — Were not several specific cases mentioned of those that are subject to the penalty of negative precepts? Surely it was stated, IF A COMMON PRIEST MARRIED A WIDOW and then again IF A HALAL MARRIED A WOMAN OF LEGITIMATE STATUS! That case was required [for the specific purpose] of informing us [that the law is] in agreement with [the ruling] Rab Judah reported in the name of Rab. For Rab Judah reported in the name of Rab: Women of legitimate [priestly] status were not forbidden to be married to men of tainted birth.

But, surely, he taught regarding A HALAL WHO MARRIED A WOMAN OF LEGITIMATE STATUS and then again regarding AN ISRAELITE WHO MARRIED THE DAUGHTER OF AN ISRAELITE AND HE HAD A BROTHER A BASTARD! — This also is not a repetition of what was already taught, since thereby he taught us [first] regarding a negative precept which is not applicable to all and then he taught us regarding a negative precept which is applicable to all. But did he not teach IF AN ISRAELITE WHO MARRIED A BASTARD HAD A BROTHER AN ISRAELITE! Con sequently it must be concluded that he taught some cases while others he omitted. This proves it.

[Reverting to] the main text, ‘Rab Judah reported in the name Of Rab: Women of legitimate [priestly] status were not forbidden to be married to men of tainted birth’. Might it be suggested that the following provides support for his view? [It was stated], A HALAL WHO MARRIED A WOMAN OF LEGITIMATE STATUS; does not [this refer to] a priestess (who was fitting unto him); and is not the meaning of LEGITIMATE STATUS eligible for priesthood! — No; [it might refer to] the daughter of an Israelite, and LEGITIMATE STATUS means\textsuperscript{35} eligible for the assembly.\textsuperscript{37} If so, HAD A BROTHER OF LEGITIMATE STATUS would also [mean] ‘eligible for the assembly’, from which it would follow that he himself is ineligible for the assembly!\textsuperscript{38} Consequently it must refer to a priest; and since he is a priest she also must be a priestess.\textsuperscript{39} What an argument! Each phrase may bear its own peculiar interpretation.\textsuperscript{40}

Rabin b. Nahman raised an objection: They shall not take . . . they shall not take\textsuperscript{41} teaches\textsuperscript{42} that the prohibition was addressed to the woman through the man!\textsuperscript{43} — Raba replied, [This is the meaning]: Where the prohibition is applicable to him it is also applicable to her, but where it is not applicable to him it is also inapplicable to her.\textsuperscript{44} Is this,\textsuperscript{45} however, deduced from this text? Surely it was deduced from a text which Rab Judah expounded in the name of Rab! For Rab Judah stated in the name of Rab and so it was taught at the school of R. Ishmael: When a man or woman shall commit any sin that men commit, Scripture compared the woman to the man in respect of all the punishments in the Torah!\textsuperscript{47} — If deduction had been made from that [text]\textsuperscript{46} it might have been assumed [to apply only to] a prohibition that is equally applicable to all, but not to a prohibition that is not equally applicable to all.\textsuperscript{48}

\textsuperscript{(1)} Of the deceased brother.
\textsuperscript{(2)} Of the woman to the levirate marriage, i.e., the widow's status at the time of her husband's death is determined by the status in which she found herself when he married her, not by that in which his death placed her, consequently if at the time of the marriage she was a virgin she would not have been regarded as a widow and would, therefore, have been permitted to marry a priest.
\textsuperscript{(3)} Who becomes, thereby, disqualified from marrying his brother.
\textsuperscript{(4)} Had this been the case, his brother should have been permitted to marry her, owing to the fact that at the time of her marriage with the deceased (when she presumably became subject to the levirate marriage) she was no halalah.
\textsuperscript{(5)} The mention of WIDOW rather than ‘virgin’.
\textsuperscript{(6)} To her husband who was a High Priest and to the levir who was a common priest.
\textsuperscript{(7)} Who becomes a halalah through such a forbidden marriage.
\textsuperscript{(8)} The High Priest, (her first husband) and, after his death, also his brother if he was a common priest.
\textsuperscript{(9)} In the first case, that of the common priest who married a widow.
\textsuperscript{(10)} Lit., ‘if there is that’.
\textsuperscript{(11)} From Palestine to Babylon.
\textsuperscript{(12)} Supra 78a.
\textsuperscript{(13)} The sons.
\textsuperscript{(14)} I.e., if the son of the Egyptian of the second generation, who thus belongs to the third and is permitted to enter the assembly (v. Deut. XXIII, 9), married the daughter of an Israelite; while the other who belongs to the second generation married an Egyptian of the second generation.
\textsuperscript{(15)} Should one of the brothers die without issue. The son of the third generation is forbidden to marry the Egyptian of the second generation, while the son of the second generation is forbidden to marry the daughter of an Israelite.
\textsuperscript{(16)} I.e., if the son of the second generation married the daughter of an Israelite, while the son of the third generation married an Egyptian of the second generation.
\textsuperscript{(17)} Cf. supra n. 5 mutandis mutandis.
\textsuperscript{(18)} Cf. supra. 6 mutatis mutandis.
\textsuperscript{(19)} Who are not included in the term ‘assembly of the Lord’ (v. Deut. XXIII, 9).
\textsuperscript{(20)} Both the Israelite and (for the reason indicated in n. 10) the Egyptian of the second generation may marry a proselyte.
\textsuperscript{(21)} The son of the second generation may not marry her because she is the daughter of an Israelite, while after his death she is forbidden to his brother because a woman who is incapable of procreation is not subject to the levirate marriage and is consequently forbidden to him as his brother's wife.
\textsuperscript{(22)} In respect of such a maimed person, prohibition and permission similar to those in our Mishnah could be stated: If he is maimed and his brother is fit the woman is forbidden to him (v. Deut. XXIII, 2) and permitted to his brother; if he is fit and his brother maimed she is permitted to him and forbidden to his brother; if both are maimed etc. proselyte women are permitted to both.

(23) Lit., 'if because of'.

(24) And among these, this case also is included. What proof, then, is there that any cases other than that of R. Dimi were omitted?

(25) Lit., 'did be not teach and then taught again'.

(26) Which proves that the Mishnah did not avoid giving more than one example of the same type of prohibition.

(27) Of a halal who married a woman of legitimate status.

(28) Kid. 731, 76a, infra 85a. The purpose of our Mishnah in giving the law of the halal was not to teach the prohibition of the woman to the levir (which, of course, as pointed out supra, was unnecessary) but her permission to marry a husband though he is a halal and she is of legitimate status or of pure priestly stock. The prohibition to marry one of impure stock is incumbent upon the man and not upon the woman.

(29) Which shews that the Mishnah did not avoid giving more than one example of the same type of prohibition.

(30) The case of the halal is applicable to priests only, not to Israelites.

(31) Lit., ‘surely he taught’.

(32) Also a case of a negative precept! (cf. n. 7). Cur. edd. insert In parenthesis ‘and a bastard who married a bastard and he has a brother an Israelite’, which Rashal omits.

(33) Lit., ‘but not’?

(34) Though he may marry the daughter of an Israelite he should preferably marry the daughter of a priest. Cf. Pes. 49a. [The bracketed words are rightly omitted in MS.M].

(35) Lit., ‘and what’.

(36) To marry a priest. Which is in agreement with the opinion of Rab.

(37) I.e. * to marry an Israelite.

(38) Surely not!

(39) I.e., since the term ‘legitimate status in the case of the man has reference to a priest, so the reference in the case of the woman must be to a priestess which shews that a priestess may marry one of tainted birth.

(40) Lit., ‘that as it is and that as it is’.

(41) Lev. XXI, 7.

(42) Since the expression was repeated.

(43) This is now assumed to mean that as the untainted priest may not marry a halalah so may not the untainted priestess marry a halal. An objection against the opinion of Rab.

(44) The halalah whom an untainted priest is forbidden to marry is herself forbidden to marry such a priest. The untainted priestess however, whom a halal is not forbidden to marry, may also marry the halal.

(45) The equality of men and women in respect of prohibitions

(46) Num. v, 6.

(47) Whether flogging or kareth.

(48) That of the priesthood does not apply to Israelites. Hence it was necessary to have the text of Lev. XXI, 7.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 85a

Behold, however, [the prohibition against] defilement\(^1\) which is a prohibition that is not equally applicable to all\(^2\) and [yet the sole] reason [why it is inapplicable to woman is] because the All Merciful wrote The sons of Aaron\(^3\) and not the daughters of Aaron; had, however, no such text been available\(^4\) it would have been assumed that women also come under the same obligation. What is the reason? Obviously\(^5\) because of the deduction Rab Judah reported in the name of Rab!\(^6\) — No; this might have been deduced from They shall not take.\(^7\)

Others Say:\(^8\) [The prohibition in regard] to marrying had to be specified.\(^9\) Since it might have been assumed that it\(^10\) should be inferred from [that relating to] defilement,\(^11\) therefore he taught us\(^12\) [that women are subject to the same prohibition as men].

R. Papa and R. Huna son of R. Joshua once happened to be at Hinzebu,\(^13\) the town of R. Idi b. Abin, when the following question was asked of them: Were women of legitimate [priestly] status forbidden to be married to men of tainted birth or not? R. Papa replied, ‘You have learned it [in the following]. Ten different genealogical classes went up from Babylon:14 Priests, Levites, Israelites, halalim,15 proselytes, emancipated slaves, bastards, nethinim,16 shethuki17 and asufi.17 Priests, Levites and Israelites may intermarry with one another. Levites, Israelites, halalim, proselytes and emancipated slaves may intermarry with one another. Proselytes, emancipated slaves, bastards, nethinim,16 shethuki17 and asufi17 are permitted to intermarry with one another.’18 That daughters of priests, however, [may be married to a] halal was not mentioned.19 Said R. Huna son of R. Joshua to him: Only cases where the women may marry the men, and the men may marry the women were enumerated;20 the case of the Priest, however,21 was not mentioned, because a halalah, should he even desire to marry one, is forbidden to him.22 When they came before R. Idi b. Abin he said to them, ‘O, school-children! Thus said Rab Judah in the name of Rab: Women of legitimate [priestly] status were not forbidden to be married to men of illegitimate Status’.23

[IN RESPECT OF] RELATIVES OF THE SECOND GRADE [WHO ARE FORBIDDEN] BY THE ORDINANCES OF THE SCRIBES etc. The men of Bairi24 enquired of R. Shesheth: Is a woman who is of the second grade of kinship to her husband but not to her levir entitled to claim her kethubah from the levir or not? [Do we say that] since a Master said that her kethubah25 is a charge on the estate of her first husband26 she has no [claim upon the levir];27 or, possibly, since the Rabbis have ordained that wherever she is unable to obtain it from her first husband28 [she may collect it] from the second, she29 is entitled to claim it30 [from the levir]? R. Shesheth replied, ‘You have learned this: Her kethubah25 is a charge upon the estate of her first husband, but if she was a relative of the second grade of kinship to her husband she receives nothing even from the levir.

Does [the expression,31 however,] imply that some [widows] do receive their30 kethubah from the levir!32 — There is a lacuna, and thus it is the correct reading:33 Her kethubah25 is a charge upon the estate of her first husband; and if she obtains nothing from the first, the Rabbis have ordained [that she is to receive it] from the second; but if she was a relative of the second grade of kinship to her husband she receives nothing even from the levir.

R. Eleazar enquired of R. Johanan: Is a widow [who was married] to a High Priest, or a divorcée or a haluzah [who was married] to a common priest entitled to maintenance or not? How is this question to be understood? If [it is a case] where she still lives with him,34 would she, when it is his duty to divorce her,35 be entitled to receive maintenance36 — This question was necessary in the case37 where he went to a country beyond the sea and she borrowed money wherewith to maintain herself;38 it being desired to ascertain39 whether, [owing to the fact that] maintenance39 among the conditions of the kethubah, she is entitled to maintain herself just as she is entitled to the kethubah, or is she entitled to the kethubah only because she receives it and goes, but not to maintenance which might induce her to remain with him? — The other replied: She is not entitled to maintenance.40 But, surely, it was taught: She is entitled to maintenance.41 — That was taught In respect of [alimony] after [her husband's] death.42

Another reading:43 He said to him, ‘It was taught: She is entitled to maintenance’.41 ‘Surely’, [the other asked], ‘it is his duty to divorce her!’44 ‘But then’, [the first retorted], ‘it was taught: She is entitled to maintenance!’41 — ‘That’, [the other replied], ‘was taught in respect of [alimony] after his death’.42

Our Rabbis taught: A widow [who was married] to a High Priest, or a divorcée or haluzah [who was married] to a common priest is entitled to her kethubah, usufruct,45 alimony and worn clothes,46 but she becomes thereby unfit, and her child is unfit, and [the husband] is compelled to divorce her. Relatives of the second grade of kinship [who are forbidden] by the ordinances of scribes are entitled neither to kethubah, nor to usufruct,45 nor to alimony,46 nor to worn clothes;46 the woman remains fit and her child is fit; but [the husband] is compelled to divorce her. R. Simeon b. Eleazar said, ‘Why was it ordained that a widow married to a High Priest is entitled to her kethubah? Because he becomes unfit and she becomes unfit and wherever he becomes unfit and she becomes unfit.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 85b

[the Rabbis] have penalized him [by ordering him to pay her] kethubah.1 And why was it ordained that relatives of the second grade of kinship, [who are forbidden] by the ordinances of the Rabbis, are not to receive their kethubah? Because the man remains fit and the woman remains fit, and wherever he as well as she remains fit [the Rabbis] have penalized her [by depriving her of her] kethubah.2 Rabbi said, ‘The former3 are prohibitions4 of the Torah, and prohibitions of the Torah require no reinforcement;5 while the latter6 are prohibitions of the scribes, and the prohibitions of the scribes require reinforcement.7 Another reason8 is: In the former case the man induces the woman9 [into the marriage];10 in the latter case she induces him.11 Who stated the ‘other reason’? One opinion asserts12 that it was R. Simeon b. Eleazar who stated it; and he gave an answer13 [to the question] ‘what is the reason’. ‘What is the reason’, [he said in effect.] ‘why it was ordained that when the man is unfit and the woman is unfit the man is penalized by having to pay the kethubah? Because he induces the woman into the marriage.14 And what is the reason why when he remains fit and she remains fit she is penalized by losing her kethubah? Because she induces him, [into the marriage].15 Another opinion asserts12 that it was Rabbi16 who stated it, because the case of the haluzah presented to him the following difficulty: A haluzah, surely, is only Rabbinically [forbidden to be married to a common priest]17 and yet she receives her kethubah.18 Thereupon he stated: Since the man disqualifies her by Rabbinical law,19 it is he, [who in the former case], induces20 her [into marriage]21 but in the latter case it is she that induces him [into marriage].22

What practical difference is there between [the reason given by] Rabbi and [that given by] R. Simeon b. Eleazar? — R. Hisda replied: The practical difference between them is the case of a bastard or a nethinah [who was married] to an Israeliite. According to him who gave the reason23 that [the prohibitions were] Pentateuchal, then this case24 also is Pentateuchal;25 but according to him who gave as the reason,23 that the man induces the woman26 then here, it is she that induces him [into the marriage].27 According to R. Eliezer, however, who28 stated, ‘Behold he29 is both a slave and a bastard’,30 the woman, surely, would not induce the man at all!31 — Rather, said R. Joseph, the practical difference between them32 is the case of the man who remarried his divorced wife after she had been married.33 According to him who gave the reason34 that [the prohibitions were] Pentateuchal, then this case35 also is Pentateuchal;36 but according to him who gave as the reason34 that the man induces the woman37 then here, surely, she induces him.38

But according to R. Akiba who stated that the offspring of a union forbidden under the penalty of a negative precept is deemed to be a bastard,39 she,40 surely, would not induce the man at all!41

Rather, said R. Papal the practical difference between them42 is the case of a be’ulah43 [who was married] to a High Priest.44 According to him who gave as the reason43 that [the prohibitions were] Pentateuchal, then this case also is Pentateuchal;45 but according to him who gave as the reason43 that the man induces the woman,37 then here, surely, it is she that induces him.46

According to R. Eliezer b. Jacob, however, who stated that the offspring of a union that is forbidden under a positive precept is deemed a halal,47 she,48 surely, would not at all induce him.49
Rather, said R. Ashi, the practical difference between them is the case of the man who cohabits again with his doubtful sotah. According to him who stated that the reason is that the prohibition is Pentateuchal, then this case also is Pentateuchal but according to him who stated that the reason is that the man induces the woman here it is she that induces him.

And according to R. Mathia b. Heresh who stated that even a woman whose husband, while going to arrange for her drinking of the water of bitterness cohabited with her on the way, is rendered a harlot, she surely, would not at all induce him to such a marriage! Rather, said Mar b. R. Ashi, the practical difference between them is the case of a confirmed sotah.

GEMARA. And granted that she is [no more than] an ordinary woman, is not any ordinary woman permitted to eat tithe? R. Nahman replied in the name of Samuel: This ruling represents the view of R. Meir who stated: The first tithe is forbidden to common people.
(19) [(a) According to Rashi: from eating terumah; (b) MS. M. reads: ‘he disqualifies her seed by rabbinic law’. Cf. also Me’iri].

(21) The woman is reluctant to contract such a union.

(22) V. supra p. 576, n. 10.

(23) Why in the former case, supra, the woman is entitled to her kethubah.

(24) Of the bastard or the nethinah.

(25) And the woman is, therefore, entitled to her kethubah.

(26) Into the marriage.

(27) She, being in any case forbidden to marry an Israelite, has nothing to lose by her marriage which, under certain conditions, may even be advantageous to her, since according to R. Tarfon (cf. Kid. 69a, supra 78a), it may enable her descendants to become proper Israelites. The woman, therefore, loses her kethubah.

(28) Disagreeing with the view of R. Tarfon. (Cf. supra n. 11).

(29) The son of a union between a bastard and a slave.

(30) And can never become a legitimate Israelite. Cf. Kid. 69a.

(31) Why then should she lose her kethubah?

(35) The remarriage of one's divorcee.

(36) It is pentateuchally forbidden to marry such a woman. (V. Deut. XXIV, 4). Cf. supra p. 57, n. 9.

(43) A woman who has lost her virginity. V. Glos.

(44) Such a union is forbidden under the positive precept. A virgin . . . shall he take (Lev. XXI, 14), and not by a negative one. A negative precept derived from a positive has only the force of a positive. The offspring therefore, would be no bastard even according to R. Akiba.

(51) V. Num. V, 18f.

(52) The doubtful sotah.

(53) Which would render her a harlot and her children bastards.

(54) Rabbi and R. Eleazar b. Simeon.

(55) Who is Pentateuchally forbidden to her husband though their offspring is not deemed to be a bastard. As she herself is in any case forbidden to marry a priest she has nothing to lose by cohabiting with her husband, and she would consequently persuade him to live with her again. Hence the ordinance that in such a case she loses the rights to her kethubah.

(56) As explained supra 67b.

(57) Which is the due of the Levites. V. Num. XVIII, 24.

(58) The daughter of the Israelite or the Levite who was betrothed etc. to a Levite and an Israelite respectively.
(59) מַרְצָה (masc. מַרְצָה), lit., ‘a stranger’, not of priestly, or levitical stock.

(60) Of course she is. Why, then, does our Mishnah forbid it?

(61) Lit., ‘this, who is it? It is R. Meir’.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 86a

Terumah to the priest and the first tithe to the Levite; so R. Meir. R. Eleazar b. Azariah permits it to the priest, ‘Permits it’! Does this then imply that some authority forbids it? Read, therefore, ‘He may give it to the priest also’. What is R. Meir's reason? R. Aha son of Rabbah replied on the authority of a traditional statement: For the tithe of the children of Israel, which they set apart as terumah unto the Lord, as terumah is forbidden to common people so is the first tithe forbidden to common people. May it be assumed that as in the case of terumah the penalties of death and of a fifth are incurred, so are the penalties of death and of a fifth incurred in the case of tithe? — Scripture stated, And die therein if they profane it . . . then he shall put the fifth part thereof unto it; but not in the tithe; ‘Into it’ but not unto tithe. And the Rabbis? — As terumah is a cause of tebel so is the first tithe a cause of tebel; and this is in agreement with what was taught: R. Jose said, It might have been presumed that guilt is incurred only for tebel from which nothing whatsoever had been set apart; whence is it deduced [that guilt is also incurred when] terumah gedolah had been set apart but not the first tithe, first tithe but not the second tithe or even if the poor man's tithe [only had not been set apart]? Scripture stated, Thou mayest not eat within thy gates and further on it was stated, That they may eat within thy gates, and be satisfied; as ‘Thy gates’ which was stated below refers to the poor man's tithe, so ‘Thy gates’ which was stated here refers to the poor man's tithe, and [concerning it] the All Merciful has said, Thou mayest not. And if the deduction had been made from that text only it might have been assumed [to imply the penalty] of a negative precept but not [the penalty of] death; hence we were taught [the earlier text also].

Another reading: That the first tithe is a cause of tebel may surely be deduced from the text cited by R. Jose — If [deduction had been made] from that text only it might have been assumed [to imply the penalty] of a negative precept but not the penalty of death; hence we were taught [the earlier text also].

How did you explain it? In accordance with the view of R. Meir! Explain, then, the final clause: THE DAUGHTER OF A LEVITE WHO WAS BETROTHED TO A PRIEST and THE DAUGHTER OF A PRIEST . . . TO A LEVITE MAY EAT NEITHER TERUMAH NOR TITHE; what [bearing has the question of] non-priestly stock in this case? — R. Shesheth replied: The meaning of the expression, SHE MAY NOT EAT is that she may not give permission to one to set apart the tithe. Does this then imply that a married woman may give such permission? — Yes; and so it was taught: And ye may eat it in every place, ye and your household teaches that a married daughter of an Israelite may give permission for terumah to be set apart. You say: Permission for terumah to be set apart; perhaps it is not so, but to eat it? It can be replied: If she may eat terumah which is subject to greater restrictions, how much more may she eat tithe which is subject to lesser restrictions. The text must consequently have taught that a married daughter of an Israelite may give permission for terumah to be set apart.

Mar the son of Rabana stated: This teaches that she is not given a share in the tithe in the threshing- floors. This is a satisfactory explanation according to him who holds that this is due to considerations of privacy governing the sexes; according to him, however, who holds that this is due to [possible abuse by] a divorced woman, may not a divorced woman who is the daughter of a Levite eat tithe? — And according to your argument, may not a divorced woman who is the daughter of a priest eat terumah? But [the fact is that the ordinance is] a preventive measure.
against [abuse by] a divorced woman who was the daughter of an Israelite. If so, what was the point in mentioning BETROTHED? [The same rule should be applied] even to one who was married! — As in the first clause BETROTHED was taught, BETROTHED was also taught in the final clause.

Our Rabbis taught: Terumah gedola belongs to the priest, and the first tithe belongs to the Levite; so R. Akiba. R. Eleazar b. Azariah said:

(1) As the terumah must be given to the priest and may be eaten by priests only and not by common people so must the first tithe also be given to Levites and be eaten by Levites only and not by common people (v. Rashi).

(2) Keth. 26a.

(3) The eating of tithe by a priest.

(4) Which is absurd. A priest, surely, is not included among the ‘common’ people to whom tithe should be forbidden!

(5) Attributed to R. Meir himself.

(6) Num. XVIII, 24; terumah (E.V. gift) and tithe having been mentioned in juxtaposition.

(7) Lit., ‘if’.

(9) Ibid. 9.

(10) Ibid. 14.

(11) Shall the penalty of death be incurred.

(12) Shall a fifth be added.

(13) How do they explain the comparison between the terumah and tithe to which Scripture points?

(14) v. Glos. The penalty for eating tebel is death.

(15) V. supra n. 18, though for the eating of the tithe itself no death penalty is incurred.

(16) Neither the priestly, nor the levitical dues.

(17) V. Glos.

(18) Which is not so sacred as terumah, being permitted to Levites.

(19) Which even common people are permitted to eat. Cf. Deut. XIV, 22-27.

(20) Which is not even sacred, it being regarded as mere alms.

(21) Deut. XII, 17, speaking of tithe.

(22) Ibid. XXVI, 12, speaking of the tithe of the poor man.

(23) The text speaking of the third year, (ibid.). The third and the sixth year of the Septennial cycle are the years in which the poor man's, instead of the second tithe is given to all who are in need of it.

(24) Eat, (ibid. XII, 17), before it is set apart from the produce.

(25) Deut. XII, 17, speaking of tithe.

(26) Lit., ‘and if from there’.

(27) For the eating of the tithe, since the prohibition only was stated, but no death penalty was mentioned.

(28) Num. XVIII, 24.

(29) From which a comparison is made between the tithe and terumah. Cf. supra p. 580. n. 10.

(30) V. Glos.

(31) In the Baraita just discussed. What need, then, was there for the comparison deduced from Num. XVIII, 24?

(32) Lit., ‘if from that’.

(33) The reference to tithe in the case of THE DAUGHTER OF AN ISRAELITE WHO WAS BETROTHED TO A LEVITE, and THE DAUGHTER OF A LEVITE... TO AN ISRAELITE.

(34) Lit., ‘what strangeness is there here’; neither the daughter of a priest nor the daughters of a Levite are ‘strangers’ or ‘common’ women to whom tithe is forbidden.

(35) Lit., ‘what’.

(36) Lit., ‘that was taught’.

(37) From the produce of her betrothed, or of the levir whose decision she is awaiting.

(38) And the terumah of this tithe (cf. Num. XVIII, 26) so that she might be enabled to eat of the tithe. The reason for the prohibition is not because the tithe is forbidden to her, but because she is not entitled to appoint an agent for the setting apart of terumah without the owner's knowledge.
(39) Since BETROTHED was mentioned.
(40) Num. XVIII, 31. The husband (ye) was compared to his wife (household; נָשִׂי term for ‘wife’).
(41) I.e., one married to a Levite.
(42) From her husband's produce.
(43) Cf. supra note 5.
(44) The tithe.
(45) The wife of a priest, because she is entitled to the same rights as her husband.
(46) The wife of a Levite who also, like the wife of the priest, is entitled to her husband's rights.
(47) As this law is so obvious there was no need to have a Scriptural text from which to deduce it.
(48) V. supra n. 7.
(49) Lit., ‘but’. Since it is available for a comparison between husband and wife.
(50) Or ‘Rabina’ (v. Rashi).
(51) The final clause in our Mishnah, THE DAUGHTER OF A LEVITE TO A PRIEST and THE DAUGHTER OF A PRIEST TO A LEVITE.
(52) If she comes unaccompanied by her husband. The first clause will, however, refer to eating and is in accordance with R. Meir's view.
(53) The prohibition to give a share in the terumah or tithe to a woman when she comes alone to the threshing-floor.
(54) יֵעָבֹּד v. Glos. s.v. yihud and cf. infra 100a.
(55) Who might continue to collect tithe at the threshing-floors even after her divorce from her husband when she returns to her former status of an ordinary woman and forbidden to share in the priestly dues and, according to R. Meir, also in the levitical tithe.
(56) Another reading, ‘May not the daughter of a priest eat terumah? — And according to your argument may not a divorced woman who is the daughter of a Levite eat tithe?’ Cur. edd. enclose the reading of our text in parenthesis.
(57) Of course she may. Why, then, should she be refused a share in the tithe even in the absence of her husband!
(58) She undoubtedly may. Why then is the wife of a priest refused a share in terumah in the absence of her husband (cf. infra 100a) irrespective of whether she is the daughter of a priest or of an Israelite?
(59) V. p. 582, n. 20.
(60) Such a preventive measure is, of course, applicable to the daughter of a Levite in respect of tithe in the same way as to the daughter of a priest in respect of terumah.
(61) That the prohibition is merely a preventive measure.
(62) In the first clauses the expression BETROTHED was essential, since the object of the Mishnah was to state that betrothal alone does not confer upon the daughter of an Israelite the right of eating terumah and tithe, and upon the daughter of a Levite the right to terumah, if the former was betrothed to a priest or a Levite and the latter to a priest; and that even betrothal, and not only marriage, deprives the daughter of a priest and the daughter of a Levite of the right of eating terumah and tithe respectively if the man was in the former case an Israelite or a Levite and in the latter case an Israelite.
(63) Where the reference is to the woman's eligibility to call for a share in the tithe; though in this case the woman, whether betrothed or married, is subject to the same restriction.
(64) V. Glos.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 86b

To the priest.¹ ‘To the priest’, but not to the Levite!² — Read: To the priest also.

What is R. Akiba's reason? — Because it is written, Moreover thou shalt speak unto the Levites, and say unto them;³ Scripture thus refers specifically to the Levites. And the other?⁴ — His view follows that of R. Joshua b. Levi. For R. Joshua b. Levi stated: In twenty-four passages were the priests described as Levites, and the following is one of them: But the priests the Levites, the sons of Zadok.⁵ And R. Akiba? You cannot say so here; for it is written, And ye may eat it in every place,⁷ [it is to be given to him only] who 'may eat it in every place'; a priest, however, is excluded since he may not eat it in a graveyard.⁸ And the other? — [The meaning⁹ is] wherever he wishes: Neither is it required [to eat it within the] wall¹⁰ nor is a man subject to flogging for eating it while his body is levitically unclean.

There was a certain garden from which R. Eleazar b. Azariah used to receive the first tithe. R. Akiba went and transferred its gate so that it faced a graveyard. ‘Akiba with his bag’, the other remarked, ‘and I have to live’!

It was stated: Why were the Levites penalized [by being deprived of the] tithe? — R. Jonathan and Sabia [are in dispute on the matter]. One holds: Because they did not go up in the days of Ezra; and the other holds: In order that the priests might depend upon it during the days of their uncleanness.

According to him who holds [that the Levites were deprived of the tithe] because ‘they did not go up’, one can well understand why they were penalized. According to him, however, who gave as the reason, ‘In order that the priests may depend upon it during the days of their uncleanness’, were the Levites penalized for the sake of the priests! Rather, all agree that the penalization was due to their not going up in the days of Ezra; they differ, however, on the following point: One is of the opinion that their forfeit belonged to the poor, while the other is of the opinion that priests, during the days of their uncleanness, are also regarded as poor.

Why, then did R. Akiba transfer the gate so that it faced a graveyard? — It was this that he said to him: If you come [to claim it] as a forfeit, you are entitled to it; but if you come [to demand it] as your share, you have no [claim upon it].

Whence is it deduced that they did not go up in the days of Ezra? — It is written, And I gathered them together to the river that runneth to Ahava; and there we encamped three days,’ and I viewed the people and the priests, and found there none of the sons of Levi.

R. Hisda stated: At first, officers were appointed from the Levites only, for it is said, And the officers of the Levites before you; but now, officers are appointed from the Israelites only, for it is said, ‘And officers over you shall come from the majority’. MISHNAH. THE DAUGHTER OF AN ISRAELITE WHO WAS MARRIED TO A PRIEST MAY EAT TERUMAH. IF HE DIED AND SHE HAS A SON BY HIM SHE MAY CONTINUE TO EAT TERUMAH. IF SHE WAS MARRIED TO A LEVITE, SHE MAY EAT OF THE TITHE. IF THE LATTER DIED AND SHE HAD A SON BY HIM, SHE MAY CONTINUE TO EAT OF THE TITHE. IF SHE WAS MARRIED TO AN ISRAELITE SHE MAY EAT NEITHER TERUMAH NOR TITHE. IF THE LATTER DIED AND SHE HAS A SON BY HIM, SHE MAY AGAIN EAT NEITHER TERUMAH NOR TITHE. IF HER SON BY THE ISRAELITE DIED, SHE MAY AGAIN EAT OF THE TITHE. IF HER SON BY THE LEVITE DIED SHE MAY AGAIN EAT TERUMAH. IF HER SON BY THE PRIEST DIED, SHE MAY EAT NEITHER TERUMAH NOR TITHE.

R. Eleazar b. Azariah as a priest was surely then entitled to it. Cur. edd. contain in parenthesis, ‘According to him who said that the forfeit belonged to the poor, it can well be understood why R. Akiba transferred the entrance so that it faced a graveyard; according to him, however, who stated that it belonged to the priests, why did he transfer the entrance so that it faced a graveyard’. The reading adopted is given in the margin of cur. edd.

The Levites.

Ezra VIII, 15. [This is apparently contradicted by the many verses in Ezra and Nehemiah which mention the Levites side by side with the priests, and as Tosaf. already points out (s.v. 'הלכות') is against the Mishnah in Kid. 69a which includes the Levites among the ten family stocks that came up from Babylon, unless it is to be assumed that the penalty was inflicted on the Levites because they were not among the first to join Ezra].

II Chron. XIX, 11.

Such a text cannot be traced in our Bible and may represent a verse from a lost apocryphal text. Some commentators regard it as a quotation from memory, based on Deut. I, 13, 15; but the respective dates of Ezra and Deut. would create chronological difficulties. (v. Golds.).

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 87a

THE DAUGHTER OF A PRIEST WHO WAS MARRIED TO AN ISRAELITE MAY NOT EAT TERUMAH.¹ IF HE DIED AND SHE HAD A SON BY HIM SHE MAY NOT EAT TERUMAH. IF SHE WAS [SUBSEQUENTLY] MARRIED TO A LEVITE SHE MAY EAT TITHE. IF THE LATTER DIED AND SHE HAD A SON BY HIM SHE MAY EAT TITHE. IF SHE WAS [SUBSEQUENTLY] MARRIED TO A PRIEST SHE MAY EAT TERUMAH. IF THE LATTER DIED AND SHE HAD A SON BY HIM SHE MAY EAT TERUMAH. IF HER SON BY THE PRIEST DIED SHE MAY NOT EAT TERUMAH. IF HER SON BY THE LEVITE DIED SHE MAY NOT EAT TITHE. IF HER SON BY THE ISRAELITE DIED SHE RETURNS TO THE HOUSE OF HER FATHER; AND IT IS CONCERNING SUCH A WOMAN THAT IT WAS SAID, AND IS RETURNED UNTO HER FATHER'S HOUSE, AS IN HER YOUTH, SHE MAY EAT OF HER FATHER'S BREAD.²

GEMARA. IF HER SON BY THE LEVITE DIED SHE MAY AGAIN EAT TERUMAH, because she is again entitled to eat it by virtue of her son;³ whence is this⁴ derived? — R. Abba replied in the name of Rab: [From the use of the expression.] But a daughter⁵ [instead of] ‘a daughter’.⁶ In accordance with whose view?⁷ Is it in accordance with that of R. Akiba who bases expositions on Wawin⁸ — It may be said [to be in agreement] even [with the view of the] Rabbis, since the entire expression But a daughter⁵ is superfluous.⁹
Our Rabbis taught: When she returns, she returns only to [the privilege of eating] terumah, but does not return to [the privilege of eating] the breast and the shoulder. Said R. Hisda in the name of Rabina b. Shila, 'What Scriptural text proves this? — She shall not eat of the terumah of the holy things, must not eat of that which is set apart from the holy things'. R. Nahman replied in the name of Rabbah b. Abbuha: Of her father's bread, but not all [her father's] bread; this excludes the breast and the shoulder. Rami b. Hama demurred: Might it not be suggested that this excludes the invalidation of vows? Raba replied: A Tanna of the school of R. Ishmael has long ago settled this difficulty. For a Tanna of the School of R. Ishmael taught: What need was there for Scripture to state, But the vow of a widow, or of her that is divorced . . . shall stand against her! Is she not free from the authority of her father and also from that of her husband? The fact is that where the father had entrusted [his daughter] to the representatives of the husband, or where the representatives of the father had entrusted her to the representatives of the husband, and on the way she became a widow or was divorced, [it would not have been known] whether she was to be described as of the house of her father or as of the house of her husband; hence the need for the text to tell you that as soon as she had left her father's authority, even if only for a short while, he may no more invalidate her vows.

R. Safra replied: She may eat of her father's bread, only bread but no flesh. R. Papa replied: She may eat of her father's bread, only the bread which is the property of her father; excluding however, the breast and the shoulder which [priests] obtain from the table of the Most High.

Raba, however, replied: And the breast of the waving and the thigh of heaving shall ye eat . . . thou, and thy daughters with thee, only when they are with thee.

R. Adda b. Ahabah stated that a Tanna taught: When she returns to her father's house, she returns [only to the privilege of eating] terumah, but does not return to [the privilege of eating] the breast and the shoulders. If she returns, however,] by virtue of her son, she returns also to [the privilege of eating] the breast and the shoulder. R. Mordecai went and recited this traditional statement in the presence of R. Ashi, when the latter said to him, 'Whence has this case been included? From "But a daughter". Should she, then, be more important than the other!' — There, the excluding texts were written; but here no excluding texts were written.

THE DAUGHTER OF A PRIEST WHO WAS MARRIED TO AN ISRAELITE etc. Our Rabbis taught: And is returned unto her father's house, excludes one who is awaiting the decision of the levir; as in her youth, excludes a pregnant woman. But could not this however, be arrived at by] logical argument: If where a child by a first husband is not regarded as the child by the second husband, in respect of exempting the woman from the levirate marriage, the embryo is nevertheless regarded as a born child, how much more should the embryo be regarded as a born child where a child by the first husband is regarded as the child of the second, in respect of depriving a woman of her right to terumah! No; this is no argument. If an embryo was regarded as a born child in respect of the levirate marriage, where the dead were given the same status as the living, should an embryo be regarded as a born child in respect of terumah, where the dead were not given the same status as the living? Consequently Scripture expressly stated, As in her youth, to exclude a pregnant woman.

And it was necessary for Scripture to write, As in her youth, to exclude the pregnant woman; and also, And have no child, to exclude one who has a born child. For had the All Merciful written only And have no child, it might have been assumed [that only a woman who has a born child is forbidden to eat terumah, because] at first there was one body and now there are two bodies, but that a pregnant woman, who formed at first one body and is now also one body only, may eat, [hence the second text was] required. And had the All Merciful written of the pregnant woman only it might have been assumed [that only she is forbidden to eat terumah] because at first

V. supra n. 3.

Who is not eligible to eat terumah, because she is not completely returned to her father's house, being still bound to the levir.

Who, being with child, does not return as in her youth.

That a pregnant woman, like one who has a born child, does not regain her right to eat terumah.

A woman whose husband died without issue is not exempt from the levirate marriage, though she may have a son by a former husband.

A pregnant woman is not subject to the levirate marriage.

A priest's daughter whose Israelite husband died without issue is forbidden to eat terumah, just as if she had had a son by him, if she had a son by any former Israelite husband of hers. Now, since the law could be arrived at by inference a minori ad majus, the Scriptural text stating the same law is, surely, superfluous!

Lit., ‘what (reasoning) for me’!

A child whose death occurred after the death of his father exempts his mother from the levirate marriage as if he were still alive.

Only a live child deprives his mother, the daughter of a priest who married an Israelite, from her right to eat terumah after the death of her husband. As soon as the child dies his mother regains her lost right.

was empty and now it is full, but not [a woman whose child was already born], whose body was at first empty and is now also empty, [hence was the first text also] required.

(Mnemonic. He said to him: Let us not make and make in death; let us make and not make in the child of the levir and terumah.)

Said Rab Judah of Diskarta to Raba: The dead should not be given the same status as the living, in respect of the levirate marriage, by inference a minori ad majus: If where a child by the first husband is regarded as the child of the second husband, in respect of disqualifying the woman from the eating of terumah, the dead were not given the same status as the living, how much less should the dead be given the same status as the living where the child of the first husband is not regarded as the son of the second, in respect of exempting the woman from the levirate marriage! It was expressly stated, Her ways are ways of pleasantness, and all her paths are peace.

Then let the dead be given the same status as the living in respect of terumah by inference a minori ad majus: If where a child by the first husband is not regarded as the child of the second In respect of exempting the woman from the levirate marriage, the dead were given the same status as the living, how much more so should the dead be given the same status as the living where a child of the first husband is regarded as the son of the second, in respect of disqualifying the woman from terumah! It was expressly stated, And [she] have no child and she, surely, has none.

Let the child of the first husband be regarded as the child of the second husband in respect of the levirate marriage by inference a minori ad majus: If where the dead were not given the same status as the living, in respect of terumah\textsuperscript{21} the child of the first husband is regarded as the son of the second,\textsuperscript{22} how much more should the child of the first husband be regarded as the child of the second\textsuperscript{23} where the dead were given the status of the living in respect of the levirate marriage!\textsuperscript{21} — It was expressly stated, And [he] have no child,\textsuperscript{24} and this man, surely, has none.

Then let the child of the first husband not be regarded as the child of the second husband, in respect of terumah, by inference a minori ad majus: If where the dead were given the same status as the living, in respect of exempting her from the levirate marriage, the child of the first husband was not regarded as the child of the second,\textsuperscript{22} how much less should the child of the first husband be regarded as the child of the second, where the dead were not regarded as the living in respect of eating terumah!\textsuperscript{21} — It was specifically stated, And [she] have none,\textsuperscript{25} but she surely has [one].

\textbf{CHAPTER X}

\textbf{MISHNAH.} A WOMAN WHOSE HUSBAND HAD GONE TO A COUNTRY BEYOND THE SEA AND ON BEING TOLD,\textsuperscript{26} ‘YOUR HUSBAND IS DEAD’, MARRIED, MUST, IF HER HUSBAND SUBSEQUENTLY RETURNED, LEAVE THE ONE AS WELL AS THE OTHER, AND SHE ALSO REQUIRES\textsuperscript{27} A LETTER OF DIVORCE FROM THE ONE AS WELL AS FROM THE OTHER. SHE HAS NO [CLAIM TO HER] KETHUBAH, USUFRUCT, MAINTENANCE\textsuperscript{28} OR WORN CLOTHES\textsuperscript{29} EITHER AGAINST THE FIRST HUSBAND OR AGAINST THE SECOND. IF SHE HAS TAKEN ANYTHING FROM THE ONE OR FROM THE OTHER, SHE MUST RETURN IT. THE CHILD BEGOTTEN BY THE ONE HUSBAND OR BY THE OTHER IS A BASTARD,\textsuperscript{30} NEITHER OF THEM\textsuperscript{31} MAY DEFILE HIMSELF FOR HER,\textsuperscript{32} NEITHER OF THEM HAS A CLAIM TO WHATEVER SHE MAY FIND\textsuperscript{33} OR MAKE WITH HER HANDS;\textsuperscript{34} AND NEITHER HAS THE RIGHT OF INVALIDATING HER VOWS.\textsuperscript{35} IF SHE WAS THE DAUGHTER OF AN ISRAELITE, SHE BECOMES DISQUALIFIED FROM MARRYING A PRIEST; IF THE DAUGHTER OF A LEVITE, FROM THE EATING OF TITHE; AND IF THE DAUGHTER OF A PRIEST, FROM THE EATING OF TERUMAH. NEITHER THE HEIRS OF THE ONE HUSBAND NOR THE HEIRS OF THE OTHER ARE ENTITLED TO INHERIT HER KETHUBAH, AND IF [THE HUSBANDS] DIE, THE BROTHER OF THE ONE AND THE BROTHER OF THE OTHER MUST SUBMIT TO HALIZAH, BUT MAY NOT CONTRACT THE LEVIRATE MARRIAGE. R. JOSE SAID: HER KETHUBAH REMAINS A CHARGE UPON THE ESTATE OF HER FIRST HUSBAND. R. ELEAZAR SAID: THE FIRST HUSBAND IS ENTITLED TO WHATEVER SHE MAY FIND, OR MAKE WITH HER HANDS, AND ALSO HAS THE RIGHT OF INVALIDATING HER VOWS. R. SIMEON SAID: HER COHABITATION OR HALIZAH WITH THE BROTHER OF THE FIRST HUSBAND EXEMPTS HER RIVAL,\textsuperscript{36} AND A CHILD BEGOTTEN BY HIM\textsuperscript{37} IS NOT A BASTARD. IF SHE MARRIED WITHOUT AN AUTHORIZATION\textsuperscript{38} SHE MAY RETURN TO HIM.\textsuperscript{37} IF\textsuperscript{39} SHE MARRIED WITH THE AUTHORIZATION OF THE BETH DIN,\textsuperscript{40} SHE MUST LEAVE,\textsuperscript{41} BUT IS EXEMPT FROM AN OFFERING.\textsuperscript{42} IF SHE MARRIED, HOWEVER, WITHOUT THE AUTHORIZATION OF THE BETH DIN, SHE MUST LEAVE\textsuperscript{41} AND IS ALSO LIABLE TO AN OFFERING. THE AUTHORITY OF THE BETH DIN IS THUS MORE EFFECTIVE IN THAT IT EXEMPTS HER FROM THE OFFERING. IF THE BETH DIN RULED\textsuperscript{43} THAT SHE MAY BE MARRIED AGAIN AND SHE WENT AND DISGRACED HERSELF\textsuperscript{44} SHE\textsuperscript{45} MUST BRING AN OFFERING, BECAUSE THE BETH DIN PERMITTED HER ONLY TO MARRY.\textsuperscript{46}

\textbf{GEMARA.} Since in the final clause it was stated, IF SHE MARRIES WITHOUT PERMISSION SHE MAY RETURN TO HIM, [which means obviously], without the authorization of the Beth din but [in reliance on the evidence] of witnesses, the first clause, it is to be inferred, [speaks of a woman who married] with the permission of the Beth din and on the evidence of a single witness.\textsuperscript{47} Thus it clearly follows that one witness is trusted. Furthermore, we learned: The practice was adopted of allowing a marriage on the evidence of one witness reporting\textsuperscript{48} another single witness, and of a woman reporting another woman, and of a woman reporting a bondman or a bondwoman;\(^49\) from which it is obvious that one witness is trusted. Furthermore we learned: [The man to whom] one witness said, ‘You have eaten\(^50\) suet’,\(^51\) and who replied, ‘I have not eaten’, is exempt.\(^52\) Now the reason [for his exemption is] because he said, ‘I have not eaten’; had he, however, remained silent [the witness] would have been trusted.\(^53\) From this it is clearly evident that one witness is trusted in accordance with Pentateuchal law;\(^54\) whence is this\(^55\) deduced? From what was taught: If his sin... be known to him,\(^56\) but not when others have made it known to him. As it might have been assumed that even where he does not contradict the evidence he is exempt, it was expressly stated, If... be known to him,\(^57\) in any manner.\(^58\) Now, how is this statement to be understood? If it be suggested [that it refers to a case] where two witnesses appeared, and he does not contradict them, what need then was there for a Scriptural text?\(^59\) Must it not then refer to the case of\(^60\) one witness, and yet [we see that] when the accused does not contradict him he is trusted.\(^61\) From this, then, it maybe inferred that one witness is trusted.\(^62\) But whence is it inferred that [the reason\(^63\) is] because he is trusted? Is it not possible that it is due to the fact that the other had remained silent, silence being regarded as an admission! You can have proof that this is so,\(^64\) since in the final clause it was stated: [A man to whom] two witnesses said, ‘You have eaten\(^65\) suet, and who replied, ‘I have not eaten’, is exempt; but R. Meir declares him guilty. Said R. Meir: This may be inferred a minori ad majus. If two witnesses may bring upon a man the severe penalty of death, should they not be able to bring upon him the minor penalty of a sacrifice! The others replied: What if he desired to say, ‘I have acted presumptuously’?\(^66\) Now, in the first clause,\(^67\) on what grounds do the Rabbis declare the man liable? If it be suggested: Because he is believed; surely [here it may be objected], even in the case of two witnesses, who in all other cases are trusted though the accused contradicts them, the Rabbis have exempted him! The reason must consequently be because the accused remained silent, and silence is regarded as admission!

[The fact], however, [is that this is arrived at] by a logical inference, this case being analogous to that of a piece of fat concerning which there is doubt as to whether it was of the forbidden, or of the permitted kind; if a single witness came and declared, ‘I am certain that it was permitted fat’, he is trusted. Are the two cases similar? There the prohibition was not established; here the prohibition of a married woman is established, and no question of sexual relationship [may be decided on the evidence of] less than two witnesses! This is rather analogous to the case of a piece that was definitely forbidden fat; if a single witness came and declared, ‘I am certain that it was permitted fat,’ he is not believed. But are these cases, similar? In that case, should even a hundred witnesses come they would not be believed; in this case, however, since should two witnesses come they would be trusted, one witness also should be trusted! This is rather analogous to the cases of tebel, and consecrated and konam objects.

Whose tebel is here to be understood? If his own, he would naturally be trusted since it is in his power to make it fit for use; if, however, it is that of another person, [the question may still be urged], what view is here adopted: If it is maintained that a man who sets apart priestly dues for his neighbours’ produce out of his own does not require the owner’s consent [it is quite obvious why the witness is here trusted] since it is in his power to make it fit for use, and if it is maintained that the owner’s consent is required and that the witness declares, ‘I know that he has made it fit for use’, whence is this very law derived? As regards consecrated objects also, if it was a consecration of the value of an object [it is obvious why one witness is trusted] since it is in his power to redeem it, but if an object has been consecrated, [the objection may still be raised]: If it were his own [he would naturally be trusted] since it is within his right to ask for the disallowance of his vow, if, however, it belonged to another man, and the witness declared, ‘I know that its owner has asked for the disallowance of his vow’, whence is this very law derived? With reference to konam objects also, if it is maintained that the law of trespass is applicable to konam objects and that the sanctity of their value descends upon them [it is obvious why one witness is trusted] since it is within his power to redeem them, and if it is maintained that the law of trespass is not applicable to konam objects and that it is only a mere prohibition with which he is saddled [the question may be urged]: If any such object was his own [it is natural that he should be trusted] since it is within his power to ask for the disallowance of his vow, if, however, it belonged to another man, and the witness declared, ‘I know that its owner has asked for the disallowance of his vow’, whence is this very law derived?

R. Zera replied: Owing to the rigidity of the disabilities that were later imposed upon her the law was relaxed in her favour at the beginning. Let there be, however, neither rigid disabilities nor a relaxation of the law! — In order [to avoid] perpetual desertion the Rabbis have relaxed the law in her favour.

MUST . . . LEAVE THE ONE AS WELL AS THE OTHER etc. Rab stated: This was taught only in respect of a woman who married on the evidence of a single witness, but if she married on the strength of the evidence of two witnesses, she need not leave. In the West they laughed at him. ‘Her husband’ [they remarked] comes, and there he stands, and you say: She need not leave!’ — This [it may be replied] was required only in the case when the man was not known. If he is unknown, why is she to leave [her second husband] even where she only married on the evidence of a single witness? This is required only in the case where two witnesses came and stated, ‘We were with him from the moment he left until now, but you it is who are unable to recognize him’, as it is written, And Joseph knew his brethren but they knew him not, on which R. Hisda remarked: This teaches that he went forth without any marks of a beard and now he appeared with a full beard. But, after all, there are two against two
To an offering, if he did not contradict the evidence.

(2) The one witness.

(3) Because his word is more than the evidence of two witnesses. How much more then should he be trusted when the evidence is only that of one witness!

(4) For the obligation of a sin-offering in the first clause.

(5) Lit., ‘but not’.

(6) The original question then arises again: Whence is it proved that the evidence of one witness is admissible?

(7) Cf. supra n. 12.

(8) Lit., ‘but’.

(9) Which someone has eaten.

(10) For the unwitting eating of which a sin-offering is incurred.

(11) Cf. Git. 2b.

(12) Where the nature of the fat is in doubt.

(13) Of the piece.

(14) The case of the woman spoken of in our Mishnah.

(15) The doubt extending only to the question as to whether by the death of the husband this prohibition had been removed.

(16) The case of the woman spoken of in our Mishnah

(17) Lit., ‘this is not like, but’.

(18) Which someone has eaten.

(19) The question, therefore, remains whence is it inferred that the evidence of one witness is admissible.

(20) Where the forbidden nature of the fat is established.

(21) V. Glos.

(22) Where the evidence of a single witness is accepted though the prohibitions were established. From such a case that of the woman in our Mishnah may reasonably be inferred.

(23) That of the witness.

(24) He can at any moment set apart the priestly dues and thus render the produce fit for everybody's consumption. Such an argument is, of course, inapplicable to the case in our Mishnah.

(25) That the evidence of a single witness is accepted in such a case.

(26) Objects of which the value only has been consecrated, completely lose their sanctity on redemption. Cf. supra n. 9.

(27) Consecrated for the altar. Such cannot be redeemed.

(28) A learned man may under certain conditions disallow the vow, and the object would consequently lose its sanctity. Cf. supra p. 597, n. 9.

(29) That the evidence of a single witness is accepted in such a case.

(30) V. Glos.

(32) Which is consecrated for Temple purposes.

(33) Cf. supra p. 597, n. 9.

(34) Konam being regarded as a vow only, which the man has to fulfil by paying to the Temple treasury the value of the object which itself remains unconsecrated.

(35) Lit., ‘that rides upon his shoulder’.

(36) V. supra note 2.

(37) V. supra note 2.

(38) To the question raised supra to the admissibility of the evidence of a single witness in the case of the woman in our Mishnah.

(39) Loss of kethubah, usufruct, etc.

(40) If her husband returns.

(41) By permitting her to marry on the evidence of a single witness. Knowing the disabilities to which she would be subject should her first husband return, she takes every precaution to verify the evidence of the one witness.

(42) Lit., ‘holding fast’, description of a deserted woman who remains tied to her absent husband.

(43) And allowed her to marry on the strength of the evidence of one witness.
It is now assumed that Rab referred to the second husband, Palestine.
Rab's ruling.
Her first husband.
To have been her husband.
The first husband.
Because he left while still young and now he has attained to manhood. Such evidence is accepted if the evidence of the husband's death was given by one witness only. It is not accepted, however, where it is contradictory to the evidence of two witnesses on the basis of whose testimony the woman had married her second husband.

and he who cohabits with her is liable to bring an asham talui. R. Shesheth replied: When she was married, for instance, to one of her witnesses. But she herself is liable to an asham talui! — Where she states, 'I am certain'. If so, what need was there to state [such an obvious ruling], when even R. Menahem son of R. Jose maintained his view only where the witnesses came first and the woman married afterwards, but not where she married first and the witnesses came afterwards! For it was taught: If two witnesses state that he was dead and two state that he was not dead, or if two state that the woman was divorced and two state that she was not divorced, the woman must not marry again, but if she married she need not leave; R. Menahem, son of R. Jose, however, ruled that she must leave. Said R. Menahem son of R. Jose, 'When do I rule that she must leave? Only when witnesses came first and she married afterwards, but where she married first and the witnesses came afterwards, she need not leave!' — Rab also spoke of the case where witnesses came first and the woman married afterwards, [his object being] to exclude the ruling of R. Menahem son of R. Jose.

Another reading: The reason ther13 is because she married first and the witnesses came afterwards, but where witnesses came first and the woman married afterwards, she must leave. In accordance with whose [view is this ruling]? — In accordance with that of R. Menahem son of R. Jose.

Raba raised an objection: Whence is it deduced that if [a priest] refused he is to be compelled? It was expressly stated, And thou shalt sanctify him, even against his will. Now, how is this to be understood? If it be suggested [that it is a case] where she was not married to one of her witnesses and she does not plead 'I am certain', is there any need to state that he is to be compelled? Consequently it must refer to a case where she was married to one of her witnesses and she pleads, 'I am certain'; and yet it was stated that he was to be compelled, from which it clearly follows that she is to be taken away from him! A priestly prohibition is different. If you prefer I might say, 'What is the meaning of "he is to be compelled"? He is to be compelled by means of witnesses'. And if you prefer I might say: [It is a case] where witnesses came first and she married afterwards, and this represents the view of R. Menahem son of R. Jose. R. Ashi replied. What is meant by the expression, 'She need not leave' which Rab used? She is not to depart from her first state of permissibility. But surely Rab has said this once! For we learned, IF SHE MARRIED WITHOUT AN AUTHORIZATION SHE MAY RETURN TO HIM, and Rab Huna stated in the name of Rab: This is the established law! — One was stated as an inference from, the other.

Samuel said: This was taught only in the case where she does not contradict him, but where she contradicts him she need not leave.
What [are the circumstances] spoken of? If it be suggested that there are two witnesses, of what avail is her denial? If it must then deal with the case of one witness, and the reason is because she contradicts him; had she, however, remained silent, she would have been obliged to leave. But, surely, 'Ulla stated that 'wherever the Torah allows credence to one witness he is regarded as two witnesses, and the evidence of one man against that of two men has no validity!" — Here it is a case of evidence by ineligible witnesses, and [Samuel's statement is] in accordance with the view of R. Nehemiah. For it was taught: R. Nehemiah stated, ‘Wherever the Torah allows credence to one witness the majority of opinions is to be followed, and [the evidence of] two women against that of one man is given the same validity as that of two men against one man’.

And if you prefer I might reply: Wherever one eligible witness came first, even a hundred women are regarded as one witness; here, however, we are dealing with a case where a woman witness came in the first instance; and the statement of R. Nehemiah is to be explained thus: R. Nehemiah stated, ‘Wherever the Torah allows credence to one witness, the majority of opinions is to be followed, and [the evidence of] two women against that of one woman is given the same validity as that of two men against one man, but that of two women against that of one man is regarded only as that of a half and a half.

SHE ALSO REQUIRES A LETTER OF DIVORCE FROM ONE AS WELL AS FROM THE OTHER. It is quite intelligible that she should require a divorce from the first husband; but why also from the second [when their union was a] mere act of adultery? — R. Huna replied: This is a preventive measure against the possibility of assuming that the first had divorced her and the second had [lawfully] married her, and that consequently a married woman may leave her husband without a letter of divorce. If so, in the latter clause also, where it was stated, ‘If she was told "your husband is dead", and she was betrothed, and afterwards her husband came, she is permitted to return to him’, might it not be assumed there also that the first husband had divorced her and the other had [lawfully] betrothed her and that consequently a betrothed woman may be released without a letter of divorce! — As a matter of fact she does require a letter of divorce. If so, [it might there also be assumed that] the first had again married his divorced wife after she had been betrothed! — [This statement is in] accordance with R. Jose b. Kiper who stated [that remarrying one's divorced wife] after a marriage is forbidden but after a betrothal is permitted. Since, however, it was stated in the final clause, ‘Although

(1) And thus commits a doubtful sin, it being uncertain which pair of witnesses is to be trusted.
(2) V. Glos. Such an offering is brought for the commission of a doubtful sin. How, then, could Rab maintain that she may continue to live with her second husband?
(3) Rab's ruling is applicable.
(4) Who well knows that her first husband is dead.
(5) Since as far as she is concerned her first husband's death is still a matter of doubt.
(6) That the man who claims to be her first husband is a stranger. An asham talui is brought only in cases where a person is himself in doubt as to the propriety of an act he has committed; v. Keth. Sonc. ed., p. 122 notes.
(7) Who in a similar case maintained (v. infra) that the woman must leave her second husband.
(8) Who testified that the first husband was alive.
(9) Lit., 'he did not say'.
(10) The woman's first husband.
(11) Her second husband
(12) V. Keth. 22b. What need, then, was there for Rab's ruling?
(13) Why Rab allowed the woman to remain with her second husband though two witnesses stated that her first husband was still alive.
(14) As in the case in our Mishnah in connection with which Rab's statement was made.
(15) To observe the rules of levitical uncleanness and matrimony prescribed in Lev. XXI, 1ff.
Case of coercion.

Since a Scriptural text was required for the purpose, it could not apply to established or even doubtful prohibitions which a priest must undoubtedly obey and the observance of which is obviously to be enforced.

Who was a priest.

Cf. supra p. 599, n. 16.

Lit., ‘but not?’

Who was a priest.

To separate from her if witnesses subsequently came and declared that the first husband was still alive at the time this second marriage with the priest took place.

How then could Rab rule that in the case of contradictory evidence between two pairs of witnesses the second union is not to be severed if it took place prior to the appearance of the second pair.

A priest is subject to greater restrictions which do not apply to others.

In reply to Raba's objection.

Before marriage with the priest is allowed, the court makes every effort to ascertain whether witnesses are available who could contradict the evidence of the first witnesses and thus prevent the marriage. If, however, no such witnesses are available and the marriage has taken place, the union need not be severed though such witnesses subsequently appeared.

With which Rab is in agreement.

She may return to her first husband, because in her second marriage she is a victim of circumstances, it having been contracted on misleading evidence.

Infra 91a; why should the same ruling be stated twice?

Rab, however, gave his ruling only once.

Who testify to the veracity of the statement of the man who claims to be the first husband.

Lit., ‘when she contradicts him, what is?; her word would obviously not be accepted against the word of two witnesses.

Why the woman may continue to live with her second husband.

The evidence that her first husband was alive.

In certain cases of marriage and divorce, testifying, for instance, that a husband was dead.

Who now states that the first husband was not dead.

The previous evidence of the one witness being consequently valid, why should the woman have to leave even when she does not contradict the latter evidence?

Relatives, women or slaves, for instance, two of whom testify that the first husband is alive.

And their evidence, being opposed to that of the first witness, is disregarded, as is the case with all evidence of a single witness, which is opposed to that of a previous witness. The woman need not, therefore, leave her second husband even if she does not contradict the second set of witnesses.

And testified that the first husband was dead.

I.e., ineligible witnesses who, after the woman had married, testified that her first husband was alive.

And their evidence, being opposed to that of the first witness, is disregarded, as is the case with all evidence of a single witness, which is opposed to that of a previous witness. The woman need not, therefore, leave her second husband even if she does not contradict the second set of witnesses.

V. supra p. 602, n. 11, and two women subsequently testified that the first husband was alive. If the wife keeps silent, there remains a majority of two against one; if she contradicts the two the majority disappears.

The two together representing one; so that the evidence of the first eligible witness remains unaffected by it, provided the woman remarried, even where she remained silent.

the latter\(^1\) gave her a letter of divorce he has not thereby disqualified her from marrying a priest\(^2\); it may be inferred that she requires no divorce;\(^3\) for should she require a divorce, why does he not disqualify her from marrying a priest!\(^4\) — Rather,\(^5\) in the final clause it will be assumed\(^6\) that the betrothal was an erroneous one.\(^7\) In the first clause also [let it be said that] it would be assumed that the marriage was an erroneous one!\(^8\) The Rabbis have penalized her.\(^9\) Then let them penalize her in the final clause also! — In the first clause where she committed a forbidden act\(^10\) they penalized her; in the final clause where she did not commit a forbidden act, the Rabbis did not penalize her.

SHE HAS NO [CLAIM TO HER] KETHUBAH, [because] what is the reason why the Rabbis have provided a kethubah for a woman? In order that it may not be easy for the husband\(^11\) to divorce her!\(^12\) But in this case let it be easy for him, to divorce her.\(^13\)

SHE HAS NO [CLAIM TO] . . . USUFRUCT, MAINTENANCE OR EVEN WORN CLOTHES, [because] the conditions\(^14\) entered in the kethubah\(^15\) are subject to the same laws as the kethubah\(^16\) itself. IF SHE HAD TAKEN ANYTHING FROM THE ONE OR FROM THE OTHER,[SHE MUST RETURN IT]. Is this not obvious! — As it might have been assumed that since she has already seized it, it is not to be taken from her, hence we were taught [that SHE MUST RETURN IT]. THE CHILD . . . .IS A BASTARD. Elsewhere we learned: Terumah\(^17\) from levitically unclean produce may not be set apart for that which is levitically clean\(^18\). If, however, such terumah has been set apart it is valid if the act was done in error, but if it was done wilfully it is null and void\(^19\). Now what is meant by ‘it is null and void’? — R. Hisda replied: The act is absolutely null and void, even that griva\(^20\) [which has been designated as terumah] returns to its former state of tebel.\(^21\) R. Nathan son of R. Oshaia replied: It is null and void in respect of making the remainder\(^22\) fit for use, but [that which has been set apart] becomes terumah.\(^23\) R. Hisda does not give the same explanation as R. Nathan son of R. Oshaia, for, should it be said [that the portion set apart] is lawful terumah, it might sometimes happen that one would wilfully neglect to set apart the terumah [from the remainder].\(^24\)

But why should this be different from, [the following case concerning] which we learned: If a man has set apart as terumah a cucumber which was found to be bitter, or a melon which turned out to be decayed\(^25\) [the fruit becomes] terumah; but [from the remainder] terumah must again be set apart\(^26\). Do you raise an objection from a case where one has acted unwittingly\(^27\) against a case where one has acted wilfully?\(^27\) Where one has acted unwittingly,\(^28\) no forbidden act has been committed; when, however, one has acted wilfully,\(^29\) a forbidden act has been committed.

A contradiction, however, was pointed out between two acts committed unwittingly: Here\(^30\) it is stated, ‘It is lawful terumah if the act was done unwittingly’,\(^31\) while there sit was stated, ‘Terumah,’ but [from the remainder] terumah must again be set apart!’ — There,\(^32\) it is an erroneous act amounting almost\textsuperscript{33} to a wilful one, since he should have tasted it.\textsuperscript{34}

A contradiction was also pointed out between two cases of wilful action: Here\textsuperscript{35} it is stated, ‘but if it was done wilfully, it is null and void’, while elsewhere we learned: If a man has set apart as terumah [the produce] of an unperforated plant-pot\textsuperscript{36} for [the produce of] a perforated pot,\textsuperscript{37} [the former becomes] terumah but [from the latter] terumah must again be separated!\textsuperscript{38} — In [the case of produce grown in] two different vessels\textsuperscript{39} a man would obey;\textsuperscript{40} in [that of] one vessel\textsuperscript{41} he would not obey.\textsuperscript{42}

Now according to R. Nathan, son of R. Oshaia, who explained that ‘the act is null and void in respect of making the remainder fit for use but [that that which has been set apart] becomes terumah.’\textsuperscript{43}

\item The fact is that no divorce is required, as had been first assumed.
\item Seeing that she is released without any letter of divorce.
\item Release from which requires no divorce. Hence there is no need to provide against the assumption that ‘the first husband had divorced her and the other had lawfully betrothed her etc.’, suggested supra.

\item I.e., the specified sum due to the woman on the husband’s death or on her divorce.
\item V. Glos.
\item Since the former is forbidden to be eaten the priest would thereby suffer a loss.

\item Lit., ‘having an offensive smell’.
\item Ter. III, 1, Kid. 46b; which proves that the possibility of neglecting this second separation of terumah does not render null and void the whole act.
\item The case of the cucumber or the melon where the man believed it to be in good condition. (12) The second case in the first Mishnah cited.
\item The case of the cucumber or the melon where the man believed it to be in good condition.
\item The second case in the first Mishnah cited.

\item In the second Mishnah quoted.
\item Lit., ‘near’.

The fruit, before setting it apart as terumah. Which is not subject to terumah, since it has not grown directly from the ground. Which is subject to terumah. A plant in a perforated pot is deemed to be growing from the ground since it derives its nourishment through the holes of the pot from the ground itself. Dem. V, 10; Kid. 46a, Men. 70a. Why is the terumah in this case valid, while in the other it becomes tebel again? As in the last cited Mishnah where the produce designated as terumah grew in one kind of pot while the other produce grew in another kind of pot.

To give terumah again, though the portion he has set apart is also allowed to remain terumah. Where the clean and the unclean grew in the same kind of pot or soil.

To give terumah again, were the portion he has set aside allowed to retain the name of terumah. He would argue that, in view of the validity of his act, no further terumah need he given to the priest, whom he would consequently present with unclean terumah. Hence it was ordained that his act is void and that the quantity he has set aside is not to be regarded as terumah.

And the priest may use it for the purposes for which it is fit, such, for instance, as burning.

why is this case different from [the following] where we learned [that if a man has set apart as terumah the produce of a perforated plant-pot for that of an unperforated one, the terumah is valid, but may not be eaten before terumah and tithe from other produce has been set aside for it] — Here it is different, since Pentateuchally the terumah is valid, in accordance with the view of R. Elai; for R. Elai stated: Whence is it inferred that if one separates terumah from an inferior quality for a superior quality, his terumah is valid? It is written, And ye shall bear no sin by reason of it, seeing that ye have set apart from it the best thereof. [Now, this implies that if you do not set apart from the best but of the worst you shall bear sin]; if, [however, the inferior quality] does not become consecrated, why [should there be any] bearing of sin? Hence it may be inferred that if one sets apart terumah from an inferior quality for a superior quality, his terumah is valid.

Said Rabbah to R. Hisda: According to you who maintain that ‘the act is absolutely null and void’ so that ‘even that griva [which has been designated as terumah] returns to its former state of tebel’, the reason being that this is a preventive measure against the possibility ‘that one might wilfully neglect to set apart [the terumah from the remainder]’; is there anywhere [I may ask] a law that terumah which is Pentateuchally valid should, owing to the possibility that one might wilfully neglect his duty, be turned into unconsecrated produce? Could, then, a Beth din lay down a condition that would cause a law of the Torah to be uprooted! — The other replied: And do you not yourself agree with such a ruling? Have we not learned, THE CHILD BY THE ONE HUSBAND OR THE OTHER IS A BASTARD. Now, it is reasonable [that the child] by the second [should be deemed] a bastard, but why [should the child] by the first [be a bastard]? She is, surely, his wife and the child is consequently a proper Israelite whom we permit to marry a bastard! The first retorted: Thus said Samuel, ‘He is forbidden to marry a bastard’. And so said Rabin, when he came, in the name of R. Johanan. ‘He is forbidden to marry a bastard’. Why, then, is he called a bastard? — In respect of forbidding him to marry the daughter of an Israelite.

R. Hisda sent to Rabbah through R. Aha son of R. Huna [the following enquiry]: Cannot the Beth din lay down a condition which would cause the abrogation of a law of the Torah? Surely it was taught: ‘At what period of her age is a husband entitled to be the heir of his wife [if she dies while still] a minor?’ Beth Shammai stated: When she attains to womanhood; and Beth Hillel said: When she enters into the bridal chamber. R. Eliezer said: When connubial intercourse has taken place. Then he is entitled to be her heir, he may defile himself for her, and she may eat terumah by virtue of his rights’. (Beth Shammai said, ‘When she attains to womanhood’, even though she has not entered the bridal chamber! — Read, ‘When she attains to womanhood and enters the bridal chamber’, and it is this that Beth Shammai said to Beth Hillel: In respect of your statement, ‘When she enters the bridal chamber’, it is only when she has attained womanhood that the bridal chamber is effective, but otherwise the bridal chamber alone is of no avail. ‘R. Eliezer said: When connubial intercourse has taken place’. But, surely, R. Eliezer said that the act of a minor has no legal force! — Read, ‘After she has grown up and connubial intercourse has taken place’.) At all events it was here stated, ‘He is entitled to be her heir’; but, surely, by Pentateuchal law it is her father who should here be her legal heir, and yet it is the husband who is heir in accordance with a Rabbinical ordinance! — Hefker by Beth din is legal hefker.33 for R. Isaac stated: Whence is it deduced that hefker by Beth din is legal hefker? It is said, Whosoever came not within three days, according to the counsel of the princes and the elders, all his substance should be forfeited, and himself separated from the congregation of the captivity.34 R. Eleazar stated [that the deduction is made] from here: These are the inheritances, which Eleazar the priest, and Joshua the son of Nun, and the heads of the fathers’ houses of the tribes of the children of Israel, distributed for inheritance.36 Now, what relation is there between Heads and Fathers? But [this has the purpose] of telling you that as fathers may distribute as an inheritance to their children whatever they wish, so may the heads distribute as an inheritance to the people whatever they wish.

‘He may defile himself for her’. But, surely, by Pentateuchal law it is her father who may here defile himself for her, and yet it is the husband who by a Rabbinical law was allowed to defile himself for her! — [This was allowed] because she is a meth mizwah.38 Is she, however, a meth mizwah? Surely, it was taught. ‘Who may he regarded as a meth mizwah? He who has no relatives to bury him’. [If, however, he has relatives upon whom] he [could] call and they would answer him, he is not regarded as a meth mizwah! — Here also, since they are not her heirs, they would not answer even if she were to call upon them.

‘And she may eat terumah by virtue of his rights’! — Only Rabbinical terumah.

Come and hear: If a man ate levitically unclean terumah, he must pay compensation in clean unconsecrated produce. If he paid unconsecrated produce that was levitically unclean, his compensation, said Symmachus in the name of R. Meir, is valid if it was paid in error, and invalid if paid wilfully. The Sages, however, said: Whether in one case or in the other his compensation is valid, but he must again pay compensation in clean unconsecrated produce. And when, in considering this ruling, the objection was raised, ‘Why should not his compensation be valid if he paid it wilfully? A blessing should come upon him! For he has eaten such of the priest's produce as is not fit for him in the days of his uncleanness and paid him compensation in something that is fit for him in the days of his uncleanness’, Raba, others say, Kadi, replied: [Some words are] missing from the text, the correct reading being the following: ‘If a man ate levitically unclean terumah he may pay compensation in any produce; if he ate levitically clean terumah, he must pay compensation in clean unconsecrated produce; if, however, he made compensation in unconsecrated produce that was levitically unclean, his compensation, said Symmachus in the name of R. Meir, is valid if it was made in error, and his compensation is invalid if it was made wilfully. But the Sages said: His compensation is valid whether he has acted in error or wilfully, but he must again pay compensation in clean unconsecrated produce’. Now here, surely, the compensation is Pentateuchally valid, for were a priest to betroth a wife with it her betrothal would be valid, and yet the Rabbis ruled that ‘his compensation is invalid’.

If so, then Symmachus holds the same view as the Rabbis! — R. Ahaso son of R. Ika replied: The difference between them is on the question whether one who has acted on the basis of a mistake. But the Sages said that he must pay compensation again in clean unconsecrated produce. If so, then Symmachus holds the same view as the Rabbis! — R. Ahaso son of R. Ika replied: The difference between them is on the question whether one who has acted on the basis of a mistake.
Come and hear: If [sacrificial] blood became levitically unclean and was then sprinkled [upon the altar], it is accepted if the sprinkling was performed unwittingly, but it is not accepted if it was performed wilfully.

Now, according to Pentateuchal law, it is here undoubtedly accepted, for it was taught, 'In respect of what [errors] does the High Priest's front-plate procure acceptance? In respect of the sacrificial blood, flesh or fat that became unclean whether this was brought about by one acting in error or wilfully, under compulsion or willingly, and whether this occurred with the sacrifice of an individual or with that of the congregation, and yet the Rabbis ruled that 'it is not accepted' so that an unconsecrated beast is brought into the Temple court! — R. Jose b. Hanina replied: The expression, ‘it is not accepted’ was used in respect of permitting the flesh to be eaten, the owner, however, obtains atonement through it.

After all, however, the law of eating the flesh [of the sacrifice] would he uprooted, whereas it is written in the Scriptures. And they shall eat those things wherewith atonement was made which teaches that the priests eat and the owner obtains thereby atonement! — The other replied: With an abstention from the performance of an act it is different.

(1) Though Pentateuchally she is forbidden to eat terumah! V. supra p. 609. n. 5.
(2) That which is given from fruits of the trees, which is Pentateuchally permitted to non-priests. since the law of terumah is Pentateuchally applicable to corn only.
(3) Unwittingly.
(4) The reason is explained in Pes. 32a.
(5) Assumes the name of terumah.
(6) I.e., if he was unaware that the produce he gave as compensation was levitically unclean.
(7) Since he knew it to be unclean and yet paid it as compensation he is penalized.
(8) Whether the compensation was made in error or wilfully.
(9) Git. 54a.
(10) Lit., ‘from him something’.
(11) Levitically unclean terumah may not be eaten by a priest even when he is himself also unclean.
(12) Unconsecrated produce.
(13) Even though it is levitically unclean.
(14) Even unconsecrated produce which is unclean.
(15) V. supra p. 610, n. 10.
(16) Since unconsecrated foodstuffs, though levitically unclean, may be consecrated (cf. supra 89b).
(17) Giving it to her as the token of betrothal (cf. Kid. 2a).
(18) I.e., R. Meir.
(19) If it was made wilfully.
(20) By ruling that the compensation is invalid and, in consequence, is not the property of the priest.
(21) Pentateuchally she should assume this status.
(22) As the compensation is Rabbinically invalid (v. supra n. 11) the betrothal also would be Rabbinically invalid. V. supra p. 609, n. 5.
(23) Lit., ’what’.
(24) The first payment, however, is also valid.
(26) According to the Rabbis, an unwitting sin is made punishable in order to prevent thereby a wilful one; hence their ruling that whether the payment of the compensation mentioned was made unwittingly or wilfully a second payment of compensation must be made. According to R. Meir, however, the inadvertent sinner is not to suffer for the sake of the wilful one; hence his ruling that a second payment of compensation is due only in the case of a wilful action.
(27) I.e., the owner obtains atonement and the flesh of the sacrifice may be eaten. נזרת חמה of the same rt. נזרת חמה as that of נזרת חמה and it shall be accepted in Lev. I, 4, q.v.
(28) Pes. 16b.
He, \(^1\) [on hearing the last reply] said to him: \(^2\) It was my intention to raise objections against your view\(^3\) from [the Rabbinical laws which relate to] the uncircumcised, \(^4\) sprinkling, \(^5\) the knife [of circumcision], \(^6\) the linen cloak with zizith, \(^7\) the lambs of Pentecost, \(^8\) the shofar \(^9\) and the lulab; \(^10\) now, however, that you taught us that abstention from the performance of an act\(^{11}\) is not regarded as an abrogation [of the law, I have nothing to say since] all these are also cases of abstention. \(^{12}\)

Come and hear: Unto him ye shall hearken, \(^{13}\) even if he tells you. ‘Transgress any of all the commandments of the Torah’ as in the case, for instance, of Elijah on Mount Carmel, \(^{14}\) obey him in every respect in accordance with the needs of the hour! \(^{15}\) — There it is different, \(^{16}\) for it is written, ‘Unto him shall ye hearken’. Then let [Rabbinic law] be deduced from it! — The safeguarding \(^{17}\) of a cause is different. \(^{18}\)

Come and hear: If he \(^{19}\) annulled [his letter of divorce] \(^{20}\) it is annulled: so Rabbi R. Simeon b. Gamaliel, however, said: He may neither annul it nor add a single condition to it, \(^{21}\) since, otherwise, \(^{22}\) of what avail is the authority \(^{23}\) of the Beth din. \(^{24}\) Now, though here, the letter of divorce may be annulled \(^{25}\) in accordance with Pentateuchal law, we allow a married woman, \(^{26}\) owing to the power \(^{27}\) of Beth din, \(^{24}\) to marry anyone in the world! \(^{28}\) — Anyone who betroths [a woman] does so in implicit compliance with the ordinances \(^{29}\) of the Rabbis, \(^{30}\) and the Rabbis have [in this case] \(^{31}\) cancelled the [original] betrothal. \(^{32}\)

Said Rabina to R. Ashi: This \(^{33}\) is a quite satisfactory explanation where betrothal was effected by means of money; \(^{34}\) what, however, can be said [in a case where betrothal was effected] by cohabitation! — The Rabbis \(^{35}\) have assigned \(^{36}\) to such a cohabitation the character of mere prostitution. \(^{37}\)

Come and hear: R. Eleazar b. Jacob stated, ‘I heard that even without any Pentateuchal [authority for their rulings]. Beth din may administer flogging and [death] penalties; not, however, for the purpose of transgressing the words of the Torah but in order to make a fence for the Torah. And it once happened that a man rode on horseback on the Sabbath in the days of the Greeks, \(^{38}\) and he was brought before Beth din and was stoned; not because he deserved this penalty, but because the exigencies of the hour demanded it. And another incident occurred with a man who had intercourse with \(^{39}\) his wife under a fig tree, and he was brought before Beth din and flogged; not because he deserved such a penalty, but because the exigencies of the hour demanded it!⁴⁰ To safeguard a cause is different.⁴¹

NEITHER OF THEM MAY DEFILE HIMSELF FOR HER. Whence is this derived? — From what is written in Scripture. Except for his kin that is near unto him,⁴² and a Master stated that ‘his kin’ means his wife;⁴³ while it was also written, The husband shall not defile himself, among his people, to profane himself.⁴⁴ [implying that] there is a husband, then, who may, and there is a husband who may not defile himself; how, then [are these contradictory laws to be reconciled]? He may defile himself for his lawful wife but he may not defile himself for his unlawful wife.⁴⁵

NEITHER OF THEM HAS A CLAIM UPON ANYTHING SHE MAY FIND etc. [because] what is the reason why the Rabbis ruled that a wife's finds belong to her husband? In order that he may bear no hatred against her; but, here, let him bear against her ever so much hatred!⁴⁶

OR MAKE WITH HER HANDS, [because] for what reason did the Rabbis rule that the work of her hands belonged to her husband? Because she receives from him her maintenance;⁴⁷ but here, since she receives no maintenance, her handiwork does not belong to him.

OR TO THE RIGHT OF INVALIDATING HER VOWS, [since] what is the reason why the All Merciful said that a husband may annul [his wife's vows]? In order that she may not become repulsive; here, however, let her become ever so repulsive!⁴⁸

IF SHE WAS THE DAUGHTER OF AN ISRAELITE, SHE BECOMES DISQUALIFIED FROM MARRYING A PRIEST etc.

(4) Proskyte, whose circumcision is performed on the Passover Eve and who, by Rabbinic law, is forbidden to participate in the Paschal lamb, though Pentateuchally it is his duty to celebrate the Passover as an Israelite. Cf. Pes. 92a.
(5) On an unclean person, on the Sabbath day, is Rabbinically forbidden (cf. Pes. 66a) though Pentateuchally permitted. Should the Sabbath on which such sprinkling is due happen to be a Passover Eve, the person affected would, owing to the Rabbinical prohibition, remain unclean on that day and would, in consequence, be deprived of participation in the Paschal lamb, which is a Pentateuchal precept.
(6) The carrying of which on the Sabbath is Rabbinically forbidden even along roofs, an act which is Pentateuchally permitted (cf. Shab, 130b). By observing this Rabbinical law it is sometimes necessary to postpone circumcision which is a Pentateuchal commandment.
(7) V. Glos. Pentateuchally it is permitted to insert woollen fringes (v. Num. XV, 38) in a linen garment, despite the prohibition in Deut. XXII, 11 against wearing wool and linen together. Owing, however, to a Rabbinic prohibition, fringes of wool in a linen garment are forbidden, and this prohibition sometimes results in the abrogation of the Pentateuchal commandment of zizith. Cf. Men. 40a.
(8) V. Num. XXVIII, 26ff. If Pentecost fell on a Sabbath day, and these lambs were not offered for the purpose for which they were designated, the sacrificial blood may not, in accordance with a Rabbinical prohibition, be sprinkled upon the altar, though such sprinkling is Pentateuchally permitted. Thus, the Pentateuchal law of the sprinkling of the sacrificial blood, and other laws which are dependent on its performance, are suspended by a Rabbinical ordinance. Cf. Bezah 20b.
(9) The ram's horn used on the New Year festival (cf. Lev. XXIII. 24). If New Year's Day falls on a Sabbath, the Pentateuchal law of Shofar is abrogated by the Rabbis for fear it might be carried from one Sabbatical domain into another. Cf. R.H. 32a.
(10) The branches of palm-trees (Lev. XXIII, 40) which are taken during the Feast of Tabernacles. This Pentateuchal law is abrogated on the Sabbath day, for the same reason as in the case of the Shofar. (Cf. p. 613, n. 1 t).

Is not this obvious! — [The statement] IF THE DAUGHTER OF A LEVITE [she becomes disqualified] FROM THE EATING OF TITHE was required.\textsuperscript{2} Does, however, the daughter of a Levite become disqualified by prostitution from the eating of tithe? Surely, it was taught: If the daughter of a Levite was taken into captivity\textsuperscript{3} or was subjected to an act of prostitution,\textsuperscript{4} she may nevertheless be given tithe and she may eat it!\textsuperscript{15} — R. Shesheth replied: This\textsuperscript{6} is a punitive measure.\textsuperscript{7}

IF THE DAUGHTER OF A PRIEST, [she becomes disqualified] FROM THE EATING OF TERUMAH, even Rabbinical terumah.

NEITHER THE HEIRS OF THE ONE HUSBAND NOR THE HEIRS OF THE OTHER ARE ENTITLED TO INHERIT HER KETHUBAH etc. How does the question of kethubah arise here?\textsuperscript{8} R. Papa replied: The kethubah of the male children.\textsuperscript{9} [Is not this also] obvious!\textsuperscript{10} — It might have been assumed that the Rabbis had penalized only her, since she had committed the forbidden act, but not her children, hence we were informed [that they also lose the kethubah].

THE BROTHER OF THE ONE AND THE BROTHER OF THE OTHER MUST SUBMIT TO HALIZAH, BUT MAY NOT CONTRACT THE LEVIRATE MARRIAGE. The brother of the first husband submits to halizah in accordance with the Pentateuchal law,\textsuperscript{11} and may not contract the levirate marriage in accordance with Rabbinic law;\textsuperscript{12} the brother of the second, however, submits to halizah in accordance with Rabbinical law,\textsuperscript{13} and may not contract the levirate marriage either in accordance with Pentateuchal, or in accordance with Rabbinical law.\textsuperscript{14}

R. JOSE SAID: HER KETHUBAH [REMAINS A CHARGE] UPON THE ESTATE OF HER FIRST HUSBAND etc. Said R. Huna: The latter agree with the former,\textsuperscript{15} but the former do not agree with the latter: R. Simeon agrees with R. Eleazar;\textsuperscript{16} since he\textsuperscript{17} does not penalize [the woman\textsuperscript{18} in the case of] cohabitation which constitutes the main prohibition. how much less [would he do so in respect of] what she finds and what she makes with her hands.which are only monetary matters. R. Eleazar, however, does not agree with R. Simeon; [since it is only in respect of] what the woman finds and what she makes with her hands, which are monetary matters, that he does not penalize her, but in respect of cohabitation which is a religious prohibition he does penalize her. And both of them agree with R. Jose; [since they] do not penalize [the woman in respect of] those matters which are applicable while she continues to live with her husband,\textsuperscript{19} how much less [would they do so in respect of] the kethubah the purpose of which is\textsuperscript{20} [for the woman] to take it and depart.\textsuperscript{21} R. Jose, on the other hand, does not agree with them: [since it is only in respect of] what the woman finds and what she makes with her hands, which are monetary matters, that he does not penalize her, but in respect of cohabitation which is a religious prohibition he does penalize her. And both of them agree with R. Jose; [since they] do not penalize [the woman in respect of] those matters which are applicable while she continues to live with her husband,\textsuperscript{19} he does penalize her.

R. Johanan stated: The former agree with the latter, but the latter do not agree with the former: R. Jose agrees with R. Eleazar; since he does not penalize [the woman in respect of] the kethubah which has to be taken from the husband and given to the wife,\textsuperscript{22} how much less [would be do so in respect of] what she finds and what she makes with her hands which have to be taken from her and given to him,\textsuperscript{23} R. Eleazar, however, does not agree with him; [since it is only in respect of] what she finds and what she makes with her hands which have to be taken from the woman and given to the husband,\textsuperscript{23} that he does not penalize her, but in respect of the kethubah which has to be taken from him and given to her,\textsuperscript{22} he does penalize her. And both of them agree with R. Simeon; since they do not penalize her in respect of matters which [are applicable] while [her first husband] is alive, how much less [would they do so in respect of] cohabitation which takes place after his death. R. Simeon, however, does not agree with them; [since it is only in respect of] cohabitation which [takes place] after [her husband's] death, that he does not penalize her, but [in respect of] those matters which [are applicable] while [he is] alive, he does penalize her.

IF SHE MARRIED WITHOUT AN AUTHORIZATION etc. Said R. Huna in the name of Rab: This is the accepted law.\textsuperscript{24} R. Nahman said to him: Why should you indulge in circumlocution?\textsuperscript{25} If you hold the same view as R. Simeon, say. ‘The halachah is in agreement with R. Simeon’ for, indeed, your traditional statement runs on the same lines as that of R. Simeon! And should you reply. ‘If I were to say "the halachah is in agreement with R. Simeon", it might be assumed to apply even to his first statement’,26 then say. ‘The halachah is in agreement with R. Simeon in his latter statement’!27 — This is a difficulty.

R. Shesheth said: It occurs to me28 that Rab made this reported statement while he was sleepy and about to doze off.29 [His statement] ‘This is the accepted law’ implies that30 [the Rabbis] differ;31 but what could she do? She was but the victim of circumstances!32 Furthermore, it was taught: ‘None of the women in incestuous marriages forbidden in the Torah, requires a letter of divorce from the man who married her,33 except a married woman who married again in accordance with a decision of a Beth din’. Only [where she married again] ‘in accordance with a decision of a Beth din’34 does she require a letter of divorce, but where [the marriage took place] in accordance with the evidence of two witnesses she requires no letter of divorce.35 Now, whose view is here represented?36 If it be suggested [that it is the view of] R. Simeon, does she [it may be retorted] require a letter of divorce [even where her marriage took place] in accordance with a decision of the Beth din? Surely it was taught: R. Simeon stated, ‘If the Beth din acted37 on their own judgment34 [the marriage is regarded] as a wilful [act of adultery between] a man and a [married] woman;38 [if, however, they acted],39 in accordance with the evidence of [two] witnesses, [the marriage is regarded] as [intercourse between] a man and a woman that was due to error’.39 In both cases, however,40 no letter of divorce is thus41 required.42 Consequently it must represent the view of the Rabbis!43 The fact is [that it44 represents the view of] R. Simeon, and you may interpret it as follows. R. Simeon stated: If the Beth din acted45 on their own judgment, [the marriage is regarded] as intentional [intercourse46 between] a man and an [unmarried] woman and [the latter consequently] requires a letter of divorce; [If, however, they acted],45 in accordance with the evidence of [two] witnesses [the marriage is regarded] as wanton [intercourse between] a man and an [unmarried] woman48 and [the latter consequently] requires no letter of divorce.

R. Ashi replied: The statement49 was mainly concerned with the question of the prohibition,50 and is to be understood as follows:51 If the Beth din acted52 on their own judgment, [the marriage is regarded] as a wilful [act of adultery between] a man and a [married] woman, and [the latter is consequently] forbidden to her [first] husband; [if, however, they acted]49 in accordance with the evidence of [two] witnesses, [the marriage is regarded] as intercourse [between] a man and a woman that was due to error, and [the latter consequently] not forbidden to her [first] husband.

(1) Having the status of a harlot she is obviously forbidden to marry a priest. Cf. Lev. XXI, 7.

(7) For not instituting the necessary enquiries before she married her second husband.
(8) Where the woman herself, as stated earlier in our Mishnah, is not entitled to it.
(9) Of the woman. By the insertion of the prescribed clause (v. Keth. 52b), her sons are entitled to receive her kethubah from their father's estate when he dies, even if their mother died first and their father married again and had sons with his second wife. They receive her kethubah in addition to their shares in their father's estate to which the sons of both the first and the second wife are equally entitled. In the case spoken of in our Mishnah, however, the sons of the first wife lose their claim to her kethubah.
(10) If their mother herself is not entitled to it, how much less her sons whose claim is entirely derived from hers.
(11) Since according to Pentateuchal law he is the brother of the proper husband.
(12) As a punitive measure against the woman who did not make sufficient enquiries before contracting her second marriage.
Pentateuchally the widow is not subject to him at all, since her marriage with his brother was invalid. Cf. supra p. 617, n. 11.

Having stated that, HER COHABITATION . . . WITH THE BROTHER OF THE FIRST HUSBAND EXEMPTS HER RIVAL.

In regard to her relationship to her first husband.

Lit., ‘when she sits under him’, when there is reason to apprehend that she would never be divorced in consequence.

Lit., ‘stands’.

Thus actually beginning the process of separation and final divorce.

Lit., ‘which from his to hers’.

Lit., ‘which from hers to his’.

Cf. supra 88b.

Having stated that, HER COHABITATION . . . WITH THE BROTHER OF THE FIRST HUSBAND EXEMPTS HER RIVAL.

Lit., ‘I would say’.

Lit., ‘dozing and lying down’.

In the final clause, where the woman married on the evidence of two witnesses.

Maintaining that the woman is to be penalized.

Lit., ‘from him’.

Lit., from rt. נבאה נבאה תחמה פלפ (rt. נבאה נבאה תחמה פלפ, in Pael ‘to go round about’). ‘O thou cunning man, what is the use of thy going round about?’ (Jast.).

That of cohabitation with the brother of the first husband where her second marriage was contracted on the evidence of one witness only.

IF SHE MARRIED WITHOUT AUTHORIZATION.

Lit., ‘I would say’.

Lit., ‘dozing and lying down’.

In the final clause, where the woman married on the evidence of two witnesses.

Maintaining that the woman is to be penalized.

Lit., from rt. נבאה נבאה תחמה פלפ ‘to be compelled’. What better proof could she have had than the testimony of two qualified witnesses.

Lit., ‘from him’.

I.e., where the evidence as to her first husband’s death has been given by one witness only.

Since she was but an unfortunate victim of circumstances.

Lit., ‘who is it’.

Permitted the remarriage of a woman whose husband’s death has been reported.

And the woman becomes thereby forbidden to her first husband if he returns.

And the return of the woman to her first husband is consequently permitted.

Whether the marriage was on the decision of Beth din or on the evidence of two witnesses.

Since the comparison was made with acts of presumption and error while divorce was not mentioned at all.

The first Baraitha cited, which required a divorce in a case where the woman married in accordance with a decision of the Beth din, cannot therefore represent the view of R. Simeon.

Which proves that they also admit that no divorce is necessary where the marriage was contracted in reliance on two witnesses. Who is it, then, that differs from R. Simeon that it should have been necessary for Rab to declare the halachah to be in agreement with his view?

The first Baraitha under discussion. V. p. 620. n. 13.

V. supra p. 620, n. 8.

For the purpose of betrothal. Cf. Kid. 2a.

Since her marriage was legal.

Which constitutes no legal union.

V. supra note 15.

Lit., ‘he taught in respect of prohibition’.

Lit., ‘and thus be said’.

V. supra p. 620, n. 8.

Rabina replied: The statement was mainly dealing with the question of sacrifice,¹ and is to be understood as follows. If the Beth din acted on their own judgment, [the marriage is regarded] as a wilful [act of adultery between] a man and a [married] woman, and [the latter] does not bring a sacrifice; if, however, they acted in accordance with the evidence of [two] witnesses, [the marriage is regarded] as [intercourse between] a man and a woman that was due to error and [the latter] has to bring a sacrifice.

If you prefer, however, I might say that the first [Baraitha] represents [the view of] the Rabbis, and you may explain it as follows: ‘Except a married woman’ and one ‘who married again in accordance with a decision of a Beth din’.

‘Ulla raised an objection: Do we accept the plea ‘what could she have done’? Surely we learned: [If a letter of divorce] was dated according to an era that was inappropriate, according to the Greek era, or according to the era of the building of the Temple, or the destruction of the Temple, or if he was in the East and wrote, ‘In the West’, [or he was] in the West and wrote, ‘In the East’, she must leave her first and her second husband, and all the disabilities [enumerated] are applicable] to her. But why? Let it be argued. ‘What could she have done’? — She should have arranged for the letter of divorce to be read.

R. Shimi b. Ashi said, Come and hear: If a levir married his sister-in-law and her rival went and married [another man] and then the former was found to be incapable of procreation, [the latter] must leave the one and the other and all the disabilities [mentioned apply] to her. But why? Let it be argued. ‘What could she have done’? — She should have waited.

Said Abaye: Come and hear: If the rivals [of] any of the forbidden relatives concerning whom it has been said that they exempt their rivals went and married, and any such forbidden relatives were found to be incapable of procreation, [every rival] must leave the one and the other, and all the disabilities [mentioned apply] to her. But why? Let it be argued. ‘What could she have done’? — She should have waited.

Said Raba. Come and hear: If a scribe wrote a letter of divorce for the husband and a quittance for the wife, and then made a mistake and handed the letter of divorce to the wife and the quittance to the husband, and they gave them to one another and after a time she [discovered] in the possession of the husband and the quittance in the possession of the wife, [the latter] must leave the one as well as the other, and all the disabilities [mentioned apply] to her. But why? Let it be argued. ‘What could she have done’? — She should have arranged for the letter of divorce to be read.

Said R. Ashi, Come and hear: If he changed his name or her name, the name of his town or the name of her town, she must depart from the one and from the other, and all the disabilities [mentioned apply] to her. But why? Let it be argued. ‘What could she have done’? — She should have arranged for the letter of divorce to be read.

Said Rabina, Come and hear: If a man married a woman on the strength of a bald letter of divorce she must depart from the one and from the other, etc.! — She should have arranged for the letter of divorce to be read.

R. Papa desired to decide a case on the principle of ‘What could she have done’. Said R. Huna Son of R. Joshua to R. Papa: But surely all those Baraithoth were taught? The other answered him: Were they not explained? the former retorted, ‘rely on explanations’.

R. Ashi said: No regard need be paid to a rumour. What kind of rumour [is here meant]? If it be suggested [that it means] a rumour after marriage. Surely [it may be objected] R. Ashi has said... this once; for R. Ashi stated:

(1) Cf. supra n. 6, mutatis mutandis.
(2) So Bah. Cf. supra n. 7. Cur. edd. omit, ‘and is . . . follows’.
(3) Since her willful act was performed in reliance on the ruling of Beth din. V. Hor. 2b.
(4) As for any other similar sin committed in error.
(5) V. supra note 15.
(6) Who married again in accordance with the evidence of two witnesses.
(7) On the evidence of one witness. According to this interpretation, a marriage on the evidence of two witnesses is not excluded (as was originally suggested supra 91a) and it also requires a letter of divorce.
(8) Lit ‘do we say’.
(9) R. Shesheth's objection, supra 91a.
(10) Lit., ‘he wrote’.
(11) Lit., ‘for the name’.
(12) For the place in which, or the time when the document was written.
(13) The scribe (Rashi). It is assumed that the witnesses are from the same place as the scribe. (Cf. Tosaf s.v. מַעֵרְרֵי א.א.)
(14) The woman who married again after receiving such a defective document from her husband.
(15) Lit ‘from this and from this’.
(16) Lit., ‘these ways’.
(17) Supra 87b and in the Mishnah cited from Gittin (v. infra n. 13), such as the loss of kethubah etc.
(19) Should the woman be penalized.
(20) She honestly believed the document to be valid.
(21) By an expert who would have detected the irregularities and warned her in good time.
(22) The widow of his brother who died without issue.
(23) Which she is permitted to do, since the levirate marriage of one widow exempts all her rivals from both halizah and the levirate marriage.
(24) Lit ‘this’, the widow who married the levir.
(25) And consequently unable to exempt her rival (cf. supra 12a).
(26) The rival mentioned.
(27) Lit., ‘from this and from this’. She may neither live with the husband she married nor with the levir.
(28) V. supra n. 12.
(29) Git. 80a.
(31) She surely could not have anticipated the other's incapability.
(32) Supra 2a.
(33) Lit., ‘these’.
(34) Cf. supra p. 622, n. 20.
(35) V. supra p. 622, n. 22.
(36) Lit., these ways’.
(37) Supra 87b and in the Mishnah cited from Gittin (cf. Git. 79b) such as the loss of kethubah etc.
(38) Git. 80a.
(39) Should the woman he penalized.
(40) Which the wife gives to the husband on the receipt of her kethubah.
(41) Without examining the documents.
(42) Lit., ‘this to this and this to this”; both of them believing that the husband gave to his wife the letter of divorce, and that the wife gave to her husband the quittance.
(43) When the woman had married another man.
(44) Lit., ‘goes out’.
(45) Since her divorce was invalid, the document having been given to her not by her husband as the law requires but by the scribe.
(46) Her second and her first husband.
(47) V. supra note 7.

(48) Should she be subject to the disabilities.

(49) When she would immediately have discovered the scribe's error.

(50) The husband.

(51) In the letter of divorce which he gave to his wife.

(52) Lit., ‘from this and from this’: from her first, and from her second husband.

(53) And the change of name would have been discovered at once.

(54) Lit., ‘he married her’.

(55) יֵדֶע i.e., a ‘folded document’ (cf. B.B. 160a) on one of whose folds a signature is wanting. A valid deed of such a character must bear the signature of a witness on each fold and must he signed by no less than three witnesses. V. Git., Sonc. ed., p. 391.

(56) V. supra p. 623, n. 22.

(57) And the defect would have been discovered forthwith.

(58) It was his intention to allow a woman, whose second marriage was contracted on the evidence of two witnesses who had testified that her first husband was dead, to go back to him when he returned.

(59) Above mentioned.

(60) And in none was the principle of ‘what could she have done’ acted upon.

(61) Special reasons were given why the principle mentioned was not acted upon. In all other cases, however, it should be taken into consideration.

(62) Lit., ‘shall we rise’.

(63) Despite the explanations, the original objections may still be urged. Cur. edd. insert in parenthesis ‘and he desisted’. i.e., R. Papa abandoned his contemplated decision.

(64) If a woman was authorized by the Beth din to contract a second marriage.

(65) That her first husband was still alive.

(66) Of the woman with her second husband.
No regard need be paid to a rumour that originated after marriage — It might have been assumed that since she was to appear before the Beth din to obtain the authorization for her marriage, the rumour is regarded as one that arose before marriage and she should in consequence be forbidden, we were, therefore, taught [that even in such circumstances a rumour is disregarded].

IF SHE MARRIED WITH THE AUTHORIZATION OF THE BETH DIN SHE MUST LEAVE etc. Ze'iri said: Our Mishnah cannot be authentic owing to a Baraitha that was recited at the academy. For it was recited at the academy: If the Beth din ruled that the sun had set, and later it appeared, [such a decision] is no ruling but a mere error. R. Nahman, however, stated: [Such an authorization] is [to be regarded as] a ruling. Said R. Nahman: You can have proof that it [is to be regarded as] a ruling. For throughout the Torah a single witness is never believed while in this case he is believed. But why? Obviously because [such an authorization is regarded as] a ruling. Raba said: You can have proof that it [is to be regarded as a mere] error. For were Beth din to issue a ruling in a case of some forbidden fat or blood that it is permitted, and then find a [strong] reason for forbidding it, [their subsequent ruling], should they retract and rule again that it is permitted, would be completely disregarded; whereas here, it should one witness present himself, the woman would be permitted to marry again, and should two witnesses [afterwards] appear the woman would be forbidden to marry again, but should another witness subsequently appear the woman would again be permitted to marry. But why? Obviously because it [is regarded as a mere] error.

R. Eliezer also is of the opinion that it [is to be regarded as a mere] error. For it was taught: R. Eliezer said: Let the law pierce through the mountain and let her bring a fat sin-offering. Now, if it be granted that it [is to be treated as] an error one can well see the reason why she is to bring an offering. If, however, it be contended that it [is to be regarded as] a ruling, why should she bring an offering? But is it not possible that R. Eliezer holds the opinion that an individual who committed a sin in reliance on a ruling of the Beth din is liable? — If so, what [could have been meant by] ‘Let the law pierce through the mountain’?

IF THE BETH DIN DECIDED THAT SHE MAY MARRY AGAIN etc. What is meant by DISGRACED HERSELF? — R. Eliezer replied: She played the harlot. R. Johanan replied: [If being] a widow [she was married] to a High Priest, [or if] a divorcee or a haluzah [she was married] to a common priest. He who stated, ‘She played the harlot’ would, even more so, [subject the woman to a sin-offering. if as] a widow [she was married] to a High Priest. He, however, who stated, ‘[If being] a widow [she was married] to a High Priest’ does not [subject her to a sin-offering if] she played the harlot. What is the reason? — Because she might plead, ‘It is you who granted me the status of an unmarried woman’. It was taught in agreement with the opinion of R. Johanan: If Beth din directed that she may be married again, and she went and disgraced herself, so that, for instance, [being] a widow [she was married] to a High Priest.[or being] a divorcee or a haluzah [she was married] to a common priest. she is liable to bring an offering for every single act of cohabitation; so R. Eleazar. But the Sages said: One offering for all. The Sages, however, agree with R. Eleazar that, If she was married to five men, she is liable to bring an offering for every one, since [here it is a case of] separate bodies.

MISHNAH. IF A WOMAN WHOSE HUSBAND AND SON WENT TO COUNTRY BEYOND THE SEA WAS TOLD, ‘YOUR HUSBAND DIED AND YOUR SON DIED AFTERWARDS’, AND SHE MARRIED AGAIN, AND LATER SHE WAS TOLD, ‘IT WAS OTHERWISE’, SHE MUST DEPART; AND ANY CHILD BORN BEFORE OR AFTER IS A BASTARD.
SHE WAS TOLD. ‘YOUR SON DIED AND YOUR HUSBAND DIED AFTERWARDS’, AND SHE CONTRACTED THE LEVIRATE MARRIAGE, AND AFTERWARDS SHE WAS TOLD, ‘IT WAS OTHERWISE’ SHE MUST DEPART, AND ANY CHILD BORN BEFORE OR AFTER IS A BASTARD.

IF SHE WAS TOLD, ‘YOUR HUSBAND IS DEAD, AND SHE MARRIED, AND AFTERWARDS SHE WAS TOLD, ‘HE WAS ALIVE BUT IS NOW DEAD’, SHE MUST DEPART, AND ANY CHILD BORN BEFORE [THE DEATH OF HER FIRST HUSBAND] IS A BASTARD, BUT ONE BORN AFTER IT IS NO BASTARD. IF SHE WAS TOLD, ‘YOUR HUSBAND IS DEAD AND SHE WAS BETROTHED, AND AFTERWARDS HER HUSBAND APPEARED, SHE IS PERMITTED TO RETURN TO HIM. ALTHOUGH THE OTHER GAVE HER A LETTER OF DIVORCE HE HAS NOT THEREBY DISQUALIFIED HER FROM MARRYING A PRIEST. THIS R. ELEAZAR B. MATHIA DERIVED BY MEANS OF THE FOLLOWING EXPOSITION: NEITHER SHALL THEY TAKE A WOMAN PUT AWAY FROM HER HUSBAND EXCLUDES ONE PUT AWAY FROM A MAN WHO IS NOT HER HUSBAND.

GEMARA. What is meant by BEFORE and what is meant by AFTER? If it be suggested that BEFORE means before the [second] report and that AFTER means after that report, it should have been stated: The child is a bastard! Because it was desired to state in the final clause, IF SHE WAS TOLD, ‘YOUR HUSBAND IS DEAD’, AND SHE MARRIED, AND AFTERWARDS SHE WAS TOLD, ‘HE WAS ALIVE BUT IS NOW DEAD . . . ANY CHILD BORN BEFORE [THE DEATH OF HER FIRST HUSBAND] IS A BASTARD, BUT ONE BORN AFTER IT IS NO BASTARD, the expressions BORN BEFORE OR AFTER IS A BASTARD were used in the first clause also.

Our Rabbis taught: This is the view of R. Akiba who stated: Betrothal with those who are subject [on intercourse] to the penalties of a negative commandment is invalid. The Sages, however, said that [the child] of a sister-in-law is no bastard. Let it be said: The child of a union between those who are subject [on intercourse] to the penalties of a negative precept is no bastard! — This Tanna is the following Tanna of the school of R. Akiba, who stated that [only a child] of a union that is subject to the penalties of a negative precept owing to consanguinity is a bastard, but one born from a union that is subject to the penalties of a mere negative precept is no bastard.

Rab Judah stated

(1) If, for instance, after a priest had married, a rumour arose that before her marriage with him his wife was a divorcée or a harlot. Git. 81a, 88b, 89a.
(2) Lit., ‘and we permitted’.
(3) Before it had taken place.
(4) Her appearance before the court implying that, already at that time, the possibility that her husband was still alive was being considered.
(5) To her second husband, as if the rumour had been current before her marriage.
(6) Lit., ‘our Mishnah is not’.
(7) On a cloudy day which happened to be the Sabbath day.
(8) And permitted the people to commence their week-day labours which are forbidden on the Sabbath.
(9) Which exempts the individual who acted upon it from a sin-offering and affects the nature of the sin-offering which the congregation who acted upon it has to bring.
(10) Since the erroneous ruling of the Beth din was not due to an oversight on their part of a point of law but to a false assumption of a matter of fact. They assumed that the sun had set, while in fact, it had not. Similarly here, They assumed that the woman's husband was dead when as a matter of fact he was alive. Our Mishnah, therefore, which exempts the woman from a sin-offering cannot be authentic.
The permission to the woman to marry again, spoken of in our Mishnah.

Subject to the same laws as all erroneous rulings issued by a Beth din. Cf. supra 11. 6. and Hor. 2aff.

Lit., ‘thou shalt know’.

Lit., ‘not?’

The woman did not act on the evidence of the witness which, as is now apparent, was due to an error, but on the ruling of the Beth din who accepted the evidence of this witness. Whatever their reason may have been it was their ruling that was the cause of the woman's marriage.

They assumed that every woman makes careful investigations before she marries (v. supra 25a) and it has been found that this was not the case.

[Rashi: For a reason not as strong as that which prompted them to prohibit It. Me'iri: For the very same reason which made them permit it at the very first].

Lit., ‘we do not look to them’. Once it has been found that their first ruling was erroneous it cannot again be adopted.

v. supra p. 625, n.8.

Testifying that the woman's husband was dead.

Lit., ‘we permit’.

Declaring that the husband was still alive.

Lit., ‘we forbid’.

Stating that the husband has died since.

If the first authorization is to be regarded as a ruling it should not again be adopted (cf. supra n. 2), once it has been proved (by the testimony of the two witnesses) that it was erroneous.

Lit., ‘not’?

It is assumed that though the first witness misled the court the last is speaking the truth.

I.e., one should delve deeper into the subject (cf. Rashi a.l.) ‘Justice under all circumstances’ (Jast.).

The woman who married by permission of the court on the evidence of one witness.

Cf. Sanh. 6b. Though, if viewed superficially, it would appear that the woman, since she had acted on the decision of a court, is not liable to a sin-offering (cf. Hor. 2a). careful consideration of the case would reveal that she is liable, since the decision was based on the error of the witness and not on a legal oversight of the court. Cf. supra p. 625, n. 7.

Cf. supra note14, second section.

Cf. loc. cit. first section.

To a sin-offering.

Cf. supra note 12 (first interpretation) and supra note 14.

Marg. note, ‘Eleazar’.

That even in such a case a sin-offering must be brought.

Since it is obvious that the court's permission did not extend to a marriage which is in any case forbidden to the woman, even if her husband is dead.

Lit., ‘but not’.

And since she acted on a ruling of a court, she is not liable to a sin-offering.

This is further explained in Ker. 15a.

Lit., ‘and they came and said to her’.

As the son was alive when his father died the widow is not subject to the levirate marriage or halizah.

A stranger.

Lit., ‘the matter was reversed’, the son died first, so that when his father died afterwards the widow was subject to halizah or levirate marriage.

From her second husband, since he married her before she had performed the required halizah.

The second report. Lit ‘and the first and last child’.

Being the issue of a union forbidden by a negative precept. V. Gemara infra.

V. p. 627. n. 10.

V. supra p. 627, n. 8.

From the levir, to whom, (her husband having had issue from her at the time he died) she is forbidden as ‘his brother's wife’.

At the time she married her second husband.
From her second husband who married her while, as a married woman, she was forbidden to him.

Lit., ‘and the first child’.

Lit., ‘and the last’.

Lit., ‘the last, the man who betrothed her.

Priests.

Lit., ‘and not’.

The divorce being unnecessary it has no effect on the status of the woman.

In the first clauses of our Mishnah.

Lit., ‘what is first and what is last’.

Since the child's legitimacy is not determined by the date of the report but by the facts.

Lit., ‘the first’.

Lit., ‘and the last’.

The statement in the first clause of our Mishnah that the child is a bastard.

V. supra 10b. And no divorce is consequently required.

Who married a stranger before she had performed halizah with the levir.

Tosef. XI. Since such marriage is forbidden by a negative precept only, and is not subject to kareth.

This more general statement would have also included the particular case of the sister-in-law mentioned.

Referred to in the Baraitha cited as ‘the Sages’.

The marriage, for instance, of the sister-in-law to a stranger. The general statement (v. supra note 7) was consequently inadmissible.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 92b

in the name of Rab: Whence is it deduced that betrothal with a sister-in-law is of no validity? — From the Scriptural text, the wife of the dead shall not be married outside unto one who is not of his kin, there shall be no validity in the betrothal of her by a stranger. Samuel, however, stated: Owing to our [intellectual] poverty it is necessary [that she be given] a letter of divorce; Samuel having been in doubt as to whether the expression, The wife of the dead shall not be, served the purpose of a negative precept or rather indicated that betrothal with such a woman is invalid.

R. Mari b. Rachel said to R. Ashi: Thus said Amemar, ‘The law is in agreement with Samuel’. Said R. Ashi: Now that Amemar has said that the law is in agreement with Samuel, her levir, if he was a priest, submits to her halizah and she is permitted to her second husband. He surely benefits thereby. and thus the sinner is at an advantage! — Rather [this is the reading]: If her levir was an Israelite, the other gives her a letter of divorce and she is permitted to the levir.

R. Giddal stated in the name of R. Hiyya b. Joseph in the name of Rab: While betrothal with a sister-in-law is invalid, marriage with her is valid. If betrothal, however, is invalid, marriage also should be invalid! — Read: Both betrothal and marriage with her are invalid. And if you prefer I might say. What is meant by ‘marriage with her is valid’? — It constitutes an act of harlotry in accordance with the ruling of R. Hamnuna.For R. Hamnuna stated: A woman who, while awaiting the decision of the levir, played the harlot, is forbidden to marry the levir. And if you prefer I might say: [The reading is]. in fact, as has been originally stated, that betrothal with her is invalid but marriage with her is valid, since her case might be mistaken for that of a woman whose husband went to a country beyond the sea.

R. Jannai said: A vote was taken at the college and it was decided that betrothal with a sister-in-law has no validity. Said R. Johanan to him: O Master, is not this law contained in a Mishnah? For we have learnt: If a man said to a woman, ‘Be thou betrothed unto me after I shall have become a proselyte’, ‘after thou shalt have been a proselyte’, ‘after I shall have been emancipated’, ‘after thou shalt have been emancipated’, ‘after thy husband shall have died’, ‘after thy sister shall have died’ or ‘after thy brother-in-law shall have submitted to thy halizah’, the betrothal is invalid.33 — The other replied: Had I not lifted up the sherd, would you have found the pearl beneath it?34

Resh Lakish said to him35 Had not a great man praised you. I would have told you that the Mishnah [you cited represents the view] of R. Akiba who maintains that betrothal with those who are subject to the penalties of a negative precept is invalid.36

If [this Mishnah, however, represents the view of] R. Akiba, betrothal [with the sister-in-law]37 should be valid where [the stranger] said to her, ‘after thy brother-in-law shall have submitted to thy halizah’, since R. Akiba has been heard to state that one may transfer possession of that which is not yet in existence;38 for we learned:

(1) V. supra note 5.
(2) And no divorce is consequently required.
(3) Lit., ‘because it is said’.
(4) Lit., ‘she shall not be’, רָבִּיהָ רָבִּיה פָּלַקְתָּה.
(5) Deut. XXV,5.
(6) Lit., ‘being’. רָבִּיה, i.e., ‘betrothal’.
(7) Lit., ‘a stranger shall have no being in her’. רָבִּיה (supra n. 15) is of the same rt. רָבִּיה, as that of רָבִּיה (supra. 13).
(8) Inability to understand the meaning of the Scriptural text mentioned.
(9) Lit., ‘that’.
(10) Deut. xxv. .5.
(11) Lit., ‘that it came’.
(12) And, as is the case with other unions that are forbidden by negative precepts, the betrothal is valid.
(13) The brother-in-law of the widow, spoken of in the first case of our Mishnah, who married a stranger and from whom, according to Samuel, she requires a divorce.
(14) To whom the sister-in-jaw would thus be forbidden even after she had been divorced by the stranger. A priest is forbidden to marry a divorced woman. V. Lev. XXI, 7.
(15) Lit., ‘to him’, the stranger whom she married.
(16) The second husband. v. supra n. 7.
(17) He is permitted to continue to live with his wife.
(18) By the halizah of the levir.
(19) Who contracted a union before instituting the necessary enquiries as to the circumstances of his wife's first husband's death.
(20) Lit., ‘gains’.
(21) Cf. supra note 5.
(22) The second husband. Cf. supra note 7.
(23) Lit., ‘to him’.
(24) Who, before she performed halizah with the levir had married a stranger.
(25) This validity, it is at present assumed, subjects the woman to the necessity of a letter of divorce.
(26) Lit., ‘In’.
(27) By such a marriage she becomes forbidden to marry the levir as if she had played the harlot; but no letter of divorce is required.
(28) In the sense that she requires a letter of divorce. Cf. p. 630, n. 17. and the following note.
(29) And she married in accordance with the decision of a court on the evidence of one witness who testified that her first husband was dead. As the woman in this case requires a letter of divorce, it was ordained, as a preventive measure, that in the case spoken of in our Mishnah also a letter of divorce shall be required. the validity spoken of extending, however, to this requirement and no further. In the case of betrothal no preventive measure was enacted since in this case also no letter of divorce is required.
(30) V. p. 630, n. 16.
(31) Lit., ‘our’.
(33) Kid. 62a, Keth. 58b. B.M. 16b. Betrothal cannot take effect at once owing to his stipulation and it cannot take place in the future because that which is not yet in existence may not be acquired. From this it follows that before the levir has submitted to halizah betrothal by a stranger is invalid, which is in effect the law reported by R. Jannai.
(34) I.e., had not R. Jannai stated his ruling it might never have occurred to R. Johanan that the reason for the invalidity of the betrothal in the case of the sister-in-law was the law that betrothal with a sister-in-law by a stranger is never valid before the levir has submitted to halizah. He might have assumed the invalidity in this particular case also to be due to the fact that the man distinctly desired it to take place in the future, and no one can acquire that which is not yet in existence.
(35) R. Johanan.
(36) Marriage of a sister-in-law by a stranger before she has performed halizah with the levir is forbidden by such a negative precept. This Mishnah, therefore, provides no proof, like the statement of R. Jannai, that the Rabbis also admit invalidity in such a case.
(37) Lit ‘with’, or ‘in her’.
(38) Consequently the betrothal here, though it was dependent on a future event which had not yet taken place, should also be valid.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 93a

[If a woman said to her husband]. ‘Konam,¹ I do aught for your mouth’,² he³ need not annul [her vow].⁴ R. Akiba, however, said: He³ must annul it, since she might do more [work] than is due⁵ to him⁶. Surely in connection with this it was stated: R. Huna son of R. Joshua said, [This law⁷ applies only] where she said, ‘My hands⁸ shall be consecrated to Him who made them’, since her hands are in existence.⁹

This¹⁰ differs [from the opinion] of R. Nahman b. Isaac. For R. Nahman b. Isaac stated: R. Huna [holds the same opinion] as Rab,¹¹ Rab as R. Jannai, R. Jannai as R. Hyya. R. Hyya as Rabbi,¹² Rabbi as R. Meir, R. Meir as R. Eliezer b. Jacob. and R. Eliezer b. Jacob as R. Akiba, who stated that a man may transfer possession of a thing that is not yet in existence.

What statement is it [that records the opinion of] R. Huna? It was stated: He who sold the fruit of a date-tree¹³ to another may, said R. Huna, withdraw from the sale before they come into existence; but after they have come into existence he may no longer withdraw.¹⁴ R. Nahman, however, stated: He may withdraw even after they have come into existence.¹⁵ Said R. Nahman: I admit, that if he¹⁶ had already plucked and ate them, [compensation] is not to be extracted from him.¹⁷

As to Rab?¹⁸ — [In that] which R. Huna stated in the name of Rab: If a man said to another, ‘let this field which I am about to buy be yours as from now the moment I buy it’, [the latter] acquires it.¹⁹

‘R. Jannai [is of the same opinion] as R. Hyya’; for R. Jannai had a tenant²⁰ who used to bring him a basket of fruit every Sabbath Eve. Once as it was growing dark, and [the tenant] did not come, [R. Jannai] took²¹ tithe²² from the fruit which [he had] at home for [the redemption of] those.²³ When he subsequently came before R. Hyya [the latter] said to him, ‘You have acted well; for it was taught : That thou mayest learn to fear the Lord thy God always²⁴ refers to Sabbaths and festivals’.²⁵ Now, in ‘respect of what law²⁶ If in respect of giving tithe²⁷ so that one may be allowed to eat,²⁸ was it necessary [it may be asked] for a Scriptural text to permit moving,²⁹ [the prohibition of which is only] Rabbinical!³⁰

(30) Scripture, surely. could not be referring to a prohibition which was not ordained before the Rabbinical period.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 93b

Consequently¹ [it must refer to] an instance like this one.² Said the first to him, ‘But in my dream³ they read to me a Scriptural text on the "bruised reed";⁴ did they not mean to tell me: Behold, thou trustest upon the staff of this bruised reed’⁵ ‘No’. [the other replied], ‘It is this that they meant: A bruised reed shall he not break, and the dimly burning wick shall he not quench’. ⁶

Rabbi⁷ — Where it was taught: Thou shalt not deliver unto his master a bondman,⁸ Rabbi explained that Scripture speaks here of a man who bought a slave on the condition that he would set him free.⁹ How is this⁰ to be understood?¹¹ R. Nahman b. Isaac replied: In the case where [the buyer] gave him¹² a written declaration, ‘Your person shall become yours as from now as soon as I have bought you’.¹³
R. Meir? — Where it was taught: If a man said to a woman, ‘Be thou betrothed to me after I shall have become a proselyte’, ‘after thou shalt have become a proselyte’. ‘after I shall have been emancipated’. ‘after thy husband shall have died’, ‘after thy sister shall have died’, or ‘after thy brother-in-law shall have submitted to thy halizah’, the betrothal is invalid; but R. Meir said that her betrothal is valid.

R. Eliezer b. Jacob? — Where it was taught: More than this did R. Eliezer b. Jacob say: Even if a man said, ‘The plucked fruit of this bed shall be terumah for the attached fruit of that other bed’, or ‘The attached fruit of this bed [shall be terumah] for the plucked fruit of that other bed, when it shall have grown to a third [of its maturity] and been plucked’. his words are valid if the fruit has grown to a third [of its maturity] and has been plucked.

R. Akiba? — Where we learned: [If a woman said to her husband]. ‘Konam, if l do aught for your mouth’, he need not annul [her vow]. R. Akiba, however, said: He must annul It, since she might do more [work] than is due to him.

An enquiry was addressed to R. Shesheth: What is [the law in respect of] one witness in the case of a sister-in-law? Is the reason why one witness [is sometimes believed elsewhere] because no one would tell a lie which is likely to be exposed. and consequently here also [the witness] would tell no lie; or is the reason why one witness [is believed elsewhere] because the woman herself makes careful enquiries and [only then] marries, and consequently here, since she may sometimes be in love with [her brother-in-law]. she might marry him without proper enquiry?

R. Shesheth answered them: You have learned it, IF SHE WAS TOLD, ‘YOUR SON DIED AND YOUR HUSBAND DIED AFTERWARDS’, AND SHE CONTRACTED THE LEVIRATE MARRIAGE, AND LATER SHE WAS TOLD, ‘IT WAS OTHERWISE, SHE MUST DEPART; AND ANY CHILD BORN BEFORE OR AFTER IS A BASTARD. Now, how is this to be understood? If it be suggested [that there were] two witnesses against two, what reason do you see [it may be asked] for relying on the latter? Rely rather on the former! Furthermore, [how could the child be described as] BASTARD [when he is only] an uncertain bastard! And should you reply that he was not exact in his expression. surely [it may be pointed out] since in the final clause he stated, ANY CHILD BORN BEFORE [THE DEATH OF HER FIRST HUSBAND] IS A BASTARD, BUT ONE BORN AFTER IT IS NO BASTARD, it may well be inferred that he was exact In his expressions, Consequently it must be concluded [that the first report was that of] one witness, and that the reason [why he is not believed is] because two witnesses came and contradicted his evidence, but had this not been the case he would have been believed.

Another reading: This question does not arise, since even the woman herself is believed. For we learned: A woman who stated, ‘My husband is dead’ may be married again, and she may similarly contract levirate marriage [if she stated] ‘My husband is dead’. The question arises only in respect of permitting a sister-in-law to marry a stranger. Is the reason why one witness [is elsewhere sometimes believed] because no one would tell a lie which is likely to be exposed, and consequently, here also [the witness] would tell no lie; or is the reason why one witness [is elsewhere believed] because [the woman] herself makes careful enquiries and [only then] marries, and consequently here she might marry without proper enquiry. since she might fiercely Consequently⁵ [it must be concluded that the first report was that of] one witness, and that the reason [why he is not believed is] because two witnesses came and contradicted his evidence, but had this not been the case⁶ he would have been believed! [No]. In fact [it may be retorted, there may have been] two witnesses against two, and [this is the explanation]: As As R. Aha b. Manyumi stated, ‘Where the witnesses have proved an alibi’,⁷ so here also [It is a case where the second pair of] witnesses have proved an alibi.⁸

Said R. Mordecai to R. Ashi, — others Say. R. Aha said to R. Ashi: Come and hear: A woman is not believed if she says. ‘My brother-in-law is dead, and so I may marry again’, or, ‘My sister is dead, and so I may enter⁹ her house’.¹⁰ Only she is not believed but one witness is believed!¹¹ According to your argument, however, [it may be retorted] read the final clause: A man is not believed when he says. ‘My brother is dead, and so I may contract the levirate marriage with his wife’, or, ‘My own wife is dead, and so I may marry her sister’ —¹⁰ Is it only he who is not believed, but one witness is believed? In the case of a woman¹² one can well understand that in order to prevent her perpetual desertion the Rabbis have relaxed the law in her favour.¹³ What, however, can be said in the case of a man! [This statement]¹⁴ then [it must be explained] was required in accordance with the view of R. Akiba.¹⁵ It might have been assumed that, since R. Akiba stated that the offspring of a union between those who are subject to the penalty of negative commandments is a bastard, she¹⁶ may be presumed to be desirous of avoiding injury¹⁷ and to institute, therefore, careful enquiries.¹⁸ hence we were taught¹⁹ [that she is not to be believed].²⁰ Raba said:²¹ That one witness is believed in the case of a sister-in-law²² [may be inferred] a minori ad majus: If you have permitted [a woman to marry again]²³ in face of a prohibition involving kareth²⁴ how much more so in face of a mere prohibitory law.²⁵ Said one of the Rabbis to Raba: Her own case proves [the contrary]: In face of a prohibition involving kareth²⁴ you have permitted her [to marry again]²⁶ while in face of a mere prohibitory law²⁵ you have not permitted her!²⁷ The fact, however, is this:²⁸ Why is she not believed?²⁷ Because, as she may sometimes hate the levir, she might marry a stranger without first instituting careful enquiries;²⁹ so also in the case of one witness, since she may sometimes hate the levir, she might marry [a stranger] without first instituting the necessary enquiries.²⁹

WOMAN,² AND THE SECOND WOMAN IS PERMITTED TO MARRY HIS RELATIVES. IF THE FIRST DIED HE IS PERMITTED TO MARRY THE SECOND.

IF HE WAS TOLD, HOWEVER, THAT HIS WIFE WAS DEAD, AND HE MARRIED HER SISTER, AND THEN HE WAS TOLD THAT SHE WAS THEN³ ALIVE BUT HAD SINCE DIED, ANY CHILD BORN BEFORE⁴ [HIS FIRST WIFE’S DEATH] IS A BASTARD, BUT ANYONE BORN AFTER THAT⁵ IS NO BASTARD.
R. Jose Stated: Whosoever disqualifies for others disqualifies for himself and whosoever does not disqualify for others does not disqualify for himself.

GEMARA. Even though his wife and his brother-in-law went to a country beyond the sea, so that such marriage had the effect of causing the prohibition of the wife of his brother-in-law to his brother-in-law, it is nevertheless the wife of his brother-in-law that is forbidden, while his own wife is permitted, and we do not say that, since the wife of his brother-in-law is forbidden to his brother-in-law, his own wife also should be forbidden to him.

Are we to assume that our Mishnah does not represent the view of R. Akiba? For if [it be in agreement with] R. Akiba [his wife] would be the sister of his divorcee! For it was taught: None of the women in incestuous marriages forbidden in the Torah require a letter of divorce, except a married woman who remarried in accordance with the decision of the Beth din. R. Akiba, however, adds also a brother's wife and a wife's sister. Now, since R. Akiba ruled that she requires a letter of divorce, [his first wife] becomes ipso facto forbidden to him because she is the sister of his divorcee!

Was not, however, the following statement made in connection with this ruling: R. Giddal said in the name of R. Hyya b. Joseph in the name of Rab, ‘How is one to understand this "brother's wife"? Where a man's brother, for instance, betrothed a woman and went to a country beyond the sea, and he, on hearing that his brother was dead, married his wife; since people might say that the first had attached a certain condition to the betrothal and that the latter had lawfully married her. And how is one to understand a "wife's sister"? Where a man, for instance, betrothed a woman and she went to a country beyond the sea, and he, on hearing that she died, married her sister; since people might say that he had attached a certain condition to the betrothal of the first and that he, therefore, legally married the other. In respect of marriage, however, can it be said that one had attached a condition to marriage?

Said R. Ashi to R. Kahana: If [our Mishnah represents the view of] R. Akiba, one's mother-in-law should also be mentioned, since R. Akiba was heard to state: [The marriage of] a man's mother-in-law after the death of his wife is not punishable by burning! For it was taught: They shall be burnt with fire, both he and they. R. Ishmael. R. Akiba said: He and both of them. This presents no difficulty according to Abaye who explained that the difference between them lies in the interpretation of the text, R. Ishmael maintaining that the text mentioned only one while R. Akiba maintains that the text spoke of two. According to Raba, however, who explained that the difference between them is [the case of marriage of] a man's mother-in-law after the death of his wife. His mother-in-law should also have been mentioned! — The other replied: Granted that Scripture has excluded her from the penalty of burning, has Scripture, however, excluded her from the prohibition?

Let her, however, be forbidden [to her husband] through his cohabitation with her sister, her case being similar to that of a woman whose husband went to a country beyond the sea — [The two cases are] not alike: His wife who, [if she had acted] presumptuously, is forbidden to him by Pentateuchal law, has been forbidden to him, when [she acted] unwittingly, by a preventive measure of the Rabbis;

Akiba's opinion on the subject cannot, therefore, be inferred from it.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 95a

with his wife's sister, however, presumptuous [marriage with whom does] not [cause his first wife to be] forbidden [to him] by Pentateuchal law, no preventive measure has been instituted by the Rabbis in her case where [he acted] unwittingly. Whence, however, is it deduced that she is not forbidden? — [From that] which was taught: With her, only cohabitation with her causes her to be prohibited; with her sister, however, does not cause her to be prohibited. [This, Scriptural text was required] since [otherwise] It might have been argued [as follows]: If where a man cohabited with a woman forbidden by a lighter prohibition, [the person] who caused the prohibition itself is forbidden to her, how much more should [the person] who caused the prohibition become forbidden in the case of cohabiting with one forbidden by a heavier prohibition.

R. Judah stated: Beth Shammai and Beth Hillel are agreed that a man who cohabited with his mother-in-law renders his wife unfit to live with him; they only differ where a man cohabited with his wife's sister, in which case Beth Shammai maintain that thereby he causes [his wife] to be unfit for him, while Beth Hillel maintain that he does not thereby cause her to be unfit for him.

R. Jose stated: Beth Shammai and Beth Hillel are agreed that a man who cohabits with his wife's sister does not thereby render his wife unfit for him; they differ only where a man cohabited with his mother-in-law, in which case Beth Shammai maintain that thereby he causes [his wife] to be unfit for him, while Beth Hillel maintain that he does not thereby cause her to be unfit for him.

Originally all the women of the world were permitted to him, and all the men of the world were permitted to her; but when he betrothed her he imposed a prohibition upon her and she imposed a prohibition upon him; the prohibition, however, which he imposed upon her is greater than the prohibition which she imposes upon him, since he caused all the men of the world to be forbidden to her, while she caused her relatives only to be forbidden to him. This, then, may be arrived at by an inference: If she, to whom he caused all the men in the world to be prohibited, is, if she cohabited unwittingly with one who was forbidden to her, not forbidden to the man who was permitted to her, how much more is there where he caused her, whom she caused, to be forbidden, not from the prohibition of her relatives only, should, if he cohabited unwittingly with one who was forbidden to him, not be forbidden to her who was permitted to him. This argument is applicable to one who acted unwittingly. Whence is it deduced [that the same law is applicable] to one who acted wilfully? It was expressly stated With her, with her only causes her to be prohibited; cohabitation with her sister, however, does not cause her to be prohibited.

Rab Judah stated in the name of Samuel: The law is not in agreement with R. Judah.
A man once committed incest with his mother-in-law, and Rab Judah summoned him and ordered him to receive a flogging. ‘Had Samuel not stated’, he said to him, ‘that the law was not in agreement with R. Judah. I would have forbidden [your wife] to you for all time’.

What was meant by a ‘lighter prohibition’?38 — R. Hisda replied: Remarrying one's divorced wife after her marriage to another man —39 When that man40 cohabited with her, he caused her to be prohibited to the other,41 and when the other41 cohabited with her42 he caused her to be prohibited to the former.43 [But, it may be argued,] remarrying one's divorced wife after her marriage to another man is different44 since her body45 was defiled and she is46 prohibited for all time!47 — Rather, said Resh Lakish, [it means] a yebamah.48

A yebamah with whom?49 If it be suggested: With a stranger,50 [the ruling] being in accordance with R. Hammuna who ruled51 that a woman awaiting the decision of the levir who played the harlot is forbidden to the levir,52 [it may be objected that] a yebamah is different,44 since her body was defiled and she is prohibited to the majority of men.53 If, however, [it be suggested that it refers54 to] a yebamah in relation to [her deceased husband's] brothers: Where one [brother, for instance] addressed to her a ma'amar he caused her to be prohibited to the other,55 and when the other cohabited with her he caused her to be prohibited to the former.56 [But in this case] what point is there, [it may be retorted, in stating] that the second cohabited with her,58 [when the same law is applicable] even where he59 only addressed to her a ma'amar60 — This is no difficulty; [a ma'amar could not be postulated], in accordance with R. Gamaliel who ruled: There is no validity in a ma'amar that was addressed after a previous ma'amar.61 But [still the objection is that the same law is applicable] even if he59 gave her a letter of divorce and even if he submitted to her halizah! — Rather, said R. Johanan, [it means] a sotah.62

A sotah, with whom?53 If it be suggested: With her husband who, if he cohabited with her,64 caused her to be prohibited to her seducer,65 what point is there, [it may be objected, in stating] that he cohabited with her? Even if he66 only gave her a letter of divorce and even if he only said, ‘I am not allowing her to drink’,67 [the same law is applicable].68 [If it be suggested] however: The sotah with the seducer;69 is this70 [it may be objected] a ‘lighter prohibition’? It is surely a grave prohibition, since she is a married woman!

(1) As is the case in our Mishnah.
(2) A wife whose husband has had connubial intercourse with her sister.
(3) To her husband, in accordance with Pentateuchal law.
(4) And a man lie with her, Num. V, 13.
(5) Of a stranger.
(6) Of her husband.
(7) This, as will be explained infra, refers to a married woman, intercourse with whom is regarded as a comparatively lighter prohibition than that of a wife's sister (v. p. 644, n. 5), since it may at any time be raised by means of a letter of divorce severing the relationship between the husband and the wife.
(8) The husband.
(9) The husband causes the prohibition of his wife to all men. It is owing to his marriage with her that she is forbidden to marry any other man.
(10) One must not retain a faithless wife.
(11) I.e., the wife who caused the prohibition of her sister to her husband.
(12) His wife's sister.
(13) Since his wife causes her sister to be forbidden to him during the whole of her lifetime. Hence It was necessary to have a Scriptural text to shew that the law is not so.
(14) Lit., ‘did not dispute’.
(15) That cohabitation with his wife's sister does not render his wife unfit to live with him.
(16) Lit., ‘because’.
(17) The husband, before he married his wife.
(18) The wife, before she married her husband.
(19) V. supra n. 7.
(20) Her husband.
(21) By marrying her.
(22) If, for instance, she was outraged.
(23) Her husband.
(24) Her husband. Cf. supra 56b.
(25) His wife.
(26) By marrying him.
(27) His wife's sister.
(28) ‘To him’ in cur. edd. is deleted with Bah.
(29) V. supra p. 644, n. 7.
(31) Of a stranger.
(32) To her husband.
(33) Of her husband.
(34) For maintaining that both Beth Shammai and Beth Hillel agree that a man's cohabitation with his mother-in-law causes his wife to be prohibited to him.
(36) His first wife, surely, who was lawfully married, should not suffer because her husband bad subsequently contracted an unlawful marriage!
(37) V. supra note 13.
(38) Spoken of supra.
(39) Which is a ‘lighter prohibition’. being only a prohibitory law which involves no kareth. V. infra p. 646, n. I.
(40) Her second husband.
(41) Her first husband.
(42) After her second husband had divorced her.
(43) V. supra p. 645, n. 18, the prohibition being due to the prohibitory law in Deut. XXIV, 4. Thus the second husband ‘who caused the prohibition of his wife is thereby himself forbidden to her’.
(44) From a marriage with one's wife's sister.
(45) That of the divorced woman.
(46) Cur. edd., insert, ‘and she is prohibited to the majority’ which (cf. Rashi a.l.) is to be deleted.
(47) To both husbands. A wife's sister, however, is forbidden only during the lifetime of one's wife but permitted after her death, while furthermore the marriage of a wife's sister does not cause the defilement of the wife's body. The latter case cannot, therefore, be compared to the former. What, then, was meant by the ‘lighter prohibition’?
(48) Marriage with her by a stranger is regarded as a ‘lighter prohibition’.
(49) I.e., with whom did she cohabit that her act should have the result that he ‘who caused the prohibition is thereby himself forbidden to her’?
(50) The prohibition to marry whom, before she had performed the halizah, is only a prohibitory law involving no kareth.
(51) Supra 81a, 92b, Cit. 80b, Sot. 18b.
(52) Thus the levir ‘who caused the prohibition’ of his sister-in-law to others is ‘himself forbidden to her’ by the cohabitation of the stranger.
(53) I.e., to everybody except the levir or levirs. A wife's sister, however, is forbidden to him (her sister's husband) alone, and his wife's body is not defiled by his marriage with her sister. The two cases, therefore, cannot be compared.
(54) Cf. supra note 6.
(55) Brother, this being regarded as a ‘lighter prohibition’, since it is due to a Rabbinic measure only.
(56) Cf. supra note so, mutatis mutandis.
(57) Supra.
(58) I.e., that be prohibits her to the first only because he cohabited with her.
The second brother.

He should still thereby prohibit her to the first brother, in view of the ruling supra 50a that a ma'amur is effective after a ma'amur.

Supra 50a.

V. Glos. Cohabitation with a sotah is regarded as the ‘lighter prohibition’.

V. supra p. 646, n. 7.

After she had been warned by him against intimacy with a stranger, and after she had met that stranger privately, when all connubial intercourse between the woman and her husband is forbidden.

Even after his own death or after he had divorced her. Thus, the seducer ‘who caused the prohibition’ of the woman to her husband becomes ‘himself forbidden’ to her for all time.

Her husband.

She becomes forbidden to the seducer for all time. Cf. supra n’ 7.

By his cohabitation the woman becomes prohibited to her husband who was the cause of her prohibition to others.

Cohabitation with a married woman.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 95b

— Rather, said Raba, it means a married woman. Similarly when Rabin came¹ he stated in the name of R. Johanan: A married woman. But why should this² be described as ‘a lighter prohibition’? — Because [her husband] who causes her to be prohibited [to other men] does not cause her to be so prohibited during the whole of his lifetime.³

If⁴ it was taught likewise: Abba Hanan stated in the name of R. Eleazar: [It means] a married man. [And the argument runs thus:] If where a man cohabits with [a woman forbidden by] a lighter prohibition,⁵ in which case he⁶ who caused the prohibition of her does not cause her to be prohibited during the whole of his lifetime,⁷ [it is nevertheless ruled] that the very person who causes the prohibition becomes prohibited,⁸ then, in a case of cohabiting with [one forbidden] by a graver prohibition,⁹ where the person, who causes the prohibition of her,¹⁰ prohibits her during the whole of her lifetime,¹¹ how much more should we rule that the very person who causes the prohibition should become prohibited;¹² hence it was expressly stated, With her,¹³ only cohabitation¹⁴ with her¹⁵ causes her to be prohibited¹⁶ but cohabitation¹⁷ with her sister does not cause her¹⁸ to be prohibited.¹⁹

R. JOSE STATED: WHOSOEVER DISQUALIFIES etc. What does R. Jose mean?²⁰ If it be suggested that while the first Tanna implied that ‘Where a man's wife and his brother-in-law²¹ went to a country beyond the sea,²² the wife of his brother-in-law is forbidden,²³ though his own wife is permitted’,²⁴ R. Jose said to him, ‘As his own wife is permitted²⁵ so is the wife of his brother-in-law also permitted’;²⁶ if so, [it may be objected, why the expression] WHOSOEVER DOES NOT DISQUALIFY FOR OTHERS DOES NOT DISQUALIFY FOR HIMSELF²⁷ where it should have been. ‘Whosoever does not disqualify²⁸ for himself, does not disqualify for others’!²⁹

If, however, [it be suggested that R. Jose implied]. ‘As the wife of his brother-in-law is forbidden,²⁸ so is his wife also forbidden’,²⁹ [the expression.] WHOSOEVER DISQUALIFIES would be satisfactorily explained; what, however, would be the purport of WHOSOEVER DOES NOT DISQUALIFY FOR OTHERS?³⁰ — R. Ammi replied: [He refers] to an earlier clause:³¹ ‘If she married with the authorization of the Beth din, she must leave, but is exempt from an offering. If she married, however, without the authorization of the Beth din, she must leave and is also liable to an offering, the authorization of the Beth din is thus more effective in that it exempts her from the offering.³² Concerning this, the first Tanna stated [that his wife may return to him]³³ irrespective of whether [the marriage took place] on the evidence of two witnesses,³⁴ where the wife of his brother-in-law is permitted,³⁵ or whether [it took place] in accordance with a decision of the Beth din,³⁶ where the wife of his brother-in-law is forbidden', and to this R. Jose replied. ‘[If the marriage took place] in accordance with a decision of the Beth din, where he DISQUALIFIES FOR OTHERS he DISQUALIFIES FOR HIMSELF; [if, however, it took place] on the basis of the evidence of two witnesses, where he DOES NOT DISQUALIFY FOR OTHERS he DOES NOT DISQUALIFY FOR HIMSELF.

R. Isaac Nappaha replied: [R. Jose may], in fact, refer to the latter clause, one of his rulings applying] where the persons who had gone were the man's wife and his brother-in-law, and the other [applying] where his betrothed and brother-in-law had gone. The first Tanna having ruled that ‘irrespective of whether it was his wife and his brother-in-law or whether it was his betrothed and his brother-in-law, the wife of his brother-in-law is forbidden while his wife is permitted,’ R. Jose said to him, ‘In the case of his wife and brother-in-law where no one would assume that he had attached some condition to his marriage and where consequently he does not cause [his sister-in-law] to be prohibited to the other, he does not cause [his first wife] to be prohibited to him either; in the case of his betrothed and his brother-in-law, however, where someone might assume that he had attached some condition to his betrothal and where, in consequence, he causes [his sister-in-law] to be prohibited to the other, he causes [his first wife] also to be prohibited to him.

Rab Judah Stated in the name of Samuel: The halachah is in agreement with R. Jose.

R. Joseph demurred: Could Samuel have said this? Surely it was stated: A yebamah, Rab said, has the status of a married woman; and Samuel said: She has not the status of a married woman. And R. Huna said: Where, for instance, a man's brother betrothed a woman and then went to a country beyond the sea, and he, on hearing that his brother was dead, married his wife. [It is in such a case] that Rab ruled that ‘she has the status of a married woman’ and is consequently forbidden to the brother-in-law; and Samuel ruled that ‘she has not the status of a married woman’ and is, therefore, permitted to him! Said Abaye to him: Whence [do you infer] that when Samuel stated that ‘the halachah is in agreement with R. Jose’, he was referring to R. Isaac Nappaha's interpretation? Is it not possible that he was referring to that of R. Ammi! And even if he refers to that of R. Isaac Nappaha, whence the proof that [he referred to the ruling] ‘DISQUALIFIED’?

(1) From Palestine to Babylon.
(2) Illicit intercourse with a married woman.
(3) As soon as be divorces her she is free again. A prohibition of this nature, which may terminate at any time, is regarded as ‘lighter’ than the prohibition of a man's wife's sister, which remains in force throughout the whole of the lifetime of his wife.
(4) The lighter prohibition referred to.
(5) A married woman. The prohibition is considered light for the reason that follows.
(6) The husband.
(7) The prohibition of a married woman terminates with divorce by her husband.
(8) The woman becomes forbidden to her own husband through illicit intercourse.
(9) His wife's sister.
(10) I.e., the wife who causes her sister to be prohibited to her husband.
(11) The prohibition [If a man's wife's sister remains in force throughout the whole of the lifetime of his wife.
(12) To her own husband.
(14) Of a stranger.
(15) His wife.
(16) To her husband.
(17) Of her husband.
(18) The wife.
(19) His statement seems to have no apparent connection with the preceding clause.
(20) His wife's sister's husband.
(21) And they both returned after he had married his wife's sister on the strength of the evidence of one witness who testified that they were both dead.
(22) To her husband, his brother-in-law.
(23) To him.
(24) Cases about which R. Jose, according to this suggestion, did not speak.
(25) His own wife.
(26) His wife's sister to her husband. These last mentioned cases being those of which R. Jose presumably spoke.
(27) To her husband, his brother-in-law.
(28) To him.
(29) R. Jose.
(30) In a previous Mishnah.
(31) V. supra 87b.
(32) V. our Mishnah, first clause.
(33) Of the husband (whose wife had gone away) with his wife's sister (whose husband also had gone away).
(34) Who testified that both his wife and brother-in-law were dead.
(35) To her husband, if he returned.
(36) On the evidence of one witness. V. supra n. 11.
(37) He causes his wife's sister to be forbidden to return to her husband owing to his illicit marriage with her.
(38) His first wife is forbidden to him also.
(39) His wife's sister being in this case permitted to her husband.
(40) And his first wife may return to him.
(41) I.e., our Mishnah which speaks of a marriage permitted on the evidence of one witness.
(42) Lit., ‘that’. Cur. edd. insert in parenthesis ‘that, where he married the wife of his brother-in-law; and that, where he married the betrothed of his brother-in-law.’
(43) This is the reading of Rashi (a.l. s.v. 271). Cur. edd., transpose ‘wife’ and ‘betrothed’.
(44) To her husband, if he returned.
(45) To him.
(46) With his first wife; since no condition is admissible in a marriage contract. (V., however, supra p. 642, n. 5).
(47) Her husband, his brother-in-law. His own first marriage being known to be valid it should be obvious to all that his subsequent marriage with his sister-in-law was invalid. Were it even assumed that his brother-in-law had divorced her, the invalidity of his marriage with his sister-in-law would not thereby be affected since even after her divorce she still remains forbidden to him as his wife's sister. This being the case no one will suspect his brother-in-law when his wife returns to him of having remarried his divorcee. Hence R. Jose’s ruling that she is not forbidden to her husband.
(48) Which, on non-fulfilment, had rendered the betrothal invalid and thus enabled him lawfully to contract his subsequent marriage; his presumed sister-in-law being to him (owing to the invalidity of her sister's betrothal) no more than a mere stranger.
(49) Her former husband. Were she permitted to return to him it might be assumed that he had divorced her prior to her marriage with her brother-in-law and that the latter had now divorced her; and so it would be concluded that (contrary to Deut. XXIV, 4) a man married again the woman he had once divorced though she had in the meantime been married to another man.
(50) Lit., ‘thus’, that the halachah is in agreement with the full statement of R. Jose, including the part relating to the marriage with the sister of one's betrothed, it being necessary in case of betrothal to provide against the erroneous assumption that the betrothal was invalid and that consequently a man's divorcee had been married again by him. Cf. p. 650, nn. 8 and 9.
(51) This is explained anon.
(52) Had he married her there would have been no question that she may return to him. Cf. supra p. 650, n. 7.
(53) The brother at home.
(54) I.e., to the man who first betrothed her and then left her and now returned, and who, owing to his brother's marriage with her, has become her brother-in-law. Were she to be permitted to return to him it might be assumed that his original betrothal was invalid owing to some disqualifying condition, that his brother's marriage was, therefore, valid, and that he now married his brother's wife.
Because, in the opinion of Samuel, no provision need be made against the erroneous assumption that the betrothal was invalid (cf. supra n. 5). How, then, could it be said that Samuel adopted the complete statement of R. Jose.

So that the question of the assumption of a disqualifying condition in a betrothal would not at all arise.

The case of one's betrothed and brother-in-law.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 96a

Is it not possible [that he referred] to the ruling ‘DOES NOT DISQUALIFY’! Or else [it might be argued], whence is it proved that R. Huna's explanation is tenable? Is it not possible that R. Huna's explanation is altogether untenable and that they differ on the ruling of R. Hammuna who stated that ‘A woman awaiting the decision of the levir, who played the harlot, is forbidden to her levir’; Rab maintaining that she ‘has the status of a married woman’ and is consequently prohibited by reason of her immoral act, while Samuel maintains that ‘she has not the status of a married woman’ and does not therefore, become prohibited by reason of her immoral act? Or else [it might be replied] that they differ on the question whether betrothal of a sister-in-law is valid, Rab maintaining that she ‘has the status of a married woman’ and betrothal with her is, in consequence, invalid, while Samuel maintains that ‘she has not the status of a married woman’ and betrothal with her is, therefore, valid. But on this question they had already disputed once! — The one was stated as an inference from the other.

MISHNAH. IF A MAN WAS TOLD ‘YOUR WIFE IS DEAD AND HE MARRIED HER PATERNAL SISTER’; [AND WHEN HE WAS TOLD] ‘SHE ALSO IS DEAD’, HE MARRIED HER MATERNAL SISTER; SHE TOO IS DEAD, AND HE MARRIED HER PATERNAL SISTER; SHE ALSO IS DEAD, AND HE MARRIED HER MATERNAL SISTER; LATER IT WAS FOUND THAT THEY WERE ALL ALIVE, HE IS PERMITTED TO LIVE WITH THE FIRST, THIRD AND FIFTH, WHO ALSO EXEMPT THEIR RIVALS; BUT HE IS FORBIDDEN TO LIVE WITH THE SECOND OR THE FOURTH, AND COHABITATION WITH ONE OF THESE DOES NOT EXEMPT HER RIVAL. IF, HOWEVER, HE COHABITED WITH THE SECOND AFTER THE DEATH OF THE FIRST, HE IS PERMITTED TO LIVE WITH THE SECOND AND FOURTH, WHO ALSO EXEMPT THEIR RIVALS; BUT HE IS FORBIDDEN TO LIVE WITH THE THIRD AND WITH THE FIFTH, AND COHABITATION WITH ONE OF THESE DOES NOT EXEMPT HER RIVAL.

A BOY OF THE AGE OF NINE YEARS AND ONE DAY RENDERS [HIS SISTER-IN-LAW] UNFIT [FOR MARRIAGE] WITH HIS BROTHERS, AND HIS BROTHERS RENDER HER UNFIT FOR HIM, BUT WHILE HE RENDERS HER UNFIT FROM THE OUTSET ONLY, THE BROTHERS RENDER HER UNFIT BOTH FROM THE OUTSET AND AT THE END. IN WHAT MANNER? A BOY OF THE AGE OF NINE YEARS AND ONE DAY WHO COHABITED WITH HIS SISTER-IN-LAW RENDERS HER UNFIT [FOR MARRIAGE] WITH HIS BROTHERS; THE BROTHERS, HOWEVER, RENDER HER UNFIT FOR HIM WHETHER THEY COHABITED WITH HER, ADDRESSED TO HER A MA'AMAR, GAVE HER A LETTER OF DIVORCE OR SUBMITTED TO HER HALIZAH.

GEMARA. Did not all those [marriages take place] after the death of the first wife! — R. Shesheth replied: [By this was meant]. AFTER THE ASCERTAINED DEATH OF THE FIRST WIFE.

A BOY OF THE AGE OF NINE YEARS etc. Does a boy of the age of nine years and one day cause unfitness [only where his act took place] at the outset, but if at the end he causes no unfitness? Surely R. Zebid son of R. Oshaia learnt: If [a brother] addressed a ma'amar to his sister-in-law, his brother of the age of nine years and one day, cohabiting with her afterwards, causes her to be unfit [for marriage with him]! — It may be replied: Cohabitation causes unfitness even [if it took place] at the end, while a ma'amur causes unfitness [only if it was addressed] at the outset, but if at the end, it causes no unfitness. But does cohabitation cause unfitness even [if it took place] at the end? Surely it was taught: BUT WHILE HE RENDERS HER UNFIT FROM THE OUTSET ONLY, THEY [RENDER HER UNFIT] BOTH FROM THE OUTSET AND AT THE END. IN WHAT MANNER? A BOY OF THE AGE OF NINE YEARS AND ONE DAY WHO COHABITED WITH HIS SISTER-IN-LAW etc! — Something, indeed, is here missing, and this is the proper reading: ‘A BOY OF THE AGE OF NINE YEARS AND ONE DAY RENDERS [HIS SISTER-IN-LAW] UNFIT [FOR MARRIAGE WITH HIS BROTHERS, if his action took place] AT THE OUTSET, but they RENDER HER UNFIT FOR HIM BOTH AT THE OUTSET AND AT THE END. This is applicable only in the case of a ma'amur, but cohabitation causes unfitness even [if it took place] at the end. IN WHAT MANNER? A BOY OF THE AGE OF NINE YEARS AND ONE DAY WHO COHABITED WITH HIS SISTER-IN-LAW RENDERS HER UNFIT FOR MARRIAGE WITH HIS BROTHERS.

His his ma'amur, however, any validity at all? Surely it was taught: A boy of the age of nine years and one day renders his sister-in-law unfit for his brothers by one kind of act only, while the brothers render her unfit for him by four kinds of acts. He renders her unfit for the brothers by cohabitation, while the brothers render her unfit for him by cohabitation, by a ma'amur, by a letter of divorce and by halizah. — Cohabitation, which causes unfitness both from the outset and at the end, presented to him a definite law, [the law of the] ma'amur, however, which causes unfitness front the outset only but not at the end, could not be regarded by him as definite.

So it was also stated: Rab Judah said in the name of Samuel: He has [the power to give] a letter of divorce. And so said R. Tahlifa b. Abimi: He has [the power to address] a ma'amur.

It was taught likewise: He has [the right to give] a letter of divorce and he has [the right to address] a ma'amur; so R. Meir.

Could R. Meir, however, hold the view [that such a boy] has [the power to give] a letter of divorce? Surely it was taught: Cohabitation with a boy of the age of nine years and one day was given the same validity as that of a ma'amur by an adult; and R. Meir said: The halizah of a boy of the age of nine years was given the same validity as that of a letter of divorce by an adult. Now, if that were so, it should have been stated, ‘As that of his own letter of divorce’! — R. Huna son of R. Joshua replied: He has [the right], but [his divorce is of a] lesser validity. For according to R. Gamaliel who ruled that there is no [validity in a] letter of divorce after another letter of divorce, his ruling is applicable only [in the case of a divorce] by an adult after that of an adult, or one by a minor after that of a minor, but [a divorce] by an adult after that of a minor is effective, while according to the Rabbis who ruled that a letter of divorce given after another letter of divorce is valid, the ruling applies only to [a divorce] by adult after that of an adult, or one by a minor after that of a minor, but [a divorce by] a minor after [that of] an adult is not effective.

(1) The case of one's wife and brother-in-law--; Samuel indicating that in this case, and in this case alone, the halachah is in agreement with R. Jose that the sister-in-law is permitted to her first husband contrary to the view of the first Tanna who forbids her.
(2) Supra 95b.
(3) Rab and Samuel.
(4) Cit. 80b, Sot 18b, supra 95a.
(5) To the levir.
(6) As a married woman is prohibited to her husband if she has committed such an act.
(7) To a stranger before she had performed halizah.
(9) Supra 92b. Why should they dispute the same point twice.
(10) By disciples. Rab and Samuel, however disputed the point only once.
(11) His second wife.
(12) Who was thus a perfect stranger to the first wife.
(13) His third wife.
(14) A perfect stranger to the second.
(15) The fourth.
(16) A stranger to the third.
(17) Since his marriage with her was valid.
(18) Who was a complete stranger to him when he married her (V. supra p. 652. n. 12). His previous marriage with her maternal sister (his second wife) had no validity because the latter was a sister of his first wife and was forbidden to him as ‘his wife's sister’.
(19) Marriage with whom was valid since the marriage with her sister (the fourth) was invalid. Cf. supra n. 2, mutatis mutandis.
(20) If the man died without issue and one of his surviving brothers contracted the levirate marriage with or submitted to halizah from one of these widows.
(21) The validity of his marriage wife the first and third causes the second and the fourth to be prohibited to him as his wives’ respective sisters. Cf. supra note 2.
(22) By one of the levirs. Cf. supra note 4.
(23) The husband.
(24) I.e., it was proved that the first report of her death was true (Rashi).
(25) The death of the first wife has removed from the second the prohibition of wife's sister (since a wife's sister is prohibited only during the lifetime of the wife) marriage with whom becomes valid.
(26) The marriage with the second having become valid (v. supra n. 9), that with the third (being now the man's wife's sister) becomes invalid and, consequently, the marriage with the fourth who is now a perfect stranger becomes valid.
(27) V. supra note 4.
(28) Cf. previous notes, mutatis mutandis.
(29) This will be explained in the Gemara infra.
(30) That were enumerated in the first clause of our Mishnah.
(31) Why then was ‘AFTER THE DEATH OF THE FIRST’ mentioned only in the second clause in the case where HE COHABITED WITH THE SECOND?
(32) V. supra n. 2.
(33) In the other cases death was only reported.
(34) Of his sister-in-law for his brothers.
(35) Before any of the adult brothers had addressed a ma'amari to the widow.
(36) After an elder brother had addressed to her a ma'amari.
(37) Of a deceased husband who died without issue.
(38) Which shows that a boy of this age may cause unfitness even ‘at the end’.
(39) On the part of the boy of the age of nine years and one day.
(40) Emphasis on COHABITED. Since the illustration is limited to an act of cohabitation only the general statement that the boy RENDERS HER UNFIT FROM THE OUTSET ONLY, on which the illustration apparently hangs must also be limited to cohabitation.
(41) On the part of the boy of the age of nine years and one day.
(42) Even at the end, i.e., after his brothers had addressed to her a ma'amari.
(43) Lit., ‘has he a ma'amari’?
(44) Cur. edd. insert ‘for the brothers’, which, with MS.M. and Pesaro ed. 1509, should be omitted. V. infra n. 5.
(45) The last three words are wanting in cur. edd., but are rightly included in the Pesaro ed. V. supra n. 4.
(46) And by no other act.
(47) How then could it be said that the boy's ma'amari has any validity at all.
(48) הָקִים rt. פִּסָּה ‘to cut’, ‘to decide’, i.e., the law relating to cohabitation is definite and absolute. The act is always valid. Hence he mentioned it.
(49) And being undesirous of entering into details of the law he preferred to omit it.
A boy of the age of nine years and one day.

His act is effective and causes his sister-in-law to be unfit for marriage to his brothers.

Cf. Nid. 45a, supra 68a.

That according to R. Meir the letter of divorce of a boy of the age of nine years and one day is valid.

A boy the age of nine years and one day.

To give a letter of divorce. V. supra p. 655. n. 11.

Lit., ‘and small’. Hence no comparison could be made between his halizah which is as valid as that of a divorce by an adult, and his own divorce which is not so valid.

Since the divorce of the minor is of lesser validity.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 96b

MISHNAH. IF A BOY OF THE AGE OF NINE YEARS AND ONE DAY COHABITED WITH HIS SISTER-IN-LAW

AND THEN HIS BROTHER WHO WAS OF THE AGE OF NINE YEARS AND ONE DAY COHABITED WITH HER, [THE LATTER] RENDERS HER UNFIT FOR MARRIAGE WITH THE FORMER.

R. SIMEON SAID: HE DOES NOT RENDER HER UNFIT.

R. SIMEON SAID: HE DOES NOT RENDER [THEM] UNFIT.

GEMARA. It was taught: R. Simeon said to the Sages, ‘If the first cohabitation was a valid act, the second cohabitation cannot have any validity; if, the first cohabitation, however, has no validity, the second cohabitation also should have no validity’. Our Mishnah cannot represent the view of Ben ‘Azzai; for it was taught: Ben ‘Azzai stated, ‘A ma’amar is valid after another ma’amar where it concerns two levirs and one sister-in-law, but no ma'amar is valid after a ma'amar where it concerns two sisters-inlaw and one levir.’

MISHNAH. IF A BOY OF THE AGE OF NINE YEARS AND ONE DAY COHABITED WITH HIS SISTER-IN-LAW AND THEN DIED, SHE MUST PERFORM HALIZAH BUT MAY NOT CONTRACT THE LEVIRATE MARRIAGE.

IF HE HAD MARRIED [ANY OTHER] WOMAN AND SUBSEQUENTLY DIED, SHE IS EXEMPT [FROM BOTH].

GEMARA. Raba stated: With reference to the statement of the Rabbis that in the case of the levirate bond originating from two levirs the sister-in-law must perform halizah only but may not contract levirate marriage, it must not be assumed that this is applicable only where there is a rival, because [in that case] a preventive measure was necessary on account of the rival; for here there is no rival and yet the sister-in-law must perform halizah only but may not contract the levirate marriage.
IF HE HAD MARRIED [ANY OTHER] WOMAN AND SUBSEQUENTLY DIED etc. Here\textsuperscript{27} we learned what the Rabbis taught: If an imbecile or a minor married and then died, their wives are exempt from halizah and from the levirate marriage.\textsuperscript{29}

A BOY OF THE AGE OF NINE YEARS etc. AND AFTER HE HAD COME OF AGE etc. Let the cohabitation of the boy of nine\textsuperscript{27} be given the same validity as that of a ma'amhar by an adult,\textsuperscript{30} and so let the rival [here]\textsuperscript{27} be debarred from the levirate marriage\textsuperscript{134} — Now said Rab: The cohabitation of a boy of nine was not given the same validity as that of a ma'amhar by an adult. Samuel, however, said: It was certainly given the same validity:\textsuperscript{32} and so said R. Johanan: It certainly was given the same validity. Then\textsuperscript{33} let the same validity be given here also!\textsuperscript{34} — This [question is a matter of dispute between] Tannaim. That Tanna [whose ruling is contained in the chapter] of the ‘Four Brothers’\textsuperscript{35} enacted a preventive measure on account of the rival;\textsuperscript{36} and though he stated the law in respect of an adult the same law is applicable to a minor, the reason why he mentioned the adult being only because he was engaged on the question of\textsuperscript{37} the adult. The Tanna here\textsuperscript{38} however, is of the opinion that they\textsuperscript{39} were given the same validity,\textsuperscript{40} and he enacted no preventive measure on account of the rival; and though he spoke of the minor the same law applies to an adult, the reason why he spoke of the minor being only because he was dealing with the minor.\textsuperscript{37}

R. Eleazar came and reported this statement at the schoolhouse but did not report it in the name of R. Johanan. When R. Johanan heard this he was annoyed.\textsuperscript{41} Thereupon R. Ammi and R. Assi came in and said to him: Did it not happen at the Synagogue of Tiberias that R. Eleazar and R. Jose disputed [so hotly] concerning a door bolt which had a knob\textsuperscript{42} at one end\textsuperscript{43} that they tore a Scroll of the Law in their excitement. ‘They tore?’\textsuperscript{44} Could this be imagined! Say rather ‘That a Scroll of the Law was torn\textsuperscript{45} in their excitement’. R. Jose b. Kisma who was then present exclaimed, ‘I shall be surprised if this Synagogue\textsuperscript{46} is not turned into a house of idolatry’, and so it happened. [On hearing this] he was annoyed all the more. ‘Comradeship too’ he exclaimed.\textsuperscript{47}

Thereupon R. Jacob b. Idi came in and said to him: ‘As the Lord commanded Moses his servant, so did Moses command Joshua, and so did Joshua; he left nothing undone of all that the Lord commanded Moses;\textsuperscript{48} did Joshua, then, concerning every word which he said, tell them, “Thus did Moses tell me”? But, the fact is that Joshua was sitting and delivering his discourse without mentioning names, and all knew that it was the Torah of Moses. So did your disciple R. Eleazar sit and deliver his discourse without mentioning names and all knew that it was yours’. ‘Why’, he\textsuperscript{49} chided them,\textsuperscript{50} are you not capable of conciliating like the son of Idi our friend?’

Why was R. Johanan so annoyed? — [For the following reason]. For Rab Judah stated in the name of Rab: What is the meaning of the Scriptural text, I will dwell in Thy tent for ever?\textsuperscript{51} Is it possible for a man to dwell in two worlds! But [in fact it is this that] David said to the Holy One, blessed be He, ‘Lord of the Universe, May it be Thy will \textsuperscript{(1)} The widow of his brother who died without issue.

\textsuperscript{(2)} For the levirate marriage.
\textsuperscript{(3)} Because, as in the case of a ma'amhar after a ma'amhar, the act of either levir is valid and, as no two levirs may marry the same sister-in-law, the latter must divorce her; and a sister-in-law divorced by one of the levirs may never again be married by any of them.
\textsuperscript{(4)} His reason is given in the Gemara, infra.
\textsuperscript{(5)} The widow of his brother who died without issue.
\textsuperscript{(6)} Since levirate marriage may be contracted with one sister-in-law only. The first cohabitation constituting an imperfect kinyan, the second is effective to the extent of necessitating a divorce, and with a sister-in-law that was divorced by a levir, none of the levirs may subsequently contract levirate marriage. Cf. supra p. 656, n. 9.
\textsuperscript{(7)} His reason is given in the Gemara, infra.
(8) Of the first young levir.
(9) Constituting a kinyan of the sister-in-law.
(10) That of the second young levir.
(11) Since there is no validity in an act of cohabitation that follows an act of cohabitation (v. supra 50a), the second act is regarded as irregular intercourse with a stranger; and since it was committed unwittingly, the woman remains permitted to the first levir.
(12) Owing to the levir's tender age.
(13) V. supra n. 8 and cf. supra 51b.
(14) Which regards the cohabitation of a young levir as having the same validity as a ma'amir (cf. supra p. 656, n. 9), and yet rules that an act of cohabitation after another act of cohabitation is legally effective whether in the case of two levirs and one sister-in-law (first case) or two sisters-in-law and one levir (second case).
(15) The one as well as the other having addressed to the widow one ma'amir only.
(16) Because each levir (v. supra 51a) has equally the power to address such a ma'amir.
(17) The second ma'amir having no validity owing to the first ma'amir which had completely effected the kinyan of the first sister-in-law; and no levir is permitted to contract levirate marriage with more than one of the widows of his deceased childless brother.
(18) The widow of his brother who died childless.
(19) The act of the minor, while it is valid enough to subject his sister-in-law to the levirate bond of his surviving brothers, does not sever the first levirate bond which is due to her union with the first deceased brother. Being now subject to the levirate bond originating from two levirs, she is deprived (cf. supra 31b) of her right to the levirate marriage, and must perform halizah only.
(20) Levirate marriage and halizah. The betrothal of a minor having no validity, the woman is not regarded as his wife in respect of the levirate. It is only in the case of a sister-in-law (v. supra n. 2) that his cohabitation is valid enough to subject the woman to the levirate bond.
(21) Because, as the minor did not cohabit with her since he became of age, she remained subject to the levirate bond originating from two levirs (cf. supra note 2).
(22) Being the deceased's lawful wife.
(23) R. Simeon does not admit the ineligibility for levirate marriage of a sister-in-law who is subject to the levirate bond originating from two levirs, V. supra 31b.
(24) Since they cannot be regarded as rivals, the marriage of the one does not exempt the other. Both, however, may not be taken in levirate marriage, as a preventive measure against erroneous comparisons with two sisters-in-law who were lawfully married.
(25) The marks of maturity. So long as these have not appeared he retains the legal status of a minor.
(26) V. supra 31b and cf. supra p. 658, n. 7 end.
(27) In our Mishnah.
(28) Cf. supra p. 658, n. 2.
(29) Supra 69b, infra 112b. A minor and an imbecile have the same legal status, and our Mishnah, speaking of the minor confirms this ruling.
(30) Which (as stated supra 31b) debars the rival of the widow to whom the [ma'amir had been addressed, from the levirate marriage, though the rival's marriage with the deceased was in every respect a lawful union.
(31) Why then was it stated that THE SECOND MAY EITHER PERFORM HALIZAH OR CONTRACT THE LEVIRATE MARRIAGE?
(32) Lit., ‘they made and they made’.
(33) According to Samuel and R. Johanan.
(34) Lit., ‘and let them make’. Cf. supra n. 6.
(35) The chapter which contains the Mishnah referred to is named after the first two words with which it begins. V. supra 260.
(36) Cf. supra 31b.
(37) Lit., ‘stood’.
(38) In our Mishnah.
(39) The cohabitation of a minor and the ma'amir of an adult.
(40) Lit., ‘they made’.
Perhaps because R. Eleazar did not act in accordance with Aboth VI, 6, ‘Whosoever reports a thing in the name of him who said it brings deliverance into the world’. V., however, the Gemara’s explanation infra.

Or, ‘a fastening contrivance’ (Jast.).

R. Eleazar forbids its use on the Sabbath because it cannot be regarded as a ‘vessel’ and is consequently forbidden to be moved from its place; while R. that a traditional statement may be reported in my name in this world’; for R. Johanan stated in the name of R. Simeon b. Yohai: The lips of a [deceased] scholar, in whose name a traditional statement is reported in this world, move gently in the grave. Said R. Isaac b. Ze'ira, or it might be said, Simeon the Nazirite: What is the Scriptural proof of this? And the roof of thy mouth like the best wine that glideth down smoothly for my beloved, moving gently the lips of those who are asleep, like a heated mass of grapes. As a heated mass of grapes, as soon as a man places his finger upon it, exudes immediately so with the scholars as soon as a traditional statement is made in their name in this world, their lips move gently in the grave.

WHETHER HE IS OF THE AGE OF NINE YEARS etc. A contradiction was pointed out: If at the age of twenty he did not produce two [pubic] hairs, they must bring evidence that he is twenty years of age, and he [is then confirmed as a] saris; he may neither submit to halizah nor may he perform the levirate marriage. If a woman at the age of twenty did not produce two [pubic] hairs, they must bring evidence that she is twenty years of age, and she [is then confirmed as a] woman who is incapable of procreation; she may neither perform halizah nor contract levirate marriage. — Surely in connection with this Mishnah it was stated: R. Samuel b. Isaac said in the name of Rab that this applies only to the case where [other] symptoms of a saris also appeared on him.

Said Raba: This may also be arrived at by deduction. For it was taught, ‘And he [is confirmed as a] saris’, from which this may well be deduced.

And where no symptoms of a saris developed, how long [is one regarded as a minor]? — It was taught at the school of R. Hiyya: Until he has passed middle age.

Whenever people came [with such a case] before Raba, he used to tell them, if [the youth was] emaciated, ‘Let him first be fattened’; and if he was stout, he used to tell them, ‘Let him first be made to lose weight’; for these symptoms disappear sometimes as a result of emaciation and sometimes they disappear as a result of stoutness.

CHAPTER XI

MISHNAH. A MAN IS PERMITTED TO MARRY [THE NEAR RELATIVE] OF A WOMAN [WHOM HE HAS] OUTRAGED OR SEDUCED. HE, HOWEVER, WHO OUTRAGED OR SEDUCED [A RELATIVE] OF HIS MARRIED WIFE, IS GUILTY. A MAN MAY MARRY THE WOMAN WHOM HIS FATHER HAS OUTRAGED OR SEDUCED OR THE WOMAN WHOM HIS SON HAS OUTRAGED OR SEDUCED. R. JUDAH FORBIDS [MARRIAGE] WITH THE WOMAN WHOM ONE'S FATHER HAS OUTRAGED OR SEDUCED.

GEMARA. Here we learn what the Rabbis taught: ‘A man who has outraged a woman is permitted to marry her daughter; if, however, he married the woman, he is forbidden to marry her daughter’. A contradiction, however, may be pointed out: A man who is suspected of intercourse with a woman is forbidden to marry her mother, her daughter and her sister! — This [prohibition is only] Rabbinical.

Would it be stated, however, where a Rabbinical prohibition exists, that A MAN IS PERMITTED TO MARRY even from the outset! — Our Mishnah refers only to [a marriage] after [the suspected woman's] death.

Whence is this ruling deduced? — From what the Rabbis taught: In the case of all those [illicit relationships] Scripture used the expression of ‘lying’, but here it made use of the expression of ‘taking’, in order to tell you [that only when intercourse with a woman was in] the manner of ‘taking’ did the Torah forbid [marriage with her relatives].

Said R. Papa to Abaye: If that is so, then in respect of one's sister, concerning whom it is written, And if a man shall take his sister, his father's daughter, or his mother's daughter; is intercourse here also forbidden only [if it is in] the manner of ‘taking’, but permitted [if it is in] the manner of ‘lying’ — The other replied: The word ‘taking’ is used in the Torah without being defined, [so that a text] to which ‘taking’ is applicable, signifies ‘taking’ while one to which only ‘lying’ is applicable, signifies ‘lying’.

Raba stated: [That a man who] outraged a woman is permitted to marry her daughter, is deduced from here: It is written, The nakedness of thy son's daughter, or of thy daughter's daughter, thou shalt not uncover; from which it follows that the daughter of her son and the daughter of her daughter may be uncovered; but it is also written in Scripture, Thou shalt not uncover the nakedness of a woman and her daughter; thou shalt not take her son's daughter, or her daughter's daughter! How then [are these to be reconciled]? The former refers to cases of outrage and the latter to those of marriage. Might not [the application] be reversed? — In respect of forbidden relatives the expression kin is written, and kinship exists only by means of marriage; but no kinship exists by means of outrage.

R. JUDAH FORBIDS MARRIAGE WITH THE WOMAN WHOM ONE'S FATHER HAD OUTRAGED etc. R. Giddal stated in the name of Rab: What is R. Judah's reason? Because it is written, A man shall not take his father's wife, and shall not uncover his father's skirt; the skirt which his father saw he shall not uncover. Whence, however, is it inferred that Scripture speaks of an outraged woman? — From the preceding section of the text where it is written, Then the man that lay with her shall give unto the damsels father fifty shekels of silver. And the Rabbis — If one text had occurred in close proximity to the other your exposition would have been justified; now, however, that it does not occur in close proximity, the text is required for [an exposition] like that of R. Anan. For R. Anan stated in the name of Samuel that the Scriptural text speaks of a woman awaiting the levirate decision of his father; and the meaning of his father's skirt is: He shall not uncover the skirt which is designated for his father.

[This prohibition, however], might be deduced from the fact that she is his aunt — [The text was necessary] to make him guilty of the transgression of two negative commandments. [The prohibition, however] might be inferred from the fact [that the widow as a] sister-in-law [is forbidden] to marry any stranger! — [The text was necessary] to make him guilty of the transgression of three negative commandments. And if you prefer I might say: After [his father's] death.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 97b

‘My father, but not my maternal brother; and he is the husband of my mother and I am the daughter of his wife! — Rami b. Hama said: Such [a relationship is] not [legally possible] according to the ruling of R. Judah in our Mishnah.

‘He whom I carry on my shoulder is my brother and my son and I am his sister’? — This is possible when an idolater cohabited with his daughter.

‘Greetings to you my son; I am the daughter of your sister’? — This is possible where an idolater cohabited with his daughter's daughter.

‘Ye water-drawers, we shall ask you a riddle that defies solution: He whom I carry is my son and I am the daughter of his brother’? — This is possible where an idolater cohabited with the daughter of his son.

‘Woe, woe, for my brother who is my father; he is my husband and the son of my husband; he is the husband of my mother and I am the daughter of his wife; and he provides no food for his orphan brothers, the children of his daughter’? — This is possible when an idolater cohabited with his mother and begot from her a daughter; then he cohabited with that daughter; and then the grandfather cohabited with her and begot from her sons.
‘I and you are brother and sister; I and your father are brother and sister, and I and your mother are sisters’? — This is possible where an idolater cohabited with his mother and from her begot two daughters, and then he cohabited with one of these and begot from her a son. When the sons's mother's sister carries him she addresses him thus.

‘I and you are the children of sisters; I and your father are the children of brothers, and I and your mother are the children of brothers’? — This indeed is possible also in the case of a lawful marriage; where, for instance, Reuben had two daughters, and Simeon came and married one of them, and then came the son of Levi and married the other.

The son of Simeon can thus address the son of the son of Levi.

MISHNAH. THE SONS OF A FEMALE PROSELYTE WHO BECOME PROSELYTES TOGETHER WITH HER NEITHER PARTICIPATE IN HALIZAH NOR CONTRACT LEVIRATE MARRIAGE, EVEN IF THE ONE WAS NOT CONCEIVED IN HOLINESS, BUT WAS BORN IN HOLINESS, AND THE OTHER WAS BOTH CONCEIVED AND BORN IN HOLINESS. SO ALSO [IS THE LAW] WHERE THE SONS OF A BONDWOMAN WERE EMANCIPATED TOGETHER WITH HER.

GEMARA. When the sons of the bondwoman Yudan were emancipated. R. Aha b. Jacob permitted them to marry one another's wives. Said Raba to him: But R. Shesheth forbade [such marriages]. The other replied: He forbade, but I allow.

In respect of proselyte brothers] from the same father and not from the same mother, there is no difference of opinion that this is permitted; [in respect of brothers] from the same mother and not from the same father, there is no difference of opinion that this is forbidden. They differ only [in respect of proselytes whose brotherhood is] both paternal and maternal. He who permits it [does so because children are] ascribed to their father, since they are spoken of as ‘the children of such and such a man’. R. Shesheth, however, [holds that they] are also spoken of as ‘the children of such and such a woman’.

Another reading: R. Aha b. Jacob disputed [the illegality of marriage] even in respect of maternal brothers. And what is his reason? — Because a man who has become a proselyte is like a child newly born.

We learned, THE SONS OF A FEMALE PROSELYTE WHO BECAME PROSELYTES TOGETHER WITH HER NEITHER PARTICIPATE IN HALIZAH NOR CONTRACT THE LEVIRATE MARRIAGE, is not the reason because they are forbidden [to marry a brother's wife] — No; it is because [the widow] is not subject to the law of halizah and levirate marriage. She is permitted, however, to strangers and the brothers also are permitted[to marry her]. But, surely, it was stated EVEN! Now were you to admit that [the brothers] are forbidden, one could well justify the expression of EVEN: EVEN IF THE ONE WAS NOT CONCEIVED IN HOLINESS BUT WAS BORN IN HOLINESS. AND THE OTHER WAS BOTH CONCEIVED AND BORN IN HOLINESS, [so that the two might well be regarded] as [the sons of] two mothers, they are nevertheless forbidden; if you maintain, however, that they are permitted, what [can be the purport of] EVEN? — Even though the birth of both was in holiness, and people might mistake them for Israelites, [the widow] is nevertheless permitted [to marry a stranger].

Others read: Logical reasoning also supports the view that they are permitted since the expression EVEN was used. For, if you grant that they are permitted, it is quite correct to say EVEN: Even though the birth of both was in holiness and people might mistake them for Israelites. They are nevertheless permitted, if, however, you maintain that they are for bidden what [can be the purport of] EVEN! — EVEN IF THE ONE WAS NOT CONCEIVED IN HOLINESS BUT WAS BORN IN HOLINESS, AND THE OTHER WAS BOTH CONCEIVED AND BORN IN HOLINESS [so that they might well be regarded] as [the sons of] two mothers, they are nevertheless forbidden.

Come and hear: Twin brothers who were proselytes, and similarly if they were emancipated slaves, may neither participate in halizah nor contract levirate marriage, nor are they guilty [of a punishable offence] for [marrying] a brother's wife. If however, they were not conceived in holiness but were born in holiness, they neither participate in halizah nor contract levirate marriage but are guilty [of a punishable offence] for [marrying] a brother's wife. If they were both conceived and born in holiness, they are regarded as Israelites in all respects. At all events, it was stated that they are not ‘guilty [of a punishable offence] for [marrying] a brother's wife’; [from which it follows that] no punishable offence is incurred.

(1) This and the following unlikely propositions are merely riddles on the possible complications of consanguinity.
(2) Such a riddle may be put by a daughter who was born as a result of outrage by his father where the son of the man by another wife has subsequently married her mother.
(3) Since, according to R. Judah, marriage is forbidden with a woman one's father had outraged.
(4) V. supra n. 4.
(5) And a son was born from the union. The mother of the child might put such a riddle.
(6) The son born from such a union, since he is the paternal brother of his mother's mother, might be addressed by his mother in the terms of this riddle.
(7) Lit., ‘drawers who draw the bucket’. Men engaged in the irrigation of fields (cf. Rashi and last.); scholars drawing from the fountains of wisdom (cf. Aruk. and Tosaf. s.v.
(8) So Aruk. Cur. edd., ‘let it fall among you’.
(9) The son born from this union is the paternal brother of his mother's father.
(10) The idolater's father.
(11) The daughter.
(12) The daughter may describe the idolater as her maternal brother, her natural father and her actual husband. Owing to her cohabitation with his father (the grandfather) he is the son of her husband, while through his cohabitation with her mother he is her mother's husband and she is, of course, the daughter of his wife. The children resulting from the union between her and the grandfather are his (the idolater's) paternal brothers and, of course, the children of his daughter.

(17) The son.
(18) She and the son are brother and sister, being the offspring of the same father. She and his father are brother and sister from the same mother, while she and his mother are sisters both paternally and maternally.
(19) His brother, Reuben, Simeon and Levi, the sons of Jacob and Leah (v. Gen. XXIX, 32ff) are chosen as an illustration of brotherly relationship.
(20) So Bah a.l. wanting in cur. edd.
(21) He and Levi's grandson are the children of two sisters (Reuben's daughters); he and Levi's son (the grandson's father) are children of two brothers (Simeon and Levi), while he and the grandson's mother are children of the two brothers Reuben and Simeon.
(22) Should one of the brothers die without issue.
(23) I.e., before his mother became a proselyte.
(24) After his mother became a proselyte.
(25) A proselyte having the status of a newly born child, all his previous family relationships are dissolved. The prohibition against marriage with a brother's wife does not, therefore, apply.
Between R. Aba and R. Shesheth.

Marriage of a brother's wife in the case of proselytes. It is well known that their father was no Israelite, and that it is for this reason that the marriage was permitted. No one would assume that they were the sons of the same father, since idolaters' wives were known to be faithless, and, consequently, no one would erroneously infer that proper Israelites may also marry their brother's wives.

Their mother being known, they might be assumed to be lawful brothers and, should marriage of a brother's wife be permitted in their case, an erroneous conclusion (v. supra note 6) might be formed.

Because (cf. [They, themselves, would however be forbidden to marry each other's widows where they were both born in holiness. It is only with reference to the first clause of our Mishnah that R. Aha stated supra that they were permitted (Rashi)].

To marry each other's wives.

The fact that they were both born in holiness should be an additional reason for the prohibition.

Though, in the case of twins, paternal brotherhood is certain (cf. infra 89a).

Since the duty of levirate marriage and halizah is dependent on paternal brotherhood. Cf. supra p. 669, n. 3.

but that a [Rabbinical] prohibition is ‘nevertheless involved!’ — The law, in fact, is that even a [Rabbinical] prohibition is not involved; only, because it was desired to state in the final clause, ‘but are guilty [of a punishable offence]’, it was stated in the first clause also, ‘they are not guilty [of a punishable offence]’.

Raba stated: With reference to the Rabbinical statement that [legally] an Egyptian has no father, it must not be imagined that this is due to [the Egyptians’] excessive indulgence in carnal gratification, owing to which it is not known [who the father was], but that if this were known it is to be taken into consideration; but [the fact is] that even if this is known it is not taken into consideration. For, surely, in respect of twin brothers, who originated in one drop that divided itself into two, it was nevertheless stated in the final clause, that they ‘neither participate in halizah nor perform levirate marriage’. Thus it may be inferred that the All Merciful declared their children to be legally fatherless, for [so indeed it is also] written, Whose flesh is as the flesh of asses, and whose issue is like the issue of horses.

Come and hear what R. Jose related: It once happened with the proselyte Niphates that he married the wife of his [deceased] maternal brother, and when the case was submitted to the Sages their verdict was that the law of matrimony does not apply to a proselyte. But then, should a proselyte betroth a woman, would also the betrothal be invalid? Say rather: The prohibition of a brother's wife does not apply to a proselyte. Now does not [this refer to the case] where his brother had married her while he was a proselyte? — No; where he married her while he was still an idolater.

But if [betrothal took place] while he was still an idolater, what [need is there] to state it? It might have been assumed that [in the case of a brother's betrothal] while he is still an idolater a preventive measure should be enacted lest [erroneous conclusions be drawn in the case] where he is a proselyte, hence we were taught [that no such measure was enacted].

Come and hear what Ben Yasyan related: When I went to the coastal towns I came across a certain proselyte who had married the wife of his maternal brother. ‘Who, my son’, I said to him, ‘permitted you [this marriage]?’ ‘Behold’, he replied, ‘the woman and her seven children; on this bench sat R. Akiba when he made two statements: “A proselyte may marry the wife of his maternal brother”, and he also stated, “And the word of the Lord came unto Jonah the second time, saying, only a second time did the Shechinah speak to him; a third time the Shechinah did not speak to him.”’ At any rate, it was stated here that ‘a proselyte may marry the wife of his maternal brother’. Does not [this refer to a case] where his brother married her while he was a proselyte! — No; where he married her while he was still an idolater. What [need then was there] to state [such an obvious law]? — It might have been assumed that [in the case of a brother's betrothal] while he is still an idolater a preventive measure should be enacted lest [erroneous conclusions be drawn in the case] where he is a proselyte, hence we were taught [that no such measure was enacted].

Is he, however, believed? Surely R. Abba stated in the name of R. Huna in the name of Rab: Wherever a scholar gives directions on a point of law and such a point comes up for a practical decision, he is obeyed if he made the statement before the event; but if it was not so made, he is not obeyed! — If you wish I might say: The incident occurred after he made his statement. If you prefer, I might say: Because he stated, ‘Behold the woman and her seven children’. And if you prefer I might say: Here it is different because with it he related another incident.

The Master said, ‘And the word of the Lord came to Jonah a second time, saying, only a second time did the Shechinah speak unto him, a third time the Shechinah did not speak to him’. But surely it is written in Scripture, He restored the border of Israel from the entrance of Hamath unto the sea of the Arabah, according to the word of the Lord, which He spoke by the hand of His servant Jonah the son of Amittai, the prophet. — Rabina replied: He referred to the affairs of Nineveh.

R. Nahman b. Isaac replied, It is this that was meant. According to the word of the Lord . . . which He spoke by the hand of his servant, the prophet, as his intention towards Nineveh was turned from evil to good, so was his intention towards Israel, in the days of Jeroboam the son of Joash, turned from evil to good.

Come and hear: A proselyte who was born in holiness but was not conceived in holiness has [legally] maternal consanguinity but no paternal consanguinity. For instance: If he married his maternal sister, he must divorce her; if his paternal one, he may retain her. His father's maternal sister he must divorce.

his paternal one he may retain. His mother's maternal sister he must divorce. As to her paternal sister, R. Meir said: He must divorce her,¹ and the Sages said: He may retain her;² R. Meir maintaining that any woman forbidden on account of maternal consanguinity must be divorced, but if on account of paternal consanguinity he may retain her. He is also permitted [to marry] his brother's wife,³ and the wife of his father's brother. All other forbidden relatives are also permitted to him, including his father's wife. If [a proselyte]⁴ married a woman and her daughter⁵ she may⁶ retain one, but must release the other. In the first instance he may not marry her. If his wife died, he is permitted to marry his mother-in-law. Another opinion is that he is forbidden to marry his mother-in-law. At all events, it was here stated that he is 'permitted [to marry] his brother's wife'; does not [this apply to a woman] whom his brother had married while he was a proselyte! — No; where he married her while he was still an idolater. What [need was there] to state it? — It might have been assumed that [in the case of a brother's marriage] while he was still an idolater a preventive measure should be enacted to preclude [the same thing being done] where he is already a proselyte, hence were we taught [that in such a case a brother's wife was permitted].

The Master stated, ‘If [a proselyte] married a woman and her daughter, he may retain one but must release the other; in the first instance he may not marry her’. Now, if he must even release her, is there any need [to speak of a prohibition to marry her] from the outset? — It refers to a previous clause, and the meaning is this: That [woman], concerning whom the Rabbis ruled that he may retain her, may nevertheless not be married by him from the outset.

‘If his wife died he is permitted to marry his mother-in-law. Another opinion is that he is forbidden to marry his mother-in-law’. One is in agreement with R. Ishmael and the other is in agreement with R. Akiba. He who forbade the marriage agrees with R. Ishmael who stated: A man's mother-in-law after [his wife’s] death retains the former prohibitions; and in respect of a proselyte a preventive measure was enacted. He, however, who permits the marriage follows R. Akiba who stated that the prohibition [to marry] one's mother-in-law is weakened after [one's wife's] death; and, consequently, no preventive measure has been enacted by the Rabbis in respect of a proselyte.

GEMARA. Only the halizah [must take place first] and the levirate marriage afterwards; the levirate marriage, however, must not take place first, since, thereby, one might infringe the prohibition against a sister-in-law's marriage with a stranger.

What [was the object of the statement], HE AND THREE [BROTHERS] SUBMIT TO HALIZAH FROM ONE [OTHER OF THE WIDOWS]? — That it be not suggested that one brother only should contract levirate marriage with all of them. Rather let every brother contract levirate marriage with only one [of the widows], when it is possible his own [sister-in-law] might happen to fall to his lot.

Our Rabbis taught: ‘If some of them were brothers and some were no brothers, the brothers submit to halizah while those who are no brothers contract the levirate marriage.’ What does this exactly mean? — R. Safra replied. It is this that is meant: If some of them were paternal brothers and some were [also] maternal brothers, the maternal brothers submit to halizah and the paternal brothers may [also] contract levirate marriage. ‘If some of them were priests and some were non-priests, the priests submit to halizah and those who are non-priests may [also] contract levirate marriage. If some of them were priests and some maternal brothers, the former as well as the latter submit to halizah but may not contract levirate marriage.’

(1) The reason is given presently.
(2) No preventive measure being necessary in such a case which is quite unlike that of a maternal sister.

(3) Cur. edd. insert ‘from his mother’ which is to be deleted with Bah a.l. The proselyte is, in fact, permitted to marry the wife of his paternal brother as well as the wife of his maternal brother if the latter was born before the conversion. A preventive measure (cf. supra p. 673, n. 13) was not instituted in the case of a relationship which is not due to consanguinity but is dependent on betrothal.

(4) Before his conversion. One born ‘in holiness’ is forbidden to marry a mother and her daughter.

(23) Of the five brothers (v. supra n. 7) i.e., the fifth who had not submitted to halizah.

(24) As four brothers have, by their halizah, severed their levirate bond with the widow mentioned, the fifth may marry her either as her brother-in-law (in case it was his brother who was her husband) or as a stranger (if her husband was a brother of one of the four who had now set her free).

(25) The brother who contracted the levirate marriage.

(26) Of the brothers (v. supra n. 7) who had submitted to halizah from the first widow.

(27) The second widow.

(28) For reasons similar to those explained supra n. 10.

(29) Lit., ‘it is found’. The same procedure being followed in respect of all the five widows.

(30) In our Mishnah, in respect of every widow.

(31) Should a brother happen to marry the widow who was not the wife of his deceased brother.

(32) Lit., ‘for he met a sister-in-law for the market’.

(33) The same brother who contracted the first levirate marriage is, surely, entitled to contract similar marriages with all the widows, as soon as the other four brothers had submitted to their halizah.

(34) So Bah. Cur. edd. omit.

(35) Of the brothers who were not involved in the confusion.

(36) Of those who were mixed up and are now dead.

(37) I.e., paternal brother to one and maternal brother to another.

(38) Thereby setting free the widows of their paternal brothers. They may not contract levirate marriage even after the widows had performed halizah with all the other brothers, since, should one of them happen to marry the widow of his maternal brother, he would thereby incur the penalty of kareth.

(39) With any of the widow's, after each of the other brothers had submitted to her halizah.

(40) Of the brothers who were not involved in the confusion.

(41) The levirate marriage is forbidden to them because any one of them might happen to marry the widow who was not a sister-in-law to him but to one of the other brothers. and who, by the halizah with her brother-in-law, has become a haluzah whom a priest is forbidden to marry.

(42) Of the brothers who were not involved in the confusion.

(43) Tosef. Yeb. XII. Cf. supra p. 676. n. 9 (re maternal brothers) and supra n. 1 (re priests).
Our Rabbis taught: A man must sometimes submit to halizah from his mother owing to an uncertainty; from his sister, owing to an uncertainty: and from his daughter, owing to an uncertainty. For instance? If his mother and another woman had two male children, and then gave birth to two male children in a hiding place; and a son of the one mother married the mother of the other son while the son of the other mother married the mother of the first, and both died without issue, the one must submit to halizah from both women and the other must submit to halizah from both women. Thus it follows that each submits to halizah from his mother owing to an uncertainty. ‘From his sister, owing to an uncertainty’; for instance? When his mother and another woman gave birth to two female children in a hiding place, and their brothers married them and died without issue, he must submit to halizah from both widows. Thus it follows that a man submits to halizah from his sister owing to an uncertainty. ‘From his daughter, owing to an uncertainty’; for instance? When his wife and another woman gave birth to two female children in a hiding place, and their husbands married them and died without issue, the one submits to halizah from his daughter owing to the uncertainty and the other submits to halizah from his daughter owing to the uncertainty.

It was taught: R. Meir said, A husband and wife may sometimes produce five different castes. How? If an Israelite bought a bondman and a bondwoman in the market, and these had two sons, one of whom became a proselyte, the result is that one is a proselyte and the other is an idolater. If subsequently he made them perform the prescribed immersion for the purpose of slavery and then they cohabited with one another and bore a son, behold here we have a proselyte, an idolater and a slave. If he subsequently emancipated the bondwoman and the slave cohabited with her and had another son, behold here we have a proselyte, an idolater, a slave and a bastard. If he then emancipated both of them and made them marry one another, behold here we have a proselyte, an idolater, a slave, a bastard and an Israelite. What does this teach us? — That when an idolater or a slave cohabits with an Israelitish woman their child is a bastard.

Our Rabbis taught: Sometimes a man sells his father to enable his mother to collect her kethubah. How? If an Israelite bought in the market a bondman and a bondwoman who had a son, and having emancipated the bondwoman he married her and bequeathed, in writing, all his estate to her son, the result is that this son sells his father in order to enable his mother to collect her kethubah. What does this teach us? — That all this represents the views of R. Meir. and that a slave is regarded as movable property, such property being mortgaged for a kethubah.

And if you prefer I might say. It is this that we were taught: A slave is on the same footing as real estate.

(61) For if the widow was his brother's wife he is obviously entitled to marry her, and if she was his brother's son's wife he may also marry her since her deceased husband's brother had already submitted to her halizah and had thereby set her free to marry even a stranger.

(63) This is explained infra.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 99b

THEY MAY NOT DEFILE THEMSELVES FOR THE DEAD¹ NOR MAY THEY MARRY ANY WOMEN WHETHER THESE ARE ELIGIBLE [FOR MARRIAGE WITH A PRIEST]² OR INELIGIBLE.³ IF WHEN THEY⁴ GREW UP, THE INTERCHANGED CHILDREN EMANCIPATED ONE ANOTHER THEY MAY MARRY WOMEN WHO ARE ELIGIBLE FOR MARRIAGE WITH A PRIEST⁵ AND THEY MAY NOT DEFILE THEMSELVES FOR THE DEAD.⁶ IF, HOWEVER, THEY DEFILED THEMSELVES, THE PENALTY OF FORTY stripes⁷ IS NOT INFLECTED UPON THEM.⁸ THEY MAY NOT EAT TERUMAH,⁹ BUT IF THEY DID EAT THEY NEED NOT PAY COMPENSATION EITHER FOR THE PRINCIPAL OR [THE ADDITIONAL] FIFTH.¹⁰ THEY ARE NOT TO RECEIVE A SHARE¹¹ AT THE THRESHING-FLOOR, BUT THEY MAY SELL [THEIR OWN] TERUMAH¹² AND THE PROCEEDS ARE THEIRS.¹³ THEY RECEIVE NO SHARE IN THE CONSECRATED THINGS OF THE TEMPLE,¹⁴ AND NO CONSECRATED THINGS¹⁵ ARE GIVEN TO THEM, BUT THEY ARE NOT DEPRIVED OF THEIR OWN,¹³ THEY ARE EXEMPT FROM [GIVING TO ANY PRIEST] THE SHOULDER, THE CHEEKS AND THE MAW,¹⁶ WHILE THE FIRSTLING OF EITHER OF THEM MUST REMAIN IN THE PASTURE¹³ UNTIL IT CONTRACTS A BLEMISH.¹⁷ THE RESTRICTIONS RELATING TO PRIESTS AND THE RESTRICTIONS RELATING TO ISRAELITES ARE BOTH IMPOSED UPON THEM.¹⁸
GEMARA. IF THE UNTAINTED SONS DIED etc.; are, then, the others, because they were mixed up, tainted! — R. Papa replied: Read, ‘If those [whose parentage was] certain died’.

[IN RESPECT, HOWEVER, OF THE WIDOWS] OF THE SONS OF THE DAUGHTER-IN-LAW ONE SUBMITS TO HALIZAH etc. Only halizah [must take place first] and the levirate marriage afterwards. The levirate marriage, however, must not take place first; since thereby one might infringe the prohibition against a sister-in-law's marriage with a stranger.

[IF THE CHILD OF] A PRIEST'S WIFE WAS INTERCHANGED etc. Obviously only ONE SHARE! — Read ‘ONE SHARE together’. Here we learn [a thing] which is in agreement with him who ruled that no share of terumah is given to a slave unless his master is with him. For it was taught: No share in terumah is given to a slave unless his master is with him; so R. Judah. R. Jose, however, ruled: The slave may claim, ‘If I am a priest, give me for my own sake; and if I am a priest's slave, give me for the sake of my master’. In the place of R. Judah,[men of doubtful status] were raised to the status of priesthood [on the evidence that they received a share] of terumah. In the place of R. Jose, however, no one was raised to the status of priesthood [on the evidence of having received a share] of terumah.

It was taught: R. Eleazar b. Zadok said, ‘During the whole of my lifetime I have given evidence but once, and through my statement they raised a slave to the priesthood’. ‘They raised’? Is [such an error] conceivable! If through the beasts of the righteous the Holy One, blessed be He, does not cause an offence to be committed, how much less through the righteous themselves! — Rather, read. ‘They desired to raise a slave to the priesthood, through my statement’. He witnessed [the occurrence] in the place of R. Jose. but went and tendered his evidence in the place of R. Judah.

Our Rabbis taught: Ten [classes of people] must not be given a share of terumah at the threshing-floors. They are the following: The deaf, the imbecile, the minor, the tumtum, the hermaphrodite, the slave, the woman, the uncircumcised, the levitically unclean, and he who married a woman who is unsuitable for him.

In the case of all these, however, [terumah] may be sent to their houses, with the exception of the one who is levitically unclean and one who married a woman who is unsuitable for him. Now, one can well understand [the prohibition in respect of] the deaf, the imbecile and the minor, since they lack intelligence; [in respect of] the tumtum and the hermaphrodite also.

(1) Since either of them might be assumed to be the priest (cf. Lev. XXI, 1).
(2) Since such women are forbidden to the slave.
(3) A bondswoman, for instance, who is forbidden to the priest.
(4) The son of the priest and the slave who were interchanged.
(5) Any freed man may marry such a woman.
(7) ‘Forty’ is a round number for the penalty of flogging which in fact consisted of thirty-nine stripes only.
(8) Because each of them can plead that he is not the priest.
(9) On account of the slave who, being now a freed man, is, like any Israelite, forbidden to eat terumah.
(10) Which an Israelite must pay (cf. Lev. XXII, 14). Each one of them can plead that he is the priest.
(11) In terumah. Cf supra n. 5.
(12) Of their own produce.
(13) No priest can claim it from either of them since each can reply that it is he who is the priest.
(14) Not even a share in the skins of the sacrifices.
(15) Firstlings, for instance, or herem (v. Glos.). Cf. Num. XVIII, 14f.
(16) Priestly gifts prescribed in Deut. XVIII, 3.
(17) When it is unfit for the altar, and may be eaten by its owner. The reason why an Israelite owner may not eat of the flesh of his firstling, even after it has contracted a blemish, is not because of its sanctity but because its consumption by a non-priest is regarded as robbing the priests. No such consideration arises in a case where the owner can claim that he himself is a priest. (Cf. supra note 9).

(18) MS.M. and cur. edd. infra 100a. The reading here is ‘upon him’.

(19) Lit., ‘those’.

(20) Lit., ‘because he met a sister-in-law for the market’.

(21) Since no more than one of them can lay claim to the priesthood. Why then was the obvious stated?

(22) Only when the two come together do they receive one share. One without the other receives nothing. The reason is given infra.

(23) As one of the two is obviously a slave neither of them can claim a share unless the other is with him.

(24) In circumstances like those spoken of in our Mishnah, where it is uncertain whether he is a slave or a priest.

(26) Hence no terumah must be given to a slave in the absence of his master.

(27) Tosef. Yeb. Xli, Keth. 28b.

(28) That a slave received a share of terumah.

(30) Deaf-mute.

(31) V. Glos.

(32) A priest's wife.

(33) A priest whose brothers died as a result of their circumcision, and who, owing to the fatal effect of such an operation on members of his family, is himself exempt from circumcision.

(34) I.e., one whom a priest is forbidden to marry.

(35) The uncircumcised priest is not excluded since his wives and slaves, though not he himself, are permitted to eat terumah.

(36) Tosef. Ter. X end.

(37) To give him a share of terumah at the threshing-floor.

(38) It would be a mark of disrespect were the sacred terumah to be entrusted to the care of persons who are mentally defective, or undeveloped, or in any other way below the normal standard of intellectual or physical fitness.

(39) One can understand the reason for the prohibition.

since either of them is a peculiar creature; the slave, too, because owing to the terumah he might be raised to the priesthood; the uncircumcised and the unclean also, owing to their repulsiveness; and the priest who married a woman unsuitable for him, as a penalty. But why should not a woman [be given a share of terumah]? — On this question R. Papa and R. Huna son of R. Joshua differ. One explains: Owing [to possible abuse by] a divorced woman; and the other explains: Owing to [the necessity of avoiding] privacy between the sexes. What is the practical difference between them? — The practical difference between them is the case of a threshing-floor that is near a town but is unfrequented by people, or one that is distant [from a town] but frequented by people.

‘In the case of all these, however, [terumah] may be sent to their houses, with the exception of the one who is levitically unclean and one who married a woman who is unsuitable for him’. [May terumah], then, be sent to the uncircumcised? What is the reason! [Is it] because he is a victim of circumstances? The man who is levitically unclean is also a victim of circumstances! — The force of circumstances in the former case is great; in the latter, the force is not so great.

Our Rabbis taught: Neither to a slave nor to a woman may a share in terumah be given at the threshing-floors. In places, however, where a share is given. It is to be given to the woman first, and she is immediately dismissed. What can this mean? — It is this that was meant: The poor man’s tithe which is distributed at home is to be given to the woman first. What is the reason? — That the degradation [of the woman may be avoided].
Raba said: Formerly, when a man and a woman came before me for a legal decision, I used to dispose of the man's lawsuit first, because I thought a man is subject to the fulfilment of all the commandments; since, however, I heard this, I dispose of a woman's lawsuit first. Why? In order to save her from degradation.

IF WHEN THEY GREW UP, THE INTERCHANGED CHILDREN etc. [It states] THEY EMANCIPATED. [Implying] only if they wished, but if they did not wish they need not [emancipate one another]! But why? Neither of them could marry either a bondwoman or a free woman! Raba replied: Read: Pressure is brought to bear upon them so that they emancipate one another.

THE RESTRICTIONS . . . ARE IMPOSED UPON THEM. In what respect? — R. Papa replied: In respect of their meal-offering. A handful must be taken from it, as of a meal-offering of an Israelite, but it may not be eaten, as is the case with a meal-offering of the priests. But how [is one to proceed]? The handful is offered up separately and the remnants are also offered up separately. But [surely] there is to be applied here the Scriptural deduction that any offering a portion of which had been put on the fire of the altar is subject to the prohibition you shall not burn! — R. Judah son of R. Simeon b. Pazzi replied: They are burned as wood, in accordance with a ruling of R. Eleazar. For it was taught: R. Eleazar said, For it sweet savour you may not offer them; you may offer them, however, as mere wood. This is satisfactory according to R. Eleazar, what, however, can be said according to the Rabbis? — One proceeds in accordance with a ruling of R. Eleazar son of R. Simeon. For it was taught: R. Eleazar son of R. Simeon said: The handful is offered up separately and the remnants are scattered over the enclosure of the sacrificial ashes. And even the Rabbis differ from R. Eleazar only in respect of a priestly sinner's meal-offering which is suitable for offering up, but here, even the Rabbis agree.

MISHNAH. IF A WOMAN DID NOT WAIT THREE MONTHS AFTER [SEPARATION FROM] HER HUSBAND, AND MARRIED AGAIN AND GAVE BIRTH TO A SON, AND IT IS UNKNOWN WHETHER IT IS A NINE-MONTHS CHILD BY THE FIRST HUSBAND OR A SEVEN-MONTHS CHILD BY THE SECOND, IF SHE HAD OTHER SONS BY THE FIRST HUSBAND AND OTHER SONS BY THE SECOND, THESE MUST SUBMIT TO HALIZAH BUT MAY NOT CONTRACT WITH HER LEVIRATE MARRIAGE. AND HE, IN RESPECT OF THEIR WIDOWS, LIKEWISE, SUBMITS TO HALIZAH BUT MAY NOT CONTRACT LEVIRATE MARRIAGE.

(1) Which he receives.
(2) As was explained supra.
(3) Who might, after her divorce when she is no more permitted to eat terumah, continue to collect it.
(5) No preventive measure against (a) abuse by a divorced woman is here necessary, since the proximity of the threshing-floor to the town enables its owner to keep in touch with social events in the town. The precautions, however, against (b) privacy, owing to the loneliness of the floor, cannot be neglected.
(6) Cf. supra note 1 mutatis mutandis; (b) has to, but (a) need not be disregarded.
(7) Since he is not included in the exceptions. Cf. supra p. 683, n. 8.
(8) If the latter was not excluded why then was the former?
(9) The uncircumcised cannot help the infirmity of the constitution of the members of his family. It is not through any fault of his that he must remain uncircumcised (v. supra p. 683, n. 6).
(10) By the exercise of due care uncleanness might be avoided.
(11) In the first sentence it was stated that a woman receives no share; and in the following it is tacitly assumed that in certain places she does receive a share!
(13) In town.
(14) Though privacy between the sexes need not be apprehended there.
(15) It is degrading for a woman to have to wait her turn in a crowd of men.
(16) With different law suits.
(17) While a woman is exempt from certain commandments. Hence it is the man that should receive precedence.
(18) The reason why a woman should be given her share of the poor man's tithe first.
(19) Cf. supra p. 684, n. 11.
(20) Lit., 'yes'.
(21) Owing to the priest.
(22) Since one of them is a slave. How, then, could they ever fulfil the religious duty of propagation which is incumbent upon all?
(23) Lit., for what law'.
(24) V. Lev. II, 2.
(25) Since he might be the Israelite.
(26) As he might also be the priest.
(27) V. Lev. VI, 16.
(28) As was the case here where the handful was offered up.
(29) Lev. II. Once the prescribed portion of an offering had been duly offered up on the altar the remnants of that offering may no longer be burned in the altar. Cf. Zeb 77a. How then could the remnants of the meal-offering be offered up when a portion of the offering (the handful) is also offered up.
(30) Not as an offering.
(31) Lev II, 12.
(32) V. supra note 13.
(33) Yoma 47b, Sot. 23a, Zeb. 76b, Men. 106b.
(34) Who do not permit the offering of the remnants on the altar even as wood.
(35) Lev. 76b. A place near the altar, where a certain portion of the ashes of the altar was deposited.
(36) In its entirety, as is the case with a priest's voluntary meal-offering.
(37) Where there is the possibility that it is not the offering of a priest at all.
(38) That the remnants are to be scattered in the enclosure of the ashes. V. Sot., Sonc ed., p. 116, notes.
(39) By her husband's death or by divorce.
(40) From the widow of the son whose father is unknown, if he died childless.
(41) Since it is possible that they are only the maternal brothers of the deceased, whose widow is forbidden to them under the penalty of kareth.
(42) Lit., 'to them'.
(43) From their widows, if they died without issue.
(44) Cf. supra n. 8 mutatis mutandis.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 100b

IF HE¹ HAD BROTHERS BY THE FIRST² AND ALSO BROTHERS BY THE SECOND,² BUT NOT BY THE SAME MOTHER, HE³ MAY EITHER SUBMIT TO HALIZAH OR CONTRACT THE LEVIRATE MARRIAGE,³ BUT AS FOR THEM, ONE⁴ SUBMITS TO HALIZAH⁵ AND THE OTHER MAY [THEN] CONTRACT LEVIRATE MARRIAGE.⁶

IF THE TWO [HUSBANDS] WERE PRIESTS, HE\textsuperscript{19} MUST MOURN AS ONAN\textsuperscript{20} FOR THEM AND THEY MUST MOURN AS ONENIM\textsuperscript{21} FOR HIM,\textsuperscript{22} BUT HE MAY NOT DEFILE HIMSELF FOR THEM,\textsuperscript{23} NOR MAY THEY DEFILE THEMSELVES FOR HIM,\textsuperscript{23} HE MAY NOT INHERIT FROM THEM,\textsuperscript{24} BUT THEY MAY INHERIT FROM HIM.\textsuperscript{25} HE IS EXONERATED\textsuperscript{26} IF HE STRIKES OR CURSES\textsuperscript{27} THE ONE OR THE OTHER, HE GOES UP [TO SERVE] IN THE MISHMAR\textsuperscript{28} OF THE ONE AS WELL AS OF THE OTHER,\textsuperscript{29} BUT HE DOES NOT RECEIVE A SHARE [IN THE OFFERINGS].\textsuperscript{30} IF, HOWEVER BOTH SERVED IN THE SAME MISHMAR,\textsuperscript{28} HE RECEIVES A SINGLE PORTION.\textsuperscript{31}

GEMARA. Only the halizah [must take place first]\textsuperscript{32} and the levirate marriage afterwards; the levirate marriage, however, must not take place first, since, thereby, one\textsuperscript{33} might infringe the prohibition against the marriage of a sister-in-law with a stranger.\textsuperscript{34}

Samuel said: If ten priests stood together and one of them separated [from the company] and cohabited [with a feme sole], the child [that may result from the union]\textsuperscript{35} is a shethuki.\textsuperscript{28} In what [respect is he] a shethuki? If it be suggested that he is silenced\textsuperscript{36} [when he claims a share] of his father's estate, [is not this, it may be retorted] self-evident? Do we know who is his father! — Rather,\textsuperscript{37} he is silenced [if he claims any] of the rights of priesthood.\textsuperscript{38} What is the reason? — Scripture stated, And it shall be unto him, and to his seed after him,\textsuperscript{39} it is, therefore, required that ‘his seed’ shall be traced to ‘him’,\textsuperscript{40} but this is not the case here.\textsuperscript{41}

R. Papa demurred: If that is so in the case of Abraham where it is written, To be a God to thee and to thy seed after thee,\textsuperscript{42} what does the All Merciful exhort him thereby!\textsuperscript{43} — It is this that he said to him: Marry not an idolatress or a bondwoman so that your seed shall not be ascribed to her.\textsuperscript{44}

An objection was raised: The first\textsuperscript{45} is fit to be a High Priest.\textsuperscript{46} But, surely, it is required that a priest's child shall be traced to his father,\textsuperscript{47} which is not the case here!\textsuperscript{48} — [The requirement that] a priest's child shall be traced to his father\textsuperscript{49} is a Rabbinical provision; while the Scriptural text is a mere prop,\textsuperscript{50} and it is only in respect of prostitution that the Rabbis have made their preventive measure; in respect of marriage, however, no such measure was enacted by them. But did the Rabbis introduce such a preventive measure in the case of prostitution? Surely we learned: IF A WOMAN DID NOT WAIT THREE MONTHS AFTER [SEPARATION FROM] HER HUSBAND, AND MARRIED AGAIN AND GAVE BIRTH [TO A SON]; now, what is meant by AFTER [SEPARATION FROM] HER HUSBAND? If it be suggested: AFTER the death OF HER HUSBAND, read the final clause: HE MUST MOURN AS ONAN FOR THEM AND THEY MUST MOURN AS ONENIM FOR HIM; one can well understand [the circumstances in which] HE MOURNS AS ONAN FOR THEM, such mourning being possible [even in the case] of marriage with the second [husband, on the occasion of the] collecting of the bones of the first.\textsuperscript{51} But how is it possible that they MOURN AS ONENIM FOR HIM, when the first husband is dead?\textsuperscript{52} If, however, [it be suggested that our Mishnah speaks] of a divorced woman, and that the meaning of AFTER [SEPARATION FROM] HER HUSBAND is AFTER the divorce OF HER HUSBAND, then read the final clause: HE MAY NOT DEFILE HIMSELF FOR THEM, NOR MAY THEY DEFILE THEMSELVES FOR HIM; now, one can understand that THEY MAY NOT DEFILE THEMSELVES FOR HIM as a restrictive measure, [since in respect of every one of them it may be assumed that] he is possibly not his son; but why MAY HE NOT DEFile HIMSELF FOR THEM?
Granted that he must not defile himself for the second;\(^{53}\) for the first, however, he should be allowed to defile himself in any case! For if he is his son, then he may justly defile himself for him; and if he is the son of the second\(^{54}\) he may legitimately defile himself for him since he is a halal!\(^{55}\) Consequently [our Mishnah must refer to a case] of prostitution,\(^{56}\) and the meaning of AFTER [SEPARATION FROM] HER HUSBAND must be, AFTER [SEPARATION FROM] THE MAN WHO IRREGULARLY COHABITED WITH HER;\(^{57}\) and yet it was stated in the final clause, HE MAY GO UP [TO SERVE] IN THE MISHMAR OF THE ONE AS WELL AS OF THE OTHER. This, then, presents an objection against the ruling of Samuel!\(^{58}\) — R. Shemaia replied: [Our Mishnah refers] to a minor who made a declaration of refusal.\(^{59}\) But is a minor\(^{60}\) capable of propagation? Surely R. Bebai recited before R. Nahman: Three categories of women may use an absorbent in their marital intercourse:\(^{61}\) A minor, an expectant mother, and a nursing wife. The minor,\(^{62}\) because she\(^{63}\) might become pregnant and, as a result, she might die. An expectant mother,\(^{62}\) because she\(^{63}\) might cause her foetus to degenerate into a sandal.\(^{64}\) A nursing wife,\(^{62}\) because she\(^{63}\) might have to wean her child [prematurely]\(^{65}\) and this would result in his death. And what is the age of such a minor?\(^{66}\) From the age of eleven years and one day until the age of twelve years and one day. One who is under,\(^{67}\) or over this age\(^{68}\) must carry on her marital intercourse in the usual manner. This is the opinion of R. Meir. The Sages, however, said: The one as well as the other carries on her marital intercourse in the usual manner. and mercy will be vouchsafed from heaven,\(^{69}\) for it is said in the Scriptures, The Lord preserveth the simple!\(^{70}\) — [The case of our Mishnah] is possible with a mistaken betrothal,\(^{71}\) and on the basis of a ruling of Rab Judah in the name of Samuel. For Rab Judah stated in the name of Samuel in the name of R. Ishmael: And she be not seized\(^{72}\) [only then\(^{73}\) is she] forbidden;\(^{74}\) if, however, she was seized\(^{75}\) she is permitted;\(^{74}\) there is, however, another kind of woman who is permitted\(^{74}\) even if she was not seized.\(^{76}\) And who is she? — A woman whose betrothal was a mistaken one,\(^{77}\) who may, even if her son sits riding on her shoulder, make a declaration of refusal [against her husband] and go away.\(^{78}\)

For the purpose of re-burial. Whenever such collecting takes place, even many years after death, the son must on that day observe the laws relating to an onan (cf. Pes. 91b). Such mourning, therefore, is possible even after the marriage of his mother with her second husband.

Having died, according to the present assumption, before the birth of the son.

Owing to the possibility that he is the son of the first and, consequently, a legitimate priest who is forbidden to defile himself for the corpses of strangers.

Who married his mother while she was a divorced woman.

V. Glos. The child of a union between a priest and a divorced woman is disqualified for the priesthood and may defile himself for the dead.

Where neither of the men had contracted legal marriage with her. Her son, since she has the status of feme sole, has also the status of a legitimate priest who must observe the laws of priestly sanctity, and must not, therefore, defile himself for either of the men. Death and divorce being excluded as factors in the separation of the woman from the first man, it is also possible that the son should be in the position of onan for them and that they should he onenim for him.

When a condition which remained unfulfilled was attached to it. In such a case, the woman may leave her husband without a letter of divorce and is, consequently, permitted to marry a priest. Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 101a

IF THE TWO [HUSBANDS] WERE PRIESTS etc. Our Rabbis taught: If he struck one and then struck the other, or if he cursed one and then cursed the other, or cursed them both simultaneously or struck them both simultaneously, he is guilty. R. Judah, however, said: If simultaneously, he is guilty; if successively he is exonerated. But, surely, it was taught: R. Judah stated that he is exonerated [even if his offences were] simultaneous! — Two Tannaim differ as to what was the opinion of R. Judah.

What is the reason of him who exonerated? R. Hanina replied: ‘Blessing is spoken of in Scripture [in respect of parents] on earth and blessing is spoken of [in respect of God] above. As there is no association above so must there be no association below; and striking has been compared to cursing.

HE MAY GO UP [TO SERVE] IN THE MISHMAR etc. Since, however, HE DOES NOT RECEIVE A SHARE why should he go up? — [You ask] ‘Why should he go up’; surely, he might say: I wish to perform a commandment! — But [this is the difficulty]: It does not say. ‘If he went up’ but HE GOES up, implying even against his will! — R. Aha b. Hanina in the name of Abaye in the name of R. Assi in the name of R. Johanan replied: In order [to avert any possible] reflection on his family.

IF, HOWEVER, BOTH SERVED IN THE SAME MISHMAR etc. In what respect do two mishmaroth differ [from one] that [in the former case] he should not [receive a share]? [Is it] because when he comes to the one mishmar he is driven away and when he comes to the other mishmar he is again driven away? Then, even in the case of one mishmar also, when he comes to one beth ab he is driven away and when he comes to the other beth ab he is also driven away!
R. Papa replied: It is this that was meant: IF, HOWEVER, BOTH SERVED IN THE SAME Mlshmar and in the same beth ab, HE RECEIVES A SINGLE PORTION.

CHAPTER XII

MISHNAH. THE COMMANDMENT OF HALIZAH MUST BE PERFORMED IN THE PRESENCE OF THREE JUDGES, EVEN THOUGH ALL THE THREE ARE LAYMEN. IF THE WOMAN PERFORMED THE HALIZAH WITH A SHOE, HER HALIZAH IS VALID. [BUT IF] WITH A SOCK IT IS INVALID; IF WITH A SANDAL TO WHICH A HEEL IS ATTACHED IT IS VALID, BUT [IF WITH ONE] THAT HAS NO HEEL IT IS INVALID. [IF THE SHOE WAS WORN] BELOW THE KNEE THE HALIZAH IS VALID, BUT IF ABOVE THE KNEE IT IS INVALID. IF THE WOMAN PERFORMED THE HALIZAH WITH A SANDAL THAT DID NOT BELONG TO HIM, OR WITH A WOODEN SANDAL, OR WITH THE ONE OF THE LEFT FOOT WHICH HE WAS WEARING ON HIS RIGHT FOOT, THE HALIZAH IS VALID.

IF SHE PERFORMED THE HALIZAH WITH A SANDAL TOO LARGE [FOR HIM], IN WHICH, HOWEVER, HE IS ABLE TO WALK, OR WITH ONE TOO SMALL WHICH, HOWEVER, COVERS THE GREATER PART OF HIS FOOT, HER HALIZAH IS VALID.

GEMARA. Since even THREE LAYMEN [are sufficient], what need is there for JUDGES? — It is this that we were taught: That three men are required, who are capable of dictating [the prescribed texts] like judges. Thus we have learned here what the Rabbis taught: The commandment of halizah is performed in the presence of three men who are able to dictate [the prescribed texts] like judges. R. Judah said: In the presence of five.

What is the first Tanna’s reason? — Because it was taught: Elders [implies] two; but as no court may be evenly balanced, one man more is added to them; behold here three. And R. Judah? — The elders of [implies] two; and elders [implies another] two; but since no court may be evenly balanced, one man more is added to them; behold here five.

As to the first Tanna, what deduction does he make [from the expression] the elders of? — He requires it for the purpose of including even three laymen. Whence, then, does R. Judah deduce the eligibility of laymen? — He deduces it from Before the eyes of; a Master having said: ‘Before the eyes of’, excludes blind men. Now, since the expression ‘Before the eyes of’ is required to exclude blind men it follows that even laymen are eligible. For should it be suggested [that only members of] the Sanhedrin are required. what need was there to exclude blind men, [an exclusion which could have been] deduced from that which R. Joseph learnt! For R. Joseph learnt: As the Beth din must be clean in respect of righteousness so must they be clear from all physical defects.

(3) Since one of the two is certainly his father. As to the necessary caution v. infra nn. 12 and 13.
(4) He struck or cursed.
(5) The specific caution that must precede any forbidden act that is punishable by a court is here effected when the witnesses cautioned the offender by one statement against the striking or the cursing of the two, e.g., ‘do not strike them’.
(6) Though he may have been duly cautioned in each particular case, no penalty can be imposed upon him by any court, since each caution was of a doubtful character, it being unknown in each case whether the particular man he was about to strike or curse was his father or not. A caution of a doubtful character is, in the opinion of R. Judah, of no validity. while in the opinion of the first Tanna it is valid.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 101b

for it is said in Scripture, Thou art all fair, my love; and there is no spot in thee.¹

As to the former,² however, what deduction does he make from the expression. ‘Before the eyes of'? — That expression serves the purpose of a deduction like that of Raba, Raba having stated: The judges must see the spittle issuing from the mouth of the sister-in-law, because it is written in Scripture, Before the eyes of the elders . . . and spit.3 But does not the other4 also require the text5 for a deduction like that of Raba! — This is so indeed. Whence, then,6 does he deduce [the eligibility of] laymen?7 — He deduces it from in Israel8 [implying] any Israelite whatsoever. As to the former,9 however, what deduction does he make from ‘In Israel’?10 — He requires it for a deduction like that which R. Samuel b. Judah taught: ‘In Israel’ [implies that halizah must be performed] at a Beth din of Israelites but not at a Beth din of proselytes.11 And the other?4 — ‘In Israel’ is written a second time.12 And the former?9 — He requires it13 for another deduction in accordance with what was taught: R. Judah stated, ‘We were once sitting before R. Tarfon when a sister-in-law came to perform halizah, and he said to us, “Exclaim all of you: The man that had his shoe drawn off”’.14 And the other? — This is deduced from And [his name] shall be called.14 If this is so15 And they shall call16 [implies] two;17 And they shall speak.16 [also implies] two,17 [so that] here also [one might deduce]: According to R. Judah,18 behold there are here nine; and according to the Rabbis,19 behold there are here seven! — That text16 is required for a deduction in accordance with what was taught: And they shall call him16 but not their representative; And they shall speak unto him16 teaches that they give him suitable advice. If he,21 for instance, was young and she22 old, or if he was old and she was young, he is told, ‘What would you with23 a young woman?’ Or ‘What would you23 with an old woman? Go to one who [is of the same age] as yourself, and introduce no quarrels into your home’.24

Raba stated in the name of R. Nahman: The halachah is that halizah is to be performed in the presence of three men, since the Tanna25 has taught us so26 anonymously.27 Said Raba to R. Nahman: If so [the same ruling should apply to] mi'un28 also, for we learned:29 Mi'un and halizah [must be witnessed] by three men30 And should you reply [that the halachah] is so indeed, surely [It may be retorted] it was taught: Mi'un,31 Beth Shammai ruled, [must be declared before] a Beth din of experts;32 and Beth Hillel ruled: [It may be performed] either before a Beth din or not before a Beth din. Both, however, agree that a quorum of three is required. R. Jose son of R. Judah and R. Eleazar son of R. Jose33 ruled: [The mi'un is] valid [even if it was declared] before two.34 And R. Joseph b. Manyumi reported in the name of R Nahman34 that the halachah is in agreement with this pair!35 — There,36 only one anonymous [teaching] is available while here37 two anonymous [teachings]38 are available.

There36 also two anonymous [teachings] are available! For we learned: If, however, a woman made a declaration of refusal39 or performed halizah in his presence, he40 may marry her,41 since he [was but one of the] Beth din!42 — But, [the fact is that while] there,43 only two anonymous [teachings] are available; here,44 three anonymous [teachings] are available.45

Consider! The one43 is an anonymous [teaching], and the other44 is an anonymous [teaching]; what difference does it make to me whether the anonymous [teachings] are one, two or three? — Rather, said R. Nahman b. Isaac, [the reason46 is] because the anonymity47 occurs in a passage recording a dispute.48 For we learned: ‘The laying on of hands by the elders,49 and the breaking of the heifer's neck50 is performed by three elders; so R. Jose,51 while R. Judah stated: By five elders. Halizah and declarations of mi'un, [however, are witnessed] by three men';52 and since R. Judah does not express disagreement,53 it may be inferred that R. Judah changed his opinion.54 This proves it.

Raba stated: The judges must appoint a place;55 for it is written, Then his brother's wife shall go up to the gate56 unto the elders.57

R. Papa and R. Huna son of R. Joshua arranged a halizah58 in the presence of five. In accordance with whose view?58 Was it in accordance with that of R. Judah? He, surely, had changed his opinion! Their object was to give the matter due publicity.

R. Ashi once happened to be at R. Kahana's, when the latter said to him, ‘The Master has come up to us [at an opportune moment] to complete a quorum of five’. On being asked, ‘What need is there for five?’ he replied, ‘In order that the matter be given due publicity’.

R. Kahana stated: I was once standing in the presence of Rab Judah, when he said to me, ‘Come, get on to this bundle of reeds that you may be included in a quorum of five’, in order that the matter be thereby given due publicity. ‘We learned’, the first remarked, ‘In Israel [implies that halizah must be performed] at a Beth din of Israelites but not at a Beth din of proselytes while I am, in fact, a proselyte’. ‘On the word [of a man] like R. Samuel b. Judah’, Rab Judah said, ‘I would withdraw money from its possessor’.

A proselyte may, according to Pentateuchal law, sit in judgment on a fellow proselyte, for it is said in the Scriptures, Thou shalt in any wise set him king over thee, whom the Lord thy God shall choose; one from among thy brethren shalt thou set king over thee; only when set over thee is he required to be one from among thy brethren; when, however, he is to judge his fellow proselyte he may himself be a proselyte. If his mother was an Israelitish woman he may sit in judgment even on an Israelite. In respect of halizah, however, [no man is eligible as judge] unless both his father and his mother were Israelites for it is said, And his name shall be called in Israel.

Rabbah stated in the name of R. Kahana in the name of Rab: If Elijah should come and declare that halizah may be performed with a foot-covering shoe, he would be obeyed; [were he, however, to declare that] halizah may not be performed with a sandal, he would not be obeyed, for the people have long ago adopted the practice [of performing it] with a sandal.

R. Joseph, however, reported in the name of R. Kahana in the name of Rab: If Elijah should come and declare that halizah may not be performed with a foot-covering shoe, he would be obeyed; [were he, however, to declare that] halizah may not be performed with a sandal, he would not be obeyed, for the people have long ago adopted the practice [of performing it] with a sandal.

What is the practical difference between them? — The practical difference between them is [the propriety of using] a foot-covering shoe ab initio.

According to him, however, who stated [that it was proper to use it] even ab initio, surely, [it may be objected] we learned: IF A WOMAN PERFORMED THE HALIZAH WITH A FOOT-COVERING SHOE, HER HALIZAH IS VALID [which implies validity only] after the action had been performed but not ab initio. — The same law is applicable even [where the shoe was used] ab initio. As, however, it was desired to state in the final clause: BUT IF WITH A SOCK IT IS INVALID, [a law] which applies even after the action had been performed, a similar expression was also used in the first clause.

[On the question of] using a foot-covering shoe ab initio Tannaim differ. For it was taught: R. Jose related, ‘I once went to Nesibis where I met an old man whom I asked, "Are you perchance acquainted with R. Judah b. Bathrya?" and he replied, "Yes; and he in fact always sits at my table". "Have you ever seen him arranging a halizah ceremony for a sister-in-law?" [I asked]. "I saw him arranging halizah ceremonies many a time", he replied. "With a foot-covering shoe [I asked] or with a sandal?" — "May halizah be performed", he asked me ‘with a foot-covering shoe?’ I replied: Were that [not] so, what could have caused R. Meir to state that halizah if performed with a foot-covering shoe is valid, while R. Jacob reported in his name that it was quite proper to perform [even] halizah ab initio with a foot-covering shoe!’

With reference to him who ruled that it was not proper ab initio [to perform halizah with a foot-covering shoe] what could be the reason? If it be suggested: Because [the loosing of] the upper may be described as from off and [the loosing of the] thong as ‘from off of the from off’, [a performance which is not in accordance with] the Torah which said, from off but not ‘from off of the from off’; [it could well be retorted that] if such were the reason [the halizah should be invalid] even when actually performed. — This is a preventive measure against the possible use of a flabby shoe or even half a shoe.

Said Rab: Had I not seen my uncle arranging a halizah with a sandal that had laces I would have allowed a halizah only with an Arabian sandal which can be more firmly fastened. And in respect of our [kind of sandal] though it has a knot, a strap also should be tied to it, so that the halizah may be properly performed.

(Mnemonic: You permitted a sister-in-law a sandal.) Rab Judah reported in the name of Rab: The permissibility of a sister-in-law to marry a stranger takes effect as soon as the greater part of the heel is released.

An objection was raised: If the straps of a foot-covering shoe or of a sandal were untied or if [the levir] slipped [it off from] the greater part of his foot, the halizah is invalid. The reason then is because it was he that slipped it off; had she, however, slipped it off, her halizah would have been valid; and, furthermore this applies to] the greater part of the foot only but not to the greater part of the heel. The ‘greater part of the foot’ has the same meaning as ‘the greater part of the heel’; [and the reason] why he calls it ‘the greater part of the foot’ [is] because all the weight of the foot rests on it.

This provides support for R. Jannai. For R. Jannai stated: Whether [the levir] untied [the straps] and she slipped off [the sandal] or whether she untied the straps and he slipped off the sandal, her halizah remains invalid, unless she unties the straps and she slips off the sandal.

R. Jannai enquired: What is the law if she tore it? What if she burnt it? Is the exposure of the foot necessary, and this has here been effected, or is ‘taking off’ necessary, which has not taken place here? — This remains undecided.

R. Nehemiah enquired of Rabbah: What is the law in the case of two shoes one above the other? — How is this enquiry to be understood? If it be suggested: That she drew off the upper one and the lower one remained, surely, the All Merciful said: From off but not ‘from off of the from off’! — Such enquiry is necessary only where she tore the upper one and removed the lower one while the upper one remained [on the levir’s foot], the question being whether the requirement is the ‘taking off’ which has been done, or whether the exposure of the foot is necessary which was not effected here?

Does this, however, ever happen? — Yes; for the Rabbis once saw Rab Judah going out into the street in five pairs of felt socks.

Rab Judah reported in the name of Rab: A sister-in-law who was brought up together with the brothers is permitted to marry any one of the brothers and there is no need to consider the possibility that she might have taken off the sandal [from the foot] of one of them. The reason, then is because we did not actually observe it, had we, however, observed it the possibility [that her halizah was valid] would have had to be taken into consideration. But, surely, it was taught:
Whether he\(^7\) had the intention\(^8\) [of performing the commandment of halizah] and she had no such intention, or whether she had such intention and he did not, halizah is invalid, it being necessary\(^9\) that both shall at the same time have such intention!\(^{10}\) It is this that was meant: Although we observed it\(^5\) there is no need to consider the possibility that they might have intended [to give their action the character of a valid halizah].

Others read: The reason\(^4\) is because we did not see it,\(^5\) had we, however, seen it, the possibility [of a valid halizah] would have had to be considered,\(^6\) the statement that\(^11\) intention\(^12\) is necessary\(^13\) applying only to the permissibility [of the woman] to strangers,\(^14\) but to the brothers she does become forbidden.\(^{15}\)

Rab Judah stated in the name of Rab: No halizah may be performed with a sandal that was sewn with flax,\(^{16}\) for it is said in Scripture, And I shod thee with tahash.\(^{17}\) Might it be suggested that [the skill of] a tahash\(^18\) is admissible\(^19\) but not any other material? — The mention of ‘shoe’ twice\(^20\) indicates the inclusion [of all kinds of leather]. If the repeated mention of ‘shoe’ indicates the inclusion [of all kinds of leather] all other materials should also be included! — If that were so,\(^21\) for what purpose was the term tahash used?

R. Eleazar enquired of Rab: [What is the law where] the sandal was made of leather and its straps of [animal] hair? — The other replied: Could we not apply to it, And I shod thee with tahash!\(^{22}\) If so, a shoe all made of hair\(^23\) should also be admissible! — Such is called a slipper.\(^{24}\) not enter with a bordered tunic or with a sock, and there is no need to state [that he must not enter] with a shoe or with a sandal, since no one may enter the Temple court with a shoe or a sandal, but elsewhere the contrary was taught: One must not walk with a shoe, a sandal or a sock either from one house to another or even from one bed to another bed! — Abaye replied: [This refers to a sock] which is furnished with pads, [the prohibition being due to the pleasure its wearing affords]. Said Raba to him: Is [all footwear] forbidden on the Day of Atonement because of the pleasure it affords, even though it cannot be regarded as a shoe? Surely, Rabbah son of R. Huna used to wrap a scarf round his foot and so went out! — But in fact, said Raba, there is no difficulty: The one Baraitha refers to a leather sock; the other to a felt sock. This explanation is indeed reasonable. For were you not to say so, a contradiction would arise between one statement dealing with the Day of Atonement and [another statement which also deals with] the Day of Atonement. For it was taught: No man may walk about in slippers in his house, but he may walk about in his house in socks. Consequently it must be inferred that one statement refers to a leather sock and the other to a felt sock. This proves It.

It was taught in agreement with Raba: If a sister-in-law performed halizah with a torn shoe which covered the greater part of the [levir’s] foot, with a broken sandal which contained the greater part of his foot, with a sandal of cork or of bast, with an artificial foot, with a felt sock, with a support of the feet, or with a leather sock, and also where she performed halizah with an adult

(1) Of her deceased husband.
(2) In the course of the years they were together.
(3) As a friendly service. It is now assumed that had such an act been performed the removal of the sandal would have been regarded as a valid halizah which would cause the sister-in-law to become forbidden to marry the brothers.
(4) Why halizah is not apprehended.
(5) That she drew off the sandal from the foot of any brother.
(6) And the sister-in-law would be forbidden to marry any of the brothers.
(7) The levir.
(8) Where halizah was performed.
(9) Lit., ‘until’.
(10) Tosef. Yeb. XII, infra 106a. Why then should the removal of a sandal as a mere friendly act ever be regarded as a valid halizah?
(11) Lit ‘and what he taught’.
(12) To perform the commandment of halizah.
(13) On the part of the levir and the sister-in-law.
(14) Lit., ‘to the world’. Only for this purpose is intention a sine qua non.
(15) Even where there was no intention but mere action.
(16) I.e., provided with a flax lining or, according to another interpretation, stitched with a flaxen thread (cf. Rashi).
(17) Ezek. XVI, 10, E.V. sealskin. The tahash, the skin of which was used for one of the coverings of the roof of the Tabernacle made by Moses in the wilderness, formed a class of its own, and the Sages could not determine whether it belonged to the class of wild or of domestic animals (cf. Shab. 28b). The mention in the context of shoeing of tahash, the use of the skin of which only was recorded in the Scriptures, is taken to imply that the shoe spoken of in the Scriptures was invariably made of a material similar to that of the skin of tahash, viz., leather. Hence the inadmissibility in halizah of any shoe that was not wholly made of leather.
(18) Since this animal only was mentioned.
(19) Lit., ‘yes’.
(20) Lit., ‘shoe’ (bis). V. Deut. XXV, 9 and 10.
(21) That all materials are admissible.
(22) Ezek. XVI, 10.
(23) The tahash also had hair on its skin.

(55) E.V. ‘He hath withdrawn Himself from them’. Hos. V, 6.
(56) Certainly not. It is the sister-in-law that performs the halizah while the brother-in-law only submits to it. God, in the image of the text quoted, standing towards Israel in the relationship of a levir to his sister-in-law, cannot perform the halizah, and his action is, so to speak, invalid, the bond between him and His people remaining in force.
(58) In order that he may be free from the suspicion that he concealed some money in his socks or in the border of his tunic.
(59) Even when suspicion is out of the question.
(60) Out of respect for the place. Now, since a sock is permitted in the Temple court where a shoe is for. bidden it is obvious that a sock is not included in the category of shoe.
(61) On the Day of Atonement, when as a part of the affliction (cf. Lev. XVI, 29) the wearing of shoes is forbidden.
(62) Which shows that a sock is also regarded as a shoe.
(63) Cf. supra n. 6.
(64) In reply to the contradiction that was pointed out.
(65) Which forbids the wearing of a sock on the Day of Atonement.
(66) That dealing with entry into the Temple court.
(67) Which is contradictory to the Baraitha previously cited there the wearing of socks was forbidden even where one only walked from one bed to another.
(68) Lit., ‘but not’?
(69) That a difference is drawn between a sock of felt or cloth and one of leather. While the former is not regarded as a shoe the latter is.

whether he was standing, sitting or reclining, and also if her halizah was performed with a blind man, her halizah is valid. [If her halizah] however, [was performed] with a torn shoe that did not cover the greater part of the [levir's] foot, with a broken sandal which does not hold the greater part of his foot, with a support of the hands, or with a cloth sock, and also where her halizah was performed with a minor, her halizah is invalid.

Whose [view is represented in the first statement mentioning] the artificial foot — [Obviously that of] R. Meir, for we learned: A cripple may go out [on the Sabbath] with his artificial foot, so R. Meir, and R. Jose forbids it, but the latter statement: ‘With a cloth-sock’ can only represent the view of the Rabbis — Abaye replied: Since the latter statement represents the opinion of the Rabbis, the first also must represent the opinion of the Rabbis, the first [dealing with an artificial foot that was] covered with leather.

Said Raba to him: What, however, is the law if it was not covered with leather? Is it then unfit? If so, instead of teaching in the latter statement, ‘With a cloth sock’, a distinction should have been drawn in [respect of the artificial foot] itself: This applies only where it was covered with leather, but if it was not covered with leather it is unfit! Rather, said Raba, since the first statement represents the view of R. Meir, the latter also represents the view of R. Meir, the one affording protection while the other affords no protection.

Amemar stated: When a levir submits to halizah he must press down his foot [to the ground]. Said R. Ashi to Amemar: Was it not taught [that the halizah was valid] ‘whether he was standing, sitting or reclining’? — Read: And in all these cases, only if he pressed his foot [to the ground].

Amemar further stated: A man who walks on the upper side of his foot must not submit to halizah. Said R. Ashi to Amemar: But, surely, it was taught: ‘Supports of the feet’; does not [this signify] that such a cripple may submit to halizah with a support! No; [the meaning is] that he may give it to another person who is allowed to submit to halizah [with it].

Said R. Ashi: According to Amemar's ruling neither Bar Oba nor Bar Kipof could submit to halizah.

[IF THE SHOE WAS WORN] BELOW THE KNEE etc. A contradiction was pointed out: Regalim, excludes stump-legged cripples — Here it is different since it was written in Scripture, From off his foot. If so, [halizah should be permissible] above the knee also! — From off but not ‘from off the from off’.

Said R. Papa: From this it may be inferred that the istewira reaches down to the ground; for were it to be imagined that it is disconnected, it [would be situated] above [the foot], while the leg [would be] above that which is above [the foot]. R. Ashi, however, said: It may even be said that it is disconnected, but any part adjacent to the foot is legally regarded as the foot itself.

ABOVE THE KNEE. R. Kahana raised an objection: And against her afterbirth that cometh out from between her feet — Abaye replied: When a woman kneels down to give birth she presses her heels against her thighs and thus gives birth. Come and hear: He had neither dressed his feet nor trimmed his beard! — This is a euphemistic expression. Come and hear: And Saul went in to cover his feet! — This is a euphemistic expression. Come and hear: Surely he is covering his feet in the cabinet of the cool chamber!\textsuperscript{39} — This is a euphemistic expression. Between her feet etc.!\textsuperscript{40} — This is a euphemistic expression.

R. Johanan Said: That profligate\textsuperscript{41} had seven sexual connections on that day;\textsuperscript{42} for it is said, Between her feet he sunk, he fell, he lay; at her feet he sunk, he fell; where he sunk there he fell down dead.\textsuperscript{43} But, surely she\textsuperscript{44} derived gratification from the transgression! R. Johanan replied in the name of R. Simeon b. Yohai: All the favours of the wicked\textsuperscript{45}

(8) Who differ from R. Meir in regarding neither the artificial foot nor the cloth sock as a shoe. According to R. Meir a cloth sock, like an artificial foot, is regarded as a shoe. Does then the Baraitha represent the contradictory views of R. Meir and the Rabbis!
(9) Hence its admissibility as a shoe for halizah.

(17) Hence its unfitness for halizah. It is not the material of which it is made but its unsuitability as a covering of the foot that causes its unfitness.

are evil for the righteous;¹ For it is said, Take heed to thyself that thou speak not to Jacob either good or evil.² Now, as regards evil, one can perfectly well understand [the meaning]³ but why not good? From here then it may be inferred that the favour of the wicked is evil for the righteous.

There,⁴ one can well see the reason,⁵ since he⁶ might possibly mention to him the name of his idol;⁷ what evil, however, could be involved here?⁸ — That of infusing her with sensual lust. For R. Johanan stated: When the serpent copulated with Eve,⁹ he infused her with lust. The lust of the Israelites who stood at Mount Sinai,¹¹ came to an end, the lust of the idolaters who did not stand at Mount Sinai did not come to an end.

IF THE WOMAN PERFORMED THE HALIZAH WITH A SANDAL THAT DID NOT BELONG TO HIM etc. Our Rabbis taught: [From the expression] His shoe¹² I would only know that his own¹³ shoe [is suitable];¹⁴ whence, however, is it deduced that anybody's shoe is suitable?¹⁵ Hence was the term ‘shoe’ repeated,¹⁶ thus indicating the suitability of anyone's shoe.¹⁷ If so, why was the expression, ‘His shoe’, at all used? — ‘His shoe implies one which he can wear, excluding a large one in which he cannot walk, excluding a small one which does not cover the greater part of his foot, and excluding also a sandal which consists of a sole but has no heel.

Abaye once stood in the presence of R. Joseph when a sister-in-law came to perform halizah. ‘Give him’,¹⁸ he¹⁹ said to him,²⁰ your sandal’, and [Abaye] gave him’ his left sandal. ‘It might be suggested’, he²¹ said to him,²² ‘that the Rabbis spoke only of a fait accompli; did they, however, speak also of what is permissible ab initio?’ The other²³ replied: If so, in respect of a sandal that is not the levir's own, it might also be suggested that the Rabbis spoke only of a fait accompli; did they, however, speak also of what is permissible ab initio! ‘I’, the first²⁴ answered him, ‘meant to tell you this: Give it to him and transfer possession to him’.²⁵

A WOODEN SANDAL. Who is the Tanna [whose view is expressed in this ruling]?²⁶ — Samuel replied: The view is that of R. Meir. For we learned: A cripple may go out [on the Sabbath]²⁷ with his wooden stump; so R. Meir,²⁸ while R. Jose forbids it.²⁹ Samuel’s father explained:³⁰ With one that is covered with leather, [the ruling representing] the general opinion.³¹

R. Papi stated in the name of Raba: No halizah may be performed with a sandal that is under observation;³² a halizah, however, that has been performed [with it] is valid. No halizah may be performed with a sandal, the leprous condition of which has been confirmed;³³ and even a halizah that had already been performed [with it] is invalid.³⁴ R. Papa, however, stated in the name of Raba: No halizah may be performed either with a sandal under observation³⁵ or with one the leprous condition of which had been confirmed;³⁶ a halizah, however, that had been performed [with either] is valid.
An objection was raised: A house locked up imparts uncleanness from within, [and a house] confirmed in its leprous condition imparts uncleanness both within and without. The one as well as the other imparts uncleanness to anyone entering. Now, if it is to be assumed that an object doomed to destruction is regarded as already crushed to dust, surely it may be objected the requirement [there] is that He goeth into the house; but such a house is not in existence! — There it is different, because Scripture said, And he shall break down the house, even at the time of breaking down it is still called ‘house’.

Come and hear: A [leprous] strip of cloth measuring three [finger-breadths] by three, even if [in volume] it does not amount to the size of an olive, causes, as soon as the greater part of it has entered a clean house, the defilement of that house. Does not [this refer to a strip of cloth the uncleanness of which] had been confirmed? No; [it refers to] one under observation. But if so, read the final clause: If in volume it constituted the size of many olives, as soon as a portion of it of the size of an olive enters a clean house, it causes the uncleanness of that house. Now, if you grant [that the reference is to a strip] of confirmed leprosy one can well understand why it was compared to a corpse; if, however, you maintain [that the reference is to a strip] under observation why [it may be objected] was it compared to a corpse! — There it is different, for Scripture said, And he shall burn the garment, even at the time of burning it is still called ‘garment.’ Then let [halizah] be deduced from it! — A prohibition cannot be deduced from [the laws of] uncleanness.

Raba stated: The law is that [a sister-in-law] may not perform halizah either with a sandal under observation, or with a sandal of confirmed leprosy, or with a sandal belonging to an idol; if, however, she has performed halizah with either of these, her halizah is valid. (45) In consequence of which it is doomed to destruction by burning. Now, if what is doomed to destruction is legally regarded as non-existent, how could such a strip impart uncleanness?
(47) That of a strip of cloth of the size mentioned.

(51) In the fixing of its minimum, in respect of imparting uncleanness, to be that of the size of an olive.
(52) Which also imparts uncleanness if a small part of it of the size of an olive only remained. Confirmed leprosy may well be compared to a corpse. Cf. Num. XII, 22: Let her not . . . be as one dead. The reference is to Miriam who was at the time leprous (v. ibid. 10) and Aaron requested Moses that she may not be confirmed in her leprosy and thus become like a corpse.

(57) Hence it may impart uncleanness even where it is doomed to destruction.
(58) And a sandal of confirmed leprosy should also be admissible for halizah.
(59) Which form a peculiar class of their own.
(61) Which is put on the idol when it is moved from place to place (Rashi).
(62) Because the sandal under observation is not doomed to destruction; the sandal of confirmed leprosy is regarded as a garment despite its doom, (as deduced supra from Lev. XIII, 52); while the sandal of the idol, being only an accessory to it, is not doomed to burning. Though no benefit may be derived therefrom it is admissible for halizah, because the fulfilment of a precept is not regarded as a ‘benefit’.
(63) As part of its worship, and which must consequently be destroyed.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 104a

or [with one] that belonged to a condemned city or [with one] that was made in honour of a [dead] elder, no halizah may be performed; and even a halizah that has been performed with it is invalid.

Said Rabina to R. Ashi: In what respect is [the sandal] that was made in honour of a [dead] elder different [from an ordinary sandal]? Is it because it was not made for walking? That of the Beth din also was not made for walking! — The other replied: Should the attendant of the Beth din use it for walking, would the Beth din object?

GEMARA. May it be suggested that they differ on the following principle: The one Master holds the opinion that lawsuits are to be compared to plagues, while the other Master holds the opinion that lawsuits cannot be compared to plagues. — No; all agree that lawsuits cannot be compared to plagues; for should they be compared, even the close of a legal process could not have been allowed at night. Here, however, they differ on the following principle: Ones Master holds that halizah is like the commencement of legal proceedings and the other Master holds that halizah is like the close of the proceedings.

Rabbah b. Hiyya of Ktesifon carried out a halizah with a felt sock, with no other men present, at night. Said Samuel: How great is his authority in acting on the view of one individual! What [however, could be his] objection? If [against the use of the] felt sock, an anonymous Baraitha permits it! If [against his acting at] night, our anonymous Mishnah permits this! — His objection, however, is that Rabbah acted alone. How [he objected] could he act alone when it was only one individual who expressed approval of such a procedure? For we learned: If [a sister-in-law] performed halizah in the presence of two or three men, and one of them was discovered to be a relative or in any other way unfit [to act as judge], her halizah is invalid; but R. Simeon and R. Johanan ha-Sandelar declare it valid. Furthermore, it once happened that a man submitted to halizah with none present but himself and herself in a prison, and when the case came before R. Akiba he declared the halizah valid.

And if you prefer I might say: All these rulings also are the views of an individual. For it was taught: R. Ishmael son of R. Jose stated, ‘I saw R. Ishmael b. Elisha carry out a halizah with a felt sock, with no other men present, and [this occurred] at night’.

WITH [THE LEVIR'S] LEFT SHOE HER HALIZAH etc. What is the Rabbis’ reason? ‘Ulla replied: [The meaning of] ‘foot’ [here] is deduced from that of foot in the context of the leper. As there it is the right so here also it must be the right. Does not R. Eleazar, then, deduce [the meaning of] foot [here] from that of foot in the context of the leper? Surely, it was taught: R. Eleazar stated, Whence is it deduced that the boring of the ear of a Hebrew slave must be performed on his right ear? — For the term ear was used here and the term ‘ear’ was also used elsewhere, as there it is the right ear so here also it is the right ear! — R. Isaac b. Joseph replied in the name of R. Johanan: The statement is to be reversed.

Raba said: There is, in fact, no need to reverse [the statement, the reply to the objection being that] the terms ‘ear’ [are both] free [for the deduction]; the terms of ‘foot,’ however, are not free for deduction. But even if [one of the texts] is not free for deduction, what objection can be raised [against the deduction]? — It may be objected: The case of the leper is different, since he is also required [to bring] cedar-wood and hyssop and scarlet. MISHNAH. [IF A SISTER-IN-LAW] DREW OFF [THE LEVIR’S SHOE] AND SPAT, BUT DID NOT RECITE [THE FORMULAE], HER HALIZAH IS VALID. IF SHE RECITED [THE FORMULAE] AND SPAT, BUT DID NOT DRAW OFF THE SHOE, HER HALIZAH IS INVALID.\textsuperscript{52} IF SHE DREW OFF THE SHOE AND RECITED [THE FORMULAE] BUT DID NOT SPIT, HER HALIZAH, R. ELIEZER\textsuperscript{53} STATED, IS INVALID; AND R. AKIBA STATED: HER HALIZAH IS VALID.

\item Both having been mentioned in the same Scriptural verse (Deut. XXI, 5). As plagues may be examined by the priest in the daytime only (based on Lev. XIII, 24: ‘On the day when raw flesh is seen in him’,) so may lawsuits also be dealt with by the court in the daytime only. Halizah involving as it does the question of the widow’s kethubah is regarded as coming under the category of lawsuits.

\item Kid. 15a, which shews that R. Eleazar does make deduction from the terms used in the context of the leper.
\item In our Mishnah. It is R. Eleazar, and not the first Tanna, who ruled that halizah with the left shoe is invalid.
\item As to why R. Eleazar draws an analogy between the terms of ear and not between those of foot.
\item Lit., ‘ear, ear’.
\item Both in the case of leper (Lev. XIV, 14 and 17) and in that of the slave (Ex. XXI, 6 and Deut. XV, 17) one of the terms is superfluous and, therefore, free for the deduction that the boring must be performed on the right ear.
\end{enumerate}
Lit., ‘foot, foot’.

Though in the context of the leper the term foot occurs twice (Lev. XIV. 14 and 17), in that of halizah it appears only once (Deut. XXV, 9). As in the latter text it is required for the context itself no deduction can be made from such an analogy unless it is one that is free from all possible objection.

Cf. supra n. 14 final clause. Since no refutation can be advanced, the deduction, though based on texts of which one only is free for the purpose, should hold!

From that of halizah.

On the day of his cleansing. (Cf. Lev. XIV, 4). The laws of the leper, being in this respect more rigid than those of halizah, may also be more rigid in respect of the requirement of the right shoe. Hence R. Eleazar's opinion that no deduction is to be made from the analogous words, and that halizah with the left shoe is, therefore, valid.

Cf. Deut. XXV, 9.

Prior to the halizah she declares (a) ‘My husband's brother refuseth to raise up unto his brother a name in Israel; he will not perform the duty of a husband's brother unto me’ (ibid. 7). After the halizah she exclaims, (b) ‘So shall it be done unto the man that doth not build up his brother's house’ (ibid. 9).

The omission of an act, but not that of a formula, renders a halizah invalid. V. infra.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 104b

SAID R. ELIEZER TO HIM: [SCRIPTURE STATED], SO SHALL BE DONE,\(^1\) ANYTHING WHICH IS A DEED\(^2\) IS A SINE QUA NON.\(^3\) R. AKIBA, HOWEVER, SAID TO HIM, FROM THIS VERY TEXT\(^4\) PROOF [MAY BE ADDUCED FOR MY VIEW]: SO SHALL BE DONE UNTO THE MAN,\(^5\) ONLY THAT WHICH IS TO BE DONE UNTO THE MAN.\(^6\)

IF A DEAF\(^7\) LEVIR SUBMITTED TO HALIZAH, OR IF A DEAF SISTER-IN-LAW PERFORMED HALIZAH, OR IF A HALIZAH WAS PERFORMED ON A MINOR, THE HALIZAH IS INVALID.

[A SISTER-IN-LAW] WHO PERFORMED HALIZAH WHILE SHE WAS A MINOR MUST AGAIN PERFORM HALIZAH WHEN SHE BECOMES OF AGE; AND IF SHE DOES NOT AGAIN PERFORM IT, THE HALIZAH IS INVALID.

IF [A SISTER-IN-LAW] PERFORMED HALIZAH IN THE PRESENCE OF TWO OR THREE MEN AND ONE OF THEM WAS DISCOVERED TO BE A RELATIVE OR ONE IN ANY OTHER WAY UNFIT [TO ACT AS JUDGE], HER HALIZAH IS INVALID; BUT R. SIMEON AND R. JOHANAN HA-SANDELAR DECLARE IT VALID. FURTHERMORE,\(^8\) IT ONCE HAPPENED THAT A MAN SUBMITTED TO HALIZAH PRIVATELY BETWEEN HIMSELF AND HERSELF IN A PRISON, AND WHEN THE CASE CAME BEFORE R. AKIBA HE DECLARED THE HALIZAH VALID.

GEMARA. Raba said: Now that you have stated\(^9\) that the recital [of the formulae]\(^10\) is not a sine qua non, the halizah of a dumb man and a dumb woman is valid.

We learned: IF A DEAF LEVIR SUBMITTED TO HALIZAH, OR IF A DEAF SISTER-IN-LAW PERFORMED HALIZAH, OR IF A HALIZAH WAS PERFORMED ON A MINOR, THE HALIZAH IS INVALID. Now, what is the reason?\(^11\) is it not because these are unable to recite [the formulae]?\(^12\) — No; because they are not in complete possession of their mental faculties.\(^13\) If so, [the same applies] also to a dumb man and to a dumb woman!\(^14\) — Raba replied: A dumb man and a dumb woman are in full possession of their mental faculties, and it is only their mouth that troubles\(^15\) them. But, surely, at the school of R. Jannai it was explained [that the reason why a deaf-mute is unfit for halizah is] because [the Scriptural instruction], He shall say\(^16\) or She shall say\(^17\) is — [Say] rather, if Raba's statement was ever made it was made in connection with the final clause: IF A DEAF LEVIR SUBMITTED TO HALIZAH, OR IF A DEAF SISTER-IN-LAW PERFORMED HALIZAH, OR IF A HALIZAH WAS PERFORMED ON A MINOR, THE HALIZAH IS INVALID. [It is in connection with this that] Raba said: Now that you have stated that the recital of [the formula] is a sine qua non, the halizah of a dumb man or a dumb woman is invalid. And our Mishnah [is based on the same principle] as [that propounded by] R. Zera; for R. Zera stated: Wherever proper mingling is possible actual mingling is not essential, but where proper mingling is not possible the actual mingling is a sine qua non.

The following ruling was sent to Samuel's father: A sister-in-law who spat must perform the halizah. This implies that she is rendered unfit for the brothers; but whose view is this? If it be suggested [that it is that of] R. Akiba, it may be objected: If R. Akiba said that it was not indispensable even where the actual commandment [of halizah is being performed, in which case] it could be argued that it could be given the same force as [the burning] of the altar portions of the sacrifices. which is not an essential [rite] when [the portions] are not available, and yet is a sine qua non when they are available [would he regard it as a reason for the woman] to become thereby unfit for the brothers! [Should it be suggested], however, [that the view is that of] R. Eliezer surely [it may be retorted] are two acts which jointly effect permissibility, and any two acts that jointly effect permissibility are ineffective one without the other! — Rather, the view is in agreement with that of Rabbi. For it was taught: The Pentecostal lambs cause the consecration of the bread only by their slaughter. In what manner? If they were slaughtered for the purpose of the festival sacrifices and their blood also was sprinkled with such intention, the bread becomes consecrated. If they were not slaughtered for the purpose of the festival sacrifices, though their blood was sprinkled for the proper purpose, the bread does not become consecrated. If they were slaughtered for the purpose of the festival sacrifices and their blood was sprinkled for another purpose, the bread is partly consecrated and partly unconsecrated; so Rabbi. R. Eleazar son of R. Simeon, however, stated: The bread is never consecrated unless the slaughtering [of the lambs] and the sprinkling of their blood were both intended for the proper purpose of the festival.

Did R. Akiba, however, hold that the act of spitting does not render the woman unfit? Surely it was taught: If she drew off [the levir's shoe] but did not

Thus it has been shewn that according to Rabbi, where two acts such as proper slaughtering and proper sprinkling are required, consecration is partially effected even though the former act alone was properly performed. Similarly, in respect of halizah, one of the prescribed acts is sufficient to render the woman unfit for the levirate marriage.
(48) For the levirate marriage.

spit nor recite, her halizah is valid. If she spat but did not draw off the shoe nor recite, her halizah is invalid if she recited but did not spit nor draw off the shoe, there is here no reason whatsoever for apprehension. Now, whose [view is here represented]? If it be suggested [it is that of] R. Eliezer, [how could it be stated that] ‘if she drew off [the levir's shoe] but did not spit nor recite, her halizah is valid’ when, surely, R. Eliezer said: SO SHALL BE DONE, ANYTHING WHICH IS A DEED IS A SINE QUA NON? It is consequently obvious [that it is the view of] R. Akiba; and yet it was stated that ‘if she spat but did not draw off the shoe nor recite, her halizah is invalid’. To whom, [however, does the invalidity cause her to be forbidden]?\textsuperscript{25} If it be suggested, ‘To strangers’;\textsuperscript{6} is not this [it may be retorted] self-evident? Is it a halizah [like this that would enable the sister-in-law] to become free to marry a stranger!\textsuperscript{17} It must therefore, be admitted\textsuperscript{8} [that the validity refers to her state of prohibition] to the brothers.\textsuperscript{9} Thus you have our contention proved.

According to R. Akiba, wherein lies the legal difference between the act of spitting and that of reciting?\textsuperscript{10} — Recital\textsuperscript{11} that must take place both at the commencement\textsuperscript{12} [of the halizah ceremony] and at its conclusion\textsuperscript{13} cannot be mistaken;\textsuperscript{14} spitting, however, which does not take place at the beginning but only at the end, might be mistaken [for a proper halizah],\textsuperscript{15} and thus\textsuperscript{16} a proper halizah also would be permitted to marry the brothers.\textsuperscript{17}

Others say that the following ruling was sent to him:\textsuperscript{18} A sister-in-law who spat\textsuperscript{19} may afterwards perform halizah and need not spit a second time.\textsuperscript{20} So, in fact, it once happened that a sister-in-law\textsuperscript{21} who came before R. Ammi, while R. Abba b. Memel was sitting in his presence, spat prior to her drawing off the shoe. ‘Arrange the halizah for her’, said R. Ammi to him,\textsuperscript{22} ‘and dismiss her case’.\textsuperscript{23} ‘But surely’, said R. Abba to him, ‘spitting is a requirement!’ — ‘She has spat indeed!’ ‘But let her spit [again]; what could be the objection?’ — ‘The issue might [morally and religiously] be disastrous; for should you rule that she is to spit again, people might assume that her first spitting was ineffective\textsuperscript{24} and thus\textsuperscript{25} a proper halizah also would be permitted to marry the brothers!’\textsuperscript{26} ‘But is it not necessary, [that the various parts of the halizah] should follow in the prescribed order?’ — ‘The order of the performances is not essential’. He\textsuperscript{22} thought [at the time] that the other\textsuperscript{27} was merely shaking him off. When, however, he went out he carefully considered the point and discovered that it was taught: Whether drawing off the shoe preceded the spitting or whether spitting preceded the drawing off, the action performed is valid.\textsuperscript{28}

Levi once went out [to visit] the country towns,\textsuperscript{29} when he was asked: ‘May a woman whose hand was amputated perform halizah?\textsuperscript{30} What is the legal position where a sister-in-law spat blood? [It is stated in Scripture]: Howbeit I will declare unto thee that which is inscribed in the Writing of Truth;\textsuperscript{31} does this\textsuperscript{32} then imply that there exists a [divine] Writing that is not of truth?’ He was unable to answer.\textsuperscript{33} When he came and asked these questions at the academy, they answered him: Is it written, ‘And she shall draw off with her hand’?\textsuperscript{34} Is it written, ‘And spit spittle’?\textsuperscript{34} [As to the question] ‘Howbeit I will declare unto thee that which is inscribed in the Writing of Truth,\textsuperscript{31} does this then imply that there exists a [divine] Writing that is not of truth?’ There is really no difficulty. For the former\textsuperscript{35} refers to a [divine] decree that was accompanied by an oath while the latter\textsuperscript{36} refers to one that was not accompanied by an oath. [This is] in accordance with a statement of R. Samuel b. Ammi. For R. Samuel b. Ammi stated in the name of R. Jonathan: Whence is it deduced that a decree which is accompanied by an oath is never annulled?\textsuperscript{37} — From the Scriptural text, Therefore I have sworn unto the House of Eli, that the iniquity of Eli’s house shall not be expiated with sacrifice nor offering for ever.\textsuperscript{38} Rabbah said: It will not be expiated ‘with sacrifice nor offering’, but it will be expiated with the words of the Torah.

Abaye said: It will not be expiated ‘with sacrifice nor offering’ but it will be expiated with the practice of lovingkindness.

Rabbah and Abaye were both descendants of the house of Eli. Rabbah who engaged in the study of the Torah lived forty years. Abaye, however, who engaged in the study of the Torah and the practice of lovingkindness, lived sixty years.

Our Rabbis taught: There was a certain family in Jerusalem whose members used to die when they were about the age of eighteen. When they came and acquainted R. Johanan b. Zakkai [with the fact,] he said to them: ‘perchance you are descendants of the family of Eli concerning whom it is written in Scripture. And all the increase of thy house shall die young men,’\textsuperscript{39} go and engage in the
R. Samuel b. Unia stated in the name of Rab: Whence is it deduced that a [divine] dispensation against a congregation is not sealed? — [You say] ‘Is not sealed’! Surely it is written, For though thou wash thee with nitre, and take thee much soap, yet thine iniquity is marked before Me! But [this is the question]: Whence is it deduced that even if it has been sealed it is torn up? — From the Scriptural text, What . . . as the Lord our God is whenssoever we call upon him. But, surely, it is written, Seek ye the Lord while He may be found! — This is no contradiction. The latter applies to an individual, the former to a congregation. And when may an individual [find him]? R. Nahman replied in the name of Rabbah b. Abbuha: In the ten days between the New Year and the Day of Atonement.

[The following ruling] was sent to Samuel's father: A sister-in-law who spat blood shall perform halizah, because it is impossible that blood should not contain some diluted particles of spittle.

An objection was raised: It might have been assumed that blood that issues from his mouth or membro virile is unclean, hence it was explicitly stated, His issue is unclean, but the blood which issues from his mouth or from his membro virile is not unclean, but clean! — This is no contradiction: The former is a case where she sucks in; the latter, where [the blood] flows gently.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 105b

Rab Judah stated in the name of Rab: This is the view of R. Meir; but the Sages maintain that the halizah of a minor has no effect at all.

[A SISTER-IN-LAW] WHO PERFORMED HALIZAH WHILE SHE WAS A MINOR etc. Rab Judah stated in the name of Rab: This is the view of R. Meir who stated, ‘In the Pentateuchal section [of halizah] the expression man is used, and the woman is to be compared to the man’. The Sages, however, maintain that in the Pentateuchal section ‘man’ was written; [and as to] a woman, whether she is of age or a minor [her halizah is valid].

Who [is the Tanna here described as the] Sages? — It is R. Jose. For R. Hyya and R. Simeon b. Rabbi once sat together, when one of them began as follows: A man who offers up his prayers must direct his eyes towards [the Temple] below, for it is said, And Mine eyes and Mine heart shall be there perpetually. And the other said: The eyes of him who offers up prayers shall be directed towards [the heavens] above, for it is said Let us lift up our heart with our hand. In the meanwhile they were joined by R. Ishmael son of R. Jose. ‘On what subject are you engaged?’ he asked them. ‘On the subject of prayer’, they replied. ‘My father’, he said to them, ‘ruled thus: a man who offers up his prayers must direct his eyes to the [Sanctuary] below and his heart towards [the heavens] above so that these two Scriptural texts may be complied with.’ While this was going on, Rabbi entered the academy. They, being nimble, got into their places quickly. R. Ishmael son of R. Jose, however, owing to his corpulence could only move to his place with slow steps. ‘Who is this man, cried Abdan out to him, ‘who strides over the heads of the holy people!’ The other replied, ‘I am Ishmael son of R. Jose who have come to learn Torah from Rabbi’. ‘Are you, forsooth, fit’, the first said to him, ‘to learn Torah from Rabbi?’ — ‘Was Moses fit’, the other retorted, ‘to learn Torah from the lips of the Omnipotent!’ ‘Are you Moses indeed!’ the first exclaimed. — ‘Is then your Master a god!’ the other retorted. R. Jose remarked: Rabbi got what he merited when the one said to the other ‘Your Master’ and not ‘my Master’. While this was proceeding a sister-in-law came before Rabbi. ‘Go out’, said Rabbi to Abdan, ‘and have her examined’. After the latter went out, R. Ishmael said to him: Thus said my father, ‘In the Pentateuchal section man is written; but as to a woman, whether she is of age or a minor her halizah is valid’. ‘Come back’, he cried after him, ‘you need not [arrange for any examination]; the grand old man has already given his decision [on the subject]’.

Abdan now came back picking his steps when R. Ishmael son of R. Jose exclaimed, ‘He of whom the holy people is in need may well stride over the heads of the holy people; but how dare he of whom the holy people has no need stride over the heads of the holy people!’ ‘Remain in your place’, said Rabbi to Abdan.

It was taught: At that instant Abdan became leprous, his two sons were drowned and his two daughters-in-law made declarations of refusal. ‘Blessed be the All Merciful’, said R. Nahman b. Isaac, ‘who has put Abdan to shame in this world’.

‘We may learn from the words of this eminent scholar’, said R. Ammi, ‘that a sister-in-law who is a minor may perform halizah while she is still in her childhood’. Raba said: [She must wait with halizah] until she has reached the age of [valid] vows. The law however, is [that she must not perform halizah] until she has produced two [pubic] hairs.

IF [A SISTER-IN-LAW] PERFORMED HALIZAH IN THE PRESENCE OF TWO etc. R. Joseph b. Manyumi stated in the name of R. Nahman: The halachah is not in agreement with this pair. But, surely. R. Nahman had once stated this; for R. Joseph b. Manyumi stated in the name of R. Nahman: The halachah is that halizah [must be performed] in the presence of three [judges] — [Both are] required: For if the first only had been stated, it might have been assumed [that three judges are required] ab initio only. but that ex post facto even two [judges are enough] hence we were taught that ‘the halachah is not in agreement with this pair’. And if we had been taught that ‘the halachah is not in agreement with this pair’ but in accordance with the ruling of the first Tanna, it might have been assumed [that this applies only] ex post facto, but that ab initio five [judges] are required, [hence the former statement was also] required.

IT ONCE HAPPENED THAT A MAN SUBMITTED TO HALIZAH etc. PRIVATELY BETWEEN HIMSELF AND HERSELF! How, then, can we know it? — Rab Judah replied in the name of Samuel: When witnesses observed it from without.

The question was raised. Did it happen that the HALIZAH was performed privately BETWEEN HIMSELF AND HERSELF outside, AND THE CASE WAS BROUGHT BEFORE R. AKIBA IN PRISON, or perhaps it happened that the HALIZAH was performed BETWEEN HIMSELF AND HERSELF in prison? — Rab Judah replied in the name of Rab: The incident occurred in prison and the case also came up for decision in prison.\textsuperscript{45} [1]

(30) V. Glos. s.v. Mi’un. The Talmudic text may imply that the two daughters in-law, as minors, refused to contract levirate marriage with the brothers of their dead husband, so that the names of the deceased were ‘blotted out of Israel’ (cf. Golds.). Accordingly the rendering of the text should be ‘two (of) his (several) sons were drowned’. The text, however, might also be rendered: ‘His two sons were drowned (after) his two daughters-in-law had made declarations of refusal (against them)’.

Cf. supra 101b.

Even ex post facto, which is the case spoken of in our Mishnah, halizah is invalid if no three eligible judges were present.

Of which our Mishnah speaks (cf. supra n. 3).

In agreement with R. Judah (cf. supra 101a).

To indicate that even in the dispute between the first Tanna and R. Judah the halachah is in agreement with the former.

The ambiguity in our Mishnah is due to a reading which omits the Waw in so that it is possible to join ‘in prison’ either to the previous, or to the following clause (cf. Tosaf. s.v. הַקְּנַיִם).

During the revolt of Bar Kokeba (132-135 C.E.) R. Akiba was for a time held by the Romans as a prisoner and was subsequently martyred.

[Tosaf.: Rab Judah had it on tradition that it was so, even as it is related in T.J.: R. Johanan ha-Sandelar passed outside the prison wherein R. Akiba was incarcerated, calling out, ‘Who requires needles?’ ‘Who requires forks?’ . . . ‘How is it where the halizah was performed between himself and herself?’ R. Akiba thereupon looked out through the window and replied: ‘Hast thou of needles (kushin)? Hast thou kasher?’; thus intimating that it is legal. V. Tosef. quoted in ייחנה ייחנה for a slightly different version].

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 106a

Our Rabbis taught: A halizah under a false assumption is valid. What is meant by ‘a halizah under a false assumption’? Resh Lakish explained: Where a levir is told, ‘Submit to halizah and you will thereby wed her’, Said R. Johanan to him: I am in the habit of repeating a Baraitha, ‘Whether he had the intention [of performing the commandment of halizah] and she had no such intention, or whether she had such intention and he had not, her halizah is invalid, it being necessary that both shall at the same time have such intention’, and you say that her halizah is valid! But [in fact this is the meaning]. When a levir is told, ‘Submit to her halizah on the condition that she gives you two hundred zuz’.

So it was also taught [elsewhere]: A halizah under a false assumption is valid; and what is meant by a halizah under a false assumption? One in which the levir is told ‘Submit to her halizah on condition that she gives you two hundred zuz’. Such an incident, in fact, occurred with a woman who fell to the lot of an unworthy levir who was told, ‘Submit to her halizah on condition that she gives you two hundred zuz’. When this case came before R. Hiyya he ruled that the halizah was valid.

A woman once came before R. Hiyya b. Abba. ‘Stand up, my daughter’, the Rabbi said to her. ‘Her sitting is her standing’, replied her mother. ‘Do you know this man?’ the Rabbi asked. ‘Yes’, she answered him, ‘it is her money that he saw and he would like to it’. ‘Do you not like him then?’ he asked the woman. ‘No’, she replied. ‘Submit to her halizah’, [the Rabbi] said to [the levir], ‘and you will thereby wed her’. After the latter had submitted to halizah at her hands he said to him, ‘Now she is ineligible to marry you; submit again to a proper halizah that she may be permitted to marry a stranger’.

A daughter of R. Papa's father-in-law fell to the lot of a levir who was unworthy of her. When [the levir] came before Abaye the latter said to him, ‘Submit to her halizah and you will thereby wed her’. Said R. Papa to him, ‘Does not the Master accept the [relevant] ruling of R. Johanan?’ — ‘What then could I tell him?’ [the other asked]. ‘Tell him’, the first replied, “submit to her halizah on condition that she gives you two hundred zuz.” After [the levir] had submitted to halizah at her hand [Abaye] said to her, ‘Go and give him [the stipulated sum]’. ‘She’, R. Papa replied, ‘was merely fooling him; was it not, in fact taught: If a man escaping from prison beheld a ferry boat and said [to the ferryman], ‘Take a denar and lead me across’, [the latter] can only claim his ordinary fare. From this then it is evident that the one can say to the other, ‘I was merely fooling you’; so here also [the woman may say], ‘I was merely fooling you’. ‘Where is your father?’ [Abaye] asked him. — ‘In town’, the other replied. ‘Where is your mother?’ — ‘In town’, the other again replied. He set his eyes upon them and they died.

Our Rabbis taught: A halizah under a false assumption is valid; a letter of divorce [given] under a false assumption is invalid. A halizah under coercion is invalid; a letter of divorce [given] under compulsion is valid. How is this to be understood? If it is a case where the man [ultimately] says, ‘I am willing’, the halizah also should be valid; and if he does not say, ‘I am willing’, a letter of divorce also should not [be valid]! — It is this that was meant: A halizah under a false assumption is always valid, and a letter of divorce [given] on a false assumption is always invalid; but a halizah under coercion and a letter of divorce [given] under coercion are sometimes valid and sometimes invalid, the former when the man [ultimately] declared, ‘I am willing’, and the latter, when he did not declare, ‘I am willing’. For it was taught: He shall offer it teaches that the man is coerced. It might [be assumed that the sacrifice may be offered up] against his will, it was, therefore, expressly stated, In accordance with his will. How then [are the two texts to be reconciled]? He is subjected to pressure until he says, ‘I am willing’. And so you find in the case of letters of divorce for women: The man is subjected to pressure until he says, ‘I am willing’.

Raba reported in the name of R. Sehora in the name of R. Huna: Halizah may be arranged even though [the parties] are unknown. A declaration of refusal may be arranged even though the parties are unknown. For this reason no certificate of halizah may be written unless the parties are known, and no certificate of mi’un may be written unless the parties are known, for fear of an erring Beth din.

Raba in his own name, however, stated: halizah must not be arranged unless the parties are known, nor may a declaration of refusal be heard unless the parties are known. For this reason it is permissible to write a certificate of halizah even though the parties are not known, and it is also permissible to write a certificate of mi’un even though the parties are not known, and we are not afraid of an erring Beth din.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 106b

HUSBAND'S BROTHER REFUSETH TO RAISE UP UNTO HIS BROTHER A NAME IN ISRAEL; HE WILL NOT PERFORM THE DUTY OF A HUSBAND'S BROTHER UNTO ME. THEN HE MAKES THE DECLARATION: I LIKE NOT TO TAKE HER. [THESE FORMULAE] WERE ALWAYS SPOKEN IN THE HOLY TONGUE. THEN SHALL HIS BROTHER'S WIFE DRAW NIGH UNTO HIM IN THE PRESENCE OF THE THE ELDERS AND DRAW HIS SHOE FROM OFF HIS FOOT, AND SPIT BEFORE HIS FACE, SUCH SPITTLE AS THE JUDGES CAN SEE, AND SHE RAISES HER VOICE AND SAYS: SO SHALL IT BE DONE UNTO THE MAN THAT DOTH NOT BUILD UP HIS BROTHER'S HOUSE, THUS FAR USED THEY TO RECITE. WHEN, HOWEVER, R. HYRKANUS, UNDER THE TEREBINTH AT KEFAR ETAM, ONCE DICTATED THE READING AND COMPLETED THE ENTIRE SECTION, THE PRACTICE WAS ESTABLISHED TO COMPLETE THE ENTIRE SECTION. [THAT] HIS NAME SHALL BE CALLED IN ISRAEL, ‘THE HOUSE OF HIM THAT HAD HIS SHOE DRAWN OFF’, IS A COMMANDMENT [TO BE PERFORMED] BY THE JUDGES AND NOT BY THE DISCIPLES. R. JUDAH, HOWEVER, RUL ED: IT IS A DUTY INCUMBENT UPON ALL PRESENT TO CRY ‘[THE MAN] THAT HAD HIS SHOE DRAWN OFF’. GEMARA. Rab Judah stated: [This is the procedure in the performance of] the commandment of halizah: She recites; he recites; she draws off his shoe, spits and recites. What does he teach us [by this statement]? This is our very Mishnah! — It is this that he teaches us: The prescribed procedure is such, but if the order was reversed, it does not matter. So it was also taught: Whether the drawing off of the shoe preceded the spitting or whether the spitting preceded the drawing off, the act is valid.

Abaye ruled: The man who dictates the halizah formulae shall not read for the woman [the word] not separately and [the clause] he will perform the duty of a husband's brother unto me separately, since this would convey the meaning, ‘He desires to perform the duty of a husband's brother to me’; but [should read without a pause]. He will not perform the duty of a husband's brother unto me. Nor shall he read for the levir [the word] not separately and [the clause] I like separately; for this would convey the meaning. ‘I like to take her’; but [he should read without a pause], I like not to take her. Raba, however, stated: This is only the conclusion of a sentence, and in a concluding clause [a pause] is of no consequence.

R. Ashi found R. Kahana making a painful effort to read out for a woman, He will not perform the duty of a husband's brother unto me, [without a pause]. ‘Does not the Master,’ he asked him, ‘accept the ruling of Raba?’ — ‘Raba’, the other replied, ‘admits in [the case of the formula] He will not perform the duty of a husband's brother unto me [that no pause is permitted].

Abaye stated: The person who writes a certificate of halizah shall word it as follows: ‘We read out for her from My husband's brother refuseth to will perform the duty of a husband's brother unto me; and we read out for him from not to take her; and we read out for her from So to him that had his shoe drawn off.

Mar Zutra ruled [the paper] and copied the full text. Mar b. Idi demurred: But, surely, [a section only of the Pentateuch] is not permitted to be written! The law, however, is in agreement with the ruling of Mar Zutra.

Abaye stated: If, when she spat. the wind carried the spittle away, her act is invalid. What is the reason? — It is necessary that she shall spit before his face. If, therefore, he was tall and she was short, and the wind carried the spittle away, her act is deemed to have been before his face. If, however, she was tall and he was short, it is necessary that [the spittle] shall drop to the level of his face before it disappears.

Raba stated: If she ate garlic and then spat or if she ate a clod of earth and then spat, her act is invalid. What is the reason? — Because it is necessary that she shall spit of her own free will, which is not the case here.

Raba further stated: The judges must see the spittle issuing from the mouth of the sister-in-law, because it is written in Scripture Before the eyes of the elders and spit.

[THAT] HIS NAME SHALL BE CALLED IN ISRAEL, ‘THE HOUSE OF HIM THAT HAD HIS SHOE DRAWN OFF’ IS A COMMANDMENT [TO BE PERFORMED] BY THE JUDGES AND NOT BY THE DISCIPLES. It was taught: R. Judah stated: We were once sitting before R. Tarfon when a sister-in-law came to perform halizah, and he said to us, ‘Exclaim all of you: Haluz ha-na’al, haluz ha-na’al, haluz ha-na’al!’ [

GEMARA. Rab Judah stated in the name of Samuel: What is Beth Shammai's reason? Because no stipulation is attachable to a marriage, and were a married minor to be allowed to exercise the right of refusal, it would come to be assumed that a stipulation is attachable to a marriage. What reason, however, could be advanced where she only entered the bridal chamber and no cohabitation had taken place? Because no condition is attachable to an entry into the bridal chamber. What reason, however, could be advanced where the father entrusted her to the representatives of the husband? — The Rabbis made no distinction.

And Beth Hillel? — Since [a minor's marriage] involves betrothal and kethubah no one would suggest that her husband's cohabitation was an act of fornication.

R. Papa explained: Beth Shammai's reason is because of the usufruct, and Beth Hillel's reason also is because of the usufruct. ‘Beth Shammai's reason is because of the usufruct’, for should you say that a married minor may exercise the right of refusal, [her husband] might [indiscriminately] pluck [the fruit] and consume it, [knowing as he does] that she might leave him at any moment. Beth Hillel, however, [say]: On the contrary; since it is laid down that she may exercise the right of refusal, [her husband] would make every effort to improve her property, fearing that if [he should] not [do this], her relatives might give her their advice [against him] and thus take her away from him.

Raba stated: The real reason of Beth Shammai is because no man would take the trouble to prepare a meal and then spoil it. And Beth Hillel: — Both are pleased [to be married to each other] in order that they may be known as married people.

BETH SHAMMAI RULED . . . AGAINST A HUSBAND etc. R. Oshaia stated: She may make a declaration of refusal in respect of his ma'amor but she has no right to make a declaration of refusal in respect of his levirate bond.\textsuperscript{42}

Said R. Hisda: What is R. Oshaia's reason? — She has the power to annul a ma'amor which is effectuated with her consent; she has no power, however, to sever the levirate bond since it is binding on her against her will.\textsuperscript{43} But, surely, [levirate marriage by] cohabitation may be effectuated against her will\textsuperscript{44}

\item And the validity of the marriage is not in any way impaired even if the condition that was attached to it was not

\item If a minor at such a stage in her marriage were allowed mi'un it might be assumed that the reason why her union was severed without a divorce was not because of her minority but owing to an unfulfilled condition that was attached to her entry into the bridal chamber, and so it would be concluded erroneously that even in the case of one who is of age a condition attached is valid.
\item I.e., his successors in authority over the minor, after his death, viz., his wife and sons. (Cf. supra p. 738, n. 2).
Where a father is alive the law of mi'un (with the exception of the case mentioned supra p. 2, n. 6) does not apply, since he has the right to give her away in perfect and proper marriage while she is a minor.
\item An act which, though regarded as marriage, is a stage preceding that of entry into the bridal chamber, where a condition is valid, even in the case of a bride who is of age.
\item Between a marriage fully consummated and one in its earlier stage. Since both are cases of marriage, permissibility of mi'un in the latter might lead to an erroneous conclusion concerning the former.
\item Why do they not provide against the possibility of erroneous conclusions.
\item No one would draw comparisons between a marriage the validity of which is only Rabbinical and one which is Pentateuchally binding.
\item V. Supra p. 739, n. 1.
\item Which would be the case were a married minor to be allowed to leave her husband by mi'un only without a proper divorce. Mi'un was, therefore, forbidden in order to encourage the marriage of orphan minors who, if they remain unmarried, are subject to the dangers of immorality and prostitution. Cf. infra 112b.
\item In which case the reason given is inapplicable.
\item Retrospective prostitution.
\item V. Supra p. 739, n. 9.
\item Though such an act on the part of the minor's mother or brothers constitutes marriage in accordance with Rabbinic law, as does such an act on the part of the father even in the case of one who is of age (cf. Keth. 48b), nevertheless the question of fornication does not in such a case arise. Why, then, do Beth Shammai forbid mi'un even at this stage of marriage?
\end{enumerate}
Cf. supra p. 739, n. 11.

How, in view of the reason advanced, could they allow mi'un even in marriage!

Lit., ‘there is’.

V. supra p. 739, n. 1.

Of the minor's melog (v. Glos.) property.

Who after marriage is entitled to the usufruct of his wife's melog property.

Lit., ‘for in the end she stands to go out’.

The wedding feast.

Had mi'un been allowed after a marriage no one would, for this reason, ever marry a minor; and this might lead to immoral consequences. Cf. supra p. 740, n. 2.

Despite the objections pointed out by Beth Shammai.

The possible loss does not, therefore, prevent a man from marrying a minor.

According to Beth Hillel who allow the right of refusal even against a levir.

If the levir made a ma'amor, she can annul it by mi'un, and no divorce is required.

Only halizah can sever the levirate bond. In ordinary cases where the levir addressed to the yebamah a ma'amor, she requires for her freedom both a divorce to annul the effect of the ma'amor, and halizah to sever the levirate bond.

Because it is due to her marriage with the deceased brother, which, since she did not exercise her right of refusal against him, remained valid.

Cf. supra 53b, 54a.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 107b

and yet she may annul it! — [This,] however, [is really the reason]: She may annul [a kinyan by] cohabitation or by a ma'amor, because it is the levir who effects it; she cannot, however, annul the levirate bond which the All Merciful has imposed upon her.

‘Ulla said: She may exercise her right of refusal even in respect of his levirate bond. What is the reason? [By her refusal] she annuls the marriage of her first husband.

Raba raised an objection against ‘Ulla: The rival of anyone, entitled to make a declaration of refusal, who did not exercise her right, must perform the ceremony of halizah [if her husband died childless] but may not contract levirate marriage. But why? Let her exercise her right of refusal now and thereby annul the marriage of her first husband, and then let her rival contract the levirate marriage! — The rival of a forbidden relative is different. For Rami b. Ezekiel learnt: If a minor made a declaration of refusal against her husband she is permitted to marry his father, but if against the levir she is forbidden to marry his father. It is thus evident that at the time she became subject to the levirate marriage she is looked upon as his daughter-in-law; similarly here also [marriage of the rival is forbidden because] at the time of her subjection to the levirate marriage she is looked upon as his daughter's rival. Rab stated: If she made a declaration of refusal against one of the levirs she is forbidden [to marry] the others also; her case being analogous to that of the recipient of a letter of divorce. As the recipient of a letter of divorce is forbidden to all [the brothers] as soon as she is forbidden to one so is there no difference here also.

Samuel, however, stated: If she exercised her right of refusal against one [of the levirs] she is permitted to marry the others; her case being unlike that of the recipient of a letter of divorce. For with the recipient of a letter of divorce it is he who took the initiative against her; but here it is she who took the initiative against him, declaring, ‘I do not like you and I do not want you; it is you whom I dislike but I do like your fellow’.

R. Assi ruled: If she made a declaration of refusal against one [levir] she is permitted [to marry] even him. May it be assumed that he is of the same opinion as R. Oshaia who maintains that a minor has no right to make a declaration of refusal in respect of his levirate bond?  — In respect of one levir she may well be entitled to annul [the levirate bond]; here, however, we are dealing with two levirs [the reason being] that no declaration of refusal is valid against half a levirate bond.

When Rabin came he reported in the name of R. Johanan: If she exercised her right of refusal against one of the levirs she is permitted to marry the other brothers. [They], however did not agree with him. Who [are they who] did not agree with him?

Abaye said: Rab; Raba said: R. Oshaia; and others said: [Even] R. Assi.

BETH SHAMMAI RULED . . . IN HIS PRESENCE etc. It was taught: Beth Hillel said to Beth Shammai, ‘Did not the wife of Pishon the camel driver make her declaration of refusal in his absence?’ ‘Pishon the camel driver’, answered Beth Shammai to Beth Hillel, ‘used a reversible measure; they, therefore, used against him also a reversible measure’. Since, however, he was eating the usufruct it is obvious that [the minor] was married to him; but [if this was the case] did not Beth Shammai rule [it may be asked] that a married minor may not exercise the right of refusal! They bound him with two bonds.

BETH SHAMMAI RULED: . . . BEFORE BETH DIN etc. Elsewhere we learned: Halizah and declarations of mi’un [must be witnessed by] three men. — Rabbah replied: This [ruling is that of] Beth Shammai. Abaye said: You may even say [that it is the ruling of] Beth Hillel. All that Beth Hillel really stated was that no experts are required; three men, however, are indeed required. As it was, in fact, taught: Beth Shammai ruled [that mi’un must be declared] before Beth din, and Beth Hillel ruled: Either before a Beth din or not before a Beth din. Both, however, agree that a quorum of three is required. R. Jose son of R. Judah and R. Eleazar son of R. Simeon ruled: [Mi’un is] valid [even if it was declared] before two. R. Joseph b. Manyumi reported in the name of R. Nahman that the halachah is in agreement with this pair.

BETH SHAMMAI, HOWEVER, ANSWERED . . . AND SHE DECLARES HER REFUSAL etc. But, surely, she has already made a declaration of refusal! — Samuel replied: [The meaning is] TILL SHE IS OF AGE and states, ‘I am willing to abide by the first declaration of refusal’. ‘Ulla replied: Two [different statements] are here made: Either she declares her refusal ‘and is betrothed after she is of age, or she declares her refusal, and is married forthwith.

According to ‘Ulla one can well understand why the expression, TILL SHE IS OF AGE OR DECLARES HER REFUSAL AND MARRIES AGAIN, was used. According to Samuel, however, it should have been stated ‘TILL SHE IS OF AGE and states’. This is a difficulty.

MISHNAH. WHICH MINOR MUST MAKE THE DECLARATION OF REFUSAL?

ANY WHOSE MOTHER OR BROTHERS HAVE GIVEN HER IN MARRIAGE WITH HER CONSENT. IF, HOWEVER, THEY GAVE HER IN MARRIAGE WITHOUT HER CONSENT SHE NEED NOT MAKE ANY DECLARATION OF REFUSAL.

R. HANINA B. ANTIGONUS RULED: ANY CHILD WHO IS UNABLE TO TAKE CARE OF HER TOKEN OF BETROTHAL NEED NOT MAKE ANY DECLARATION OF REFUSAL.

R. ELIEZER RULED: THE ACT OF A MINOR HAS NO VALIDITY AT ALL, BUT [SHE IS TO BE REGARDED] AS ONE SEDUCED. IF, THEREFORE, SHE IS THE DAUGHTER OF AN ISRAELITE [AND WAS MARRIED] TO A PRIEST SHE MAY NOT EAT TERUMAH, AND IF SHE IS THE DAUGHTER OF A PRIEST [AND WAS MARRIED] TO AN ISRAELITE SHE MAY EAT TERUMAH.

R. ELIEZER B. JACOB RULED: IN THE CASE OF ANY HINDRANCE [IN REMARRYING]⁶⁰ THAT WAS DUE TO THE HUSBAND, [THE MINOR] IS DEEMED TO HAVE BEEN⁶¹ HIS WIFE; BUT IN THE CASE OF ANY HINDRANCE [IN REMARRYING] THAT WAS NOT DUE TO THE HUSBAND SHE IS NOT DEEMED TO HAVE BEEN⁶² HIS WIFE.

GEMARA. Rab Judah stated, and others say that it was taught In a Baraitha: Originally, a certificate of mi'un was drafted [as follows]: ‘I do not like him and I do not want him and I do not desire to be married to him’. When, however, it was observed that the formula was too long and it was feared that

(1) How could she annul a bond which the ‘All Merciful has imposed upon her’?
(2) The deceased; so that the levirate bond ceases to exist retrospectively as if it had never been in existence.
(3) I.e., a girl who married while she was a minor and whose father did not receive the token of her betrothal. This may occur even during the lifetime of her father if she marries a second time after she had been divorced by her first husband to whom she had been given in marriage by her father. After a divorce the father's right to give his ‘minor’ daughter in marriage ceases.
(4) With the levir, though he is the father or any other forbidden relative of the minor. It is only the rival of a woman whose marriage is Pentateuchally valid who is exempt from both levirate marriage and halizah with the forbidden relative of that woman. The marriage of a minor, who could exercise her right of refusal at any moment, is only Rabbincally valid.
(5) Supra 2b. Since after all the minor did not exercise her right of refusal her marriage is valid enough to forbid her rival's levirate marriage, as is the case with a Pentateuchally valid marriage.
(6) Who, by the declaration of refusal of the minor, ceases to be her rival.
(7) With the minor's forbidden relative.
(8) From a minor who becomes subject to halizah. While the minor may, by annulling her marriage retrospectively by the exercise of the right of mi'un, procure exemption from the halizah, her rival cannot, through the minor's exercise of this right, obtain the freedom to marry the minor's forbidden relative.
(9) Who, owing to her retrospective annulling by mi'un of her marriage with his son, is to him now a mere stranger.
(10) To whom she has become bound by the levirate obligation when her husband, against whom she did not exercise her right of mi'un, died childless.
(11) Since she is forbidden to marry the levir's father.
(12) The levir's father's.
(13) A status which she retains despite the mi'un.
(14) Though her mi'un which annulled her marriage retrospectively exempted her from halizah.
(15) Her subsequent estrangement, effected by the minor's mi'un, cannot remove her known status of forbidden relative's rival. Cf. supra note 10.
(16) A minor.
(17) Lit., ‘this’.
(18) From one of the levirs.
(19) Lit., ‘not?’
(20) The levir who gave her the letter of divorce.
(21) The mi'un which causes her to be forbidden to marry one of the brothers causes her, as in the case of divorce, to be equally forbidden to all the other brothers.
(22) And he is presumed to have acted on behalf of all his brothers.
(23) And if she did exercise It she still remains permitted to the levir, v. supra p. 741, n. 8.
(24) For the invalidity of the mi'un.
(25) She is equally bound to the two levirs, and her refusal was declared against one of them only.
(26) From Palestine to Babylon.
(27) Who stated supra that if a minor made a declaration of refusal against one of the brothers she is forbidden to all.
(28) R. Johanan permitted her to marry the brothers only where there were several of them (the reason being the same as that of R. Assi that a part of a levirate bond cannot be severed); where, however, there was only one brother R. Johanan forbids him to marry the minor who made a declaration of refusal against him. This ruling is contrary to that of R.
Oshaia who in all cases regards mi’un against a levirate bond as invalid.

(29) Much more so R. Oshaia (v. supra n. 13). Even R. Assi who, unlike R. Oshaia agrees with R. Johanan in permitting the marriage of a minor, after her mi’un, only where the number of levirs is more than one, differs, nevertheless, from him in allowing the minor to marry the very levir against whom her declaration of refusal was made.

(30) מדרד פארשיה דמהש יפשיר (Heb. קפריסא, 'knot', ‘bond’), a measure of capacity having a deep receptacle at one end and a shallow one at the other, to defraud thereby sellers and buyers; ‘a false measure’. This is a metaphor expressing Pishon's double dealing with his wife in pretending merely to eat the fruit of her melog property, to which he was in fact entitled, while in reality he was encroaching upon the property itself which belonged to her.

(31) He was paid ‘measure for measure’, ‘tit for tat’. In other cases, however, mi’un must be declared before Beth din only.

(32) Of the minor's melog property.

(33) Not merely betrothed. Before marriage, even if betrothal had taken place, a husband is not entitled to the usufruct of his wife's melog property.

(34) How then could she here at all make such a declaration!

(35) Metaph. He was subjected to two penalties. מדרד פארשיה דמהש יפשיר (Heb. קפריסא) ‘knot’, ‘bond’.

(36) Supra 101b, Sanh. 2a.

(37) Whose ruling this statement represents.

(38) Who require the presence of a Beth din (v. our Mishnah) which consists of three men.

(39) Lit., ‘until here’.

(40) Mumhin, plur. of mumhe, v. Glos.

(41) ‘Of experts’. This is the reading supra 101b.

(42) Which confirms Abaye's opinion.

(43) Cur. edd., בר ('son'), is apparently a misprint for בנה ('son of R.'), which is the reading supra, loc. cit.

(44) Cf. loc. cit. where the reading is ‘Jose’.

(45) Sanh. 2a, supra loc. cit.

(46) Who require a quorum of two only, v. supra loc. cit.

(47) When she was a minor. Why then does our Mishnah speak of a second declaration of refusal after she has become of age?

(48) By the second refusal (cf. supra n. 8) only the confirmation of the first was intended. Without such confirmation it might be possible to assume that she had changed her opinion and withdrawn her first declaration.

(49) When she may no more exercise the right of mi’un even after a betrothal only.

(50) While still a minor. Since, according to Beth Shammai, mi’un after a marriage is invalid she would not be able, once she was married, to exercise that right again. The word והרי translated AND DECLARES etc. should be rendered OR DECLARES etc.

(51) ‘OR . . . REFUSAL is wanting in cur. edd., but is to be added (cf. our Mishnah).

(52) That she abides by her declaration.

(53) If she desires to leave her husband.

(54) She may leave her husband without any legal formality, and may marry any other man.

(55) The money or object whereby the kinyan of betrothal is effected. Cf. Kid. 2af.

(56) Cf. Bah, Bomb. ed. and separate edd. of the Mishnah; Cur. edd., ‘Eleazar’.

(57) If she was given away in marriage.

(58) Her marriage being invalid, she remains in her father's control, and, like any other daughter of an Israelite who never married a priest, is forbidden to eat terumah.

(59) As the daughter of a priest who never married an Israelite. Cf. supra n. 6.

(60) Lit., ‘retention (in the house of her husband)’.

(61) Lit., ‘as if she was’.

(62) Lit., ‘as if she was not’.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 108a

people might mistake it for a letter of divorce, the following formula was instituted: ‘On the Nth day, So-and-so the daughter of So-and-so made a declaration of refusal in our presence’.
Our Rabbis taught: What is regarded as mi’un? — If she said, ‘I do not want So-and-so my husband’, or ‘I do not want the betrothal which my mother or my brothers have arranged for me’. R. Judah said even more than this: Even if while sitting in the bridal litter, and being carried from her father's house to the home of her husband, she said, ‘I do not want So-and-so my husband’, her statement is regarded as a declaration of refusal. R. Judah said more than this: Even if, while the wedding guests were reclining [on their dining couches] in her husband's house and she was standing and waiting upon them, she said to them, ‘I do not want my husband So-and-so’, her statement is regarded as a declaration of refusal. R. Jose b. Judah said more than this: Even if, while her husband sent her to a shopkeeper to bring him something for himself, she said, ‘I do not want So-and-so my husband’, you can have no mi’un more valid than this.

R. HANINA B. ANTIGONUS RULED: ANY CHILD etc. Rab Juda h reported in the name of Samuel: The halachah is in agreement with R. Hanina b. Antigonus.

A Tanna taught: If a minor who did not make a declaration of refusal married herself again, her marriage, it was stated in the name of R. Judah b. Bathryra, is to be regarded as her declaration of refusal.

It was asked: What is the law where she was only betrothed? — Come and hear: If a minor who did not make a declaration of refusal betrothed herself [to another man], her betrothal, it was stated in the name of R. Judah b. Bathryra, is regarded as her declaration of refusal.

The question was raised: Do the Rabbis differ from R. Judah b. Bathryra or not? If you can find some ground for holding that they differ, [it may be asked whether only] in respect of betrothal, or even in respect of marriage? And should you find some reason for holding that the halachah is in agreement with him [it may be asked whether only] in respect of marriage or also in respect of betrothal? — Come and hear: Rab Judah stated in the name of Samuel that the halachah is in agreement with R. Judah b. Bathryra; [since it had to be stated that] the halachah [is so] it may be inferred that they differ.

The question, however, still remains [whether the minor spoken of] is one who was married in the first instance or perhaps she is one who was only betrothed. — Come and hear: Abdan's daughters-in-law rebelled [against their husbands]. When Rabbi sent a pair of Rabbis to interrogate them, some women said to them, ‘See your husbands are coming’. ‘May they’, they replied, ‘be your husbands!’ and ‘Rabbi decided: ‘No more significant mi’un than this is required’. Was not this a case of marriage? — No, one of betrothal only. The halachah, however, is in agreement with R. Judah b. Bathryra, even where marriage with the first husband has taken place.

R. ELIEZER RULED etc. Rab Judah stated in the name of Samuel: I have surveyed [the rulings] of the Sages from all aspects and found no man who was so consistent in his treatment of the minor as R. Eliezer. For R. Eliezer regarded her as one taking a walk with [her husband] in his courtyard who, when she rises from his bosom, performs her ritual immersion and is permitted to eat terumah in the evening.

It was taught: R. Eliezer stated: There is no validity whatsoever in the act of a minor, and her husband is entitled neither to anything she may find, nor to the work of her hands, nor may he annul her vows; he is not her heir and he may not defile himself for her. This is the general rule: She is in no respect regarded as his wife, except that it is necessary for her to make a declaration of refusal. R. Joshua stated: Her husband has the right to anything she finds and to the work of her hands, to annul her vows, to be her heir, and to defile himself for her; the general principle being that she is regarded as his wife in every respect, except that she may leave him\(^{36}\) by a declaration of refusal.\(^{39}\) Said Rabbi: The views of R. Eliezer are more acceptable than those of R. Joshua; for R. Eliezer is consistent throughout in his treatment of the minor while R. Joshua makes distinctions. What [unreasonable] distinctions does he make? — If she is regarded as his wife, she should also require a letter of divorce.\(^{40}\) But according to R. Eliezer also [it may be argued] if she is not regarded as his wife, she should require no mi'un either! — Should she then depart without any formality whatever?\(^ {41}\)

R. ELIEZER B. JACOB RULED: etc. What is to be understood by a HINDRANCE THAT WAS DUE TO THE HUSBAND and a HINDRANCE THAT WAS NOT DUE TO THE HUSBAND? — Rab Judah replied in the name of Samuel: If when she was asked to marry\(^ {42}\) she replied, ‘[I must refuse the offer] owing to So-and-so my husband’; such a HINDRANCE is one THAT WAS DUE TO THE HUSBAND.\(^ {43}\) [If, however, she refused the offer] ‘because’, [she said] ‘the men [who proposed] are not suitable for me’; such a HINDRANCE is one THAT WAS NOT DUE TO THE HUSBAND.

Both Abaye b. Abin and R. Hanina b. Abin gave the following explanation: If he gave her a letter of divorce, the HINDRANCE IS one THAT WAS DUE TO THE HUSBAND\(^ {44}\) and, therefore, he is forbidden to marry her relatives and she is forbidden to marry his relatives, and he also disqualifies her from marrying a priest.\(^ {45}\) If, however, she exercised her right of refusal against him, the HINDRANCE is one THAT WAS NOT DUE TO THE HUSBAND and, therefore, he is permitted to marry her relatives and she is permitted to marry his relatives, and he does not disqualify her from marrying a priest.\(^ {46}\)

But surely, this\(^ {47}\) was specifically stated below: If a minor made a declaration of refusal against a man, he is permitted to marry her relatives and she is permitted to marry his relatives, and he does not disqualify her from marrying a priest; but if he gave her a letter of divorce he is forbidden to marry her relatives and she is forbidden to marry his relatives, and he also disqualifies her from marrying a priest!\(^ {48}\) — The latter\(^ {49}\) is merely an explanation [of the former].\(^ {50}\)

MISHNAH. IF A MINOR MADE A DECLARATION OF REFUSAL AGAINST A MAN, HE IS PERMITTED [TO MARRY] HER RELATIVES AND SHE IS PERMITTED TO [MARRY] HIS RELATIVES, AND HE DOES NOT DISQUALIFY HER FROM [MARRYING] A PRIEST;\(^ {51}\) BUT IF HE GAVE HER A LETTER OF DIVORCE, HE IS FORBIDDEN TO [MARRY] HER RELATIVES AND SHE IS FORBIDDEN TO [MARRY] HIS RELATIVES, AND HE ALSO DISQUALIFIES HER FROM [MARRYING] A PRIEST.\(^ {52}\) IF HE GAVE HER A LETTER OF DIVORCE AND REMARRIED HER AND, AFTER SHE HAD EXERCISED HER RIGHT OF REFUSAL AGAINST HIM, SHE WAS MARRIED TO ANOTHER MAN AND BECAME A WIDOW OR WAS DIVORCED, SHE IS PERMITTED TO RETURN TO HIM.\(^ {53}\) IF, HOWEVER, SHE EXERCISED HER RIGHT OF REFUSAL AGAINST HIM\(^ {54}\) AND HE REMARRIED HER, AND SUBSEQUENTLY GAVE HER A LETTER OF DIVORCE AND THEN SHE WAS MARRIED TO ANOTHER MAN AND BECAME A WIDOW OR WAS DIVORCED, SHE IS FORBIDDEN TO RETURN TO HIM.\(^ {55}\)

(1) And might consequently include the formula in letters of divorce also.
(2) The minor.
(3) Lit., ‘with which they have consecrated me’.
(4) I.e., extended the scope of mi'un still further.
(5) י"וחנה.
(6) Lit., ‘and goes
(7) Though it might be objected that, had she really meant what she said, she would have refused to be carried to her husband.
Lit., ‘it is’.

(9) V. supra note 3.

(10) Lit., ‘and giving drink’.

(11) Though her waiting upon the guests might seem to contradict her declaration, and though no proper Beth din is present.

(12) Lit., ‘behold it’.

(13) Lit., ‘an object of his’.

(14) Tosef. Yeb. XIII. Though her statement might possibly be the result of a mere outburst against her husband for troubling her with his errand, and though no one but the shopkeeper was present when she made the statement.

(15) A minor who did not make her declaration of refusal.

(16) Not married. Has betrothal the same validity as marriage?

(17) Do they require separate mi'un, but not in the case of marriage, where they agree with R. Judah.

(18) R. Judah; though he is in the minority.

(19) In respect of marriage as well as in that of betrothal.

(20) Had they all been of the same opinion there would have been no need to make the statement that the halachah agrees with him.

(21) Concerning whom it was ruled that no mi'un is required.

(22) I.e., to her first husband.

(23) But if married, specific mi'un is required.

(24) Abdan was one of Rabbi's disciples, who, after an incident with R. Ishmael, lost his two sons the husbands of the young women here mentioned. Cf. supra 105b.

(25) Who were minors.

(26) Refusing to perform their marital obligations.

(27) To ascertain whether their refusal was in earnest.

(28) I.e., you are welcome to them.

(29) Lit. ‘what not (but) that she was married’, i.e., each of them was married to her husband, and, since a mere casual remark was nevertheless accepted by Rabbi as mi'un, it may be inferred that an actual marriage with, or a betrothal to another man may even more so be regarded as mi'un.

(30) Cf. supra p. 746, n. 4.

(31) Necessitated by their connubial intercourse.

(32) If her father is a priest, though her husband is an Israelite. R. Eliezer does not regard the minor as a wife either in respect of the requirement of mi'un or in respect of any other restrictions or privileges such as those relating to terumah.

(33) To which a lawful husband is entitled.

(34) Which is the privilege of a husband. Cf. Num. XXX. 71f.

(35) If he is a priest. Only a lawful husband may. Cf. Lev. XXI, 2.

(36) If she wishes to marry another man.

(37) Rabbinic law has conferred upon him the same rights as those of a lawful husband. Cf. supra n. 4.

(38) Even if he is a priest (cf. supra n. 6). She is regarded as a meth mizwah (v. Glos.), hence he may defile himself for her though Pentateuchally she is not his proper wife.

(39) And no letter of divorce is required.

(40) Mi'un should not have been allowed.

(41) Certainly not. Hence the requirement of mi'un.

(42) While she was still living with her first husband.

(43) Since the minor has shewn by her declaration that it was her desire to continue to live with him.

(44) Since she did not exercise her right of refusal it is obvious that as far as she was concerned the union would never have been broken.

(45) Like any other divorced woman.

(46) Since she is not regarded as his wife.

(47) Our Mishnah according to the explanation of Abaye and R. Hanina.

(48) V. Mishnah intro. Why then should the same ruling be recorded twice?

(49) The Mishnah cited.

(50) R. Eliezer b. Jacob's ruling in our Mishnah.
(51) Since she is not regarded as his wife.
(52) Like any other divorced woman.
(53) It is only a divorced woman that must not be remarried by her first husband after she had been married to another (v. Deut. XXIV, 2-4) but not a minor who left her husband by mi'un which even cancels her status of divorcée in which she may find herself after a previous separation from her husband.
(54) Her first husband.
(55) Since her second separation from her first husband was by means of a letter of divorce, she retains the status of a divorcée. Cf. supra n. 6.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 108b

THIS IS THE GENERAL RULE: IF DIVORCE FOLLOWED MI'UN¹ SHE IS FORBIDDEN TO RETURN TO HIM,² AND IF MI'UN FOLLOWED DIVORCE¹ SHE IS PERMITTED TO RETURN TO HIM.³

GEMARA. It is thus⁶ evident that mi'un has the power to cancel⁷ divorce; but this, surely, is contradicted by the following: IF A MINOR EXERCISED THE RIGHT OF REFUSAL AGAINST A MAN AND THEN WAS MARRIED TO ANOTHER MAN WHO DIVORCED HER, AND AFTERWARDS TO ANOTHER MAN AGAINST WHOM SHE MADE A DECLARATION OF REFUSAL, AND THEN TO ANOTHER MAN WHO DIVORCED HER,⁸ SHE⁹ IS FORBIDDEN TO RETURN TO THE MAN FROM WHOM SHE WAS SEPARATED BY A LETTER OF DIVORCE, BUT IS PERMITTED TO RETURN TO HIM FROM WHOM SHE WAS SEPARATED BY HER EXERCISE OF THE RIGHT OF MI'UN, from which it is evident that mi'un against his fellow has no power to cancel⁹ his own divorce¹⁰ — Rab Judah replied in the name of Samuel: There is a break¹¹ [in our Mishnah], the one who taught the former¹¹ did not teach the latter.¹¹ Rababa¹² said: But what contradiction is this? It is possible that mi'un¹³ cancels his own divorce, but that the mi'un against his fellow¹⁴ does not cancel his own letter of divorce! But in what way is the mi'un against his fellow different from one against himself? that it should not cancel his own¹⁵ divorce? [Obviously for the reason that] as she is familiar with his¹⁵ hints and gesticulations he¹⁵ might allure her and marry her again.¹⁶ [But if this is the case] mi'un against himself also should not cancel his divorce, [for the same reason] that as she is familiar with his hints and gesticulations he might allure her and marry her again! Surely, he¹⁶ had already tried to allure¹⁷ her but she did not succumb.¹⁸

If a contradiction, however, [exists it is that between one ruling] concerning his fellow against [another ruling] concerning his fellow: IF, HOWEVER, SHE EXERCISED HER RIGHT OF REFUSAL AGAINST HIM AND HE REMARRIED HER, AND HAVING SUBSEQUENTLY GIVEN HER A LETTER OF DIVORCE SHE MARRIED ANOTHER MAN AND BECAME A WIDOW OR WAS DIVORCED, SHE IS FORBIDDEN TO RETURN TO HIM. The reason [then why she is forbidden to return to him is] because she BECAME A WIDOW OR WAS DIVORCED, but had she exercised her right of refusal¹⁹ she would have been permitted to return to him,²⁰ from which it is evident that the mi'un against his fellow has the power to cancel²¹ his own divorce; but this view is contradictory to the following: IF A MINOR EXERCISED THE RIGHT OF REFUSAL AGAINST HER HUSBAND AND THEN WAS MARRIED TO ANOTHER MAN WHO DIVORCED HER, AND AFTERWARDS TO AN OTHER MAN AGAINST WHOM SHE MADE A DECLARATION OF REFUSAL, SHE IS FORBIDDEN TO RETURN TO THE MAN FROM WHOM SHE WAS SEPARATED BY A LETTER OF DIVORCE, BUT IS PERMITTED TO RETURN TO HIM FROM WHOM SHE WAS SEPARATED BY HER EXERCISE OF THE RIGHT OF MI'UN. From this, then, it is evident that the mi'un against his fellow has no power to cancel his own divorce! R. Eleazar replied: There is a break [in our Mishnah]; the one who taught the former did not teach the latter. *Ulla replied: [The latter statement refers to a case where], for instance, she was thrice divorced, so that she appears like a grown up.

Who taught [the two respective statements of our Mishnah]? Rab Judah replied in the name of Rab: To this may be applied the Scriptural text, We have drunk our water for money; our wood cometh to us for price. In the time of proscription the following halachah was inquired for: If a minor left her first husband with a letter of divorce and her second husband through mi'un, may she return to her first husband? They hired a man for four hundred zuz, and they addressed the enquiry to R. Akiba in prison, and he stated that she was forbidden. R. Judah b. Bathyra [also was asked] at Nesibis and he too forbade her. Said R. Ishmael son of R. Jose: There was no need for us to [ascertain] such [an halachah]. For if in a prohibition involving the penalty of kareth he has been permitted how much more so in one [involving only the penalty of] a negative commandment. But the enquiry was in this manner: If [a minor] was the wife of his mother's brother, and consequently forbidden to him as a relative of the second degree, and his paternal brother [subsequently] married her and died, may she now exercise her right of mi'un, and thus annul her first marriage and so be permitted to contract the levirate marriage? Is mi'un valid after [a husband's] death where a religious performance is involved, or not? Two men were hired for four hundred zuz and when they came and asked R. Akiba in prison he ruled [that such levirate marriage was] forbidden; and when R. Judah b. Bathyra [was asked] at Nesibis he also decided that it was forbidden.

R. Isaac b. Ashian stated: Rab, however, admits that she is permitted to marry the brother of the man whom she is forbidden [to remarry]. Is not this obvious? For it is only he with whose hints and gesticulations she is familiar but not his brother! — It might have been assumed that [marriage with the one] should be forbidden as a preventive measure against the other hence we were taught [that his brother may marry her]. Another reading: R. Isaac b. Ashian stated: As she is forbidden to him, so is she forbidden to his brothers. But, surely, she is not familiar with their hints and gesticulations! — His brothers were forbidden [marriage with her] as a preventive measure against [marriage] with him.

(1) Irrespective of the number of times the man married and divorced her and the number of times she exercised the right of mi'un.
(2) Because her last separation was by means of a letter of divorce. Cf. supra. n. 8.
(3) Cf. supra n. 6.
(4) Others insert here, ‘to another against whom she exercised her right of refusal’ (cf. separate edd. of the Mishnah, Alfasi and Bah).
(5) Cur. edd., ‘this is the general rule’ is here omitted in accordance with the reading of the separate edd. of the Mishnah and Alfasi.
(6) Since it was ruled that IF MI'UN FOLLOWED DIVORCE SHE IS PERMITTED TO RETURN to her husband, despite the divorce that preceded it. Cf. supra p. 751, 15, 6.
(7) Lit., ‘comes . . . and cancels’.
(8) V. supra note 1.
(9) That preceded the mi'un.
(10) הברה (rt. ברכה ‘to break’). Others ‘contradiction’ (cf. Rashi, Levy and Jast ).
(11) Lit., ‘this’.
The case spoken of in the first statement of our Mishnah.

Spoken of in the second statement.

The first husband.

Lit., ‘entangle and bring her’, i.e., he might take advantage of their earlier familiarity and insidiously ingratiate himself with her, creating dislike between her and her second husband so that she might be led to exercise her right of mi’un against the latter and return to him.

Cf. supra n. 3.

Lit., ‘she was not entangled’, ‘confused’. The fact that she exercised the right of refusal against him after he had married her a second time and presumably made every effort to retain her, may be regarded as proof that she would not be induced to marry him a third time. When the mi’un, however, concerns a second husband. It is quite likely that, as her separation from her first husband was not due to her mi’un but to his divorcing her, she might readily consent to return to him and thus allow him to induce her to exercise her right of mi’un against her second husband.

Against her second husband.

Her first husband.

Lit., ‘comes . . . and cancels’.

V. supra p. 752, n. 2.

Lit., ‘comes...and cancels’.

V. supra p. 752, n. 7.

Lit., ‘this’.

It is in such a case only that she may not be remarried to any of the men, even though her separation from her last husband was by mi’un. If, however, she was divorced once or twice only, the mi’un against her last husband confirms her in the state of her minority, and she may be married again by either of the men who had previously divorced her.

Concerning which it was said supra that they represent the views of different authors.

Lit., ‘what (is the meaning) of that which was written’.

Lam. v, 4.

Lit., ‘danger’: the times of the suppression of the Bar Kokeba revolt in 135 C.E. when the study of the Torah and Rabbinic or oral law was forbidden by the Roman authorities under pain of death,

V. Glos.

The payment of the exorbitant sum of four hundred zuz for obtaining the required ruling recalled to Rab's mind the text of Lamentations quoted.

To return to her first husband.

Since, as is shewn presently, it is obvious that the minor is permitted to marry her first husband again after she has been separated from her second husband by mi’un.

Marriage with a married woman.

In the case of a minor who has exercised the right of mi’un.

Should one be permitted to marry her.

That of again marrying one's divorced wife. Thus it has been shewn that the author of the first statement in our Mishnah was Rab and that the author of the second statement was R. Ishmael son of R. Jose. Rab, though he belonged to the first generation of Amoraim, was also among the last of the Tannaim. Hence he was sometimes described as Tanna.

Forbidden by Rabbinic law. Cf. supra 21a.

After the death of her first husband.

Without issue, so that she became subject to levirate marriage with his paternal brother.

Against her first husband, through marriage with whom she became forbidden to the levir, the man in question.

And remove thereby her forbidden relationship with the levir.

With the levir between whom and herself no forbidden relationship any longer exists owing to her mi’un. Cf. supra notes 7 and 8.

Cur. edd. insert in parenthesis ‘her rival’.

That of the levirate marriage (Deut. XXV, 5).

V. Glos.

A divorced minor who may not be married again by the husband who divorced her though she was separated from her second husband by mi’un.

She is not regarded as his brother's divorcee.
Though her mūn does not alter her status of divorcee in respect of her former husband himself (for the reason stated supra) it does remove it as far as marriage with his brother is concerned. She is, as a result of her mūn, no longer regarded as his brother's divorcee.

And since it is only this familiarity that is the cause of the prohibition, it is obvious that where it does not apply there should be no prohibition.

Lit., ‘this’.

The husband who divorced her.

Cf. supra p. 755, n. 16. Why then should she be forbidden to marry them?

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 109a

MISHNAH. IF A MAN DIVORCED HIS WIFE AND REMARRIED HER, SHE IS PERMITTED TO MARRY THE LEVIR;¹ R. ELEAZAR² HOWEVER, FORBIDS.³ SIMILARLY, IF A MAN DIVORCED AN ORPHAN⁴ AND REMARRIED HER,⁵ SHE IS PERMITTED TO MARRY THE LEVIR;⁶ R. ELEAZAR, HOWEVER, FORBIDS.

IF A MINOR WAS GIVEN IN MARRIAGE BY HER FATHER AND WAS DIVORCED,⁷ [SO THAT SHE IS REGARDED] AS AN ‘ORPHAN’ IN HER FATHER’S LIFETIME,⁸ AND THEN HER HUSBAND REMARRIED HER,⁹ ALL AGREE THAT SHE IS FORBIDDEN TO MARRY THE LEVIR.¹⁰

GEMARA. ‘Efa stated: What is R. Eleazar's reason?¹¹ Because there was a period when she was forbidden to him.¹² Said the Rabbis to ‘Efa: If so, halizah also should not be required!¹³ And should you reply that the law is so indeed; surely [it may be pointed out] it was taught: In the name of R. Eleazar it was stated that she does perform halizah! — In truth, said ‘Efa, the reason of R. Eleazar is unknown to me.

Abaye said, This is the reason of R. Eleazar:¹¹ He was in doubt whether it was death¹⁴ that subjects [the widow to the levirate marriage] or whether it was the marriage that preceded it¹⁵ that subjects her to it. If it is death that subjects her to it, she should be subject to the¹⁶ levirate marriage; and if it is the marriage preceding it¹⁵ that subjects her to it, then there was a period when she was forbidden to him.¹⁷

Raba said: It was in fact obvious to R. Eleazar that it is death¹⁴ that subjects [the widow to the levirate marriage], but while all well know of the divorce, not all are aware of the remarriage.¹⁸ On the contrary! Remarriage gets noised abroad since the woman dwells with him! — Do we not, however, deal here [even with such a case as] where he remarried her in the evening and died in the morning?¹⁹

R. Ashi said, This is the reason of R. Eleazar:²⁰ He forbade [the levirate marriage of] these²¹ as a preventive measure against the remarriage of an ‘orphan’ [minor] in her father's lifetime.²² This²³ may also be logically supported; for in the final clause it was stated, IF A MINOR WAS GIVEN IN MARRIAGE BY HER FATHER AND SHE WAS DIVORCED [SO THAT SHE IS REGARDED] AS AN ‘ORPHAN’ IN HER FATHER’S LIFETIME, AND THEN REMARRIED HER HUSBAND, ALL AGREE THAT SHE IS FORBIDDEN TO MARRY THE LEVIR. Now what [need was there] to state [this when it is so] obvious²⁴ Consequently it must be²⁵ this that was taught: R. Eleazar's reason²⁰ is because he forbade [the levirate marriages of] those as a preventive measure against [the levirate marriage of] this one. Thus our case has been proved.

It was taught in agreement with R. Ashi: The Sages agree with R. Eleazar in respect of a minor whom her father had given in marriage and who was divorced [so that she is regarded] as an ‘orphan’ in her father's lifetime, and who then remarried [her husband], that she is forbidden to [contract the levirate marriage with] the levir, because her divorce was a perfectly legal divorce, whereas her remarriage was not a perfectly legal remarriage. This, however, applies only where he divorced her while she was a minor and remarried her while she was still a minor; but if he divorced her while she was a minor and remarried her when she was of age, and also if he remarried her while she was still a minor and she became of age while she was with him, and then he died, she may either perform halizah or contract the levirate marriage. In the name of R. Eleazar, however, it was stated: She must perform halizah but may not contract the levirate marriage.

Raba enquired of R. Nahman: What is [the law in respect of] her rival? — The other replied: [The prohibition against] herself is a preventive measure; shall we then go so far as to enact a preventive measure against a preventive measure? But, surely, it was taught: It was stated in the name of R. Eleazar, ‘She and her rival perform halizah’; Now can it possibly be imagined that she and her rival [are to perform halizah]? Consequently it must mean, ‘either she or her rival performs halizah’! — Are you not [in any case obliged to] offer an explanation? Explain, then, as follows: She performs halizah while her rival may either perform halizah or contract the levirate marriage.

GEMARA. But is this is permitted? Surely. Bar Kappara taught: A man should always cling to three things and keep away from three things. ‘A man should cling to the following three things’: Halizah, the making of peace and the annulment of vows; ‘and keep away from three things’: — From mi’un, from [receiving] deposits and from acting as surety! Mi’un [involving the fulfilment of a commandment] is different.

[Reverting to our previous text, ‘Bar Kappara taught: A man should always cling to three things . . . Halizah’, in accordance with [a statement of] Abba Saul. For it was taught: Abba Saul said, ‘If [a levir] married his sister-in-law on account of her beauty, or in order to gratify his sexual desires or with any other ulterior motive, it is as if he has infringed [the law of] incest; and I am even inclined to think that the child [from such a union] is a bastard’.

‘The making of peace’, for it is written, Seek peace and pursue it

---

(1) Though at the time his brother had divorced her she was forbidden to him as ‘his brother's divorcee’.
(2) Mishnah edd.: R. Eliezer.
(3) The reason is given infra.
(4) A minor who was given to him in marriage by her mother or brothers, and who is entitled, therefore, to exercise mi’un.
(5) Whether during her minority or after she had attained her majority.
(6) It is the death of her husband, not his marriage with her, that subjects her to the levir; and at the hour of his death she was no longer his divorcee but his wife.

(7) While she was still in her minority, the letter of divorce having been accepted on her behalf by her father (Rashi). (Cf. Keth. 46b) Rashi s.v. קידום and Sonc. ed. p. 266, n. 6.

(8) A father, in accordance with Pentateuchal law, is entitled to give his minor daughter in marriage only once. After she has been divorced, therefore, a father has no more right to give her away in marriage than her mother or brothers in the case where the father is dead. As in the latter case mi'un cancels marriage so it does in the former. The minor thus assumes the status of ‘orphan’ while her father is still alive.

(9) During her minority.

(10) If her husband died during her minority. She has the status of a divorcee because her letter of divorce, having been accepted by her father, is valid. Her subsequent marriage has no validity since her father can no longer act for her (cf. supra p. 756, n. 12) and her own act has no legal force.

(11) For forbidding to the levir his brother's divorced wife despite the fact that at the time of his brother's death she was married to him again.

(12) Lit., ‘she stood for him one hour in prohibition’; i.e., at the time she was divorced she was forbidden to him under the penalty of kareth as his ‘brother's divorcee’. Her subsequent remarriage does not alter her status.

(13) As any other ‘brother's divorcee’.

(14) Of the childless husband,

(15) Lit., ‘the first’.

(16) Lit., ‘behold she is thrust before him’.

(17) Cf. supra n. 4. Hence levirate marriage is forbidden (owing to the second possibility), and halizah is necessary (owing to the first).

(18) Should the levir, therefore, be permitted to contract with her the levirate marriage, it might be assumed by those who knew of the divorce and not of the remarriage that he married his brother's divorcee. Hence R. Eleazar's prohibition.

(19) Certainly we do, since the Mishnah applies to all possible cases. In such a case as the one mentioned the remarriage remains unknown.

(20) v. supra p. 757, n. 3.

(21) The remarried women spoken of in our Mishnah.

(22) Who, as stated in our Mishnah, may not be married by the levir because she retains the status of a divorcee.

(23) R. Ashi's explanation.

(24) As her father has no legal authority to give her in marriage, and as the remarriage that has been contracted by herself (a minor) has no validity, it is obvious that her previous legal status of divorcee remains in force and that she is, therefore, forbidden to the levir as ‘his brother's divorcee’.

(25) Lit. ‘but not’?

(26) That the Sages admit that the minor may not contract the levirate marriage.

(27) Her first husband.

(28) Her father having accepted on her behalf the letter of divorce which is thus valid.

(29) When neither she nor her father had the right to contract the marriage (cf. supra p. 756, n. 12); and where the death of the husband occurred while she was still in her minority, so that there was no cohabitation at all when she was of age.

(30) So that cohabitation between them could take place while she was of age.

(31) Since the final act of cohabitation after she becomes of age constitutes a legal kinyan of marriage.

(32) Keth. 73bf. Since it was stated that ‘the Sages agree with R. Eleazar in respect of a minor . . . in her father's lifetime’, it is obvious that R. Eleazar himself spoke of this case and presumably made it the cause of the prohibition of the levirate marriages with the others mentioned.

(33) According to R. Eleazar.

(34) A divorced minor whom the husband remarried when she was of age.

(35) Is her rival permitted levirate marriage?

(36) Against the possibility of contracting levirate marriage with an ‘orphan’ in her father's lifetime.

(37) Lit., ‘rise’.

(38) Prohibition of the levirate marriage of the rival.

(39) Cf. supra note 5. Obviously not.

(40) Lit., ‘but no?’
How then could it be said supra that, according to R. Eleazar, the rival may contract the levirate marriage?

The statement being obscure, and an explanation being required in any case.

So in accordance with the separate edd. of the Mishnah, The last two words are wanting in cur. edd.

Without issue.

Cur. edd., uzjv ‘that’, is here omitted, in accordance with the reading of the separate edd. of the Mishnah, and the Palestinian Talmud, Cf. Wilna Gaon.

From levirate marriage and halizah.

Deaf and dumb, whose marriage is valid according to Rabbinic law only.

Others, ‘Eleazar’.

Her husband. His marriage with her (a minor) being only Rabbinically valid, his levirate bond with the elder sister renders her forbidden to him. By the mi’un of the minor the levir is able to perform the Pentateuchal law.

The minor.

Lit., ‘she refused’ and the elder sister is then enabled to contract the levirate marriage.

I.e., she is not forbidden to her husband, despite his levirate bond with her elder sister which his brother's death had created, (Cf. supra 51a).

And her marriage with her husband becomes Pentateuchally binding.

The surviving brother,

He may not retain her owing to the levirate bond (cf. supra note ); R. Joshua, contrary to the opinion of R. Gamaliel, holding the view that a levirate bond does cause the prohibition of the widow's minor sister; and since the levirate bond is the result of a Pentateuchally binding marriage, the marriage with the minor, which is only Rabbinically valid, must be dissolved,

Not by mi’un for the reason given in the Gemara infra.

Who is forbidden as the sister of his divorcée. (15) To instruct a minor to exercise her right of refusal.

The reasons are given infra. From this then it is obvious that mi'un is not to be encouraged. Why then is THE MINOR TO BE INSTRUCTED TO EXERCISE HER RIGHT OF MI'UN?

As is the case in our Mishnah, where the exercise of mi'un enables the levir to observe the Pentateuchal commandment of the levirate marriage.

From ordinary mi'un; while the latter is to be avoided the former is to be encouraged.

Ps. XXXIV, 15. Pursue it אֱלֹהִים וָעֵצֶּנָה (rt. זָמָה).

and [in connection with this] R. Abbahu stated that deduction is made by a comparison between the two expressions of ‘pursuit’: Here it is written, Seek peace and pursue it and elsewhere it is written, He that pursueth after righteousness and mercy findeth life, prosperity and honour.

‘The annulment of vows’, in accordance with [a statement of] R. Nathan. For it was taught: R. Nathan said, ‘If a man makes a vow it is as if he has built a high place and if he fulfils it, it is as if he has offered up a sacrifice upon it’.7

‘And keep away from three things: From mi'un’, since it is possible that when she becomes of age she will change her mind.

‘From [receiving] deposits’ [applies to deposits made by] his fellow townsman who [regards] his house as his own house.

‘From acting as surety [refers to would-be] sureties in Shalzion. For R. Isaac said, ‘What was meant by the Scriptural text, He that is surety for a stranger shall smart for it? Evil after evil comes upon those who receive proselytes, and upon the sureties of Shalzion and upon him who rivets himself to the word of the halachah.'
That ‘those who receive proselytes’, [bring evil upon themselves, is deduced] in accordance with [a statement of] R. Helbo. For R. Helbo stated: Proselytes are hurtful to Israel as a sore on the skin.¹⁶

‘The sureties of Shalzion [bring evil upon themselves]’ because [in that place] they practice ‘pull out and thrust in’.¹⁷

‘Who rivets himself to the word of the halachah’, [brings evil upon himself], for it was taught: R. Jose said, ‘Whosoever says that he has no [desire to study the] Torah, has no [reward for the study of the] Torah’. Is not this obvious? — But [this must be the meaning]: ‘Whosoever says that he has only [an interest in the study of the] Torah¹⁸ has only [reward for the study of the] Torah’. This, however, is also obvious! — But [the meaning really is] that he has no [reward] even [for the study of the] Torah. What is the reason? — R. Papa replied: Scripture said, That ye may learn them and observe to do them,¹⁹ whosoever is [engaged] in observance is [also regarded as engaged] in study, but whosoever is not [engaged] in observance is not [regarded as engaged] in study. And if you wish I may say: [The reading is] in fact, as was said before: ‘Whosoever says that he has only [an interest in the study of the] Torah has only [reward for the study of the] Torah’, yet [the statement] was necessary [in the case] where he teaches others and these go and do observe [the laws of the Torah]. Since it might have been assumed that he also receives reward,²¹ hence we were taught [that he does not]. And if you wish I may say [that the statement] ‘who rivets himself to the word of the halachah’ [applies] to a judge who, when a lawsuit is brought before him, and he knows of an halachah [relating to a similar case], compares one case with the other²² and, though he has a teacher, he does not go to him to inquire.²³ [Such a judge brings evil upon himself] for R. Samuel b. Nahmani stated in the name of R. Jonathan: A judge should always imagine himself as if [he had] a sword lying between his thighs, and Gehenna was open beneath him; as it is said in Scripture, Behold, it is the couch²⁴ of Solomon; threescore mighty men²⁵ are about it, of the mighty men of Israel etc. because of the dread in the night:²⁶ ‘because of the dread of’ Gehenna²⁷ which is like ‘the night’.

R. GAMALIEL SAID: IF SHE EXERCISED HER RIGHT OF MI'UN etc. R. Eleazar inquired of Rab: What is R. Gamaliel's reason?²⁸ Is it because he holds the opinion that the betrothal of a minor remains in a suspended condition²⁹ and as she grows up it grows with her³⁰ even though no cohabitation has taken place;³¹ or is the reason because he is of the opinion that when a man betroths the sister of his sister-in-law the latter procures her exemption thereby, but thereby only.³² [and consequently] only if cohabitation has taken place is the elder sister exempt,³³ but if no cohabitation has taken place she is not? — The other replied, This is R. Gamaliel's reason: Because he is of the opinion that when a man betroths the sister of his sister-in-law the latter procures her exemption thereby but thereby only,³² [and consequently] only if cohabitation has taken place is the elder sister exempt,³³ but if no cohabitation has taken place she is not.

Said R. Shesheth: It seems³⁴ that Rab made this statement while he was sleepy and about to doze off.³⁵ for it was taught: If a man betrothed a minor, her betrothal remains in a suspended condition. Now, what [is meant by] ‘a suspended condition’? Obviously³⁶ that as she grows up it grows up with her³⁷ even though there was no cohabitation.³⁸ Said Rabin the son of R. Nahman to him: The matter of the betrothal of a minor³⁹ remains in a suspended condition. If cohabitation had taken place⁴⁰ it is valid, but if no cohabitation had taken place it is not; for [in the absence of such cohabitation] she thinks ‘He has an advantage over me⁴¹ and I have an advantage over him’.⁴²

Is Rab, however, of the opinion that only if cohabitation had taken place is the betrothal valid,⁴³ but if there was no cohabitation it is not? Surely it was stated: Where a minor did not exercise her right of mi'un and, when she became of age, actually⁴⁴ married [another man], Rab ruled: She requires no letter of divorce from her second husband, and Samuel ruled: She requires a letter of divorce from her second husband.⁴⁵

(11) The inference is based on the expression יטבixo (in which the rt. יטבixo which is also that of יטבixo ‘evil’ is repeated).

(12) The original for He that . . . stranger (ibid.) is ידר ריצ , which is interpreted as the mixing of proselytes with Israel. The rt. ידר may bear both meanings.

(13) The E V. reading of the text.

(14) I.e., to the word but not to its practice.

(15) This is deduced from יטבixo (E.V., that strike hands) in the concluding clause of the verse cited. יטבixo may also bear the meaning of ‘stick to’, ‘nail oneself to’. This will be further explained anon.

(16) In speaking of proselytes (Isa. XIV, 1) the word used is that of ינפלו (E.V., shall join) which is of the same rt. as ינפלו (a sore). V. supra 47b.

(31) After her majority. As the validity of the original betrothal is thus made retrospective, the provisional levirate bond between the levir and the elder sister may be regarded as never having existed.

(32) Lit., ‘and she goes for herself’. Only by the ‘betrothal’ (i.e., the cohabitation) that took place when the minor bad attained her majority does the elder procure her exemptions not by the original betrothal of the minor which is ineffective.

Mid. 52a and Tosaf. s.v. נ' על a.1.), the uncertainty in her mind as to the durability of the union causes it to remain in a suspended condition until kinyan by cohabitation, after she becomes of age, has been effected.
(43) Lit., ‘yes’.
(44) Lit., ‘and stood up’.
(45) Keth. 73a.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 110a

Does not [this refer to a case] where he did not cohabit [with her]? — No; where he did cohabit with her. If, however, he cohabited [with her] what is Samuel's reason? — He holds the view that one Who performs cohabitation does so in reliance on his first betrothal. But surely they once disputed this point! For it was stated: If a man betrothed a woman conditionally, and unconditionally, Rab ruled: She requires from him a letter of divorce; and Samuel ruled: She requires no letter of divorce from him. ‘Rab ruled: She requires from him a letter of divorce’, because as soon as he marries her he undoubtedly dispenses with his condition. ‘And Samuel ruled: She requires no letter of divorce from him’, because one who performs cohabitation does so in reliance on his first betrothal! — [Both disputes were] necessary. For if the former only had been stated, it might have been assumed that Rab adheres to his opinion there only because no condition was attached [to the betrothal] but in the latter case, where a condition was attached to it, he agrees with Samuel. And if the latter case only had been stated, it might have been assumed that there only does Samuel maintain his view but in the former he agrees with Rab. [Hence both were] required.

Did Rab, however, state that only where [the husband] cohabited with her does she require a letter of divorce but that if he did not cohabit with her none is required? Surely it once happened at Naresh that a man betrothed a girl while she was a minor, and, when she attained her majority and he placed her upon the bridal chair, another man came and snatched her away from him; and, though Rab's disciples, R. Beruna and R. Hananel, were present on the occasion, they did not require the girl to obtain a letter of divorce from the second man — R. Papa replied: At Naresh they married first and then placed [the bride] upon the bridal chair. R. Ashi replied: He acted improperly; they, therefore, treated him also improperly, and deprived him of the right of valid betrothal. Said Rabina to R. Ashi: [Your explanation is] satisfactory where the man betrothed [her] with money; what [however, can be said where] he betrothed her by cohabitation? — The Rabbis have declared his cohabitation to be an act of mere fornication.

Rab Judah stated in the name of Samuel: The halachah is in agreement with R. Eliezer; and so did R. Eleazar state: The halachah is in agreement with R. Eliezer.

MISHNAH. IF A MAN WAS MARRIED TO TWO ORPHANS WHO WERE MINORS AND DIED, COHABITATION OR HALIZAH WITH ONE OF THEM EXEMPTS HER RIVAL. AND THE SAME LAW IS APPLICABLE TO TWO DEAF WOMEN.

WITH THE LATTER DOES NOT EXEMPT THE FORMER.

GEMARA. Is, however, a deaf\(^42\) woman permitted to perform halizah? Surely, we learned: If a deaf levir submitted to halizah or a deaf sister-in-law performed halizah, or if halizah was performed on a minor, the halizah is invalid!\(^43\) — R. Giddal replied in the name of Rab: [This\(^44\) applies] to COHABITATION.\(^45\) Raba\(^46\) replied: It\(^47\) may be said to apply even to halizah; one\(^48\) referring to a woman who was originally deaf;\(^49\) and the other\(^50\) referring to a woman who was possessed of hearing\(^51\) and became deaf afterwards. The ‘woman who was originally deaf’, leaves\(^52\) as she entered,\(^53\) but the ‘woman who was possessed of hearing and became deaf afterwards’ cannot do so, since her inability to recite [the prescribed formulae]\(^54\) acts as an obstacle.\(^55\)

Abaye raised an objection against him: Is, however, one who was originally deaf permitted to perform halizah? Surely, we learned: If two brothers, one of whom was in possession of his faculties and the other deaf,\(^45\) were [respectively] married to two strangers,\(^56\) one of whom was in the possession of her faculties and the other deaf,\(^57\) and the deaf [brother] who was the husband of the deaf woman died, what should [his brother who was] in possession of his faculties, the husband of the woman in possession of her faculties, do? He marries her\(^58\) and if he wishes to send her away,\(^59\) he may do so.\(^60\) If the [brother] who was in possession of his faculties, the husband of the woman who was in possession of her faculties, died, what should the deaf brother, the husband of the deaf woman do? He marries [the widow] and may never divorce her.\(^61\) Does not this apply to a woman who was originally deaf?\(^62\) And yet it was stated that he may only marry

(1) Her first husband.
(2) After she had attained her majority. And since Rab nevertheless rules that no divorce from the second husband is required it is obvious that he regards her first marriage as valid!
(3) And it is this cohabitation, not their first betrothal, that constitutes the kinyan of the first marriage.
(4) Since cohabitation renders the betrothal of the first husband valid, that of the second must be invalid; why then did Samuel require the woman to be divorced from her second husband!
(5) Which was invalid. The marriage with the second husband is therefore valid and can be annulled by divorce only.
(6) Rab and Samuel.
(7) Stipulating, for instance, that she must have no bodily defect or that she must not be subject to any restrictions due to a vow she may have made.
(8) If it was discovered that she had a defect or that she was subject to the restrictions due to a vow.
(9) And valid kinyan is effected by their first cohabitation.
(10) Which was invalid; v., Keth. 72b. Why then should they dispute the same point again?
(11) Lit., ‘that’; the dispute concerning a minor who did not exercise her right of mi’un, cited from Keth. 73a.
(12) This is the reading of Rashi, following the version in Keth. 73a. The reading of cur. edd. is given infra p. 766, n. 6.
(13) And the husband was obviously anxious to give the union all the necessary validity. Being well aware that the betrothal of a minor is Pentateuchally invalid he naturally ‘betroths’ her again by cohabitation as soon as she becomes of age.
(14) Lit., ‘that’; cited from Keth. 72b.
(15) That the original condition remains in force even after consummation of the marriage.
(16) Since the condition was attached to the original betrothal,
(17) That the marriage remains dependent on the original condition and is, therefore, invalid.
(18) v. supra p. 765, n. 13.
(19) Cur. edd. read, ‘For if that had been stated, (it might have been assumed that) in that case only did Rab maintain his view, because there existed a condition and as soon as (the man) cohabited with her he dispensed with his condition; but in this case it might have been assumed that he agrees with Samuel; and if this had been stated (it might have been assumed that) in this case only did Samuel maintain his view; but in that, it might have been said, he agrees with Rab’. [Rashi rejects this reading in view of the passage in Keth. 72a which states distinctly that Rab's ruling was not because he held that the man dispenses with the condition on intercourse, but because he renewes betrothal at the time to avoid intercourse degenerating into mere fornication. Tosaf. s.v. נלצוי retains the reading of cur. edd., and explains that it is because no man would render his intercourse mere fornication that we assume that he dispensed with the condition, since he made no mention of the condition at the time. Had he, however, repeated the condition at intercourse, the condition would stand].

(20) The minor who has attained majority.
(21) Lit., ‘yes’.
(22) Lit., ‘not’.
(23) It is assumed that this was a ceremony similar to ordinary huppah (v. Glos.).
(24) Obviously because they regarded the first marriage though no cohabitation had taken place (v. supra n. 10), as valid. As the disciples presumably acted in accordance with the ruling of their Master, Rab, how could it be said that Rab requires a divorce only where cohabitation had taken place?
(25) Cohabitation.
(26) And this is the reason why Rab's disciples regarded the marriage with the first husband as valid and, therefore, required no divorce from the second man.
(27) The second man.
(28) In snatching away another man's wife.
(29) All betrothals are made ‘in accordance with the law of Moses and Israel’ (cf. P.B. p. 298) i.e., the Pentateuchal, as well as Rabbinic law; hence it is within the power of the Rabbinical authorities to declare certain betrothals, such, for instance, as the present one where the girl was improperly snatched away, to be invalid.
(30) One of the forms of kinyan in marriage (cf. Kid. 2a). Since the Rabbis are empowered to confiscate a man's property they might well dispose of the money of the betrothal by treating it as a mere gift to the girl.
(31) Which has no legal validity to effect a kinyan.
(32) That THE MINOR IS TO BE INSTRUCTED TO EXERCISE HER RIGHT OF MI'UN.
(33) Marriage with whom is only Rabbinically valid.
(34) By the levir, even during her minority, for the purpose of the levirate marriage.
(35) After she has attained her majori ty.
(36) From levirate marriage and halizah.
(37) Lit., ‘and so’.
(38) I.e., deaf.mute.
(39) Marriage with whom, like marriage with a minor, is only Rabbinically valid.
(40) Though the marriage with either, according to Rabbinic law, is of equal validity.
(41) Since it is uncertain, owing to the difference in their physical condition and age, which of them he preferred and which of them has consequently the greater claim to be regarded as his wife.
(42) I.e., deaf.mute.
(43) Supra 104b. How then could it be said in our Mishnah. AND THE SAME LAW IS APPLICABLE TO TWO DEAF WOMEN?
(44) The law in our Mishnah concerning two deaf women. V. supra n. 3.
(45) Not to halizah.
(47) V. supra note 4.
(48) Lit., ‘here’; our Mishnah which allows halizah in respect of a deaf woman.
(49) Even before her marriage.
(50) The Mishnah supra 104b which rules the halizah of a deaf woman to be invalid.
(51) At the time she married.
(52) The levir by means of halizah.
(53) The marriage with her husband. As the marriage was performed by means of signs and gestures so also is the halizah.
(54) Cf. supra 106b.
(55) As a deaf-mute she is unable to recite them and is consequently precluded from the performance of halizah.
(56) I.e., women who were not related to one another.
(57) I.e., deaf.mute.
(58) I.e., contracts the levirate marriage by means of signs and gestures. No halizah is permitted since the woman is incapable of reciting the prescribed formulae.
(59) After he has married her.
(60) Divorcing her, as he married her, by the use of signs and gestures.
(61) Infra 112b. The divorce of a man who is not in the possession of all his faculties cannot annul the marriage of his brother who was in the possession of all his faculties and whose marriage, therefore, subjects him to a levirate marriage that can never be annulled.
(62) Probably it does.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 110b

but not submit to halizah! — No, this refers to a woman who was capable of hearing and became deaf afterwards.

Come and hear: If two brothers of sound senses were married to two strangers one of whom was of sound senses and the other deaf, and [the brother who was] of sound senses, the husband of the deaf woman, died, what should the [brother who was] of sound senses, the husband of the woman who was of sound senses, do? He marries [the deaf widow], and if he wishes to divorce her he may do so. If [the brother who was] of sound senses, the husband of the woman who was of sound senses, died, what should the [brother who was] of sound senses, the husband of the woman who was deaf, do? He may either submit to halizah or contract levirate marriage. Are we not to assume that as the man was originally of sound senses so was she originally deaf, and nevertheless it was stated that he may only marry her but may not submit to her halizah! — Is this an argument? Each one may bear its own meaning.

An objection was raised against him: If two brothers, one of whom was of sound senses and the other deaf, were married to two sisters, one of whom was of sound senses and the other deaf, and the deaf brother, the husband of the deaf sister, died, what should [the brother who was] of sound senses, the husband of [the sister who was] of sound senses, do? — [Nothing, since] the widow is released by virtue of her being [the levir's] wife's sister. If [the brother who was] of sound senses, the husband of [the sister who was] of sound senses, died, what should the deaf brother, the husband of the deaf sister, do? He releases his wife by means of a letter of divorce, while his brother's wife is for ever forbidden to marry again. And should you reply that here also [it is a case of a man] who was of sound senses and who became afterwards deaf, is [such a man, it may be retorted], in a position to divorce [his wife]? Surely, we learned: If she became deaf, he may divorce her; if she became insane, he may not divorce her. If he became deaf or insane he may never divorce her. Consequently it must be a case of a man who was originally deaf. And since [the man spoken of] is one who was originally deaf, the woman [spoken of in the same context must] also be one who was originally deaf; and, as the sisters were such as were originally deaf, the strangers also [must be such as were] originally deaf; but in the case of the strangers we learned that [the levir] may only marry but may not submit to halizah! The other remained silent.

When he visited R. Joseph, the latter said to him: Why did you raise your objections against him from [teachings] which he could parry by replying that the sisters [spoken of are such as were] originally deaf, and that the strangers [are such as were originally] of sound senses who became deaf afterwards? You should rather have raised your objection against him from the following: If two deaf brothers were married to two sisters who were of sound senses, or to two deaf sisters or to two sisters one of whom was of sound senses and the other deaf; and so also if two deaf sisters were married to two brothers who were of sound senses, or to two deaf brothers, or to two brothers one of whom was of sound senses and the other deaf, behold these women are exempt from levirate marriage and from halizah. If [however the women] were strangers [the respective levirs] must marry them, and if they wish to divorce them, they may do so. Now, how [is this ruling] to be understood? If it be suggested [that it refers to brothers who were first] of sound senses and who became deaf afterwards, could they [it may be asked] divorce [their wives]? Surely, we learned: If he became deaf or insane he may never divorce her! This ruling must consequently refer to brothers who were originally deaf; and since they [are such as were] originally deaf, the women referred to must also be [such as were] originally deaf; and it was nevertheless taught: ‘If [the women, however], Were strangers [the respective levirs] must marry them’, they may thus only marry them but may not submit to their halizah. This, then, presents a refutation of Rabbah — This is indeed a refutation.

A MINOR AND A DEAF WOMAN etc. R. Nahman related: I once found R. Adda b. Ahabah and his son-in-law R. Hana sitting in the market place of Pumbeditha and bandying arguments and [in the course of these they] stated: The ruling, IF A MAN WAS MARRIED TO A MINOR AND TO A DEAF WOMAN, COHABITATION WITH ONE OF THEM DOES NOT EXEMPT HER RIVAL applies only to a case where [the widows] became subject to him through a brother of his who was of sound senses, since it is not known to us whether he was more pleased with the minor or whether he was more pleased with the deaf woman; ‘whether he was more pleased with the minor’ because she would [in due course] reach the age of intelligence or ‘whether he was more pleased with the deaf woman’ because she was fully grown and in a marriageable condition; if [the widows], however, became subject to him through a deaf brother of his, there is no doubt that he was more pleased with the deaf woman, because she was of matrimonial age and of his kind. But I told them: Even if [the widows] became subject to him through a deaf brother of his [the question of his preference still remains] a matter of doubt.

How do they obtain redress? — R. Hisda replied in the name of Rab: [The levir] marries the deaf widow and then releases her by a letter of divorce, while the minor waits until she is of age, when she performs halizah.

From this, said R. Hisda, it may be inferred that Rab is of the opinion that a deaf wife is partially acquired, while concerning a minor [it is a matter of doubt whether] she is [properly] acquired, or not acquired at all; for were it to be suggested that concerning a deaf wife [it is uncertain whether] she is acquired or not acquired [at all and that] a minor is partially acquired, [the question would arise] why [should the levir] marry [the deaf widow] and release her by a letter of divorce?

(1) Owing to the woman's incapability of reciting the prescribed formulae. How, then, could Raba (or Rabbah) state that in such a case halizah is permissible?
(2) At the time she married.
(3) After he has married her.
(4) I.e., women who were not related to one another.
(5) V. supra n. 5.
(6) Infra 112b.
(7) Lit., ‘what not?’
(8) Even before marriage.
(9) Lit., ‘yes’.
(10) V. p. 769, n. 8.
(11) Lit., ‘that as it is, and that etc.’
(12) Raba (or Rabbah).
(13) From levirate marriage and halizah.
(14) He must not continue to live with her because she is the sister of his zekukah (v. Glos.) the levirate bond with whom is, as was her marriage with her husband, Pentateuchally valid, while his own marriage with his deaf wife, though valid in Rabbinic law, is invalid in Pentateuchal law. A Rabbinically valid marriage cannot override a levirate bond which is Pentateuchal.
(15) Infra 112b. She is forbidden to her brother-in-law since she is (in Rabbinic law) his wife's (or divorcee's) sister, and she is forbidden to other men since, as a deaf-mute who is unable to recite the prescribed formulae, her brother-in-law is precluded from submitting to halizah from her, and, in consequence, she remains attached to him by the levirate bond. Now, as the levir's deafness is, in this case, an affliction from which he suffered prior to his marriage, the deafness spoken of in the two previously cited cases (since all these appear in the same contexts) must similarly refer to afflictions commenced prior to the marriage. This then presents an objection against Raba (cf. supra p. 769, n. 8)!

(16) One's wife.

(17) In accordance with a Rabbinical provision safeguarding the position of the woman who, were she to be divorced and thus remain unprotected by a husband, would be subject, owing to her mental condition, to serious moral and physical danger.

(18) Infra 112b; because his marriage which took place when he was in full possession of his senses was Pentateuchally valid, while a divorce given by him while deaf or insane would have no Pentateuchal validity.

(19) Lit., ‘but not?’

(20) Prior to the marriage.

(21) Lit., ‘yes’.

(22) V. supra p. 769, n. 8.

(23) Raba (or Rabbah).

(24) Abaye.

(25) If their husbands died without issue.

(26) Because all these marriages having been contracted by signs and gestures, are of equal validity. Each widow is, therefore, forbidden to the respective levir as his wife's sister.

(27) To one another.

(28) Halizah is forbidden, since either the levir or the sister-in-law (or both), as the case may be, is unable to recite the prescribed formulae.

(29) Cit. 71b, infra 112b.

(30) Concerning the deaf people spoken of in this context.

(31) Prior to the marriage.

(32) After the marriage.

(34) Git. 71b, infra 112b. Cf. supra p. 771, n. 1. How, then, could it be said to be a case of deafness acquired after marriage?

(35) Lit., ‘but not?’

(36) Git. 71b, infra 112b.

(37) Lit., ‘yes’.

(38) Or ‘Raba’. Cf. supra p. 768, n. 6 and supra p. 769, n. 8.

(39) So Tosaf. and one of Rashi's explanations. יִפְרְעָה יִפְרְעָה (vb. יָכַּת ‘to blunt’ and noun יִפְרְעָה or יִפְרְעָה ‘refutation’). Jastrow renders, ‘They were sitting and raising arguments’. Another interpretation of Rashi derives the expression from theBrittish רֶבֶן ‘to gather’; ‘they were gathering round them an assembly of students’.

(40) Lit., ‘that which we learned’.

(41) Lit., ‘these words’.

(42) Lit., ‘she fell’.

(43) The deceased brother.

(44) The deceased brother.

(45) Lit., ‘she fell’.

(46) The minor and the deaf wife whose husband died childless and who became subject to a levir.

(47) Since one does not exempt the other (v. our Mishnah) and the deaf woman is incapable of performing halizah. Were the levir to marry the deaf widow and submit to halizah from the minor after she had attained her majority, the former would become forbidden to him by the halizah of her rival (‘If a man did not build he must never build’, supra), the marriage of the deaf not being Pentateuchally valid to sever the levirate bond with the minor.

(48) Cf. supra n. 4.

(49) Both widows are thus released from the levir.

(50) By her husband. Lit., ‘acquired and left over’; only in a part of her person is she legally regarded as wife, Cf. infra n. 9.

(51) Completely; and she is consequently regarded as the deceased brother's proper wife.
And consequently she is legally no more than a stranger. That the legal condition of relationship between the minor and her husband is different from that between the deaf wife and her husband is fairly obvious. For if they were both regarded as partially acquired, or if the acquisition of either was regarded as doubtful, their legal position would in no way differ from that of two minors or two deaf women, while, in fact, it does. (Cf. our Mishnah and the following one).

From Rab’s ruling, however, it is inferred that it is the deaf wife who is partially acquired and that it is the minor concerning whom it is uncertain whether she is wholly acquired or not acquired at all.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 111a

Let her continue to live with him in any case. For if [a deaf woman] is acquired then she is of course acquired, and if she is not acquired, then she is a mere stranger. And should you argue, ‘why should the minor wait until she grows up and then performs halizah? Let her continue to live with him [for the same reason] that if she is [properly] acquired then she is of course acquired, and if she is not acquired, then she is a mere stranger; if so [it could be retorted] whereby should the deaf [widow] be released!

R. Shesheth said: Logical deduction leads also to the interpretation R. Hisda imparted to Rab’s ruling. For it was taught: If two brothers were married to two orphan sisters, a minor and a deaf woman, and the husband of the minor died, the deaf widow is released by means of a letter of divorce while the minor waits until she is of age, when she performs halizah. If the husband of the deaf woman dies, the minor is released by a letter of divorce while the deaf widow is forever forbidden to marry again. If, however, he cohabited with the deaf widow he must give her a letter of divorce and she becomes permitted [to marry any other man]. Now, if you grant that a deaf wife is partially acquired [and that concerning] a minor [it is doubtful whether] she is [fully] acquired or not acquired [at all], one can well see the reason why when he cohabited with the deaf widow he gives her a letter of divorce and she becomes permitted [to marry any other man]. For you may rightly claim that in any case [she becomes permitted]. If the minor is acquired, [the deaf widow] is rightly released as his wife’s sister; and if she is not acquired [at all] he has quite lawfully contracted with her the levirate marriage. If you contend, however, [that concerning] a deaf woman [it is doubtful whether] she is acquired or not acquired [at all], and that a minor is partially acquired, [the difficulty arises] why should the deaf widow, if he cohabited with her and gave her a letter of divorce, be permitted [to marry again] when the cohabitation with her was unlawful, and an unlawful cohabitation does not release a woman? — It is possible that this statement represents the view of R. Nehemiah who ruled that an unlawful cohabitation exempts [a widow] from halizah.

If [this statement represents the view of] R. Nehemiah read the final clause: ‘If a man was married to two orphans, one of whom was a minor and the other deaf, and died ‘and the levir cohabited with the minor and then cohabited with the deaf widow, or a brother of his cohabited with the deaf widow, both are forbidden to him. How do they obtain redress? The deaf woman is released by a letter of divorce while the minor waits until she is of age ‘when she performs halizah’. Now, if you grant that a deaf wife is partially acquired [and that concerning] a minor [it is doubtful whether] she is [fully] acquired or not acquired [at all], and that a minor is partially acquired, [the difficulty arises] why should the deaf widow, if he cohabited with her and gave her a letter of divorce, be permitted [to marry again] when the cohabitation with her was unlawful, and an unlawful cohabitation does not release a woman? — It is possible that this statement represents the view of R. Nehemiah who ruled that an unlawful cohabitation exempts [a widow] from halizah.

R. Ashi said: From the first clause also it may be inferred that [the opinion expressed] is that of the Rabbis. For it was stated, ‘If, however, he cohabited with the deaf widow he must give her a letter of divorce and she becomes permitted [to marry any other man]’, but it was not stated,45 ‘If he cohabited with the minor, he must give her a letter of divorce and she becomes permitted’!46 — If this is all, there is not much force in the argument; since in respect of the deaf widow for whom no lawful redress is possible47 mention had to be made of redress obtained through a forbidden act,48 but concerning a minor, for whom lawful redress is possible,49 no redress obtainable through a forbidden act was mentioned.

MISHNAH. IF A MAN WHO WAS MARRIED TO TWO ORPHANS WHO WERE MINORS DIED, AND THE LEVIR COHABITED WITH ONE,50 AND THEN HE ALSO COHABITED WITH THE OTHER,51 OR A BROTHER OF HIS COHABITED WITH THE OTHER,51

(1) Once the levir married her.
(2) As the legal wife of her husband.
(3) And having been the proper wife of the deceased, her marriage with the levir severs the levirate bond with the minor, the subsequent halizah with whom is null and void and in no way affects the validity of her marriage.
(4) As the legal wife of her husband.
(5) To the minor, halizah with whom does not concern her at all. Consequently it must be inferred that it is the deaf wife who is partially acquired, and that the doubt as to complete acquisition or none exists in the case of the minor.
(6) Once the levir married her.
(7) Given in the case of the deaf woman.
(8) Cf. supra n. 1 mutatis mutandis.
(9) To the deaf woman, marriage with whom does not consequently affect the validity of her marriage.
(10) Of halizah she is incapable, owing to her inability to recite the prescribed formulae; and marriage with her after a marriage had been contracted with the minor is forbidden. Hence the necessity for Rab's ruling which provides redress for the minor as well as the deaf widow.
(11) That a deaf wife is partially acquired and the legality of the acquisition of a minor is altogether doubtful.
(12) Orphan is mentioned on account of the minor.
(13) She is forbidden to live with her husband as the sister of the minor who is now his zekukah (v. Glos.), since she, as a deaf woman, is only partially acquired as wife, while the minor's acquisition by her husband (and consequently her levirate bond with the levir) might possibly have been completely valid.
(14) And is then free to marry any other man.
(15) As it is possible that the minor is not acquired at all as a wife, while the levirate bond with the deaf widow is at all events partially valid, the former is forbidden to her husband as the sister of his zekukah. (V. Glos. and cf. supra n. 11).
(16) She is forbidden to the levir as the sister of his divorcee (it being possible that the minor was completely acquired as his wife), and she is forbidden to any other man since, owing to her inability to recite the required formulae, the levir cannot release her by halizah. Even when the minor dies, and the prohibition of ‘divorcee's sister’ is lifted, she remains forbidden to the levir as ‘brother's wife’. Since at the time she became subject to the levir as his deceased brother's wife she was for some reason unfit to contract the levirate marriage, the prohibition of ‘brother's wife’ comes again into force.
(17) After he had divorced the minor.
(18) Though the cohabitation was forbidden.
(19) Because (a) if the minor was to be regarded as his legal wife, the deaf woman was all the time permitted to marry a stranger since, as his wife's sister, she was never subject to the levirate obligations; and if (b) the minor was not to be regarded as his legal wife, his marriage with the deaf widow, who accordingly was not his wife's sister, was a valid levirate marriage which was duly and lawfully annulled by the letter of divorce which set her free.
(20) V. supra p. 773, n. 7.
(22) Cf. supra n. 3 (a).
(23) The deaf widow.
(24) Cf. supra n. 3 (b).
(25) Since the minor is at least partially his wife and the deaf widow is forbidden to him as his wife's sister.
(26) From the levirate obligations. Since it is possible that the deaf woman was completely acquired as wife by the deceased brother, the levirate bond between her and the levir is also fully valid, and as the partial acquisition of the minor by her husband (the levir) cannot annul such a possibly fully valid bond, the deaf widow is precluded from marrying either the levir whose partial wife's sister she is (cf. supra n. 9) or from marrying any other man to whom she can be permitted only through halizah with the levir, which she, as a deaf person, is incapable of performing. Had she been permitted to marry the levir, his cohabitation with her would have released her from any further levirate obligation, while his divorce would have set her free to marry any other man. Since, however, cohabitation with the levir is unlawful, she cannot thereby be released from her levirate obligation and should consequently remain forbidden to all men forever!

(27) Lit., ‘this, who?’
(28) V. supra 50b. Hence the permissibility for the deaf widow to marry again after she had been divorced.
(29) V. supra p. 774 n. 10.
(30) After the former had cohabited with the minor.
(31) The reason is given infra.
(32) And she is free at all events: If the minor was a lawfully acquired wife the deaf widow is exempt from the levirate marriage by the former's levirate marriage; and if the minor was not a lawfully acquired wife, the deaf widow had performed the levirate obligation by her own cohabitation with the levir through whose divorce she is now free to marry again.
(33) In respect of the two sisters spoken of in the first clause cited.
(34) Cf. supra p. 775, n. 3.
(35) Who maintain that an unlawful cohabitation does not exempt a deceased brother's widow from the levirate marriage and halizah.
(36) In the final clause, relating to a marriage with orphans who were strangers to each other.
(37) Though marriage with her by the levir should in any case be permitted. For if she was fully acquired by her husband the subsequent cohabitation by the levir with the deaf widow who was only partially acquired can have no validity to cause the minor's prohibition to him; and if she was not acquired at all she, as a stranger, should also be permitted to the levir; and in either case her divorce should set her free without the performance of halizah.
(38) If halizah were not imposed upon the minor when she attains her majority.
(39) And the minor, since it is possible that she was fully acquired, would not be exempt by the levir's cohabitation with the deaf widow who was only partially acquired.
(40) Since it followed that of the deaf widow who, having been at least partially acquired, is the minor's rival, and two rivals may not be married. As in such a case the minor could not be free before she became of age and performed halizah, a similar restriction has been imposed in the former case also.
(41) That the minor is partially acquired and that concerning the deaf woman the validity of her acquisition as a wife is in doubt.
(42) Why then should the minor have to wait until she is of age? If the deaf woman is not acquired at all the minor's cohabitation with the levir is, surely, permitted. But even if the deaf woman is acquired, and her levirate bond causes the minor to be forbidden to the levir, there should be no need for the minor to wait until she is of age and able to perform the halizah, while according to R. Nehemiah, an unlawful cohabitation also exempts a woman from the levirate marriage and halizah!
(43) Which deals with the marriage of two sisters.
(44) When the husband of the deaf sister died.
(45) In the case where the husband of the minor died.
(46) Which would be the law according to R. Nehemiah, who ruled that an unlawful cohabitation exempts the woman from the levirate obligations. The statement, consequently, must represent the view of the Rabbis, and the reason why the minor cannot be released by a letter of divorce is because cohabitation with her is unlawful since she is the sister of the levir's partially acquired wife; while she herself, in case she was fully acquired, is subject to the levirate bond, from which the marriage with her deaf sister, whose kinyan was only partial, cannot exempt her.
(47) As she is forbidden to all men including the levir, as shewn supra.
(48) It being the only possible means whereby she could marry again.
(49) She has only to wait until she is of age, when she can lawfully perform halizah and thereby obtain her freedom.
(50) Lit., ‘the first’.
(51) Lit., ‘the second’.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 111b
Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 111b

HE HAS NOT THEREBY RENDERED THE FIRST INELIGIBLE [FOR HIM];¹ AND THE SAME LAW IS APPLICABLE TO TWO DEAF WOMEN.

R. ELEAZAR RULED: THE MINOR IS TO BE INSTRUCTED TO EXERCISE HER RIGHT OF MI'UN AGAINST HIM.⁴

GEMARA. Rab Judah stated in the name of Samuel: The halachah is in agreement with R. Eliezer⁵. So also did R. Eleazar⁶ state: The halachah is in agreement with R. Eleazar.⁷ And [both statements⁸ were] required. For if the statement had been made on the first [Mishnah] only⁵ [it might have been assumed that] in that case alone did Samuel hold that the halachah is in agreement With R. Eliezer,⁹ since [the levir there] had not fulfilled the commandment of the levirate marriage,¹⁰ but in this case¹¹ where¹² the commandment of the levirate marriage has been fulfilled, it might have been assumed that both must be released by a letter of divorce.¹³ And if the information¹⁴ had been given on the latter¹¹ only, [it might have been suggested that] only in this case [is the halachah in agreement with him], because the elder is subject to levirate marriage¹⁵ with him, but not¹⁶ in the other case.¹⁷ [Hence both statements were] required.

MISHNAH. IF A LEVIR WHO WAS A MINOR COHABITED WITH A SISTER-IN-LAW WHO WAS A MINOR, THEY SHOULD BE BROUGHT UP TOGETHER.¹⁸ IF HE COHABITED WITH A SISTER-IN-LAW WHO WAS OF AGE, SHE SHOULD BRING HIM UP UNTIL HE IS OF AGE.¹⁹

IF A SISTER-IN-LAW DECLARED WITHIN THIRTY DAYS [AFTER HER LEVIRATE MARRIAGE], ‘HE HAS NOT COHABITED WITH ME’,²⁰ [THE LEVIR] IS COMPELLED TO SUBMIT TO HER HALIZAH,²¹ BUT [IF HER DECLARATION WAS MADE] AFTER THIRTY DAYS, HE IS ONLY REQUESTED TO SUBMIT TO HER HALIZAH.²² WHEN, HOWEVER, HE ADMITS [HER ASSERTION], HE IS COMPELLED, EVEN AFTER TWELVE MONTHS, TO
IF A WOMAN VOWED TO HAVE NO BENEFIT FROM HER BROTHER-IN-LAW, THE LATTER IS COMPELLED TO SUBMIT TO HER HALIZAH, [IF HER VOW WAS MADE] DURING THE LIFETIME OF HER HUSBAND, BUT IF AFTER THE DEATH OF HER HUSBAND, THE LEVIR MAY ONLY BE REQUESTED TO SUBMIT TO HER HALIZAH. IF THIS, HOWEVER, WAS IN HER MIND [EVEN IF HER VOW WAS MADE] DURING THE LIFETIME OF HER HUSBAND, THE LEVIR MAY ONLY BE REQUESTED TO SUBMIT TO HER HALIZAH.

GEMARA. Must it be assumed that our Mishnah is not in agreement with R. Meir? For it was taught: A boy minor and a girl minor may neither perform halizah nor contract levirate marriage; so R. Meir! — It may even be said to agree with R. Meir, for R. Meir spoke only [of the levirate marriage of a sister-in-law] who was of age to a minor, and [of one who was] a minor to [a levir that was] of age, since one of these [may possibly be performing] forbidden cohabitation. He did not speak, however, of a boy minor who cohabited with a girl minor, in which case both are in the same position. But, surely, it was stated, IF HE COHABITED WITH A SISTER-IN-LAW WHO WAS OF AGE SHE SHOULD BRING HIM UP UNTIL HE IS OF AGE! — R. Hanina of Hozzaah replied: If he had already cohabited [the law] is different. But was it not stated: SHE SHOULD BRING HIM UP UNTIL HE IS OF AGE, though each act of cohabitation is a forbidden one! — The truth is clearly that our Mishnah cannot be in agreement with R. Meir.

Should not the text, To raise up unto his brother a name, be applied here? And this minor, Surely, is not capable of it! — Abaye replied: Scripture said, Her husband's brother shall go in unto her, whoever he may be. Raba replied: Without this [text] also you could not say [that a minor may not contract levirate marriage]. For is there any act [in connection with the levirate marriage] which is at one time forbidden and after a time permitted? Surely, Rab Judah stated in the name of Rab: Any sister-in-law to whom the instruction, Her husband's brother shall go in unto her, cannot be applied at the time when she becomes subject to the levirate marriage, is indeed like the wife of a brother who has children, and is consequently forbidden! But then might it not be suggested that this same [principle is applicable here] also? — Scripture said, If brethren dwell together, even if [one brother is only] one day old.

IF A SISTER-IN-LAW DECLARED WITHIN THIRTY DAYS etc. Who is it that taught that up to thirty days a man may restrain himself? -R. Johanan replied: It is R. Meir; for it was taught: A complaint in respect of virginity [may be brought] during the first thirty days; so R. Meir. R. Jose said: If the woman was shut up [with him, the complaint must be made] forthwith; if she was not shut up [with him], it may be made even after many years. Rabbah stated: It may even be said [to represent the opinion of] R. Jose; for R. Jose spoke there only of one's betrothed with whom one is familiar, but [not of] the wife of one's brother.

(1) As the kinyan of both is of equal validity or invalidity, if the levir's kinyan of the first was valid, that of the other, coming as it does after it, is ineffective, while if his kinyan of the first was invalid, that of the other was equally invalid and both have the same status as strangers whom he never married. He may, therefore, retain the first who is in any case permitted to him, while the second must be released, since it is possible that the kinyan of a minor is valid and both were, therefore, the lawful wives of the deceased brother, who, as rivals, cannot both be married by the levir.

(2) This is a preventive measure against the possibility of marrying the deaf woman first. Cf. Gemara supra 111a — Rashi. Cf. infra p. 779, n. 1. [Mishnayoth edd.: ‘he does not render the minor ineligible’, the reason being if the minor is fully acquired, the act of cohabitation with the deaf-mute that followed has no validity. Should, on the other hand, the kinyan in regard to a minor be of no effect whatsoever, then she could not be considered the wife of the deceased brother, v. Bertinoro a.l.].

(3) Since it is possible that the minor is fully acquired, while in the case of the other it is certain that, as a deaf person, she is only partially acquired.

(4) Thus annulling her marriage and enabling the levir to retain the elder woman.

(5) With reference to Mishnah 109a which deals with the levirate marriage of two sisters, cf. however supra p. 760, n. 5.

(6) R. Eleazar b. Pedath, one of the Amoraim.

(7) R. Eleazar b. Shammu’a, the Tanna in our Mishnah.

(8) That (a) the halachah is in agreement with R. Eleazar in our Mishnah and that (b) it is also in agreement with R. Eliezer’s view in the Mishnah supra 109a, as stated in the Gemara supra 110a.

(9) V. supra p. 779, n. 3.

(10) There only it is permissible to teach the minor to exercise her right of mi’un, in order that the levir may be enabled to perform the commandment with the elder.

(11) Our Mishnah.

(12) The levir having cohabited with both widows.

(13) And that the minor is not to be taught to exercise her right of mi’un.

(14) That the halachah is in agreement with R. Eleazar.

(15) V. supra note 2.

(16) Cf. supra note 5.

(17) Cf. supra p. 779, n. 3, where, should the minor fail to exercise her right of mi’un, the elder widow would, as his wife’s sister, be altogether exempt from the levirate marriage.

(18) Lit., ‘this with this’. As the divorce of a minor is invalid, they cannot be separated by a letter of divorce, should they desire to do so, before both have attained their majority.

(19) During his minority he cannot divorce her (cf. supra note 10).

(20) And he denies her statement.

(21) It being assumed that a period of thirty days sometimes elapses before a marriage is consummated, her word is accepted; v. Gemara.

(22) He cannot be compelled, because it is assumed that no one postpones consummation of marriage for a longer period than thirty days. His word is, therefore, accepted. As the woman, however, by her statement, declared herself to be still bound to him by the levirate bond it is necessary that she should perform halizah, to submit to which, however, the levir can only be asked, not compelled.

(23) When she is not likely to have had in her mind the possibility of ever marrying the levir. The vow is, therefore, presumed to have been due to some quarrel or misunderstanding between her and the levir and to be in no way due to a desire on her part to evade the precept of the levirate marriage.

(24) When her intention may have been to avoid marrying the levir.

(25) But may not be compelled.

(26) Avoidance of the levirate marriage.

(27) And if he refuses, the widow, who is alone to blame for the fact that the levirate marriage cannot be contracted with her, is forbidden to marry again; nor is she entitled to her kethubah.

(28) Which allows levirate marriage to a minor.

(29) Since it is possible that on attaining majority they may be found wanting in procreative powers, in consequence of which they will be unfit for the performance of the levirate obligations. As the Pentateuchal law is thus incapable of fulfilment, the sister-in-law remains forbidden to the levir as his brother’s wife’.

(30) Supra 61b. (Cf. supra n. 6).

(31) I.e., the party that is of age.

(33) Both are not subject to punishment, even if their cohabitation is found to be a forbidden act and consequently may be allowed in a doubtful case such as this; cf. infra 114a.

(34) Which is not a case concerning two minors.

(35) Though the levirate marriage of a minor with one who is of age is forbidden, it is nevertheless valid ex post facto.

(36) Implying permissibility to continue to live with him.

(37) Which proves that our Mishnah permits directly, not only ex post facto, the levirate marriage of a minor.

(38) Deut. XXV, 7.

(39) As he is incapable of procreation.

(40) To raise up unto his brother a name. Why then is he allowed, the levirate marriage?
(41) Deut. XXV. 5.
(42) Even one who is incapable of fulfilling the commandment in its entirety.
(43) Others, ‘Rabbah’ (cf. Tosaf. supra 20 s.v. יִדְחָה).
(44) Lit., ‘now’, while one of the parties is a minor.
(45) When majority is attained.
(46) Supra 30a; for all time, even when the cause of her prohibition had ceased to exist. Were not the minor then permitted the levirate marriage, this prohibition would not have been removed even after he had attained majority.
(47) I.e., that a levir who was a minor at the time his brother died may never contract levirate marriage.
(48) Deut. XXV. 5.
(49) Must the levirate marriage he contracted, cf. ibid.
(50) After his marriage.
(51) From cohabitation. This being evidently the reason why in our Mishnah the woman’s statement is accepted as true.
(52) A husband’s assertion that he found no tokens of virginity (cf. Deut. XXII, 13ff), and that, consequently, his wife is not entitled to her kethubah.
(53) Lit., ‘all’.
(54) After marriage; and the husband is believed when he states that he had only just then discovered her defect. If his complaint is made after thirty days, he cannot deprive his wife of her kethubah, it being assumed that her defect, if any, had been discovered by him long ago and that he had acquiesced. His present complaint is regarded as a mere pretext to penalize the woman because of some new quarrel that may have arisen between them.
(55) V. Tosef. Keth. I.
(56) The statement in our Mishnah, which implies that for thirty days after marriage a man may restrain himself. (Cf. supra note 5).
(57) Not only that of R. Meir.
(58) And since he met her in privacy consummation of marriage might well be assumed.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 112a

towards whom one is rather reserved.¹

Now, instead of being compelled to submit to halizah, let [the levir] be compelled to take [his sister-in-law] in levirate marriage! — Rab replied: [This is a case] where her letter of divorce was produced by her.²

An objection was raised: If within thirty days³ a sister-in-law declared, ‘He has not cohabited with me,’ he is compelled to submit to halizah from her, whether he says ‘I have cohabited’ or whether he admits ‘I have not cohabited’; if after thirty days, he may only be requested⁴ to submit to halizah from her. If she declares,⁵ ‘He cohabited with me,’ and he states, ‘I did not cohabit’, behold, he may⁶ release her by a letter of divorce.⁷ If he declares, ‘I have cohabited’ and she states, ‘He has not cohabited with me,’ It is necessary for him, even if he withdrew his statement and admitted, ‘I have not cohabited’, [to give her] a letter of divorce⁸ and [to submit to her] halizah!⁹ — R. Ammi replied: [The meaning is that] she requires halizah together with her letter of divorce.¹⁰

R. Ashi replied: There¹¹ the letter of divorce [was given] in respect of his levirate bond;¹² while here¹³ the letter of divorce [is required in respect] of his cohabitation.¹⁴

[A couple] both of whom admitted¹⁵ [that there was no consummation of the levirate marriage] once came before Raba. ‘Arrange the halizah for her’, said Raba to his disciples, ‘and dismiss her case’. ‘But, surely’, said R. Sherebya to Raba, ‘it was taught: She requires¹⁶ both a letter of divorce and halizah!’ ‘If it was so taught’, the other replied, ‘well, then it was taught’.

Hon son of R. Nahman enquired of R. Nahman: What [is the law in respect of] her¹⁶ rival?¹⁷ — The other replied: Shall the rival be forbidden [to marry again] because we compel or request [the
IF A WOMAN VOWED TO HAVE NO BENEFIT etc. We learned elsewhere: At first it was held that [the following] three [classes of] women must be divorced and they also receive their kethubah: One who declares, ‘I am unclean for you’, or ‘heaven is between me and you’, or ‘May I be kept away from the Jews’. This ruling was afterwards withdrawn in order that a wife might not cast eyes upon another man and thus disgrace her husband; but [instead it was ordained that] one who declared, ‘I am unclean for you’ must bring evidence in support of her statement; [in respect of a woman who tells her husband] ‘heaven is between me and you’, [peace] is made between them by way of a request [addressed to the husband]; [and if a woman vowed], ‘May I be kept away from the Jews’ [the husband] invalidates his part [of the vow] and she may continue connubial intercourse with him, though she remains removed from [other] Jews. The question was raised: What [is her relation] to the levir? — Rab replied: The levir has the same status as the husband; and Samuel replied: The levir has not the same status as the husband.

Said Abaye: Logical deduction is in agreement with Rab. For we learned, IF A WOMAN VOWED TO HAVE NO BENEFIT FROM HER BROTHER-IN-LAW, THE LATTER IS COMPELLED TO SUBMIT TO HER HALIZAH [IF HER VOW WAS MADE] DURING THE LIFETIME OF HER HUSBAND. Now, if it is [to be assumed] that it occurred to her that her husband may possibly die and that she might become subject to the levir or not? — Rab replied: The levir has not the same status as the husband.

(1) Though he was alone with her no cohabitation may have taken place. רבי יוסי בר חנינא מאי ומאכילים ביאור הפך הוא ‘to be shy’, ‘bashful’. Cf.ἡδομή ‘to be ashamed’.

(2) Lit., ‘from under her hand’. After a divorce by the levir, the levirate marriage is forbidden. It is now assumed that the letter of divorce spoken of is one by which the levir had severed their union after the consummation of their marriage.

(3) After contracting levirate marriage.

(4) He cannot be compelled.

(5) After thirty days from their marriage.

(6) If they desire their union to be severed.

(7) No halizah is necessary, the woman being believed, since more than thirty days have elapsed after their marriage.

(8) Since after thirty days it is assumed that cohabitation had taken place.

(9) Because she herself by her declaration that no cohabitation had taken place and that the levirate bond was consequently still in force has caused her own prohibition to all other men until she has performed the halizah. Now, as in this case it is specifically mentioned that a letter of divorce is required, it is to be presumed that in all cases spoken of in this Baraitha the woman had no divorce; why then in the absence of a divorce, is the levir in the first case, compelled to submit to halizah and not rather to the performance of the levirate marriage?

(10) Which is already in her possession. The clause ‘even if he withdrew’ his statement etc., does not emphasize the necessity of giving a letter of divorce but the ruling that where the levir first declared after thirty days that he consummated the marriage he may only be requested and not compelled to submit to halizah even though he later asserted that no cohabitation had taken place.

(11) In the first clause of the Baraitha under discussion.

(12) And this has caused the woman to be forbidden to the levir, in consequence of which halizah only but no levirate marriage is possible.

(13) In the final clause.

(14) The purport of the clause ‘even if he withdrew’ his statement etc., being that although the levir admitted later that no cohabitation had taken place, in consequence of which it might have been presumed that halizah alone is sufficient, a letter of divorce is nevertheless required, because, more than thirty days having elapsed after the marriage, his first statement admitting cohabitation is accepted as the true one.

(15) After the levir had first declared that consummation of marriage had taken place.

(16) A sister-in-law who declared that the levirate marriage had not been consummated.

(17) Is the rival also forbidden to marry again before the other had performed the halizah?
Obviously not. The sister-in-law in question may indeed have placed herself under a prohibition as a result of her own declaration. The rival, however, since every levirate marriage is usually consummated, remains free.

Even if the husband is reluctant.

The wife of a priest.

Through outrage. A priest is forbidden to live with a wife in such circumstances.

A declaration that may be made by a woman whom her husband deprives of her connubial rights. The meaning might be: ‘The distance of the heavens lies between us’ or ‘heaven knows (if no man does) our miserable relationship’.

I.e., a vow to have no sexual intercourse with any of them. Such a vow is assumed to be the result of the pain that connubial intercourse may cause her, and therefore justified.

Lit., ‘they returned to say’.

Whom she would arrange to marry in a place where they are unknown.

By inventing the disabilities mentioned.

Otherwise her assertion is disregarded.

That part of the prohibition that concerns himself.

During the lifetime of her husband.

Though her husband is alive.

Without issue.

Her vow was consequently meant to include the levir; and, since her husband can only invalidate his own share, she remains forbidden to the levir.

Her vow may have applied to those men only who are otherwise allowed to marry her if her husband divorced her, her object being to convince him that she had no intention of marrying any other man even after she had left him. As the levir remains in any case forbidden to her after her husband had divorced her she could not have had him in mind. Hence he should be permitted to contract levirate marriage with her.

He is excluded from the vow.

Even while her husband was alive, that he might die without issue and that she would, therefore, be subject to the levir.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 112b

it should have been [stated that he is only] to be requested! — What we are dealing with here is the case of a woman who has children, so that such a remote possibility does not occur to her.

What, however, [would be the law if] she had no children? [Would the levir in that case have] to be requested! Instead, then, of stating, IF THIS, HOWEVER, WAS IN HER MIND [EVEN IF HER VOW WAS MADE] DURING THE LIFETIME OF HER HUSBAND, THE LEVIR MAY ONLY BE REQUESTED TO SUBMIT TO HER HALIZAH, a distinction should have been made in the very same case: This is applicable only where she has children, but where she has no children he may only be requested!’ Consequently it must be inferred that whether she has children or not, the levir is compelled [to submit to halizah], in accordance with the opinion of Rab. Thus our contention is proved.

CHAPTER XIV

MISHNAH. A DEAF MAN WHO MARRIED A WOMAN OF SOUND SENSES OR A MAN OF SOUND SENSES WHO MARRIED A DEAF WOMAN MAY, IF HE WISHES TO RELEASE HER, DO SO; AND IF HE WISHES TO RETAIN HER HE MAY ALSO DO SO. AS HE MARRIES [THE WOMAN] BY GESTURES SO HE DIVORCES HER BY GESTURES.

IF A MAN OF SOUND SENSES MARRIED A WOMAN OF SOUND SENSES AND SHE BECAME DEAF, HE MAY, IF HE WISHES, RELEASE HER, AND IF HE WISHES HE MAY RETAIN HER. IF SHE BECAME AN IMBECILE HE MAY NOT DIVORCE HER.

GEMARA. Rami b. Hama stated: Wherein lies the difference between a deaf man or a deaf woman [and an imbecile] that the marriage of the former should have been legalized by the Rabbis while that of the male imbecile or female imbecile was not legalized by the Rabbis? For it was taught: If an imbecile or a minor married, and then died, their wives are exempt from halizah and from the levirate marriage — [In the case of] a deaf man or a deaf woman, where the Rabbinical ordinance could be carried into practice, the marriage was legalized by the Rabbis; [in that of] a male, or female imbecile, where the Rabbinical ordinance cannot be carried into practice, since no one could live with a serpent in the same basket, the marriage was not legalized by the Rabbis.

And wherein lies the difference between a minor [and a deaf person] that the marriage of the former should not have been legalized by the Rabbis while that of the deaf person was legalized by the Rabbis? — The Rabbis have legalized the marriage of a deaf person since [Pentateuchally] he would never be able to contract a marriage; they did not legalize the marriage of a minor since in due course he would be able to contract [a Pentateuchally valid] marriage. But, surely, [in the case of] a girl minor, who would in due course be able to contract [a Pentateuchally valid] marriage, the Rabbis did legalize her marriage. — There [it was legalized] in order that people might not treat her as ownerless property. And why is there a difference between a minor [and a deaf woman] that the former should be permitted to exercise the right of mi'un while the deaf woman should not be permitted to exercise the right of mi'un? — Because, if [the latter also were allowed to do] so,
And not compelled; since it is the woman's fault that the levirate marriage cannot be contracted.

Lit., 'that all this', i.e., that all her children as well as her husband would die, and that the death of the former would precede that of the latter.

Which, referring to a case where the woman's intention was known, is altogether different from the previous one.

Spoken of, where it is not definitely known whether the levirate marriage was or was not in her mind.

That the levir is compelled to submit to halizah.

Since no such distinction was drawn.

Lit., 'there is no difference'.

'Deaf and dumb', as is to be understood throughout by the term 'deaf'. Marriages contracted by parties of whom one is a deaf-mute are only Rabbinically valid.

By a letter of divorce.

Which in the case of a deaf person take the place of the prescribed formulae.

Though her marriage was Pentateuchally valid.

By a letter of divorce, for the reason to be explained infra.

This is a Rabbinic provision, and the reason is given in the Gemara.

Because his marriage was Pentateuchally valid while his divorce, being that of a deaf person, has no such validity.

The Sages. divorce, being that of a deaf person, has no such validity. (8) The Sages.

Such a marriage is Pentateuchally valid since her father is empowered to act on her behalf.

Even after attaining her majority when she is no longer under her father's control.

The Sages.

R. Johanan b. Nuri.

Lit., 'this', one of sound senses that became deaf, who formed the subject of R. Johanan b. Nuri's enquiry in the preceding paragraph.

V. Git. 55a.

As the marriages of both sisters are of equal invalidity in Pentateuchal, and of equal validity in Rabbinic law, their levirate obligations and degree of relationship are also on the same legal level. Each sister, therefore, exempts the other, as in the case of marriages between normal brothers and sisters, from both the levirate marriage and halizah.

To one another; i.e., if they were not sisters or near of kin in any other way.

Since no halizah is possible with a deaf-mute (v. supra p.788, n. 1) who cannot recite the formulae.

After marriage.

By gestures, as they did in the case of the marriages.

From levirate marriage and halizah.

Because the levirate bond with his sister-in-law, whose marriage (as one between normal persons) was Pentateuchally valid, causes his wife whose marriage with him (a deaf person) was only Rabbinically valid, to be forbidden to him as the sister of his zekukah (v. Glos.).

Since, as a deaf man (cf. supra p.789. n. 8), he is incapable of participating in her halizah, while levirate marriage cannot be contracted because she is his wife's, or divorcee's sister.

From levirate marriage and halizah.

Cf. supra n. 1 mutatis mutandis.

Since both he and his sister-in-law are normal persons.

V. supra p.790. 2.

His divorce, which has only Rabbinical, but not Pentateuchal validity, cannot sever the levirate bond between him and his sister-in-law, which arose out of the pentateuchally valid marriage of his brother.

Cf. supra p.789. n. 10.

Cf. supra p.789. n. 10.

As is evident from our Mishnah. Since halizah was required it is obvious that the preceding marriage, without which the question of halizah could never have arisen, is recognized as valid despite the fact that a deaf-mute (cf. supra p.788. n. 1), owing to his inferior intelligence, is elsewhere ineligible to effect a kinyan.

Deaf-mutes might well lead a happy matrimonial life, not only when the husband or wife is deaf, but even where both are afflicted with deafness.
proverb. There can be no happy or enduring matrimonial union between an imbecile and a sane person or between two imbeciles.

As has been stated in the Baraita just cited.

And were not his marriage recognized as valid, at least in Rabbinic law, marriage for him would have become an impossibility.

Wherein does she differ from the boy minor that she should be subject to a different law?

men would abstain from marrying her.

And why is there a difference between a minor [and a deaf woman] that the former should be permitted to eat terumah while a deaf woman may not? For we learned, ‘R. Johanan b. Gudgada testified concerning a deaf girl whom her father gave in marriage that she may be dismissed by a letter of divorce,’ and concerning a minor, the daughter of an Israelite, who was married to a priest, that she may eat [Rabbinical] terumah, while the deaf woman may not eat. This is a preventive measure against the possibility that a deaf man might feed a deaf woman [with such terumah]. Well, let him feed her, [since she is only in the same position] as a minor who eats nebelah! This is a preventive measure against the possibility that a deaf [husband] might feed a wife of sound senses [with it]. But even a deaf husband might well feed his wife who was of sound senses with Rabbinical terumah! — A preventive measure was made against the possibility of his feeding her with Pentateuchal terumah.

And why is the minor different [from the deaf woman] that the former should be entitled to her kethubah while the deaf woman is not entitled to her kethubah? — Because if [the latter also were] so [entitled] men would abstain from marrying her.

Whence, however, is it inferred that a minor is entitled to a kethubah? — From what we learned: A minor who exercised the right of mi’un, a forbidden relative of the second degree, and a woman who is incapable of procreation, are not entitled to a kethubah; but [it follows that one] released by a letter of divorce, though a minor, is entitled to receive her kethubah.

And whence is it inferred that a deaf woman is not entitled to her kethubah? — From what was taught: If a man who was deaf or an imbecile married women of sound senses [the latter], even though the deaf man recovered his faculties or the imbecile regained his intelligence, have no claim whatsoever on [either of] them. But if [the men] wished to retain them [the latter] are entitled to a kethubah of the value of a maneh. If, however, a man of sound senses married a woman who was deaf or an imbecile, her kethubah is valid, even if he undertook in writing to give her a hundred maneh, since he himself had consented to suffer the loss. The reason, then, is because he himself consented; had he not consented, however, she would receive no kethubah, since otherwise men would abstain from marrying her.

If so, a kethubah should have been provided for a woman of sound senses who married a deaf man, since otherwise [women] would abstain from marrying [deaf men]! — More than the man desires to marry does the woman desire to be taken in marriage.

A deaf man once lived in the neighbourhood of R. Malkiu [and the latter] allowed him to take a wife to whom he had assigned in writing a sum of four hundred zuz out of his estate. Raba remarked: Who is so wise as R. Malkiu who is indeed a great man. He held the view: Had he wished to have a maid to wait upon him, would we not have allowed one to be bought for him?\textsuperscript{33}

How much more, [then, should his desire be fulfilled] here where there are two [reasons for complying with his request]!\textsuperscript{34}

R. Hiyya b. Ashi stated in the name of Samuel: For [unwitting intercourse with] the wife of a deaf man\textsuperscript{35} no asham talui\textsuperscript{22} is incurred.\textsuperscript{36} It might be suggested that the following provides support to his\textsuperscript{37} view: There are five who may not set apart terumah, and if they did so their terumah is not valid. These are they: A deaf man, an imbecile, a minor, he who gives terumah\textsuperscript{38} from that which is not his own, and an idolater who gave terumah from that which belonged to an Israelite; and even [if the latter gave it] with the consent of the Israelite his terumah is invalid!\textsuperscript{39} — He\textsuperscript{40} holds\textsuperscript{41} the same view is R. Eleazar. For it was taught: R. Isaac stated in the name of R. Eleazar that the terumah of a deaf man must not be treated\textsuperscript{42} as profane, because its validity is a matter of doubt.\textsuperscript{43} If he\textsuperscript{40} is of the same opinion as R. Eleazar,\textsuperscript{44} an asham talui also should be incurred!\textsuperscript{45} — It is necessary\textsuperscript{46} [that the offence should be similar to that of eating] one of two available pieces [of meat].\textsuperscript{47} But does R. Eleazar require [a condition similar to that of eating] one of two pieces? Surely, it was taught: R. Eleazar stated: For [eating] the suet of a koy\textsuperscript{48} one incurs the obligation of an asham talui!\textsuperscript{49} — Samuel is of the same opinion as R. Eleazar in one case\textsuperscript{50} but differs from him in the other.\textsuperscript{51}

Others read: R. Hiyya b. Ashi stated in the name of Samuel: For [unwitting intercourse with] the wife of a deaf man the obligation of an asham talui is incurred.\textsuperscript{52} An objection was raised: There are five who may not set apart terumah!\textsuperscript{53} — He\textsuperscript{54} holds the same view as R. Eleazar.\textsuperscript{55}

R. Ashi asked: What is R. Eleazar’s reason? Is he positive that the mind of a deaf man is feeble but in doubt whether that mind is clear.\textsuperscript{56}

Even according to Rabbinic law.

Cf. supra n. 5, mutatis mutandis.

The lack of a kethubah would not prevent a woman from marrying a man even if he was deaf.

Matrimony and service.

Though it might be argued that, since the degree of her husband's intelligence or mental capacity cannot be accurately gauged — the validity of her marriage should be deemed doubtful.

Such an offering is due only when the offence is a matter of doubt (cf. infra p.796. n. 10). In this case, however, as the marriage is valid in Rabbinic law only but remains definitely invalid in Pentateuchal law, no offering could be incurred.

Samuel's.

Without the authority of its owner.

Ter. I, 1 Shab. 153b. From this Mishnah, then, it follows, since the terumah of a deaf man is regarded as definitely invalid, that the incapacity of a deaf man is not a matter of doubt; and this apparently provides support to Samuel's view.

One of which was definitely forbidden and the other definitely permitted, and it is unknown whether a person ate the one or the other. Only in such a case, where the doubt is due to the existence of two objects, is an asham talui incurred. Similarly in the case of intercourse with one of two women, when it is unknown whether the woman affected was his own wife or a forbidden stranger, an asham talui is incurred. If the doubt, however, relates to one object, it being unknown, for instance, whether a piece of fat one has eaten was of the permitted or forbidden kind, no asham talui is involved. Similarly, in the case of the deaf man's marriage, where the doubt relates to one woman, it being uncertain whether she has the status of a married woman or not, no asham talui is incurred.

or not clear, though [in either case] it is always in the same condition, or is it possible that he has no doubt that the [deaf man's] mind is feeble and that it is not clear, but [his doubt] here is due to this reason: Because [the deaf man] may sometimes be in a normal state and sometimes in a state of imbecility? In what respect would this constitute any practical difference? — In respect of releasing his letter of divorce. If you grant that his mind is always in the same condition, his divorce would have the same validity as his betrothal. If, however, you contend that sometimes he is in a normal state and sometimes he is in a state of imbecility, he would indeed be capable of betrothal; in no way, however, would he be capable of giving divorce. What then is the decision? — This remains undecided.

IF SHE BECAME AN IMBECILE etc. R. Isaac stated: According to the word of the Torah, an imbecile may be divorced, since her case is similar to that of a woman of sound senses [who may be divorced] without her consent. What then is the reason why it was stated that she may not be divorced? — In order that people should not treat her as a piece of ownerless property.

What kind of imbecile, however, is here to be understood? If it be suggested [that it is one] who is capable of taking care of her letter of divorce and who is also capable of taking care of herself, would people [it may be asked] treat her as if she were ownerless property! If, however, [she is one] who is unable to take care either of her letter of divorce or of herself, [how could it be said that] in accordance with the word of the Torah she may be divorced? Surely, it was stated at the school of R. Jannai, And giveth it in her hand only to her who is capable of accepting her divorce, but this one is excluded since she is incapable of accepting her divorce; and, furthermore, it was taught at the school of R. Ishmael, And sendeth her out of his house, only one who, when he sends her out, does not return, but this one is excluded since she returns even if he sends her out! — This was necessary in respect of one who is capable of preserving her letter of divorce but is unable to take proper care of herself. Hence, in accordance with the word of the Torah, such an imbecile may well be divorced for, surely, she is capable of preserving her letter of divorce; the Rabbis, however, ruled that she shall not be dismissed in order that people might not treat her as a piece of ownerless property.

Abaye remarked: This may also be supported by deduction. For in respect of her it was stated, IF SHE BECAME AN IMBECILE HE MAY NOT DIVORCE HER, while in respect of him [the statement was], HE MAY NEVER DIVORCE HER. In what respect [it may be asked] does he differ [from her] that the statement [concerning him] is NEVER while in respect of her ‘NEVER’ is not mentioned? The inference, then, must be that the one is Pentateuchal, the other Rabbinical.

R. JOHANAN B. NURI ASKED etc. The question was raised: Was R. Johanan b. Nuri certain [of the law concerning] the man and his question related to that of the woman, or is it possible that he was certain concerning that of the woman and his question related to that of the man? — Come and hear: Since they answered him: A MAN WHO GIVES A DIVORCE IS NOT LIKE A WOMAN WHO IS DIVORCED. FOR WHILE A WOMAN MAY BE DIVORCED WITH HER CONSENT AS WELL AS WITHOUT IT, A MAN CAN GIVE A DIVORCE ONLY WITH HIS FULL CONSENT, it may be inferred that his question related to the man. On the contrary; since they said to him: THE OTHER ALSO IS IN A SIMILAR POSITION, it may be inferred that his question related to the woman! — But [the fact is this]: R. Johanan b. Nuri was addressing [them in the light] of their own statement. ‘According to my view’, [he argued], ‘as well as a man is incapable of giving a divorce, so also is a woman incapable of receiving a divorce, but according to your view, why should there be a difference between a man and a woman?’ [To this] they replied: A MAN WHO GIVES A DIVORCE IS NOT LIKE A WOMAN WHO IS DIVORCED.

R. JOHANAN . . . TESTIFIED etc. Raba stated: From the testimony of R. Johanan b. Gudgada [it may be inferred that if a husband] said to witnesses, ‘See this letter of divorce which I am giving [to my wife]’ and to her he said, ‘Take this bill of indebtedness’, she is nevertheless divorced. For did not R. Johanan b. Gudgada imply that [the woman's] consent was not required? Here also, then, her consent is not required. Is not this obvious? It might have been assumed that since he said to her, ‘Take this bill of indebtedness’ he has thereby cancelled [the letter of divorce], hence we were taught [that it remains valid, for] had he in fact cancelled it, he would have made his statement to the witnesses. Since, however, he did not make the statement to the witnesses he did not cancel it at all; and the only reason why he made that statement to her was to conceal [his] shame.

R. Isaac b. Bisna once lost the keys of the school house in a public domain on a Sabbath. When he came to R. Pedath the latter said to him, ‘Go and lead forth some boys and girls [to the spot] and let them take a walk\textsuperscript{1} there, for if they find [the keys] they will bring them back'. [From this] it is clearly evident that he\textsuperscript{2} is of the opinion that if a minor eats nebelah,\textsuperscript{3} it is not the duty of the Beth din to take it away from him.\textsuperscript{4} May it be suggested that the following provides support for his view? A man must not say to a child, ‘Bring me\textsuperscript{5} a key’, or ‘bring me\textsuperscript{6} a seal’; but he may allow him to pluck or to throw\textsuperscript{16} Abaye replied: ‘To pluck’ [may refer] to a non-perforated plant-pot,\textsuperscript{7} and ‘to throw’ [may refer] to a neutral domain,\textsuperscript{8} [acts which are no more than prohibitions] of the Rabbis.\textsuperscript{9}

If a minor [Israelite], however, came to extinguish [the fire], he must be told, ‘Do not put it out’, since it is the duty of the Israelites present\textsuperscript{11} to enforce his Sabbath rest!\textsuperscript{12} R. Johanan replied: [The child is inhibited only] where he [appears to] act with his father's approval.\textsuperscript{13}

Similarly, then, in respect of the idolater,\textsuperscript{14} [it is a case] where he acts with the approval of an Israelite? Is this, however, permitted\textsuperscript{15} — An idolater acts on his own initiative.\textsuperscript{16}

Come and hear: If the child of \textsuperscript{17}haber was in the habit of visiting his mother's father who was an ‘am ha-rez,\textsuperscript{18} there is no need to apprehend that [the latter] might feed him with [levitically] unprepared foodstuffs,\textsuperscript{19} and if fruit\textsuperscript{20} was found in his\textsuperscript{21} possession, it is not necessary [to take it from] him\textsuperscript{22} — R. Johanan replied: The law was relaxed in respect of demai.\textsuperscript{23}

The reason, then,\textsuperscript{24} is because [the fruit was] demai,\textsuperscript{23} but [had its prohibition been] certain\textsuperscript{25} it would have been necessary to tithe it;\textsuperscript{26} but, surely [it may be objected] R. Johanan said\textsuperscript{27} that [a child is inhibited only] where he [appears to] act with his father's approval\textsuperscript{28} — But [the fact is that] R. Johanan was in doubt. When, therefore, he dealt with the one subject\textsuperscript{29} he rebutted the argument\textsuperscript{30} and when he dealt with the other\textsuperscript{29} he [again] rebutted the argument.\textsuperscript{30}

Come and hear: If the child of a haber\textsuperscript{31} who was a priest was in the habit of visiting his mother's father who was a priest and an ‘am ha-arez,\textsuperscript{32} there is no need to apprehend that [the latter] might feed him with unclean terumah; and if fruit\textsuperscript{33} was found in his\textsuperscript{33} possession it is not necessary [to take it away from] him\textsuperscript{34} — [This refers only] to Rabbinical terumah.\textsuperscript{35}

Come and hear: An [Israelite] child may be regularly\textsuperscript{36} breast fed by an idolatress or an unclean beast, and there is no need to have scruples about his sucking from a detestable thing,\textsuperscript{37} but he must not be directly fed with nebeloth,\textsuperscript{38} terefoth,\textsuperscript{39} detestable creatures or reptiles. From all these, however, he may suck, even on the Sabbath,\textsuperscript{40} though this is forbidden to an adult.\textsuperscript{41} Abba Saul stated: It was our practice to suck from a clean beast on a festival.\textsuperscript{42} At any rate it was here stated that ‘there is no need to have scruples about his sucking from a detestable thing’!\textsuperscript{43} — [The permissibility] there is due to [the presence of] danger.\textsuperscript{44}

If so, an adult also [should be permitted]?\textsuperscript{45} — [Permissibility for] an adult is dependent on medical opinion. A child also should be made dependent on medical opinion! — R. Huna son of R. Joshua replied: The ordinary child is in danger when deprived of his milk.

‘Abba Saul stated: It was our practice to suck from a clean beast on a festival’. How is one to understand this? If danger was involved, [the sucking should be permitted] even on the Sabbath also; and if no danger was involved, it should be forbidden even on a festival! — This can only be understood as a case where pain was involved, [Abba Saul] being of the opinion [that sucking] is an act of indirect detaching. [In respect of the] Sabbath, therefore, where the prohibition is one involving the penalty of stoning, the Rabbis have instituted a preventive measure; [in respect of] a festival, however, where the prohibition is only that of a negative precept, the Rabbis have not instituted any preventive measure.

Come and hear: These ye shall not eat, for they are a detestable thing is to be understood as ‘you shall not allow them to eat’, this being a warning to the older men concerning the young children. Does not this imply that [minors] must be ordered, you shall not eat [such things]! — No; that [adults] may not give them with their own hands.

Come and hear: No soul of you shall eat blood implies a warning to the older men concerning the young children. Does not this signify that [minors] must be told, ‘Do not eat [blood]’! — No; that [adults] must not give them with their own hands.

Come and hear: Speak . . . and say conveys a warning to the older [Priests] concerning the [priests who are] minors. Does not this imply that minors must be ordered not to defile themselves! — No; that [adults] must not defile them with their own hands.

And [all the Scriptural texts cited are] required. For if we had been informed concerning detestable things only, htns, land produce belonging to an 'am ha-arez (v. Glos.), since the prohibition of such produce is due to suspicion only. It is not certain that the prescribed dues were not given by the 'am ha-arez.

Why, then, should the child, where he acts in all innocence and where his father's approval is not in question, be prevented from eating of the levitically unprepared fruit?

Why, then, should the child, where he acts in all innocence and where his father's approval is not in question, be prevented from eating of the levitically unprepared fruit?

Why the child is not prevented from the consumption of the fruit mentioned.

it might have been assumed [that the law applies to them], because their prohibition applies to even the minutest [objectionable creature] but not to blood the minimum quantity of which must be no less than a quarter [of a log]. And if we had been informed concerning blood only, it might have been assumed [that the law applies to this] because [the eating of it] involves the penalty of kareth, but not to reptiles. And if we had been informed concerning these two, it might have been assumed [that the law applies to these] because their prohibition applies equally to all but not to uncleanness. And had we been informed concerning uncleanness it might have been assumed [that the law applies only here because] priests are different [from other people], since more commandments have been imposed upon them, but not to these. [Hence the three Scriptural texts were] required.

Raba said, Come and hear: IF TWO BROTHERS, ONE OF WHOM WAS DEAF AND THE OTHER OF SOUND SENSES, WERE MARRIED TO TWO SISTERS, ONE OF WHOM WAS OF SOUND SENSES AND THE OTHER DEAF, AND THE DEAF BROTHER, THE HUSBAND OF THE DEAF SISTER, DIED, WHAT SHOULD [THE BROTHER WHO WAS] OF SOUND SENSES, THE HUSBAND OF [THE SISTER WHO WAS] OF SOUND SENSES, DO? [NOTHING; SINCE THE WIDOW] IS RELEASED BY VIRTUE OF HER BEING HIS WIFE'S SISTER. IF THE BROTHER OF SOUND SENSES, THE HUSBAND OF [THE SISTER WHO WAS] OF SOUND SENSES, DIED, WHAT SHOULD THE DEAF BROTHER, THE HUSBAND OF THE DEAF SISTER, DO? HE RELEASES HIS WIFE BY A LETTER OF DIVORCE, WHILE HIS BROTHER'S WIFE IS FOREVER FORBIDDEN [TO MARRY AGAIN]. Now here, surely, no prohibition is involved either for him or for her, and yet it was stated, HE RELEASES HIS WIFE BY A LETTER OF DIVORCE! "— R. Shemaia replied: This is a preventive measure against the possibility of allowing a sister-in-law to marry a stranger.15

CHAPTER XV

GEMARA. Mention was made of PEACE BETWEEN HIM AND HER because it was desired to speak of DISCORD BETWEEN HIM AND HER, and PEACE IN THE WORLD was mentioned because it was desired to mention WAR IN THE WORLD.

Raba stated: What is the reason [why a wife is not believed in a time] of war? Because she speaks from conjecture. ‘Could it be imagined’ [she thinks] ‘that among all those who were killed he alone escaped!’ And should it be contended that since there was peace between him and her she would wait until she saw [what had actually happened to him]. it may sometimes happen [It may be retorted] that he was struck by an arrow or spear and she would think that he was certainly dead, while in fact someone might have applied an emollient to his wound and he might have recovered.

Raba was [at first] of the opinion that famine is not like war, since [in the former case] she does not speak from conjecture. [Later. however]. Raba changed his opinion. stating that famine is like war. For a woman once appeared before Raba and said to him, ‘My husband died during a famine’. ‘You have acted well’, he remarked to her. ‘in that you saved your own life, since it could hardly be imagined that he would survive on the little remnant of flour that you left for him’. ‘The Master then’, she replied. ‘also understands that in such circumstances he could not survive’. After this Raba ruled: Famine is worse than war; for whereas in the case of war it is only when the wife states, ‘My husband died in the war’, that she is not believed, but [if her statement is that]. ‘He died in his bed’, she is believed, in the case of famine she is not believed unless she states, ‘He died and I buried him’.

A ruin is regarded as war, for [in this case also] she speaks from conjecture. A visitation of serpents or scorpions is regarded as war, for [here also a wife] speaks from conjecture. As to pestilence, some hold that it is like war, while others hold that it is not like war. ‘Some hold that it is like war’, because a wife, they maintain. speaks from conjecture; while ‘others hold that it is not like war’ because, they maintain, a wife relies upon the common saying. ‘A pestilence may rage for seven years but none dies before his time’.

The question was raised: What is the law if it was she who established that there was a war in the world? Do we apply the argument. ‘What motive could she have for telling a lie?’

since, if she wished, she could have said that there was peace in the world; or, perhaps, since a war was established [by her] she speaks from conjecture and the argument. ‘What motive could she she have for telling a lie cannot come and impair an established principle? — Come and hear: [If a woman states] ‘They set our house on fire’, or ‘They filled the cave wherein we sheltered with smoke, and he died while I escaped’. she is not believed! There it is different since she can be told, ‘As a miracle happened to you, so may a miracle have happened to him also’.

Come and hear: [If a woman states] ‘Idolaters fell upon us, or, ‘robbers fell upon us, and he died while I escaped’. she is believed! — There it is different since she can be told, ‘As a miracle happened to you, so may a miracle have happened to him also’.

Come and hear: R. Akiba stated: When I went down to Nehardea to intercalate the year, I met Nehemiah of Beth De li who said to me, ‘I heard that in the Land of Israel no one with the exception of R. Judah b. Baba permits a [married] woman to marry again on the evidence of one witness’. ‘That is so’, I told him. ‘Tell them’, he said to me, ‘in my name: You know that this country is infested with raiders; I have this tradition from R. Gamaliel the Elder: That a [married] woman may be allowed to marry again on the evidence of one witness’. Now, what was meant by ‘This country is infested with raiders’? Obviously that ‘although this country is in a state of confusion. I have this tradition: That a [married woman] may be allowed to marry again on the evidence of one witness!’ Thus it is evident that one witness is believed.

Rami b. Hama replied. Come and hear: Two learned men once travelled with Abba Jose b. Simai on board a ship, which sank. And on the evidence of women, Rabbi allowed their wives to marry again. [Now, evidence of death by] water is surely like [that of death in] war, and women, even a hundred of them, are legally equal to one witness, and yet it was stated [that Rabbi] ‘Allowed . . . to marry’! — And do you understand this? Those were waters without [a visible] end, and when a man is drowned in waters without [a visible] end his wife is forbidden [to marry again]. How, then, is this to be understood? [Obviously] that they stated, ‘[The drowned men] were cast up in our presence

(1) And as no one could have contradicted her, she would have been believed in saying that her husband was dead and she would have obtained her object; hence she is believed even when she reported that there was a war.

(8) Her husband.

(9) This proves that her statement that her husband is dead is not accepted although it was through her that it became known that there ever was a state of war.

(10) As she has not actually seen his death.

(11) It is for this reason, and not because she is suspected of lying, that her evidence is not regarded as sufficient proof for establishing the death of her husband. In the case of a war, however, it may well be assumed that she had actually seen the death of her husband, since, had she desired to deceive, she need not have disclosed the fact that there ever was a war.

(12) Circumstances similar to those of a war.

(13) Which proves that a wife is believed when she states that her husband died in circumstances akin to war if these become known solely through her own evidence.

(14) Since the incident did not happen in war time but only in analogous circumstances.

(15) ‘A.Z 25b; i.e., her sex is her protection against murder. When, therefore, her husband is attacked, unless there was actually a state of war, she does not flee to save her own life, but remains on the spot to the very end. Her evidence that her husband is dead may consequently be accepted as that of an eye witness. This, therefore, provides no proof that a wife is also believed if an actual state of war existed when her husband's death presumably occurred.

(16) Lit., ‘man’.

(17) Who apparently attempted to rescue the bridegroom.

(18) Hence it is possible that her husband did not die at all.

and we saw then, immediately [afterwards], and they also mention [his identification] marks. so that we do not rely upon them but on the marks.

A man once deposited some sesame with another, [and when in due course] he asked him, ‘Return to me my sesame , the other replied. ‘You have already taken it’. ‘But, surely’. [the depositor remonstrated, ‘the quantity] was such and such and it is [in fact still] lying [intact] in your jar’. ‘Yours’, the other replied. ‘you have taken back and this is different’. R. Hisda at first intended to give his decision [that the law in this case is] the same as that of the two learned men, where we do not assume that those have gone elsewhere and these are others. Raba, however, said to him: Are [the two cases] alike? There, the identification marks were given; but here, what identification marks can sesame have! And in regard to [the depositor's] statement [that their quantity] was such and such, it might be said that the similarity of quantities is a mere coincidence.

Said Mar Kashisha b. R. Hisda to R. Ashi: Do we ever [in such circumstances] take into consideration the possibility that [the contents of a vessel] may have been removed? Surely we learned: If a man found a vessel on which was inscribed a Kof it is korban; if a Mem, it is ma'aser; if a Daleth it is demu'a'a; if a Teth, it is Tebel; and if a Taw, It is terumah; for in the period of danger they used to write a Taw for terumah! — Said Rabina to R. Ashi: Do we not [in such circumstances] heed the possibility that [the contents of a vessel] may have been removed? Read, then, the final clause: R. Jose said, Even if a man found a jar on which ‘terumah’ was inscribed [the contents] are nevertheless regarded as unconsecrated, for it is assumed that though it was in the previous year full of terumah it has subsequently been emptied! But the fact is, all agree that the possibility of [the contents] having been removed must be taken into consideration. Here, however, they differ only on the following principle: One Master is of the opinion that had the owner removed [the contents from the jar] he would undoubtedly have wiped [the mark] off, while the other [maintains that] it might be assumed that he may have forgotten [to remove the mark] or he may also intentionally have left it as a safeguard.

Resh Galutha Isaac, a son of R. Bebai's sister, once went from Cordova to Spain and died there. A message was sent from there [in the following terms]. ‘Resh Galutha Isaac, a son of R. Bebai’s sister, went from Cordova to Spain and died there. [The question thus arose] whether [the possibility that there might have been] two [men of the name of] Isaac is to be taken into consideration or not? — Abaye said: It is to be taken into consideration; but Raba said: It is not to be taken into consideration.

Said Abaye: How do I arrive at my assertion? — Because in a letter of divorce that was once found in Nehardea it was written, ‘Near the town of Kolonia, I, David son of Nehilais, a Nehardean, released and divorced my wife So-and-so’, and when Samuel's father sent it to R. Judah Nesiah the latter replied: ‘Let all Nehardea be searched’. Raba, however, said: If that were so he should [have ordered] the whole world to be searched! The truth is that it was only out of respect for Samuel's father that he sent that message. Raba said: How do I arrive at my assertion? Because in two notes of indebtedness that were once produced in court at Mahuza [the names of the parties] were written as Habi son of Nanai and Nanai son of Habi. Abbuha ordered the collection of the debts on these bills. But, surely, there are many men bearing the names of Habi son of Nanai and Nanai son of Habi at Mahuza!

(28) To decide whether the document may be given to the woman who claimed it as a valid one. [The reference must be to R. Judah I the prince, since the father of Samuel was no longer alive during the patriarchate of of R. Judah II (v. Obermeyer, p. 261, n. 4)].
(29) To ascertain whether there is no other person of the same name in that town. This obviously proves the soundness of Abaye's ruling.
(30) As Abaye ruled.
(31) R. Judah Nesi'ah.
Any Nehardean of that name might have left Nehardea for another town after giving the letter of divorce in question.

That he might not be chagrined by hearing that his enquiry was really futile and that there was in fact nothing for him to do but to accept the document as valid.

Lit., ‘whence’.

So Bah. Cur. edd., ‘Raba’.

And yet it was not doubted that the persons who held the notes were the men named, which proves that even the definite existence of other men of the same name in the same place need not be taken into consideration. This being the rule in monetary matters, it may be inferred that in religious matters, the uncertain existence at least of men of the same name need not be taken into consideration.

How can he maintain his ruling in view of the decision of Rabbah b. Abbuha.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 116a

What possibility can be taken into consideration! If that of loss, one is surely careful with [a note of indebtedness]; if that of a deposit, since the name of the one is like that of the other the former does not entrust the latter with such a deposit; what then can be said? That he may only have delivered [the note] to him! Letters [it may be replied] are acquired by mesirah.

A letter of divorce was once found at Sura, and in it appeared this entry: ‘In the town of Sura, I, Anan son of Hiyya, a Nehardean, released and divorced my wife So-and-so.’ Now when the Rabbis searched from Sura to Nehardea [they found that] there was no other Anan son of Hiyya save one Anan son of Hiyya of Hagra who was at that time at Nehardea, and witnesses came and declared that on the day on which the letter of divorce was written Anan son of Hiyya of Hagra was with them. Said Abaye: Even according to me who hold that [the possibility of the existence of other men of the same name] is to be taken into consideration, no such possibility need be considered here, for [even in respect of the only other man known to have that name] witnesses declared that he was at Nehardea; how then could he [on the same day,] have been at Sura! Raba said: Even according to me who hold that [the possibility of the existence of other men of the same name] is not to be taken into consideration, such possibility must be considered here, since [the man in question] may have gone [to Sura] on a flying camel, or by a miraculous leap, or he may have given verbal instructions [for the letter of divorce to be written on his behalf], as, in fact] Rab said to his scribes, and R. Huna, similarly, said to his scribes: When you are at Shili write [in any deed] ‘At Shili’, although the instructions were given to you at Hini, and when you are at Hini, write, ‘At Hini’, although the instructions Were given to you at Shili.

What is the decision in respect of the sesame? — R. Yemar ruled: [The possibility that it was removed and replaced by another lot] is not to be taken into consideration; Rabina ruled: It is to be taken into consideration; and the law is that it is to be taken into consideration.

DISCORD BETWEEN HIM AND HER etc. What is to be understood by DISCORD BETWEEN HIM AND HER? Rab Judah replied in the name of Samuel: When [a wife] says to her husband. ‘Divorce me!’ Do not all women say this? Rather [this is the meaning]: When she says to her husband. ‘You have divorced me!’ Then let her be believed on the strength of R. Hamnuna’s ruling; for R. Hamnuna ruled: If a woman said to her husband, ‘You have divorced me’. she is believed, for it is an established principle that no woman would dare [to make such a false assertion] in the presence of her husband! — [Here it is a case] where she said. ‘You have divorced me in the presence Of So-and-so and So-and-so’, who, when asked, stated that this had never happened.

What is the reason in case Of DISCORD? — R Hanina explained: Because she is likely to tell a lie. R. Shimi b. Ashi explained: Because she speaks from conjecture. What is the practical difference between them?
In deciding the ownership of a note of indebtedness of the nature if the notes mentioned.

That the actual creditor had lost the note and that the man who produced it, whose name is the same as that of the creditor, had found it.

The remote and unlikely possibility of loss may, therefore, be completely disregarded.

That the holder of the note is not its owner, but only keeper or trustee for another man of the same name as his.

Since he knows full well that the keeper might at any moment claim to be the creditor.

In justification of the assumption that the man producing the note is not the real creditor.

The creditor when selling the note to the man who now utters it.

But did not transfer its possession by the usual kinyan. And, since the seller may withdraw from the sale before legal transfer had taken place, it might be assumed that the creditor named in the note withdrew from the sale and that the man of the same name who now produces the note is not its owner even through purchase.

I.e., a note of indebtedness.

V. Glos. The delivery of the note completes the legal transfer after which the seller can no longer withdraw. Cf Kid. 47b. p BB 76a. 77a.

[Hagronia. a suburb of Nehardea (Obermeyer p. 266)].

In Nehardea; while the letter of divorce was written at Sura. Owing to the distance between the two towns it was impossible for him to have been in the one as well as in the other on the same day.

Lit., 'what did he require'.

[The distance between Nehardea and Sura was about twenty parasangs, a travelling journey of two days. v. Obermeyer P. 251].

Where it was definitely established that another man of such a name existed.

Lit., 'or also'.

And so it was possible for him to be in both towns on the same day.

At Nehardea.

Shili and Hini were situated near each other (cf. Bezah 25b) on the South of Sura; v. B.B., Sonc. ed., p. 753’ n. 6.

The place name entered in a legal document is not that of the locality where the transaction which it records took place or the instructions concerning its writing were given, but that of the locality where the document was written.

Which proves that it was customary for scribes to write legal documents in one place for people who gave them the necessary instruction in another.

Discussed supra 115b.

Lit. ‘all of them also’.

When they are angry. They do not mean it seriously. Why, then, should a woman, because of a momentary outburst, be suspected of inventing a tale about her husband's death?

Why is not a wife in such a case believed if she states that her husband is dead?

Out of hatred she might deliberately invent the tale that her husband was dead so that by marrying again she might become forbidden to him forever.

Though she might not deliberately tell an untruth, her hatred would prevent her from finding out what exactly happened to her husband if ever he was placed in a position of danger. The likelihood of his death would be regarded by her as a certainty.

R. Hanina and R. Shimi. Is not her word mistrusted in either case?

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 116b

— The practical difference between them arises in the case where [the husband] created the discord.²
The question was raised: What [is the law in respect of] one witness in a case of discord? Is the reason why one witness is [elsewhere] believed that he would not tell a lie which is likely to be exposed, or is it possible that the reason why one witness is believed elsewhere is that [the woman] herself makes careful enquiries and [only then] marries again; here, therefore, [his evidence should not be accepted] since, as there was discord between husband and wife, she would not make careful enquiries and yet would marry again? — This remains undecided.

R. JUDAH SAID: SHE IS NEVER etc. It was taught: They said to R. Judah: According to your statement, only a woman of sound senses would be allowed to marry again while an imbecile would never be allowed to marry again! But the fact is that the one as well as the other may be allowed to marry again.

A woman once came to Rab Judah’s Beth din. ‘Mourn’, they said to her, ‘for your husband, rend your garments and loosen your hair’. Did they teach her to simulate! — They themselves held the same view as the Rabbis, but in order that he also should allow her to marry they advised her to do so. MISHNAH. BETH HILLEL STATED: WE HAVE HEARD SUCH A TRADITION ONLY IN RESPECT OF A WOMAN WHO CAME FROM THE HARVEST AND [WHOSE HUSBAND DIED] IN THE SAME COUNTRY, [THE CIRCUMSTANCES BEING THE SAME] AS THOSE OF A CASE THAT ONCE ACTUALLY HAPPENED. SAID BETH SHAMMAI TO THEM: [THE LAW IS] THE SAME WHETHER THE WOMAN CAME FROM THE HARVEST OR FROM THE OLIVE PICKING, OR FROM THE VINTAGE, OR FROM ONE COUNTRY TO ANOTHER, FOR THE SAGES SPOKE OF THE HARVEST ONLY [BECAUSE THE INCIDENT TO WHICH THEY REFERRED] OCCURRED THEN. BETH HILLEL, THEREFORE, CHANGED THEIR VIEW [THENCEFORWARD] TO RULE IN ACCORDANCE WITH THE OPINION OF BETH SHAMMAI.

GEMARA. It was taught: Beth Shammai said to Beth Hillel, According to your View, one would only know the law concerning the wheat harvest; whence, however, [the law concerning] the barley harvest? And, furthermore, one would only know the law in the case where one harvested; whence, however, [the law in the case where] one held a vintage, picked olives, harvested dates, or picked figs? But [you must admit] it is only the original incident that occurred at harvest time and that the same law is applicable to all [the other seasons]. So here also [we maintain that] the incident occurred with [a husband who died] in the same country, and the same law is applicable to all [other countries]. And Beth Hillel? — In the case of the same country, where people freely move about, she is afraid; coming, however, from one country to another, since people do not freely move about, she is not afraid. And Beth Shammai? — Here also caravans frequently move about.

What was the original incident? - [It was that of] which Rab Judah spoke in the name of Samuel: It was the end of the wheat harvest when ten men went to reap their wheat and a serpent bit one of them and he died [of the wound]. His wife, thereupon, came and reported the incident to Beth din, who, having sent to investigate, found her statement to be true. At that time it was ordained: If a woman stated, ‘My husband is dead’, she may marry again; [if she said] ‘My husband is dead [and left no issue]’, she may contract the levirate marriage.

Must it be suggested that R. Hanania b. Akabia and the Rabbis differ on the same principle as that on which Beth Shammai and Beth Hillel differ? For it was taught: No man shall carry water of purification and ashes of purification across the Jordan on board a ship, nor may one stand on the bank on one side and throw them across to the other side, nor may one float them upon water nor may one carry them while riding on a beast or on the back of another man unless his [own] feet were touching the [river] bed. He may, however, convey them across a bridge. [These laws are applicable] as well to the Jordan as to other rivers. R. Hanania b. Akabia\textsuperscript{35} said: They\textsuperscript{38} spoke\textsuperscript{39} only of the Jordan and of [transport] on board a ship, as was the case in the original incident.\textsuperscript{40} Must it, then, be assumed that the Rabbis\textsuperscript{41} hold the same view as Beth Shammai\textsuperscript{42} while R. Hanania b. Akabia holds the same view as Beth Hillel?\textsuperscript{43} — The Rabbis can answer you: Our ruling agrees with the view\textsuperscript{44} of Beth Hillel also; for Beth Hillel maintained their opinion\textsuperscript{45} only there,\textsuperscript{46} since [the woman is believed only because] she fears [to tell an untruth, and it is only] in a place that is near that she fears while in a distant one she does not fear. Here,\textsuperscript{47} however, what matters it whether it is on the Jordan or on other rivers?\textsuperscript{48} R. Hanania b. Akabia can also answer you: I may uphold my view even according to Beth Shammai; for Beth Shammai maintained their opinion\textsuperscript{49} only there\textsuperscript{46} because [a woman] makes careful enquiries\textsuperscript{50} and [only then] marries again. Hence, what matters it whether the locality was near or far. Here,\textsuperscript{51} however, [the prohibition] is due to an actual incident; hence it is only [against transport] on the Jordan and on board a ship, where the incident occurred, that the Rabbis enacted their preventive measure, but against other rivers where the incident did not occur the Rabbis enacted no preventive measure.

What was the incident?\textsuperscript{52} — [It was that] which Rab Judah related in the name of Rab: A man was once transporting Water of purification\textsuperscript{53} and ashes of purification\textsuperscript{53} across the Jordan on board a ship, and a piece of a corpse, of the size of an olive,\textsuperscript{54} was found stuck in the bottom of the ship. At that time It was ordained: No man shall carry Water of purification and ashes of purification across the Jordan on board a ship.

MISHNAH. BETH SHAMMAI Ruled: SHE\textsuperscript{55} IS PERMITTED TO MARRY AGAIN AND SHE RECEIVES HER KETHUBAH. BETH HILLEL, HOWEVER, Ruled: SHE IS PERMITTED TO MARRY AGAIN BUT SHE DOES NOT RECEIVE HER KETHUBAH. SAID BETH SHAMMAI TO THEM: YOU HAVE PERMITTED [WHAT MIGHT BE] THE GRAVE OFFENCE OF ILLICIT INTERCOURSE,\textsuperscript{56} SHALL WE NOT PERMIT [THE TAKING OF HER HUSBAND'S] MONEY WHICH IS OF LESS IMPORTANCE!\textsuperscript{57} BETH HILLEL ANSWERED THEM: WE FIND

That a wife is believed when she states that her husband is dead,
The reason is explained infra.
It being thus possible to verify the woman's statement.

Lit., 'in what is', The ruling of the Sages was given in connection with a particular case where it so happened that the woman returned from a harvest. The same ruling, however, is applicable in all circumstances. [The term generally denotes 'what usually happens'. It is in this sense that it seems to be taken by the T. J. quoted by Tosaf.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 117a

THAT ON HER EVIDENCE, THE BROTHERS MAY NOT ENTER INTO THEIR INHERITANCE. 1 SAID BETH SHAMMAI TO THEM: DO WE NOT LEARN THIS 2 FROM HER KETHUBAH SCROLL WHEREIN [HER HUSBAND] PRESCRIBES FOR HER, ‘IF THOU BE MARRIED TO ANOTHER MAN, THOU WILT RECEIVE WHAT IS PRESCRIBED FOR THEE’! THEREUPON BETH HILLEL WITHDREW THIS OPINION, THENCEFORTH TO RULE IN ACCORDANCE WITH THE VIEW OF BETH SHAMMAI.

GEMARA. R. Hisda stated: If she is taken in levirate marriage the levir enters into the inheritance on her evidence. If they made an exposition on the kethubah, shall we not make an exposition on the Torah? The All Merciful said, Shall succeed in the name of his brother, and he has surely succeeded. R. Nahman ruled: If [a woman] came before Beth din and stated, ‘My husband is dead; permit me to marry again’. permission must be granted her to marry again, and she is given her kethubah. [If she demanded]. ‘Give me my kethubah’, she must not be permitted even to marry. What is the reason? Because she came with her mind intent on the kethubah.

The question was raised: What is the ruling [where she said], ‘Permit me to marry and give me my kethubah’? Has she come with her mind intent on the kethubah, since she specified her kethubah or [is it assumed that] a person [naturally] lays before the Beth din all the claims he has! And should you find [a reason for deciding in her favour because] a person submits whatever claim he has to the Beth din, [the question still remains as to] what [is the law where she stated]. ‘Give me my kethubah and permit me to marry’? [Is it assumed that] in this case she has undoubtedly come with her mind bent on the kethubah. or is it possible [that she mentioned her kethubah] because she did not know by what means she becomes permitted [to marry again]. — This is undecided.

GEMARA. The question was raised: What [is the law in regard to the eligibility of] the daughter of her father-in-law? Is the reason [for the ineligibility] of the daughter of her mother-in-law because there is a mother who hates her she also hates her; here, however, there is no mother who hates her? Or is it possible that the reason [for the ineligibility] of the daughter of her mother-in-law is because she believes that the other squanders the savings of her mother; there, then, she also believes that she squanders the savings of her father-in-law? Come and hear: ‘All are regarded as trustworthy to give evidence for her excepting five women’; but if that were so [the number should] be six — It is possible that the reason [for the ineligibility] of the daughter of her mother-in-law is because she believes that the other squanders the savings of her mother and, therefore, there is no difference between the daughter of her mother-in-law and the daughter of her father-in-law. But, surely. it was taught: ‘Excepting seven women’! — This is the view of R. Judah. For it was taught: R. Judah adds also a father's wife and a daughter-In-law. They said to him: A father's wife is, in fact, included in the expression 'a husband's daughter', and a daughter-in-law is obviously included in the expression 'her mother-in-law'.

And R. Judah — Because one can well understand why a mother-in-law should hate her daughter-in-law, since the former believes that the latter squanders her Savings, but why should a daughter-in-law hate her mother-in-law? Similarly one may well understand why a husband's daughter hates her father's wife, since the former believes that she is squandering her mother's savings, but why should a father's wife hate her husband's daughter?

Why, then, does he add the two? — But [this is the true explanation]: Why does a daughter-in-law hate her mother-in-law? Because the latter reports to her son all that she does. [Similarly] a father's wife also hates her husband's daughter because the latter reports to her father all that she does. And the Rabbis — As in water face answereth to face, so the heart of man to man. And R. Judah? — The text applies to [the study of] the words of the Torah.

R. Aha b. 'Awya said: In the West they asked: What is the ruling in respect of a potential mother-in-law? Does it occur to her that her husband might die [without issue] and thereby be subject to the levir, and therefore, she hates her; or does it not?

(1) Though inheritance is a monetary affair, only in order to save her from a life-long widowhood was a woman allowed on her own evidence to marry again. In monetary matters, however, the evidence of two eligible witnesses (cf. Deut. XIX. 15) is a sine qua non.

(2) That she is entitled to her kethubah.

(3) A woman who reported the death of her husband.

(4) Of the deceased. Cf. supra 40a.

(5) Beth Shammai, and later also Beth Hillel, in our Mishnah.

(6) Deut. XXV, 6, explained Rabbinically to refer to the levir.

(7) Hence he is also entitled to the inheritance.

(8) She probably knows that her husband is alive and she has no intention of marrying again. All she aims at is the acquisition of the money.

(9) And even marriage should, therefore, be forbidden to her.

(10) But her main purpose was matrimony. Hence both her requests should be granted.

(11) Reading of Rashal, inserted in cur. edd. within square brackets.

(12) Since she mentioned her kethubah first,

(13) She may have thought that it was the kethubah that releases her from her dead husband and it is for this reason that she mentioned it first. Cf. supra note 3

(14) Teku. v. Glos,

(15) That her husband died.

(16) Any woman.

(17) The wife of her husband's brother, who becomes her rival if levirate marriage is contracted.

(18) All these are assumed to be, for one reason or another, hostile to her and are therefore suspected of giving false evidence (cf. supra n. 8) in the expectation that she will marry again and thereby become forever forbidden to their relative, her first husband.

(19) I.e., why are the relatives mentioned accepted as qualified bearers of her letter of divorce, (v. Git, 23b) and not as eligible witnesses to testify to the death of her husband?

(20) The letter of divorce,

(21) It is mainly the document itself that constitutes the validity of the divorce and not the eligibility of its bearer.

(22) To give evidence that her husband was dead,

(23) From another wife who is not her mother-in-law.

(24) I.e., her mother-in-law.

(26) In the case of the daughter of her father-in-law,

(27) The daughter of her father-in-law is therefore eligible as a witness.

(28) The daughter.

(29) Lit., ‘eats’.

(30) Lit., ‘wife’s family’. In consequence of which she hates her and is, therefore, ineligible to be her witness.

(32) That the daughter of a father-in-law is also ineligible as witness.

(33) Since our Mishnah had enumerated five others. From this then it may be inferred that the daughter of a father-in-law is eligible.

(34) The daughter.

Both, therefore, may be regarded as one. Hence the number five.
(Cur. edd., ‘we learned’).
While our Mishnah enumerates only five.
(Cur. edd., ‘we learned’).
To the number of women who are ineligible to testify to the death of another woman's husband.
The stepmother of the woman in question.
The Sages.
Since a husband's daughter is ineligible as witness for a husband's wife it is obvious that the latter also, since both stand in the same relationship to one another, is equally ineligible as witness for the former. V. infra n. 6.
As a mother-in-law is precluded from giving evidence for her daughter-in-law so, it is obvious, is the latter (cf. supra n. 5) precluded from giving evidence for the former. There was no need, therefore, to enumerate all the four. The mention of two of these embraces the four.
Why in view of the explanation of the Rabbis does he enumerate seven?
As the wife of her son and heir she would in due course become mistress of her possessions.
Her ineligible, therefore, cannot be inferred from the other. Hence it was necessary specifically to mention her.
R. Judah.
Who, as was just explained, are not hostile to the others, and should, therefore, be eligible to give evidence for them!
Lit., ‘reveals’, ‘discloses’.
Her daughter-in-law.
Her father's wife; her stepmother.
Why, in view of R. Judah's explanation, do they omit the two from their list?
prov. XXVII, 19. Hatred is mutual. As a husband's daughter hates her father's wife so does the latter hate the former; and the same reciprocity exists between a mother-in-law and her daughter-in-law. There was no need, therefore, to mention them all. The four are covered by the two.
Lit., ‘this’.
Lit., ‘is written’.
Effort and success are interdependent as in water face answereth face. Or: The successful achievement of the student is dependent on the sympathy and understanding (the cheerful countenance) of the Master.
Palestine, which lay on the West of Babylon.
Who might become her mother-in-law if her husband died childless and she had to contract the levirate marriage with the levir.
Is she eligible as witness if she testifies that her stepson is dead in consequence of which the wife of the deceased must either marry her son or perform halizah with him and marry a stranger (Rashi). [R. Hananel (v. Lewin B. M. Ozar ha-Geonim, Ye半导体oth p. 334) explains the problem differently. viz., can a woman give evidence on behalf of her potential mother-in-law? Where, for instance, Jacob had two wives, Leah and Rachel, the former of whom bore him a son, Reuben, and the latter, Joseph; and the question arises whether the wife of Reuben may testify as to the death of Jacob, her father-in-law, permitting the remarriage of Rachel, her potential mother-in-law. For should her own husband Reuben die, she would have to contract levirate marriage with his brother Joseph. Rachel thus becoming her mother-in-law].
For whom she tenders evidence.
As her future mother-in-law.
Hence she is ineligible as a witness for her.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 117b

Come and hear: If a woman stated. ‘My husband died first and my father-in-law died after him’. she may marry again and she also receives her ketubah. but her mother-in-law is forbidden. Now, why is her mother-in-law forbidden? Is it not because it is assumed that neither her husband died nor did her father-in-law die and that by her statement she intended to damage the position of her mother-in-law. hoping that [as a result] she would not in the future come to torment her.
There\textsuperscript{10} it may be different because she\textsuperscript{11} has experienced her annoyance.\textsuperscript{12}

MISHNAH. IF ONE WITNESS STATED, [\text{\textquoteleft THE HUSBAND\textsuperscript{13} IS\textquoteright DEAD}, AND THEREUPON HIS WIFE MARRIED AGAIN, AND ANOTHER CAME AND STATED \textquoteleft HE IS NOT DEAD\textquoteright. SHE NEED NOT BE DIVORCED. IF ONE WITNESS SAID, \textquoteleft HE\textsuperscript{13} IS DEAD AND TWO WITNESSES SAID, \textquoteleft HE IS NOT DEAD\textquoteright, SHE MUST, EVEN IF SHE MARRIED AGAIN, BE DIVORCED. IF TWO WITNESSES STATED, \textquoteleft HE\textsuperscript{13} IS DEAD\textquoteright, AND ONE WITNESS STATED, \textquoteleft HE IS NOT DEAD\textquoteright, SHE MAY, EVEN IF SHE HAD NOT YET DONE SO,\textsuperscript{14} MARRY AGAIN.\textsuperscript{15}

GEMARA. The reason\textsuperscript{16} then is because [the woman]\textsuperscript{17} MARRIED AGAIN; had she, however, not married would she\textsuperscript{18} not have been permitted to marry? But Surely, \textquoteleft Ulla stated: Wherever the Torah declared one witness credible,\textsuperscript{19} he is regarded\textsuperscript{20} as two witnesses, and the evidence of one man\textsuperscript{21} against that\textsuperscript{22} of two men\textsuperscript{23} has no Validity!\textsuperscript{24} — It is this that was meant: IF ONE WITNESS STATED [\text{\textquoteleft THE HUSBAND IS\textquoteright DEAD} and after his wife had been permitted to marry again ANOTHER CAME AND STATED \textquoteleft HE IS NOT DEAD\textquoteright, she is not to be deprived of\textsuperscript{25} her former status of permissibility.\textsuperscript{26}

If one witness said, \textquoteleft HE IS DEAD\textquoteright, Is this not obvious?\textsuperscript{27} For the evidence of one man against that Of\textsuperscript{28} two men\textsuperscript{29} has no validity! — [This ruling’ is] required only in the case of ineligible witnesses\textsuperscript{30} [this being] in accordance with the view of R. Nehemiah. For it was taught: R. Nehemiah stated, ‘Wherever the Torah declares one witness credible,\textsuperscript{31} the majority of statements is to be followed,\textsuperscript{32} and [the evidence of] two women against that of one man is given the same validity as that of two men against one man’.\textsuperscript{33}

And if you prefer I might reply: Wherever one eligible witness came first, even a hundred women\textsuperscript{34} are regarded as one witness.\textsuperscript{35} But [here it is such a case] as, for example, where a woman witness came in the first instance\textsuperscript{36} and [the statement] of R. Nehemiah is to be explained thus: R. Nehemiah stated, ‘Wherever the Torah declares one witness credible,\textsuperscript{31} the majority of statements is to be followed, and [the evidence of] two women against one woman is given the same validity as that of two men against one man; but [the evidence of] two women against that of one man is regarded as half\textsuperscript{37} and half\textsuperscript{38}.\textsuperscript{39}

If two witnesses stated, \textquoteleft HE IS DEAD\textquoteright etc. What does this teach us?\textsuperscript{39} [A ruling] in respect of ineligible witnesses, [the principle being the same] as that of R. Nehemiah who follows the majority of statements.\textsuperscript{40} But is not this exactly the same [as the previous clause]?\textsuperscript{41} — It might have been assumed that the majority is followed only when the law is thereby made more stringent,\textsuperscript{42} but not [where it leads] to a relaxation of the law;\textsuperscript{43} hence we were taught [the final clause].\textsuperscript{44}

MISHNAH. IF ONE WIFE\textsuperscript{45} SAID [\text{\textquoteleft HER HUSBAND IS\textquoteright DEAD} AND THE OTHER WIFE\textsuperscript{46} SAID, \textquoteleft HE IS NOT DEAD\textquoteright, THE ONE WHO SAID, \textquoteleft HE IS DEAD\textquoteright MAY MARRY AGAIN AND SHE ALSO RECEIVES HER KETHUBAH, WHILE THE ONE WHO SAID, \textquoteleft HE IS NOT DEAD, MAY NEITHER MARRY AGAIN NOR IS SHE TO RECEIVE HER KETHUBAH. IF ONE WIFE\textsuperscript{47} STATED, \textquoteleft HE IS DEAD\textquoteright AND THE OTHER STATED, \textquoteleft HE WAS KILLED\textquoteright, R. MEIR RULED: SINCE THEY CONTRADICT ONE ANOTHER THEY MAY NOT MARRY AGAIN. R. JUDAH AND R. SIMEON RULED: SINCE BOTH\textsuperscript{48} ADMIT THAT HE\textsuperscript{49} IS NOT ALIVE, BOTH MAY MARRY AGAIN.

If one witness stated, \textquoteleft HE\textsuperscript{50} IS DEAD\textquoteright, AND another witness stated,\textsuperscript{51} ‘HE IS NOT DEAD’,

\(1\) To marry again; infra 118a. The evidence as to the death of her husband is not admissible though the witness. since her own husband was dead at the time she gave her evidence, was no longer her daughter in law.
(2) The witness's.
(3) And both women are still related to one another as mother-in-law and daughter-in-law.
(4) Lit., 'and what she said thus'.
(5) Who if she married again would not any longer be able to live with her first husband, the father-in-law of the witness.
(7) Her mother-in-law.
(8) When her husband and son returned from their foreign travels.
(9) By reporting to her son all the doings of his wife. It is thus obvious that a daughter-in-law is not believed as a witness for her mother-in-law, though the cause of her hatred (the return of her husband and his mother's gossip) is still a thing of the future and at the time her evidence is given, potential only. From this it follows that a potential mother-in-law also is equally ineligible as a witness for her potential daughter-in-law.
(10) Since in that case the woman for whom evidence is given was already her mother-in-law.
(11) The daughter-in-law.
(12) This case, therefore, provides no proof that a woman hates one who had never been her mother-in-law and whose annoyances she had never experienced.
(13) Who had gone to a country beyond the sea.
(14) prior to the appearance of the one witness.
(15) Even after he tendered his evidence.
(16) Why the woman in the first clause of our Mishnah may live with the man she married.
(17) Whose husband's death was reported by the first witness.
(18) Since our Mishnah only states that SHE NEED NOT BE DIVORCED and does not state that she may marry again.
(19) As is the case here, where one witness testifies to the death of a husband (cf. supra 88b).
(20) Lit., 'behold here'.
(21) In our case, that of the second witness.
(22) Lit., 'in the place of'.
(23) In the first instance, the first witness whose evidence had been accepted as valid as that of two.
(24) Sot. 31b, Keth. 22b, supra 88b. Why then should not the woman be directly permitted to marry again?
(25) The original שָׁבַע שָׁבַע lit., 'she shall (or need) not go out', may bear this meaning as well as that given in our Mishnah.
(26) Because the decision of Beth din had been issued before the second witness appeared. Had he arrived prior to the issue of the decision, the evidence of the first witness, as it had not yet been accepted, would have had no greater validity than his,
(27) That the woman MUST ... BE DIVORCED,
(28) Lit., 'in the place of',
(29) As is the case in the second clause of our Mishnah.
(30) Where the two witnesses were, e.g., relatives or slaves.
(31) As in the case, e.g., spoken of in the first clause of our Mishnah.
(32) As the accepted law of valid evidence is in such cases suspended, the evidence of any ineligible witnesses (cf. supra n. 7) is admitted,
(33) Hence the necessity for the ruling of our Mishnah. In the absence of such a ruling it would have been assumed that the evidence of ineligible witnesses is here also inadmissible.
(34) I.e., ineligible witnesses who, after the woman had married again, stated that her husband was not dead,
(35) As the evidence of a single witness when it is opposed to that of a previous witness whose evidence had already been accepted (cf. supra p. 828, n. 18) is completely disregarded, so is the evidence of the hundred women if it conflicts with that of the first eligible witnesses.
(36) And, on her evidence, the widow was permitted to marry again. As two women subsequently opposed the statement of the one, the marriage must be annulled by a letter of divorce.
(37) Of a valid evidence, i.e., as that of one witness.
(38) The evidence of two women against that of one man would, therefore, have the same validity as that of one witness against another, spoken of in the first clause of our Mishnah. and the widow would have retained her first status of permissibility. v. supra 88b.
(39) Is it not obvious that two witnesses are relied upon when they are opposed by one witness only!
Though the two witnesses are ineligible, their evidence against that of the one witness, since they form the majority, is accepted, and the widow is permitted to marry again.

The ruling in the second clause of our Mishnah which, as has just been explained, teaches this very principle.

As in the second clause where, owing to the majority principle, the woman is forbidden to marry again.

As in the final clause under discussion, where, by following the majority, the woman is allowed to marry again.

Of our Mishnah, to indicate that in all cases the majority is to be followed.

Of a man who has gone to a country beyond the sea.

Her rival.

OR IF ONE WOMAN STATED, ‘HE IS DEAD’, AND ANOTHER WOMAN STATED, ‘HE IS NOT DEAD’, SHE MAY NOT MARRY AGAIN.

GEMARA. The reason, then, is because she said, ‘HE IS NOT DEAD’; had she, however, kept silent she would presumably have been allowed to marry again; but [it may be objected], no rival may give evidence on behalf of her associate! — It was necessary [to teach the case where the OTHER WIFE SAID], ‘HE IS NOT DEAD’. Since it might have been assumed that [their husband] was really dead and that by stating ‘HE IS NOT DEAD’ she evidently intended to inflict injury upon her rival in the spirit of. Let me die with the Philistines, we are informed [that she is nevertheless forbidden to marry again].

IF ONE WIFE STATED, ‘HE IS DEAD’ etc. R. Meir should have expressed his disagreement in the first clause also! R. Eleazar replied: [The first clause] is a subject in dispute and it represents the opinion of R. Judah and R. Simeon. R. Johanan, however, stated that it may be said [to represent even the view of] R. Meir, for in such a case even R. Meir agrees, since in the case of testimony relating to a woman the evidence [of the nature of] ‘He is not dead’ is not [regarded as a valid] contradiction.

We learned: IF ONE WITNESS STATED, HE IS DEAD’ AND ANOTHER WITNESS STATED, HE IS NOT DEAD’, OR IF ONE WOMAN STATED, ‘HE IS DEAD AND ANOTHER WOMAN STATED, HE IS NOT DEAD’, SHE MAY NOT MARRY AGAIN. Now according to R. Eleazar it may well be explained that the anonymous statement [in the final clause] is in agreement with R. Meir. According to R. Johanan, however, there is a difficulty! — This is a difficulty.

MISHNAH. IF A WOMAN AND HER HUSBAND WENT TO A COUNTRY BEYOND THE SEA, AND SHE RETURNED AND STATED, MY HUSBAND IS DEAD’. SHE MAY BE MARRIED AGAIN AND SHE ALSO RECEIVES HER KETHUBAH. HER RIVAL, HOWEVER, IS FORBIDDEN. IF [HER RIVAL] WAS THE DAUGHTER OF AN ISRAELITE [WHO WAS MARRIED] TO A PRIEST, SHE IS PERMITTED TO EAT TERUMAH. SO R. TARFON. R. AKIBA, HOWEVER, SAID: THIS IS NOT A WAY THAT WOULD LEAD HER OUT OF THE POWER OF TRANSGRESSION, UNLESS [IT BE ENACTED THAT] SHE SHALL BE FORBIDDEN BOTH TO MARRY AND TO EAT TERUMAH.

IF SHE STATED, ‘MY HUSBAND DIED FIRST AND MY FATHER-IN-LAW DIED AFTER HIM, SHE MAY MARRY AGAIN AND SHE ALSO RECEIVES HER KETHUBAH, BUT HER MOTHER-IN-LAWS is forbidden. If [the latter] was the daughter of an Israelite [who was married] to a priest, she is permitted to eat terumah; so R. Tarfon. R. Akiba, however, said. This is not a way that would lead her out of the power of transgression, unless [it be enacted that] she shall be forbidden both to marry again and to eat terumah.

GEMARA. And [both statements were] necessary. For if the first only had been stated, it might have been assumed that only in that did N. Tarfon maintain [his view], since the grievance is personal. But that in respect of a mother-in-law, the grievance against whom is merely general, he agrees with N. Akiba. And had the latter only been stated it might have been assumed that R. Akiba maintained [his view] there only, but that in the former case he agrees with R. Tarfon. [Hence both statements were] necessary.

Rab Judah stated in the name of Samuel: The halachah is in agreement with R. Tarfon. Said Abaye: We also learned the same: [If a woman states], ‘A son was given to me in a country beyond the sea, and my son died first while my husband died after him’, she is believed. [If, however, she states], ‘My husband [died first] and my son died after him’, she is not believed, though note must be taken of her statement, and she must, therefore, perform halizah but may not contract the levirate marriage. [From which it follows that] ‘note must be taken of her statement’, but that no note need be taken of the statement of a rival. Thus our point is proved.
(23) Who stated that R. Meir agrees with the ruling in the first clause that a rival's contradiction is admitted.

(24) To marry again; since a woman may not tender evidence for her rival.

(25) As during the lifetime of her husband. The evidence of the other which is regarded as invalid to enable the rival to marry again (v. supra n. 1) is equally invalid to deprive her of her right to the eating of terumah.

(26) To forbid the rival to marry and to allow her to eat terumah.

(27) For whom a daughter-in-law is ineligible to tender evidence.

(28) To marry; though. at the time the evidence in her favour was given. the witness, according to whose evidence her husband died before her father-in-law, was no longer her daughter-in-law. The reason is explained supra 117b.

(29) Cf. supra n. 3 mutatis mutandis.

(30) The first (relating to a rival) and the second (relating to a mother-in-law).

(31) That the evidence of a rival is not accepted.

(32) The deprivation of marital intercourse caused by a rival. Only 10 such circumstances, it is possible, did R. Tarfon discredit the evidence of a rival who might indeed be actuated by malice.

(33) Lit., ‘things in the world’.

(34) That a daughter-in-law need not be suspected of deliberate lying because of some general grievance against her mother-in-law; and that consequently. though her evidence is not accepted in respect of relaxing the laws of marriage. it may be accepted in respect of enforcing the laws of terumah.

(35) Who went to a country beyond the sea with her husband before any issue was born from their union.

(36) On her return.

(37) And may contract levirate marriage. Her evidence merely confirms the status in which she was already at the time of her departure. At that time as well as now she had no children to exempt her from the levirate obligations.

(38) To be permitted to marry a stranger without previous halizah with the levir. The evidence of a woman is accepted only in respect of the death of her husband, where it is assumed that she takes all possible care to ascertain the fact of his death. it is not, however, accepted in respect of liberating her from a levir against whom she might have been nursing a personal hatred, so that she would, without making the necessary enquiries, be ready on the flimsiest of proofs to testify anything which enables her to get rid of him.

(39) Owing to the status in which she has been confirmed.

(40) Since note must be taken of her allegation.

kethubah\(^2\) among them and withdraws;\(^3\) they differ only in the case where cohabitation occurred, R. Tarfon ruling that the man leaves the kethubah\(^2\) among them and withdraws, while R. Akiba ruled [that the man is not exempt from transgression] unless he pays\(^7\) everyone of them. R. Tarfon and R. Akiba, furthermore, did not differ on [the ruling that] where a person bought something from five men and does not know from which of them he bought, he may leave the price of the purchase among them and depart; they differ only in the case where a person robbed one of five men, R. Tarfon ruling that the man must deposit the amount of the robbery among them and may then depart, while R. Akiba ruled [that the man is not exonerated] unless he pays [the amount of the] robbery to everyone.\(^8\) Now, since R. Simeon b. Eleazar said that they\(^9\) do not differ in the case where a man betrothed or purchased, it may be inferred that the first Tanna is of the opinion that they\(^9\) did differ. Whose [view then, is presented in our Mishnah]? If it is that of the first Tanna ‘betrothal’ and purchase should have been mentioned,\(^10\) and if [it is that of] R. Simeon b. Eleazar cohabitation and ‘robbery’ should have been mentioned!\(^11\) — [Our Mishnah represents] in fact [the view of] N. Simeon b. Eleazar, but the meaning of\(^12\) BETROTHED is betrothal through cohabitation’. BETROTHED was used in order to acquaint you how far R. Akiba is prepared to go, as he imposes a penalty\(^14\) even where one transgressed a Rabbinic prohibition\(^15\) only; and ROBBED was taught in order to acquaint you how far N. Tarfon is prepared to go, as he imposes no penalties\(^16\) even where one had transgressed a Pentateuchal prohibition.\(^17\)

For a woman is not to be believed when she asserts ‘My brother-in-law is dead’, in order that she may marry again. Nor [when she states that] her sister is dead. In order that she may enter his\(^35\) house.\(^36\) A man also is not believed when he asserts ‘My brother is dead’, so that he may contract levir’ ate marriage with his wife, nor [when he asserts that] his wife is dead, in order that he may marry her sister.\(^37\)

Gemara. Raba enquired of R. Nahman: What is the legal position if a husband transferred to his wife [through an agent]\(^38\) the possession of a letter of divorce, where a brother-in-law\(^39\) is in existence?\(^40\) [Is the divorce], since she [usually] hates her brother. in-law, an advantage to her and [consequently valid, because] a privilege may be conferred upon a person in his absence; or is it possible [that the divorce], since she sometimes loves her brother-in-law, is a disadvantage to her and [consequently invalid because] no disadvantage may be imposed upon a person in his absence? The other replied. We have learned this: NOTE IS TAKEN OF HER ASSERTION AND SHE MUST, THEREFORE, PERFORM HALIZAH. BUT MAY NOT CONTRACT THE LEVIRATE MARRIAGE. Said Rabina to Raba: What [is the legal decision] if a husband transferred to his wife [through an agent] the possession of a letter of divorce at a time when a quarrel [raged between them]? [is the divorce], since she has a quarrel with her husband, an advantage to her or [is it a disadvantage, since] the gratification of bodily desires is possibly preferred by her? — Come and hear what Resh Lakish said: ‘It is preferable to live in grief than to dwell in widowhood’. Abaye said: ‘With a husband [of the size of an] ant her seat is placed among the great’. R. Papa said: Though her husband be a carder she calls him to the threshold and sits down [at his side]. R. Ashi said: If her husband is only a cabbage-head she requires no lentils for her pot. A Tanna taught: All such women play the harlot and attribute the results to their husbands. [14] That the man must pay the amount if her kethubah to each one of the five women. [15] It is only Rabbinically that betrothal through cohabitation is forbidden. Pentateuchally it constitutes a proper kinyan. [16] Maintaining as he does that one single sum equal to the amount of the robbery exonerates the robber from all further liability. [17] Prohibition of robbery was specifically mentioned in the Pentateuch, [18] And is exempt from levirate marriage and halizah. Her statement is accepted since thereby she is merely confirming the status in which she found herself before her departure. At that time she had a son who exempted her from the levirate bond; and now that her husband died before that son she is still entitled to the same exemption. Her admission of her son's death does not affect her status, since she is the only source of the information, and as her word is accepted in respect of the death it must be similarly accepted in respect of its date. [19] So that she is in consequence subject to the levirate bond. [20] Because her assertion would alter the status in which she was confirmed prior to her departure. Such alteration cannot be authorized in view of the possibility that her report might be due to a desire to marry the levir. [21] Since, at any rate, her statement has impaired her former status. Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 119a

CHAPTER XVI

MISHNAH. A WOMAN WHOSE HUSBAND AND RIVAL WENT TO A COUNTRY BEYOND THE SEA, AND TO WHOM PEOPLE CAME AND SAID, ‘YOUR HUSBAND IS DEAD’, MUST NEITHER MARRY AGAIN NOR CONTRACT LEVIRATE MARRIAGE UNTIL SHE HAS ASCERTAINED WHETHER HER RIVAL IS PREGNANT. IF SHE HAD A MOTHER-IN-LAW SHE NEED NOT APPREHEND [THE POSSIBILITY OF THE BIRTH OF ANOTHER SON]; BUT IF SHE DEPARTED WHILE PREGNANT [SUCH POSSIBILITY]
MUST BE TAKEN INTO CONSIDERATION. R. JOSHUA RULED; SHE NEED NOT APPREHEND [SUCH A POSSIBILITY].

GEMARA. What is implied by ‘HER RIVAL’? — It is this that we are told: ‘The possibility of a birth in respect of that rival need be apprehended; in respect of another rival, however, it need not be apprehended.

MUST NEITHER MARRY AGAIN NOR CONTRACT LEVIRATE MARRIAGE etc. It is quite proper that she shall not contract levirate marriage since it is possible that [her rival] is pregnant and that she would in consequence cause an infringement of the prohibition against marriage of a brother's wife, which is Pentateuchal; but why should she not marry [a stranger]? The majority of women should be taken as a criterion and the majority of women conceive and bear children! Must it then be assumed that [the ruling is that of] R. Meir who takes a minority also into consideration? — It may even be said [to represent the view of] the Rabbis; for the Rabbis follow the majority principle only where the majority is actually present as, for instance, in the case of ‘nine shops’ and ‘Sanhedrin’, but in respect of a majority that is not actually present the Rabbis were not guided by the majority principle.

Behold the case of a minor boy and a minor girl, where the majority is one that is not actually present and the Rabbis nevertheless follow the majority principle; for it was taught: A minor, whether male or female, may neither perform nor submit to halizah, nor may he contract levirate marriage; so R. Meir. They said to R. Meir: You spoke well [when you ruled] that ‘He may neither perform nor submit to halizah’, since in the Pentateuchal section man was written, and we draw a comparison between ‘woman’ and man. What, however, is the reason why he may not contract levirate marriage? He replied: Because a minor male might be found to be a saris; a minor female might be found to be incapable of procreation; and thus the law of incest would be violated. The Rabbis, however, maintain, ‘Follow the majority of male minors’; and the majority of male minors are not sarisin; ‘Follow the majority of female minors’ and the majority of female minors are not incapable of procreation!

— But, clearly, [it must be admitted], our Mishnah represents the view of R. Meir. How have you explained it? That it is in agreement with the view of R. Meir? Read, then, the final clause: IF SHE HAD A MOTHER-IN-LAW SHE NEED NOT APPREHEND [THE POSSIBILITY OF THE BIRTH OF ANOTHER SON]; but why? One should be guided by the majority of women, and the majority of women conceive and bear while a minority miscarry, and since all those who bear [produce] a half of males and a half of females, the minority of those who miscarry should be added to the half [of those who bear] females, and so the males would constitute a minority which should be taken into consideration! — It is possible that since the woman was confirmed in her status of permissibility to strangers [the possibility of the birth of a levir] was not taken by him into consideration. In the first clause, then, where she was confirmed in the status of eligibility for the levirate marriage, let her contract the levirate marriage! — R. Nahman replied in the name of Rabbah b. Abbuha: In the first clause where a prohibition which is subject to the penalty of kareth had to be provided against; in the final clause, however, where a prohibitory law only is involved no such possibility was taken into consideration. Said Raba: Consider: The one [prohibition] is Pentateuchal and the other also is Pentateuchal; what matters it, then, whether the prohibition is one involving kareth or whether it is only a mere prohibitory law? — Rather, said Raba;

(1) Since her husband, when he departed, was known to have had no issue.
(2) It being possible that her rival had a child from their husband.
(3) If the rival is found to be pregnant the woman is free to marry again; and if she is not pregnant, levirate marriage or halizah must be performed.
(4) Overseas.
(5) Who, at the time of her departure, had no other son but the one who is now dead.
(6) To her mother-in-law. It is only in respect of a rival that the possibility of a birth must be taken notice of, since a child, whatever its sex, exempts the woman from the levirate obligations. In the case of a mother-in-law, however, the birth of a female would not affect the woman's freedom to marry again, since it is only a male that subjects her to the levirate obligations. There is no need to apprehend that the mother-in-law had not only (a) given birth to a child but also (b) that that child was not a female but a male.
(7) Since the only doubt is whether the child was a male. Cf. supra n. 6.
(8) Because here also two possibilities must be postulated: (a) that the mother-in-law did not miscarry and (b) that the child born was not a female but a male.
(9) Lit., ‘she’ or ‘it’.
(10) Emphasis on HER.
(11) Who went with her husband to a country beyond the sea.
(12) If witnesses testified that the known rival (v. supra n. 11) was not pregnant there is no need to apprehend the possibility of a marriage with another wife who may have given birth to a child.
(13) Lit., ‘meet’.
(14) Lit., ‘go’.
(15) Since the majority principle is not followed.
(16) Hul. 6a; and since some women do not conceive and bear, the possibility that the rival belonged to this minority must be provided against by forbidding levirate marriage. Would then our anonymous Mishnah represent the view of an individual!
(17) Lit., ‘when do they go’.
(18) Lit., ‘which is before us’.
(19) Which were selling permitted meat, while one shop in their vicinity was selling forbidden meat. If between these shops a piece of meat was found and it is not known from which shop it came, it is assumed to be permitted meat, since the majority of the shops were selling meat of such a character. V. Hul. 95a.
(20) A majority of whom (twelve against eleven) are in favour of a certain decision. V. Sanh. 40a.
(21) The majority of women in general who are assumed to conceive and bear.
(22) Dealing with halizah.
(23) V. Deut. XXV, 7.
(24) As the male must be of mature age and not a minor, so must also be the female.
(25) V. Glos.
(27) Bek. 19b. Cf. supra 61b, 105b. The majority spoken of here is, surely, one which is not actually present, and the Rabbis are nevertheless guided by it!
(28) Lit., ‘in what did you place it’, sc. the first clause of our Mishnah.
(29) Lit., ‘like’.
(30) According to R. Meir.
(31) And, contrary to the ruling in our Mishnah, the woman should, as in the first clause, be forbidden marriage.
(32) When her mother-in-law departed.
(33) Lit., ‘to the market’; because there was no known levir.
(34) R. Meir.
(35) If a woman's confirmed status at a certain period is a determining factor.
(36) Since her husband when he departed, had no issue.
(37) By the rival.
(38) The marriage of a yebamah to a stranger.
(39) That a son was born by the mother-in-law.
(40) Neither is a mere Rabbinically preventive measure.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 119b

in the first clause the woman's confirmed status¹ [would subject her] to the levirate marriage while the majority principle\(^2\) [would enable her] to marry any stranger;\(^3\) and, though ‘confirmed status’ is not as important a factor as a majority, the minority of women who miscarry must be added to the ‘confirmed status’ so that the factors on either side are equally balanced;\(^4\) hence\(^5\) she MUST NEITHER MARRY AGAIN NOR CONTRACT LEVIRATE MARRIAGE. In the final clause, however, the woman's confirmed status\(^6\) as well as the majority principle\(^7\) [points] to [the permissibility of marriage with] any stranger,\(^8\) so that [viable] males\(^8\) constitute a minority of a minority;\(^9\) and a minority of a minority is not taken into consideration even by R. Meir.

MUST NEITHER MARRY AGAIN NOR CONTRACT LEVIRATE MARRIAGE etc. For ever?\(^10\) — Z'e'iri replied: [She waits] on account of herself three months\(^11\) and on account of her associate nine,\(^12\) and then she may, at all events,\(^13\) perform halizah. R. Hanina said: On account of herself [she must wait] three months, but on account of her associate\(^14\) for ever.\(^15\) But let her perform halizah\(^16\) at all events!\(^17\) — Both Abaye b. Abin and R. Hanina b. Abin replied: This\(^18\) is a preventive measure against the possibility that the child\(^19\) might be viable\(^20\) as a result of which\(^21\) you would have to subject her to the necessity of a public announcement\(^22\) in respect of the priesthood.\(^23\) Well, let her be subjected to the necessity! — It may happen that someone would be present at the halizah and not at the announcement,\(^24\) and he would form the opinion\(^25\) that a haluzah was permitted to a priest.

We learned: [If a woman states], ‘A son was given to me [while I was] in a country beyond the sea’ and she also asserts, ‘My son died and afterwards my husband died’, she is believed. [If she states, however], ‘My husband died and afterwards my son died’, she is not believed, but note is taken of her assertion and she must, therefore, perform halizah but may not contract levirate marriage.\(^26\) Let it, however, be apprehended that witnesses might come and confirm her statement and that, as a result, you would subject her to the necessity of an announcement in respect of the priesthood! — R. Papa replied: [This refers to] a woman divorced.\(^27\) R. Hiyya son of R. Huna replied: [It refers to one] who stated ‘I and he\(^28\) were hidden in a cave’.\(^29\) MISHNAH. [IN THE CASE OF] TWO SISTERS-IN-LAW \(^30\) ONE OF WHOM\(^31\) STATED, ‘MY HUSBAND IS DEAD’, AND THE OTHER ALSO STATED, ‘MY HUSBAND IS DEAD’, THE FORMER\(^31\) IS FORBIDDEN \(^32\) ON ACCOUNT OF THE HUSBAND OF THE LATTER,\(^33\) AND THE LATTER IS FORBIDDEN \(^33\) ON ACCOUNT OF THE HUSBAND OF THE FORMER.\(^33\) IF THE ONE HAD WITNESSES\(^35\) AND THE OTHER HAD NO WITNESSES,\(^35\) SHE WHO HAD THE WITNESSES IS FORBIDDEN,\(^36\) WHILE SHE WHO HAD NO WITNESSES IS PERMITTED.\(^37\) IF THE ONE HAD CHILDREN AND THE OTHER HAD NO CHILDREN,\(^38\) SHE WHO HAD CHILDREN IS PERMITTED\(^34\) AND SHE WHO HAD NO CHILDREN\(^40\) IS FORBIDDEN.\(^34\) IF THEY\(^41\) CONTRACTED LEVIRATE MARRIAGES,\(^42\) AND THE LEVIRS DIED, THEY\(^43\) ARE FORBIDDEN [TO MARRY AGAIN].\(^44\) R. ELEAZAR\(^45\) RULED: SINCE THEY WERE ONCE PERMITTED TO MARRY THE LEVIRS\(^46\) THEY ARE PERMITTED TO MARRY ANY MAN.

GEMARA. A Tanna taught: If the one\(^47\) had witnesses\(^48\) and also children, and the other had neither witnesses nor children, both are permitted [to marry again].\(^49\)

IF\(^50\) THEY CONTRACTED LEVIRATE MARRIAGES, AND THE LEVIRS DIED, THEY ARE FORBIDDEN [TO MARRY AGAIN]. R. ELEAZAR RULED: SINCE THEY WERE ONCE PERMITTED TO THE LEVIRS THEY ARE PERMITTED TO MARRY ANY MAN. Raba inquired: What is R. Eleazar's reason? Is it because he is of the opinion that a rival\(^51\) is eligible to tender evidence in favour of her associate or is it because [he holds that] she would not\(^51\) cause injury to herself?\(^52\) What practical difference is there [between the two assumptions]?

(1) It was an established fact that her husband had no issue and that a levir was in existence.
(2) Most women bear viable children and her rival's child would exempt her from the levirate obligations.
(3) Lit., ‘to the market’.
Lit., 'and it is a half and a half', 'confirmed status' plus minority pointing to the levirate marriage while the majority principle points to permissibility to marry any stranger.

Since neither consideration can be regarded as more weighty than the other.

As one who had no brother-in-law.

Miscarriages and the births of females constitute a majority against the minority of births of viable males.

Only a viable male child exempts a woman from the levirate obligations.

I.e., besides the fact that viable males are in a minority (v. supra n. 10) the possibility of the birth of a viable male is still less to be taken note of in view of the confirmed status of the woman (v. supra note 9).

But why! Let her perform halizah and thus at all events procure her freedom. V. infra p. 844, n. 5.

As any other woman whose husband died. V. supra 42b.

Since should her rival be pregnant, her levirate bond could not be severed by halizah but by the actual birth of a viable child.

Whether the rival gave birth to a child or not. V. infra note 5.

Her rival who might be pregnant.

Until it is definitely ascertained whether her rival had given birth to a viable child.

After a period of nine months (v. supra p. 843, n. 15), and so procure her freedom to marry again.

Since either she is exempted altogether from the levirate obligations by the birth of her rival's child (if one was born) or (if no viable child was born) she gains her freedom by the halizah.

That no halizah must be performed; v. supra n. 3.

Of the rival.

In consequence of which the halizah would become null and void as if it had never taken place.

That the halizah was unnecessary and consequently null and void.

I.e., that she is permitted to marry a priest.

V. supra note 10.

Should she eventually be married to a priest.

Supra 118b, q.v. for notes.

From a former husband; before she was married to the one now deceased. As a divorcée she remains forbidden to marry a priest even if the halizah is subsequently found to have no validity.

She and her husband together with their son.

When death occurred. Since no one was present there is no need to provide against the possibility of the appearance of witnesses.

The wives of two brothers.

Lit., 'this'.

To marry a stranger.

Who might, in fact, be alive and with whom halizah or levirate marriage must be performed. A woman is eligible to tender evidence on the death of her husband in so far only as to enable herself to marry again. She is ineligible, however, to give evidence enabling her sister-in-law to marry again.

To marry again.

That her husband was dead.

To marry a stranger; since there are no witnesses to testify to the death of the levir. The evidence of his wife alone (cf. supra n. 4) is not sufficient for the purpose.

To marry any stranger; since she herself is believed in respect of the death of her husband while in respect of the death of the levir the evidence of the witnesses is available.

And neither had witnesses.

Who exempt their mother from the levirate bond.

And who is consequently subject to the levirate bond of a man whose death is attested only by her sister-in-law whose word cannot be accepted (cf. supra n. 4).

The two sisters-in-law spoken of in the first clause of our Mishnah, neither of whom had children nor was able to produce witnesses to attest her husband's death.

With the levirs other than the absent husbands.

V. supra note 12.
(44) Any stranger. Though the evidence of each woman was valid to enable herself to contract levirate marriage, it is not valid to exempt her sister-in-law- from the levirate bond (cf. supra note 4), and the possibility that their absent levirs (the first husbands) were still alive must be taken into consideration.

(45) Var. lec. R Eliezer.

(46) On the assumption that their husbands were dead.

(47) Of two sisters-in-law who stated that their husbands were dead.

(48) To confirm her statement.

(49) The former because of her children who exempt her from the levirate bond; and the latter, because witnesses had testified to the death of her levir while she herself is believed in respect of the death of her husband.

(50) Cur. edd. do not indicate by the usual stops that this passage is derived from our Mishnah. Cf. however, Bomb. ed.

(51) By a statement whereby she injures her associate.

(52) Her evidence here would injure herself as it would her associate. Where, however, her associate alone would be the sufferer a rival's evidence is not accepted.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 120a

That of allowing her rival to marry before herself. If it is granted that a rival may give evidence in favour of her associate, her rival may be permitted to marry even if she herself did not remarry. If, however, it be maintained that the reason is because she would not cause injury to herself, the rival would be permitted to marry only if she herself had married again, but if she herself did not remarry, her rival also would not be permitted to remarry. Now, what [is the decision]? — Come and hear: R. ELEAZAR RULED: SINCE THEY WERE ONCE PERMITTED TO THE LEVIR THEY ARE PERMITTED TO MARRY ANY MAN. Now, if it be granted that [the reason is because] she would not cause injury to herself one can well see the reason why only when the one married again is the other permitted to remarry. If it be maintained, however, that the reason is because a rival is eligible to tender evidence in favour of her associate, [the associate should be permitted to marry again] even if the rival did not remarry. Consequently it must be concluded that R. Eleazar's reason is: Because she herself had married again and she would not cause injury to herself! — R. Eleazar may have argued on the basis of the view of the Rabbis. According to my view [he may have said in effect] a rival is eligible to tender evidence in favour of her associate, and even if she herself did not remarry the other may be allowed to marry again. According to your view, however, you must at least agree with me that where she herself remarried the other also should be allowed to marry again, since she would naturally not injure herself! And the Rabbis? — She might be acting in the spirit of let me die with the Philistines.

Come and hear: If a woman and her husband went to a country beyond the sea, and she returned and stated, ‘My husband is dead’, she may be married again and she also receives her kethubah. Her rival, however, is forbidden. R. Eleazar7 ruled: Since she becomes permitted her rival also becomes permitted! — Read: Since she was permitted and she married again. Let it, however, be apprehended that she5 may have returned with a letter of divorce and that the reason why she made her statement is because it was her intention to injure her rival! — If she was married to an Israelite, this would be so indeed; but here we are dealing with one who married a priest.13

MISHNAH. EVIDENCE [OF IDENTITY] MAY BE LEGALLY TENDERED ONLY ON [PROOF AFFORDED BY] THE FULL FACE WITH THE NOSE, THOUGH THERE WERE ALSO MARKS ON THE MAN'S BODY OR CLOTHING. NO EVIDENCE [OF A MAN'S DEATH] MAY BE TENDERED BEFORE HIS SOUL HAS DEPARTED; EVEN THOUGH THE WITNESSES HAVE SEEN HIM WITH HIS ARTERIES CUT OR CRUCIFIED OR BEING DEVoured BY A WILD BEAST. EVIDENCE [OF IDENTIFICATION] MAY BE TENDERED [BY THOSE] ONLY [WHO SAW THE CORPSE] WITHIN THREE DAYS [AFTER DEATH]. R. JUDAH B. Baba, however, said: NEITHER ALL MEN, NOR ALL PLACES, NOR ALL SEASONS ARE ALIKE.
GEMARA. Our Rabbis taught: Evidence [of identification] may be tendered only on [proof afforded by] the forehead without the face or the face without the forehead — Both together with the nose must be present.

Abaye, or it might be said, R. Kahana, stated: What is the Scriptural proof? — The shew of their countenance doth witness against them.

Abba b. Martha, otherwise Abba b. Manyumi, was being pressed for the payment of some money by the people of the Exilarch's house. Taking some wax he smeared it on a piece of rag and stuck it upon his forehead. He passed before them and they did not recognize him.

THOUGH THERE WERE ALSO MARKS etc. Does this imply that identification marks are not valid Pentateuchally? A contradiction, surely, may be pointed out: If he found it tied to a bag, a purse or a seal-ring or if it was found among his furniture, even after a long time, it is valid! — Abaye replied: This is no difficulty. The one is the view of R. Eliezer while the other is that of the Rabbis. For it was taught: No evidence [of identification] by a mole may he tendered. R. Eliezer h. Mahebai ruled: Such evidence may be legally tendered. Do they not differ on the following principle, that one Master is of the opinion that identification marks are valid Pentateuchally while the other Master is of the opinion that identification marks are only Rabbinically valid? — Said Raba: All agree that identification marks are valid Pentateuchally; but here they differ on the question whether it is common for the same kind of mole to be found on persons of simultaneous birth.

Others say: Their point of difference here is whether a mole usually undergoes a change after one's death — One Master is of the opinion that it usually undergoes a change after one's death and the other Master is of the opinion that it does not usually undergo a change after one's death.

Others maintain that Raba said: All agree that identification marks are only Rabbinically valid; but here [it is on the question] whether a mole constitutes a distinct\(^1\) identification mark\(^2\) that they differ. One Master is of the opinion that it constitutes a distinct identification mark,\(^2\) and the other Master is of the opinion that it does not constitute a distinct identification mark.

With reference to the version according to which Raba stated that ‘identification marks are valid Pentateuchally’ [the objection might be raised:] Surely it was taught, THOUGH THERE WERE Also marks on the man's body or clothing! — As to the body [the marks indicated by the witnesses were only that the corpse was] long or short; and as to one's clothing [no reliability can be placed upon their identification] since borrowing might be apprehended. If, however, borrowing is to be apprehended how could we allow the return of an ass on [the strength of] the identification marks of a saddle! — People do not borrow a saddle because it makes the back of the ass sore. Where one ‘found it tied to a bag, a purse or a seal-ring,’ how do we allow its return! — As to a seal-ring one is afraid of forgery; and as to one's bag and purse, people are superstitious and do not lend such objects. And if you prefer I might say [that the identification marks of one's] clothing [consisted in a statement] that they were white or red.

Even though the witnesses have seen him with his arteries cut etc. This then implies that a man whose arteries have been cut may live; but this is inconsistent with the following: A person does not cause defilement before his soul has departed, even though his arteries had been cut and even though he is in a dying condition. [Thus it follows that] it is only defilement that he does not cause but that it is impossible for him to live! — Abaye replied: This is no difficulty. The one represents the view of R. Simeon b. Eleazar; the other that of the Rabbis. For it was taught: Evidence may be legally tendered on [the death of a person] whose arteries were cut, but no such evidence may be tendered concerning one crucified. R. Simeon b. Eleazar ruled: No such evidence may be legally tendered even concerning one whose arteries were cut, because [the wounds] might be cauterized and [the man] may survive. Can this, however, be reconciled with the views of R. Simeon b. Eleazar? Surely in the final clause it was taught: It once happened at Asia that a man was lowered into the sea and only his leg was brought up, and the Sages ruled: [If the recovered leg contained the part] above the knee [the man's wife] may marry again, but if it contained only the part below the knee she may not remarry! — Waters are different since they irritate the wound. But, surely, Rabbah b. Bar Hana related: I myself have seen an Arab merchant who took hold of a sword and cut open the arteries of his camel, but this did not cause it to cease its cry! — Abaye replied: That [camel] was a lean animal.

Raba replied: [The operation was performed] with a glowing hot knife, and this is in agreement with the opinion of all.

Or being devoured by a wild beast etc. Rab Judah stated in the name of Samuel: This has been taught only in the case [where the attack was] on a vital organ, but where it was on a vital organ, evidence may be legally tendered.

Rab Judah further stated in the name of Samuel: If a person whose two organs or the greater part of them were cut escaped, evidence [of his death] may be legally tendered. But this cannot be! For, surely, Rab Judah stated in the name of Samuel: If a man whose two organs or the greater part of them were cut indicated by gestures, ‘Write a letter of divorce for my wife’, [such document] is to be written and delivered [to his wife]! — He is alive but will eventually die. If this is so one should go into exile on account of him; while, in fact, it was taught: If a man cut [unwittingly] the two, or the greater part of the two organs of another man he is not to go into exile! — Surely in connection with this it was stated that R. Hoshaiya explained: The possibility must be taken into consideration that the wind might have aggravated the wound or that he himself also may have brought on his death,¹ What is the practical difference between these [two explanations]? —

The case where one cut [another man's organs] in a house of marble and the latter made some convulsive movements, or also where he cut his organs out of doors and the latter made no convulsive movements.

R. JUDAH . . . SAID: NOT ALL etc. The question was raised: Does R. Judah b. Baba differ [from the first Tanna] in relaxing the law or does he differ from him in imposing a greater restriction? — Come and hear: A man was once drowned at Karmi and after three days he was hauled up at Be Hedya, and R. Dimi of Nehardea allowed his wife to remarry. And again, it happened that a man was drowned in the Tigris and after five days he was hauled up to the Shebistana bridge, and, on the evidence of the shoshbinim, Raba permitted his wife to marry again. — Now, if you grant that he differs [from the first Tanna] in relaxing the law, they might well have acted in accordance with the ruling of R. Judah b. Baba. If you should contend, however, that he differed in imposing a greater restriction, in accordance with whose view [it may be asked] did they act? — Waters are different because they cause contraction. But, surely, you said that ‘waters [are different since they] irritate the wound’! — That applies only where a wound exists, but where no wound exists waters cause contraction. This, furthermore, applies only where the witnesses saw the body as soon as it was brought up, but if it remains some time, it swells.

GEMARA. Our Rabbis taught: If a man fell into water, whether it had [a visible] end or not, his wife is forbidden [to marry again]; so R. Meir. But the Sages ruled: [If he fell into] water that has [a visible] end, his wife is permitted [to marry again], but [if into water] that has no [visible] end his wife is forbidden [to marry again].

What is to be understood by ‘has [a visible] end’? — Abaye replied: [An area all the boundaries of which] a person standing [on the edge] is able to see in all directions.

Once a man was drowned in the swamp of Samki, and R. Shila permitted his wife to marry again. Said Rab to Samuel: ‘Come, let us place him under the ban’. ‘Let us first’, [the other replied,] ‘send to [ask] him [for an explanation]’. On their sending to him the enquiry: ‘[If a man has fallen into] water which has no [visible] end, is his wife forbidden or permitted [to marry again]’? he sent to them [in reply], ‘His wife is forbidden’ — ‘And [they again enquired] is the swamp of Samki regarded as water that has [a visible] end or as water that has no [visible] end?’ — ‘It is’, he sent them his reply, ‘a water that has no [visible] end’. ‘Why then did the Master [they asked] act in such a manner?’ — ‘I was really mistaken’, [he replied]; ‘I was of the opinion that as the water was gathered and stationary it was to be regarded as "water which has [a visible] end", but the law is in fact not so; for owing to the prevailing waves it might well be assumed that the waves carried [the body] away’. Samuel thereupon applied to Rab the Scriptural text, There shall no mischief befall the righteous, while Rab applied to Samuel the following text: But in the multitude of counsellors there is safety.
It was taught: Rabbi related how it once happened that while two men were casting nets in the Jordan one of them entered a subterranean fish pond and when the sun had set he could not find the entrance of the cave. His companion, after waiting long enough for his soul to depart, returned and reported the accident to his household. On the following day when the sun rose the first man discovered the entrance of the cave, and on returning he found his household in deep mourning. ‘How great’, exclaimed Rabbi, ‘are the words of the Sages who ruled [that if a man fell into] water which has [a visible] end his wife is permitted [to marry again, but if into water] which has no [visible] end, his wife is forbidden’. If so, then also in the case of water which has [a visible] end the possibility of having remained in a subterranean fish pond should be taken into consideration! — It is not usual for a subterranean fish pond to be found with water which has [a visible] end.

R. Ashi said: The ruling of the Rabbis [that where a man has fallen into] water which has no [visible] end his wife is forbidden [to marry again]. applies only to an ordinary person but not to a learned man for, should he be rescued, the fact would become known. This, however, is not correct; for there is no difference between an ordinary man and a learned man. Ex post facto, the marriage is valid; ab initio, it is forbidden.

It was taught: R. Gamaliel related, ‘I was once travelling on board a ship when I observed a shipwreck and was sorely grieved for [the apparent loss of] a scholar who had been travelling on board that ship. (And who was he? — R. Akiba.) When I subsequently landed, he came to me and sat down and discussed matters of halachah. "My son", I asked him, "who rescued you?" "The plank of a ship", he answered me, "came my way, and to every wave that approached me I bent my head" — Hence the Sages said that if wicked persons attack a man let him bend his head. At that hour I exclaimed: How significant are the words of the Sages who ruled [that if a man fell into] water which has [a visible] end, [his wife] is permitted [to marry again; but if into] water which has no [visible] end, she is forbidden’.

It was taught: R. Akiba related, ‘I was once travelling on board a ship when I observed a ship in distress, and was much grieved on account of a scholar who was on it. (And who was it? — R. Meir.) When I subsequently landed in the province of Cappadocia he came to me and sat down and discussed matters of halachah. "My son", I said to him, "who rescued you?" — "One wave" he answered me, "tossed me to another, and the other to yet another until [the sea] cast me on the dry land". At that hour I exclaimed: How significant are the words of the Sages who ruled [that if a man fell into] water which has [a visible] end, [his wife] is permitted [to marry again; but if into] water which has no [visible] end, she is forbidden’. Our Rabbis taught: If a man fell into a lion's den, no evidence may be legally tendered concerning him, but if into a pit full of serpents and scorpions, evidence may legally be tendered concerning him. R. Judah b. Bathrya ruled: Even [if he fell] into a pit full of serpents and scorpions, no evidence may legally be tendered concerning him, since the possibility must be taken into consideration that he might be a charmer. But the first Tanna — Owing to the pressure they injure him.

(4) Aggravation by wind is possible, while the bringing on of death by the victim himself cannot be assumed.

Our Rabbis taught: [If a man] fell into a burning furnace, evidence may be legally tendered concerning him, and also if he fell into a boiler that was full of [boiling] wine or oil, evidence may be legally tendered concerning him. In the name of R. Aha It was stated: [If the man fell into a hot boiler] of oil, evidence may legally be tendered concerning him, because it adds fuel to the fire; [but if into one] of wine, no evidence may legally be tendered concerning him, because it extinguishes [the fire]. They, however, said to him: At first it extinguishes [the fire to a certain extent] but eventually it causes it to burn [with greater vehemence].

SAID R. MEIR: IT ONCE HAPPENED THAT A MAN FELL INTO A LARGE CISTERN etc. It was taught: They said to R. Meir, ‘Miracles cannot be mentioned [as proof]’. What [did they mean by] ‘miracles’? If it be suggested because he neither eats nor drinks, surely [it may be pointed out], It is written in Scripture, And fast ye for me, and neither eat nor drink [three days]! Rather because he does not sleep. For R. Johanan stated: [A man who said]. ‘I take an oath that I will not sleep for three days’ is to be flogged and he may sleep at once. What then is R. Meir's reason? — R. Kahana replied: There were arches above arches. And the Rabbis? — They were of marble.

And R. Meir? — It is hardly possible that the man did not hang on to [the arches] and doze a while.

Our Rabbis taught: It once happened that the daughter of Nehonia the well-digger fell into a large cistern, and people went and reported [the accident] to R. Hanina b. Dosa. During the first hour he said to them, ‘All is well’. In the second hour he again said, ‘All is well’. In the third he said to them, ‘She is saved’. ‘My daughter’, he asked her, ‘who saved you?’ — ‘A ram came to my help with an aged man leading it’. ‘Are you’, the people asked him, ‘a prophet?’ — ‘I am’, he replied, ‘neither prophet nor the Son of a prophet; but should the [beneficent] work in which the righteous is engaged be the cause of disaster to his seed!’ R. Abba stated: His son nevertheless died of thirst; for it is said in Scripture, And round about Him it stormeth mightily, which teaches that the Holy One, blessed be He, deals strictly with those round about Him even to a hair's breadth. R. Hanina said, [Proof may be adduced] from here: A God dreaded in the great council of the holy ones, and feared of all them that are round about Him.

GEMARA. Is it not possible that they did not go — Rab Judah replied in the name of Samuel: [Our Mishnah deals with a case] where they Say, ‘Behold we are returning from the mourning for, and the burial of So-and-so’. Is it not possible that a mere ant had died and that the children gave it the man's name?\textsuperscript{44} — [It is a case] where they\textsuperscript{45} say, ‘Such and such Rabbis were there’ or ‘such and such funeral orators were there’.

IN THE CASE OF AN IDOLATER, HOWEVER . . . IF HIS INTENTION WAS etc. Said Rab Judah in the name of Samuel: This\textsuperscript{46} was taught only in the case where it was his\textsuperscript{47} intention to enable [the woman] to be permitted,\textsuperscript{48} but if his intention was merely to give evidence his testimony is valid. How could this\textsuperscript{49} be ascertained? — R. Joseph replied: If he came to Beth din and stated. ‘So-and-so is dead, allow his wife to marry again’, such evidence is one where his intention was to enable [the woman] to be permitted,\textsuperscript{48} [but if he stated], ‘He is dead’, and nothing more, his intention was merely to give evidence.

So It was also stated\textsuperscript{50} Resh Lakish said, This\textsuperscript{46} was taught only in the case where it was his intention to enable [the woman] to be permitted,\textsuperscript{48} but if his intention was merely to give evidence his testimony is valid.

Said R. Johanan to him:\textsuperscript{51} Did it not happen with Oshaia Berabbi,\textsuperscript{52} that he opposed\textsuperscript{53} eighty-five elders saying to them that, ‘This\textsuperscript{46} was taught Only in the case where it was his intention to enable [the woman] to be permitted\textsuperscript{48} but if his intention was merely to give evidence his testimony is valid’, but the Sages did not agree with him\textsuperscript{54}

But according to the ruling in our Mishnah, tha\textsuperscript{55} IN THE CASE OF AN IDOLATER, HOWEVER, THE EVIDENCE IS INVALID IF HIS INTENTION WAS [TO ACT AS WITNESS],\textsuperscript{56} how is it possible [for the idolater's testimony ever to be accepted]?\textsuperscript{57} — Where he makes a statement at random,\textsuperscript{58} as was the case where one went about saying, ‘Who of the family of Hiwai is here? Who is here of the family of Hiwai? Hiwai is dead!’, and R. Joseph allowed his\textsuperscript{59} wife to marry again.

A man\textsuperscript{60} once went about saying, ‘Alas for the valiant rider who was at Pumbeditha, for he is dead’; and R. Joseph, or it might be said, Raba, allowed his wife to marry again.

A man once went about saying, ‘Who of the family of Hasa is here? Hasa is drowned!’ [On hearing this] R. Nahman exclaimed, ‘By God, the fish must have eaten Hasa up!’ Relying on R. Nahman's exclamation, Hasa's wife went and married again, and no objection was raised against her action.\textsuperscript{61}

Said R. Ashi: From this\textsuperscript{62} it may be inferred that the ruling of the Rabbis\textsuperscript{63} that [if a man had fallen into] water which had no [visible] end, his wife is forbidden [to marry again] applies only ab initio, but if someone had already married her, she is not to be taken away from him.

Others read: R. Nahman allowed his\textsuperscript{64} wife to marry again; for he said, ‘Hasa was a great man, and had he come up [out of the water] his rescue would have become known’. The law, however, is not so. For there is no difference between a great man and one who is not great — [In either case] it is permitted\textsuperscript{65} ex post facto and forbidden\textsuperscript{66} ab initio.

A certain idolater ‘once said to an Israelite, ‘Cut some grass\textsuperscript{67} and throw it to my cattle on the Sabbath; if not, I will kill you as I have killed So-and-so, that son of an Israelite, to whom I said, "Cook for me a dish on the Sabbath", and whom, as he did not cook for me, I killed’. His wife\textsuperscript{68} heard this and came to Abaye.\textsuperscript{69} As he kept her waiting

In the natural course of events the man could not survive long in a cistern. If his death were not caused by the water, some other causes would inevitably bring it about. V. infra.

In three days’ time, accordingly, a man who had fallen into a cistern would inevitably succumb to fatigue and the physical necessity for sleep, and would in the natural course of events be drowned.

If no one can withstand the necessity for sleep. why does not R. Meir, in the circumstances mentioned, admit the evidence?

In the cistern mentioned in our Mishnah.

Why do they, in such circumstances, admit the evidence?

If an idolater who was selling fruit in the market declared, ‘These fruits are of ‘orlah, of a newly broken field, or of a plantation in its fourth year’, his statement is disregarded, for his intention was merely to raise the value of his fruit.

Abba Judah of Zaidan related: It once happened that an Israelite and an idolater went on a journey together and when the idolater returned he said, ‘Alas for the Jew who was with me on the journey, for he died on the way and I buried him’, and [the Israelite’s] wife [on this evidence] was allowed to marry again. And, again it happened that a group of men were going to Antiochia and an idolater came and stated, ‘Alas for that group of men, for they died and I buried them’, and [on this evidence] their wives were permitted to marry again. Moreover, it happened that sixty men were going to the camp of Bether, and an idolater came and stated, ‘Alas for sixty men who were on the way to Bether, for they died and I buried them’, and [on the basis of this statement] their wives were permitted to marry again.

MISHNAH. EVIDENCE MAY BE TENDERED [EVEN IF THE CORPSE WAS SEEN BY THE WITNESSES] IN CANDLE LIGHT OR IN MOONLIGHT; AND A WOMAN MAY BE GIVEN PERMISSION TO MARRY AGAIN ON THE EVIDENCE OF A MERE VOICE. IT ONCE HAPPENED THAT A MAN WAS STANDING ON THE TOP OF A HILL AND CRIED, SO-AND-SO SON OF SO-AND-SO; A SERPENT HAS BITTEN ME, AND I AM DYING; AND THOUGH WHEN THEY WENT [TO EXAMINE THE CORPSE] THEY DID NOT RECOGNIZE HIM, THEY NEVERTHELESS PERMITTED HIS WIFE TO REMARRY.

GEMARA. Rabbah b. Samuel stated: A Tanna taught that Beth Shammai ruled that a woman may not be permitted to marry again on the evidence of a mere voice and Beth Hillel ruled that she may be permitted to marry again on the evidence of a mere voice. This surely, is the ruling in our Mishnah! — It is this that he teaches us: Should an anonymous statement be found that a woman [in such circumstances] is not permitted to marry again, that [statement would represent the view of] Beth Shammai.

BUT WHEN THEY WENT . . . THEY FOUND NO ONE. Is it not possible that it was a demon [that cried]? — Rab Judah replied in the name of Rab: [This is a case] where they saw in him the likeness of a man! But they also are in the likeness of men! — They saw his shadow. But these also have a shadow! They saw a shadow of his shadow. Is it not possible that these also cast a shadow of a shadow? — R. Hanina replied: The demon Jonathan told me that they have a shadow but not a shadow of a shadow. Is it not possible that it was a rival [that cried]? — A Tanna at the school of R. Ishmael taught that at a time of danger [a letter of divorce] may be written and delivered [to the woman] even if [the husband who gave the instructions] is unknown [to the witnesses].

GEMARA. Is R. Akiba then of the opinion that on the evidence of a woman [a wife is] not permitted to marry again? Surely, It was taught: R. Simeon b. Eleazar stated in the name of R. Akiba, ‘[That] a woman is eligible to bring her own letter of divorce is Inferred a minori ad majus: If those women concerning whom the Rabbis ruled that they are not believed when they state, "Her husband is dead", are nevertheless eligible to bring her a letter of divorce, how much more reasonable is it that this woman, who is believed when she states that her own husband is dead, should be eligible to bring her own letter of divorce.’ [Thus it follows that only] those women of whom the Rabbis have spoken are not believed but any other woman is believed. — This is no difficulty. One ruling was made before the law, had been established; the other, after the law had been established.

1. when the scholars and students who were assembled for the purpose of listening to the festival discourses, were also asked to decide difficult points of law that had arisen during the preceding months. During these gatherings the woman had an opportunity of making enquiries about her vanished husband. According to cited by Rashi, the were the anniversaries of the deaths of distinguished men, when scholars from the surrounding localities as well as the general public assembled round the respective graves for study and for discussions of matters of law.

Josh. X, 10), that was famous for its choice fruit, the point in doubt being whether the fruit had originally belonged to an Israelite and whether it had been tithed. If this interpretation is to be followed the sale of the fruit mentioned presumably took place outside Palestine, where locally grown produce is free from tithe. For other interpretations cf. GEMARA. What was the inferiority of the innkeeper?1 R. Kahana replied: She was an innkeeper who was an idolatress and she said at random, ‘This is his staff, and this is his bag and this is the grave wherein I buried him’. So it was also recited by Abba the son of R. Manyumi b. Hiyya: She was an innkeeper who was an idolatress and she said at random, ‘This is his staff, and this is his bag and this is the grave wherein I buried him’. But, surely, they had asked her, ‘Where is our friend?’3 — When she saw them she began to cry, and when they asked her, ‘Where is our friend?’ she replied, 'He died and I buried him',

Our Rabbis taught: It once occurred that a man came to give evidence on behalf of a woman before R. Tarfon. 'My son', [the Master] said to him, 'what do you know concerning the evidence for this woman?' — 'I and he', the other replied, 'were going on the same road and when a raiding gang pursued us he grasped the branch of an olive tree, pulled it down, and made the gang turn back. "Lion", I said to him, "I thank you". Whence did you know [he asked] that my name was Lion? So in fact I am called in my home town: Johanan son of R. Jonathan, the Lion of Kefar Shihaya", and after some time he fell ill and died'. And [on this evidence] R. Tarfon permitted his wife to marry again.

Does not R. Tarfon, however, hold that inquiry and examination are necessary? Surely it was taught: It once happened that a man came before R. Tarfon to give evidence on behalf of a woman. My son', he said to him, 'What do you know concerning this evidence?' 'I and he', the other replied, 'were going on the same road, and when a raiding gang pursued us he grasped the branch of a fig tree, pulled it down, and drove the gang back. "I thank you, Lion", I said to him, and he replied, 'You have correctly guessed my name, for so I am called in my home town: Johanan son of Jonathan, the Lion of Kefar Shihaya", and after some time he died'. The Master said to him: Did you not tell me thus, 'Johanan son of Jonathan of Kefar Shihaya the Lion'? — 'No', the other replied, 'but it is this that I told you: Johanan son of Jonathan, the Lion of Kefar Shihaya'. Having examined him closely two or three times and the man's replies invariably agreeing, R. Tarfon permitted his wife to marry again! — This [is a point in dispute between] Tannaim. For it was taught: Witnesses on matrimonial matters are not to be subjected to enquiry and examination. These are the words of R. Akiba; R. Tarfon, however, ruled: They are to be subjected. And they differ [in respect of a ruling] of R. Hanina. For R. Hanina stated: Pentateuchally both monetary, and capital cases must be conducted with enquiry and examination, for it is said, Ye shall have one manner of law, what then is the reason why they have ordained that monetary cases do not require enquiry and examination? In order that you should not lock the door in the face of borrowers — And it is on this principle that they differ: One Master is of the opinion that since the woman has a kethubah to receive [such cases are] on a par with those of monetary matters, while the other Master is of the opinion that since we are thereby permitting a married woman to marry a stranger [such cases are] on a par with capital cases.

R. Eleazar said in the name of R. Hanna: Scholars increase peace in the world, for it is said in the Scriptures, And all thy children shall be to taught of the Lord; and great shall be the peace of thy children.

CHAPTER I

GEMARA. R. Joseph said: Rab Judah said [that] Samuel said: Why did they [the Rabbis] Say, A MAIDEN IS MARRIED ON THE FOURTH DAY? Because we have learned: 'If the time [appointed for the marriage] arrived and they were not married, they eat of his [food] and they eat of terumah' — you might think that if the time arrived on the first day in the week he would have to supply her with food, therefore have we learned, A MAIDEN IS MARRIED ON THE FOURTH DAY. Said R. Joseph: Lord of Abraham! He [Samuel] attaches a Mishnah which was taught, to a Mishnah which was not taught! Which was taught and which was not taught? This was taught and this was taught! — But [put it this way]: he attaches a Mishnah, the reason of which was explained, to a Mishnah, the reason of which was not explained. But if it was said, it was said thus; Rab Judah said [that] Samuel said: Why did they say, A MAIDEN IS MARRIED ON THE FOURTH DAY? Because IF HE HAD A Claim AS TO THE VIRGINITY HE COULD GO EARLY [NEXT MORNING] TO THE COURT OF JUSTICE — well, let her be married on the first day in the week, so that if he had a claim as to virginity he could go early [on the morning of the second day of the week] to the court of justice! [The answer is:] The Sages watched over the interests of the daughters of Israel so that [the bridegroom] should prepare for the [wedding.] feast three days, namely on the first day in the week, the second day in the week, and the third day in the week, and on the fourth day he marries her. And now that we have learned ‘shakedu’, that [Mishnah] which we have learned: If the time arrived and they were not married, they eat of his [food] and they eat of terumah, [is to be understood as implying that if] the time arrived on the first day in the week, since he cannot marry [her, on the first day of the week, on account of the ordinance], he does not give her food [on the three days, from the first day of the week to the fourth day]. Therefore [R. Joseph concludes], if he became ill or she became ill, or she became menstruous, he does not give her food.

Some [scholars] there are who put this as a question: If he became ill, what is [the law]? [Shall I say:] There, the reason [he need not support her,] is because he is forced, and here, he is also forced? Perhaps, there, he is forced by an ordinance which the Rabbis ordained, [but] here, he is not? And if you will say, he supplies her with food, then the question would still be: if she became ill, what is [the law]? Can he say unto her, ‘I am here ready to marry you’? Or, perhaps, she can say unto him, ‘His field has been flooded’. And if you will say [that] she can say to him [when she falls ill], ‘His field has been flooded.’ [then the question is,] if she became menstruous, what is [the law]? During her regular time there is no question.

(5) The marriage did not take place through the man's fault.
(6) The man has to maintain them.
(7) If the man (the bridegroom) is a priest.
(8) The priest's share of the crop. v. Glos.
And thus to teach that it is not his fault that he does not marry her on the first day in the week, because the Rabbis ordained that he has to wait with the marriage till the fourth day (in the case of a maiden), or the fifth day (in the case of a widow).

An exclamation, like ‘O, God!’ (v. Rashi ad loc.).

Our Mishnah: So THAT . . . HE COULD GO EARLY TO THE COURT OF JUSTICE.

V. infra 57a.

The saying of Samuel.

Lit., ‘ordination’, ‘improvement.

‘They (the Sages) watched’, etc. — the principle just stated.

Since ye find that the bride has no claim to maintenance where he is not to blame [or the delay in the marriage.

After the time for the marriage had arrived and the marriage cannot take place through one of these causes.

Lit ‘how is it?’

When the appointed date of the marriage falls on the first day of the week, v. infra 57a.

By the ordinance of the scholars, according to which he must wait till the fourth day of the week (תַּשְׁלֹשִׁים).

By his illness to postpone the marriage.

When the appointed date of the marriage falls on the first day of the week.

To postpone the marriage.

And therefore he need not support her.

I.e., in this case he would have to support her since the postponement of the marriage is due to his illness.

Lit., ‘And if you may be able (or, find it possible) to say.’

Another reading is ‘thy field’. The sense is, of course, the same.

I.e., it is his bad luck that she became ill, and consequently he must support her.

Talmud - Mas. Kethuboth 2b

that she cannot say to him, ‘His field has been flooded’. When is the question asked? [If she became menstruous] not during her regular time, what is [the law]? Since it is not during her regular time, she can say unto him, ‘His field has been flooded’? Or, perhaps, since there are women who change their periods. It is as if it was her regular time? R. Ahai explained: [We learnt:] When the time came and they were not married, they eat of his food and they eat of terumah. It does not state. ‘They [the men] did not marry them [the women]’ but [it says] ‘They [the women] were not married.’ In what case? If they prevent, why do they eat of his food and eat of the terumah? Hence, you must say [must you not], that they were forced as in this case, and it states ‘they eat of his food and they eat of terumah’? — R. Ashi said: Indeed I can say that in the case of an accident she does not eat [of his]. And [here] they [the men] prevented. And by right he ought to have stated, ‘they [the men] did not marry [the women].’ But since the first clause speaks of them [the women] the latter clause also speaks of them [the women].

Raba said: And with regard to divorce it is not so. Accordingly Raba holds [that] accident is no plea in regard to divorce. Whence does Raba get this [rule]? Shall I say, from what we have learned: ‘Behold this is thy bill of divorce if I come not [back] from now until twelve months, and he died within the twelve months, there is no divorce. [And we would conclude from this that only if] he died there is no divorce, but if he became ill there is a divorce! But perhaps indeed I might say [that] if he became ill there would also he no divorce, and [the Mishnah] lets us hear just this [rule], that there is no divorce after death. [That] there is no divorce after death, a previous Mishnah teaches: ‘Behold, this is thy bill of divorce if I die,’ [or] ‘behold, this is thy bill of divorce from this illness,’ [or] ‘behold, this is thy bill of divorce after [my] death,’ he has not said anything.

[But] perhaps [that] is to exclude from that of our teachers, for it has been taught: Our teachers allowed her to marry again. And we said: Who are ‘our teachers’? Rab Judah said [that] Samuel said: The court that allowed the oil [of the heathen]: they hold like R. Jose who said, ‘the date of the document shows it.’ But from the later clause: [This is thy bill of divorce] from now if I come not [back] from now [and] until twelve months’, and he died within the twelve months, it is a divorce. [And we may deduce] ‘if he died’, and the same rule applies if he became ill. But perhaps [the divorce is effective] only when he died, because it was not pleasing to him that she should become subject to the yabam.

But perhaps [the divorce is effective] only when he died, because it was not pleasing to him that she should become subject to the yabam! — But [the deduction can be made] from this: There was a certain [man] who said unto them: ‘If I do not come [back] from now until thirty days it shall be a divorce.’ He came [back] at the end of thirty days but the ferry stopped him. He said unto them, ‘Look, I have come [back]; look, I have come [back]!’ Said Samuel: This is not regarded as having come back. But perhaps an accident which is frequent is different, for since he ought to have stipulated it and he did not stipulate it, he injured himself.

— But [we must say] Raba expressed an opinion of his own: On account of the chaste women and on account of the loose women. On account of the chaste women, because if you will say that it should not be a divorce.

(3) If the women cause the hindrance to the marriage taking place now.
(4) Lit., ‘but is it not’.
(5) Lit., as in this manner, that is, when menstruation appeared outside the regular time.
(6) Lit., ‘always I say unto thee’.
(7) As irregular menstruation (v. n. 10). The accident is a mishap that comes from the woman.
(8) Lit., ‘every accident, she does not eat.
(9) In the Mishnah quoted by R. Ahai.
(10) The marriage from taking place now.
(11) And not ‘they (the women) Here not married’.
(12) Of the Mishnah, quoted by R. Ahai: V. infra 57a.
(13) I.e., since that Mishnah speaks in the first clause of ‘maiden’ and ‘widow’, it uses in the clause that follows the passive ‘they were not married’ the subjects of which are the ‘maiden and the ‘widow’ to use the active ‘they did not marry’, referring to the men, would have required more words in that clause.
(14) Lit., ‘deeds (of divorce).’
(15) I.e., an accident, as explained infra, does not invalidate a divorce.
(16) Lit., ‘there is no accident with divorce’.
(17) These words the husband says to the wife. ‘From now until twelve months, means ‘within twelve months,.
(18) Lit., ‘it is not a Get,’ (v. Glos.) that is, the divorce does not take effect: v. Git. 76b.
(19) Because there can be no divorce after death.
(20) And he could not come back within the twelve months through his illness.
(21) Which proves that we do not admit a plea of force majeure to invalidate a Get.
(22) For the plea of accident does apply to divorce.
(23) Git. 76b.
(24) And no other deduction, e.g., as to illness, is to be made from that Mishnah.
(26) This phrase is not clear. V. Rashi here and Git. 72a. The phrase seems to mean, ‘If I die from this illness.’ v. Tosaf. a.l.
(27) I.e., his words have no effect.
(28) I.e., the Mishnah of Git. 76b quoted above.
(29) I.e., from the view of our teachers. If this is the object of (the first clause of) the Mishnah of Cit. 76b, Raba cannot deduce from this Mishnah that if he (the husband) became ill the divorce took effect: v. supra, also note 9.
(30) ‘Our teachers’ regard her as divorced (against the Mishnah) and allow her to marry again without halizah. If she is regarded as a widow and she has no children she requires halizah before she can re-marry. As to halizah v. Deut. XXV. 5-10. and Glos.
(31) V. A.Z. 36a and 37a.
(32) I.e., the members of the court of justice.
(33) [B.B. 136a: and so here the date inserted for the Get is intended to make it effective from the time of the delivery thereof. For further notes v. Git. (Sonc. ed.) p. 136].
I.e., Raba deduces the rule that the plea of accident does not apply to divorce from the second clause of the Mishnah, cf. Git. 76b.

The husband's brother, who, if she was regarded as a widow (and not as divorced), would have to marry her or let her perform halizah.

A husband.

Certain persons who might be witnesses.

The husband's brother, who, if she was regarded as a widow (and not as divorced), would have to marry her or let her perform halizah.

Lit., 'that she should fall before' (the yabam).

The husband's brother, who, if she was regarded as a widow (and not as divorced), would have to marry her or let her perform halizah.

A husband.

Certain persons who might be witnesses.

The husband's brother, who, if she was regarded as a widow (and not as divorced), would have to marry her or let her perform halizah.

Lit., 'Its name is not come back" — the divorce, therefore, takes effect. This proves that force majeure is no plea in regard to Get.

I.e., an accident which is likely to occur, as the ferry being on the other side of the river.

Does not bar the divorce from becoming effective.

That if the ferry should be on the other side of the river and he could not get across and come into his town, it should be regarded as if he had arrived in the town and come back within the meaning of his condition, which would thus be regarded as not fulfilled, and the divorce would, consequently, not take effect.

He has himself to blame. The attempted deduction from the ferry case is therefore refuted.

Since the rule of Raba, that an accident is no bar to the effectiveness of the divorce, cannot be derived from any Mishnah or from the ferry case, it is attributed to himself that is to his own reasoning.

By ‘loose women’ are meant women who would not be particular about marrying again even if the validity of the divorce was not established.

The divorce should be effective.

That the divorce should not become effective because of the accident.

Talmud - Mas. Kethuboth 3a

sometimes [it may happen] that he was not held back by an accident, and she would think that he was held back by an accident and she would be tied, and sit. And on account of the loose women, because if you will say [that] it should not be a divorce, sometimes [it may happen] that he was held back by an accident and she would say that he was not held back by an accident and she would go and get married, and the result would be that the divorce was invalid and her children [from the second marriage] would be bastards. But is it possible that according to the law of the Bible it would not be a divorce and on account of ‘the chaste women’ and on account of the ‘loose women’ we should allow a married woman to the world? — Yes, every one who betroths in accordance with the sense of the Rabbis he betroths, and the Rabbis have annulled his betrothal. Said Rabina to R. Ashi: This might be well if he betrothed her with money, [but if] he betrothed [her] by act of marriage, what can one say [then]? — The Rabbis have made his act of marriage non-marital.

Some, [however,] say that he was not held back by an accident, and she would think that he was held back by an accident and she would be tied, and sit. And on account of the loose women, because if you will say [that] it should not be a divorce, sometimes [it may happen] that he was held back by an accident and she would say that he was not held back by an accident and she would go and get married, and the result would be that the divorce was invalid and her children [from the second marriage] would be bastards. But is it possible that according to the law of the Bible it would not be a divorce and on account of ‘the chaste women’ and on account of the ‘loose women’ we should allow a married woman to the world? — Yes, every one who betroths in accordance with the sense of the Rabbis he betroths, and the Rabbis have annulled his betrothal. Said Rabina to R. Ashi: This might be well if he betrothed her with money, [but if] he betrothed [her] by act of marriage, what can one say [then]? — The Rabbis have made his act of marriage non-marital.

Raba said: And so [also] with regard to divorce. Accordingly Raba holds [that the plea of accident applies to divorce. An objection was raised: 'Behold this is thy bill of divorce if I come not [back] from now [and] until twelve months,' and he died within the twelve months, there is no divorce. [Now] if he dies there is no divorce, but if he became ill there would be a divorce! — Indeed I might say [unto thee] that if he became ill there would be no divorce either, and [the Mishnah] lets us hear just this [rule]: that there is no divorce after death. [That] there is no divorce after death a previous Mishnah teaches! — Perhaps [that is] to exclude from that of our teachers. Come and hear: From now if I have not come [back] from now [and] until twelve months, and he died within the twelve months it is a divorce. Would not the same rule apply if he became ill? No, Only if he died, because it was not pleasing to him that she should become subject to the yabam. Come and hear: A certain [man] said unto them: ‘If I do not come [back] from now [and] until thirty days it shall be a divorce.’ He came [back] at the end of thirty days but the ferry stopped him. And he said unto them, ‘Look, I have come [back]; look, I have come [back]!’ And Samuel said: This is not regarded as having come back! — An accident which is frequent is different, for since he ought to have stipulated it and he did not stipulate it, he injured himself.

R. Samuel b. Isaac said: They have only taught since the institution of Ezra and after, [according to which] the courts of justice sit only on the second day and on the fifth day [of the week]. But before the institution of Ezra, when the courts of justice sat every day, a woman could be married on any day. Before the institution of Ezra, what was there was that... — He means it thus: If there are courts of justice that sit now as before the institution of Ezra, a woman may be married on any day. But what of shakedu? [We suppose] that he had already taken the trouble.

(1) Lit. ‘that he was not forced.’ The divorce would therefore certainly be effective.
(2) And the divorce would, in her view, not take effect (if the rule would have been that an accident is a bar to the divorce becoming effective).
(3) Lit., ‘and she will be tied’. I.e., she would regard herself as tied to her absent husband and would not marry again. An ‘agunah is a woman tied to an absent husband’. The Rabbis endeavoured to prevent the state of ‘agunah; v. Git. 33a.
(4) And the divorce would not take effect.
(5) The use of ‘she would say’ here in contradistinction to ‘she would think’ in the case of the ‘chaste women’ is no doubt intentional. She (the loose woman) would say this, although she would not think so in her heart.
(6) In which case the divorce would become effective.
(7) Lit ‘and it is found.’
(8) If the divorce should not become effective because of an accident.
(9) The children of a married woman and a man who is not her husband are bastards, mamzerim; v. Yeb. 49a. This would be the case if the divorce would not become effective because of an accident and the first husband should turn up and say that he was held back by an accident. To prevent such evil results Raba established the rule that an accident should not be a bar to the divorce taking effect.
(10) Lit., ‘and is there anything?’
(11) [The Plea of force majeure as recognized in the Bible, v. Deut. XXII, 26.]
(12) Lit., ‘the wife of a man.’
(13) I.e., to marry another man.
(14) Lit., ‘he sanctifies.’ ‘he consecrates.’ To sanctify, to consecrate a woman to oneself means to marry her. Kiddushin ‘sanctifications’ means ‘betrothal,’ ‘marriage.’ I.e. every one who marries a woman marries her on the basis that the marriage is sanctioned by the law of the Rabbis.
(15) Lit., ‘and the Rabbis have caused the betrothal to be released from him,’ that is retrospectively. As the marriage is subject to the sanction of the Rabbis, the Rabbis can, if the necessity arises, annul the marriage. Such a necessity has arisen when an accident would be a bar to the divorce becoming effective.
(16) The answer just given might be regarded as satisfactory.
(17) V. Kid. 2a.
(18) I.e., have declared it to be, or regard it.
(19) Lit ‘an intercourse of prostitution.’ The Rabbis have in either case the power to annul the marriage. The argument that Raba arrived at his views through his own reasoning stands.
(20) Lit., ‘There are some who say.’
(21) According to this version. Raba holds that an accident is a bar to the divorce becoming effective.
(22) From here till ‘he injured himself’ the text is practically identical with the corresponding text on folio 2b. There are only one or two omissions and one or two slight variations. For interpretation, v. notes on the translation of 2b. The difference of the arguments is obvious.
(23) That a maiden marries on the fourth day of the week.
(24) V. B.K. 82a.
Lit., ‘are fixed.

Even a maiden.

That is past and does not matter!

Every day.

Lit., ‘we require they watched”’. V. supra 2a.

The bridegroom.

Of preparing for the wedding.

Talmud - Mas. Kethuboth 3b

What is [the reference to] shakedu? [For] it has been taught: Why did they say that a maiden is married on the fourth day? ‘Because if he had a claim as to virginity he could go early [next morning] to the court of justice. But let her be married on the first day in the week and if he had a claim as to virginity he could go early [on the morning of the second day in the week] to the court of justice? — The Sages watched over the interests of the daughters of Israel so that [the man] should prepare for the [wedding-]feast three days, the first day in the week, and the second day in the week, and the third day in the week, and on the fourth day he marries her. And from [the time of] danger and onwards the people made it a custom to marry on the third day and the Sages did not interfere with them. And on the second day [of the week] he shall not marry; and if on account of the constraint1 it is allowed. And one separates the bridegroom from the bride on the nights of Sabbath at the beginning,2 because he makes a wound.3

What [was the] danger? If I say that they4 said, ‘a maiden that gets married on the fourth day [of the week] shall be killed’, [then how state] ‘they made it a custom’? We should abolish it entirely! — Said Rabbah: [That] they said, ‘a maiden that gets married on the fourth day [of the week] shall have the first sexual intercourse with the prefect.5 [You call] this danger? [Surely] this [is a case of] constraint!6 — Because there are chaste women who would rather surrender themselves to death and [thus] come to danger. But let one expound to them7 that [in a case of] constraint [it] is allowed?8 — There are loose women9 and there are also priestesses.10 But [then] let one abolish it?11 A decree12 is likely to cease, and [therefore] we do not abolish an ordinance of the Rabbis on account of a decree. If so, on the third day he [the prefect] would also come and have intercourse [with the bride]? — Out of doubt he does not move himself.13

[It is stated above:] ‘And on the second day [of the week] he shall not marry; and if on account of the constraint it is allowed.’ What constraint [is referred to]? Shall I say [that it is] that which we have said?14 There,15 one calls it ‘danger’ ‘and here, one calls it [mere] ‘constraint’! And further, there [it states], ‘they made it a custom’, [whilst] here, ‘it is allowed’!16 — Said Raba: [it is that] they say ‘a general has come to town.17 In what case? If he comes and passes by,18 let it be delayed!19 — It is not necessary [to state this but] that he came and stayed. Let him, [then], marry on the third day [of the week]!20 — His21 vanguard arrived on the third day. And if you wish I may say: What is [the meaning of] ‘on account of the constraint’? As it has been taught: If his bread was baked and his meat prepared and his wine mixed and the father of the bridegroom or the mother of the bride died,24 they bring the dead [person] into a room and the bridegroom and the bride into the bridal chamber,25

Papa said [that] R. Hisda said: They taught [this] only when water had [already] been put on the meat, but if water had not [yet] been put on the meat, it is to be sold. Raba said: And in a city, although water had been put on the meat, it is sold.\(^8\) R. Papa said: And in a village, although water had not been put on the meat, it is not sold.\(^9\) But where [then] will you find [the rule] of R. Hisda [to apply]? Said R. Ashi: For instance, [in] Matha Mehasia,\(^10\) which is neither a city nor a village.\(^11\)

It has been taught according to R. Hisda: If his bread was baked and his meat prepared and his wine mixed and water had been put on the meat and the father of the bridgroom or the mother of the bride died, they bring the dead [person] into a room and the bridgroom and the bride into the bridal chamber, and he performs the dutiful marital act and [then] separates [himself from her]. And [then] he keeps the seven days of the [wedding-feast] and after that he keeps the seven days of mourning. And all these days he sleeps among the men and she sleeps among the women. And so [also] if his wife became menstruous does he sleep among the men and she sleeps among the women. And they do not withhold ornaments from the bride all the thirty days. In any case he must not perform the [first] marital act on the eve of Sabbath or in the night following the Sabbath.

The Master said [above]: ‘He sleeps among the men and she sleeps among the women.’ This supports R. Johanan, for R. Johanan said: Although they said [that] there is no mourning on a festival, yet matters of privacy he keeps.\(^{12}\) R. Joseph the son of Raba lectured in the name of Raba: They taught\(^{13}\) only if he had yet no intercourse [with her],\(^{14}\) but if he had [already] intercourse, his wife may sleep with him.\(^{15}\) But here we deal with a case when he had intercourse, and still it teaches [that] he sleeps among the men and she sleeps among the women? — When did he\(^{16}\) say [it]? With regard to his wife becoming menstruous. But it says. ‘And so [also if his wife became menstruous]

(16) Raba

(17) And this would seem to show that there is no difference between the time of mourning and the period of menstruation.

Talmud - Mas. Kethuboth 4b

— Thus he means to say: And so [also], if his wife became menstrual and he had not yet had intercourse [with her] he sleeps among the men and she sleeps among the women. Is this [then] to say that he treats mourning more lightly than menstruation? Surely. R. Isaac the son of Hanina said that R. Huna said: All kinds of work which a wife performs for her husband, a menstruant may perform for her husband, except the mixing of the cup and the making of the bed and the washing of his face, his hands and his feet; while with regard to mourning it has been taught: Although they said: No man has a right to force his wife to paint [her eyes] or rouge [her face], in truth they said: She mixes him the cup and she makes him the bed and she washes his face, his hands and his feet? — [This is] not difficult; here [it speaks] of his mourning, there [it speaks] of her mourning. But it says: ‘The father of the bridegroom or the mother of the bride’? — This refers to the rest. But is there a difference between his mourning and her mourning? Surely it has been taught: If a man's father-in-law or mother-in-law died, he cannot force his wife to paint [her eyes] and to rouge [her face], but he lowers his bed and keeps mourning with her. And so [also] if a woman's father-in-law or mother-in-law died she is not allowed to paint [her eyes] and to rouge [her face], but she lowers her bed and keeps mourning with him! — Teach with reference to his mourning ‘he sleeps among the men and his wife sleeps among the women’. But it says: ‘And so [also]’? — This refers to painting and rouging. But it says ‘with him’! Does this not mean, with him in one bed? — No, [it means] with him in one house, and as R. Ashi said to his son Hyya: In her presence keep mourning, in her absence do not keep mourning. R. Ashi said: Can you compare this mourning with ordinary mourning? Ordinary mourning is strict and one would not deal lightly with it. [But] this mourning, since the Rabbis were lenient [about it], one might deal lightly with it. What is the leniency? Shall I say, because it says he performs the dutiful act of marriage and separates [himself from her]? That is because the mourning has not rested upon him yet; [namely] if according to R. Eliezer, [the mourning does not begin] until the body has been taken out of the house, and if according to R. Joshua, [the mourning does not begin] until the golel has been closed! — But [the leniency is this,] because it says: He keeps [first] the seven days of the wedding-feast and after that he keeps the seven days of mourning.
The Master said: ‘In any case he must not perform the [first] marital act on the eve of Sabbath or in the night following the Sabbath. It is right [that he may not perform it] on the eve of Sabbath, because of a wound. But in the night following the Sabbath, why not? — Said R. Zera:

Talmud - Mas. Kethuboth 5a
Because of accounts.\(^1\) Said Abaye to him: And are accounts of a religious nature forbidden?\(^2\) Surely, R. Hisda and R. Hamnuna both said: Accounts of a religious nature, one is allowed to calculate them on Sabbath; and R. Eleazar said: One may assign charity to the poor on Sabbath; and R. Jacob said [that] R. Johanan said: One may go to synagogues and to schoolhouses to watch over public affairs\(^3\) on Sabbath; and R. Jacob the son of Idi said [that] R. Johanan said: One may do any work to save a life\(^4\) on Sabbath; and R. Samuel the son of Nahmani said [that] R. Jonathan said: One may go to theatres and circuses\(^5\) to watch over public affairs on Sabbath; and [a scholar] of the school of Menashia taught: One may negotiate about the girls to be betrothed on Sabbath\(^6\) and about a boy to teach him the book\(^7\) and to teach him a trade? — But, said R. Zera, it has been prohibited\(^8\) lest he might slaughter a fowl.\(^9\) Said Abaye to him: But if this were so, then the Day of Atonement which fell on the second day of the week should be postponed\(^10\) for fear\(^11\) lest he might slaughter a fowl? — There,\(^12\) that [he has to prepare only] for himself he is not troubled [so much],\(^13\) but here,\(^14\) that [he has to prepare] for others,\(^15\) he is troubled.\(^16\) Or: there, he has an interval,\(^17\) [but] here, he has no interval.\(^18\) Now that you have come so far,\(^19\) the eve of Sabbath\(^20\) also is prohibited\(^21\) for fear lest he might slaughter a fowl.\(^22\)

The question was asked: \(^{24}\) [Does the Mishnah mean:] A maiden is married on the fourth day [of the week], and the intercourse takes place on the fourth day, and we are not afraid that he might be pacified?\(^25\) Or perhaps [the meaning is] a maiden is married on the fourth day [of the week], and the intercourse takes place on the fifth day\(^26\) because we are afraid that he might be pacified? — Come and hear: Bar-Kappara taught: A maiden is married on the fourth day [of the week] and the intercourse takes place on the fifth day\(^26\) because on it [the fifth day] the blessing for the fishes was pronounced.\(^27\) A widow is married on the fifth day [of the week] and the intercourse takes place on the sixth day\(^26\) because on it [the sixth day] was pronounced the blessing for man.\(^29\) [We thus see that] the reason is on account of the blessing, but as to [his] being pacified we are not afraid. If so,\(^30\) [in the case of] a widow also the intercourse should take place on the fifth day [of the week], because on it [the fifth day] was pronounced the blessing for the fishes? — The blessing for man is better for him.\(^32\) Or on account of ‘they have watched,’\(^33\) for it has been taught: Why did they say [that] a widow is married on the fifth day [of the week] and the intercourse takes place on the sixth day? Because, if you will say that the intercourse should take place on the fifth day, in the morning\(^35\) he will rise and go to his work;\(^36\) therefore the Sages watched over the welfare\(^37\) of the daughters of Israel that he should rejoice with her\(^38\) three days, [namely] on the fifth day of the week,\(^39\) on the eve of Sabbath,\(^40\) and [on] Sabbath,\(^41\) What is the difference between ‘the blessing’ and ‘they have watched’?\(^42\) The difference is this: \(^{43}\) [in the case of] a man of leisure,\(^44\) or [in the case] when a festival falls on the eve of Sabbath,\(^45\) Bar-Kappara expounded: The work of the righteous\(^46\) is greater than the work\(^47\) of heaven and earth, for in [regard to] the creation of heaven and earth it is written, Yea, My hand hath laid the foundation, of the earth, and My right hand hath spread out the heavens,\(^48\) while in [regard to] the work of the hands of the righteous it is written, The place which Thou hast made for Thee to dwell in, O Lord, the sanctuary, O Lord, which Thy hands have established.\(^49\) Replied\(^50\) one Babylonian, and R. Hiyya [was] his name: [It is written.] And the dry land his hands formed\(^51\) — It is [to be] written, ‘His hand’.\(^52\) But it is written, they formed?\(^53\) — Said R. Nahman b. Isaac: ‘His fingers formed,’\(^54\) as it is written. When I behold Thy heavens, the work of Thy fingers, the moon and the stars which Thou hast established.\(^55\)

An objection was raised: [It is written.] The heavens declare the glory of God, and the work of His hands the firmament shows?\(^56\) — Thus he said:\(^57\) The handiwork\(^58\) of the righteous, who shews [it]?\(^59\) The firmament. And what is it? Rain.\(^60\) Bar-Kappara [also] expounded: What [is the meaning of what] is written. And thou shalt have a peg among thy implements?61 Do not read,62 thy implements,63 but ‘upon thy ear’,64 [this means to say] that if a man hears an unworthy thing65

(1) If he will consummate the marriage in the night following the Sabbath he will give a dinner in the evening and he will make accounts (in his mind) on Sabbath as to the cost of that festive meal.
(2) I.e., is it forbidden to make calculations for a religious purpose on Sabbath?
(3) Lit., ‘the affairs of many’.
(4) Lit., ‘one removes a person’ from under debris. The meaning is: One may do any work on Sabbath to save a life.
(5) Theatres and circuses were also places of general assemblies. In the same way public meetings were also held in synagogues and schoolhouses.
(6) I.e., one may negotiate the betrothalth of them on Sabbath.
(7) I.e., the book, the Bible.
(8) Lit., ‘a preventive measure’. To have the first intercourse in the night following the Sabbath.
(9) Lit ‘the child of a fowl’, that is a young fowl. There is also the reading יִרְדַּךְ ‘on it’ i.e., on Sabbath for יָרְדַּךְ. He would be so busy thinking of the festive meal on Sabbath night that he might forget that it was Sabbath and slaughter a fowl for the dinner in the evening.
(10) For one day; v. Rashi.
(11) ‘As a preventive measure’.
(12) On Sabbath, since he would be busy thinking of the preparations for the meal on Sunday, which would be the eve of the Day of Atonement. On the eve of the Day of Atonement it is a religious duty to have a festive meal.
(13) In the case of the Day of Atonement.
(14) And he will not forget that it is Sabbath and he will not slaughter a fowl on Sabbath.
(15) In the case of the wedding-feast on Sabbath night.
(16) For the guests of the evening.
(17) And he might forget that it is Sabbath and he might slaughter a fowl on Sabbath.
(18) Sabbath night and Sunday morning. He does not have the important meal before midday or later on the day of the eve of the Atonement Day.
(19) The wedding-dinner would take place on Sabbath night as soon as Sabbath is out.
(20) To this result, namely that he must not perform the first intercourse in the night following the Sabbath because he might profane the Sabbath by slaughtering a fowl on Sabbath.
(21) Friday night.
(22) To have the first intercourse.
(23) On Friday evening, after Sabbath had already begun.
(24) Lit ‘it was asked by them’.
(25) Lit ‘cooling off to the (his) mind.’ That is, if he has intercourse on Wednesday and he has reason to complain as to virginity, his anger might cool off by Thursday morning and he might not go on Thursday to the court of justice; v. supra 2a.
(26) I.e., Wednesday evening, which belongs to the fifth day.
(28) Thursday evening. v. n. 13.
(30) If the reason is on account of the blessing.
(31) It means this: If the reason is the blessing, why should not intercourse, in the case of a widow, take place on the same day as the marriage, namely on the fifth day? And on the fifth day there was the blessing for the fishes. And if that blessing is good enough for a maiden it should be good enough for a widow.
(32) For Bar Kappara. He considered the blessing for man a stronger reason. In the case of a maiden it is different, as, if her intercourse should take place on Friday, we should be afraid that he might be appeased by Monday, the first court-day after Friday. ‘Therefore the blessing for the fishes has to suffice in the case of the maiden.
(33) Shakedu, v. supra pp. 2 and 8. The ordinance that in the case of a widow the intercourse should take place on Friday was made in the interests of the daughters of Israel.
(34) The Sages.
(35) The next morning. In case of a widow the marriage festivities last only one day. V. infra 7a bottom.
Lit., ‘he rises unto his trade (work) and goes his way. That is, he walks out of the house and leaves the whole wedding atmosphere behind him. This had to be prevented.

Lit., ‘ordinance (for the welfare).’

With the widow-bride.

The day of the marriage.

Friday, the day of the intercourse.

The religious day of rest.

What is the difference between these two reasons?

Lit., ‘there is between them.’

Lit., ‘an idle man.’ ‘They have watched’ would not apply to a man of leisure, as he need not go to work next day. But the intercourse would have to take place on Friday if the reason was ‘the blessing’.

In which case Friday is a religious day of rest, and he would not go to work. But the reason of ‘the blessing’ would still operate for intercourse on Friday.

Pious men.

The creation.

Isa. XLVIII, 13. There ‘My hand’ is written.

Ex. XV, 17. In regard to the sanctuary, which is the work of the hands of pious men, ‘Thy hands’ is written.

I.e., objected.

Ps XCV, 5.

[The kethib in some texts is וָנָּב (‘his hand’).]

[In the plural. so that the subject ‘hand’ must also be in the plural.]

‘Fingers’ is implied as subject.

Ps. VIII, 4.

Ps. XIX, 2. [Thus we have ‘hands’ written also in connection with creation.]

Thus the Psalmist meant.

Lit., ‘the work of their hands.’

Who tells them, announces them?

Rain comes because the pious pray for it. The handiwork of the righteous is called the ‘work of His hands’, because in the rain the work of God and the work of the righteous meet. The rain is the work of God, but it comes as the result of the good deeds of the pious, whose prayers God fulfills.

Deut. XXIII, 14.

[In the sense of ‘render’.]

From וָנָּב azayn ‘implement, tool’.

As if from וָנָּב ozen ‘ear’.

Lit ‘a thing (or, a word) that is not worthy’, not fit to be heard.

Talmud - Mas. Kethuboth 5b

he shall plug his finger into his ears. And this is the same that R. Eleazar said: Why do the fingers of man resemble pegs? Why? Shall I say because they are divided? [Surely] each one has been made for its own purpose! For a Master said: This one [is used for measuring] the span; this one [is used for defining] the cubit measure; this one [is used for taking a fistful of the meal-offering]; this one [is used for service with] the thumb! — But [the question is] why are the fingers pointed like pegs? [The reason is] that if a man hears an unworthy thing he shall plug his fingers into his ears. [A member] of the school of R. Ishmael taught: Why is the whole ear hard and the ear-lap soft? [So] that if a man hears an unworthy thing he shall bend the ear-lap into it.

Our Rabbis taught: A man shall not let his ears hear idle things, because they are burnt first of all the organs.

The question was asked: Is it allowed to perform the first marital act on Sabbath? Is the blood
[in the womb] stored up,\(^{21}\) or is it the result of a wound?\(^{22}\) And if you will say\(^{23}\) [that] the blood is stored up [in the womb, then the question arises:] is he concerned about the blood,\(^{24}\) and it is allowed: or is he concerned with the opening,\(^{25}\) and it is forbidden?\(^{26}\) And if you will say [that] he is concerned with the blood and the opening comes of itself, [then the question arises:] Is the halachah\(^{27}\) according to R. Simeon who says: A thing which is not intended\(^{28}\) is allowed; or is the halachah according to R. Judah who says: A thing which is not intended is forbidden?\(^{29}\) And if you will say [that] the halachah is according to R. Judah [then the question arises], does he do damage in regard to the opening, or does he improve in regard to the opening?\(^{30}\) Some say:\(^{31}\) And if you will say that the blood is the result of a wound [then the question arises], is he concerned about the blood and it is forbidden,\(^{32}\) or is he concerned with his own pleasure, and it is allowed? And if you will say [that] he is concerned with his own pleasure and the blood comes out of itself,\(^{33}\) [then the question arises] is the halachah according to R. Judah or is the halachah according to R. Simeon? And if you will say [that] the halachah is according to R. Judah, [then the question arises,] does he do damage by [making] the wound, or does he improve by [making] the wound? And if you will say [that] he does damage by [making] the wound, [then the question arises,] with regard to one who does damage, is the halachah according to R. Judah,

\(^{1}\) The finger is pointed like a peg.

\(^{2}\) Lit., ‘what is the reason?’ I.e., what is the meaning of the question? With regard to what are the fingers of man like pegs?

in the floor, although, as a matter of fact, such a rut is made as the unavoidable result of pushing the couch.

(29) R. Judah's view is opposed to that of R. Simeon; v. n. 4.

(30) Is the making of the opening considered to be to the advantage or disadvantage of the woman? If it is to her disadvantage it would be allowed even according to R. Judah. [Based on the principle that an act of damage does not constitute labour in regard to Sabbath. V. Shab. 106a.]

(31) Lit., 'there are who say', that the questions were with regard to the assumption that the blood is the result of a wound.

(33) The coming of the blood is therefore an unintended but unavoidable result of an act, the intended object of which is the pleasure.

Talmud - Mas. Kethuboth 6a

or is the law according to R. Simeon? In the school of Rab they said: Rab allowed and Samuel forbade. In Nehardea they said: Rab forbade and Samuel allowed. Said R. Nahman b. Isaac: And your [mnemotechnical] sign [is]: These make it lenient for themselves, and these make it lenient for themselves. But does Rab allow it? Surely R. Shimi b. Hezekiah said in the name of Rab: [As regards] that stopper of the brewing boiler, it is forbidden to squeeze it in on a festival day! — In that [case] even R. Simeon admits [that it is forbidden], for Abaye and Raba, both of them say: R. Simeon admits [that it is forbidden] in [a case of] ‘Let his head be cut off, and let him not die!’ [But] R. Hiyya the son of Ashi said [that] Rab said: The halachah is according to R. Judah, and R. Hanan the son of Ammi [said that] Samuel said: The halachah is according to R. Simeon. And R. Hiyya the son of Abin taught it without [naming the] men: Rab said [that] the halachah is according to R. Judah, and Samuel said [that] the halachah is according to R. Simeon? — Still, Rab holds like R. Judah, [but] according to that version that says, ‘the blood is stored up [in the womb],’ he does damage in regard to the opening, [and] according to that version that says, ‘the blood is the result of a wound,’ he does damage in [making] the wound.

R. Hisda objected: If a girl, whose period to see [blood] had not arrived yet, got married, Beth Shammai say: One gives her four nights, and the disciples of Hillel say: Until the wound is healed up. If her period to see [blood] had arrived and she married, Beth Shammai say: One gives her the first night, and Beth Hillel say: Until the night following the Sabbath [one gives her] four nights.

(1) According to R. Simeon he who does damage by making a wound had to bring a sin-offering; v. Shab. 106a.
(2) In Sura. Before the words ‘in the school of Rab’, some texts have the word ‘it has been said (that)’.
(3) To have the first intercourse on Sabbath.
(4) The place of Samuel.
(5) In Sura they said that Rab allowed it, and in Nehardea they said that Samuel allowed it.
(6) Into the bottle. The stopper is made of soft material, and, if it is squeezed, the liquid absorbed in the material would come out.
(7) This shows that Rab, like R. Judah, holds that a permitted action which results in a prohibited action, though the latter was not intended, is forbidden; v. p. 19, on. 4 and 5.
(8) Of the stopper in the brewing bottle.
(9) ‘Let his head be cut off, and let him not die!’ is a dialectic term for an absolutely unavoidable result of an act. V. Jast., s.v. פָּקַד. In such a case R. Simeon admits that the act leading to the forbidden act is prohibited. This applies to the stopper. Intercourse, however, is different; v. infra 6b.
(10) V. p. 19. n. 5.
(11) V. p. 19. n. 4.
(12) I.e., without naming the authorities.
(13) V. supra p. 19, n. 6.
(14) Lit., ‘time’.
Lit., ‘the house’, i.e., the school, of Shammai. (15) In which she can have intercourse with her husband.

(16) The blood that comes out is attributed to the wound and not to menstruation. Ordinarily, after the first intercourse further intercourse is forbidden until the coming out of blood, i.e. menstruation, is over. But in this case, in which the young bride had never yet had any menstruation, it is assumed that the blood is not due to menstruation but to the wound caused by the intercourse. According to Beth Shammai this assumption holds good for four nights, and according to Beth Hillel it holds good ‘until the wound is healed up.’ As to the definition of this phrase, v. Nid. 64b. V. also Nid. 65b, where it is finally decided that after the first coition no further intercourse must take place until the flowing of blood has stopped, even in the case of a young bride who had not yet had any menstruation. V. also Eben ha-‘Ezer, 63, and Yoreh De’ah, 193.

(17) But she had in fact not yet seen blood; that is, she had the maturity for it, but the maturity had not yet manifested itself. A girl has reached the period of maidenhood (puberty) when she is twelve years and one day old. When she is twelve and a half years old she has reached the state of bogereth, (v. Glos.), full maturity, womanhood. V. infra 39a.

(18) He may repeat the intercourse during the first night.

Talmud - Mas. Kethuboth 6b

[Now] does it not mean that if he had [yet] no intercourse [with his wife] he may have intercourse [with her] even on Sabbath? — Said Raba: No, except Sabbath. Said Abaye to him: But it says, ‘until the night following the Sabbath [one gives her] four nights?’ — Only, said Raba, when he already had intercourse [with her]. If [it were, as you say,] after he already had intercourse, what does he let us hear? — He lets us hear that it is allowed to have intercourse on Sabbath, as that [statement] of Samuel [teaches], for Samuel said: One may enter into a narrow opening on Sabbath, although he causes pebbles to break loose.

R. Joseph objected: A bridegroom is free from the reading of Shema in the first night until the night following the Sabbath, if he has not performed [yet] an act. Is it not because he is anxious to perform the marital act? — Said Abaye to him: No; he is anxious because he has not had intercourse. Said Raba to him: And on account of anxiety [only] he is free [from reading Shema’]? If this were so, then [if] his ship sank in the sea, he would also be free [from the reading of Shema’]! And should you say [that] it is really so, surely, R. Abba b. Zabda said [that] Rab said: A mourner is bound to observe all the precepts that are stated in the Torah except [that] of the Tefillin because it is said with regard to them an ornament. — But, said Raba, this is a dispute of Tannaim, for one [Baraitha] teaches: If he did not do an act [of coition] in the first [night], he is free [from reading Shema’] also in the second [night]; in the second [night], he is free [from reading Shema’] also in the third [night]. And another [Baraitha] teaches: In the first and second [night] he is free, [but in] the third [night] he is obliged [to read Shema’]. And Abaye [holds that] there also they differ with regard to anxiety. And these Tannaim [are] like those Tannaim, for it has been taught [in a Baraitha]: He who marries a maiden shall not perform the first intercourse on Sabbath, and the Sages allow [it]. Who are the Sages? Said Rabbah: It is R. Simeon, who says: A thing which is not intended is allowed. Said Abaye to him: But R. Simeon admits (that it is forbidden) in a case of ‘Let his head be cut off and let him not die!’ Said he to him: Not like those Babylonians who are not skilled in moving aside, but there are some who are skilled in moving aside. If so, why [give the reason of] ‘anxious’? — For one who is not skilled. [Then] let them say: One who is skilled is allowed [to perform the first intercourse on Sabbath], one who is not skilled is forbidden? — Most [people] are skilled. Said Raba the son of R. Hanan to Abaye: If this were so, then why [have] groomsmen, [why] [have] a sheet? — He [Abaye] said to him: There [the groomsmen and the sheet are necessary] perhaps he will see and destroy [the tokens of her virginity].

R. Ammi objected: He who pierces an abscess on Sabbath, if [in order to make an opening to it, he is guilty, but if [in order] to cause pus to come out of it Lit., ‘is it not?’ Having quoted the Mishnah from Nid. 64b, R. Hisda proceeds to ask his question, which is based on the last statement of Beth Hillel.

The question presumes that ‘until the night following the Sabbath (one gives her) four nights’ may also mean any one of the four nights, and thus the intercourse may be first consummated on the night of Sabbath, (v. Rashi). This shews that one may have the first intercourse on Sabbath.

Sabbath must, therefore, be included!

One night before Sabbath. The intercourse on Sabbath was thus not the first.

What new law does the Tanna teach us? Why should he (the husband) not be allowed to have intercourse on Sabbath?

Lit., ‘a narrow opening (or breach). one may enter into it on Sabbath.’

Lit , ‘and although.’

He may have, say the second intercourse on Sabbath, v. Rashi, ad loc.

The verses, Deut. VI, 4-9, XI, 13-21; Num. XV, 37-41 which are recited daily, morning and evening.

Following the marriage.

I.e the first intercourse. Mishnah Ber. 16.

That he is free from the reading of Shema’, even on Sabbath night.

Lit., ‘because he is anxious, because he wants to have intercourse.’ Being preoccupied with a duty (mizwah) he is free from another duty (mizwah).

[Before Sabbath, and forbidden to have it on Sabbath.]

Mental agitation, worry.

Cf. Ezek. XXIV, 17. [The reference being there to the Tefillin which Ezekiel was charged not to lay aside despite his mourning for his wife. V. M.K. 15a.] A mourner, though very much troubled, is nevertheless not free from observing the precepts. We thus see that anxiety does not exempt one from fulfilling the various religious commandments. And so in the case of the Mishnah quoted by R. Joseph it cannot be that the bridegroom is free from the reading of Shema’ only because of his anxiety.

With regard to the first intercourse on Sabbath.

Lit ‘this is (of) Tannaim.

The bridegroom.

After the marriage.

If he did not do an act in the second night either.

The third night (after the fourth day in the week) is Sabbath, and he is free from reading Shema’ as he is allowed to perform the marital act for the first time.

The teacher of this Baraitha holds that he is not allowed to perform it first on Sabbath, and therefore he is obliged to read Shema’.

In the Baraithas just quoted.

The Tannaim.

According to the first Baraitha his anxiety caused by the fact that he is not allowed to perform the act on Sabbath frees him from reading Shema’. And according to the second Baraitha this anxiety does not free him from reading Shema’. According to the first Baraitha the case of the mourner would be different. Since anxiety is no part of the mourning observances (Rashi. a.l.).

I.e., the dispute of the Tannaim just quoted by Raba is the same as the dispute of the Tannaim of the Baraitha to be quoted now.

Lit., ‘shall not have intercourse at the beginning.’

V. supra p. 19, n. 4.

V. supra p. 20, n. 8.

I.e., having intercourse with a virgin without causing a bleeding.

Thus no blood need come out, and ‘Let his head be cut off and let him not die!’ does not apply.

If the bridegroom is skilled in ‘moving sideways’.

He need not be anxious about the intercourse and should not be free from reading Shema’ on account of such anxiety.
Therefore the principle regarding ‘Let his head be cut off and let him not die!’ does not, as a rule, apply.

The groomsmen testify in case of need to the virginity of the bride. V. infra 12a. If the bridegroom will act in a manner that will cause no bleeding, the groomsmen will not be able to testify on the question of virginity.

It may happen that he will act in the normal manner and cause bleeding but he will destroy the tokens and maintain that the bride was not a virgin; for this reason the above mentioned provisions are necessary. Where however he moved aside and made a false charge as to her virginity, the bride can plead that she is still a virgin (Rashi).

To provide evidence of the virginity of the bride. Cf. Deut. XXII, 17.

It may happen that he will act in the normal manner and cause bleeding but he will destroy the tokens and maintain that the bride was not a virgin; for this reason the above mentioned provisions are necessary. Where however he moved aside and made a false charge as to her virginity, the bride can plead that she is still a virgin (Rashi).

— There it is stored up and is [entirely] loose, here it is stored up but is not [entirely] loose. R. Ammi allowed to have first intercourse on Sabbath. Said the Rabbis to him: But her kethubah is not written yet! — He said to them: Let her seize movable goods.12 R. Zebid permitted to have the first intercourse on Sabbath. Some say: R. Zebid himself had the first intercourse on Sabbath. Rab Judah allowed to have the first intercourse on a festival. R. Papi said in the name of Raba: You shall not say [that] on a festival it is allowed, but [that] on Sabbath it is forbidden. It is just as well allowed on Sabbath; only it happened so.

R. Papa said in the name of Raba: On a festival it is allowed, on Sabbath it is forbidden. Said R. Papi to R. Papa: What is your opinion? Since a wound has been permitted [on a festival] for a necessity, it has been permitted also when there is no necessity? If that were so, it should be permitted to put spices on coals on a festival, for since the kindling of fire has been allowed [on a festival] for a necessity, it should be allowed also when there is no necessity! Said he to him: Concerning this the Biblical verse said, save that which every man must eat, [this means] a thing which is useful for every man.

R. Aha, the son of Raba, said to R. Ashi: If this were So, then if a deer happened to come to the hands of a person on a festival, [shall we say that] since it is not of equal usefulness for every person, is it really so that it would be forbidden to kill it? Said he to him: I say, ‘a thing that is needful for every person,’ and a deer is needful for every person. R. Jacob, the son of Idi, said: R. Johanan gave a decision in Zaidan: It is forbidden to perform the first intercourse on Sabbath. — And is there an instructive decision for a prohibition? — Yes, we have learned in a Mishnah: The school of Hillel gave a decision regarding her that she should be a Nazirite yet another seven years. Or indeed it is as that which has been taught: If the cord of the spinal column is severed in its larger portion [the animal is trefa], [this is] the view of Rabbi. R. Jacob Says: Even if it is [only] perforated [the animal is trefa]. Rabbi gave a decision according to R. Jacob.

R. Huna said: The halachah is not as stated by R. Jacob. R. Nahman b. Isaac taught thus: R. Abbahu said: R. Ishmael b. Jacob, from Tyre asked R. Johanan in Zaidan, and I heard [it]: Is it allowed to have the first intercourse on Sabbath? And he said to him: It is forbidden. — And the law is: It is allowed to have the first intercourse on Sabbath.

R. Helbo said [that] R. Huna said [that] R. Abba, the son of Zabda, said [that] Rab said: A maiden as well as a widow requires a benediction. — But did R. Huna say so? Did not R. Huna say: A widow does not require a benediction? — It is not difficult. Here [it speaks] of a young man who marries a widow, there of a widower who marries a widow. And when a widower marries a widow [a benediction] is not required? Did not R. Nahman Say: Huna b. Nathan said to me: A Tanna taught: Whence [is it derived that] the benediction of the bridegrooms [has to be said] in the presence of ten [persons]? Because it is said, And he took ten men of the elders of the city, and said: ‘Sit ye down here’. And they sat down. And Boaz was a widower, who married a widow — What is [the meaning of the words] ‘she does not require a benediction’ which R. Huna said? She does not require a benediction during all the seven days. but on one day she requires a benediction. But that which has been taught: ‘The Sages were anxious for the welfare of the daughters of Israel, that he may rejoice with her three days’ — how is this to be understood? If [it speaks] of a young man, did you not say — seven; if of a widower, did you not say — one day? — If you wish, you may say [that it speaks] of a widower [and in this case] one day is for the benediction and three days are for rejoicing. And if you wish, you may say [that it speaks] of a young man [and in this case] seven [days] are for the benediction and three [days] for rejoicing.

(15) I.e., the making of a wound.
(16) To perfume the room after dinner; v. Ber. 43a.
(17) The meaning of the question of R. Papi to R. Papa is as follows: If a distinction is to be made, regarding the first intercourse, between Sabbath and a festival and it is to be held, as R. Papa holds in the name of Rab, that it is forbidden in Sabbath and allowed on a festival, then R. Papa must hold that, since certain work was allowed on a festival for a necessity, work should be allowed on a festival even when there is no necessity for it. It is, e.g. allowed to make a wound on a festival by slaughtering an animal for the need of food. It would, therefore, according to R. Papa, be allowed to make a wound (v. supra 3b, 4b, 5b) by performing the first intercourse on a festival, although there is no necessity for it, since the first intercourse can wait until after the festival. If this view were correct, then it should have been allowed to burn spices on coals on a festival, although spices are not a necessity, since the kindling of fire on a festival is allowed for a necessity. And the accepted view is that it is forbidden to put spices on coals on a festival. Consequently, if the first intercourse is forbidden on Sabbath it should be forbidden also on a festival, since it is not a necessity. R. Papa’s view is therefore wrong. Generally speaking, work that is forbidden on Sabbath is forbidden on a festival. There is an exception in the case of work necessary for preparing food. This is already indicated in Ex. XII, 16; v. Meg. 7b.

(21) Literally, ‘equal’, ‘like’, ‘worth’; a thing that is of equal worth for every one, namely, to eat, to do, to have.
(22) The sense of the answer is this: You cannot compare the first intercourse to spices. Spices are not of equal necessity for every person. As Rashi puts it, only people who are used to luxuries desire spices. But sexual intercourse, even the first act, is a human need, which applies to all people.

Indeed, he answers, a deer is good for every person, and therefore, it may be slaughtered on a festival.

Lit., ‘In what?’ ‘How?’

The benediction has to be said all the seven days following the marriage ceremony, and this implies rejoicing. That the benediction has to be said all the seven days in the case of the marriage of a young man, even if the bride is a widow, is inferred from the statement that in the case of the marriage of a widower and a widow it is not required to say the benediction all the seven days (Rashi).

Only on one day has the benediction to be said, and this apparently means rejoicing only on one day.

Talmud - Mas. Kethuboth 7b

An objection was raised: [It has been taught:] The benediction is said [at the celebration of the marriage] for a maiden seven [days] and for a widow one day. Is it not [to be understood that] even [in the case of] a widow who marries a young man [the benediction is said only on one day]? — No [only when the widow marries] a widower. But [if the widow marries] a young man, what [then]? Seven [days]? If that is so, let it be taught: The benediction is said for a maiden seven [days], and for a widow who marries a young man seven [days], and for a widow [who marries a widower] one day? — It taught a decided thing. That there is no maiden who has less than seven [days], and there is no widow who has less than one day. The [above] text [says]: R. Nahman said: Huna b. Nathan said to me: A Tanna taught: Whence [is it derived that] the benediction of the bridegrooms [has to be said] in the presence of ten [persons]? Because it is said, And he took ten men of the elders of the city, and said: ‘Sit ye down here’. But R. Abbahu said [that it is derived] from here: In assemblies bless ye God, the Lord, from the fountain of Israel. And how does R. Nahman expound this verse of R. Abbahu? — He requires it for the same purpose as has been set out in a Baraita: R. Meir used to say: Whence [can it be derived] that even embryos in the bowels of their mothers sang a song by the sea? Because it is said, In assemblies bless ye God, the Lord, from the fountain of Israel. And the other one? — If [that were] so, let the verse say, ‘from the womb.’ Why [does it say], ‘from the fountain’? [To show that it is] concerning the affairs of the fountain. And how does R. Abbahu expound that verse of R. Nahman? — He requires it for expounding: an Ammonite, and not an Ammonitess, a Moabite, and not a Moabitess. For if you would think [that the presence of the ten men was required] for [the saying of] the benediction, would it not have been sufficient if they had not been elders? And the other one? — If you would think [that the verse was to be used] for that exposition, would it not have been sufficient if there had not been ten [persons]? Yes, to make the matter public and as Samuel said to R. Hanna of Bagdath: Go out and bring me ten [persons] and I will say unto thee in their presence; If one assigns [property] to an embryo, it acquires it. But the law is: If one assigns [property] to an embryo, it does not acquire it.

The Rabbis taught: The benediction of the bridegrooms is said in the house of the bridegroom. R. Judah says: Also in the house of the betrothal it is said. Abaye said: And in [the province of] Judah they taught [the opinion of R. Judah] because [in the province of Judah] he is alone with her.

Another [Baraitha] teaches: The benediction of the bridegrooms is said in the house of the bridegrooms and the benediction of betrothal in the house of betrothal. [As to] the benediction of betrothal — what does one say? — Rabin b. R. Adda and Rabbah son of R. Adda both said in the name of Rab Judah: Blessed art Thou, O Lord our God, King of the Universe, who has sanctified us by his commandments and has commanded us concerning the forbidden relations and has forbidden unto us the betrothed and has allowed unto us the wedded through [the marriage] canopy and sanctification. R. Aha ‘the son of Raba, concludes it. in the name of Rab Judah, [with the words]: Blessed art Thou, O Lord, who sanctifies Israel through canopy and sanctification. He who does not seal [holds that] it is analogous to the blessing over fruits and to the benediction [said on performing] religious commandments. And he who seals [holds that] it is analogous to the kiddush.

Our Rabbis taught: The blessing of the bridegrooms is said in the presence of ten [persons] all the seven days. Rab Judah said: And that is only if new guests come. What does One say? — Rab Judah ‘and: ‘Blessed art Thou, O Lord our God, King of the Universe,

(1) The benediction has to be said during seven days, just as at the marriage of a young man and a maiden!
(2) I.e., it should have been taught.
(3) On the occasion of the marriage of a maiden.
(4) On the occasion of the marriage of a widow and a young man.
(5) On the occasion of the marriage of a widow and a widower.
(6) A definite thing.
(7) On the occasion of the marriage of every maiden the benediction is said during the seven days following the marriage.
(8) On the occasion of the marriage of a widow the benediction must be said at least on one day (the day of the marriage). Usually a widow marries a widower.
(9) V. supra 7a.
(10) Ps. LXVIII, 27. An ‘assembly’ consists of at least ten persons; v Sanh. 2a. The ‘fountain’ is regarded by R. Abbahu, Midrashically, as an allusion to the young wife. Cf. Prov. V, 18: Let thy fountain be blessed, and have joy of the wife of thy youth. V. also V, 15’ and Isa. LI, 1. The derivation of R. Abbahu from the verse in Psalms is this: When a marriage is celebrated and a new fountain of Israel is to enrich life, a benediction has to be said in the presence of ten persons.
I.e. ‘to what Midrashic use does R. Nahman put Ps. LXVIII, 27? (11)
Lit., ‘to what has been taught’. (12)
Lit., ‘said.’ (13)
Probably the song (Ex. XV) is meant. (14)
The Red Sea. (15)
The derivation is: Even those who were still in ‘the fountain’ of Israel sang a song unto the Lord. In vv. 23 and 26 R. Meir no doubt saw, Midrashically,. allusions to the crossing of the Red Sea. Cf. especially v. 26 with Ex. XV. 20, 21. (16)
R. Abbahu. How does he derive the idea of R. Meir just expounded, since he uses the verse in Ps. LXVIII for another purpose (benediction at the marriage in the presence of ten persons)? (17)
I.e., the verse should have read. (18)
‘From the womb’ would indicate the presence of ‘fruit of the womb’, of an embryo. Cf. e.g., Gen. XXX, 2. (19)
‘Fountain’ does not refer to present pregnancy, to an embryo, but to the source of life in the woman without implying that there is life in it now. Therefore we can also speak of the ‘fountain’ in the maiden. (20)
Marriage is concerned very largely with ‘the affairs of the fountain. ‘ R. Abbahu, therefore, prefers to use the verse in Ps. LXVIII for his Midrashic exposition (benediction at the marriage in the presence of ten persons). (21)
Ruth IV, 2. (22)
In Deut. XXIII, 4, it is said, An Ammonite or a Moabite shall not enter into the assembly of the Lord. The presence of ten elders was required for the interpretation that the prohibition to enter into the assembly of the Lord, that is, to be admitted into the community of Israel, applied only to Ammonite and Moabite men and not to Ammonite or Moabite women. This interpretation made the law clear, and thus Boaz could marry Ruth the Moabitess. (23)
That the presence of elders was necessary shews that the interpreting and establishing of a law was required. (24)
R. Nahman. How will he get that exposition if he uses the verse for a different purpose? (25)
If the presence of the elders was required for establishing a law, then there was no need to have ten elders. A smaller number of elders would also have been sufficient. It is different, according to R. Nahman, if the presence of the ten persons was required for saying the benediction at the marriage of Boaz and Ruth. Ten persons form a congregation; v. supra. (26)
This is the view of R. Abbahu. (27)

who has created all things to his glory, and the Creator of man, and who has created man in his image. In the image of the likeness of his form, and has prepared unto him out of himself a building forever. Blessed art thou, O Lord, Creator of man. May the barren greatly rejoice and exult when her children will be gathered in her midst in joy. Blessed art Thou, O Lord, who maketh Zion joyful through her children. Mayest Thou make the loved companions greatly to rejoice, even as of old Thou didst gladden Thy creature in the Garden of Eden. Blessed art Thou, O Lord, who maketh bridegroom and bride to rejoice. Blessed art Thou, O Lord our King, God of the universe, who has created joy and gladness, bridegroom and bride, rejoicing, song, mirth, and delight, love, and brotherhood, and peace, and friendship. Speedily, O Lord our God, may be heard in the cities of Judah, and in the streets of Jerusalem, the voice of joy and the voice of gladness, the voice of the bridegroom and the voice of the bride, the voice of the singing of bridegrooms from their canopies and of youths from their feasts of song. Blessed art Thou, O Lord, who maketh the bridegroom to rejoice with the bride.

Levi came to the house of Rabbi to the wedding-feast of R. Simeon his son and said five benedictions. R. Assi came to the house of R. Ashi to the wedding-feast of Mar his son and said six benedictions. Does it mean to say that they differ in this: that one holds that there was one formation, and the other holds that there were two formations? — No. All agree that there was [only] one formation, [but they differ in this:] one holds [that] we go according to the intention, and the other holds [that] we go according to the fact, as that [statement] of Rab Judah [who] asked: It is written, And God created man in his own image, and it is written, Male and female created He them. How is this [to be understood]? [In this way:] In the beginning it was the intention of God to create two [human beings], and in the end [only] one [human being] was created.

R. Ashi came to the house of R. Kahana. The first day he said all the benedictions. From then and further on, if there were new guests he said all the benedictions, but if not [he declared] it to be merely a continuance of the same joy, in which case one says [only] the benedictions ‘in whose dwelling there is joy” and ‘who has created’. From the seventh day to the thirtieth day, whether he said to them “because of the wedding” or whether he did not say to them ‘because of the wedding’, one says the benediction ‘in whose dwelling there is joy”. From then and further on, if he said to them ‘because of the wedding’ he says the benediction ‘in whose dwelling there is joy’, but not otherwise.

And if he says to them ‘because of the wedding’, until when [is this benediction said]? Said R. Papi in the name of Raba: Twelve months [forming] a year. And at first from when? Said R. Papa: From the time that they put barley into the mortar. But this is not so? Did not R. Papa busy himself for his son Abba Mar and say the benediction from the time of the betrothal? — It was different [in the case of] A. Papa, because he took the trouble of preparing everything for the wedding. Rabina busied himself for his son in the house of R. Habiba and said the benediction from the time of the betrothal. He said: I am sure with regard to the betrothal. them that they will not retract [the betrothal]. But the matter was not successful and they did retract. R. Tahlifa, son of the West, came to Babylon [and] said six long benedictions. But the law is not according to him. R. Habiba came into the house of a circumcision and said the benediction ‘in whose dwelling there is joy.’ But the law is not according to him, since they are distressed because the child has pain.

R. Nahman said [that] Rab said: Bridegrooms are of the number, and mourners are not of the number. An objection was raised: Bridegrooms and mourners are of the number? — You ask [from] a Baraitha against Rab? Rab is a Tanna and differs! It has been said: R. Isaac said [that] R. Johanan said: Bridegrooms are of the number, and mourners are not of the number. An objection was raised: Bridegrooms and mourners are of the number?

(1) It is common usage to translate in the Prayer books the perfect verb ‘has’ in the benediction by ‘hast’ (created, etc.).
(2) Lit ‘all’.
(3) I.e., also the benediction of (‘the Creator of man’). The words, ‘the Creator of man’ are preceded by the words, ‘Blessed art Thou, O Lord our God, King of the universe,’ as in the first benediction.
(4) Unto man.
(5) Out of man. P.B. ‘out of his very self.’
(6) Lit., ‘a building even to perpetuity.’ By ‘a building for ever’, Eve is meant. V. Rashi, a.l. and cf. Gen. II. 22. ‘A building for ever’ contains the idea of ‘the mother of all living’ (Gen. III, 20). It is woman that carries the human race. P.B. p. 299: — ‘a perpetual fabric’ — expresses well this idea.
(7) These three benedictions are based on Gen. I and II. In the first benediction God is praised for the creation of the world (‘the all’). In the second benediction God is praised for the creation of man. ‘Man’ is used here in the sense of ‘human being’, cf. Gen. I, 27. In the third benediction God is praised for fashioning man in his image, in the image of the likeness of his form, and for preparing a perpetual building out of man himself. In creating Eve, out of man, god provided for the perpetual renewal of man, of the human being. The divine form of man and the continual re-creation of man, by ever recurring new births, in the divine form, are the subjects of praise in the third benediction while the subject of the second benediction is the creation of man generally. ‘The Creator of man’, in the concluding portion of the third benediction, has already the further meaning of the creation of man as expressed in the third benediction. In this respect ‘The Creator of Man’, in the third benediction, differs from ‘The Creator of Man’ of the second benediction. This might also explain the difficulty which has been felt to exist in the relationship of these two benedictions (v. the Gemara later and Rashi a.l.; v. also Abrahams’ Notes, P.B. p. ccxvi).
(8) I.e., Zion; cf. Isa. LIV.
(9) Cf. Isa. LXI, 10 and LXII, 5.
(10) Lit., ‘at the gathering of her children.’
(12) Lit., in ‘with’.
(13) I.e., by restoring to Zion her children. This benediction seems to have arisen out of Isa. LXII. Cf. especially vv. 4 and 5. And according to Ps. CXXXVII, Jerusalem is to be remembered and set ‘above my chiefest joy’; Rashi a.l. (fol. 8a).
(14) I.e., the bridegroom and the bride.
(15) The word הָרַעַל in Gen. II, 8, means ‘eastward’. Here it is used in the sense of ‘in former times’, ‘of old’.
(16) I.e., Adam, by giving him a wife; cf. Gen. II. 23. Adam and Eve rejoiced at their union. And so may the bridegroom and bride rejoice.
(17) The last two benedictions do not begin with ‘Blessed art Thou, O Lord out God, King of the universe,’ because they are in fact prayers. In the first, second and third benedictions God is praised for what he had done. In the fourth as well as in the fifth benediction a prayer is uttered that God may cause something to happen, namely joy to Zion, or to the bridegroom and the bride. For another explanation, v. Rashi and Tosaf. a.l. V., however, Rashi s.v. יְשָׁרֵי מַעַן יִשְׂרָאֵל. The fifth benediction seems to have resulted from the fourth benediction. V. supra n. 4 and cf. Isa. LXII, 5. The two prayers, like the two ideas contained in vv. 4 and 5, were bound up with one another.
(18) All these words mean ‘joy’. וַחֲלֹזֶה means dancing with joy’.
(19) Or, ‘fellowship’, companionship’.
In the Hebrew text the singular is used. Canopy means here ‘a bridal chamber’. Cf. Joel II, 16.

In this benediction the joy referred to is the joy of the bridegroom with the bride (Rashi).

In this benediction God is praised for the creation of joy in its various forms. Bridegroom and bride represent joy. True joy leads to love and friendship. These six benedicitions are recited at Jewish weddings up to this day. The benediction over the wine is added to them, and together they are called ‘the Seven Benedictions’. The loftiness of tone and the beauty of style of these benedicitions are unsurpassed. The blend of Biblical strength and Midrashic sweetness seems to point to an early date.

Lit., ‘happened to come’.

Lit., ‘in’. A more correct translation might be, ‘during’.

Lit., ‘blessed five’. Apparently the second benediction was left out (Rashi).

I.e., all the six benedicitions.

For man and woman. Therefore one benediction for the creation of man and woman is sufficient. This would be the third benediction.

One of man and one of woman.

Lit., ‘the whole world.’

Lit., ‘after’.

The intention was to create two human beings: man and woman.

Only man was formed, and woman was ‘built’ out of him; cf. Gen. II, 7 and 22.

Lit., ‘to throw up a question’.

Gen. I, 27.

It seems that R. Judah does not ask his question merely from the first five words of Gen. I, 27, and from the first three words of Gen. V, 2, for in that case there would have been no need for him to refer to Gen. V, 2, since he could have asked the question from the last words of Gen I. 27 ‘male and female he created them’ but his question is from the whole verse 27 in Gen I and from the whole verse 2 in Gen V. The meaning of the question should be: Gen. I, 27 begins by saying that God created man and ends by saying that man was created as male and female. The last words of Gen I, 27 would thus show that there were two creations. Gen. V, 2 begins by saying that God created them male and female, and then it says, as He blessed them and called their name Man in the day when they were created. This verse would show that in the end there was only one creation. In short: Gen. I, 27 begins with one creation and ends with two creations, and Gen V, 2, begins with two creations and ends with one creation. This, it seems, is the question of Rab Judah. Rab Judah quoted the verses by quoting the first portions of the verse. He really meant to say ‘etc.’ — In ‘Er. 18a and Ber. 61a the name is R. Abbahu. In ‘Er. 18a, in the image of God hath He created man, is quoted from Gen. I, 27. In Ber. 61a, ‘for in the image of God made he man’ (Gen. IX, 6) is quoted. This quotation apparently stands for that of Gen. I, 27. Both in ‘Er. 18a and Ber. 61a ‘male and female He created them’ is quoted first.

Lit., ‘it went up in the thought’, namely of God. A sense of reverence does not allow Rab Judah to mention ‘God’ after ‘thought’. The meaning of the answer is: At first God intended to create two human beings, man and woman (Gen I, 27). But in the end only man was created by God, and woman was ‘built’ by God out of man (Gen V, 2)

I.e., to the wedding-feast.

The first of the seven days of the wedding festivities, which began after the marriage ceremony; v. supra 7b.

Lit., ‘he blessed all of them.’

Lit., ‘from now’. I.e., from the second day to the end of the seven days.

Lit., ‘new faces’: cf. supra 7b.

If there were new guests it would be a new occasion for joy.

Lit., ‘the joy’.

The sixth benediction.

‘from seven to thirty.’

The host, as a rule the father of the bride.

The invited guests.

‘I have invited you here to dinner’ (Rashi).

v. p. 35, n. 1.

Lit., ‘from now’.
I.e., after the thirty days.

Lit., ‘if not, not’. (18) The benediction ‘in whose dwelling there is joy’.

I.e., the whole of the first year. The phrase ‘in whose dwelling there is joy’ occurs here for the first time. Commenting on this phrase Rashi says ‘at the beginning of the summons (to say Grace).’ The words ‘in whose dwelling there is joy’ are indeed used in the introduction to the Grace after meals at weddings; v. P.B. p. 300. Cf. also Abrahams’ Notes, p. ccxviii, and Baer, Seder Abodoth Israel, p. 563. But the question arises: was said before the Grace after meals in Talmudic times? In our text there is no indication that this was so. Another question is: did the whole benediction consist of the words אשר בער עזנה? Or were they the initial words of a longer benediction? The benediction אשר בער עזנה who has created mentioned together with it is the sixth benediction, the longest of the six benedictions. One is thus very much tempted to think that ובשרו יצה וסנה were words of a longer benediction probably introduced by the formula ‘Blessed art Thou, O Lord our God, King of the Universe’ and said as a substitute for the first five benedictions. The key note of the first five benedictions is joy. Joy speaks out of every benediction; there was joy in the creation of the universe, in the creation of man, in the formation of man and woman. There is joy in the fourth and fifth benedictions. The joy in the first three benedictions is the joy of God. The joy in the fourth and fifth benedictions is also divine joy. The sixth benediction speaks of the joy created by God for man, ‘Blessed art Thou, O Lord our God, King of the Universe, who has created joy and gladness.’ etc. The joy of the first five benedictions is summarized by the words, ‘in whose dwelling there is joy.’ There is joy on high, there is joy with God. This joy is spoken of in the first five benedictions. And this joy is also expressed briefly in the words ‘in whose dwelling there is joy’. The human joy, created by God, is expressed in the sixth benediction stands for the benediction which was a substitute for the first five benedictions. On the first day of the wedding the six benedictions were said. After the first day, if there were no new guests, two benedictions were said. After the seventh day only one benediction was said. And that benediction was ‘in whose dwelling there is joy.’ Man’s joy began to diminish. So only God’s joy was now mentioned. In the time after the Talmud was given a place in the introduction to the Grace after meals at weddings, instead of being said as a full benediction after Grace, because the full text of this benediction was not mentioned in the Talmud. It may be that the tradition that the full benediction (with ‘Blessed art Thou,’ etc.) was said, was lost. It was felt that was left hanging in the air and it was incorporated in the summons to say Grace; v. P.B., p. 300. That the word מנה was chosen to denote the dwelling of God may be due to the fact that it is mentioned in Hag. 12b as the heavenly region in which the angels sing; v. Abrahams and Baer, loc cit. מנה is there spoken of as the fifth of the seven firmaments. Might there not be in it an allusion to the five benedictions, for which the benediction of מנה is a substitute?

Or, ‘originally.’ i.e., ‘before the wedding.’

Does one say ‘In whose dwelling there is joy’.

Or through (for brewing beer), or pot (for planting barley for the wedding ceremony). The meaning of this phrase is: from the time that they begin making preparations for the wedding (v. Rashi).

I.e., R. Papa had his son engaged to be married.

In whose dwelling there is joy’.

As all preparations for the wedding and the wedding-feast were made, R. Papa felt that he could say the benediction.

I.e., Rabina had his son engaged (Rashi).

And therefore he said the benedictions.

Lit., ‘the matter was not supported (by divine help).

I.e., son of Palestine, Palestinian. It may be that מער עזה (‘West’) was the name of the father of R. Tahlifa; v. Levy, s.v. But the mention of Babylon seems to support the rendering ‘son of the West’, ‘Palestinian’.

He extended the first two benedictions by making additions to them (Rashi). It is possible that ‘by long’ is meant the full benedictions as they are given on fol. 8a, in contradistinction to the short blessing אשר בער עזנה.

I.e., a house in which a circumcision took place, followed by a festive meal.

There must be ten male persons for the recital of the six (or seven) ‘benedictions of the bridegrooms’, v. supra 7a and 7b. The benediction of the mourners is also said in the presence of ten male persons, v. infra 8b. R. Nahman says in the name of Rab that bridegrooms may be of the ten, but mourners may not be of the ten. There must be ten without the mourners.

Lit., ‘You throw a Baraitha against Rab.’
With regard to what was that taught?1 With regard to Grace after meals;2 [and] with regard to what did R. Johanan say [this ruling]?3 With regard to the line [of comforters].4 But [then] what of the dictum5 of which )R. Isaac said [that] R. Johanan said: ‘One says the benediction6 of the bridegrooms in the presence of ten [male persons] and the bridegrooms are of the number, and [one says] the benediction of the mourners7 in the presence of ten [male persons] and the mourners are not of the number’ — is there a benediction [said] in the line [of comforters]?8 — But [the answer is]: With regard to what did R. Johanan say [this ruling]?3 with regard to the [benediction recited in the] open space.9 But [then] what of the dictum which R. Isaac said [that] R. Johanan said: ‘One says the benediction of the bridegrooms in the presence of ten [male persons] all the seven [days]10 and the bridegrooms are of the number, and [one says] the benediction of the mourners in the presence of ten [male persons] all the seven [days]11 and the mourners are not of the number — is the benediction [recited in] the open space said all the seven days?12 — It is possible in the presence of new friends13 — as in the case of14 R. Hiyya, the son of Abba, [who was] the Bible teacher of the son15 of Resh Lakish, or, as some say,16 the Mishnah teacher of the son of Resh Lakish. [It happened as follows:] A child [of R. Hiyya, the son of Abba] died,17 The first day18 he [Resh Lakish] did not go to him. The next day19 he [Resh Lakish] took with him20 Judah the son of Nahmani,21 his meturgeman,22 and said to him: Rise [and] say something23 with regard to24 [the death of] the child. He spoke25 and said: [It is written.] And the Lord saw and spurned, because of the provoking of His sons and His daughters.24 [This means, in] a generation [in which the fathers spurn the Holy One, blessed be
He, He is angry with their sons and their daughters and they die when they are young.26 And some say [that] he [the child of R. Hiyya, the son of Abba, that died] was a young man27 and that he [Judah the son of Nahmani] said thus to him:28 Therefore the Lord shall have no joy in their young men, neither shall He have compassion on their fatherless and widows; for every one is profane and an evil-doer, and every mouth speaketh folly. For all this His anger is not turned away, but His hand is stretched out still.29 (What is the meaning30 of ‘but His hand is stretched out still’? Said R. Hanan, the son of Rab:31 All know for what purpose32 a bride is brought into the bridal chamber, but whoever disgraces his mouth and utter33 a word of folly—even if a [divine] decree34 of seventy years of happiness35 were sealed [and granted] unto him,36 it is turned for him into evil.) — He came to comfort, [and] he grieved him? This he said to him: Thou art important enough to be held responsible37 for [the shortcomings of] the generation.38 He39 [then] said to him:40 Rise [and] say something with regard to the praise of the Holy One, blessed be He He spoke and said: The God,41 who is great in the abundance of His greatness, mighty and strong in the multitude of awe-inspiring deeds, who reviveth the dead with his word,42 who does great things that are unsearchable43 and wondrous works without number.44 Blessed art thou, O Lord, who reviveth the dead.45 He46 then ‘said to him;47 Rise [and] say something with regard to the mourners. He spoke and said: Our brethren, who are born out, who are crushed by this bereavement,48 set your heart to consider49 this: This it is [that] stands for ever,50 it is a path from the six days of creation.51 Many have drunk, many will drink,52 as the drinking of the first ones, so will be that of the last ones. Our brethren, the Lord of consolation comfort you. Blessed be He who comforteth the mourners. (Said Abaye: ‘Many have drunk’ he should have said, ‘many will drink’ one should not have said, ‘the drinking of the first ones’, he should have said, ‘the drinking of the last ones’ one should not have said, for R. Simeon, the son of Lakish,53 said, and so one has taught in the name of R. Jose: Man should never open his mouth to Satan.54 Said R. Joseph: What text [shows this]? We should have been as Sodom, we should have been like unto Gomorrah.55 What did He56 reply unto him?57 Hear the word of the Lord, ye rulers of Sodom, etc.58 ) He59 [then] said to him:60 Rise [and] say something with regard to the comforters of the mourners. He spoke and said: Our brethren, bestowers of lovingkindnesses, sons of bestowers of lovingkindnesses, who hold fast to the covenant of Abraham our father [for it is said, For I have known him, to the end that he may command his children, etc.]. our brethren, may the Lord of recompense pay you your reward. Blessed art Thou who payest the recompense. He [then] said unto him: Rise [and] say something with regard to the whole of Israel. He spoke and said: Master of the worlds, redeem and save, deliver [and] help Thy people Israel from pestilence, and from the sword, and from plundering, and from the blast, and from the mildew, and from all kinds of calamities that [may] break forth and come into the world. Before we call, mayest Thou answer, Blessed art Thou who stayest the plague. Ulla said, and some say [that] it was taught in a Baraitha: Ten cups [of wine] the scholars have instituted [to be drunk] in the house of the mourner: Three before the meal in order to open the small bowels, three during the meal in order to dissolve the food in the bowels, and four after the meal: one corresponding to ‘who feedeth’, one corresponding to the blessing of ‘the land’, one corresponding to ‘who rebuildeth Jerusalem’, and one corresponding to ‘who is good and doeth good’. They [then] added unto them [another] four [cups]: one in honour of the officers of the town, and one in honour of the leaders of the town, and one in honour of the Temple. and one in honour of Rabban Gamaliel. [When] they began to drink [too much] and to become intoxicated, they restored the matter to its original state. What [about] Rabban Gamaliel? — As it has been taught: At first the carrying out of the dead was harder for his relatives than his death, so that they left him and ran away, until Rabban Gamaliel came and adopted a simple style and they carried him out in garments of linen, and [then] all the people followed his example and carried out [the dead] in garments of linen. Said R. Papa: And now it is the general practice [to carry out the dead] even in rough cloth worth [only] a zuz.

R. Eleazar said:

(1) Lit., ‘When was that taught’. In the Baraitha (that mourners ate also of the number)
(2) Lit., ‘the benediction of food’.
(3) That mourners are not of the number.
(4) The line of comforters which was formed to offer consolation to the mourners after a burial, v. Sanh. 19a.
(5) Lit., ‘But as to this that’.
(6) ‘The blessing, or benediction, of the bridegrooms’ has a collective sense. The six (or seven) benedictions are meant.
(7) Has also a collective sense; v. infra.
(8) Does one say benedictions in the line that is formed, after the burial of the dead, so that the friends may comfort the mourners? There only words of comfort are said, but no benedictions. In Sanh., 19a one word of comfort is mentioned: חַגָּיָה יְהִי מְלַאכְתְךָ ‘be comforted’.
(9) The benedictions of the mourners were said in the open space, v. infra.
(10) Of the wedding festivities.
(11) Of mourning.
(12) Lit., ‘Is there a benediction of the open space all the seven days?’
(13) Lit., ‘Thou wilt find it in (the case of) new faces’. When new friends come to visit the mourners for the first time during the seven days, the benediction of mourners is said :in the free space.
(14) Lit., ‘as that of.’
(15) So MS.M.; cur. edd. ‘sons’.
(16) Lit., ‘and some say.’
(17) It was R. Hiyya's child that died and not Resh Lakish's. Resh Lakish went to comfort R. Hiyya and took his (Resh Lakish's) meturgeman (v. infra) with him. Some scholars go wrong in the rendering of this passage. V., for instance, Levy p. 303. Bacher rightly speaks of the death of the young child of R. Hiyya.
(18) I.e., the first day of R. Hiyya's mourning.
(19) Lit., ‘on the morrow.’
(20) Lit., ‘led him.’
(21) Judah the son of Nahmani, is mentioned several times as the meturgeman of Resh Lakish; v. e.g. Sot. 37b, Cit. 60b, (also Tem. 14b), and Sanh. 7b.
(22) ‘Interpreter’. As to his function v. J.E., vol. VIII, p. 521. and vol. I, p. 527, n. 1. One sentence may be quoted from the last-named article. ‘In a limited sense it (the interpreter’ Amora, or meturgeman) signifies the officer who stood at the side of the lecturer or presiding teacher in the academy and in meetings for public instruction, and announced loudly, and explained to the large assembly in an oratorical manner, what the teacher had just expressed briefly and in a low voice.’ The meturgeman was, therefore, a sort of assistant lecturer. Judah the son of Nahmani, was assistant lecturer to Resh Lakish. He was also a good preacher who expounded well Biblical verses homiletically (cf. e.g., Sanh. 7b). He could also recite benedictions by heart. Cf. Cit. 60b and Tem. 14b. For these reasons apparently Resh Lakish took with him Judah the son of Nahmani, when he paid a visit of condolence to R. Hiyya, the son of Abba. Judah spoke on behalf of Resh Lakish.

(23) Lit., ‘a word’, ‘a thing.’

(24) Lit., ‘corresponding to’, ‘vis-a-vis’.

(25) Lit., ‘he opened.’ This probably means: he opened his mouth (and said), cf. Job III, 1. It may also mean: he opened his discourse; v. the Dictionaries of Levy and Jastrow, s.v. Here the first meaning seems to be more likely. (15) Deut. XXXII, 19.

(26) Lit., ‘small’.

(27) I.e., a grown-up son, not a small child

(29) Isa. IX. 16.

(30) Lit., ‘What?’ ‘Why?’

(32) Lit., ‘for what.’

(33) Lit., ‘brings forth from his mouth.’

(34) Lit., a decree of His judgment.’

(35) Lit, ‘for good.’

(36) I.e., even if it was decreed in heaven that he should have seventy’ years of happiness. cf R.H. 16b.

(37) Lit., ‘to be seized’.

(38) Cf. Shab. 33b: ‘the righteous men are seized for (the shortcomings of) the generation.’ V. Rashi a.l.

(39) Resh Lakish

(40) Judah the son of Nahmani.

(41) According to Rashi the words ‘Blessed art Thou, O Lord our God, King of the Universe,’ are to be supplemented before ‘The God,’ etc.

(42) This phrase occurs also in the abbreviated Amida prayer said on Friday’ night. v. P.B. p. 120.

(43) Lit., ‘until there is no searching.’ Cf Ps CXLV. 3.

(44) Lit., ‘until there is no number.’ Cf. Ps. CXLVII, 5. The whole phrase occurs also in the evening service prayer v. P.B. p. 99.

(45) This benediction is, in its main ideas, reminiscent of the first three benedictions of the Amida.

(46) Resh Lakish

(47) Judah the son of Nahmani.

(48) Lit., ‘by this mourning.’

(49) Cf. I Chron. XXII, 25.

Hyya the son of Abba, on the occasion of the death of R. Hyya's child. The story of this visit was introduced in order to show that there is הרבות רחבעמ during all the seven days of mourning if new friends are present on each occasion. Now, what is הרבות רחבעמ? This question has not been answered yet. In the time of the Gaonim the tradition concerning it had faded already. In Shittah Mekubbezeth on Keth. 8b three different views are quoted. The view mentioned in Nahmanides’ Toroth ha-Adam ed. Venice, p. 50a, is again different. The explanation attempted by Krauss in the Jahrbuch der jud.-lit. Gesellschaft, vol. XVII (1926), pp. 238-239 (v. also Krauss, Jahresbericht XXXVII-XXXIX Isr.-Theol. Lehranstalt in Wien, p. 60f) is unsatisfactory. It is strange that Graetz thinks that Judah

Talmud - Mas. Kethuboth 9a

He who says, I have found an ‘open opening’1 is trusted to make her forbidden for him.2 Why?3 It is a double doubt.4 It is a doubt [whether she had the intercourse with the other man while] under him,5 or6 , [while] not under him.7 And if you say8 that [she had that intercourse while] under him, [there is] the [other] doubt [whether she had that intercourse] by violence or9 by [her free] will! — It was necessary10 [to state this rule] in the case of the wife of a priest.11 And if you wish, you may say [that it speaks of] the wife of an Israelite,12 and for instance when her father received the betrothal for her [when] she was less than three years and one day old.13 What does he14 let ‘is hear by [this since] we have already learnt [it].15 ‘If a man says16 to a woman, "I have betrothed thee [to myself]", and she says, "Thou hast not betrothed me [to thyself]," she is allowed [to marry] his relatives, but he is forbidden [to marry] her relatives.17 — What you might have supposed is that there18 [he causes a prohibition to himself] because it is certain to him,19 but here it is not quite certain to him.20 [Therefore] he21 lets us hear [this rule].22 But did R. Eleazar say so? Did not R. Eleazar say: The wife does not become forbidden for her husband save in the case of23 warning24 and seclusion,25 and as [we find in] the occurrence that happened?26 But how can you [in any case] understand it?27 Was the occurrence that happened accompanied by warning and seclusion? And again, did they28 declare her29 forbidden30 — This is no difficulty, [for] thus he31 means to say:32 The wife does not become forbidden for her husband save in the case of warning and seclusion, [and this we learn] from the occurrence that happened, because [there] there was no warning and seclusion and [therefore] she was not forbidden.33 But [the former question] is nevertheless difficult. In the [case of] warning and seclusion but not [in the case of] ‘an open opening’34 — But according to your argument35 [the question could be asked]: [in the case of] warning and seclusion, yes, [and in the case of] witnesses,37 no! Hence he38 means to say thus: The wife does not become forbidden for her husband through one witness39 but through two witnesses;40 but in the case of warning and seclusion,41 even through one witness,42 and ‘an open opening’ is like two witnesses.43 And if you will say: [In the case of] the occurrence that happened. why did they not declare her forbidden?44 [The answer is:] There it was compulsion.45 And if you wish you can say as R. Samuel the son of Nahmani said46 that] R. Jonathan said:

(32) Lit., ‘he says’.

(33) Bath-sheba.

(34) For Uriah. V. p. 44, n. 20.

(35) Lit., ‘warning . . . yes; an open . . . no.’ I.e., the words of R. Eleazar imply that the wife would be forbidden for her husband only in case of warning and seclusion, but not in the case of ‘an open opening’, which contradicts his former ruling.

(36) If you are to argue from the implications of R. Eleazar's words as they stand.

(37) Why should the evidence of witnesses that the wife was unfaithful be weaker than warning and seclusion? Surely this cannot be!

(38) R. Eleazar.

(39) By the evidence of one witness that the wife was unfaithful; v. Rashi ad loc.

(40) By the evidence of two witnesses.

(41) Where there are two witnesses to the warning and seclusion.

(42) If even only one witness testified to the adultery that followed she is forbidden to her husband. V. Sot. 2b.

(43) I.e., the charge of an ‘open opening’ by her husband is on a par with the evidence of two witnesses.

(44) For David, seeing that many people knew of the occurrence, and thus there were witnesses.

(45) Bath-sheba could not resist the demand of the king. [And since she was thus not forbidden to Uriah, she was permitted also to David. (V. supra p. 44, n. 20)].

(46) Lit., ‘as that which R. Samuel the son of Nahmani said’.

Talmud - Mas. Kethuboth 9b
Everyone who goes out into the war of the House of David writes for his wife a deed of divorce, for it is written, And to thy brethren shalt thou bring greetings, and take their pledge. What [is the meaning of], ‘and take their pledge’? R. Joseph learnt: Things which are pledged between him and her.

Abaye said: We have also learned A MAIDEN IS MARRIED ON THE FOURTH DAY OF THE WEEK. [This implies] only on the fourth day, but not the fifth day. What is the reason? [Presumably] on account of the cooling of the temper. Now in which respect [could the cooling of the mind have a bad result]? If with regard to giving her the kethubah, let him give it to her. Consequently [we must say only] with regard to making her forbidden for him; and [it is a case where] he puts forward a claim. Is it not that he puts forward the claim of ‘an open opening’? — No, [it is a case where] he puts forward the claim of blood.

Rab Judah said [that] Samuel said: If any one says, ‘I have found an open opening’, he is trusted to cause her to lose her kethubah. Said R. Joseph: What does he let us hear? We have already learned: He who eats at his father-in-law’s [between the time of betrothal and the time of marriage] in Judaea, without witnesses, cannot [after the marriage] raise the claim of [the loss of] virginity, because he is alone with her. In Judaea he cannot raise this claim, but in Galilee he can raise it. Now in which respect? If to make her forbidden for him, why [should he] not [be able to raise this claim] in Judaea? Consequently [we must say it is] to cause her to lose her kethubah; and [it is in a case where] when he raises a claim. Is it not that he raises the claim of ‘an open opening’? — No, when he raises the claim of blood.

(1) [So that in case he falls in battle his wife should be free to marry without the necessity of halizah. The Get would in that case take effect retrospectively from the date of its writing (Rashi). Tosaf.: He writes a Get without any conditions to take effect immediately]
(2) I Sam. XVII, 15.
(3) I.e., the betrothals, these thou shalt take from them by a deed of divorce (Rashi).
(4) We have been taught in a Mishnah; v. supra 2a.
(5) That the claim of ‘an open opening’ makes the wife forbidden for the husband.
(6) Lit., ‘on the fourth day, yes, on the fifth day, no.’
(7) The husband might be appeased by the following Monday, cf. supra 2a and 5a.
(8) V. Glos.
(9) No harm is done by this. There is no sin involved in the payment of the marriage settlement to the wife, even if, in law, she forfeited it through her conduct.
(10) Lit., ‘but’.
(11) If her conduct makes her forbidden for the husband for marital intercourse then the disregard of this prohibition would involve a sin. And therefore a maiden marries on the fourth day of the week so that there should be no ‘cooling of the mind’.
(12) I.e., the husband must have put forward a serious claim.
(13) As evidencing unfaithfulness, This proves that the charge of an ‘open opening’ by the husband renders his wife forbidden to him.
(14) I.e he claims that there was no bleeding. And this is a more manifest sign of the absence of virginity, evidencing unfaithfulness, than ‘an open opening.
(15) Rab Judah.
(16) In a Mishnah; cf. infra 22a.
(17) I.e., he who frequently visits the house of the father of his betrothed bride.
(18) This was customary in Judaea.
(19) And might have had intimate relations with the bride.
(20) In Galilee that custom (v. p. 46, n. 16) did not prevail.
If he is sure that he has not been intimate with her during the time of betrothal and he charges her with unfaithfulness, he renders her, by the mere charge, forbidden to him?

Lit., ‘but’.

In Judaea he cannot make her lose the kethubah, because he might have been intimate with her during the period of betrothal.

And therefore Samuel’s statement is necessary.

Talmud - Mas. Kethuboth 10a

It was stated: Rab Nahman said [that] Samuel said in the name of R. Simeon b. Eleazar: The scholars ordained for the daughters of Israel [as follows]: for a maiden two hundred [zuz] and for a widow a maneh [one hundred zuz]. And they trusted him, so that when he said, ‘I have found an open opening’, he is believed. If so, what have the Sages accomplished with their ordinance? — Said Raba: The presumption is [that] no one will take the trouble of preparing a [wedding-]feast and will then spoil it. One has taught: Since it is a fine [instituted] by the sages she shall collect only from the worst land [of the husband's estate]. [You say] a fine! Why a fine? — Say then: since it is an ordinance of the sages, she shall collect only from the worst land [of the husband's estate]. Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel says: The kethubah of a wife is from the Torah. But did Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel say so? Surely it has been taught: [It is written in the Torah] He shall pay money according to the dowry of virgins; [this teaches us that] this is [as much] as the dowry of the virgins. And the dowry of the virgins is [as much] as this. But, the Sages found a support for [the rule that] the kethubah of a wife is from the Torah. Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel says: The kethubah of a wife is not from the words of the Bible, but from the words of the Soferim — Reverse it. And why does it appear to you right to reverse the latter [teaching]? Reverse the former [teaching]! We have already heard that R. Simeon the son of Gamaliel said that the kethubah is from the Bible, for we learnt: Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel says: He gives her [the kethubah] in Cappadocian coins.

And if you wish, you may say: The whole of it is [according to] Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel. only, it is defective and it teaches thus: Here the Sages found a support for [the rule that] the kethubah of a widow [however] is not from the words of the Torah but from the words of the Soferim for Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel says: The kethubah of a widow is not from the words of the Torah but from the words of the Soferim.

Someone came before R. Nahman [and] said to him: I have found an open opening. R. Nahman answered: Lash him with palm-switches; harlots lie prostrate before him. But it is R. Nahman who said that he [the husband] is believed! He believes, but [at the same time] one lashes him with palm-switches. R. Ahai answered: Here [it speaks] of a young man, there [it speaks] of one who was married before.

Some one came before Rabban Gamaliel [and] said to him, I have found an ‘open opening’. He [Rabban Gamaliel] answered him: Perhaps you moved aside and you tore away the door and the bar. I will give you an illustration: To what is this like? To a man who was walking in the deep darkness of the night and came to his house and found the door locked; if he moves aside [the bolt of the door] he finds it open, if he does not move aside [the bolt of the door] he finds it locked. Some say [that] he answered him thus: Perhaps you moved aside wilfully and you tore away the door and the bar. I will give you an illustration: To what is this like? To a man who was walking in the deep darkness of the night and came to his house and found the door locked; if he moves aside [the bolt of the door] wilfully he finds it open, if he does not move aside [the bolt of the door] wilfully he finds it locked.

Some one came before Rabban Gamaliel the son of Rabbi [and] said to him, ‘My master, I have had intercourse with my newly-wedded wife and I have not found any blood.’ She [the wife] said to him, ‘My master, I was a virgin.’ He said to them: Bring me that cloth. They brought him the cloth, and he soaked it in water and he washed it and he found on it a good many drops of blood.
[Thereupon] he [Rabban Gamaliel] said to him [the husband]: Go, be happy with thy bargain.\(^{47}\) Huna Mar the son of Raba of Parazika,\(^{48}\) said to R. Ashi: Shall we also do it?\(^{49}\) He answered him:

(1) V. Glos.
(2) V. Glos.
(3) As her kethubah. V. infra 10b.
(4) And she loses the kethubah.
(5) If he can make her lose the kethubah by the claim of an ‘open opening’.
(6) No one will go to the trouble and expense of a wedding and then waste it all by an invented claim. If he makes such a charge, he is, no doubt, telling the truth.
(7) The kethubah.
(8) The wife.
(9) Cf. also B.K. 7b and 8a.
(10) Why do you call it a fine? And why should it he a fine?
(11) I.e., a Rabbinical, and not a Biblical, ordinance.
(12) I.e., an ordinance of the Bible.
(13) Ex. XXII, 16.
(14) The payment for the enticement of the virgin.
(15) I.e., fifty pieces of silver, the fine inflicted for violating a virgin, v. Deut. XXII, 27.
(16) The ‘silver pieces’ referred to are shekels, not ma'ahs, v. infra 38a.
(17) Lit., ‘from here’, i.e., from the phrase ‘dowry of virgins’.
(18) The Soferim, or scribes, were the learned men who succeeded Ezra during a period of about two hundred years. Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel therefore holds that the kethubah was a Rabbinical, and not a Biblical, ordinance.
(19) The answer is: Reverse the reading and say that Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel said that in the Scriptural verse mentioned is to be found a support for the rule that the kethubah of a wife is from the Bible, and that the first Tanna said that it was not Biblical but ‘from the words of the Soferim’.
(20) Lit., ‘And why do you see that you should reverse.’
(21) Where it says that Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel holds that the kethubah of a wife is from the Torah.
(22) The husband.
(23) The wife.
(24) They were more variable than the Palestinian coins. The husband has to pay in Cappadocian coins because the kethubah is from the Bible; v. infra 110b.
(25) Of the teaching of the Baraitha mentioned before.
(26) Lit., ‘and’.
(27) A clause is missing.
(28) I.e., the Baraitha should be read thus.
(29) According to this version of the Baraitha, R. Simeon b. Gamaliel holds that the kethubah of the maiden-wife is Biblical and that the kethubah of the widow-wife is rabbinical.
(30) He (the husband) raised this complaint about his newly wedded wife.
(31) Lit., ‘said to him’, i.e., concerning him.
(33) I.e., such a man ought to be punished. for if he is such an expert in these matters he must have led an immoral life.
(34) If the husband says that he has not found virginity in his wife. Why should he then be lashed for having complained to R. Nahman about his wife?
(35) Where R. Nahman ordered punishment.’
(36) Who was not married before. He should not have known if he had not had intercourse with harlots before his marriage. There R. Nahman ordered lashing.
(37) And therefore he could know without having led an immoral life. He is therefore believed and receives no lashing (Rashi). It is also possible that according to R. Ahai both are believed R. Ahai only explains that it is the young man who gets the birch.
(38) And thus performed the coition without tearing the hymen. V. Jast. p. 595.
Some such words as these must be inserted.

‘He moved aside’, and ‘he did not move aside’ refer apparently to the bolt of the door and not to the door itself. The simile is obvious: the bolt is compared to the membrum virile. He moved the membrum virile aside and therefore found ‘an open opening’.

Intentionally.

The ‘door’, ‘door-way’, ‘entrance’, apparently refers to the vagina, or the entrance into the vagina, and ‘the bar’ to the hymen. He intentionally moved so forcibly that he tore open the entrance and swept away the hymen without feeling it.

The action must be intentional. The chief point of this version seems to be the wilful intention. The bolt of a door cannot, as a rule, be moved aside accidentally. There must be intention in the action.

Upon which they spent the night.

The blood was covered by semen.

Lit., ‘take possession of’ a phrase in which there is also an element of joy. ‘Be happy with’ expresses well the spirit of the decision. Rabban Gamaliel himself was happy that he could keep together and strengthen the bond of marriage between husband and wife.

Faransag, near Bagdad.

I.e., apply in such cases the test applied by Rabban Gamaliel to the cloth.

Our laundry work is like their washing. And if you will say let us do laundry work, [my answer is] the smoothing stone will remove it. Someone came before Rabban Gamaliel the son of Rabbi [and] said to him, ‘My master, I have had intercourse [with my newly-wedded wife] and I have not found any blood.’ She [the wife] said to him, ‘My master, I am still a virgin.’ He [then] said to them: Bring me two handmaids, one [who is] a virgin and one who had intercourse with a man. They brought to him [two such handmaids], and he placed them upon a cask of wine. [In the case of] the one who was no more a virgin its smell went through, [in the case of] the virgin the smell did not go through. He [then] placed this one [the young wife] also [on a cask of wine]. and its smell did not go through. He [then] said to him: Go, be happy with thy bargain. — But he should have examined her from the very beginning! — He had heard a tradition, but he had not seen it done in practice. and he thought. The matter might not be certain and it would not be proper to deal lightly with daughters of Israel.

Someone came before Rabban Gamaliel the elder [and] said to him, ‘My master, I have had intercourse [with my newly-wedded wife] and I have not found any blood. She [the wife] said to him, ‘My master, I am of the family of Dorkati, [the women of] which have neither blood of menstruation nor blood of virginity.’ Rabban Gamaliel investigated among her women relatives and he found [the facts to be] in accordance with her words. He [then] said to him: Go, be happy with thy bargain. Happy art thou that thou hast been privileged [to marry a woman] of the family of Dorkati. What is [the meaning of] Dorkati? — R. Hanina said: Vain consolation Rabban Gamaliel offered to that man, for R. Hiyya taught: As the leaven is wholesome for the dough, so is blood wholesome for a woman. And one has [also] taught in the name of R. Meir: Every woman who has abundant blood has many children. It has been said: R. Jeremiah b. Abba said: He [Rabban Gamaliel] said to him [the husband]: Be happy with thy bargain. But R. Jose b. Abin said: He said to him: thou hast been punished with thy bargain. We quite understand the one who says ‘Thou hast been punished’ with thy bargain — this is [according to the view] of R. Hanina. But according to him who says ‘Be happy’ [with thy bargain], what is the advantage [of such a marriage]? — He [the husband] does not come to any doubt regarding menstruation.

Someone came to Rabbi [and] said, ‘My master, I have had intercourse [with my newly-wedded wife] and I have not found any blood.’ She said, ‘My master, I was [and am] still a virgin, and it was [a period of] years of dearth.’ Rabbi saw that their faces were black, and he commanded concerning them, and they brought them to a bath and gave them to eat and to drink and brought them to the bridal chamber, and he had intercourse with her and found blood. He then said to him: Go, be happy with thy bargain. Rabbi applied to them the verse: Their skin is shrivelled upon their bodies,’ it is withered, it is become like a stick.

MISHNAH. A MAIDEN — HER KETHUBAH IS TWO HUNDRED [ZUZ], AND A WIDOW — A MANEH. A MAIDEN, WHO IS A WIDOW, [OR] DIVORCED, OR A HALUZAH FROM BETROTHAL — HER KETHUBAH IS TWO HUNDRED [ZUZ], AND THERE LIES AGAINST THEM THE CHARGE OF NON-VIRGINITY.

GEMARA. Why [is a widow called] ‘almanah’? R. Hana of Bagdad said: because of the maneh. But what can be said with regard to a widow from the betrothal? — Because that one is called ‘almanah’ this one is also called ‘almanah’. What can be said with regard to [the word] ‘almanah’, that is written in the Bible — [The woman] for whom the Rabbis will in future institute [the kethubah of] a maneh. But does the Bible speak of a thing which will be in the future? — Yes, for it is written: And the name of the third river is Hiddekel, that is it which goeth towards the east of Ashur, and R. Joseph learnt: Ashur, that is Seleucia. But was [Seleucia] already then in existence? But [it is mentioned] because it will exist in the future. Here also ‘almanah’ is mentioned in the Bible] because it [the kethubah of maneh] will exist in the future.

R. Hana of Bagdad also said: The rain waters, saturates and manures [the earth] and refreshes and enlarges [the fruits]. Raba the son of R. Ishmael, and some say R. Yemar the son of Shelemiah, said: Which is the verse? — It is this: Thou waterest the ridges abundantly, thou settlest the furrows thereof, thou makest it soft with showers, thou blessest the springing thereof.

R. Eleazar said: The altar removes and feeds, makes beloved, atones. Have not ‘atones’ and ‘removes’ the same meaning? — Yes, for it is written: He who has drunk one-fourth [of a log] of wine shall not give a legal decision.

An objection was raised. Dates are wholesome morning and evening, in the afternoon they are bad, at noon they are incomparable, and they remove three things: evil thought, stress of the bowels, and abdominal troubles! — Do we say that they are no good? They are indeed good. only for the moment [they cause] unsteadiness. It is analogous to wine, for the Master said: He who has drunk one-fourth [of a log] of wine shall not give a legal decision. And if you wish you may say: There is no difficulty: This is before a meal and that is after a meal, for Abaye said: Mother told me: Dates before a meal are as an axe to the palmtree, after a meal as a bar to the door.

Dasha [door], Raba explained: derek sham [‘the way there’]. Darga [stairs, ladder]. Raba explained: derek gag [the way of the roof]. Puria [bed], R. Papa explained: sheparin we-rabin ‘aleha [because one is fruitful and multiplies on it]. R. Nahman b. Isaac said:

(1) Babylonian.
(2) הַמַּכִּילָה is fine laundry’ work.
(3) Palestinian.
(4) חָיוֹזֶחְלָה is plain washing. In Palestine the plain washing was better than in Babylonia, because the water in Palestine was better or because they had in Palestine better ingredients (Rashi). In order to get the same results they would have to do fine laundry work in Babylonia, and that would include smoothing the cloth with a stone, according to Rashi, with a gloss-stone.
(5) Let us apply הַמַּכִּילָה to the cloth on which the bride and bridegroom slept.
(6) The blood. In the process of הַמַּכִּילָה the stone with which the cloth would be smoothed would cause the drops of blood, which would be seen after plain washing, to disappear. The test of Rabban Gamaliel could therefore not be employed in Babylonia.
(7) I.e., the smell of the wine.

(32) She was only betrothed (arusah, v. Glos.) but not married, and became a widow or was divorced, or released by halizah from marrying her deceased fiancé's brother.
(33) Lit., ‘their kethubah’. The kethubah of either the widow’, or the divorcee, or the halizah.
(34) The husband who marries one of these women has a right to complain if he does not find signs of virginity. As they were only betrothed but not married they are expected to be virgins.
(35) The value of the kethubah of a woman who married when she was a widow. This is no attempt at proper etymology.
(36) The value of the kethubah of such a widow is two hundred zuz, and still she is called ‘almanah’.
(37) This is no attempt at proper etymology.

(47) ‘Removes’ apparently also refers to sins!
(48) The answer is that ‘removes’ refers to evil decrees.
(49) Lit., ‘loosen’, (the bowels).
(50) The body.
(51) I.e., very good. — Dates are good, or very good, after the meals in the morning, noon and evening. They are not good in the afternoon after a rest (Rashi).

(54) Log is a liquid measure equal to the contents of six eggs.
And one-fourth of a log of wine is certainly wholesome. But for the moment it may make one unsteady, and therefore unfit to give legal decisions.

Lit., ‘bread’. If one eats dates before a meal, the effect is bad and one must not give legal decisions. The passage which declares them bad speaks of a case where one eats dates after a meal. The statement itself bears this out; v. supra p. 53, n. 6.

V. Kid. (Sonic ed.) p. 153.

That is, injurious.

This apparently means good. It is difficult to see the meaning of the comparison. Rashi explains: They sustain the body as the bar supports a door.

Lit., ‘said’.

A play on the word.

Or, the way is there; or, through there.

Lit., ‘said’.

Or, the way to the roof; or, the way through the roof.

Talmud - Mas. Kethuboth 11a

We will also say: ailonith [the barren woman that is] a man-like woman, who does not bear children.

MISHNAH. A WOMAN PROSELYTE, A WOMAN CAPTIVE, AND A WOMAN SLAVE, WHO HAVE BEEN REDEEMED, CONVERTED, OR FREED [WHEN THEY WERE] LESS THAN THREE YEARS AND ONE DAY OLD — THEIR KETHUBAH IS TWO HUNDRED [ZUZ]. AND THERE IS WITH REGARD TO THEM THE CLAIM OF [NON-]VIRGINITY.

GEMARA. R. Huna said: A minor proselyte is immersed by the direction of the court. What does he let us know? That it is an advantage to him and one may act for a person in his absence to his advantage? [Surely] we have learned [this already]: One may act for a person in his absence to his advantage. but one cannot act for a person in his absence to his disadvantage!

What you might have supposed is that an idolator prefers a life without restraint because it is established for us that a slave certainly prefers a dissolute life, therefore, he lets us know that this is said [only in the case] of a grown-up person who has already tasted sin, but [in the case of] a minor, it is an advantage to him. May we say that [this Mishnah] supports him: A WOMAN PROSELYTE, A WOMAN CAPTIVE, AND A WOMAN SLAVE, WHO HAVE BEEN REDEEMED, CONVERTED, OR FREED [WHEN THEY WERE] LESS THAN THREE YEARS AND ONE DAY OLD — THEY HAVE TO BE PAID THE FINE:

Abaye asked: A WOMAN PROSELYTE, A WOMAN CAPTIVE, AND A WOMAN SLAVE, WHO HAVE BEEN REDEEMED, CONVERTED OR FREED [WHEN THEY WERE] LESS THAN THREE YEARS AND ONE DAY OLD-THEIR KETHUBAH IS TWO HUNDRED [ZUZ]. Now if you indeed mean to say [that] when they have become of age they can protest [against their conversion], would we give her the kethubah that she may go and eat [it] in her heathen state? — When she has become of age, too, she can protest and go out!

— As soon as she was of age one hour, and did not protest, she cannot protest any more.

Raba raised an objection: These maidens receive the fine if a man has intercourse with a bastard, a Nethinah, a Cuthean, a proselyte, a captive, or a slave, who have been redeemed, converted, or freed [when they were] less than three years and one day old-they have to be paid the Now if you say [that] when they have become of age they can protest, would we give her the fine that she may go and eat it in her heathen state? — When she has become of age. When she has become of age too she can protest and go out! — As soon as she was of age she has become of age too she can protest and go out! As soon as she was of age one hour and did not protest she cannot protest any more. Abaye did not say as Raba [said] [because] there [where it speaks of fines we can say]: This is the reason: that the sinner should not have any benefit. Raba did not say as Abaye [said] because in the case of the kethubah [we can say that] this is the reason: that it should not be a light matter in his eyes to send her away.

MISHNAH. WHEN A GROWN-UP MAN HAS HAD SEXUAL INTERCOURSE WITH A LITTLE GIRL, OR WHEN A SMALL BOY HAS INTERCOURSE WITH A GROWN-UP WOMAN, OR [WHEN A GIRL WAS ACCIDENTALLY] INJURED BY A PIECE OF WOOD — [IN ALL THESE CASES] THEIR KETHUBAH IS TWO HUNDRED [ZUZ]. SO ACCORDING TO R. MEIR. BUT THE SAGES SAY: A GIRL WHO WAS INJURED ACCIDENTALLY BY A PIECE OF WOOD — HER KETHUBAH IS A MANEH. A VIRGIN, WHO WAS A WIDOW, A DIVORCEE, OR A HALUZAH FROM MARRIAGE — HER KETHUBAH IS A MANEH.

(1) We will make a similar etymological exposition.
(2) Or ram-like. 'a woman who cannot bear children,’ is connected with (ram).
(3) I.e., who is incapable of bearing children.
(4) If they had sexual intercourse before they were three years and one day old the hymen would grow again, and they would be virgins. V. 9a and 11b and cf. Nid. 44b and 45a.
(5) I.e., a minor who wants to become a proselyte, that is, be converted to Judaism. Prior to and for the purpose of that conversion the would-be proselyte has to undergo circumcision and immersion in water. V. Yeb. 46aff. The immersion is to signify his purification. If the would-be proselyte is a minor (under thirteen years of age) and has no father to act for him, the Court can authorise his ritual immersion.
(6) Lit., ‘they immerse him’.
(7) Lit., ‘by the knowledge’.
(8) Lit., ‘house of judgment’. Three members constitute the court.
(9) To be received into the Jewish Faith.
(10) Lit., ‘not in his presence’. — As the proselyte is a minor he is not, legally speaking, present.
(11) Lit.,’one who worships the stars and planets.’
(12) Lit., ‘lawlessness, unbridled lust.’ — It would therefore be a disadvantage to the minor would-be proselyte to become a Jew.
(13) Cf. Git. 13a. — This confirms the former supposition.
(14) R. Huna.
(15) Lit., ‘these words.’
(16) Lit., ‘who has tasted the taste of what is forbidden’.
(17) To become a Jew.
(18) R. Huna.
(19) The women proselytes.
(20) Because they were less than three years and one day old, consequently minors.
(21) The immersion of the minor proselytes therefore took place by the direction of their father and not of the Court. — This Mishnah is therefore no support for R. Huna.
(22) The minor proselytes.
(23) And leave the Jewish faith and go back to their former state without being liable to a penalty by the Jewish Court.
(24) Lit., ‘he raised against this a point of contradiction from a higher authority.’
(25) V. note 2.
(26) Only then one gives her the kethubah.
(27) Of Judaism; why then give her the kethubah?
(28) The kethubah would be given to her after ‘one hour’.
(29) Lit., ‘These maidens to whom there is a fine’. — The fine is that for seducing a girl; v. Deut. XXII, 29.
(30) Lit., ‘He who came on.’

A Samaritan.

The proselyte.

And adhered to Jewish practice, only then she is paid the fine, v. Tosaf.

Of Judaism.

The fine would be given to her after ‘one hour’.

Did not ask the question of Raba.

In the Mishnah, infra 29a.

Why the fine should be paid to the seduced proselyte girl.

Therefore he should pay the fine in any case. But the case of the kethubah (in our Mishnah) is different. Therefore, Abaye asked from our Mishnah.

He did not ask the same question as Abaye.

Why the kethubah is paid to the woman proselyte.

Lit., ‘she’.

Lit., ‘to bring her out (of his house)’, that is, to divorce her. Therefore he should pay the kethubah in any case. But the case of the fine is different. Therefore Raba asks from the Mishnah infra 29a.

A man who was of age.

Lit., ‘who came on’.

Less than three years old.

Less than nine years of age.

Lit., ‘One who was injured by wood’, as a result of which she injured the hymen.

Lit., ‘the words of’.

A maiden was married, and immediately after the marriage became a widow or divorced, or a haluzah; v. supra 10b.

Lit., ‘their’, that is, the kethubah of each of them.

Since the marriage had taken place she is regarded as a married woman and it is assumed that she is no more a virgin.

Talmud - Mas. Kethuboth 11b

AND THERE IS WITH REGARD TO THEM NO CHARGE OF NONVIRGINITY. A WOMAN PROSELYTE, A WOMAN CAPTIVE AND A WOMAN SLAVE, WHO HAVE BEEN REDEEMED, CONVERTED, OR FREED [WHEN THEY WERE] MORE THAN THREE YEARS AND ONE DAY OLD — THEIR KETHUBAH IS A MANEH, AND THERE IS WITH REGARD TO THEM NO CHARGE OF NON-VIRGINITY.

GEMARA. Rab Judah said that Rab said: A small boy who has intercourse with a grown-up woman makes her [as though she were] injured by a piece of wood. When I said it before Samuel he said: ‘Injured by a piece of wood’ does not apply to flesh. Some teach this teaching by itself: [As to] a small boy who has intercourse with a grown-up woman. Rab said, he makes her [as though she were] injured by a piece of wood; whereas Samuel said: ‘Injured by a piece of wood’ does not apply to flesh. R. Oshaia objected: WHEN A GROWN-UP MAN HAS HAD INTERCOURSE WITH A LITTLE GIRL, OR WHEN A SMALL BOY HAS INTERCOURSE WITH A GROWN-UP WOMAN, OR WHEN A GIRL WAS ACCIDENTALLY INJURED BY A PIECE OF WOOD—[IN ALL THESE CASES] THEIR KETHUBAH IS TWO HUNDRED [ZUZ]; SO ACCORDING TO R. MEIR. BUT THE SAGES SAY: A GIRL WHO WAS INJURED ACCIDENTALLY BY A PIECE OF WOOD — HER KETHUBAH IS A MANEH!

Raba said. It means this: When a grown-up man has intercourse with a little girl it is nothing, for when the girl is less than this, it is as if one puts the finger into the eye; but when a small boy has intercourse with a grown-up woman he makes her as ‘a girl who is injured by a piece of wood.’ and [with regard to the case of] ‘a girl injured by a piece of wood.' itself, there is the difference of opinion between R. Meir and the Sages.

Rami b. Hama said: The difference of opinion⁸ is [only] when he⁹ knew her,¹⁰ for R. Meir compares her¹¹ to a mature girl,¹² and the Sages compare her to a woman who had intercourse with a man.¹³ But if he did not know her,¹⁴ all agree¹⁵ that she has nothing.¹⁶ And why does R. Meir compare her to a mature girl? Let him compare her to a woman who had intercourse with a man! — [In the case of] a woman who had intercourse with a man, a deed had been done to her by a man;¹⁷ but in her case¹十八 — no deed has been done to her by a man. — And why do the Rabbis compare¹⁹ her to a woman who had intercourse with a man? Let them compare her to a mature girl! [In the case of] a mature girl no deed whatsoever has been done to her,²⁰ but in her case — a deed has been done to her.²¹

‘But if he did not know her, all agree that she gets nothing’.²² R. Nahman objected: If she says, ‘I was injured by a piece of wood,’ and he says, ‘No, but thou hadst intercourse with a man’, Rabban Gamaliel and R. Eliezzer say [that] she is believed!²³ But, said Raba, whether he knew’ her²⁴ and whether he did not know her,²⁵ according to R. Meir [her kethubah is] two hundred [zuz],²⁶ [whereas] according to the Rabbis, if he knew her [her kethubah is] a maneh, [if] he did not know her, she gets nothing.²⁷

Raba however changed his opinion²⁸ for it has been taught: How [does] the bringing out of an evil name²⁹ [take place]? He³⁰ comes to court and says, ‘I, So-and-so,³¹ have not found in thy daughter the tokens of virginity.’ If there are witnesses that she has been unchaste under him,³² she gets a³³ kethubah of a maneh.³⁴ [But surely] if there are witnesses that she has been unchaste under him, she is to be stoned³⁵ — It means this: If there are witnesses that she has been unchaste under him, she has to be stoned; if she was unchaste before [the betrothal], she gets a kethubah of a maneh. Now R. Hyya b. Abin said [that] R. Shesheth said: This teaches:³⁶ If he married her in the presumption that she is a virgin and she was found to have had intercourse with a man,³⁷ she gets a kethubah of a maneh. Whereupon R. Nahman objected: ‘If one marries a woman and does not find in her virginity, [and] she says, "After thou hadst betrothed me [to thyself] I was forced and [thus] thy field has been inundated," and he says, "No, but before I betrothed thee [unto me] [thou hadst intercourse with a man], my bargain is [thus] a mistaken one.’ [etc.]³⁸ and [this assuredly means] she is to get nothing³⁹! And R. Hyya b. Abin said to them: Is it possible! R. Amram and all the great ones of the age sat and he answered: In which respect is it indeed a mistaken bargain? In respect of two hundred [zuz:], but a maneh she gets [as a kethubah]. And you⁴⁰ say [that it means] she gets nothing! Whereupon Raba said: He who asked [this question]⁴¹ has asked well, for a mistaken bargain’ means entirely.⁴² But [then] that [other teaching] presents a difficulty.⁴³ Put [it] right⁴⁴ and say thus: If there are witnesses that she was unchaste under him⁴⁵ she has to be stoned, if she was unchaste before [the betrothal], she gets nothing, if she was found to be injured by a piece of wood, she has a kethubah of a maneh. But Surely it was Raba who said [above that], according to the Rabbis, if he did not know her, she gets nothing!⁴⁶ Hence you must conclude⁴⁷ from this⁴⁸ that Raba retracted from that [opinion].⁴⁹ Our Rabbis taught: If the first [husband] took her [the bride] to his home for the purpose of marriage. and she has witnesses that she was not alone [with him],⁵⁰ or even if she was alone [with him], but she did not stay [with him] as much time as is needed for intercourse, the second [husband]⁵¹ cannot raise any complaint with regard to her virginity. for the first [husband] had taken her to his home [for the purpose of marriage].⁵²

---

(1) Although the intercourse of a small boy is not regarded as a sexual act, nevertheless the woman is injured by it as by a piece of wood.
(2) Lit., ‘is not in’.
(3) I.e., the difference of opinion between Rab and Samuel with regard to that question was recorded without any reference to R. Judah.
The Sages differ only with regard to a girl injured by a piece of wood, but not with regard to a small boy who has intercourse with a grown-up woman. This shows that the latter case cannot be compared with the former case. The Mishnah would consequently be against Rab and for Samuel.

Lit., ‘says’.

Lit. ‘here’, that is, less than three years old.

I.e., tears come to the eye again and again, so does virginity come back to the little girl under three years. Cf. Nid. 45a.

Between R. Meir and the Sages.

The husband.

I.e., he knew, when he married her, that the bride was thus injured.

The one who was thus injured.

A bogereth (v. Glos.), a girl of full maturity, may sometimes not have signs of virginity, (v. Yeb. 59a), and her kethubah is nevertheless two hundred zuz.

And had no virginity. Therefore her kethubah is only a maneh, as that of a widow.

Did not know of the injury and thus thought that she was in her full virginity.

Lit., ‘the words of all.’

Lit., ‘it is nothing’. — As he was kept in ignorance of what happened to her, she does not get even a maneh (Rashi).

Lit., ‘by the hands of man’.

Lit., ‘this’.

Lit., ‘instead of comparing’.

Her signs of virginity vanished through her maturity.

Through the piece of wood.

This is the concluding part of the statement.

V. infra 23a. This shews that she gets the kethubah even if he did not know that she had been thus injured.

I.e., knew, when he married her, that she had been injured.

Did not know that she was thus injured.

[And the author of the Mishnah which states that she is believed, will be R. Meir, and she receives two hundred zuz].

V. n. 4. [And our Mishnah which states that she gets only a maneh will represent the view of the Sages in the case where he knew her].

Lit., ‘and Raba went back on himself.’

Cf. Deut. XXII, 13,14.

The husband.

Such and such a person’, — the, husband is addressing the father of his young wife.

I.e., that she had intercourse with a man after their betrothal.

Lit., ‘there is unto her’.

V. infra 46a.

Lit., ‘a daughter of stoning’ — (Cf. Deut. XXII, 20, 21). [How then can she have a claim to a kethubah?]

Lit., ‘this says’.

Before the betrothal.

By a man to have intercourse with him.

Lit., ‘his field’.

V. Mishnah, infra 12b.

I.e., the words ‘my bargain is a mistaken one’ imply that the husband in making this charge denies her the right to receive anything at all. This refutes R. Shesheth's view that she is entitled in such a case to one maneh.

I.e., were present.

Lit., ‘and it was difficult unto them’. I.e., they felt the difficulty presented by the cited Mishnah.

R. Shesheth.

R. Nahman.

I.e., R. Nahman, by asking the question from the cited Mishnah.

I.e., entirely a mistaken bargain and she gets nothing. The question of R. Nahman was therefore a good question.

Lit., ‘That is difficult’. The Baraitha of Kethuboth 46a, which says that if she was unchaste before the betrothal she gets a kethubah of a maneh.

(49) I.e., answer.

(50) I.e., that she had intercourse with a man after their betrothal.

(51) And this is in contradiction with what Raba said just now, namely, that if the young wife was found to be injured by a piece of wood, she has a Kethubah of a maneh.

(52) Lit., ‘hear from this’.

(53) From Raba's statement that one injured thus gets a kethubah of a maneh.

(54) Expressed by Raba previously that, according to the Rabbis, if the husband did not know before the betrothal that the bride was injured, she gets no kethubah at all.

(55) Lit., “that she was not hidden.”

(56) The woman married again after the death of, or divorce by, the first husband.

(57) As she was married before, the second husband must reckon with the possibility of her having had intercourse with the first husband, in spite of the evidence which she can bring to shew that the marriage was not consummated.

Talmud - Mas. Kethuboth 12a

Rabbah said: This teaches that if he married her in the presumption that she was a virgin and she was found to have had intercourse she gets a kethubah of a maneh.¹ R. Ashi said: [No.] generally, I can tell you. she receives indeed nothing; but it is different here, because the first one had married her.² But let us apprehend that perhaps she was unchaste under him!³ — Said R. Sherabia: [We] suppose he betrothed her to himself and had immediately intercourse with her.⁴

Some⁵ there are who refer this⁶ to our Mishnah: A VIRGIN, WHO IS A WIDOW, A DIVORCEE OR A HALUZAH FROM MARRIAGE, — HER KETHUBAH⁷ IS A MANEH AND THERE IS NO CLAIM OF VIRGINITY WITH REGARD TO THEM. A VIRGIN FROM MARRIAGE’ — how is it possible? — When she was brought into the bridal chamber and no intercourse took Place. Rabbah said: This teaches that if he married her in the presumption that she was a virgin and she was found to have had intercourse she gets a kethubah of a maneh.⁸ R. Ashi said: [No.] indeed, I can tell you. generally she gets nothing; but it is different here, because she was brought into the bridal chamber.⁹ But let us apprehend that perhaps she was unchaste under him!¹⁰ — Said R. Sherabia: When he betrothed her to himself and had immediately intercourse with her.¹¹ He who refers this¹² to the Baraitha,¹³ how much more [would this apply] to our Mishnah.¹⁴ But he who refers this to our Mishnah would not apply it to the Baraitha, because he could say unto her, ‘I have relied upon the witnesses.’¹⁵

MISHNAH. HE WHO EATS WITH HIS FATHER-IN-LAW IN JUDAEA WITHOUT THE PRESENCE OF WITNESSES CANNOT RAISE A COMPLAINT REGARDING THE VIRGINITY. BECAUSE HE HAS BEEN ALONE WITH HER.¹⁶

GEMARA. Since it says¹⁷ in the Mishnah HE WHO EATS,¹⁸ it follows that there are places also in Judaea where one does not eat.¹⁹ Abaye said: Conclude from this that in Judaea, too, the places differ in their custom, as it was taught: R. Judah said: In Judaea they used formerly to leave the bridegroom and the bride alone one hour before their entry into the bridal chamber, so that he may become intimate with her,²⁰ but in Galilee they did not do so. In Judaea they used formerly to put up two best men,²¹ one for him and one for her, in order to examine the bridegroom and the bride when they enter the bridal chamber,²² and in Galilee they did not do so. In Judaea, formerly, the best men used to sleep in the house in which the bridegroom and the bride slept, and in Galilee they did not do so. And he who did not act according to this custom could not raise the charge of non-virginity.²³ To which [does this²⁴ refer]? Shall I say [that it refers] to the first clause?²⁵ [If so.] It ought to read, ‘He who acted [according to this custom]!’ Again²⁶ [if you will say that it refers] to the last clause,²⁷ it ought to read, ‘He who was not examined!’²⁸ — Abaye said: Indeed [it refers] to the first clause, so read.²⁹ ‘He who acted [according to this custom].’ Said Raba to him: But it reads,³⁰ He who did not act!’ But said Raba, it means thus: He who did not act according to the custom of Galilee in Galilee but [acted] according to the custom of Judaea in Galilee cannot raise the claim of virginity. R. Ashi said: Indeed [it refers] to the last clause, and we should read, ‘He who was not examined.’

MISHNAH. IT IS ALL ONE WHETHER [THE WOMAN IS] AN ISRAELITISH WIDOW OR A PRIESTLY WIDOW — HER KETHUBAH IS A MANEH. THE COURT OF THE PRIESTS COLLECTED FOR A MAIDEN FOUR HUNDRED ZUZ, AND THE SAGES DID NOT PROHIBIT [IT] TO THEM.

GEMARA. A Tanna taught: And the priestly widow-her ketubah is two hundred zuz. But we have taught in our Mishnah: AN ISRAELITISH WIDOW AS WELL AS A PRIESTLY WIDOW — HER KETHUBAH IS A MANEH! — Said R. Ashi: There were two ordinances. At first they ordained for a maiden four hundred zuz and for a widow a maneh.

(1) [For evidently he relied on the evidence that the first marriage was not consummated, and thus married her on the presumption that she was a virgin. and still it is said that he cannot bring a charge against her to make her forfeit the kethubah of a maneh to which she is entitled as a widow.] (2) After the betrothal to the second husband. [Why then should he not be able to bring a charge against her so as to give witnesses an opportunity to testify as to the true facts?] (3) So that unchastity was impossible. (4) Lit., ‘and some’. (5) I.e.,the observations of Rabbah, R. Ashi and R. Sherabia. (6) I.e., the kethubah of each of them. (7) V. supra p. 60, n. 11. (8) So that it is to be assumed that the marriage was consummated, v. supra p. 60, n. 12.] (9) After the betrothal to the second husband. (10) So that unchastity was impossible. (11) I.e., the observations of Rabbah, R. Ashi and R. Sherabia. (12) In the case of the Baraitha there were witnesses that there was no intercourse. (13) In the Mishnah there were no witnesses that no intercourse took place. (14) And in view of the testimony of the witnesses the presumption that she was a virgin is a strong one, so that R. Ashi’s reply to Rabbah would not hold good. True, ‘the first one married her,’ but there are witnesses who say that no intercourse took place. Rabbah’s deduction from the Baraitha would therefore be justified. (15) And he may have had intimate intercourse with his bride. (16) Lit ‘reaches’. (17) In the house of the father-in-law. (18) V. note 3. (19) Lit ‘that his heart may become bold,’ towards her, that is that he may become used to her. V. Krauss, T.A II, p. 461. n. 341. (20) Heb. Shoshebin, groomsman, v. B.B. (Sonc ed.) p. 615, n. 10. (21) So that they should not deceive one another regarding the tokens of virginity (Rashi). [That would be in such localities in Judaea where the young affianced people were not allowed to be alone before the entry into the bridal chamber. This shews that customs differed in Judaea itself.] (22) Cf. Tosef. Keth. I. (23) The last sentence from ‘and’ till ‘virginity’. (24) In which it said that in Judaea they used to leave the bridegroom and the bride alone. (25) If he did not act according to this custom he ought to be able to raise the charge of non-virginity’. (26) Lit., ‘but’. (27) With regard to the examination by the best men. (28) I.e he over whom there was no supervision by the best man, v. Rashi.
When they saw that they treated them lightly, they ordained for them two hundred [zuz]. When they saw [again] that they kept away from them, for they said, ‘Instead of marrying a priestly widow, we shall rather marry the virgin-daughter of an Israelite,’ they restored their ordinance.

THE COURT OF OUR PRIESTS, etc. R. Judah said [that] Samuel said: They did not say it only [regarding] the court of the priests, but even the noble families in Israel, if they want to do as the priests do, may do [so]. An objection was raised: If one wants to do as the priests do, for instance [if] the daughter of an Israelite [gets] married to a priest, or the daughter of a priest [gets married] to an Israelite, one may do [so]. [We would infer from this that only if] the daughter of an Israelite [gets married] to a priest, or the daughter of a priest [gets married] to an Israelite, [it is allowed to do as the priests do], because there is [then] one side of priesthood. but if the daughter of an Israelite [gets married] to an Israelite, it is not [allowed to do as the priests do]! The Mishnah states here a case of ‘not only’; not only [is it allowed in the case of] the daughter of an Israelite [getting married] to an Israelite, who cannot say to her ‘I raise thee’ [to a higher position]; but [in the case of] the daughter of an Israelite [getting married] to a priest. who can say to her, ‘I raise thee [to a higher position].’ I might think that it is not allowed; [hence] he lets us hear [that this is not so].

MISHNAH. IF A MAN MARRIES A WOMAN AND DOES NOT FIND IN HER VIRGINITY [AND] SHE SAYS, AFTER THOU HADST BETROTHED ME [UNTO THEE] WAS FORCED AND [so] THY FIELD HAS BEEN INUNDATED AND HE SAYS, ‘NO, BUT [IT OCCURRED] BEFORE I BETROTHED THEE [TO ME] AND MY BARGAIN WAS A MISTAKEN BARGAIN’ — RABBAN GAMALIEL AND R. Abaye said to R. Joseph: The opinion of R. Huna and Rab Judah corresponds with the view of Samuel, for we have learned: [If she was pregnant, and they said to her, ‘What is the nature of this embryo?” (and she answered), ‘It is from the man So-and-So, and he is a priest.’ Rabban Gamaliel and R. Eliezer say [that] she is believed. And Rab Judah said [that] Samuel said [that] the halachah is according to Rabban Gamaliel. And R. Samuel b. Judah said to Rab Judah: Sharpwitted one! You said to us in the name of Samuel [that] the halachah is according to Rabban Gamaliel also in the first [Mishnah]. [Now what means]: ‘also in the first [Mishnah]’? [Assuredly it must mean], although one could say ‘leave the money in the possession of its present owner.’ [still] Rabban Gamaliel said: ‘sure’ has it. Is it [then] to say that R. Judah and R. Huna follow the opinion of Rabban Gamaliel, and R. Nahman and R. Johanan follow the opinion of R. Joshua? — R. Nahman can answer you: I even follow the opinion of Rabban Gamaliel; only Rabban Gamaliel says it there because there is miggo. but what miggo is there here? Or [again]: Rabban Gamaliel says it only there, because we Say: leave her in her presumptive state, but here what presumptive state has he got? It is also evident that [it is right] as we have answered, that R. Nahman follows the opinion of Rabban Gamaliel,

(1) The husbands who married widows of priestly stock.
(2) The wives.
(3) And easily divorced them, because the amount of their kethubah was not high (Rashi).
(4) The wives.
(5) The would-be husbands.
(6) The widows of priestly stock.
(7) The would-be husbands.
(8) Lit., ‘we shall go and marry’.
(9) Lit., ‘a virgin, a daughter of an (ordinary) Israelite’, seeing that both receive the same kethubah.
(10) Lit., ‘they restored their words’.
(11) The scholars.
(12) That the kethubah of the virgin-daughter of a priest could be increased to four hundred zuz.
(13) I.e., families of distinguished birth.
(14) Lit., ‘according to the way’, ‘manner’.
(15) And increase the kethubah to four hundred zuz.
(16) I.e., one of them, either the bridegroom or the bride, is of the priestly family.
(17) And increase the kethubah to four hundred zuz.
(18) To increase the kethubah to four hundred zuz.
(19) As they are both of ordinary Israelite families.
(20) To the privileged position of the wife of a priest.
(21) To increase the kethubah to four hundred zuz.
(22) That it is allowed to increase the kethubah to four hundred zuz.
(23) Lit., ‘he who marries’.
(24) Lit., ‘and he did not find’.
(25) I.e., ‘it is thy loss.
(26) I.e., we do not go by what she says and we do not believe her.
(27) With another man.
(28) Lit., ‘for her words’.
(29) I.e., you owe me a maneh.
(30) Lit., ‘this one’.
(31) The person from whom the money is claimed neither denies nor admits the claim.
(32) The person against whom the claim is made must pay’ the maneh to the claimant.
(33) The person against whom the claim is made need not pay anything.
(34) Lit., ‘better’, ‘preferable’. — When one litigant asserts a certainty and the other litigant puts forward the plea of ‘I do not know,’ judgment is given for the one who asserts a certainty.
Or, let stand.
Lit. ‘in the presumption of its owner’. The phrase here signifies: leave the money in the possession of its present holder, because, as he is the holder of the money’, he is in the presumption of being its rightful owner.

Lit., ‘This’.

Lit., ‘it is of Samuel’.

An unmarried woman.
i.e., who is the father of this expected child,‘

Heb. Shinena. V. B.K. (Sonz. ed.) p. 60 n. 2.

I.e., in our Mishnah, which is the first of the three Mishnahs in which Rabban Gamaliel and R. Eliezer say that she is believed. The first Mishnah will also include the following Mishnah, where, as in our Mishnah, the kethubah is the point at issue.

Lit., ‘there is to say’.

[Since he accepts the woman's plea which is ‘sure’ in preference to the husband's which is ‘doubtful’. Which shews that R. Huna and Rab Judah in their ruling follow the view of Samuel that the halachah follows Rabban Gamaliel.]

Lit., ‘R. Nahman says unto thee’.

Lit., ‘I who say ever.

Lit., ‘until now Rabban Gamaliel does not say there’.

Miggo, means since, ‘because,’ and ‘in consequence of,’ and is used here as a legal term, denoting ‘a legal rule according to which a deponent's statement is accepted as true on the ground that, if he had intended to tell a lie, he might have invented one more advantageous to his case,‘ v. Jast. s. v’. The Miggo here is this: Instead of saying that she was forced to have intercourse, she could have said that she was injured by a piece of wood. [This would be a more advantageous plea since it does not disqualify her from marrying a priest as does the plea that she had been forced. And similarly in the case of the next Mishnah she might have maintained that her accident happened after she had become betrothed to him, and thus is entitled to a kethubah of two hundred zuz instead of pleading that it occurred before, reducing thereby her claim to a maneh. V. Rashi.]

In the case of the money claim, what miggo is there which we could apply to the claimant? Therefore, we say, ‘leave the money in the possession of its (present) owner.’

The presumption is that the maiden is a virgin. This presumption holds good until she had been found not to be a virgin, and this has been found only after her betrothal. Therefore she was, at the time of her betrothal, in the presumptive state of a virgin.

There is no presumption in favour of the claimant. The presumption is in favour of the person from whom the money is claimed, since he holds the money.

Lit., ‘says’.

Talmud - Mas. Kethuboth 13a

for if it were [not] so, there would be a difficulty between one law and another law, for it is established for us [that] in civil matters the law is according to R. Nahman, whereas in this [case] R.
Judah [said] that Samuel said [that] the halachah is according to Rabban Gamaliel, Is it not then to be concluded from this [that it is] as we have answered? Conclude [so] from this.

MISHNAH. [IF] SHE SAYS, ‘I WAS INJURED BY A PIECE OF WOOD’, AND HE SAYS, ‘NO, THOU HAST HAD INTERCOURSE WITH A MAN — RABBAN GAMALIEL AND R.
ELIEZER SAY: SHE IS BELIEVED, AND R. JOSHUA SAYS: WE DO NOT LIVE FROM HER MONTH, BUT SHE IS IN THE PRESUMPTION OF HAVING HAD INTERCOURSE WITH A MAN, UNTIL SHE BRINGS PROOF FOR HER STATEMENT.

GEMARA. With regard to what are their claims? — R. Johanan Says: With regard to two hundred [zuz] and a maneh. R.
Eleazar says: with regard to a maneh and nothing. R. Johanan says: With regard to two hundred [zuz] and a maneh, [because] he shares the opinion of R. Meir who says [that] whether he knew of her or did not know of her [she gets as her kethubah] two hundred [zuz]. And R. Eleazar says: With regard to a maneh or nothing, [because] he shares the view of the Rabbis who say [that] whether he knew of her or did not know of her,\(^4\) [she gets as her kethubah] a maneh. It is quite right that R. Eleazar does not say as R. Johanan [says], because he establishes it\(^5\) according to the Rabbis.\(^6\) But why does not R. Johanan say as R. Eleazar [says]? — He holds [that when] he\(^7\) married her in the presumption of [her being] a virgin and she is found to have had intercourse, she has a kethubah of a maneh.\(^8\) [According to this view] here\(^9\) he would say. ‘a maneh,’\(^10\) and she would say. ‘a maneh,’\(^11\) [and] what difference would there be between his claim and her claim?\(^12\) [Now] it is quite right according to R. Eleazar\(^13\) that we have stated\(^2\) two cases,\(^25\) one\(^26\) it to exclude the opinion of Rami b. Hama,\(^27\) and one\(^28\) to exclude the opinion of R. Hiyya b. Abin in the name of R. Shesheth.\(^29\) But according to

R. Johanan why are two cases necessary?\(^30\) — One to show you the strength\(^31\) of Rabban Gamaliel, and one to show you the strength of R. Joshua. The first case to show you the strength of R. Joshua, that, although one could say [there] miggo,\(^32\) she is not believed. The second case to show you the strength of Rabban Gamaliel, that, although one cannot say [there]\(^33\) Miggo, she is believed.

GEMARA. What is the meaning of ‘TALKING’? Ze’iri said: She was hidden.\(^49\) R. Assi said: She had intercourse.\(^50\) It is quite right according to Ze’iri that it Says ‘TALKING’,\(^51\) But according to R. Assi why [does it say] ‘TALKING’? — [It is] a more appropriate expression, as it is written: ‘She eateth, and wipeth her mouth, and saith, ‘I have done no wickedness.’\(^52\) It is quite right according to Ze’iri that he teaches [in the Mishnah] two [cases]: ‘TALKING’ and ‘PREGNANT’,\(^53\) But according to R. Assi, why [does the Mishnah teach] two [cases]? — One case\(^54\) to declare her fit and one case\(^55\) to declare her daughter fit.\(^56\) That is quite right according to him who says [that] he who declares her fit declares [also] her daughter fit.\(^57\) But according to him who says [that] he who declares her fit declares her daughter unfit,\(^58\) what is there to say? — R. Assi holds the view of him\(^59\) who says [that] he who declares her fit declares [also] her daughter fit.

R. Pappa said to Abaye: According to Ze’iri who said: What Is TALKING?’ She was hidden, and R. Joshua said [that] she is not believed — did not Rab say: We punish with lashes for the privacy but we do not prohibit on account of the privacy? Is it to say that it is not according to R. Joshua?\(^60\) — You may even say [that it is according to] R. Joshua. [for] they set a higher standard in matters of priestly descent.\(^61\)

An objection was raised: [If] they saw her go in with someone Into a secret [place]

(1) i.e., the case of our Mishnah.
(2) That she is believed, and consequently she gets a kethubah of two hundred zuz.

(11) He says that she had intercourse with another man, in which case she gets only a maneh; v. the statement of R. Hyya b. Abin, supra 11b and Rabbah's statement, supra 12a.
(12) She claims a maneh as one who was thus injured and according to the Sages, (v. supra 11a) gets a maneh. He says that she had intercourse with a man and therefore gets no kethubah at all, on the view advanced by R. Ashi, supra 12a.
(13) [i.e., The Tanna of this Mishnah shares, in the view of R. Johanan, the opinion of R. Meir, It cannot refer to R. Johanan as he would not be likely to accept the ruling of R. Meir in preference to that of the majority of the Sages (Rashi).]

(29) Who says that, even if she had intercourse with another man, she gets a Kethubah of a maneh, v. supra 11b.
(30) [Only the case of the second Mishnah should have been stated as illustrating the difference of opinion between R. Gamaliel and R. ‘TALKING’ means: ‘she was hidden’ with a man, and she may have had with him intercourse.

‘TALKing’ means: ‘she had intercourse’ with the man.

In the Mishnah. Lit., ‘that he teaches’.

Secret talking. Talking in hiding is also ‘talking’.

I.e., euphemistic.

Also euphemistic expressions.

Also euphemistic expressions.

The first part of the verse reads: ‘So is the way of all adulterous woman.

One case of suspicion and one case of certainty. V. also Rashi.

The case of ‘TALKING’.

To marry a priest, according to R. Gamaliel.

The case of ‘pregnant’.

To marry a priest, according to R. Gamaliel.

Lit., ‘holds Its’.

I.e., the being alone of a man with a married woman. V. Levy and Jast. s,v. יַעֲבֹר.

The married woman to her husband. In spite of the fact that the woman was alone with another man we do not assume that misconduct took place.

According to R. Joshua we would not believe her and we would say that misconduct took place. Consequently, she ought to be forbidden to her husband.

In order to ensure the purity of the priestly families, he made the law stringent in our Mishnah. But ordinarily R. Joshua would not forbid a wife to her husband on account of her having been alone with another man.

Talmud - Mas. Kethuboth 13b

or into a ruin, and they said to her, ‘What sort of a man is he?’ [and she answered]. ‘he is a priest and he is the son of the brother of my father’ — Rabban Gamaliel and R. Eliezer say: She is believed. R. Joshua says: We do not live from her mouth, but she is in the presumption of having had Intercourse with a Nathin or a Mamzer, until she brings proof for her statement. Now it is quite right according to Ze’iri, that he teaches two [cases]: into a secret [place] or into a ruin. But according to R. Assi who said: She had intercourse, why does it teach two cases? — It teaches [only] one [case]: into the secret [place] of the ruin. But it teaches: into a secret [place] or into a ruin! — [But say] one [expression stands] for a ruin of a town and one [expression stands] for a ruin of a field. And they are [both] necessary. for if it had told us [only] concerning a ruin of a town [one might have said that] in this [case] Rabban Gamaliel declares her fit because most [of the men] of the town are fit with regard to her, but in [the case of] a ruin of a field, when most [of the men] are unfit with regard to her. I might say that he agrees with R. Joshua. And if it had told us [only] this [case] I might have said that only] in this case did R. Joshua say [that she is not believed], but in that [case] I might say [that] he agrees with Rabban Gamaliel, [therefore] it was necessary [to state both cases].

An objection was raised. This is a testimony with regard to which the woman is fit. But R. Joshua Says: She is not believed. Said R. Joshua to them: Do you not agree that in the case of a woman who was captured, and there are witnesses that she was captured, and she says. ‘I am pure.’26 she is not believed? They said to him, ‘Yes: but what a difference there is between this case and that case.’27 In this case28 there are witnesses,29 and in that case30 there are no witnesses.31 He said to them: In that case too32 there are also witnesses, for her stomach reaches up to her teeth.33 They said to him, ‘Most of the idolators are unrestrained in sexual matters.’ He said to them: ‘There is no guardian against unchastity.’34 This applies35 only in the case of the testimony of the woman with regard to herself,36 but in the case of the testimony of the woman with regard to her daughter, all agree that the child is a shethuki.37 — [Now] what did he38 say unto them39 and what did they answer him? This they said unto him: ‘You have answered us with regard to the pregnant woman,40 what will you answer us with regard to the woman [whom they saw] talking [to a man]?’41 — He said to them: The woman [whom they saw] talking [to a man] is the same as the captive woman.42 They said to him, ‘The captive woman is different, for most of the idolators are unrestrained in sexual matters.’43 He said to them: Here also,44 since she hid herself,45 there is no guardian against unchastity.46 [Now] at all events he teaches two [cases]: The woman [whom they saw] talking [to a man] and the pregnant woman!47 [This is] a refutation of R. Assi.48 [This is indeed] a refutation,49 — But let this difference weigh with him50 There51 most of the men are unfit with regard to her, but here52 most of the men are fit with regard to her! — This53 supports the opinion of R. Joshua b. Levi, for R. Joshua b. Levi said: He who declares her fit54 declares her fit even when most of the men are unfit,55 and he who declares her unfit declares her unfit even when most of the men are fit.56

R. Johanan said: He who declares her fit declares also her daughter fit, [and] he who declares her unfit declares also her daughter unfit. And R. Eleazar said: [Even] he who declares her fit declares her daughter unfit. Rabba said: What is the reason of R. Eleazar? [This:] It is quite right [with regard to her], she has the presumption of fitness,57 [but] her daughter has no presumption of fitness.58 R. Eleazar objected to [the ruling of] R. Johanan: This only applies to the testimony of the woman with regard to herself, but in the case of the testimony of the woman with regard to her daughter, all agree that the child is a shethuki.59 Does this not [mean] a shethuki and unfit? — No, a shethuki and fit. But is there a shethuki [who is] fit? — Yes, according to Samuel, for Samuel said: [If] ten priests are standing together and one of them goes away60 and has intercourse [with a woman], the child is a shethuki. Now what [means here] a shethuki? Is it to say that he is ‘silenced’ from the property of his father?61 This is evident! Do we know who his father is? — It means one silences him from the rights of priesthood,62 for it is written: ‘And it shall be unto him and to his seed after him the covenant of an everlasting priesthood.63 [that is, only] one whose seed is legitimately descending from him, excluding this one,64 whose seed is not legitimately descending from him.65

A bridal couple66 once came before R. Joseph. She said, ‘It67 is from him’.68 and he said,

(1) A deserted building.
(2) According to whom ‘talking secretly’ or being with a man in a secret place, gives grounds for suspicion, though it does not necessarily imply intercourse.
(3) In the Baraitha just quoted.
(4) ‘Into a secret place’ does not imply misconduct, but ‘into a ruin’ does imply misconduct.
(5) Talking secretly, or being with a man in a secret place affords no grounds for suspicion unless there has been some evidence of misconduct.
(6) In the Baraitha just quoted.
(7) Since the reference here is to a case where misconduct was seen to have taken place, what matters it whether it occurred in a secret place or a ruin?
(8) The Baraitha is to be understood as if the reading was ‘into the secret (place) of the ruin,’ and thus only one case is mentioned.
(9) Both expressions.
(10) In the Baraitha just quoted.
(11) Lit., ‘the majority’.
(12) Most of the inhabitants of the town are Jews, and the intercourse with a Jew does not make her unfit to marry a priest.

(13) All kinds of men resort from all parts to a ruin in the field (Rashi).

(14) She might have had intercourse with a man who makes her unfit to marry a priest.

(15) That she is not believed.

(16) The Baraitha just quoted.

(17) A ruin of a field.

(18) A ruin of a field.

(19) A ruin in the town.

(20) That she is believed.

(21) Cf. Tosef. Keth. I. This is a continuation of a passage in the Tosef, which is identical with the first part of the second case of our Mishnah: ‘She was pregnant (and they said unto her, What is the nature of this embryo’ (and she answered, It is) from the man So-and-so (and) he is a priest’ — Rabban Gamaliel and R. Eliezer say: She is believed.

(22) For variants v. Tosef. loc. cit.

(23) I.e., the woman is legally fit to give that testimony and she is believed.

(25) Lit., ‘a woman captive’.

(26) I.e., no man had intercourse with me during my captivity.

(27) Lit., ‘between this (woman) and this (woman)’.

(28) Lit., ‘to this woman’.

(29) In the case of the captive woman there ate witnesses that she was captured.

(30) Lit., ‘and to this (woman)’.

(31) In the case of the pregnant woman (the case of the Tosefita and our Mishnah) there are no witnesses that she had intercourse with one who makes her unfit for marrying a priest. It is clear, especially from the wording in the Tosefta, that this whole sentence, from ‘yes,’ until ‘witness, is spoken by Rabban Gamaliel and R. Eliezer. V. Rashi.

(32) Of the pregnant woman.

(33) A figurative expression for ‘she is visibly pregnant

(34) No one is immune from the possibility of having forbidden sexual intercourse. And the pregnant woman may have had intercourse with one forbidden to her and may thus have become unfit for a priestly marriage. The whole passage is explained soon.

(35) Lit., ‘with regard to what are these words said’? When do Rabban Gamaliel and R. Eliezer hold that she is believed?

(36) Her testimony with regard to herself is believed.

(37) A shethuki (lit., ‘silenced’) is defined in Kid. 69a as one who knows his mother but does not know who his father is. Therefore, the woman herself may marry a priest, but if she gave birth to a daughter, that daughter may not marry a priest. The corresponding sentence in the Tosefta is much shorter; viz ‘This applies only to the testimony with regard to herself, but with regard to the child all agree that it is a shethuki’.

(38) R. Joshua.

(39) R. Samuel and R. Eliezer.

(40) Her pregnancy is evidence against her.

(41) Why should she not be believed?

(42) The one case is similar to the other case. In both cases there is a strong possibility of intercourse.

(43) It is not only a question of sexual intercourse, but it is also a question who it was with whom the woman had intercourse. In the case of the captive woman, she is made unfit for priestly marriage, because the men among whom she finds herself are mostly unfit for her. But not so in the case of the woman who was talking to a man, where most men are fit for her, v. supra.

(44) In the case of the woman who was talking to another man.

(45) She was talking to the man secretly.

(46) And she may have had intercourse with a man who makes her unfit for a priestly marriage.

(47) The ‘talking woman’ and the pregnant woman are, at all events, two different

(48) According to whom the case of the ‘talking woman’ is also a case of certain sexual intercourse.

(49) I.e., R. Assi stands refuted.

(50) Or, let it be a difference to him (R. Joshua). Lit., ‘let it go out to him’ — ‘let it be different to him’.

(51) In the case of the captive woman.
In the case of the ‘talking woman,

The fact that R. Joshua disregards this difference.

With regard to her, as in the case of the captive woman.

With regard to her, as in the case of the ‘talking woman’.

Legal fitness. She is of legitimate birth and she is fit to marry a priest. The doubt as to the nature of the man with whom she had intercourse does not destroy the presumption of her fitness.

Because suspicion attaches to her very birth. If the man who is the father is unfit, then she is unfit and must not marry a priest. The doubt is sufficient to make her unfit, since there is no presumption of fitness to remove.

V. p. 73, n. 10 and p. 74, n. 4.

Lit., ‘separated himself’.

I.e., he does not inherit the property of his (alleged) father.

He has no share in the rights and privileges of priesthood.

Num, XXV, 13.

The unknown father of the shethuki.

[He cannot transmit the rights of priesthood to his seed, v. Yeb. 100b, but as regards marriage with one of priestly stock, this shethuki is permitted. This shews that one may be a shethuki and yet fit.]

Lit., ‘that betrothed (man) and his betrothed (woman)’.

The child with which she was pregnant.

From her fiance.

Talmud - Mas. Kethuboth 14a

‘Yes. [it is] from me.’ R. Joseph said: Why should we be afraid? First, he admits, and moreover, Rab Judah said [that] Samuel said: The halachah is according to Rabban Gamaliel. Abaye said to him: And in this [case], if he did not admit, would Rabban Gamaliel declare her as fit? Did not Samuel say to Rab Judah: ‘Sharp-witted one! The halachah is according to Rabban Gamaliel, but you should not act upon it, unless most men are fit for her,’ whereas here most men are unfit for her! — And according to your reasoning is not this [statement] in itself difficult? [First he says] ‘The halachah [is. etc.’] [and then] ‘do not act in practice [on it]’! Hence you must say: The one ruling applies before the other after it was done, and in this case also it is like ‘after it was done.’

Abaye asked Rab: Did R. Joshua Say: She is not believed? This would be in contradiction with the following: R. Joshua and R. Judah b. Bathrya testified concerning the widow of a mixed family that she is fit to marry a priest! He said to him: Now is this so? There the woman marries, and [in that case] she examines and then marries; but here the woman misconducts herself; does she first examine and then misconduct herself?

Raba said: Is the contradiction [only] between [one statement of] R. Joshua and [the other Statement of] R. Joshua. [but] not between [one Statement of] Rabban Gamaliel and [another Statement of] Rabban Gamaliel! Surely the concluding clause teaches: Rabban Gamaliel said to them: We accept your testimony, but what can we do, since Rabban Johanan b. Zakkai decreed that no court be set up for this purpose? because the priests will obey you to remove but not to bring near? — But, said Raba; there is no contradiction between [the statement of] Rabban Gamaliel and [the other statement of] Rabban Gamaliel, [because] there it is sure and here it is ‘perhaps.’

Neither is there a contradiction between [the one statement of] R. Joshua and [the other statement of] R. Joshua, [because] there29 there is one doubt [and] here31 there is a double doubt. Therefore, according to Rabban Gamaliel the ‘sure’ is [so] strong [a plea] that even where [there is only] one doubt he declares [her] fit, and the ‘perhaps’ is [so] weak [a plea] that even where there is a double doubt he declares [her] unfit. [And] according to R. Joshua one doubt is [so] strong that even in the case where [she pleads] ‘sure’ he declares [her] unfit, and a double doubt is [so] light that even in the case where [she pleads] ‘perhaps’ he declares [her] fit.
Our Rabbis taught: Which is the widow\textsuperscript{44} of one of a mixed family? When there is with regard to it\textsuperscript{45} [no doubt] on account of mamzeruth,\textsuperscript{46} nathinuth\textsuperscript{47} and on account of slaves of the kings.\textsuperscript{48} R. Meir said:

(1) Lit., ‘one’.
(2) That she is believed, v. supra 12b.
(3) Lit., ‘thou shalt not do a deed’.
(4) As she is betrothed, the only man fit for her is her fiance. To all other men she is prohibited.
(5) This seems self-contradictory!
(6) [If a priest comes to seek guidance in regard to such a marriage we declare it not permissible unless he was held fit for the woman.]
(7) [If he did marry her without consulting the authorities he may retain her.]
(8) [Since she is already betrothed we do not force the bridegroom to put her aside.]
(9) Lit., ‘raised (a contradiction) to’.
(10) V. p. 78, n. 9.
(11)מַעַלְיָה means ‘dough’ and is also a designation for a mixed community or a mixed family, that is a community or a family with an admixture of illegitimate persons or persons of doubtful legitimacy, v. Kid. 69b.
(12) [This shews that we place her on her erstwhile presumption of fitness and refuse to disqualify her for the sake of a doubt.]
(13) I.e., what a comparison!
(14) In the case of ‘Ed.
(15) The purity of the family.
(16) In the case of our Mishnah.
(17) Therefore she is not believed.
(18) Lit., ‘is there no contradiction’.
(19) And one must endeavour to explain R. Gamaliel also.
(20) Of the Mishnah in ‘Ed.
(21) I.e., we approve of what you say.
(22) [Of declaring the legitimacy of such a doubtful case.]
(23) I.e., not to allow persons of doubtful legitimacy to join their families.
(24) They will not obey the court if permission is given for persons of doubtful legitimacy to enter their families. V. ‘Ed. (Sonc. ed.) p. 48, nn. 2-7.
(25) In the case of our Mishnah.
(26) She says that she is sure that she had intercourse with a legitimate person.
(27) In the Mishnah in ‘Ed.
(28) As it is a case of מִלְכֵי the woman herself cannot say that she is sure that the family is free from illegitimate admixtures.
(29) In the case of our Mishnah.
(30) Whether the man with whom she had intercourse was fit or unfit (regarding the priesthood).
(31) In the Mishnah in ‘Ed.
(32) Indeed, in the case of a widow of a member of a mixed family there are many doubts of illegitimacy.
(33) I.e., important.
(34) Against her.
(35) For the priesthood.
(36) Unimportant.
(37) V. p.77, n. 20.
(38) For the priesthood.
(39) In the case of our Mishnah
(40) For the priesthood.
(41) In the Mishnah in ‘Ed.
(42) Unimportant.
For the priesthood. In short, with Rabban Gamaliel the ‘sure’ outweighs one doubt, and with R. Joshua one doubt outweighs the ‘sure’.

Who has been held to be fit for marrying a priest: Tosaf. omits ‘widow’. And indeed in Tosef., kid. V the word is left out. The reference will be to a girl of a mixed family and not to a widow of a member of a mixed family. v. Tosaf. [On the whole subject of ריהו יד v., Rosenthal F. MGWJ 1881, also pp. 38ff and Freund L. Schwartz-Festschrift p. 163ff and Graetz op. cit. 1879, pp. 99ff].

The family.

Mamzer-ship.

Nathin-ship. For nathin and mamzer v. Glos.

Cf. Neh. VII, 57, and Yeb. 17b. [According to Rashi the reference is to the Herodian dynasty.] When there is no suspicion, with regard to that family, of intermarriage with mamzerim, nathinim and royal slaves.

Talmud - Mas. Kethuboth 14b

I have heard that when there is none of these [defects] in the family one permits [its members] to marry into the priesthood. R. Simeon b. Eleazar said in the name of R. Meir. and R. Simeon the son of Menasia also said it:¹ Which is the widow [of one] of a mixed family? When a doubtful halal² was mixed up³ in it, [for] the Israelites know the mamzerim who are among them, but they do not know the halalim who are among them.⁴

The Master said: ‘Which is the widow [of one] of a mixed family? When there is with regard to it [no doubt] on account of mamzeruth, nathinuth and on account of slaves of the kings’. [This would show that if there is a doubt on account of] a halal [in the family] it is fit.⁵ Why should these⁶ be different? [Because] these are Biblical? A halal is also Biblical!⁷ And further:⁸ ‘R. Meir said: I have heard that when there is none of these [defects] in the family one permits [its members] to marry into the priesthood’. This is the same [as that which] the first Tanna⁹ [taught]! And further:¹⁰ R. Simeon b. Eleazar said in the name of R. Meir, and R. Simeon b. Menasia also said it: Which is the widow [of one] of a mixed family? When a halal was mixed up in it, [for] the Israelites know the mamzerim who are among them, but they do not know the halalim who are among them.’ Surely it says in the first clause [that if there is a doubt regarding] a halal [in the family, the family is] fit [to marry into the priesthood]! R. Johanan said: There is a difference between them [concerning a person who when he is called] mamzer protests and [when he is called] halal is silent. The first Tanna holds [that] every person who when called ‘unfit’ is silent is [considered] unfit, and thus the first Tanna said: Which is the widow [of one] of a mixed family? When there is in it no one who is silent if he is called mamzer or nathin, or slave of the king, or halal. Whereupon R. Meir said to him: This applies only to [each of] these cases¹¹ since [he who calls him thus is liable to] render him unfit [to enter] into [the congregation,] but he who is called a halal and is silent,¹² is fit, and the reason he is silent is that it does not trouble him.¹³ Whereupon R. Simeon b. Eleazar said to the first Tanna¹⁴ of R. Meir: If you have heard that R. Meir declares the person fit in the case of silence, this is not when he is called halal and is silent, but when he is called mamzer and is silent, for the reason he is silent is because he says to himself; ‘a mamzer is well-known’.¹⁵ But [if he is called] mamzer and he protests, or [he is called] halal and is silent he is unfit,¹⁶ for the reason he is silent is because he thinks, ‘it is enough if he is not excluded from the congregation’.¹⁷

One Baraitha taught: R. Jose says: [if he is called] mamzer and is silent, he is fit, and if he is called halal and is silent, he is unfit. And another Baraitha taught: [if he is called] halal and is silent he is fit, [but if he is called] mamzer and is silent, he is unfit. There is no difficulty;¹⁸ the one¹⁹ is according to the first Tanna in the sense of R. Meir, and the other one is according to R. Simeon b. Eleazar in the sense of R. Meir.

MISHNAH. R. JOSE SAID: IT HAPPENED THAT A GIRL WENT DOWN TO DRAW²⁰ WATER FROM A SPRING AND SHE WAS RAVISHED. R. JOHANAN B. NURI SAID: IF GEMARA. Raba said to R. Nahman: According to whom did R. Johanan b. Nuri say [this n the Mishnah?]. If according to Rabban Gamaliel, [surely] he declares as fit even when there is a majority of unfit! [And] if it is according to R. Joshua, [surely] he declares as unfit even when there is a majority of fit! — He said to him: Rah Judah said [that] Rab said:

1. Lit., ‘according to his words’.
2. Halal is one who is profaned, unfit for priesthood on account of his father’s illegitimate connection. Cf. Lev. XXI, 15 and v. Kid. 77a and 77b. A doubtful halal is a person about whom there is a doubt whether he is a halal or not.
3. דמгалין means ‘to be mixed up beyond recognition’. V. Jast.
4. Therefore one has to be careful with regard to doubtful halalim.
5. [The widow would not be disqualified where there was a doubtful admixture of a halal in her dead husband’s family.]
6. [The marriage to any one of those enumerated in the Baraitha is Biblically forbidden and consequently renders the woman who marries the offspring of such an union unfit for a subsequent marriage to a priest, v. Yeb. 68a.]
8. Another difficulty.
9. The first statement of the Baraitha and R. Meir’s are practically identical.
10. Another difficulty.
11. Mamzer, nathin and royal slave.
12. [And does not protest against the stigma attached to his descent.]
13. Since he is not excluded from the congregation.
14. That is, the teacher who transmitted the words of R. Meir and said in his name ‘I have heard, etc.’ and not the first Tanna of the cited Baraitha.
15. Lit., a mamzer has a voice — And since he is not regarded generally as a mamzer he does not think it worth while to protest against the assertion of one man.
16. For the priesthood.
17. As he is not excluded from the congregation, he does not desire any investigations into his origin (Rashi).
18. There is no contradiction between these two Baraithas.
19. The second Baraitha.
20. Lit., ‘to fill’.
22. Are entitled to marry their daughters to priests. This shows that they are ‘fit’.
23. Because the man with whom she had intercourse is taken to be one of the majority, and the majority consists of ‘fit’ men,
24. Because he places the woman on the presumption of fitness, v. supra 13b.
25. V. supra 13b.

Talmud - Mas. Kethuboth 15a

The incident happened at the springs of Zepphoris, and the ruling followed R. Ammi, for R. Ammi said: and that is when a company of unfit men passed by there, and also R. Jannai. for R. Jannai: If she had intercourse at the springs she is fit for the priesthood. — Do you really mean to say at the springs? — But rather [say]: If she had intercourse at the time of [the people visiting] the springs she is fit for the priesthood. But if someone went from Zepphoris and had intercourse [with her], the child is a shethuki. This is according to the following: When R. Dimi came he said that Ze'iri said [in the name of] R. Hanina, and some say: Ze'iri said [in the name of] R. Hanina: One goes after the majority of [the inhabitants of] the town and one does not go after the majority of the [passing] company. — Just the reverse! These move about and those are stationary! — But [say thus]: One goes after the majority of the [inhabitants of the] town, but only when there is [also] the majority of the [passing] company with it, but one does not go after the majority of the [inhabitants of the] town alone, nor after the majority of the [passing] company alone.\textsuperscript{11} — What is the reason?\textsuperscript{12} — It is prohibited\textsuperscript{13} [to go after] the majority of the [passing] company in order to prevent\textsuperscript{14} [going after] the majority of [the inhabitants of] the town. But even [in the case of] the majority of [the inhabitants of] the town, if he, went\textsuperscript{15} to her, [let us say that] he who separates himself separates himself from the majority?\textsuperscript{16} — It speaks of a case\textsuperscript{17} when she went to him.\textsuperscript{18} so that he was stationary,\textsuperscript{19} and R. Zera said: All that is stationary is considered as half to half.\textsuperscript{20} But do we require two majorities? Has it not been taught: if nine [meat] shops\textsuperscript{21} all of them, sell ritually killed meat and one [shop sells] meat not ritually slaughtered and he bought in one\textsuperscript{22} of them and he does not know in which of them he bought, it is prohibited because of the doubt;\textsuperscript{23} but if [meat] was found,\textsuperscript{24} one goes after the majority?\textsuperscript{25} And if you will say that [it speaks of a case] when the gates of the city are not closed,\textsuperscript{26} so that a majority\textsuperscript{27} came [also] from outside,\textsuperscript{28} did not R. Zera say: even when the gates of the city are closed? — Where purity of descent is concerned they\textsuperscript{30} put up a higher standard.\textsuperscript{31}

The text says: ‘R. Zera said: All that is stationary is considered as half to half.’ [This apparently means] whether it is for leniency or for strictness.\textsuperscript{32} Whence does R. Zera take it? Shall I say from [the Baraitha which teaches that] if nine [meat] shops, all of them, sell ritually killed meat and one [shop sells] meat not ritually slaughtered and he bought in one of them\textsuperscript{33} and he does not know in which of them he bought, it is prohibited because of the doubt; but if [meat] was found, one goes after the majority? There it is for strictness!\textsuperscript{34} But [he derives it] from [the following]: If there were [in a certain place] nine frogs and one reptile\textsuperscript{35} and he touches one of them and he does not know which of them he touched he is unclean because of the doubt? — There also it is for strictness!\textsuperscript{36} — But [rather] from [the following]: If there were [in a certain place] nine reptiles and one frog and he touches one of them and he does not know which of them he touched, [if this happened] on private ground he is unclean because of the doubt, [but] if this happened in a public place,\textsuperscript{37} he is clean because of the doubt.\textsuperscript{38}

And how do we know this\textsuperscript{39} from the Bible? — The verse says: And if he lie in wait for him and rise up against him,\textsuperscript{40} [that is to say that he is not guilty of murder] until he intended [to kill] him. And the Rabbis? — They said in the school of R. Jannai: This excludes one who throws a stone into [a group of people]. What case do you mean? Do you mean a case when there are nine idolators and one Israelite? Let it be sufficient for him\textsuperscript{41} that the majority are idolators,[and] even if [you will say that it is considered as] half to half, [the rule is that] when there is a doubt in capital cases one takes a lenient view! — It speaks of a case when there are nine Israelites and one idolator, so that the idolator is stationary, and whatever is stationary is considered as half to half.\textsuperscript{42}

It was stated: R. Hiyya b. Ashi [said that] Rab said [that] the law is according to R. Jose.\textsuperscript{43} And R. Hanan b. Raba [said that] Rab said [that] it was [only] a decision for the hour.\textsuperscript{44} R. Jeremiah argued: And for pure descent we do not require two majorities? Have we not learned:

That we do not go after the majority of the (passing) company.

Lit., ‘a prohibition’

Lit., ‘on account of’.

Lit., ‘if they went’, that is to say one of the inhabitants of the town.

I.e., he who comes away from a crowd, or a community is regarded as having come away from those who constitute the majority of the crowd or community. And if the majority of the town consists of fit people, we ought to assume that the man who had intercourse with the woman was one of the majority and did not disqualify her from marrying a priest, and that no blemish attaches to the child.

Lit., ‘no, necessarily’.

Lit., ‘to them’.

I.e., fixed in one place.

The rule of majority does not apply, v. infra.

Out of the ten meat-shops that are in the market

Lit., ‘from’.

Lit., ‘its doubt is prohibited’. [Because the prohibited minority is in a fixed, settled place (kabu'a), v. infra.]

In the market-place, in which the ten shops are situated.

And the majority of the shops sell ritually killed meat. Thus we see that one single majority is sufficient.

[And meat is admitted from the outside.]

Of butchers selling ritually killed meal.

Lit., ‘from the world’. [So that there are two majorities — the majority of local Jewish butchers and the majority of Jewish butchers from outside.]

Lit., ‘although’.

The Sages.

And therefore two majorities are required, cf. supra 13a.

I.e., whether the result of this rule is lenient or strict, that is, to allow or to prohibit (whichever it may be).

This illustrates the principle of kabu’a, a fixed, stationary prohibition.

And you cannot derive from this for leniency.

Dead reptiles make ritually unclean, but not frogs, v. Lev, XI, 29.

And you cannot derive from this for leniency.

[On the principle that a doubtful ease of uncleanness is clean if it arises in a public place but unclean if in private ground v. Sot. p. 140.]

From this Baraitha you can derive both for strictness and for leniency.

The rule: what is stationary is considered half to half.

V. Deut. XIX, 11.

Lit., ‘let it be deduced by him’.

In our Mishnah.

A special decision for the occasion, regard having been had to certain circumstances, which is not to be taken as a precedent, for elsewhere two majorities are required.

Talmud - Mas. Kethuboth 15b

[If] one found in it an abandoned child — if the majority [of the inhabitants of the town consist of] non-Israelites [the child is] a non-Israelite, if the majority [of the inhabitants of the town consist of] Israelites [the child is] an Israelite, [and if the inhabitants of the town are] half to half, [the child is] an Israelite. And Rab said: They have taught this only with regard to sustaining it, but not with regard to pure descent. And Samuel said: [They have taught this only] with regard to removing debris for its sake — That which Rab Judah said in the name of Rab [namely, that] the incident happened at the springs of Zepphoris, escaped his attention. But according to R. Hanan b. Raba who said [that] it was a decision for the hour, it is difficult. He who taught this did not teach that.
The [above] text [says]: ‘[If] one found in it an abandoned child — if the majority [of the inhabitants of the town consist of] non-Israelites [the child is] a non-Israelite. if the majority [of the inhabitants of the town consist of] Israelites [the child is] an Israelite, [and if the inhabitants of the town are] half to half [the child is] an Israelite. Rab said: They have taught this only with regard to sustaining it, but not with regard to pure descent. But Samuel said: [They have taught this only] with regard to removing debris for its sake.’ But did Samuel say so? Did not R. Joseph say that R. Judah said in the name of Samuel: We do not go with regard to saving life after the majority?15 — But the saying of Samuel referred16 to the first clause: ‘If the majority [of the inhabitants of the town consist of] non-Israelites [the child is] a non-Israelite.’ [Upon this] Samuel said: And with regard to removing debris it is not so.17 ‘If the majority [of the inhabitants of the town consist of] non-Israelites [the child is] a non-Israelite’ — for what practical purpose [is this taught]? — R. Papa said: To allow him to eat [meat of] animals not ritually slaughtered. — ‘If the majority [of the inhabitants of the town consist of] Israelites [the child is] an Israelite,’ — for what practical purpose [is this taught]? — R. Papa said: That one returns to him a lost object.18 If the inhabitants of the town are] half to half [the child is] an Israelite’ — for what practical purpose [is this taught]? Resh Lakish said: With regard to damages.19 How shall we imagine this case? Shall we say that an ox of ours20 gored21 an ox of his?22 [In this case] let him23 say to him.24 ‘Bring evidence that you are an Israelite — and take!’25 It speaks of a case when an ox of his26 gored an ox of ours27 — one half he28 pays, and with regard to the other half he says to them,29 ‘Bring evidence that I am not an Israelite and I will pay30 you.31

(11) It is now being assumed that R. Hanan also accepted the explanation that it occurred at the springs of Zepphoris, so that there were two majorities and he regards this ruling of R. Johanan b. Nuri only as a special decision, but elsewhere, two majorities are not required.
(12) Why does Rab say in the case of the abandoned child ‘but nor with regard to pure descent’, which would shew that Rab requires two majorities also in other cases?
(13) That Rab said here ‘but not with regard to pure descent’.
(14) That R. Judah said in the name of Rab that the incident happened at the springs of Zepphoris. Indeed there was only one majority there, and therefore R. Hanan said, ‘it was a decision for the hour’, v. supra, p 83, n. 10 In all other cases two majorities are required.

Talmud - Mas. Kethuboth 16a

FOR THE MOUTH THAT BOUND IS THE MOUTH THAT LOOSENS.¹ BUT IF THERE ARE WITNESSES THAT IT² BELONGED TO HIS FATHER AND HE SAYS, ‘I BOUGHT IT FROM HIM.’ HE IS NOT BELIEVED.

GEMARA. The reason³ is that there are witnesses,⁴ but if there are no witnesses the husband is believed. Is it to say that the anonymous and undisputed decision⁵ recorded in our Mishnah is not according to Rabban Gamaliel? For if it were according to Rabban Gamaliel, did not he say that she is believed?⁶ You may even say [that it is according to] Rabban Gamaliel; [for] Rabban Gamaliel says [it]⁷ only there in [a case of] ‘sure’ and ‘perhaps’.⁸ but here⁹ where they are both¹⁰ sure¹¹ [in their statements] he¹² did not say [it]¹³ — But he who raised the question, how could he raise it at all?¹⁴ Surely this is a case where they are both ‘sure’ [in their statements]! — Since most women get married as virgins you might say that] it¹⁵ is like ‘sure and perhaps’.¹⁶ This¹⁷ may also be proved by the following reasoning, since it is stated: AND R. JOSHUA ADMITS [etc.]¹⁸ It is well if you say [that] Rabban Gamaliel admits.¹⁹ But if you say [that] Rabban Gamaliel does not admit.²⁰ to whom does [then] R. Joshua admit?²¹ Do you think [that] R. Joshua refers to this chapter?²² He refers to miggo²³ in the first chapter.²⁴ To which?²⁵ Is it to say [that he refers] to this: If she was pregnant, and they said to her. ‘What is the nature of this embryo’. [and she answered, ‘it is] from man So-and-so and he is a priest’. Rabban Gamaliel and R. Eliezer say: She is believed, [and] R. Joshua says: We do not live from her mouth²⁶ What miggo is there in that case²⁷ Behold, her stomach reaches up to her teeth²⁸ Again [should it refer] to this: They saw her talking with someone and they said to her: ‘what is the character of this man?’ [and she answered, ‘it is] man So-and-so and he is a priest’. Rabban Gamaliel and R. Eliezer say: She is believed [and] R. Joshua says: We do not live from her mouth?29 [There too.] what miggo is there? True, there is according to Ze’iri, Who says [that] ‘she was talking’ means ‘she was hiding herself’ [with a man]. [in which case she has] a miggo, for if she wished she could say, ‘I had no intercourse,’ and [still] she said, ‘I had intercourse,’ [therefore] she is believed. But according to R. Assi, who says [that] ‘she was talking’ means ‘she had intercourse, what miggo is there?30 Or again [should he refer] to this: She says, ‘I was injured by [a piece of] wood,’ and he says, ‘Not so, but thou wast trodden by a man.’ Rabban Gamaliel and R. Eliezer say: She is believed, and R. Joshua says: We do not live from her mouth?31 [There too] what miggo is there? True, there is according to R. Eliezer, who says that [the dispute between the husband and the wife is] with regard to a maneh and nothing.32 [In which case she has] a miggo, for if she wished she could say, ‘I was injured by a piece of wood under thee,’33 and she would get two hundred [zuz.],34 and [still] she said [that she was injured] earlier,35 [therefore] she is believed. But according to R. Johanan who says that [the dispute between the husband and the wife is] with regard to two hundred [zuz] and a maneh,36 what miggo is there?37 — But [he refers] to this: If one has married a woman and has not found in her virginity [and] she says, ‘After thou hast betrothed me [to thyself] I was violated and thy field has been inundated,’ and he says, ‘Not so, but [it happened] before I betrothed thee [to myself]’. Rabban Gamaliel and R. Eliezer say: She is believed, and R. Joshua says: We do not live from her mouth.38 For [here there is] a miggo, because if she wished she could say, ‘I was injured by a piece of wood under thee,’ and [by saying this] she would not make herself unfit for the priesthood. and [still] she said, ‘I have been violated’, and [by saying this] she made herself unfit for the priesthood; therefore Rabban Gamaliel said that she is believed. And R. Joshua said to Rabban Gamaliel: With regard to this miggo here,39 I agree with you, but with regard to that miggo there,40 I differ from you. Now, this is a miggo and that is a miggo, what difference is there between this miggo and that miggo? Here41 there is no slaughtered ox before you, there42 there is a slaughtered ox before you.43 But since most women get married as virgins,44 [even] if no witnesses came,45 what of it?46 — Rabina said: Because one can say: 47 most women marry as maidens and a minority as widows. And whenever a maiden gets married, it is spoken about,48

(1) I.e., if that person had been silent the other man would not have known that the field ever belonged to his father. We have, therefore, to believe both his statements.

(2) The field.

(3) Of the decision given in our Mishnah that the kethubah of the woman is two hundred zuz.

(4) That she went out on her wedding day with the hinuma and uncovered head.

(5) Lit., ‘we have learnt without definition.’

(6) V. supra 12b.

(7) That she is believed.

(8) There (in the Mishnah 22b) the husband cannot be ‘sure’ with regard to his statement, while the wife can be sure. V. Rashi.

(9) In our Mishnah.

(10) The husband and the wife.

(11) Lit., ‘in sure and sure’.

(12) Rabban Gamaliel.

(13) That the wife is believed. The wife is not believed more than the husband.

(14) The answer is so obvious.

(15) The case in our Mishnah.

(16) The statement of the wife is more ‘sure’ than that of her husband. And therefore you might say that she is believed even when there are no witnesses that she went out with a hinuma’ and her head uncovered. And as this is, apparently, not the view of our Mishnah, the questioner raised his question.

(17) That Rabban Gamaliel would admit that, if there were no witnesses that she went out with a hinuma’ and her head uncovered, the husband would be believed (Rashi).

(18) V. second clause of our Mishnah.
Lit., ‘Rabban Gamaliel treats of "he admits".’ I.e., It is well, if it is assumed that Rabban Gamaliel admits that, in the absence of witnesses, (v. n. 13) the husband is believed, since it is a case of ‘sure’ and ‘sure’; in which case the author of the first clause of the Mishnah is Rabban Gamaliel, who while differing from R. Joshua in a case of ‘sure’ and ‘perhaps’ (as in the Mishnah on 12b), agrees here with R. Joshua, since it is a case of ‘sure’ and ‘sure’. And, therefore, it is said in the second clause of the Mishnah ‘AND R. JOSHUA ADMITS,’ namely In the first clause of the Mishnah Rabban Gamaliel admits to R. Joshua. and in the second clause R. Joshua admits to Rabban Gamaliel (Rashi).

V. n. 15.

To what do the words ‘AND R. JOSHUA ADMITS’ refer, seeing that no mention is made previously in the Mishnah of any dispute.

I.e., to the first clause in the first Mishnah of this Chapter.

I.e., the controversy regarding miggo v. supra p. 67. n. 8.

Lit ‘he refers to miggo and he refers to the first chapter’.

I. e., to which ease does he refer?

V. supra 13a, second Mishnah, second clause.

Lit., ‘there’.

She could not say that she had no intercourse! What other statement could she have made which would have been more to her advantage?

V. supra 13a. second Mishnah, first clause.

She could not say that she had no intercourse since there is evidence to the contrary! What other statement could she have made which would have been more to her advantage?

V. infra 13a, first Mishnah.

V. Supra 13a.

Since our betrothal. In which ease she is entitled to two hundred zuz.

V. supra p. 69.

That is, before the betrothal and thus claims only a maneh.

V. supra p. 68. And she would get two hundred (zuz) if she was injured by a piece of wood, whether she was injured before or after the betrothal.

V. preceding note.

V. supra 12b.

The second clause of our Mishnah. The man could have been silent, therefore we believe also his second statement.

In the Mishnah 22b.

In the second clause of our Mishnah.

In the Mishnah 12b.

The phrase ‘there is a slaughtered ox before you’ means, there is a fact which cannot be wiped out or denied. This applies to the Mishnah 12b. The virginity is not there. This fact remains. According to R. Joshua in such a case a miggo is of no avail. But in our Mishnah the other person would not have known that the field once belonged to his father if the present holder had not told him so. This is meant by the phrase, ‘There is no slaughtered ox before you.’ There is no fact here if the holder of the field had not stated it. In such a case a miggo is applied, because we assume that the holder of the field would not have said it if he had not bought the field from the other man's father.

Reverting to the argument at the beginning of this folio.

That she went out with a hinuma and uncovered head.

She should be regarded as having belonged to the majority and therefore having been a virgin at her marriage, so that her kethubah would be two hundred (zuz).

Lit., ‘there is to say’.

Lit., ‘she has a voice.’ A girl's marriage is much more spoken about than a widow's marriage. A girl's marriage is also much more festive and much more public.

Talmud - Mas. Kethuboth 16b

and since this one was not spoken about,¹ [the presumption that she belonged to] the majority has become shaken. — But if [you maintain that] whenever a maiden gets married it is spoken about, [then even] when witnesses come,² what of it?³ They are false witnesses!⁴ — But, said Rabina: most marriages of maidens are spoken about, and in the case of this one, since it was not spoken about, the presumption that she — the bride — belonged to the majority has been shaken. IF THERE ARE WITNESSES THAT SHE WENT OUT WITH A HINUMA, etc. Should we not be afraid that perhaps she might produce witnesses before this court and get [her kethubah] paid and [later] she might produce the written document [of the kethubah] before another court and get [her kethubah] paid [a second time] by that [document]? — R. Abbahu said: This teaches [that] one writes a quittance. R. Papa said: It speaks of a place in which one does not write a kethubah document. Some refer this to the following Baraitha: If she lost her kethubah document, or she hid it, or it was burnt, then the matter is as follows: if they danced before her, played before her, passed before her the cup of [glad] tidings, or the cloth of virginity and if she has witnesses with regard to one of these things, her kethubah is two hundred [zuz]. Now should we not be afraid that perhaps she might produce witnesses before this court and get [her kethubah] paid and [later] she might produce the written document before another court and get [her kethubah] paid [a second time] by that document? — R. Abbahu said: This teaches [that] one writes a quittance. R. Papa said: It speaks of a place in which one does not write a kethubah document. But does it not say ‘[if] she lost her kethubah document’? — [It so happened] that he wrote her [one]. But may she not after all produce it and get [her kethubah] paid [a second time] with it! The meaning of ‘she lost [it]’ is ‘she lost [it] in fire.’ And then, what can you say with regard to ‘she hid [it]’? And furthermore, why [mention] ‘she lost [it]’? — But [this is what the Baraitha means]: if she lost it, it is as if she had hidden it before us, and we do not give her [the kethubah money] until witnesses say [that] her kethubah document has been burnt. He who refers this to the Baraitha, all the more does he refer it to the Mishnah. But he who refers this to our Mishnah does not refer it to the Baraitha, because of the difficulty. IF THERE ARE WITNESSES, etc. Should we not be afraid that perhaps she might produce witnesses of hinuma before this court and get [her kethubah] paid and [later] she might produce [other] witnesses of hinuma before another court and get [her kethubah] paid [a second time]? — Where it is not possible otherwise, we certainly write a quittance. [It is said above in the Baraitha]: ‘[If] they passed before her the cup of [glad] tidings.’ What is the cup of [glad] tidings? R. Adda the son of Ahaba said: One passes before her a cup of wine of Terumah, as if to say, ‘This one is worthy of eating Terumah.’ R. Papa demurred to this: Does not a widow eat Terumah? But, said R. Papa, ‘This one is “first” as Terumah is “first”.’ It has been taught: R. Judah says: One passes before her a cask of wine. R. Adda the son of Ahaba said: [If she was] a virgin one passes before her a closed one, and if she has had intercourse with a man one passes before her an open one. Why? Let us pass [a cask of wine] before a virgin and let us not pass [a cask of wine] at all before one who had intercourse? — It may happen some times that she has seized two hundred [so] and [then] says, ‘I was a virgin and they did not pass [a cask of wine] before me because they were prevented by an accident.’ Our Rabbis taught: How does one dance before the bride? Beth Shammai say: ___

(1) If this had been known as a maiden's marriage it would have been made public and there would have been people to come forward and give evidence that she went out with a hinuma and her head uncovered.
(2) And say that she went out with a hinuma and uncovered head.
(3) Since this marriage was not spoken about, one should say that she was not married as a maiden.
(4) Since other people knew nothing about it.
(5) Not ‘all marriages of maidens’.
(6) Therefore, the presence or absence of witnesses makes all the difference.
(7) [And the husband produces a quittance that he paid her the kethubah, cf. B.B. 171b.]
(8) [He holds that no quittance may be written for fear of putting the lender at a disadvantage in case he loses it. What they do on payment is to tear up the bond without which the creditor cannot claim his debt.]
(9) [And the woman collects her dues in the court since it is a condition enjoined by the court, v. infra 51a.]
(10) Lit., ‘teach’.
(12) כהה שלושה, v. infra.
(13) On the day of her marriage.
(14) Which are only done at the marriage of a virgin.
(15) And this shows that a kethubah document was written.
(16) And she cannot produce it any more.
(17) If she hid it, she can produce it.
(18) As ‘she lost (it)’ is mentioned separately, it cannot mean ‘in fire’.
(19) This means that if ‘she lost’ it or ‘she hid’ it, she does not get the kethubah money unless she finds the document and produces it. If she says ‘it was burnt,’ she must produce witnesses that it was burnt. This answer is indeed unsatisfactory.
(21) V. supra note 10.
(22) [In a place where no kethubah is written, and the woman collects her dues at the court by means of witnesses, and there is the possibility for her to produce two sets of witnesses before two different courts and collect her kethubah twice.]
(24) V. Glos.
(25) That is, she is unblemished and fit to marry a priest.
(26) A widow may also marry a priest.
(27) I. e., she is a virgin and for the first time dedicated to married life.
(28) Terumah is called ‘first’, cf. Num. XV, 20, 21; Deut. XVIII, 4.
(29) If she is in possession of the two hundred zuz the onus probandi is on the other party.
(30) Rashi says: They were intoxicated from the wine which they drank at the wedding, and the other party could not bring evidence to disprove her statements. But now that a cask of wine has to be passed also before one who was not a virgin, witnesses will be available to testify that in the latter case an open cask was passed before her.
(31) What does one sing or recite?
The bride as she is. And Beth Hillel say: ‘Beautiful and graceful bride!’ Beth Shamai said to Beth Hillel: If she was lame or blind, does one say of her: ‘Beautiful and graceful bride’? Whereas the Torah said, ‘Keep thee far from a false matter.’ Said Beth Hillel to Beth Shamai: According to your words, if one has made a bad purchase in the market, should one praise it in his eyes or depreciate it? Surely, one should praise it in his eyes. Therefore, the Sages said: Always should the disposition of man be pleasant with people. — When R. Dimi came, he said: Thus they sing before the bride in the West: no powder and no paint of the hair, and still a graceful gazelle. When the Rabbis ordained R. Zera they sang before him thus: No powder and no paint and no waving of the hair, and still a graceful gazelle. When the Rabbis ordained R. Ammi and R. Assi they sang before them thus: Such as these, such as these ordain unto us, but do not ordain unto us of the perverters or babblers, and some say: of the half-scholars or one-third-scholars. When R. Abbahu came from the Academy to the court of the Emperor, from the Imperial house went out towards him and sang before him thus, ‘Prince of his people, leader of his nation, shining light, blessed be thy coming in peace!’ They tell of R. Judah b. Ila'i that he used to take a myrtle twig and dance before the bride and say: ‘Beautiful and graceful bride.’ R. Samuel the son of R. Isaac danced with three [twigs]. R. Zera said: The old man is putting us to shame. When he died, a pillar of fire came between him and the whole of the world. And there is a tradition that a pillar of fire has made such a separation only either for one in a generation or for two in a generation only. R. Zera said: His twig [benefited] the old man, and some say: His habit [benefited] the old man, and some say: his folly [benefited] the old man. — R. Aha took her on his shoulder and danced [with her]. The Rabbis said to him: May we also do it? He said to them: If they are on you like a beam, [then it is] all right. and if not, [you may] not. R. Samuel b. Nahmani said [that] R. Jonathan said: it is allowed to look intently at the face of the bride all the seven days. — R. Abbahu said: The old man is putting us to shame. Therefore, our Rabbis taught: One causes a funeral procession to make way for a bride, and the Sages praised him. — They praised him — from this it would seem that he did well. Did not R. Ashi say: Even according to him, who says [that] if a king forgoes his honour, his honour is forgone, if a king forgoes his honour, his honour is not forgone. for a Master said: ‘Thou shalt set a king over thee,’ [this means] that his awe shall be over thee? — It was at a cross-road. Our Rabbis taught: One interrupts the study of the Torah for the sake of a funeral procession and the leading of the bride [under the bridal canopy]. They tell of R. Judah b. Ila'i that he interrupted the study of the Torah for the sake of a funeral procession and the leading of the bride [under the bridal canopy]. This applies only when there are not sufficient people at the funeral procession, but if there are sufficient people one does not interrupt [the study of the Torah]. And how many are sufficient? R. Samuel the son of Ini said in the name of Rab: Twelve thousand men and six thousand trumpets. And some say: Twelve thousand men and among them six thousand trumpets. ‘Ulla said: For instance when people form a line from the city-gate to the burial place. R. Shesheth, and some say R. Johanan said: Its taking away is like its giving. As its giving was in [the presence of] sixty myriads of people, so [has] its taking away [to be] in [the presence of] sixty myriads of people. And this is the case only with regard to one who read [the Bible] and studied [the Mishnah].

But for one who taught [others] there is no limit.¹ AND IF THERE ARE WITNESSES THAT SHE WENT OUT WITH A HINUMA etc. What is hinuma? — Surhab b. Papa said in the name of Ze'iri: A myrtle-canopy.² R. Johanan said: A veil under which the bride [sometimes] slumbers.³ R. JOHANAN THE SON OF BEROKA SAYS, etc. It was taught: This was [regarded as] a proof in Judaea; what is [the proof in] Babylonia? — Rab said: The dripping of oil on the heads⁴ of the scholars.⁵ R. Papa said to Abaye: Did the master speak of oil [used] for cleaning [the head]?⁶ — He said to him:⁷ Orphan,⁸ did not your mother do the dripping of the oil on the heads of the scholars at the time?⁹ As that [case when] one of the scholars was occupied with [the wedding of] his son in the house Of Rabbah b. ‘Ulla — and some say, Rabbah b. ‘Ulla was occupied with [the wedding of] his son in the house of one of the scholars — and he dripped oil on the heads of the scholars at the time of the event.¹⁰ — What [sign is there at the wedding of] a widow? — R. Joseph taught: A widow has no roasted ears of corn [distributed at her wedding].¹¹ AND R. JOSHUA ADMITS THAT IF ONE SAYS TO HIS FELLOW etc. But let him¹² teach: R. Joshua admits that in [the case when] one says to his fellow, ‘this field belonged to you’¹³ and I have bought it of you’ [he is believed]? — Because he would have to teach [in] the last clause: If there are witnesses that it was his and he says, ‘I have bought it of you’. he is not believed.¹⁴ [And] how shall we imagine this case? If he ate [the fruits of] it [during the] years of hazakah¹⁵ why should he not be believed? And if he did not eat [the fruits of] it [during the] years of hazakah it is self-evident that he is not believed!¹⁶ — If so, with regard to his father¹⁷ also [one could argue]: If he¹⁸ ate [the fruits of] it [during the] years of hazakah, why should he not be believed?²⁰ And if he did not eat [the fruits of] it [during the] years of hazakah, it is self-evident that he is not believed! We grant you with regard to his father, [because] there may be a case, as, for instance, when he ate [the fruits of] it two [years] during the life of the father and one [year] during the life of his son.²¹ And [this would be] according to R. Huna, for R. Huna said: One does not acquire the ownership of the property of a minor by the undisturbed possession of it during the prescribed period. even if [he continued in the possession after] the minor had become of age.²² But R. Huna comes to let us hear [what is already taught In] our Mishnah!²³ — If you wish, you may say. R. Huna says, ‘what is to be derived from our Mishnah by implication.’²⁴ And if you wish, you may say, ‘he lets us hear, even if he had become of age,’²⁵ But let him²⁶ [after all] teach with regard to himself²⁷ and put the case when he²⁸ ate [the fruits of] it two [years] in his presence²⁹ and one [year] in his absence,³⁰ and, for instance, when he³¹ fled? — Because of what did he flee? If he fled because of [danger to his] life,³² it is self-evident that he³³ is not believed. since he cannot protest!³⁴ And if he fled because of money [matters],³⁵ he ought to have protested.³⁶ because it is established for³⁷ [that] a protest in his absence³⁸ is a [valid] protest³⁹ For we have learned: There are three countries with regard to hazakah: Judaea, Trans-Jordan and Galilee.⁴⁰ [If] he⁴¹ was in Judaea and someone took possession [of his land] in Galilee, [or he’ was] in Galilee and Someone took possession [of his land] in Judaea, it is no hazakah⁴² until he is with him in the [same] province.⁴³ And we asked⁴⁴ concerning it.⁴⁵ What opinion does he⁴⁶ hold? If he holds that a protest in his absence⁴⁷ is a [valid] protest,⁴⁸ this should apply also to Judaea and Galilee.⁴⁹ And if he holds [that] a protest in his absence is not a [valid] protest. it should not he [a valid protest] even if they are both in Judaea;⁵⁰ [And] R. Abba the son of Memel said: Indeed, he holds [that] a protest in his absence is a [valid] protest, but our Mishnah speaks⁵¹ of a time of lawlessness.⁵² — And why does he just speak of Judaea and Galilee?⁵³

(14) Instead of ‘to your father’. [Since the reason for R. Joshua's ruling is that it is a case where there is no slaughtered ox before you, he could have illustrated it in this way (Rashi). Tosaf: this would be a stronger case seeing that both parties are ‘sure’ in their plea]
(15) And this is not the case. for the reasons to be stated immediately.
(16) ‘To eat’ the field meant ‘to use and take’ the fruits of the field. ‘To eat’ the field without anyone complaining about this meant undisturbed possession of the field. And if this undisturbed possession lasted three years without interruption it established ownership. V. B.B. 28ff. Both the holding of the land and the right accruing from it giving the title of ownership are called hazakah. ‘Years of hazakah’; the term means both ‘the years of holding’ and ‘the years of holding that give the right and title of ownership.’ ‘To eat’ is similar to usus’ in the Twelve Tables (VI. 3)’ In the sense of ‘holding’ hazakah is also similar to ‘usu’. In the sense of ‘acquisition (of ownership) by holding for a certain period fixed by law’, it is similar to ‘usucapio’ in Roman Law. Ulpian says. ‘Usucapio est adjetio dominii per continuationem possessionis temporis lege definita.’ ‘Usucapio is the acquisition of ownership by possession for the length of time required by law.’ The full time for ‘usucapio’ of lands and houses was in Roman Law (till Justinian) two years. In Talmudic Law it was three years. For the Roman Law of ‘usucapio’ see, Hunter, Roman Law, 4th ed., p. 205ff, Muirhead, Law of Rome, 3rd ed., p. 132f., p. 241 and p. 380. and Moyle. Justinian Institutiones, 3th ed. p. 225ff. As to iusta causa and iustus titulus, v. Moyle. op. cit. p. 226, n.3; in Talmudic Law cf. Baba Bathra, fol. 41a, Mishnah. usus would correspond to usucapio. ‘The taking by using’ (usucapio) would after the prescribed time become ‘taking (altogether). that is acquiring by use.’ In Talmudic Law- ‘capio’ was the more dominating term. It seems that the full meaning of ‘auctoritas’ in ‘usus auctoritas fundi’ (in ‘the Twelve Tables, v. Muirhead, op. cit. p. 132) was lost in the course of time. ‘Auctoritas’ seems to mean the authority, the right of ownership acquired by the use of the soil (real property). ‘Usucapio’ is not so good as ‘usus auctoritas’. ‘USucapio’ has, after all, in Roman Law two meanings, as hazakah in Talmudic Law. It is worthy of note that Ulpian. who came from Syria, was a contemporary of the Tannaim of the second half of the second century. Gaius also lived in the second century. usus is not translated by ‘he had the usufruct of it’, because ‘usufruct’ is the right of using and taking the fruits of property not one's own. (Justinian's Institutes, II. 4) v. Moyle, Engl. Translation of Justinian's Institutes, 4th ed., p. 47. v. also Hunter, op. cit., p. 396.
(17) And since he had to teach in the last clause the case where the field belonged to ‘his father’, he also taught in the first clause ‘this field belonged to your father.’

(23) According to the answer just given the rule stated by R. Huna is implied in the teaching of the Mishnah.
(24) What R. Huna states is not said explicitly in the Mishnah. It is to be derived by implication. And R. Huna derives it and states it as a rule.
(25) The rule as stated by B. Huna has an additional point, namely. ‘even if be bad become of age’. This cannot be derived from the Mishnah by implication. This additional point is the reason why R. Huna states the rule.
(26) The teacher of our Mishnah.
The other man, and not the other man's father.
The present possessor.
In the presence of the other man.
This year in his absence does not count, as be could not protest.
The other man. [And thus teach us that, although be did occupy it for three years. the year be had it in the other's absence does not count, and be is not believed.]
He was in danger of his life in the place in which he lived. He would be afraid to protest (against the man holding his land) in his place of refuge, because he would be afraid of being pursued by those who sought his life. The fact that he did not protest during the third year would, therefore, not make the possession of the field by the present holder an undisturbed possession for the period required by the law.
The present possessor.

The teacher of the Mishnah.
I.e., in the absence of the present holder.
Because the protest goes from person to person until it reaches the present holder, v. B.B. 38b.
I.e., if the one is in Judaea and the other is in Galilee in due course the protest made by the owner in one province will reach the holder in the other province.
Lit., ‘even Judaea and Judaea also not’. Even if they are in the same province, but in different places. The protest is still In his absence.
Lit., ‘and the Mishnah they taught’.
In the text: מעין ‘Lawlessness’. A lawlessness brought about by war or by other causes. Through the lawlessness there is no communication between the two provinces, so that the protest cannot reach the holder of the land. And if the protest cannot reach the holder of the land, the protest, if made, would have no force. And as the protest would have no force, the possession of the holder does not become an undisturbed possession. Cf. Rashbam, B.B. 38a.
Lit., ‘and why are Judaea and Galilee different that he takes (them)?’ The meaning of the question is: ‘Lawlessness may also occur between towns in the same province.’

Talmud - Mas. Kethuboth 18a

Because [the condition of the relations between] Judaea and Galilee is usually as in time of lawlessness.¹ But let him teach: R. Joshua admits [that] when one says to his fellow, ‘I borrowed from you a maneh and paid it [back] to you.’ he is believed!² — Because he would have [in that case] to teach [in] the last clause: ‘If there are witnesses that he borrowed from him [a maneh] and he says. "I have paid it [back]"] he is not believed’, but it is established for us³ [that] if one lends [money] to his fellow before⁴ witnesses, he need not pay it [back] to him before witnesses.⁵ — But let him [then] teach: R. Joshua admits [that] if one says to his fellow, ‘I owed to your father a maneh⁶ and I returned to him half⁷ he is believed!⁸ — According to whose opinion?⁹ If according to the opinion of the Rabbis. surely they say [that he is regarded as] one who returns a lost thing,¹⁰ [and] if according to R. Eliezer b. Jacob. surely he says that he must take an oath!¹¹ For it has been taught: R. Eliezer b. Jacob says: Sometimes [it may happen] that a man has to take an oath because of his own statement. How [is it]? If one says to his fellow, ‘I owed to your father a maneh and I returned to him half,’ he must take an oath. And this is [a case] where one takes an oath because of one's statement. But the Sages say: He is [regarded] only as one who returns a lost thing and he is free. And does not R. Eliezer b. Jacob hold [that] one who returns a lost thing is free? — Rab said: [It speaks here of a case] when a minor claimed from him. But did not a Master say: One does not take an oath because of a claim by a deaf-mute, an imbecile, or a minor? — What is [meant by] ‘minor’? A grown-up person, and why does he call him ‘minor’? Because with regard to the affairs of his father he is [regarded as] a minor. If so, [how can you say] ‘his own statement?’ It is a claim [made] by others! — It is a claim [made] by others and [also] his own admission. But all claims [consist of] a claim [made] by others and one's own admission! — They differ here with regard to [an opinion of] Rabbah, for Rabbah said: Why did the Torah say [that] he who admits a part of the claim must take an oath? [Because] it is a presumption [that] no man is insolent in the face of his creditor. He would [indeed] like to deny the whole [debt], but he does not do it because no one is [so] insolent.

(1) Cf. B. B. 28a for variants.
(2) [The Mishnah could have illustrated the ruling of R. Joshua in a case ‘where there is no ox slaughtered before you’. in this way instead of by one dealing with real property and with ‘your father.’]

(7) Lit., ‘and made him eat half (or a portion)’. it may be that be paid him the half in kind, perhaps in goods.

(9) Would that statement be.
(10) Even if the admission is not made on his own initiative but made on the claim of the son, he is free from paying the other half, and from taking an oath. V. Shebu 42a, also 38b.
(11) As to the other half.
(12) Shebu. 42b.
(13) As to the other half.
(14) If he would not have made the statement no one would have known of his debt.
(15) From taking an oath. [Surely this is against the well-established principle that he is exempt. v. Git. 48b.]
(16) His statement was therefore not entirely ‘his own statement’.
(17) V. Shebu. 38b. [How then could R. Eliezer in such a case impose an oath?]
(18) [All cases for which an oath is imposed are such as where the one against whom a claim is made makes a partial admission.
(19) Lit., ‘and this one that be does not deny it’.

Talmud - Mas. Kethuboth 18b

[Indeed] he would like to admit the whole of it, only he does not do it in order to slip away from him [for the present], and he thinks, ‘as soon as I will have money I will pay it’. And [therefore] the Divine Law said: Impose an oath on him, so that he should admit the whole of it. [Now] R. Eliezer b. Jacob holds [that] he is not insolent against him nor against his son, and therefore he is not [regarded as] one who returns a lost thing. And the Rabbis hold [that] against him he is not insolent, but against his son he might be insolent, and since he is not insolent, he is [regarded as] one who returns a lost thing.

MISHNAH. IF WITNESSES SAID, ‘THIS IS OUR HANDBRINGING, BUT WE WERE FORCED, \(^9\) we were minors, we were disqualified witnesses, \(^10\) they are believed. \(^11\) but if there are witnesses that it is their handwriting, or their handwriting comes out from another place, \(^12\) they are not believed. \(^13\) GEMARA. Rami b. Hama said: They taught \(^14\) this \(^15\) only when they \(^16\) said: We were forced [by threats] with regard to money. \(^17\) but [if they said], we were forced [by threats] with regard to [our] life, they are believed. Raba said to him: Is it so? After he has once testified, he cannot again testify! \(^18\) And if you will say [that] this applies only to an oral testimony but not to testimony in a document — did not Resh Lakish say: If witnesses are signed on a document it is as if their testimony had been examined in court? \(^19\) No; if it has been said, \(^20\) it has been said with regard to the first clause, [where it is stated:] they are believed. Whereupon Rami b. Hama said: They taught this \(^21\) only when they \(^22\) said, ‘We were forced [by threats] with regard to [our] life.’ but if they said, ‘we were forced [by threats] with regard to money.’ they are not believed. because no one makes himself [out to be] a wicked man. \(^23\) Our Rabbis taught: They \(^24\) are not believed to disqualify it. \(^25\) This is the view of R. Meir; but the Sages say [that they are believed. This is right according to the Rabbis, \(^27\) who follow \(^28\) their principle \(^29\) ‘the mouth that bound is the mouth that loosened,’ \(^30\) but what is the reason of R. Meir? \(^31\) I grant you [with regard to] ‘disqualified witnesses.’ \(^32\) [because] the creditor himself examines well [the witnesses] beforehand and [then] lets [them] sign. \(^33\) [With regard to] ‘minors’ also [it can be explained] according to R. Simeon b. Lakish. For Resh Lakish \(^34\) said:

(1) The whole debt.
(2) I.e., to postpone the matter.
(3) The whole debt.
(4) Lit., ‘the All-Merciful’.
(5) Now.
(6) And admits a part of the debt.
(7) And he is believed without an oath. For further notes on the whole passage v. Sheb. (Sonc. ed.) pp. 25ff.
(8) The handwriting of the signatures on a document.
(9) To sign.
(10) Lit. ‘unfit with regard to testimony’. They may have been unfit either through kinship or through their conduct (Rashi). Cf. Sanh. 27b and 24b.
(11) [Since it is they who at the first instance confirm their signatures. they are also believed in the attendant reservation made by them in regard thereto.]
(12) As when their handwriting has been confirmed on another document.
(13) [Since the validity of their signatures does not depend on their present attestation the reservation is not accepted.]
(14) In our Mishnah.
(15) That if their handwriting is confirmed through another document they are not believed to disqualify their signature on the present document.
(16) The witnesses.
(17) Money threats should not have made them sign a falsehood. And they are not believed to say that they signed a falsehood, v. note 12.
(18) Retracting what he testified before — By their signatures they declared the document valid. and they cannot now declare it to be invalid.
(19) Therefore, what applies to oral testimony applies also to testimony in a document.
(20) I.e., if Rami b. Hama made any statement similar to the one mentioned above.
(21) That they are believed to disqualify their signature.
(22) The witnesses.
(23) I.e., a man’s testimony against himself has no legal effect. And by saying now that money threats made them sign a false testimony. the witnesses would make themselves out to be wicked men. V. n. 6.
(24) The witnesses who signed the document.
(25) In the manner stated in the first clause of the Mishnah.
(26) The document.
It is a presumption that the witnesses do not sign a document unless [everything] was done by adults. But what is the reason with regard to ‘FORCED?’ — R. Hisda said: R. Meir holds that if one said to witnesses, ‘sign a falsehood and you will not be killed,’ they should rather be killed and not sign a falsehood. Raba said to him: Now, if they would come to us to ask [our] advice, we would say unto them: Go [and] sign and do not be killed, for a Master said: ‘There is nothing that comes before the saving of life except idolatry, incest and bloodshed only.’ Now that they have signed, can we say to them: why have you signed? But the reason of R. Meir is in accordance with what R. Huna [said in the name of] Rab: for R. Huna said [that] Rab said: If he admits that he has written the bond, there is no need to confirm it. [To revert to] the main text: R. Huna said [that] Rab said: If he admits that he has written the bond, there is no need to confirm it. R. Nahman said to him: Why do you go round about? If you hold with R. Meir, say: the halachah is according to R. Meir. He then said to him: And how do you Sir, hold? He said to him: When they come before us in court, we say to them: go [and] confirm your documents and then come to court. Rab Judah said [that] Rab said: If one said: This is a [loan-] deed of trust, he is not believed. Who said [it]? If the debtor said it, it is plain; why should he be believed? If the creditor said [it], may a blessing come upon him! And if the witnesses said [it], — [then] if their handwriting comes out from another place, it is plain that they are not believed, and if their handwriting does not come out from another place, why should they not be believed? (Mnemonic: BASH) Raba said: Indeed, the debtor said [it], and [it is] according to R. Huna, for R. Huna said [that] Rab said: If he admits that he has written the document, there is no need to confirm it. Abaye said: Indeed, the creditor said [it], and it is a case where he would injure others. Abaye said: Indeed, the witnesses said [it], and [it is in a case] where their handwriting does not come out from another place; and as to your question, why should they not be believed, [the answer is] as stated by R. Kahana, for R. Kahana said: It is forbidden for a man to keep a [loan-] deed of trust in his house, because it is said: Let righteousness dwell in thy tents.

(1) That is, all the parties, including the witnesses, must have been grown-up persons and not minors. Therefore. R. Meir holds that the witnesses are not allowed to say now that they were minors when they signed the document.

(2) Why does R. Meir hold that, if the witnesses said ‘we were forced to sign the document. they are not believed?

(3) So that even if they say that they were forced us sign a falsehood by threats with regard to their life, they make themselves out to be wicked, and this no one can do; v. p. 102, n. 12.

(4) This means: everything, every religious law must yield to the preservation of life. If one is told: Transgress this or that law, otherwise you will be killed, he should transgress the law and not be killed. Only in respect of idolatry, incest and bloodshed this rule does not apply. One should rather lose one's life than commit these transgressions; v. Sanh. 74a.

(5) In the case of signing a document, one should sign a falsehood and not lose one's life. The witnesses should, therefore, be believed if they said, ‘we were forced to sign a falsehood by threats to our life’.

(6) The debtor.

(7) And that the witnesses signed it by his direction.

(8) For the creditor.

(9) By the witnesses; and the debtor cannot plead that he has discharged the debt as long as the creditor holds the bond. The statement of the witnesses is not necessary now. Therefore, they cannot disqualify the bond, according to R. Meir.

(10) From which the above quotation has been taken.

(11) The debtor.

(12) Lit., ‘O thou cunning man, what is the use of thy going round about?’ (Jast.).

(13) [Instead of making it an independent statement, thus conveying the impression that it is a ruling on which there is no disagreement among Tannaim.]

(19) Creditors.

(20) Lit., ‘to law’.

(21) Rashi: ‘Go and seek (and bring) your witnesses and confirm it (the document)’. [As a precaution. In case the debtor, though admitting that he wrote the bond, will plead that he had discharged the debt.

(22) Lit ‘and go down to law’.

(23) I.e., a bill of indebtedness signed on trust, in expectation that the loan, which is stated in the bill as having been advanced, will be advanced at some future date. The debtor trusts the creditor. The document is therefore called שמא על עבד, a document, or deed of trust’.

(24) For being so honest.

(25) V. our Mishnah.

(26) It is their testimony upon which the validity of the document depends.

(27) A stands for Raba, A for Abaye, and SH for R. Ashi, the names of the three Amoraim who follow now.

(28) The debtor.

(29) [And the debtor cannot now invalidate the document by saying that it is a deed of trust even in the absence of attesting witnesses.]

(30) If the creditor is believed that the document is a deed of trust, be will injure others, who are his creditors, if he has no other assets. Therefore, he is not believed.

(31) In a Baraitha.

(32) I.e., A owes a maneh to B, and B owes a maneh to C.

(33) The court.

(34) The court takes a maneh from A and gives it to C since B who is the creditor of A is the debtor of C.

(36) Num. V, 7. E. V. ‘and give it unto him to whom he is ‘guilty’. The teaching derived from these scriptural words by R. Nathan is: restitution has to be made to him to whom restitution is due. If A owes a maneh to B and B owes a maneh to C, the debt of A to B is paid, or may be paid to C.

(37) Lit., ‘what you say’.

(38) Lit., ‘to cause to stay’.

(39) M.T. ‘And let not’.

Talmud - Mas. Kethuboth 19b

And R. Shesheth, the son of R. Idi, said: From [the words of] R. Kahana can be inferred[1] [that] if witnesses said, ‘Our words were [regarding a matter of] trust,’[2] they are not believed, for this reason:[3] Since it is ‘unrighteousness’ [we say that] they must not sign on [what is] unrighteousness.[4] R. Joshua b. Levi. said: It is forbidden for a man to keep a paid bill of indebtedness in his house, because it is said: ‘Let not unrighteousness dwell in thy tents’. In the West, they said in the name of Rab: [It is said]: If iniquity be in thy hand, put it far away. This is a [loan-] deed of trust and a deed of good-will; [and it is said]: ‘And let not unrighteousness dwell in thy tents’. This is a paid bill of indebtedness. He who says [that it applies to] a paid bill of indebtedness, how much more [does it apply to] a [loan-] deed of trust. [And he, who says [that it applies to] a [loan-] deed of trust, would hold that it does not apply to] a paid bill of indebtedness, because sometimes they keep it on account of the scribe's fees. It has been stated: A book that is not corrected — R. Ami said: Until thirty days one is allowed to keep it, from then and further on, it is forbidden to keep it, because it is said: ‘Let not unrighteousness dwell in thy tents.’ R. Nahman said: If witnesses said, ‘Our words were [regarding a matter of] trust,’ they are not believed; [if they said], ‘Our words were [attended by] declaration,’ they are [also] not believed. Mar. the son of R. Ashi. said: [if witnesses said], ‘Our words were [regarding a matter of] trust,’ they are not believed; [but if they said], ‘Our words were [attended by] declaration,’ they are believed, for this reason: this one was allowed to be written and that one was not allowed to be written. Raba asked of R. Nahman: How is it [if witnesses say], ‘Our words were [subject to] a condition’? Are they not believed in the case of ‘declaration’ and ‘trust’ because they invalidate the document, and [in this case of ‘condition’] they also invalidate the document? Or is perhaps ‘condition’ a different thing? — He said to him: When they come before us in court, we say to them: go [and] fulfil your conditions and [then] come to court. If one witness says [that there was] a condition, and one witness says [that there was] no condition R. Papa said: they both testify to a valid document and only one says [that there was] a condition, and the words of one [witness] have no value where there are two witnesses. R. Huna the son of R. Joshua demurred to this: If so, even if they both say [that there was a condition] [their words should] also [have no value]! But we say [that] they come to uproot their testimony, and this one also comes to uproot his testimony. And the law is according to R. Huna, the son of R. Joshua. Our Rabbis taught: If two [witnesses] were signed on a document and died, and two [witnesses] came from the street and said, ‘We know that it is their handwriting, but they were forced, they were minors, they were disqualified witnesses, they are believed. But if there are [other] witnesses that this is their handwriting, or their handwriting comes out from another place, [namely] from a document, the validity of which was challenged, and which was confirmed in Court, they are not believed. — And we collect with it as with a valid document? Why? They are two and two! — Said R. Shesheth: This teaches [that] contradiction is the beginning of rebuttal.

(1) Lit., ‘understand from this’.
(2) I.e.: they say that the document they signed as witnesses was a loan-deed of trust.
(3) Lit., ‘what is the reason?’
(4) And as they had signed, they are not believed when they say that it was a deed of trust, because they cannot make out themselves to be wicked; as supra p. 102, n. 12.
(5) Job XI, 14.
(6) Palestine.
(7) Job XI, 14.
(8) ימשרא פסלה. Jast.: ‘a deed of sale for accommodation’ [Rashb. B.B. 154b explains it as a deed of feigned sale arranged for the purpose of making people believe that the person in whose favour it is made out is wealthy. ‘Aruch takes it as a variant of ימשרא פסלה, ‘trust’. (v. J. Keth. II, 3) and simply the Greek equivalent of ουσηρος έμοινεν].
(9) The prohibition to keep the document.
(10) There was fraud even in its origin.
(11) Lit., ‘but a paid bill of indebtedness, no.’
(12) Lit., ‘the small coins of the scribe’ — the creditor paid the scribe's fee, which the debtor has to pay. The creditor, therefore, keeps back the paid bill of indebtedness until he has collected from the debtor the scribe's fee. There is a lawful ground for keeping back the documents.
(13) Of the Bible.
(14) I.e., the mistakes in the manuscript had not been corrected.
And it is 'unrighteousness' to keep a book of the Bible with mistakes uncorrected.

I.e., they say that the document they signed as witnesses was a loan-deed of trust.

Of protest. The witnesses say that the seller protested that he was forced to sell and did not recognize the sale, and that they signed the deed in cognizance of the protest.

They cannot invalidate a written document.

The latter.

In order to get out the seller from his predicament.

The former.

On account of ‘unrighteousness’.

The witnesses say. ‘we signed the deed of sale, but the sale was made dependent upon a condition, which has not been fulfilled’.

‘this is the reason’.

‘uproot’.

[The condition in itself does not affect the validity of the document, only the non-fulfilment thereof.]

R. Nahman.

Raba.

The purchasers in a transaction, the witnesses to which declare. that it was subject to a condition.

Attached to the transaction.

‘in the place of two’.

[Since the confirmation of the signature by the witness to the transaction is treated as a formal attestation of the document, which bats the admission of any qualifying declaration subsequent thereto.]

Having once testified to the validity of the document, they cannot subsequently retract by saying that it was subject to a condition. Why then did R. Nahman, in the case of two witnesses, insist on the purchasers fulfilling the condition?

[The mere confirmation of their signatures by the witnesses does not complete their attestation of the document. This is completed in their subsequent statement that it was subject to a condition. This latter statement, however, taken in itself, is but a qualification of their former statement confirming their signatures without any direct bearing as to the validity of the document, which really depends upon the fulfilment or non-fulfilment of this condition. In this it is different from the case where the subsequent statement declares the document to have been written under protest, attacking the validity of the document itself.]

So that there is only one witness on the document.

The two witnesses from the street.

‘against which one called a protest’.

‘strengthened’.

As valid.

‘we cause to be collected (the debt)’.

The two witnesses who are signed on the document and who are now dead, and the two witnesses from the street, who testify to the unfitness of the witnesses who had signed on the document. Even if their handwriting is otherwise confirmed, their testimony is counterbalanced by the testimony of the two witnesses from the street.

is a denial of the subject-matter of the evidence, for which however, no retaliatory punishment is imposed, as Deut. XIX, 19 does not refer to witnesses who were contradicted so the subject-matter of their evidence, but against whom the accusation (in a sense) of an ‘alibi’ was proved. [The term ‘alibi’ is used bete for convenience sake, as it deals there with the presence or absence of the witnesses of the alleged crime at the time when it was committed, rather than with the presence or the absence of the accused, as the term is generally understood.]

I.e., the proving of an ‘alibi’, a rebuttal of evidence, whereby the witnesses are proved to be Zomemim, (v. Glos.). The proving of the subject-matter of the evidence to be false is a first step in a subsequent proof of an ‘alibi’, both being but one continued process of law, v. B K. 73b.

and as witnesses can be rebutted only in their presence,¹ so can they be contradicted only in their presence.² R. Nahman said to him: If they³ had been before us and [the other two witnesses] had contradicted them, it would have been a contradiction, and we would not have paid any attention to them, because it is a contradicted testimony. Now that they are not here — when it could be maintained that if they had been before us, they might perhaps have admitted to them — should they be believed? No, said R. Nahman; set the two against the two witnesses and leave the property in the possession of its master. It is analogous to the case of the property of a certain madman. A certain madman sold property. Two witnesses came and said that he sold the property when he was insane, and two witnesses came and said that he sold the property when he was sane. And R. Abbahu said: One rebuts witnesses only in their presence, but one contradicts them also in their absence. And a rebuttal in their absence — granted that it is not an effective rebuttal, but it is a contradiction. The Master said above: ‘If there are witnesses that this is their handwriting, or their handwriting came out from another place, namely, from a document which was contested and was confirmed in court, they are not believed’. This is only if it was contested, but not, if it was not contested. This is a support for R. Assi, for R. Assi said: A document is confirmed only from a document, which was contested and was confirmed in Court. The Nehardeans said: A document is confirmed only from two kethuboth or from two fields and [only] when their owners used them for three years, and [that] in comfort. R. Shimi b. Ashi said: And [only] when it is produced by another person, but not [if it is produced] by himself. Why not [if from] under his own hand? Because he may have forged the signatures of the witnesses. If so, even when produced by another person also, perhaps he went and saw and forged — so clearly he cannot fix it in his mind. Our Rabbis taught: A person may write down his testimony in a document and may, through it, give evidence even after many years. R. Huna said: Only when he remembers it by himself. R. Johanan said: Even if he does not remember it by himself. Rabbah said: You may infer from the words of R. Johanan that if two persons know evidence and one of them has forgotten [it], the other one may remind him of it. They asked: [In the case of] himself — what is the law? R. Habina said: Even he himself may do so. Mar b. R. Ashi said: He himself [may] not. And the law is: he himself [may] not.

1. In view of the retaliatory punishment which it involves, the accusation of an ‘alibi’ can be made only in the presence of the witnesses concerned.
2. No evidence is accepted refuting the subject-matter of the evidence in the absence of the witnesses, and since in the case of the document they are dead, the evidence of the second set of witnesses is not accepted. The evidence disqualifying the witnesses as having been forced or minors is considered not.
3. The witnesses who signed the document.
4. The testimony of the new witnesses.
5. Of the testimony of the witnesses who signed the document.
6. The witnesses who signed the document.
7. The testimony of the witnesses of the document.
8. The witnesses who signed the document.
9. They died.
10. The witnesses who signed the document.
11. To the other witnesses. I.e., there is an additional reason for disregarding the testimony of the document. The witnesses who signed the document might even have admitted that what the other witnesses said was true.
12. On the one side.
13. On the other side.
15. I.e., of him who happens to have it now. [E.g., in the case of a note of indebtedness, either the debtor, or the creditor should the latter have happened to distraint on the debtor’s goods. And when the Baraitha rules that they are not believed, it means only in so fat that the document is not destroyed.]
(16) Lit., ‘well’.

(18) On the other side.
(19) The ownership-right came to him from his forefathers by inheritance.
(20) And the property passes to the purchaser.
(21) V. supra p. 108 nn. 9 and 10
(22) And they do not incur the retaliatory penalty for Zomemim witnesses.
(23) I.e., the evidence stands contradicted.
(24) Lit., ‘If it is contested, yes. if it was not contested, no’. If the document was contested and confirmed in court as valid, the new witnesses are not believed; but if the document was not contested and confirmed, the new witnesses are believed.
(25) Lit., ‘supports’.
(26) I.e., the signatures of a document. If the confirmation is made by comparing it with the signatures attached to another document.
(27) The Scholars of Nehardea.
(28) From signatures of the same witnesses attached to two marriage settlements it deeds of sale of fields.
(29) I.e., the occupants who claim to be owners.
(30) Lit., ‘ate’.
(31) Without anyone protesting against their holding of the fields.
(32) Lit., ‘it comes out from under the hands of’. I.e., when the two documents, with which the contested document is compared, were in the possession of other persons and they produced them.
(33) Lit., ‘from under his own hand’. I.e., if they were in the possession of the person whose document is contested.
(34) In the contested document.
(35) To the other persons.
(36) The other documents.
(37) The signatures of the witnesses on the contested document.
(38) Lit., ‘all that’.
(39) He cannot hope to imitate the handwriting of the witnesses in the other documents, since the documents are not in front of him. By seeing the documents once or twice in the hands of others, he cannot forge the signatures.
(40) Who is going to be a witness in a legal dispute.
(41) Lit., ‘on’.
(42) We would say ‘on paper’.
(43) ‘through it’, ‘by it’, ‘by means of it’. There is apparently a legal nicety in the word. Not , ‘from it’. If his evidence is only from it, that is if be does not recollect the evidence even when looking at the paper, his evidence would not be valid. The written testimony should be an aid to his memory. But if it does not recall anything to him, it is valueless.
(44) Part of the evidence (Rashi).
(45) Lit ‘of, or from himself’. And the written testimony brings it all back to his mind.
(46) Only after looking at the document, in which be bad written his testimony at the time, he reminds himself of the facts of the case. But if he cannot now recollect anything, the written testimony has no value (Rashi). The same rule obtains in the English Law of Evidence. V. Cockle, Cases and Statutes on the Law of Evidence, third edition, pp. 266-7: ‘A witness may refresh his memory by referring to any writing or document made by himself, at or so soon after the transaction in question that the judge considers it was fresh in his memory at the time. But it is not necessary that the witness should have any independent recollection of the fact recorded, if he is prepared to swear to it on seeing the writing or document.’ V. also Powell's Principles and Practice of the Law of Evidence, ninth edition, pp. 269-172. On p. 169: ‘A witness may refresh his memory by looking at any memorandum — (1) Which revives in his mind a recollection of the fact to which it refers.’ Paragraphs (2) and (3) on p. 170 are also very interesting. (3) is ‘an extreme case,’ and it is difficult to say whether R. Johanan would have gone as far as that.
(47) Knew facts of a case to which they could testify.
(48) Lit., ‘one reminds his fellow’.
(49) I.e., the litigant.
(50) Lit., ‘how is it’? I.e., may the litigant remind the witness of the evidence?
But if he\(^1\) is a scholar,\(^2\) even he himself\(^3\) [may remind the witness].\(^4\) As that case of R. Ashi: He knew evidence for R. Kahana, [and] he\(^5\) said to him:\(^6\) Does the master remember that evidence?\(^7\) And he\(^8\) said to him:\(^9\) No. But was it not so and so?\(^10\) He\(^11\) replied: I do not know. In the end, R. Ashi reminded himself, and he gave evidence for him.\(^12\) He\(^11\) saw that R. Kahana was surprised.\(^13\) [so] he\(^11\) said to him:\(^14\) Do you think [that] I relied upon you? I threw it upon my mind\(^15\) and I remembered it.\(^16\) We learnt elsewhere:\(^17\) Mounds which are near a town or a road, whether they are new or old, are unclean;\(^18\) those [mounds] which are distant — if they are new,\(^19\) they are clean,\(^20\) and if they are old,\(^21\) they are unclean.\(^22\) What is near? Fifty cubits.\(^23\) And what is old? Sixty years.\(^24\) [This is] the view\(^25\) of R. Meir. R. Judah says: ‘near’, [denotes] when there is none nearer; ‘old’, when one remembers it.\(^26\) [Now] what is [meant by] a town and what is [meant by] a road? Shall I say: [by] a town is [meant] an ordinary town, [and by] a road is [meant] an ordinary road? Do we presume uncleanness out of doubt? Did not Resh Lakish say: They\(^27\) found some pretext\(^28\) and declared the land of Israel unclean?\(^29\) — Said R. Zera: [By] a town is [meant] a town which is near a burial place, and [by] a road is [meant] a road [leading] to a burial place. I grant you [in the case of] a road [leading] to a burial place,\(^30\) because sometimes it might happen [that a funeral took place] at twilight, and it chanced that they buried it\(^31\) in the mound.\(^32\) But [in the case of] a town which is near a burial place — all go to the burial place!\(^33\) — Said R. Hanina: Because women bring there\(^34\) their abortions and lepers\(^35\) [bring there]\(^36\) their arms.\(^37\) [And it is assumed that] till fifty cubits she\(^38\) goes alone,\(^39\) but for a longer distance\(^40\) she takes a man with her and [then] she goes to the burial place.\(^41\) Therefore, we do not presume uncleanness in Eretz Israel.\(^42\) R. Hisda said: You may infer from [the words of] R. Meir\(^43\) [that] one remembers\(^44\) evidence till sixty years, for a longer\(^45\) [period than sixty years] one does not remember. But it is not so, [for] there\(^46\) [he does not remember the evidence after sixty years] because it\(^47\) is not his concern,\(^48\) but here,\(^49\) since it is his concern, even for a longer [period]\(^50\) he also [remembers the evidence].

MISHNAH. IF ONE\(^51\) WITNESS SAYS, ‘THIS IS MY HANDWRITING AND THAT IS THE HANDWRITING OF MY FELLOW, AND THE OTHER [WITNESS] SAYS, ‘THIS IS MY HANDWRITING AND THAT IS THE HANDWRITING OF MY FELLOW,’ THEY ARE BELIEVED. (1) The witness.
(2) If the witness is a scholar he will know whether the reminding of the facts recalls the facts, or some of the facts, to his memory. If his memory is not aided, he will not give evidence.

(12) For R. Kahana.
(13) R. Kahana was surprised that R. Ashi gave evidence after he had said twice that he did not remember it.
(14) To R. Kahana.
(15) Lit., ‘upon my soul’. — The meaning of these words is: I tried hard to recall the facts to my mind.
(16) His own mental efforts were successful. — This story shows that a scholar may be reminded of the evidence by the litigant himself.

(29) Why should we then presume uncleanness out of a doubt?
(30) That it is regarded as unclean.
(31) The dead body.
(32) As the funeral took place on the eve of Sabbath at twilight they might not have had time to reach the burial place before the commencement of Sabbath, and therefore they buried the dead body in the mound. Therefore, the mound is unclean.
(33) Since the burial place is near, why should the town, then, be unclean?
(34) In the mounds.

ey they give evidence with regard to their handwriting. according to the Sages they give evidence with regard to the maneh in the deed. This is self-evident! — You might have said that Rabbi was in doubt whether they testified to their signature or to the maneh in the deed. And the difference would be when one of them died. [Here] we need two witnesses from the street to testify regarding it, because otherwise the whole of the money less a quarter would go out by the mouth of one witness, and both here and there the stricter rule would prevail. Therefore, he teaches that it is clear to Rabbi, whether the result is lenient or strict. For Rab Judah said [that] Rab said: If two witnesses are signed on a document and one of them died, two persons from the street are required to give evidence with regard to him. In this it would be lenient according to Rabbi and it is strict according to the Rabbis. And if there are not two, but there is only one, — Said Abaye: He shall write his signature on a piece of clay and place it before the court, and the court confirms it, and he need not testify to his own signature, and he goes with that one and they [together] testify to [the signature of] the other [witness]. And only on a piece of clay but not a scroll lest a bad man may find it and write on it whatever he likes, and We have learned: If one person produces the handwriting of another person that he owes him [money], he collects [the debt] from unmortgaged property. Rab Judah said [that] Samuel said. The halachah is according to the Sages. This is obvious! [When there is a dispute between] one [authority] and many [authorities] the law is according to the many (authorities)! You might have said: since the halachah is according to Rabbi as against one of his fellow-scholars, it is also against many of his fellow-scholars, so be let us hear [otherwise]. (Mnemonic: Nah, Nad, Had.) R. Hinena b. Hyya said to R. Judah, and some say (that) R. Huna b. Judah [said] to Rab Judah, and some say [that] R. Hyya b. Judah [said] to Rab Judah: And did Samuel say so? Surely once a deed came out from the court of Mar Samuel and there was written in it, ‘Whereas R. ‘Anan b. Hyya came and testified to his own signature and to that of his fellow-witness, namely, R. Hanan b. Rabbah, and whereas R. Hanan b. Rabbah came and testified to his own signature and to that of his fellow-witness, namely R. ‘Anan b. Hyya,’ we have verified it, and we have confirmed it, as it is proper! — He said to him: That deed belonged to orphans, and Samuel was afraid of an erring court. Samuel thought: There might be someone who held that the halachah is generally according to Rabbi as against one fellow-scholar, and not as against many of his fellow-scholars, but [that] in this the halachah is according to Rabbi] even as against many of his fellow-scholars. I will make relief, so that the orphans should not suffer any loss. Rab Judah said [that] Samuel said: Witness and judge are joined together. R. Hanan b. Hama said: How excellent is this tradition! Said Raba: What is the excellence? What the witness testifies to the judge does not testify to, and what the judge testifies to the witness does not testify to? And indeed, when Rami b. Ezekiel came he said: Do not heed those rules which my brother Judah laid down in the name of Samuel.

(1) The witnesses.
(2) Therefore the handwriting of each witness has to be confirmed by two witnesses.
(3) The witnesses.
(4) Maneh is only mentioned as an illustration. It is the transaction recorded in the deed to which they testify. This transaction might have been the loan of a maneh.
(5) And the two witnesses testify to the transaction by each of them confirming his signature, hence the ruling of the Sages.
(6) [And being in doubt, he took the more stringent view, and required that both witnesses testify to each other's signature.]
(7) Whether Rabbi was sure or doubtful in his view.
(8) Because of Rabbi's doubt whether the witnesses testified to their signature or to the maneh in the deed.
(9) The signature of the dead witness.
(10) Lit., 'if so'. I.e., if we should say that one witness from the street would be sufficient.
(11) I.e., would be given to the claimant.
(12) I.e., the evidence.
(13) If Rabbi was in doubt we should require two other witnesses to give evidence regarding the signature of the dead witness. One other witness, added to the surviving witness, would not do, because the evidence of the witnesses may be (since Rabbi is in doubt) with regard to the maneh in the deed, and not to the signatures, in which case half of the evidence regarding the transaction would be given when the surviving witness confirms his own signature. His own confirmation of his signature is sufficient, as fat as his evidence is concerned, if the object of the evidence is the transaction recorded in the deed. half of the sum mentioned in the deed would then go to the claimant by his confirmation of his signature, in other words, by his evidence. And when he testifies, with the other new witness, regarding the signature of the dead witness, half of the other half of the sum is testified to by him, so that altogether three-quarters of the sum mentioned in the deed would go to the claimant through the evidence of one, the surviving witness, and this is not according to the law, which demands that no more than one half should ‘go out’ by the evidence of one single witness. (V. Git. (Sonc. ed.) p. 57, n. 9.) Therefore, through Rabbi’s doubt, we should require two other witnesses when one witness died. And when both witnesses who signed the deed are alive, each signature must be testified to by both witnesses, because there would be Rabbi’s doubt that the evidence may be regarding the signatures.

(14) That the evidence is regarding the signatures.
(15) As in the case of the death of one witness. Being certain in his view that the evidence is with regard to the signatures, and not with regard to the maneh in the deed, Rabbi would hold that one witness from the street, added to the surviving witness, is sufficient. The surviving witness and the new witness would both testify to both signatures. There would be no question of three-quarters of the sum mentioned going out by the mouth of one witness, because in Rabbi’s certain view, the evidence is with regard to the signatures and not with regard to the maneh in the deed.
(16) In the case when both the witnesses are alive. They must testify to both signatures.
(17) This is according to the Sages.
(18) I.e., in this case.
(19) V. n. 2.
(20) As the Rabbis (the Sages) hold the view that the evidence is regarding the maneh in the deed, two new witnesses are required to testify to the signature of the dead witness. If there would be only one new witness and he would be added to the surviving witness, three-fourths of the sum mentioned in the deed would go out by the mouth of one witness, v. p.
114, n. 14.
(21) Person from the street who recognizes the handwriting of the dead witness.
(22) The surviving witness.
(23) נָבָּד, ‘clay’, or ‘a piece of clay’ is reminiscent of the Babylonian clay-tablets.
(24) By comparing the signature on the piece of clay with the signature in the deed.
(25) In the deed.
(26) The person from the street.
(27) Of the dead witness.
(28) Shall he (the surviving witness) write his signature.
(29) We would say ‘but not on a sheet of paper’. It is interesting to note the use of ‘piece of clay’, together with the use of ‘scroll’. It may be that נָבָּד was also used, later, in the sense of ‘a small piece of paper’.
(30) Dishonest.
(31) He may write over the signature that the signatory borrowed a certain sum of money from him.
(32) A note of indebtedness signed by the other person.
(33) Lit., ‘he produced against him his handwriting.’
(34) Lit., ‘free’.
(35) V. B.B. 175b. The surviving witness must, therefore, be careful and write his signature only on a piece of clay, or on a small piece of paper. on which there is room only for his signature.
(36) In our Mishnah.
(37) Lit., his fellow and even from his fellows’.
(38) That the halachah is according to scholars.
(39) Nah stands for Hinenah b. Hiyya; Nad for Hunah b. Judah; Had for Hiyya b. Judah. the names of the Amoraim that follow.
(40) Declared as valid.
(41) Lit., ‘and to the one of (the person) with him’.
(42) Lit., ‘and who is it?’
(43) The deed.
(44) We thus see that Samuel acted according to the opinion of Rabbi.
(45) Of judges who might mistakenly think that in this matter the law is according to Rabbi.
In the matter of confirming witnesses’ signatures.

And he will not accept the confirmation.

I.e., I will do more than is necessary.

For the purpose of confirming the validity of the document, the witness testifies to his signature, and the judge to his signature endorsing the document which had been presented to court for confirmation. V. infra.

The witness testifies to the transaction (to the maneh in the deed according to the Sages), and the judge testifies to his own signature.

Rab Judah was a brother of Rami.

Talmud - Mas. Kethuboth 21b

Rabbana, the brother of R. Hiyya b. Abba, came to buy sesame and he said: Thus Samuel said: Witness and judge are joined together. Amemar said: How excellent is this tradition! Said R. Ashi to Amemar: Because the father of your mother praised it, you also praise it! Raba has already refuted it. R. Safra said that R. Abba said that R. Isaac b. Samuel b. Martha said that R. Huna said, and some say that R. Huna said that R. Rab said: If three sit together to confirm a deed, and two [of them] know the signatures of the witnesses and one does not know, before they sign, they may testify before him, and he [then] signs [with them]; after they have signed, they may not testify before him and he may not sign. But do we write [the attestation]? Did not R. Papi say in the name of Raba: The judge's attestation which is written before the witnesses give evidence as to their signatures is invalid, because it looks like a lie? [And] here also it looks like a lie! — But say: Before they have written [the attestation] they may testify before him and he [then] signs [with them]; after they have written [the attestation], they may not testify before him and he may not sign. We may infer from this three things. We may infer that a witness may be a judge; we may also infer that, if the judges know the signatures of the witnesses, there is no need to testify before them; and [again] we may infer that, if the judges do not know the signatures of the witnesses, it is necessary to give evidence before every one. R. Ashi demurred to this: Agreed that we may infer from it that a witness may be a judge, but how can we infer from it that, if the judges do not know the signatures of the witnesses, it is necessary to give evidence before every one? Perhaps, indeed, I can say to you [that] this is necessary, but it is different here, because the telling has been fulfilled before one. And [further, how can we infer from It that], if the judges do not know the signatures of the witnesses, it is necessary to give evidence before every one? Perhaps, indeed, I can say to you [that] this is not necessary, but it is different here, because the telling would not have been fulfilled at all. R. Abba sat and reported this law, that a witness may be a judge. R. Safra objected to R. Abba: If three saw it and they are [of] the court, two shall stand up and set [two] of their fellows beside the one, and they shall testify before them, and they say: Hallowed is the new moon, hallowed; for one person is not believed by himself. Now, if you assume that a witness may be a judge, what do we want all this for? Let them sit in their places and proclaim the new moon is hallowed! — He said to him: That was also difficult to me, and I asked R. Isaac b. Samuel b. Martha and R. Isaac [asked] R. Huna, and R. Huna [asked] Hiyya b. Rab, and Hiyya b. Rab [asked] Rab, and he said to them: Leave alone the testimony as to the new moon, [for it is] Biblical, and the confirmation of documents is Rabbinic. R. Abba said that R. Huna said that Rab said: If three sit to confirm a document and an objection is raised against one of them, they may, before they have signed [the attestation], give evidence regarding him, and he may [then] sign; after they have signed, they may not give evidence regarding him and he may not sign. On what ground was that objection raised? If the objection was on the ground of robbery.

they are two and two. 1 [And] if it is a protest regarding family blemish, 2 [then all that is required is] merely a revealing of the matter. 3 — Indeed, I will tell you, it is a protest regarding robbery, and these say: We know of him that he has repented. 4 R. Zera said: This thing I have heard from R. Abba, and if not for R. Abba of Acco, I would have forgotten it: If three sit to confirm a document and one of them dies, 5 they must write, ‘We were in a session of three, and one is no more.’ 6 R. Nahman b. Isaac said: And if it is written in it: This document has been produced 7 before us [as] a court of law, more is not necessary. 8 But perhaps it was an arrogant court, and [that is] according to Samuel, for Samuel said: If two have judged, 9 their judgment is a judgment, 10 only they are called an arrogant court? 11 — When it is written in it, [e.g.] ‘The court of our Master Ashi.’ 12 But perhaps the scholars of the school of R. Ashi hold with Samuel? — When it is written in it, ‘And our Master Ashi told us.’ 13 MISHNAH. IF A WOMAN SAYS, ‘I WAS MARRIED 14 AND I AM DIVORCED’, SHE IS BELIEVED, FOR THE MOUTH THAT FORBADE IS THE MOUTH THAT PERMITS. BUT IF THERE ARE WITNESSES THAT SHE WAS MARRIED, AND SHE SAYS, ‘I AM DIVORCED’, SHE IS NOT BELIEVED. IF SHE SAYS, ‘I WAS TAKEN CAPTIVE BUT I HAVE REMAINED CLEAN.' She is believed, for the mouth that forbade is the mouth that permits. But if there are witnesses that she was taken captive and she says, 'I have remained clean,' she is not believed. But if the witnesses came after she had married, she shall not go out.

GEMARA. R. Assi said: Whence [do we know] from the Torah [the principle of] 'the mouth that forbade is the mouth that permits'? Because it is said: 'My daughter I gave to this man as a wife.' [By saying] 'to man', he made her forbidden, [by saying] 'this', he made her permitted. Why is a Scriptural verse necessary? It stands to reason: he made her forbidden, and he made her permitted!

— The Scriptural verse is required according to what R. Huna [said that] Rab said, for R. Huna said [that] Rab said: Whence [do we know] from the Bible that the father is believed to make his daughter forbidden? Because it is said: 'My daughter I gave to [this] man as his wife.' Why is it said 'this'?

— Said Raba the son of R. Huna: When she has given a plausible reason for her words.

Our Rabbis taught: If a woman says, I am married', and then she says, 'I am unmarried', she is believed. But she made herself forbidden!

— Said Raba the son of R. Huna: When she has given a plausible reason for her words.

We have also a Baraitha to the same effect. If she says, 'I am married', and then she says, 'I am unmarried', she is not believed, but if she gives a plausible reason for her words, she is believed. And so it once happened with a great woman, who was great in beauty, and men were eager to betroth her, and she said to them, 'I am betrothed'. After a time she became betrothed. The Sages said to her: Why have you chosen to do this? She answered them, 'At first, when unworthy men came to me, I said, "I am betrothed"; now that worthy men come to me, I became betrothed'. And this law R. Aha, the prince of the castle, brought before the Sages in Usha, and they said: If she gives a plausible reason for her words she is believed. Samuel asked Rab: If a woman says, I am unclean', and then she says, 'I am clean', what is the law?

He answered him:

(1) Two give evidence against him (v. n. 4), and these other two for him, and he is still inadmissible, even if the other two give evidence regarding his fitness before they signed.

(2) He is said to be descended from slaves and thus unfit to act as judge.

(3) A search in his genealogy can reveal whether there is any ground for the objection of the two witnesses or not, independent of the evidence of the other two. Why then should the other member of the court, after having signed, be debarred from testifying in his favour?

(4) Lit., 'that he has done repentance'. Repentance implies giving back the thing robbed to its owner. [Since they do not contradict the evidence of the first set of witnesses, their testimony as to his fitness is accepted, provided it is given before they signed.]

(5) Before they signed it.

(6) So that it should be known that the document was confirmed in the presence of three judges.

(7) Lit., 'has gone out'. This term also implies that the document has been found valid.

(8) It is then evident that they were three, as a court of law cannot consist of less than three judges.

(9) Sat as a court and pronounced judgment.

(10) Their decision is valid.

(11) I.e., such practices should be discouraged.

(12) Under R. Ashi a court would certainly consist of three. R. Ashi's court is mentioned as a mere illustration, R. Ashi being a contemporary of R. Nahman b. Isaac, and head of the most renowned Academy and court at Mehasia.

(19) To this man.

(20) To all men except the one man to whom he says he gave her in marriage.
Deut. XXII, 16. He can give her as wife to this man and thus make her forbidden to all other men.

It is obvious that he means that man, who is putting up a claim against his newly wedded wife.

The law of Deut. XXII, 13ff does not apply to the husband's brother who marries the widow of his brother (cf. Deut. XXV, 5ff) and brings against her a charge of defamation. He is not subject to the fine. V. infra 46a.

Lit., ‘and she turned (retracted) and she said’.

Lit., ‘a piece of prohibition’. By Saying ‘I am married’, she declared herself to be forbidden to other men, how then can she raise this prohibition by a mere retraction?

Why she said, ‘I am married’.

Lit., ‘and men jumped at her’.

Lit., ‘she stood up and betrothed herself (to a man)’.

Lit., ‘why hast thou seen’.

To say that you were betrothed.

Lit., ‘she said to them’.

Lit., ‘How is it’. May her husband believe bet second statement and have intercourse with her?

Talmud - Mas. Kethuboth 22b

a plausible reason for her words she is believed. He learned it from him forty times, and still Samuel did not act accordingly with regard to himself. Our Rabbis taught: When two [witnesses] say [that he] the husband of the woman has died, and two [witnesses] say [that] he has not died, or two [witnesses] say [that] she has been divorced, and two [witnesses] say [that] she has not been divorced, she shall not marry [again], but if she has married [again], she shall not go out. R. Menahem b. Jose says: She shall go out. R. Menahem b. Jose said: When do I say [that] she shall go out? — When witnesses came and then she married, but if she married and then came witnesses, she shall not go out. Now, they are two and two, [and] he who has intercourse with her is liable to a doubtful guilt-offering! Said R. Shesheth: When she married one of her witnesses, then she herself should bring a doubtful guilt-offering! — When she says, ‘I am sure’. R. Johanan said: When two [witnesses] say [that the husband of the woman] has died, and two [witnesses] say [that] he has not died, she shall not marry [again], but if she has married [again], she shall not go out. When two [witnesses] say [that] she has been divorced, and two [witnesses] say [that] she has not been divorced, she shall not marry [again], and if she has married, she shall go out. What is the difference between the first case and the second case? — Abaye said: Explain it [that it speaks] of one witness. When one witness says [that] he has died, the Rabbis believe him as two [witnesses]. And [this is] according to ‘Ulla, for ‘Ulla said: Wherever the Torah makes one witness credible, [it is as if] there are two, whereas he who said that he has not died is one, and the words of one have no validity against two. If so, [she should be allowed to marry again] from the beginning? — Because of that [saying] of R. Assi, for R. Assi said: ‘Put away from thee a froward mouth, and perverse lips put far from thee’. In the second case [however] one witness says [that] she has been divorced, and one witness says [that] she has not been divorced, they both testify to a married woman, and he who says [that] she has been divorced is one, and the words of one have no validity against two. Raba said: Indeed, they are two and two, and R. Johanan regards [as right] the words of R. Menahem b. Jose in [the case of] divorce, but not in [the case of] death. Why? — In the case of death, she cannot contradict him, [but] in the case of divorce, she can contradict him. But would she be as impudent as all that? Did not R. Hannuna say: If a woman says to her husband, ‘thou hast divorced me,’ she is believed, [for] the presumption is [that] a woman is not insolent before her husband? — This is the case only when there are no witnesses who support her; but when there are witnesses who support her, she is indeed insolent. R. Assi says: When the witnesses say, ‘he has died just now, he has divorced her just now.’ Death one cannot prove, divorce one can prove, for we say to her, ‘if it is so, shew us thy document of divorce’. Our Rabbis taught: If two witnesses say that she has been betrothed, and two witnesses say [that] she has not been betrothed, she shall not marry, and if she has married, she shall not go out. If two witnesses say [that] she has been divorced, and two witnesses say [that] she has not been divorced, she shall not marry, and if she has married, she shall go out.

(1) The second set of witnesses.
(2) There are two witnesses against two witnesses, and the matter, that is the death of the first husband, remains in doubt. This cannot refer to the case of divorce, v. infra.
(3) The man who marries bet now’.
(4) A guilt-offering to be brought when one is in doubt whether the act committed was sinful or not.
(5) And be is sure that the first husband died.
(6) [She has a feeling of certitude that her first husband is dead, as otherwise be would have come back to bet (Rashi).]
(7) The statement of R. Johanan.
(8) Not two sets of witnesses testified, but one single witness in each case.
(9) [The Rabbis have laid down the principle that the evidence of one witness testifying to the husband's death is sufficient; v. Yeb. 88a.]
(10) Lit., ‘and the words of one are not in the place of two’. [The evidence of the former witness, who said that he was dead, is treated as that of two witnesses, whereas that of the latter only, as that of one.]
(11) Prov. IV. 24 — One should try to avoid evil talk, although there is no objection to the marriage from the point of view of strict law’. [R. Assi was wont to quote this verse from Prov.]
(12) That she should go out.
(13) If her first husband comes back she cannot say to him, ‘thou art dead!’ Therefore, she would not say that he is dead unless she was sure that it is so, and we believe her.
(14) If the first husband comes and says that he has not divorced her, she will contradict him and say that he has divorced her. If we should believe her she would rely on the denial she could give him and would marry again, although she was still the wife of the first husband.
(15) To contradict her husband in the case of divorce, even if it was not true.
(16) And so we ought to believe her also in the case of divorce!
(17) Therefore she need not go out if she has married again, provided it was to one of the witnesses.
(18) She cannot have lost it in such a short time. And if she cannot show her document of divorce she must not marry again, and if she has married, she must go out.

Talmud - Mas. Kethuboth 23a

What is the difference between the first case and the second case? — Abaye said: Explain it! [that it speaks] of one witness.2 When one witness says [that] she has been betrothed and one witness says [that] she has not been betrothed, they both testify to an unmarried woman, and he who says [that] she has been betrothed is one, and the words of one have no validity against two. In the second case [where] one witness says [that] she has been divorced and one witness says [that] she has not been divorced, they both testify to a married woman, and he who says that she has been divorced is one, and the words of one have no validity against two. R. Ashi said: Indeed, they are two and two, and reverse it.3 When two say, ‘we have seen’4 that she has been betrothed’, and two Say, we have not seen that she has been betrothed, she shall not marry [another man], and if she has married she goes out.’ [But] this is obvious! ‘We have not seen’ is no evidence! — It is not [so obvious], as it is needed for the case when they dwelt in one courtyard; one might say, ‘if she had been betrothed it would have been known,’5 so he lets us hear that there are people who get betrothed quietly. In the second case, when two say, ‘we have seen that she has been divorced,’ and two say, ‘we have not seen that she has been divorced, she shall not marry again, and if she has married she shall not go out,’ what does he let us hear [by this case]?6 Although they live in the same courtyard! [But then] this is the same! — One might say that with regard to betrothal it happens that people get betrothed quietly, but with regard to divorce, if she had been divorced, it would have been known, so he lets us hear that there are people who get betrothed and get divorced quietly. AND IF WITNESSES COME AFTER SHE GOT MARRIED. SHE SHALL NOT GO OUT. R. Oshaia refers it to the first clause. Rabbah b. Abin refers it to the second clause. He who refers it to the first clause, how much more [does he refer it] to the second clause, for in the case of a captive woman they have made it lenient. But he who refers it to the second clause does not refer it to the first clause. Is it to say that they differ concerning the view of R. Hammuna: that he who refers it to the first clause holds the view of R. Hammuna, and he who refers it [only] to the second clause does not hold the View of R. Hammuna? No, all hold the view of R. Hammuna. and here they differ in this: one argues: When was that of R. Hammuna said? In his presence, but in his absence she is impudent, and one holds [that] in his absence also she is not impudent. AND IF WITNESSES CAME AFTER SHE GOT MARRIED. etc. The father of Samuel said: ‘SHE GOT MARRIED’, does not mean, ‘she actually got married’. but ‘as soon as they allowed her to get married’, even if she did not get married yet. But it says: SHE SHALL NOT GO OUT! — [This means] she shall not go out from her first permission. Our Rabbis taught: When she says, ‘I was taken captive. and I am pure, and I have witnesses that I am pure. they do not say: We will wait until the witnesses come, but they allow her at once [to marry]. If they allowed her to marry and then the witnesses came and said, ‘we do not know’, then she shall not go out. But if witnesses of defilement came, even if she has many children she shall go out. Certain women captives came once to Nehardea. The father of Samuel placed watchmen with them. Said Samuel to him: And who watched them till now? said he to him: ‘If they had been thy daughters wouldst thou also have spoken of them so lightly?’ It was ‘as an error which proceedeth from before the ruler,’ and the daughters of Mar Samuel were taken captive. And they were brought to the Land of Israel. They let their captors stand outside and they went in into the school of R. Hanina. This One said, ‘I was taken captive. and I am pure,’ and that one said. ‘I was taken captive and I am pure. [So] they allowed them. Then the captors entered. R. Hanina [thereupon] said: They are the children of a Scholar. It then became known that they were the daughters of Mar Samuel. R. Hanina [thereupon] said to R. Shaman b. Abba: Go and take care of thy relatives. Said he to R. Hanina: But there are witnesses in the country beyond the sea — Now, however. they are not before us. Witnesses are in the North, and [therefore] she shall be forbidden! But did not the father of Samuel say: As soon as they allowed her to get married, even if she did not get married? R. Ashi said: It was stated: Witnesses of defilement.

(1) The Baraita just quoted.
(2) For each evidence.
(3) In the first case she has to go out, and in the second case she need not go out.
(4) This, too, is a new element.
(5) Lit., ‘there is a voice in the matter’.
(6) ‘We have not seen’ is no evidence!
(7) As in the first case.
(8) The sentence just quoted.
(9) Of our Mishnah, referring to the claim of the woman that she was divorced.
(10) Referring to her claim that she remained chaste in captivity.
(11) Since it is only presumed that she may have been cohabited with.
(12) Lit., ‘but to the first clause, no’.
(13) V. supra 22b.
(14) I.e., with regard to what case did R. Hammuna express that view.
(15) In the presence of the husband.
(16) [And therefore she would have to go out if witnesses came after she married and said that she was a married woman.]
(17) And therefore she need not go out.
The Court.

This would imply that she did get married.

I.e., from the permission given her by the Court to get married. That permission stands.

Whether she is pure or not.

I.e., witnesses who say that she was defiled while in captivity.

If the husband is a priest.

Abba the son of Abba.

To guard them until they had been redeemed.

V. Eccl. X, 5. The words that escaped the lips of Samuel had bad results.

Lit., and they (the captors) brought them’.

One of the daughters of Samuel.

To marry even a priest.

Since they left the captors outside they were their own witnesses, and the principle of 'the mouth that forbids is the mouth that permits' applied.

Lit., ‘the matter was revealed’.

I.e., marry one of them. [R. Shaman was a priest and relative of Samuel (Rashi).]

I.e., ‘There are witnesses in a far country, and they may come and testify to the daughters of Samuel having been in captivity. [And defiled; (v. Tosaf.).]

Why she is allowed to marry.

To testify. cf. n. 2.

I.e., each one of the daughters.

And if witnesses came afterwards, she may get married.

Only to witnesses who testify that the woman was actually defiled during her captivity, would annul the permission given for bet to get married but witnesses who testify only to bet having been in captivity would not affect that permission. There is then no conflict between R. Hanina and the father of Samuel.

MISHNAH. IF TWO WOMEN WERE TAKEN CAPTIVE, [AND NOW] ONE SAYS, ‘I WAS TAKEN CAPTIVE AND I AM PURE, AND THE OTHER ONE SAYS, I WAS TAKEN CAPTIVE AND I AM PURE.’ THEY ARE NOT BELIEVED. BUT WHEN THEY TESTIFY TO ONE ANOTHER, THEY ARE BELIEVED. GEMARA. Our Rabbis taught: [If she says], ‘I am impure and my friend is pure,’ she is believed; ‘I am pure and my friend is impure’, she is not believed; ‘I and my friend are impure’, she is believed as to herself and she is not believed as to her friend; ‘I and my friend are pure’, she is believed as to her friend and she is not believed as to herself. The Master said: ‘[If she says], 'I am pure and my friend is impure', she is not believed’. How shall we imagine this case? If there are no witnesses, why is she not believed as to herself? She says, ‘I was taken captive and I am pure!’ Hence it is plain that there are witnesses. [Now] read the middle clause: ‘"I and my friend are impure"; she is believed as to herself and she is not believed as to her friend’. But if there are witnesses, why is she not believed? Hence it is plain that there are no witnesses. [Now] read the last clause: ‘"I and my friend are pure"; she is believed as to her friend and she is not believed as to herself’. But if there are no witnesses, why is she not believed as to herself? Hence it is plain that there are witnesses. The first clause and the last clause when there are witnesses, [and] the middle clause when there are no witnesses? — Abaye said: Yes, the first clause and the last clause when there are witnesses, [and] the middle clause when there are no witnesses. R. Papa said: The whole of it [speaks] of where there are witnesses, but there is one witness who reverses. [If] she says, ‘I am impure and my friend is pure’, and the one witness says to her, ‘thou art pure and thy friend is impure’, she has declared herself forbidden, [and] her friend becomes permitted through her testimony. If [she says] ‘I am pure and my friend is impure’, and the one witness says to her, ‘Thou art impure and thy friend is pure’, since there are witnesses, she is not believed [as to herself], [and] her friend becomes permitted through the testimony of the [one] witness.
says], ‘I and my friend are impure.’ and the one witness says to her, ‘thou and thy friend are pure,’ she has declared herself forbidden, [and] her friend becomes permitted through the testimony of the [one] witness. What need is there again for this? It is [the same as in] the first part! — You might have said [that] they are both pure and the reason why she says so is that she acts [in accordance with the saying:] ‘Let me die with the Philistines’; so he lets us hear. [If she says] ‘I and my friend are pure’, and the one witness says to her, ‘Thou and thy friend are impure’, since there are witnesses, she is not believed, [and] her friend becomes permitted through her testimony. What need is there again for this? It is [the same as in] the very first clause! — You might have said [that] she is believed only when she declares herself as unfit, but when she declares herself as fit I might say that she is not believed, so he lets us hear [that this is not so]. MISHNAH. AND LIKEWISE TWO MEN, [IF] ONE SAYS, ‘I AM A PRIEST’, AND THE OTHER SAYS, ‘I AM A PRIEST’, THEY ARE NOT BELIEVED. BUT WHEN THEY TESTIFY TO ONE ANOTHER, THEY ARE BELIEVED. R. JUDAH SAID: ONE DOES NOT RAISE [A PERSON] TO THE PRIESTHOOD THROUGH THE TESTIMONY OF ONE WITNESS. R. ELEAZAR SAID: ONLY THEN, WHEN THERE ARE PEOPLE WHO OBJECT; BUT WHEN THERE ARE NO PEOPLE WHO OBJECT, ONE RAISES [A PERSON] TO THE PRIESTHOOD THROUGH THE TESTIMONY OF ONE WITNESS. R. SIMEON B. GAMALIEL SAYS IN THE NAME OF R. SIMEON: THE SON OF THE CHIEF OF THE PRIESTS: ONE RAISES [A PERSON] TO THE PRIESTHOOD THROUGH THE TESTIMONY OF ONE WITNESS. GEMARA. What need is there for all these cases? They are needed. For if he had stated [only the case of] ‘R. Joshua admits’ I might have said that only in that case is that principle applied, because there is a possible loss of money. but [in the case of] ‘If witnesses say this is our handwriting’ where there is no possible loss of money. I would not say so. And if he had stated [the case of] ‘If witnesses say this is our handwriting’, [I might have said that Only in that case does that principle apply] because [their statement concerns] other people. but where it concerns himself

(1) That she and her friend were taken captive.
(2) And in accordance with the principle in the Mishnah, supra 22a, she should be believed.
(3) As to her friend.
(4) Her testimony.
(5) V. supra p. 121. n. 9.
(6) Lit., ‘through her mouth’. [For in regard to a captive woman, he evidence of one in favour of her chastity is sufficient, v. infra 27a.]
(7) That she and her friend were taken captive.
(8) Lit., ‘all is not as if from her’, i.e., as if dependent on her, (Jast.). The fact that she was taken captive is known from the evidence of the witnesses and not only from her testimony.
(9) Lit., ‘mouth’.
(10) The last statement.
(11) [From the two cases in the first part we learn the two principles that her own evidence as to her having become impure must stand, and that the evidence of the witness in favour of chastity is sufficient.]
(12) Lit., ‘and this that she says so’, — that they ate both impure.
(13) Judg., XVI, 30. She applies to herself and to her friend the well-known Saying of Samson, that is, though she is pure she says that she is impure, so that she should be believed as to her friend, of whom she says that she is impure.
(14) That she is believed as to herself but not as to her friend.
(15) That she and her friend were taken captive.
(16) Lit., ‘through her mouth’.
(17) From here we learn that one witness is believed to attest the purity of the captive woman, even if there is another one contradicting him.
(18) As to her friend.
(19) Impure.
(20) Pure.
(21) As to her friend.
I would not say so. And if he would let us hear these two [cases. I might have said] because [both cases deal with] money matters but [in the case of] ‘a married woman’, which is a matter of prohibitio

n. What need is there for [the case of] ‘I was taken captive and I am pure’? — Because he wants to teach ‘But if witnesses came after she got married, she shall not go out’. — That is quite right according to him who refers this to the second clause, but according to him who refers this to the first clause, what is there to say? Because he wants to teach [the case of] ‘If two women were taken captive’. — And what need is there for [the case of] ‘If two women were taken captive’? — You might have said [that] we may be afraid that they favour one another, so he lets us hear [that we do not say so]. What need is there for [the case of] ‘AND LIKewise two Men’? Because he wants to teach the difference of opinion between R. Judah and the Rabbis. Our Rabbis taught: [If one says:] I am a priest and my friend is a priest. he is believed to the extent of allowing him to eat terumah, but he is not believed to the extent of allowing him to marry a woman until there are three, [and] two testify to one and two testify to the other. R. Judah says: He is not believed even with regard to allowing him to eat terumah until there are three, [and] two testify to one and two testify to the other. Is this to say that R. Judah is afraid that they might favour one another, and the Rabbis are not afraid that they might favour one another? Surely [from the following Mishnah] we understand just the reverse! For we have learned: When ass-drivers come to a town and one of them says, ‘Mine is new and my friend’s is old mine is not prepared and my friends is prepared’; he is not believed; R. Judah says: He is believed! — Said R. Adda b. Ahaba, in the name of Rab: The statement must be reversed. Abaye said: Indeed, there is no need to reverse It; in [the case of] demai, have made it lenient, for most of the ‘amme ha-arez separate the tithes. Raba said: Is the question [only] of R. Judah against R. Judah? Is there no question [also] Of the Rabbis against the Rabbis? No, [they answer]: there is no question of R. Judah against R. Judah. as we have [just] explained, and there is no question of the Rabbis against the Rabbis, for [the case is similar to that with regard to which] R. Hama b. ‘Ukba said that [it speaks of] when he has his trade-tools in his hand;

(16) My corn.
(17) New=fresh, old=not fresh. Fresh corn is not so good as corn that is not fresh. [He Simply says this in depreciation of his own ware and in praise of that of his fellow.] It may also be that ‘new’ and ‘old’ are used in the sense of Lev. XXIII, 10ff., the ‘new’ being forbidden before the offering of the ‘omer; v. Glos.
(18) I.e., the priestly dues have not been given.
(19) [According to the first interpretation (n. 10) the reference is to the tithes only, and according to the second also to the prohibition of ‘new’ corn.]
(20) This would show that the Rabbis are afraid of people favouring one another, and that R. Judah is not afraid.

(25) V. Glos. They did not observe, or were under the Suspicion of not observing certain religious customs regarding tithes, levitical cleanness, etc. In Spite of this suspicion it was assumed that most of them did give tithes.
(26) If you do not reverse, why should the Rabbis hold that the ass-drivers are not believed, seeing that they do not suspect mutual favouritism.
(27) Lit., answered’. They have made it lenient with regard to demai.

Talmud - Mas. Kethuboth 24b

so here also1 [we deal with] when he2 has his trade-tools3 in his hand.4 And with regard to what5 was that of R. Hama. b. ‘Ukba said:6 With regard to what we have learned: If a potter left his pots7 and went down to drink [water from the river.]8 the inner ones are pure and the outer ones are impure.9 But it has been taught10 that these and those are impure?-Said R. Hama b. ‘Ukba: [it speaks of a case]11 when he had his trade-tools in his hand,12 so that13 the hand of all touches them.14 But it has been taught:15 These and those are pure? — Said R. Hama b. ‘Ukba: When his trade-tools are not in his hand.16 But [then] the case that we have learnt:17 ‘The inner ones are pure and the outer ones are impure’ — how is that possible?18 — When they19 are near the public road and [they are impure] because of border stones of the public road.20 And if you wish you may say: R. Judah and the Rabbis differ as to whether one raises [a person] from terumah to the status of a priest.21 The question was asked: What is [the law]? Does one raise22 [a person] from documents23 to the full status of a priest?24 — How shall we imagine this case? If we say that it is written in it: ‘I, So-and-so, a priest. have borrowed a maneh from so-and-so, and witnesses have signed [the document]. What [then] is [the law]? Do they26 testify [only] to the maneh [mentioned] in the document, or do they testify to the whole matter?27 — R. Huna and R. Hisda [give opposing answers]: One says: One raises,28 and one says: One does not raise.28 The question was asked.29 What is [the law]? Does one raise [a person] from the lifting up of the hands30 to the status of a priest?31 This is asked according to him who says [that] one raises [a person] from terumah to the status of a priest and this is asked according to him who says [that] one does not raise [a person from terumah to the status of a priest].

It is asked according to him who says [that] one raises: When is this said? [In the case of] terumah, which [if eaten by one who is not a priest] is a sin punishable with death; but [in the case of] ‘lifting up the hands’, which [if one who is not a priest performs the pronouncing of the priestly blessing] is [only transgressing the] prohibition of a positive command. [I would say] no. Or perhaps there is no difference [and] it is asked according to him who says [that] one does not raise: When is this said? [In the case of] terumah, which is eaten in privacy; but [in the case of] ‘lifting up the hands,’ which [is done] in public [I might say that] if he were not a priest he would not have the impudence [to act as a priest]. Or perhaps there is no difference?

— R. Hisda and R. Abina [give opposing answers to this question]: One says: One raises, and One Says: One does not raise. R. Nahman b. Isaac said to Raba: What is the [adopted] law? Said he to him: With regard to this there is a difference of opinion between R. Hisda and R. Abina. What is the [adopted] law? Said he to him: I know a Baraita: For it has been taught: R. Jose said: Great is presumption.

For it is said: And the children of the priests: the children of Habaiah, the children of Hakkoz, the children of Barzillai, who took a wife of the daughters of Barzillai the Gileadite, and was called after their name. These sought their register. of those that were reckoned by genealogy, and they were not found,’ therefore were they deemed polluted and put from the priesthood. And the Tirshatha said unto them, that they should not eat of the most holy things, till there stood up a priest with Urim and Thummim. He thus said to them: You remain in your presumptive state; what have you eaten in exile? So here also [you shall eat] the sacred things of the country. Now if we were to assume [that] one raises [a person] from ‘lifting up the hands’ to the state of a priest, since these spread out their hands, one might raise them? — It is different here, for their presumption has been impaired. For if you will not say so, then according to him who says [that] one raises [a person] from terumah, since they eat terumah, one might raise them to the status of priests! Hence, [you must say it is] because their presumption has been impaired.
impure. because passers-by, who do not observe the laws of purity, may touch them with their garments. The inner pots the passers-by cannot reach, and therefore they ate pure.

(21) נִמְלָחַת, lit., ‘genealogical records’, ‘traced genealogy’; (Jast. s.v.). The word נִמְלָחַת ‘those that were reckoned by genealogy’. Ezra II, 62, refers to ‘the children of the priests’. (v. 61). נִמְלָחַת means therefore primarily ‘genealogical priestly records’, ‘traced priestly genealogy’. In out text the phrase can be tendered by ‘as being of a priestly family’. or as ‘having the status of a priest’, or’ briefly, ‘to the full status of a priest’. and the dispute between R.
Judah and the Rabbis is. if a person is seen eating terumah, whether he is to be regarded as a priest also in family matters and be allowed to marry a woman of unblemished descent; (v. Kid. 69b). R. Judah says ‘yes’, and he is therefore strict even with regard to terumah, and does not accept the evidence of one witness, but the Rabbis would say ‘no’. and are therefore lenient with regard to terumah (v. 24a). This, then, is the point at issue, and not whether we suspect mutual favouritism, which, in point of fact, all agree that we do not. [According to the Rabbis, however, we must still adopt the answer given before, that the Mishnah of Demai deals with a case when the ‘ass-driver had his trade-tools in his hand’
(Tosaf.)]

(22) Lit., ‘how is it to raise’, etc.

(23) In which a person is designated as a priest.

(24) V. note 4.

(25) Who testifies that he is in fact a priest?

(26) The witnesses.

(27) I.e., to the whole contents of the document and so also to the priestly status of the borrower.

(28) A person from documents to the status of a priest.

(29) By the members of the academy.

(30) The priests lifted up their bands in pronouncing the priestly blessing. The pronouncing of the priestly blessing (v.
Num. VI, 22.27) is therefore called ‘Lifting up the bands’. Cf. Ta’an 26, Bet. 34a.

(31) Should one regard him, whom be sees pronouncing the priestly blessing, as a priest in every way?

(32) That is, according to R. Judah.

(33) That is, according to the Rabbis.

(34) Lit., ‘(when are) these words (said)’.

(35) It is therefore to be assumed that he who eats terumah is a priest. as it is not presumed that a person would commit such a grave sin.

(36) Lit., ‘do’. The commandment of pronouncing the blessing is given only to Aaron and his sons (and descendants) —
Num. VI, 23. If non-Aaronides perform this commandment, they commit a transgression. because to them this is forbidden by Implication. Only priests may bless, not non-priests. The transgression of a commandment, forbidden by implication from a positive command, is treated like a positive command, and is not punishable. This transgression will therefore be sooner committed by a non-Aaronide than the sin of eating terumah.

(37) I.e one does not raise a person from ‘lifting up the hands’ to the full status of priest hood.

(38) Between terumah and lifting up the hands.

(39) And the person does not mind committing a wrong act privately.

(40) Lit., ‘a man would not be as impudent (or, act as impudently) as all that’.

(41) Between terumah and lifting up the hands.

(42) A person from lifting up of the bands to the status of priest.

(43) I.e., important.

(44) נִמְלָחַת; the word used here in the sense of ‘presumptive continuance of a state, or condition, until evidence is produced rebutting the presumption’. V. Jast. s.v.

(45) [The governor; identified with Nehemiah (Rashi).]

(47) The Tirshatha.

(48) Lit., ‘behold you are’.

(49) In Babylonia.

(50) ‘Limit,’ ‘boundary.’ has here the technical meaning of ‘country,’ as distinguished from ‘sanctuary and Jerusalem’.
‘Sacred things of the country’ ate the holy things that may be consumed outside the Temple and Jerusalem, such as terumah, as distinct from sacrificial offerings, that must be consumed within the precincts of the Temple courtyard.

(51) The Tirshatha only forbade them to eat ‘the most holy things’, as sacrifices. It is therefore implied that as he allowed them to eat ‘the sacred things of the country.’ as terumah, in presumptive continuance of their former state, they would be allowed, in the same way, to perform the lifting up of the hands, which was also done in ‘the country’.

(52) And pronounced the priestly blessing; v. preceding note.

(53) To the full status of priests, that is, as being of a priestly family., v. p. 133 n. 4.

(54) In the case Of Ezra II, 61-63.

(55) Since they must not eat ‘the most holy things’ and the rightful priests do eat them. One would therefore not raise them to the status of priests from lifting up their hands. But in other cases one might do so.

(56) That no mistake can be made because their presumption has been impaired.

(57) Lit., ‘but is it not’?

(58) And therefore no mistake can be made, and the same applies to the ‘lifting up of hands’.

Talmud - Mas. Kethuboth 25a

If so,¹ what [do the words of R. Jose mean] ‘Great is the presumption’?² — Till now³ they ate [only] Rabbinical terumah.⁴ [and] now they ate Biblical terumah.⁵ And if you wish, you may say: now also they ate Rabbinical terumah⁶ [and] did not eat Biblical terumah,⁷ and when does one raise [a person] from terumah to the status of a priest. In the case of Biblical terumah, but in the case of Rabbinical terumah one does not raise. If so,⁸ what [is the meaning of the words] ‘Great is the presumption’?⁹ — Although one might have forbidden [Rabbinical terumah] because of Biblical terumah,¹⁰ this has not been forbidden. But did they not eat Biblical terumah? Surely it is written: ‘that they should not eat of the most holy things’, [implying] ‘the most holy things’ they did not eat, but Biblical terumah they did eat! — [No]. He means thus: Neither [may they eat] anything that is called ‘holy thing’s¹¹ as it is written: ‘And no stranger shall eat of the holy thing’, nor anything which is called ‘holy thing’. for it is written: ‘And if a priest's daughter be married into a stranger. she shall not eat of the peace-offering of the holy things¹² — and a Master said: [that this means] that which has been set aside from the holy things she shall not eat.¹³ Come and hear: A presumption for the priesthood is constituted by the ‘lifting up of the hands’ in Babylonia, and the eating of the hallah¹⁴ in Syria, and taking a share in [the priestly] gifts¹⁵ in large cities.¹⁶ In any case he mentions [here] the ‘lifting up of the hands’; is it not with regard to the full status of the priest?¹⁷ — No, with regard to terumah.¹⁸ But he teaches [the ruling regarding terumah] as analogous to the eating of hallah,¹⁹ just as the eating of hallah [entitles a person] to the full status of a priest, so does the lifting up of the hands [entitle a person] to the full status of a priest? — No. the eating of the hallah itself merely [serves as evidence] regarding terumah, [for] he holds that hallah in our days¹⁹ is Rabbinical and terumah is Biblical and one raises [a person] from Rabbinical hallah to Biblical terumah.¹⁸ and [it is] as R. Huna. the son of R. Joshua. reversed [the words of] the Rabbis.²¹ Come and hear: A presumption for the priesthood is [constituted by] the ‘lifting up of the hands’ and taking a share [at the distribution of the [priestly gifts] at the threshing floors²² in the Land of Israel;²³ in Syria and in all places to which the messengers of the new moon come²⁴ the ‘lifting up of the hands’ is evidence, but not taking a share at the threshing floors.²⁵ Babylonia is like Syria. R. Simeon b. Gamaliel, says: Also Alexandria in Egypt formerly. because there was there a permanent court of law.²⁶ In any case he teaches [here] the ‘lifting up of the hands’; is it not with regard to the full status of the priest? — No, with regard to hallah. But he teaches [the rule regarding the lifting up of the hands] as analogous to taking a share at the threshing floors: just as taking a share at the threshing floors [serves as evidence] in respect of the status of a priest, so does the ‘lifting up of the hands’ [serve in respect of the status of a priest! — No, taking a share at the threshing floors itself [serves as evidence only as] to hallah, for he holds that terumah in our days is Rabbinical and hallah is Biblical and one raises [a person] from Rabbinical terumah to Biblical hallah, even as the Rabbis, whom R. Huna the son of R. Joshua found [in discourse]. For R. Huna, the son of R. Joshua, found the Rabbis in the School of Rab sitting²⁷ and saying: Even according to him who says that terumah in these days is Rabbinical. hallah is Biblical, for during the seven [years] that they²⁶ conquered [the Land] and during the seven [years] that they distributed [it]²⁹ there was a duty upon them [to separate] hallah, but there was no duty upon them [to separate] terumah. And I said to them: On the contrary, even according to him who says [that] terumah in these days is Biblical, hallah is Rabbinical, for it has been taught: [It is written:] ‘In your coming’. If “in your coming” you might think as soon as two or three spies had entered it? [Therefor] it is said in your coming. I have spoken of the coming of all and not of the coming of a portion of you. Now when Ezra brought them up not all of them went up. Come and hear: A presumption for the priesthood [is constituted by] the ‘lifting up of the hands’ and taking a share at the threshing floors and testimony. Now is testimony a presumption? Hence he means thus: The ‘lifting up of the hands is like a testimony’; as a testimony [raises one] to the status of a priest, so the ‘lifting up of the hands’ [raises one] to the status of a priest! — No. [what it means is] a testimony that comes on the strength of a presumption is like a presumption. as when a man came once before R. Ammi [and] said to him: I am convinced that he is a priest. So he said to him: What have you seen? And he answered him: He read first in the Synagogue. — As priest or as prominent man? — After him a Levite read. And R. Ammi raised him to the priesthood on the strength of his testimony. Someone came once before R. Joshua b. Levi, [and] said to him: am convinced that he is a Levite. He said to him: What have you seen? He answered him: He read second in the Synagogue. As Levite or as a prominent man? — A priest read before him. And R. Joshua b. Levi raised him to the status of Levite on the strength of his testimony. Someone came once before Resh Lakish [and] said to him: I am convinced that he is a priest. He ‘said to him: What have you seen? [He answered him:] He read first in the Synagogue. He asked him: Have you seen him take a share at the threshing floors? — Said R. Eleazar to him. And does the priesthood cease if there is no threshing floor there? — Once they sat before R. Johanan [and] there came such a case before them. Resh Lakish asked him: Have you seen him take a share at the threshing floor? So R. Johanan said to him: And does the priesthood cease if there is no threshing floor there? — He turned round, looked at R. Eleazar with displeasure and said: You have heard something from the smith's son and you did not say it to us in his name. Rabbi and R. Hiyya, one raised a son to the priesthood on the testimony of his father, and one raised a brother to the status of Levite on the testimony of his brother. It can be proved that it was Rabbi who raised the son to the priesthood on the testimony of his father, for it has been taught: If one comes and says: ‘This is my son and he is a priest,’ he is believed with regard to allowing him to eat terumah, but he is not believed with regard to allowing him to marry a woman. This is the opinion of Rabbi. Said R. Hiyya to him: If you believe him so as to allow him to eat terumah, believe him also so as to allow him to marry a woman, and if you do not believe him so as to allow him to marry a woman, do not believe him also as to allow him to eat terumah. He answered him: I believed him so as to allow him to eat terumah because it is in his hands to let him eat terumah, but I do not believe him so as to allow him to marry a woman because it is not in his hands to let him marry a woman. It’ is proved. And since it was Rabbi who raised the son to the priesthood on the testimony of his father, [it follows that] it was R. Hiyya who raised the brother to the status of Levite on the testimony of his brother, But [according to] R. Hiyya, why is the son different that [he is] not [raised]? Because he is related to his father. A brother, too, is related to his brother. —

(1) And therefore hallah in these days is Rabbinical.
(2) Witnesses testify that he is a priest.

Rashi: with an evil eye.

He understood that R. Eleazar had heard the phrase he had cited from R. Johanan. and therefore reproved him for this lack of scholarly courtesy in not mentioning his source.

Of unblemished descent.

He can give him of his terumah.

Marriage is not in the hand of the father.

That it was Rabbi who promoted the son to priesthood on the testimony of his father.

On the testimony of his father.

Why should he be raised on the evidence of his brother?

Talmud - Mas. Kethuboth 26a

When he was talking in his simplicity. As that [story which] Rab Judah related in the name of Samuel: It happened that a man was talking in his simplicity and said: ‘I remember when I was a child and rode on my father's shoulder, they brought me out from school and stripped me of my shirt and immersed me so that I could eat terumah in the evening.' And R. Hiyya added: ‘And my friends held aloof from me and called me "Johanan the hallloth-eater".' And Rabbi raised him to the priesthood on his testimony. It has been taught: R. Simeon b. Eleazar, says: Just as terumah is a presumption for the priesthood, so is the first tithe a presumption for the priesthood, but he who takes a share [at the threshing floors] through the court — [this] is not a presumption. The first tithe belongs to the Levite? - [This is] according to R. Eleazar, the son of Azariah, for it has been taught: Terumah belongs to the priest, the first tithe to the Levite-this is the view of R. Akiba, R. Eleazar, the son of Azariah, says: The first tithe belongs also to the priest. [But] R. Eleazar, the son of Azariah, says: ‘also to the priest’; does he say: to the priest and not to the Levite? — Yes. after Ezra had punished them. But perhaps it happened that they gave it to him? — Said R. Hisda: Here we treat of a case where we know that the father of that [per. son] is a priest and a rumour came Out concerning him that he is the son of a divorced woman or a haluzah and [yet] they gave him tithe at the threshing floor. [He could not be regarded as] a Levite, because he was not a Levite. What then could you say? That he was the son of a divorced woman or the son of a haluzah? [But as to this] there is no question that according to him who says [that] the first tithe is forbidden to strangers they would not have given [it] to him. For even according to him who says: The first tithe is permitted to strangers, it is only to sustain them but as a distribution [due to him as of right] they do not give it to him. ‘But he who takes a share [at the threshing floors] through the court [this] is not a presumption.’ If it is not a presumption through the court, when is it a presumption? — Said R. Shesheth: he means thus: If one shares the terumah in the property of his father through the court, it is not a presumption. — This is obvious — You might have said [that] just as those [get their share of terumah] for eating, this one also [gets his share of terumah] for eating, so he lets us hear [that] those [get the terumah] for eating and this one for selling. R. Judah says: ONE DOES NOT RAISE [A PERSON] TO THE PRIESTHOOD ON THE TESTIMONY OF ONE WITNESS, etc. R. Simeon b. Gamaliel says the same as R. Eliezer. And if you will say [that] they differ with regard to an objection raised by one person. [in] that R. Eliezer holds that an objection [may be admitted if cooling from;] one [person] and R. Simeon b. Gamaliel holds that an objection [must come from at least] two [persons] did not R. Johanan say’ All agree that an objection [must come from] at least two persons? — But we treat here of a case where the father of this [person] is a priest and a rumour came out concerning him that he is the son of a divorced woman or the son of a haluzah and they put him down, and one witness came and said, ‘I know that he is a priest.'
(1) The brother, on whose statement the promotion was made, did not intend to give evidence.
(2) Terumah had to be eaten in ritual purity.
(3) [Because children ate apt to rummage about in places that are not clean, and thus contract defilement.]
(4) Completing the man's narrative.
(6) If a man is seen eating first tithe, it is presumed that he is a priest.

(10) To the Levite: how’ then car first tithe constitute a presumption for priesthood?

and they raised him [again] and [then] came two [other witnesses] and said [that] he is the son of a divorced woman or the son of a haluzah. and they put him, down [again], and [then] came one witness and said, ‘I know that he is a priest’. [Now] all agree1 that they2 are joined into one testimony, and they differ as to whether we are afraid of bringing contempt on the court.3 The first Tanna4 holds: Since we put hill, down we do not raise him, [again]. because we are afraid of bringing contempt on the court.5 Whereas R. Simeon b. Gamaliel, holds: we have put him down and we can raise him, [again],6 and we are not afraid of bringing contempt on the court. R. Ashi asked against this: If so, even [when there are] two and two7 also8 But, said R. Ashi, they differ as to whether they9 are joined into one testimony. And they have the same difference of opinion as these Tannaim,10 for it has been taught: Their testimonies are not joined together unless they have both seen11 at the same time;12 R. Joshua b. Korha. says: Even when [they have seell] one after another. Their testimonies are not established13 in court until they both give evidence at the same time; R. Nathan says: We hear the evidence of one to-day. and when the other one comes to-morrow we hear his evidence.14 MISHNAH. IF A WOMAN WAS IMPRISONED BY HEATHENS, IF FOR THE SAKE OF MONEY, SHE IS PERMITTED TO HER HUSBAND, AND IF FOR THE PURPOSE OF [TAKING HER] LIFE,15 SHE IS FORBIDDEN TO HER HUSBAND. GEMARA. R. Samuel b. Isaac said [that] Rab said: They have taught [this] only when the hand of Israel is strong over the heathens.16 but when the hand of the heathens is strong over themselves,17 even if for the sake of money, she is forbidden to her husband. Raba raised an objection: R. Jose the priest and R. Zechariah b. ha-Kazzab18 testified regarding an Israelitish woman, who was pledged19 in Ashkelon and her family20 put her away.21 and her witnesses22 testified [concerning her] that she did not hide herself [with a man] and that she was not defiled [by a man]. [that] the Sages said to them: If you believe [the witnesses] that she was pledged believe [them also] that she did not hide herself and that she was not defiled, and if you do not believe [them] that she did not hide herself and that she was not defiled, do not believe [them] that she was pledged.

Now Ashkelon [was a town in which] the hand of the heathens was strong over themselves and he teaches

(1) R. Eliezer and R. Simeon b. Gamaliel.

(2) The testimony of the first witness and that of the last witness so that there are two witnesses against two witnesses.

(3) If he is re-instated now, having been put down by the court twice.

(4) R. Eliezer.

(5) [Should he be reinstated after having been degraded twice, the court would be brought into contempt; and thus R. Eliezer says that where there have been objectors, there is renewed promotion by the evidence of one witness, namely the last.]

(6) [To the priesthood In continuance of the presumptive state which he had originally enjoyed.]

(7) If two witnesses who speak in his favour come at the same time.

(8) He should be not raised again in the view of R. Eliezer for fear of bringing contempt on the court.

(9) The testimony of the first witness and that of the last witness, so that there are two witnesses against two witnesses.

(10) The Rabbis and R. Nathan of the Baraitha that follows.

(11) What they testify to.

(12) At the same time and in the presence of one another.

(13) Accepted as evidence.

(14) Their testimonies are joined together and the two single witnesses are regarded as a pair of witnesses. R Eliezer agrees with the Rabbis, R. Simeon b. Gamaliel with R. Nathan.

(15) And she was saved afterwards.

(16) [In which case they were afraid to force the woman, lest they should forfeit their money claim.]

(17) I.e., when the heathens are independent. [or a euphemism ‘themselves’, standing for Israelites.]

(18) ‘Son of the Butcher’.

(19) For a debt.

(20) Who were priests.

(21) Disqualified her from marrying a priest for fear she might have been violated.

(22) Who testified to her having been pledged.

(23) V. ‘Ed. VIII, 2.

Talmud - Mas. Kethuboth 27a

‘when she was pledged’ but not ‘when she was imprisoned’? — [No] the same applies also to [the case if] she had been imprisoned. only it happened so. Some say. Raba said: We have also learned [in a Mishnah] to the same effect: R. Jose the priest and R. Zechariah b. ha-Kazzab testified regarding an Israelitish woman. who was pledged in Ashkelon and her family put her away and her witnesses testified concerning her that she did not hide herself [with a man] and that she was not defiled [by a man]. [that] the Sages said: If you believe [the witnesses] that she was pledged believe [them also] that she did not hide herself and that she was not defiled, and if you do not believe [them] that she did not hide herself and was not defiled, do not believe [them] that she was pledged. In Ashkelon [it happened] for the sake of money, and [yet] the reason [why the Sages permitted her to her husband was] because witnesses testified concerning her, but if no witnesses testified concerning her that she would not have been permitted; and is it not [also to be supposed] that there is no difference whether she was pledged or imprisoned? — No, when she was pledged it is different. Some put [this argument] in the form of a contradiction. We have learned: IF FOR THE SAKE OF MONEY SHE IS PERMITTED TO HER HUSBAND. But here is a contradiction: ‘R. Jose testified etc.’ [Now] in Ashkelon [it happened] for the sake of money and [yet] the reason [why she is permitted to her husband] is because witnesses testify concerning her, but if no witnesses testify concerning her, [she would] not have been permitted. And it is answered: R. Samuel b. Isaac said: It is no contradiction; here [it speaks] when the hand of Israel is strong over the heathens, [and] there when the hand of the heathens is strong over themselves. IF FOR THE PURPOSE OF TAKING HER LIFE SHE IS FORBIDDEN [TO HER HUSBAND]. Rab said: As, for instance, the wives of thieves. Levi said: As, for instance, the wife of Ben Dunai. Hezekiah said: This is only when they have [already] been sentenced to death — R. Johanan says: Even if they have not yet been sentenced to death. MISHNAH. IF TROOPS OF SIEGE HAVE TAKEN A TOWN. ALL THE PRIESTS’ WIVES WHO ARE IN IT ARE UNFIT. IF THEY HAVE WITNESSES, EVEN A SLAVE. EVEN A HANDMAID, THEY ARE BELIEVED. NO ONE IS BELIEVED AS TO HIMSELF.

GEMARA. There is a contradiction against this: If a reconnoitering troop comes to a town in time of peace the open casks [of wine] are forbidden and the closed ones are permitted. In times of war both are permitted, because they have no time to offer libations. — R. Mari answered: To have intercourse they have time. To offer libations they have no time. R. Isaac b. Eleazar said in the name of Hezekiah: There [it speaks] of a besieging troop of the same kingdom. here [it speaks] of a besieging troop of another kingdom. [Even in the case of a besieging troop] of the same kingdom it is not possible that one of them does not run away [from the rest of the troop]. — Rab. Judah answered in the name of Samuel: When the guards see one another, [But] it is not possible that one does not sleep a little! — R. Levi answered: When they placed round the town chains, dogs, trunks of trees, and geese. R. Abba, b. Zabda said: With regard to this R. Judah Nesi’ah and the Rabbis differ: one said [that] there [it speaks] of a besieging troop of the same kingdom, and here of a besieging troop of another kingdom, and he found no difficulties, whereas one raised all those questions and answered [them by saying] when they placed round the town chains, dogs, trunks of trees, and geese. R. Idi b. Abin said in the name of R. Isaac b. Ashian: If there is there one hiding place, it protects all priests’ wives. R. Jeremiah asked: What is [the law] if it holds only one? Do we say of each one: This is the one or not? — But why should it be different from [the following case]? There were two paths, one was clean and one was unclea, and someone walked in one of them and [then] prepared clean things, and another person came and walked in the second path and [then] prepared clean things. R. Judah says: If each one comes to ask separately, they are [declared] clean; [but] if they both come together, they are [declared] unclean; R. Jose Says: In either case they are [declared] unclean. Whereon] Raba, and some say R. Johanan said: [if they come to ask] at the same time, all agree that they are [declared] unclean, if they come one after another, all agree that they are [declared] clean; they differ only when one comes to ask for himself and for the other one; one regards this as [if it were] at the same time, and the other regards this as [if it were] one after another. Now here also, since all [women] are declared permitted, it is like [the case where they came] at the same time — How is this so? There is certainly an impurity, but here who says that any one has been defiled? R. Ashi asked: If she says, ‘I have not hidden myself and I have not been defiled’, what is [the law]? Do we say

(1) The case of ‘pledged’ would be worse than that of ‘imprisoned’. for once the tithe for redemption had expired, the pledge remains the absolute possession of the creditor (Rashi).

(2) That she had been pledged.

(3) This Supports R. Samuel b. R. Isaac.

(4) V. p. 144 n. 9.

(5) In our Mishnah.

(6) ‘Ed. V. 2.

(7) Their property and their wives were apparently confiscated (Rashi).

(10) Priestesses.

(11) I.e., forbidden to their husbands, as they might have been defiled by the troops.

(12) That they have not been defiled.

(13) A male slave.

(14) A female slave.
Because they may have offered libations to idols.

It is assumed that the troops do not touch the closed casks since they have open casks of wine.

They are driven by their passion.

In our Mishnah.

[Sent to suppress a rebellion. The troop is therefore self-restrained]

In our Mishnah.

An enemy troop behaves in a hostile manner, and the women of the town may have been violated.

Var. lec. ‘remove his foot’.

And has violated a woman.

Appointed for the protection of the population.

And they can call to one another to arrest any wrongdoer. Fear of the guards would prevent assaults on women.

I.e., the guards may fall asleep for a little while.

So that any one who would attempt to run away (or slip away) would be caught.

The Prince. R. Judah II

In our Mishnah.

The other disputing party.

Raised here in the Gemara.

It is to be assumed of each one that she hid herself there.

Of the priests’ wives.

Who hid herself there.

Ritually. In one of the two paths were dead bodies buried, but it is not known in which.

Lit., ‘did purities’. I.e., touched things which were ritually pure (Rashi). If he is ritually impure he makes them ritually impure.

They come to ask a scholar for a decision as to the things which they touched.

Lit., ‘this one for himself and this one for himself’.

I.e., the things are pure, because the two men ate regarded as pure. Since they came to ask separately I say of each of them that he walked in the clean path.

The things are unclean, because the decision given to the men cannot be: ‘you are clean’, since one of the two present must have walked in the unclean path. As it is not known which it was they ate both regarded as unclean and the things which they touched are unclean.

Lit., ‘Whether So-and-so’. Whether they come separately or together.

V. Toh. V, 5.

R. Jose.

Lit., ‘compares it to’.

R. Judah.

In the case of the priests’ wives.

And therefore all of them should be forbidden on the view of R. Jose to their husbands, if there is a hiding place in which only one can hide herself, Since, when R. Judah and R. Jose differ, the law is according to R. Jose (Rashi) and since it is ruled that all the women are permitted, it is as if they all had come at one and the same time to ask for a decision.

I.e., is this analogy correct? How can you compare these two cases?

In the case of the two paths.

One path was unclean.

In the case of the priests’ wives.

Of the priests’ wives.

It may be that there was no defilement at all.

One of the priests’ wives.

Talmud - Mas. Kethuboth 27b
‘why should she lie,’¹ or do we not say it? But why should this be different from the following case? Once someone hired out an ass to a person, and he said to him, ‘Do not go the way of Nehar Pekod. where there is water,² go the way of Naresh, where there is no water. But he³ went the way of Nehar Pekod and the ass died.⁴ He³ then came before Raba⁵ and said to him. ‘Indeed, I went the way of Nehar Pekod, but there was no water. Said Raba: ‘Why should he lie?’ If he wished he could say ‘I went the way of Naresh.’ And Abaye said to him: we do not say ‘Why should he lie?’ where there are witnesses.⁶ — Now is this so? There were witnesses that there certainly was water on the way of Nehar Pekod, but here has she certainly been defiled? It is [only] a fear,⁷ and in the case of a fear we say ['why should she lie?'] IF THERE ARE WITNESSES, EVEN A SLAVE, EVEN A HAND’ MAID, THEY ARE BELIEVED. And even her own handmaid is believed. But there is a contradiction against this:⁸ She⁹ must not be alone with him¹⁰ unless there are witnesses, even a slave, even a handmaid¹¹ except her own handmaid,¹² because she¹³ is familiar with her own handmaid!¹⁴ — R. Papi said: In [the case of] a woman captive¹⁵ they¹⁶ have made it lenient. R. Papa said: In the one case¹⁷ [it speaks of] her handmaid, in the other case¹⁸ [it speaks of] his handmaid. But her handmaid is not believed? Does he not teach [that] no one may testify as to himself? [This would imply that] her handmaid is believed!¹⁹ Her handmaid is like herself.²⁰ R. Ashi said: In both cases [it speaks of] her handmaid, but [what we maintain is that] the handmaid sees and is silent.²¹ [Consequently] there,²² where her silence makes her permitted,²³ she is not believed, but here,²⁴ where her silence makes her forbidden,²⁵ she is believed. Now also, she may come and tell a falsehood?²⁶ Two [things] she would not do,²⁷ as in the case of Mari b. Isak [or as some say of Hana b. Isak]: To him there came a brother from Be-Hozae and said to him: Give me a share in the property of our father. He answered him; I do not know you. He²⁸ then came to R. Hisda, and he²⁹ said to him: I he³⁰ answered you well, for it is written:³¹ ‘And Joseph knew his brethren, and they knew not him.’ This teaches that he went away before he had grown a beard and he came back after growing a beard.³² [Then] he³² said to him: I Go and bring witnesses that you are his brother. He³² answered him:³² I have witnesses, but they are afraid of him,³³ because he is a powerful man. He³² [then] said to the other man: Go you and bring witnesses that he³² is not thy brother. He³⁰ answered him;³² Is this the law? [Surely] he who claims must produce evidence³⁴ He³² said to him.³⁰ So I rule for you and all who are powerful like you!³⁵ But they³⁶ may also come and lie.³⁷ Two things they³⁶ will not do.³⁸ May we say that this difference³⁹ is like that between [these] Tannaim? [For it was taught in a Baraitha:] This testimony⁴⁰ a man and a woman, a boy and a girl, her father and her mother, her brother and her sister [may give], but not her son and her daughter, nor her slave and her handmaid. And [in] another [Baraitha] it was taught. All are believed to testify [for her] except herself and her husband.⁴¹ Now the views of R. Papa and R. Ashi are [certainly] according to the difference of the Tannaim.⁴² But is the view of R. Papa according to the Tannaim?⁴³ R. Papa can answer you: That Baraitha⁴⁴ [speaks of a case] when she⁴⁵ talked in her simplicity.⁴⁶ As that which R. Dimi said when he came: R. Hanan of Carthage told a story: A case came before R. Joshua b. Levi (or as some say R. Joshua b. Levi told a Story: A case came before Rabbi): Someone was talking in his simplicity and said: I and my mother were taken captives among heathens. When I went out to draw my water, my mind was on my mother.⁴⁷ [When I was out] to gather wood, my mind was on my mother. And Rabbi allowed her to marry a priest⁴⁹ by [the words of] his mouth.⁵⁰ MISHNAH. R. ZECHARIAH B. HA-KAZZAB⁵¹ SAID: BY THIS TEMPLE⁵² HER HAND⁵³ DID NOT MOVE OUT OF MY HAND⁵⁴ FROM THE TIME THAT THE HEATHENS ENTERED JERUSALEM UNTIL THEY DEPARTED. THEY⁵⁵ ANSWERED HIM: NO ONE MAY TESTIFY CONCERNING HIMSELF.⁵⁶ GEMARA. It has been taught: And notwithstanding this⁵⁷ he appointed for her a dwelling place in his court-yard. and when she was out, she went out at the head of her children,⁵⁹ and when she came in, she came in at the head other children.⁶⁰ Abaye asked: May one do so with regard to one’s’ divorced wife?⁶¹ [Do I say:] There⁶² it was allowed because in the case of a captive woman they⁶⁴ made it lenient, but not here,⁶⁵ or is there no difference? — Come and hear: It has been taught: If someone has divorced his wife, she shall not get married [and live] in his neighbourhood.⁶⁶
Lit. ‘Why should I lie?’ Do we apply here the principle of ‘Why should I lie?’ If she had wished to tell a falsehood she could have said that she hid herself. She does not gain any advantage by her present statement. Therefore we should believe her entire statement.

Which, apparently, the ass-driver would have to cross.

The man who hired the ass.

Apparently through the fatigue of crossing the water.

Before whom the parties, the owner and hirer of the ass, brought their dispute.

It is common knowledge that there is water on the way to Nehar, Pekod, v. however, B.M. (Sonc. ed.) p. 468 and notes.

One is merely afraid that she may have been defiled.

The wife of a husband who gave her a divorce on condition that he dies, v. Git. 73a.

With her husband between the delivery of the divorce and his death.

Even if a slave or a handmaid is present when husband and wife are in one room.

The wife's own handmaid.

We thus see that her own handmaid cannot be a witness. This is the contradiction. For further notes v. Git. (Sonc. ed.) p. 348.

E.g., the priests’ wives in the Mishnah.

The Rabbis.

In our Mishnah.

Anyone but herself.

Therefore her own handmaid cannot be a witness.

I.e., all the handmaid does is: She sees what her mistress does and keeps quiet.

In Git. 73a.

There (in Git. 73a), if the handmaid says nothing as to any intimacy between husband and wife after the conditional divorce, she is in her permitted state. And as her handmaid is suspected of seeing a wrong done and saying nothing her silent testimony is not accepted.

A captive woman is presumed to have been violated unless there is evidence to the contrary. Consequently in order to make her mistress permitted to her husband the handmaid would have to speak. She would have to say that her mistress was not defiled. And we do not assume that she would say an untruth. She may be guilty of a silent falsehood, but not of a spoken falsehood. Therefore when she says that her mistress has remained pure she is believed.

In spite of what has just been said by R. Ashi, it is possible that out of attachment to her mistress, or for fear of her, the handmaid may come and actually tell a falsehood. Why should she then be believed?

To be silent about her mistress's defilement and to say that she was not defiled, that she would do both these things we do not assume.

The claimant.

It is therefore possible and even natural that your brother does not recognize you.

Of his brother.

This is the accepted rule!

I.e., I am the interpreter and exponent of the law. I apply the rules according to circumstances. Now that I have to deal with a man like you; Mari. I modify the rule! And he bowed to the ruling of R. Hisda; v. B.M. 39b. where the story is told more fully.

The witnesses.

Cf. B.M. 39b.

To be silent as to the truth and to tell a falsehood.

Whether her handmaid is believed or not.
(40) Regarding a captive woman.
(41) Her handmaid is therefore believed.
(42) R. Papa and R. Ashi would hold like the second Baraitha.
(43) The view of R. Papa does not seem to agree with either Baraitha, since he makes a distinction between his handmaid and her handmaid. According to the first Baraitha no handmaid is believed, whether his or hers, and according to the second Baraitha either handmaid is believed, even hers.
(44) The second Baraitha.
(45) The handmaid.
(46) She related her story quite innocently, without intending to give evidence. In such a case R. Papa would also hold that her handmaid is believed. Therefore R. Papa’s view would also be according to the second Baraitha.
(47) Apparently he had his eyes on her so that no one assaulted her.
(48) She was a widow.

and if he was a priest she must not live with him in the same alley. If it was a small village — such a case happened, and they said: A small village is considered a neighbourhood. Who must give way before whom? — Come and hear: She must give way before him, and not he before her, but if the court-yard belonged to her, he must give way before her. The question was asked: If the court-yard belonged to both, what is [the law]? Come and hear: ‘She must give way before him.’ In what case? If the court-yard belongs to him it is obvious; and if the court-yard belongs to her, has it not been taught: ‘If the court-yard belongs to her, he gives way before her”? Hence [it must be] in a such case — No. Perhaps [it deals with a case] when they rented [the court-yard]. How is it then? — Come and hear: ‘The Lord will hurl thee away violently as a man, and Rab said: moving about is harder for a man than for a woman. Our Rabbis taught: If he borrowed from the property of her father, she collects the payment only through another person. R. Shesheth said: And if they [both] come before us to Court, we do not deal with them. R. Papa said: We excommunicate them. R. Huna, the son of R. Joshua, said: We even order them to be lashed. R. Nahman said: It is taught in Ebel Rabbathi: This is said only when she was divorced after marriage, but if she was divorced after betrothal, she may collect the payments herself, because he is not [so] familiar with her. Once a betrothed and his [former] fiancee came before Raba, and R. Adda b. Mattena, sat before him. Raba placed a messenger between them. R. Adda b. Mattena said to him: Did not R. Nahman say: ‘It is taught in Ebel Rabbathi etc.’? — He answered him: We see that they are familiar with one another. Some say: Raba did not place a messenger between them. R. Adda b. Mattena said to him: Let the Master place a messenger between them. He answered him: Did not R. Nahman say: ‘It is taught in Ebel Rabbathi, etc.’? He said to him: This only when they are not familiar with one another, but [as to] these — I see that they are familiar with one another. MISHNAH. THE FOLLOWING ARE BELIEVED ON TESTIFYING WHEN THEY ARE GROWN-UP TO WHAT THEY HAVE SEEN WHEN THEY WERE SMALL: A PERSON IS BELIEVED ON SAYING ‘THIS IS THE HANDWRITING OF MY FATHER.’ ‘THIS IS THE HANDWRITING OF MY TEACHER.’ ‘THIS IS THE HANDWRITING OF MY BROTHER.’ REMEMBER THAT THAT WOMAN WENT OUT WITH A HINUMA AND UNCOVERED HEAD, ‘THAT THAT MAN USED TO GO OUT FROM SCHOOL TO IMMERSE IN ORDER TO EAT TERUMAH,’ ‘THAT HE USED TO TAKE A SHARE WITH US AT THE THRESHING FLOOR, THAT THIS PLACE WAS A BETH HA-PERAS.’ THAT UP TO HERE WE USED TO GO ON SABBATH. BUT A MAN IS NOT BELIEVED WHEN HE SAYS: SO-AND — SO HAD A WAY IN THIS PLACE, THAT MAN HAD A PLACE OF STANDING UP AND LAMENTATION. GEMARA. R. Huna b. Joshua said: [This is] only when a grown up person is with him. And it is necessary, for if he had taught us [with regard to] his father, [I might say] that is because he was always with him, but [with regard to] his teacher, [he would] not [be believed]. And if he had taught us [with regard to] his teacher, [I might say] that is because he had reverence for his teacher. And if he had taught us these two [cases], [I might say] with regard to his father, that is because he was always with him, and [with regard to] his teacher, because he had reverence for him, but [with regard to] his brother, in regard to whom there is neither this nor that ground. I might say [that he is] not [believed]; so he teaches us that since the confirmation of documents is ordained by the Rabbis, so the Rabbis have believed him regarding what the Rabbis [themselves] have ordained. I REMEMBER THAT THAT WOMAN WENT OUT WITH A HINUMA AND UNCOVERED HEAD. What is the reason? — Because most women get married as virgins, so this is only a declaration. THAT THAT MAN USED TO GO OUT FROM SCHOOL TO IMMERSE IN ORDER TO EAT TERUMAH. But perhaps he was the slave of a priest? — This supports R. Joshua b. Levi; for R. Joshua b. Levi said: A man is forbidden to teach his slave the Torah. But is it indeed not [permitted]? Has it not been taught: If his master has borrowed from him or his master made him

(1) The husband. (2) Even if she has not remarried, since a priest's divorced wife is forbidden to a priest. (3) I.e., the place in which they lived. (4) Lit., ‘judged’. (13) Hence, if the court-yard belonged to both, she must give way before him. By moving from place to place, a man loses the sphere of his livelihood, while a woman can assure hers by marriage. (14) The husband who was a priest. (15) While they were married. (16) I.e., property that she brought from her father's house or that she inherited from her father after her marriage. (V. (58) I.e., the attestation of signatures on documents in court.

(59) V. supra 21b.

(60) That he is believed.

(61) His testimony.

(62) No formal testimony of witnesses is required; a general declaration is sufficient.
Who is also entitled to eat terumah.

And this person was in a school, (lit., ‘the house of the book’) where he learned the Torah (The Book _ the Bible _ the Torah). Therefore he could not be a slave.

From his slave.

a guardian or he put on Tefillin\(^1\) in the presence of his master or he read three verses\(^2\) in the Synagogue, he does not become free\(^3\) — There\(^4\) it happened that he did it with his consent;\(^5\) [for what case] do we state [our rule]?\(^6\) When he treats him as a child.\(^7\) TO IMMERSE IN ORDER TO EAT TERUMAH. [Only] with regard to Rabbinical terumah.\(^8\) THAT HE WAS TAKING A SHARE WITH US AT THE THRESHING FLOOR. But perhaps he was the slave of a priest? — We have learned [this] according to him who says: One does not distribute terumah to a slave unless his master is with him,\(^9\) for it has been taught: One does not distribute terumah to a slave unless his master is with him. This is the view of R. Judah. R. Jose says: He can say: ‘If I am a priest, give me for my sake, and if I am the slave of a priest, give me for the sake of my master’. In the place of R. Judah they used to raise from terumah to the status of a priest; in the place of R. Jose they would not raise from terumah to the status of a priest.\(^10\) It is taught:\(^11\) R. Eleazar, the son of R. Jose,\(^12\) said: I have never given testimony. Once I gave testimony and they raised a slave to the priesthood through my evidence.\(^13\) [You say] they raised! Do you indeed mean to say this? Now. if the Holy One, blessed be He, does not bring a stumbling\(^14\) through the animals of the pious men,\(^15\) how much less through the pious men themselves?\(^16\) — But,\(^17\) they wanted to raise a slave to the priesthood through my evidence. He saw it\(^18\) in the place of R. Jose,\(^19\) and he went and testified in the place of R. Judah.\(^20\) THAT THIS PLACE WAS A BETH HA-PERAS Why?\(^21\) — Because [the law of] beth ha-peras is Rabbinical, for Rab Judah said in the name of Rab: One blows away [the dust from]\(^22\) the beth ha.peras. and goes [there]. Rab Judah b. Ammi said in the name of Rab Judah: A beth ha-peras which has been trodden out is clean. What is the reason?\(^23\) It is impossible that a bone [of the size] of a barleycorn was not trodden down by the foot.\(^24\) UP TO HERE HE USED TO GO ON SABBATH. He holds that the [Sabbath] limits\(^25\) are Rabbinical. A MAN IS NOT BELIEVED WHEN HE SAYS: THAT MAN HAD A WAY IN THIS PLACE, SO-AND-SO HAD A PLACE OF STANDING UP AND LAMENTATION IN THIS PLACE. What is the reason? Money we do not extract.\(^26\) Our Rabbis taught:\(^27\) A boy is believed when he says, ‘Thus my father told me: this family is clean. this family is unclean. — [You say,] ‘clean and unclean’! Do you indeed mean to say this?\(^28\) But [say]: ‘this family is fit\(^29\) and this family is unfit’, ‘That we have eaten at the Kezazah\(^30\) [on the occasion of the marriage] of the daughter of So-and-so to So-and-so’, ‘that we used to bring hallah and [priestly] gifts\(^31\) to the priest So-and-so’. But only through himself,\(^32\) and not through someone else. In all these cases, if he was an heathen and he became a proselyte, a slave and he was set free, he is not believed.\(^33\) [But] he is not believed when he says ‘that man had a way in this place, that man had a place of standing up and lamentation in this place’. R’. Johanan b. Beroka, said. He is believed. To which [clause] does R. Johanan b. Beroka, refer? Shall I say, to the last clause? This is extracting money?\(^34\) — But [it refers] to the first clause. In all these cases, if he was a heathen and he became a proselyte, a slave and he was set free, he is not believed. R. Johanan b. Beroka says: He is believed. In what [principle] do they differ? — The first Tanna holds: Since he was a heathen he would not pay special attention to it,\(^35\) and R. Johanan b. Beroka, holds: Since he had it in his mind to become a proselyte he would pay special attention to it. What is KEZAZAH? — The Rabbis taught: In what manner does kezazah take place? If one of the brothers has married a woman who is unworthy of him, the members\(^36\) of the family come together, bring a cask full of fruit, break it in the middle of the open place\(^37\) and say. Brethren of the house of Israel, hear. Our brother So-and-so has married a woman who is not worthy of him, and we are afraid lest his descendants\(^38\) will be united with our descendants. Come and take for yourselves a sign\(^39\) for future generations, that his descendants shall not be united with our descendants’. This is kezazah with regard to which a child is believed when he testifies. [}
The Phylacteries.

From the Bible.

Lit., ‘he does not go out to freedom’, v. Git. 70a. This shews that a slave does learn the Torah.

In the case just quoted.

It may sometimes happen that a slave is taught the Torah.

That it is forbidden to teach a slave the Torah.

And teaches him as he would teach his own children. This is forbidden. Therefore the person in the Mishnah could not be a slave.

Cf. supra 25a. Only with regard to Rabbinical terumah is such testimony sufficient.

As he was alone and took a share at the threshing floor, it shews that he was a priest.

V. supra 26a-27b. And therefore they would not give a slave terumah in the absence of his master, lest this should be used as evidence in regard to marriage.

In a Baraitha.

V. Yeb. 99b.

A sin, an offence.

V. Git. 7a.

And how could such an offence have been caused through R. Eleazar.

The case was as follows.

That they gave terumah to a person who in fact was a slave in the absence of his master.

Where they did not raise from terumah to the state of a priest. There was therefore no harm in distributing terumah to a slave at the threshing floor.

Where they raised from terumah to the state of a priest. They therefore thought that this man was a priest. The mistake was apparently found out in time and he was not raised. No offence was brought about through a pious man.

Why was this testimony sufficient?

To see whether there are any bones there.

Why is it regarded as clean?

And by being reduced to a smaller size is no longer liable to communicate defilement.

I.e., the ordinance regarding the Sabbath limits for walking is Rabbinical; therefore this testimony is sufficient.

On the strength of that statement. In civil matters such testimony is not sufficient.

‘Clean’ and ‘unclean’ are not applicable to families.

Unblemished and fit to marry into priestly families.

‘Cutting off’, ‘severing family connections’; a ceremony attending the sale of an heirloom to an outsider, and the marriage of a man beneath his social rank. It is the marriage-Kezazah that is spoken of here, v. infra.

V. Deut. XVIII, 3.

The boy himself must have been the messenger.

As to what he saw when he was a heathen or a slave.

V. note 5.

To the various matters about which he testified.

Lit., ‘the sons’.

v. supra p. 41, n. 5. Here, too, it can mean the open space before the house.

Lit., ‘seed’.

As a token. They should remember what happened and tell their children, so that everyone will know to distinguish between the descendants of this brother and those of the rest of the family.

Talmud - Mas. Kethuboth 29a

CHAPTER III

MISHNAH. THESE ARE MAIDENS TO WHOM THE FINE IS DUE. IF ANYONE HAD INTERCOURSE WITH A MAMZERETH,³ A NETHINAH,⁴ A CUTHEAN,⁵ OR WITH A PROSELYTE [MAIDEN],⁶ A CAPTIVE, OR A SLAVE-WOMAN,⁷ WHO WAS REDEEMED,⁸ CONVERTED,⁹ OR FREED [WHEN SHE WAS] UNDER THE AGE OF¹⁰ THREE YEARS AND ONE DAY,¹¹ IF ONE HAD INTERCOURSE WITH HIS SISTER, WITH THE SISTER OF HIS FATHER, WITH THE SISTER OF HIS MOTHER, WITH THE SISTER OF HIS WIFE, WITH THE WIFE OF HIS BROTHER,¹² WITH THE WIFE OF THE BROTHER OF HIS FATHER, OR WITH A WOMAN DURING MENSTRUATION,¹³ HE HAS TO PAY THE FINE.¹⁴ [FOR] ALTHOUGH THESE [TRANSGRESSIONS]¹⁵ ARE PUNISHED THROUGH [THE TRANSGRESSOR] BEING CUT OFF,¹⁶ THERE IS NOT, WITH REGARD TO THEM, A DEATH [PENALTY] [INFLECTED] BY THE COURT.¹⁷ GEMARA. [Does it mean that only] these blemished maidens get the fine, [but] unblemished ones [do] not?¹⁸ — He means it thus: These are blemished maidens who get the fine:¹⁹ IF ANYONE HAD INTERCOURSE WITH A MAMZERETH, A NETHINAH, A CUTHEAN,²⁰ etc.

[Only] [the Mishnah states] a maiden [receives a fine],²¹ [but not] a small girl.²² Who is the Tanna [who taught this]? Rab Judah said in the name of Rab: It is R. Meir, for it has been taught:²³ A small child from the age of one day²⁴ until [the time that] she grows two hairs²⁵, sale applies to her,²⁶ but not the fine;²⁷ from [the time that] she grows two hairs until she becomes mature,²⁸ the fine applies to her, but not sale.²⁹ This is the view of R. Meir; for R. Meir said: Wherever sale applies,³⁰ the fine does not apply, and wherever the fine applies, sale does not apply. But the Sages say: A small child from the age of three years and one day until [the time that] she becomes mature — the fine applies to her.³¹ [Does that mean] only the fine [and] not sale!³² — Say:

(1) Na'aroth pl. of na'arah, technically, a girl between twelve years and twelve and a half years of age.
(2) If a man has violated any of these maidens mentioned in our Mishnah, he must pay the fine fixed in Deut. XXII, 29.
(3) Fem. of mamzer, v. Glos.
(4) Fem. of nathin, v. Glos.
(5) A Samaritan, V. Glos.
(6) V. supra 11a.
(7) A maiden.
(8) In the text the word is in the plural, because it refers to a class and not to one person.
(9) It is interesting to note that ‘CONVERTED’ comes before, although it should come after, ‘FREED’. The reason is probably because it is, in Hebrew, a shorter word. Of the three words the first has three, the second four, and the fourth, five syllables, not counting the suffix ‘waw’, (‘and’). The sequence of the words chosen makes for symmetry.
(10) Lit., ‘less than’.
(11) He has to pay the fine. For further notes v. supra 11a.
(12) Whom the brother divorced after the betrothal.
(13) And they are all maidens.
(14) Lit., ‘the fine is due to them’.
(15) V. Lev. XVIII, 9ff
(16) From life, by premature or sudden death, Kareth V. Glos. Cf. Lev. XVIII, 29: For whosoever shall do any of these abominations, even the souls that do them shall be cut off from among their people.
(17) V. e.g., Lev. XX, 9ff. Only death penalty by the court releases from the money fine, v. Gemara.
(18) The phrasing of the Mishnah seems to imply that only the following maidens which are enumerated are entitled to fines — namely, only of blemished descent. Surely that is impossible.
(19) Although the fine has been fixed for unblemished maidens, whom the man could marry (V. Deut. XXII, 29), it is, the Mishnah tells us, due also to blemished maidens, whom he could not marry. That unblemished maidens get the fine need not be specially mentioned in the Mishnah.
(20) He has to pay the fine.
(21) Lit., ‘a maiden, yes, a minor, no’.
(22) A ketannah. A girl is so called until the age of twelve years. If a minor was violated, the fine, according to the Mishnah, is not due to her.
(23) V. Tosef. Keth.
(24) Tosef.: A small child from the age of three years and one day. This is, no doubt, the correct reading. In the text of the Talmud ‘three years and’ is missing.
(25) The sign of beginning maturity.
(26) The father may sell his daughter as a maid-servant; v. Ex. XXI, 7.
(27) If she was violated; the word na’arah is used in Deut. XXII, 28, 29, excluding a minor.
(28) A girl becomes mature when she is twelve and a half years old. She is then called bogereth, v. Glos.
(29) When the girl is a na’arah the father has no more right to sell her.
(30) Sale applies only when the girl is a ketannah, and the fine applies only when the girl is a na’arah.
(31) According to the Sages, the fine is due to the girl both as a ketannah and a na’arah. In other words, the word na’arah in Deut. XXII, 28, 29 is not to be taken strictly.
(32) Lit., ‘fine, yes; sale, no’!

Talmud - Mas. Kethuboth 29b

also the fine [applies] when sale [applies].

But are these [maidens] entitled to the fine! Why? Read here: ‘and she shall be his wife’, [that means] one who is fit to be his wife? — Said Resh Lakish: [It is written:] ‘maiden’, ‘maiden’, ‘the maiden’ once [the word ‘maiden’ is necessary] for itself, once to include [those maidens, the marrying of whom involves the transgression merely of] a plain prohibitory law, and once to include [those maidens, the marrying of whom involves] a transgression punishable with kareth. R. Papa said: [It is written:] ‘virgin’, ‘virgin’, ‘the virgins’; once [the word ‘virgin’ is necessary] for itself, once to include [those virgins, the marrying of whom involves the transgression merely of] a plain prohibitory law, and once to include [those virgins, the marrying of whom involves] a transgression punishable with kareth. Why does R. Papa not agree with Resh Lakish? — That [verse] he requires for [the same teaching] as that of Abaye, for Abaye said: If he cohabited with her and she died, he is free, for it is said: ‘And he shall give unto the father of he maiden’, [this means]: To the father of a maiden, but not to the father of a dead [person]. And why did not Resh Lakish agree with R. Papa? — That [verse] he requires for an analogy for it is taught: [[It is written:] — ‘he shall pay money according to the dowry of virgins, [this means that] this shall be like the dowry of virgins, and the dowry of virgins shall be like this. But Resh Lakish also requires it for [the same teaching] as that of Abaye, and R. Papa also requires it for the analogy. — Take therefore six words: ‘maiden’, ‘maiden’, ‘the maiden’, ‘virgin’, ‘virgins’, ‘the virgins’: Two [are necessary] for themselves, one for the teaching of Abaye, and one for the analogy, [and] two remain over: one to include [those maidens, the marrying of whom involves the transgression] of a plain prohibitory law, and one to include [those maidens, the marrying of whom involves] a transgression punishable with kareth.

This [Mishnah] is to exclude [the view of] that Tanna. For it has been taught: [It is written:] and she shall be his wife, Simeon the Temanite says: [This means:] a woman who can become his wife; R. Simeon b. Menassia says: [This means:] a woman who can remain his wife. What difference is there between them? — R. Zera said: The difference between them is with regard to a mamzereth and a nethinah. According to him who says that there must be the possibility of her ‘becoming’ his wife, here also there is the possibility of her ‘becoming’ his wife. And according to him who says that there must be the possibility of her remaining his wife, here there is not the possibility of her remaining his wife. But according to R. Akiba, who says: Marriage takes no effect when there is a prohibitory law against it, what is the difference between them? — There is a difference between them in the case of a widow who marries a high priest, and this according to R. Simai, for it is taught: Of all R. Akiba makes mamzerim, except [the issue of] a widow and a high priest, for the Torah says: ‘he shall not take’, and ‘he shall not profane’, [this teaches that] he makes [his issue] profane, but not mamzerim. And according to R. Yeshebab, who says: Come and let us cry out against Akiba b. Joseph, who says: Whenever the marriage is forbidden in Israel the child [of such marriage] is a mamzer, what is the difference between them? — The difference between them is

1. During the whole period that sale applies to a girl, the fine also applies to her, extending however beyond that period, till her stage of bagereth.

2. Mentioned in our Mishnah.

3. Lit., 'a woman who is fit for him'. From the words of the Bible one would infer that the fine is payable only if he violated a maiden whom, in law, he could marry. But as to the maidens mentioned in the Mishnah, who are either generally prohibited to an Israelite for marriage, or there is kareth barring their way to marriage, (as in the case of the maidens enumerated in the second clause of the Mishnah), there should be no fine due to them.

4. In Deut. XXII, 28 'maiden'; verse 29: 'the maiden', and 'the' in 'the maiden' is reckoned as a separate word representing the word 'maiden', so that we have the word 'maiden' written three times. To each of the three words a function is assigned in the Talmudic exposition. One 'maiden' refers to the ordinary unblemished maidens, one 'maiden' refers to the blemished maidens as mentioned in the first clause of the Mishnah, and one 'maiden' refers to the maidens enumerated in the second clause of the Mishnah. — The maidens mentioned in the second part of the first clause of the Mishnah seem to occupy a position of their own. V. Tosaf 29a, s.v. נשים.

5. Lit., 'one ("maiden")'.

6. For the ordinary maiden, v. note 3.

7. Lit., 'those guilty of a negative prohibition', which carries with it the punishment of flagellation only.

8. V. Glos.

9. Ex. XXII, 15, 16. There it speaks of seduction. R. Papa, apparently, puts seduction and violation on one level.

10. V. supra nn. 3 and 5.

12. By force.

13. From paying the fine.

14. The full half-verse is: 'And the man that lay with her shall give unto the father of the maiden fifty silver pieces'. (Deut. XXII, 29.)

15. i.e., of maiden that lives.

16. If the maiden is dead, the father cannot be called any more the father of the maiden'. He can only be called the father of the dead maiden, and to such the fine is not payable.

17. Ex. XXII, 16.

18. Gezerah shawah; an analogy based on similarity of expressions. V. Glos.

19. Ex. XXII, 16.

20. The money to be paid in the case of seduction. (Ex. XXII, 16.)

21. By 'the dowry of virgins' is meant, according to this teaching, the sum of money to be paid as a fine in Deut. XXII, 29, which is fifty; so here (Ex. XXII, 16) it has to be fifty.

22. As in Ex. XXII, 16 the money consists of shekels, (this is derived from the special word נשים, employed for 'pay') so in Deut. XXII, 29, the fifty have to be shekels.

23. The word 'the maiden'.

24. The word 'the virgin'.

25. Both the teaching of Abaye and the analogy are important to Resh Lakish and P. Papa.

26. Lit., 'but six verses are written'. — Make your expositions from all the six words taken together.

27. For the ordinary cases of seduction and violation.

28. Our Mishnah, in which it is taught that the fine is due also in the case of the violation of maidens, the marriage with whom is prohibited, as a mamzereth or his sister.

29. I.e., the author of the Baraitha. As to the Tannaim mentioned in the Baraitha, the views of both of them are excluded, v. Tosaf a.l.

31. Lit., 'to whom there is "becoming".' But his sister cannot 'become' his wife. The very act of marriage is impossible. No marriage, no betrothal, can take effect. V. Kid. 66b. Therefore the law of the fine would not apply to his sister or to any of the other five maidens mentioned in the second clause of the Mishnah.
Lit., ‘who is fitting to be retained’. He takes the word ‘be’, הוהו, in the sense of ‘remaining’. This excludes a mamzereth, for although marriage with a mamzereth takes effect, there is ‘prohibitory law’ attached to it. (v. Kid. 66b). The marriage ought therefore to be discontinued. The mamzereth is thus a woman who cannot remain his wife. Therefore, according to R. Simeon the son of Menassia, the law of fine does not apply to her. — We thus see that our Mishnah excludes both the view of Simeon the Temanite and the view of R. Simeon the son of Menassia.

Between Simeon the Temanite and R. Simeon b. Menassia (Rashi).

In the case of mamzereth and nethinah.

The marriage with a mamzereth or nethinah takes effect although there is a ‘prohibitory law’ against it. The mamzereth or nethinah can therefore become his wife, although she should not remain his wife. In the view of Simeon the Temanite it is the possibility of her becoming his wife that matters, and therefore they are entitled to the fine.

In the case of mamzereth and nethinah.

In the view of R. Simeon b. Menassia, it is the possibility of her remaining his wife that matters. And since a mamzereth or nethinah cannot remain his wife, they are not entitled to the fine.

Between Simeon the Temanite and R. Simeon b. Menassia. A mamzereth or nethinah could not, on this view, become his wife even according to R. Simeon b. Menassia; what is then the difference between him and Simeon the Temanite?

In a Baraitha; v. Yeb. 64a and 68a.

I.e., of all the issues of prohibited unions.

R. Akiba declares the offspring of all prohibited unions to be mamzerim, v. Yeb. 49a.

Lev. XXI, 14f. The two verses read: A widow or a divorced woman, or a profane woman, or a harlot, these shall he not take; but a virgin of his own people shall he take to wife. And he shall not profane his seed among his people, for I am the Lord who sanctify him. Vv. 10-15 deal with the high priest.

The children are only unfit for the priesthood.

In this case R. Akiba admits that the marriage takes effect, although there is a prohibitory law against it, so that, in this case, according to Simeon b. Menassia, though the marriage would take effect, since he could not retain her owing to the prohibition, there is no fine, whereas according to Simeon the Temanite, there is a fine.

Lit., ‘he who has no (permission of) union in Israel’.

This rule would include also the marriage of a widow and a high priest and would make also the child of such a marriage a mamzer.

What difference would there be now between Simeon the Temanite and R. Simeon b. Menassia?

Talmud - Mas. Kethuboth 30a

with regard to the marriage with an Egyptian or an Edomite [woman], in which case there is a transgression [merely] of a positive law. — That is all right if R. Yeshebab [by his statement] only came to exclude the view of R. Simai. But if his statement was his own, whenever the marriage is forbidden in Israel, the child [of such a marriage] is a mamzer. It would include also a marriage with regard to which a positive law has been transgressed. What is [then] the difference between them? — The difference between them is with regard to a girl, who is no more a virgin, who married a high priest. — And why is this different? — It is a law which does not apply to all.

R. Hisda said: All agree that he who has intercourse with a woman during menstruation [against her will] has to pay the fine, for according to him who holds that there must be the possibility of her ‘becoming’ his wife, there is with regard to her the possibility of her becoming his wife, and according to him who holds that there must be the possibility of her remaining his wife, there is with regard to her the possibility of her remaining his wife.

Our [Mishnah] likewise excludes the view of R. Nehunia b. ha-Kaneh, for it is taught: R. Nehunia b. ha-Kaneh, made the Day of Atonement equal to the Sabbath with regard to payment; as [he who desecrates] the Sabbath forfeits his life and is free from payment, so [he who desecrates] the Day of Atonement forfeits his life and is free from payment. What is the reason

To this R. Adda b. Ahava, demurred: Whence [do you know] that Jacob warned his sons against cold and heat, which are by the hand of heaven? Perhaps [he warned them] against lions and thieves, which are ‘by the hand of man’? — Is it that Jacob warned them against this and did not warn them, against that? Jacob warned then, against every kind of harm.

[But] are cold and heat by the hand of heaven? Is it not taught: Everything is ‘by the hand of heaven’ except cold and heat, for it is said: ‘Cold and heat are in the way of the froward; he that keepeth his soul holdeth himself far from them’? Further, are lions and thieves ‘by the hand of man’? Did not R. Joseph say, and R. Hiyya teach: Since the day of the destruction of the Temple, although the Sanhedrin ceased, the four forms of capital punishment have not ceased? ‘They have not ceased,’ [you say]? Surely they have ceased! But [say]

(1) With regard to the Edomite and the Egyptian it is stated in Deut. XXIII, 9: ‘The children of the third generation that are born unto them shall enter into the congregation of the Lord.’ This is a ‘positive law’. That the marriage with an Edomite and an Egyptian of the second generation is forbidden is derived from this positive law. And when a prohibitory law is derived from a positive law, it is regarded as a positive law. And in such a case the marriage takes effect, although it should be discontinued. Thus we would have a difference between Simeon the Temanite and Simeon the son of Menassia.

(2) If his statement refers only to R. Simai, it is limited by the words of R. Simai, and a positive law (i.e., a prohibitory law derived from a positive law) cannot be brought in.

(3) And is therefore unlimited.

(4) In Lev. XXI, 13 the high priest is commanded to take as his wife a virgin. If he marries a girl who is no more a virgin the marriage takes effect, although it should be discontinued. And so we have again a difference between Simeon the Temanite and R. Simeon b. Menassia.

(5) Prohibition derived from a positive law.

(6) From other such prohibitions (e.g., the prohibition with regard to the Edomite and Egyptian) v. p. 164. nn. 6 and 8.

(7) It applies only to the high priest. Therefore it is not treated as the other prohibitory laws that are derived from positive laws, and it would not be included in the general ruling of R. Akiba even according to R. Yeshebab.

(8) The last case in the second clause of our Mishnah.

(9) Although the cohabitation with a woman during menstruation is prohibited and is punishable with kareth, v. Lev. XVIII, 19 and 29.

(10) The violated maiden.

(11) The menstruant woman.

(12) The marriage of a woman during menstruation takes effect. The fact that cohabitation during menstruation is forbidden does not affect the validity of the marriage, cf. Yeb. 49b and Kid. 68a. The condition of Simeon the Temanite is therefore fulfilled.

(13) The violated maiden.

(14) The menstruant woman.

(15) The marriage of a menstruous woman is entirely valid and may be continued. Thus the condition of R. Simeon b. Menassia is fulfilled.

(16) In the second clause of which it is taught that he who violates his sister or any of the other six maidens enumerated, the intercourse with whom is punishable by kareth, has to pay the fine.

(17) By doing forbidden work on that day.

(18) I.e., he is guilty of a transgression punishable by death (by the hand of man, that is by the court), v. Ex. XXXI, 15 and XXXV, 2.

(19) If, in doing the forbidden work on the Sabbath, he caused damage to someone's property (e.g., if he set fire to a stack of corn) he is free from paying for the damage done, since the transgression involves the death penalty, and where there is the death penalty, there is no payment of money, on the principle that the smaller offence, for which the payment of money is due, is merged in the greater offence v. infra.

(20) By doing forbidden work on that day.

(21) I.e., he is guilty of a transgression punishable by kareth; v. Lev. XXIII, 29, 30. kareth is a divine visitation. Compare ‘And (that soul) shall be cut off from among his people’ (v. 29) with ‘and I will destroy that soul from among his people’ (v. 30). Kareth is called in the Talmud ‘death by the hand of heaven’, while the death penalty, i.e., death by the court, is called ‘death by the hand of man’. T. Nehunia b. ha-Kaneh makes ‘death by the hand of heaven’ (although it is not known when it will come, and when it comes it may be regarded by some people as a natural death; cf. Sema. III, 10) equal to ‘death by the hand of man’ which is executed through the Court, and all see that the penalty of death was inflicted for the transgression) and applies to it also the principle that the lesser offence is merged in the greater. On this view since the intercourses mentioned in the second clause of our Mishnah are punishable with kareth, the fine would not he paid.

(22) iuxt Ex. XXI. 22, 23.

(23) ‘Harm’ in Ex. XXI, 22, 23 means (also) death as v. 23 (‘then thou shalt give life for life’) clearly shews.

(24) Cf. v. 22: And if men strive together and hurt a woman with child etc.

(25) V. Gen. XLII. 4. also XLIV, 29 There the reference is to ‘harm’ that may befall Benjamin on the Journey which may result in death. V. infra.

(26) In Ex. XXI, 22, when no death (or other ‘harm’) follows, a payment of money is made. But when death follows, the death penalty is inflicted (v. 23) and no payment of money is made. This is clear, since payment of money is only mentioned to v. 22, and in v. 23 only ‘life for life’ is mentioned.

(27) Abaye's reasoning is as follows: i. He proves that ‘harm’ refers both to the harm done by man (including death) and to the harm caused by heaven (including death). Therefore ‘death by the hand of heaven’ equals ‘death by the hand of man’. ii. In the case in which ‘death by the hand of man’ is mentioned, it is stated that the penalty of death is inflicted (‘life for life’), and no payment of money is made. The same applies to a case where the penalty is ‘death by the hand of heaven’. The analogy could only he between the two words ‘harm’. Once the equality of the two kinds of death is established (through the analogy), the equality of the consequences of these two kinds of death follows.

(28) In Gen. XLII, 4.

(29) So Rashi; fast. ‘blowing cold winds’. The words are taken from Prov. XXII, 5.

(30) Cold and heat come from God.

(31) Thieves are ‘the hand of man’. Lions are apparently called ‘the hand of man’, as they are not ‘the hand of heaven in the same sense in which cold and heat are ‘the hand of heaven,’ v., however, infra.

(32) Lit., ‘all things’. And such harm as is ‘the hand of heaven is included.

(33) Prov. XXII. 5. also A.Z. (Sonc. ed.) p. II, n. 2.

(34) And capital punishment could no longer he decreed by the Jewish Courts.

(35) LIt., ‘the four deaths’, v. Sanh. 49b.

Talmud - Mas. Kethuboth 30b

the judgment of the four forms of capital punishment has not ceased. He who would have been sentenced to stoning, either falls down from the roof or a wild beast treads him down. He who would have been sentenced to burning, either falls into a fire or a serpent bites him. He who would have been sentenced to decapitation is either delivered to the government or robbers come upon him. He who would have been sentenced to strangulation, is either drowned in the river or dies from suffocation. But reverse it: Lions and thieves are ‘by the hand of heaven’, and cold and heat are ‘by the hand of man’.

Raba said: The reason [for the view] of R. Nehunia b. hakaneh, is [derived] from here: [It is written:] And if the people of the land do not all hide their eyes from that man, when he giveth of his seed unto Molech, [and put him not to death]; then I will set my face against that man, and against his family, and will cut him off. [With these words] the Torah says: My kareth is like your death [-penalty]; as [in the case of] your death [-penalty] one is free from payment, so [in the case of] my kareth one is free from payment. What is the difference between Raba and Abaye? — The difference is [with regard to] a stranger who ate terumah. According to Abaye he is free [from payment], and according to Raba he is bound [to pay]. But is he free [from payment] according to Abaye? Did not R. Hisda say: R. Nehunia b. ha-Kaneh admits that he who stole [forbidden] fat belonging to his neighbour, and ate it, is bound [to pay], because he was guilty of stealing before he came to [the transgression of] the prohibition with regard to [forbidden] fat? Hence [you say that] as soon as he lifted it up he acquired it, but he did not become guilty of the transgression punishable with death until he had eaten it. Here also, when he lifted it up he acquired it, but he did not become guilty of the transgression punishable with death until he had eaten it! Here we treat of a case where his friend stuck it into his mouth. But even then, as soon as he chewed it, he acquired it, but he is not guilty of the transgression punishable with death until he has swallowed it. — When his friend stuck it into his oesophagus. How shall we imagine this case? If he can give it back, let him give it back. And if he cannot give it back, why should he be guilty? — It speaks of a case when he can give it back only with an effort. R. Papa said, When his friend put liquids of terumah into his mouth. But even then, as soon as he chewed it, he acquired it, but he is not guilty of the transgression punishable with death until he has swallowed it. — When his friend stuck it into his oesophagus. How shall we imagine this case? If he can give it back, let him give it back. And if he cannot give it back, why should he be guilty? — It speaks of a case when he can give it back only with an effort. R. Ashi said: [it speaks of a case] when a stranger ate his own terumah.

(1) The punishment comes in corresponding forms.
(2) To death by stoning.
(3) And kills him.
(4) A conflagration.
(5) And the poison burns and kills him.
(7) To the Roman Government.
(8) And slay him.
(9) מלחמה; so Jast.; Rashi: croup.
(10) From the following passage of the Bible.
(11) Lev. XX, 4f.
(12) I.e., God says in the Torah to Israel.
(13) I.e., A non-priest.
(14) If a stranger eats terumah, he is punished with death, not with death ‘by the hand of man’ but with death ‘by the hand of heaven’. V. Lev. XXII, 9, 10 and cf. Sanh. 83a. The death ‘by the hand of heaven’ in this case is, however, a milder form of kareth. Kareth proper means the cutting off of the life of the transgressor and of his family. The death in the case of a stranger eating terumah means death similar to that of kareth, namely ‘by the hand of heaven,’ but applied only to the offender. V. Rashi, a.l. Cf. also Lev. XX, 5 (then I will set my face against that man and against his family and I will cut him off).
(15) For the terumah. ‘Harm’ indicates any kind of death, also the milder form of death ‘by the hand of heaven’, as that in the case of eating terumah.
(16) To the priest for the terumah. Raba derives the reason for the view of R. Nehunia b. ha-Kaneh, from Lev. XX, 4, 5, and there kareth proper is spoken of. According to Raba, therefore, only kareth proper is made equal to death ‘by the hand of man’ with regard to one being free from payment, but not the milder form of kareth, of death ‘by the hand of heaven, as in the case of a stranger eating terumah. In that case, payment must be made.
(17) Heleb; v. Lev. III, 17; VII, 23 and 25. In the latter verse kareth is the punishment mentioned for eating heleb. Cf. Ker. 2a, 4a-b.
(18) Although the eating of heleb is punishable with kareth; v. preceding note.
(19) Since the crime of stealing was committed before the sin of eating heleb, the principle of the lesser offence being merged in the greater (v. supra 30a) does not apply.
(20) Lit., ‘from the time that’.
(21) The heleb.
(22) And from that moment becomes liable for the theft.
(23) Of eating the heleb.
(24) In the case of terumah.
(25) The terumah.
(26) Of eating terumah.
(27) And he should therefore be liable to pay for it.
(28) The terumah.
(29) So that he did not acquire it by lifting it up but only from the moment he eats it, so that the offence of stealing and of eating the terumah are committed simultaneously.
(30) Lit., “the end of the end”.
(31) The theft is thus committed before the offence of eating the terumah, whereas there is no liability for eating terumah before he swallows it.
(32) So there was no chewing.
(33) I.e., if he can bring it out of his oesophagus.
(34) And by failing to do so he becomes liable from that very moment for stealing it.
(35) Of the transgression of eating terumah, seeing it was a case of force majeure.
(36) [So that even if he had brought it up, it would have been useless. Consequently he cannot be held guilty of stealing. What he can be made liable to pay for is for actually eating the terumah. This act, however, carries with it also a death penalty which applies in this case, since he could by an effort have brought it up. As both penalties do thus arise simultaneously, he is free from payment.]
(37) In this case also both penalties come at the same time; cf. previous note.
(38) Terumah of his own produce, which he separated and was going to give to the priest. In eating it he is guilty of a transgression punishable with death ‘by the hand of heaven’.

Talmud - Mas. Kethuboth 31a and [at the same time] tore the silk garments of his neighbour.¹

The [above] text [stated]: ‘R. Hisda said: R. Nehunia b. hakaneh admits that, if someone stole forbidden fat belonging to his neighbour and ate it, he is bound [to pay], because he was guilty of stealing before he came to [the transgression of] the prohibition with regard to [forbidden] fat.’ Is it to say that he differs from R. Abin? For R. Abin said: If someone threw an arrow [on Sabbath] from the beginning of four [cubits] to the end of four [cubits]² and it tore silk garments in its passage³ he is free [from payment],⁴ for the taking up⁵ was necessary for the putting down;⁶ Now here⁷ also the ‘lifting up’ was necessary for the eating.⁸ — Now, is this so?⁹ There¹⁰ ‘the putting down’ is impossible without the ‘taking up’; but here¹² the eating is possible without the ‘lifting up’, for, if he likes, he can bend down and eat.¹³ Or: there,¹⁴ if he wants to take it back, he cannot take it back;¹⁵ but here,¹⁶ he can put it back.¹⁷ — What is the [practical] difference between the one answer and the other answer? — The difference is: when someone carried¹⁸ a knife in the public road¹⁹ and it tore silk garments in its passage: according to the answer that the ‘putting down’ is impossible without the ‘taking up’, here²¹ also the ‘putting down’ is impossible without the ‘taking up’.²² And according to the answer that he cannot take it back, here²³ he can take it back.²⁴

The text [stated above]: ‘R. Abin said: If someone threw [on Sabbath] an arrow from the beginning of four [cubits] to the end of four [cubits] and it tore silk garments in its passage he is free [from payment], for the "taking up" was necessary for the "putting down".’ R. Bibi b. Abaye raised the following objection: If someone stole a purse²⁵ on Sabbath he is bound [to pay],²⁶ because he was guilty of stealing before he came to the [transgression of] the prohibition which is punishable with stoning,²⁷ but if he dragged it along he is free [from payment], because the desecration of the Sabbath and the stealing come at the same time.²⁸ And why?²⁹ Here also we should say: The lifting up is necessary for the carrying out!³⁰ — Here we treat of a case when he lifted it up in order to hide it and changed his mind and carried it out.³¹ [But] is he, in this case, guilty [of desecrating the Sabbath]? Did not R. Simeon say [that] R. Ammi said in the name of R. Johanan: If someone was removing objects from one corner to another corner and changed his mind and carried them out he is free [of the transgression of the desecration of the Sabbath] because the taking up was not from the outset for that [purpose]? — Do not say: in order to hide it, but say: in order to carry it out, only it speaks here of a case when he [paused and] remained standing [for a while].³² For what purpose did he remain standing? If to adjust the cord on his shoulder, this is the usual way. — No; [we speak of a case] where he stood still in order to rest. But how would it be if [he had remained standing] in order to adjust the cord on his shoulder?

(1) Ordinarily he would have to pay his neighbour for the damage done to his garments. But as here the liability to death ‘by the hand of heaven’ for eating the terumah and the obligation to pay to his neighbour for the torn silk garments come at the same time, he is free from having to make the payment to his neighbour.

(2) To throw an object a distance of four cubits in the public road on Sabbath is a desecration of the Sabbath, which, if done wilfully, is punishable with death ‘by the hand of man’ (stoning) if after a warning, and with death ‘by the hand of heaven’ (kareth), if without a warning. V. Shah. 96b and 100a and Ex. XXXI, 14.

(3) The arrow.

(4) I.e., in the course of its flight.

(5) For the silk garments, to their owner.

(6) Of the arrow.

(7) It is when the object is ‘put down’ or comes to rest, that the act of transgressing, or of throwing, is completed. But it begins with the ‘taking up’ of the object. The damage to the silk garments was done between the act of ‘taking up’ and that of ‘putting down’, כיסוי. The penalty of death or kareth is thus regarded as having come at the same time as the obligation to pay for the torn garments, and he is therefore free from payment (Rashi).

(8) In the case of one stealing heleb and eating it.

(9) Therefore here also the penalty of kareth for eating heleb and the obligation to pay for the heleb to its owner come at the same time, and, according to R. Abin, he would he free from payment.

(10) Is this analogy correct?

(11) In the case of throwing the arrow.

(12) In the case of eating heleb.

(13) Without lifting; there is therefore no analogy. Hence the liability for stealing came first from the moment of lifting.

(14) In the case of throwing the arrow.

(15) Once he has thrown the arrow it takes its course.

(16) In the case of eating the heleb.

(17) Therefore we do not say that the eating of the heleb Begins from the time when he lifted it up.

(18) Lit., ‘He who causes to pass’.

(19) To carry an object four cubits in the public road is a desecration of the Sabbath, v. supra.

(20) The knife.

(21) In the case of the knife.

(22) And he would he free from payment, v. p. 170. n. 6

(23) In the case of the knife.

(24) And he would have to pay for the torn garments.

(25) With money.

(26) To the owner of the purse for the loss of the purse and its contents.

(27) He was guilty of stealing as soon as he lifted up the purse, and he was guilty of desecrating the Sabbath only after he carried it into the public road. And as the two guilty acts did not coincide, he is not free from payment.

(28) When he got it out from the domain of the owner into the public road.

(29) Why should he be bound to pay if he lifted up the purse?

(30) And he should he free from payment. V. p. 170, n. 6.

(31) The ‘lifting up’ was therefore not for the purpose of carrying out,

(32) [His pause in the owner's domain completed the first act of removing, making him liable for the theft, while the liability for Sabbath desecration begins when he resumes his walk to carry it outside.]

(33) Of one who carries a cord, and this pause cannot be regarded as an interruption.

Talmud - Mas. Kethuboth 31b

He would be free [from payment]? [If so] instead of teaching ‘but if he dragged it along he is free [from payment]’, let him make the distinction in the same case. "When is this said?" If he stood still to rest; but if [he stood still] to adjust the cord on his shoulder, he is free [from payment].

[But] how would it be if he threw [the purse]? He would be free [from payment]. Let him then make the distinction in the same case, thus when is it said: ‘When he walked, but when he threw it, he is free’? — The case of dragging it along is necessary [to be stated]. You might have said that this is not the way of carrying out, so he lets us hear [that it is not so]. Of what [kind of purse does it speak]? If of a large purse, this is the ordinary way [of carrying it out], and if of a small purse, this is not the ordinary way? — In fact [it speaks] of a middle-sized [purse]. Where but did he carry it to? If he carried it into the public road, there is desecration of the Sabbath but no stealing, and if he carried it into private ground, there is stealing but no desecration of the Sabbath! — No, it is necessary [to state it] when he carried it out to the sides of the public road. According to whose view? If according to [that of] R. Eliezer, who says: The sides of the public road are like the public road, there is desecration of the Sabbath but no stealing and if it is according to the view of the Rabbis, who say: ‘The sides of the public road are not like the public road,’ there is stealing but no desecration of the Sabbath? — Indeed, it is according to R. Eliezer, and when R. Eliezer says: ‘The sides of the public road are like the public road’, it is only with regard to becoming guilty of the desecration of the Sabbath, because sometimes, through the pressure of the crowd, people go in there, but with regard to acquiring, one does acquire there, because the public is not often there. R. Ashi said: [We speak of a case] when he lowered his hand to less than three handbreadths and received it. [And this is] according to Raba, for Raba said: The hand of a person is regarded as a place of four by four handbreadths. R. Aha taught so. Rabina [however] taught: Indeed, when he carried it out into the public road, for he acquires also in the public ground. [And] they differ with regard to a deduction from this Mishnah, for we have learned: If he was pulling it out and it died, he is bound to pay. Rabina makes a deduction from the first clause, and R. Aha makes a deduction from the second clause. Rabina makes a deduction from the first clause: ‘If he was drawing it out and it died in the domain of the owner, he is free; but if he lifted it up or brought it out from the territory of the owner and it died, he is bound to pay’. R. Aha makes a deduction from the second clause: ‘but if he lifted it up or brought it out [etc.]’ Bringing out is like lifting up; as lifting up is an act through which the object comes into his possession, so bringing out [must he an act through which the object] comes into his possession. According to R. Aha the first clause is difficult and according to Rabina the second clause is difficult? — The first clause is not difficult according to R. Aha, for as long as it has not come into his possession it is called: ‘in the domain of the owner’. The second clause is not difficult according to Rabina, for we do not say [that] bringing out is like lifting up.

IF ONE HAD INTERCOURSE [BY FORCE] WITH HIS SISTER, OR WITH THE SISTER OF HIS FATHER, etc. There is a question of contradiction against this: The following persons receive the punishment of lashes: he who has intercourse with his sister, with the sister of his father, with the sister of his mother, with the sister of his wife, with the sister of his brother, with the wife of the brother of his father, or with a woman during menstruation.

(1) In the first case stated when he lifted up the purse.
(2) That the two acts are held not to coincide and he is therefore bound to pay for the purse.
(3) Lit. ‘he who walks is as he who stands.’ It means: every pace made is a new ‘lifting up’ and a new ‘putting down’. Therefore, the theft is committed with the first ‘lifting up’ of the purse, and the desecration of the Sabbath is effected when the last pace is made. The two acts therefore do not coincide and he is bound to pay.
(4) He lifted up the purse and threw it into the public road.
(5) Because the stealing and the desecration of the Sabbath come together: cf. the case of the arrow on supra 30a.
(6) In the first case stated when he lifted up the purse.
(7) That the two acts are not held to coincide and he is therefore bound to pay for the loss to the owner of the purse.
And carried out the purse in walking.

From one territory to another, and therefore involves no liability.

Dragging it along.

And why is it necessary to let us hear that dragging it along is a way of carrying out? It is too heavy to carry.

And indeed it should not be regarded as ‘carrying out’ and should not constitute a desecration of the Sabbath.

Lit., ‘the prohibition of Sabbath is there, the prohibition of stealing is not there’. — Without lifting it up there is no acquisition in the public road. (Rashi.)

Since he carried it from one private ground to another private ground next to it. ‘Carrying out’ is forbidden on Sabbath only from private ground to public ground or from public ground to private ground. V. Shab. 2b and 73a.

V. infra.

Lit., ‘according to whom’?

V. Shab. 6a.

V. note 1.

Guilt of the Sabbath.

Lit., ‘the public press and go in there’.

And they have therefore more the character of private ground for the purpose of acquisition by pulling (meshikah, v. Glos.).

Lit., joined’.

From the ground. Within three handbreadths from the ground it is public territory. Cf. Shab. 97a.

Indeed he dragged the purse along into the public road, and there he put his (second) hand near the ground, less than three handbreadths, and received the purse into the hand, and his hand acquired it for him. Thus the desecration of the Sabbath and the stealing came at the same time: the former when the purse was carried out into the public road (for dragging along is carrying out), and the latter when — simultaneously — it dropped into his hand (Rashi). V. also next note.

For the purpose of ‘taking up’ and ‘putting down’, the place must be at least four by four handbreadths; v. Shab. 4a. Raba said that the hand of a person is regarded as being a place of four by four handbreadths; v. Shab. 5a. And just as it is regarded as a place of four by four handbreadths for the purposes of Sabbath, it is also regarded as such a place for the purposes of acquisition. Therefore, when he received the purse into his hand, although it was lower than three handbreadths from the ground, since his hand is considered a place, in the legal sense, it is as if he had lifted up the purse above the three handbreadths from the ground and he has thus acquired it by lifting it up: the desecration of the Sabbath and the stealing came therefore at the same time (Rashi). ‘Lifting’ as an act of acquisition must be at least three handbreadths from the ground. V. also next note.

As R. Ashi said that there is no acquisition in a public domain except by ‘lifting up’.

By dragging along the purse towards him. No ‘lifting up’ is necessary. The person acquires the object by pulling it (meshikah) even in a public domain.

R. Aba and Rabina.

V. B.K. l.c.

Lit., ‘he pulled it and went’. — He intended to steal the animal.

From paying to the owner for the animal, for he has not acquired it yet, since he has not taken it out from the territory of the owner and it has therefore not come into his possession.

The animal.

And by doing this he acquired the animal.

To the owner for the animal, v. B.K. 79a.

By the process of ‘pulling’.

Even into public territory.

This shews that pulling an object to oneself acquires also in public territory.

רשות here also means ‘possession’. By being brought into his private domain the object comes into his possession, but not by being brought out into public territory. Therefore R. Aha requires the device of the person receiving the object into his hand near the ground, as R. Ashi said.

Even if it is in the public road.

In the sense in which R. Aha says it.
(42) Persons who commit, after a warning, a transgression punishable with kareth receive the punishment of lashes, v. Mak. 13a.
and it is established that one does not receive lashes and pay! — ‘Ulla said: There is no difficulty. Here [it speaks] of his sister who is a maiden, and there [it speaks] of his sister who is a mature girl. [But in the case of] his sister who is a mature girl, too, there are damages to be paid for the shame and deterioration. — [It speaks of] an idiot. But [there are still damages to be paid for] the pain. [It speaks of] a girl who was seduced. Now that you have come to this, you can even say [that it speaks of] his sister who was a maiden and namely when she was an orphan and [she was] seduced.

Consequently, ‘Ulla holds the view that wherever there is money [to be paid] and the punishment of lashes [to be inflicted], he pays the money and does not receive the lashes. Whence does ‘Ulla derive this? — He derives it from the law with regard to one person who injures another person. Just as when one person injures another person, in which case there is money to [be paid] and the punishment of lashes, he pays the money and does not receive the lashes. [But may it not be argued] it is different with [the case of] one person who injures another person because he is liable for five things? And [if you will say] that [the payment of] money is lighter, [one can say against this] that here it has been excepted from its rule and permitted to the Court! But he derives it from the refuted false witnesses. Just as in the case of refuted false witnesses, whose transgression involves the payment of money and the punishment with lashes, they pay the money but do not receive the lashes; so whenever there are payment of money and the punishment of lashes, he pays the money and does not receive the lashes. [But it may be argued] it is different with the case of refuted false witnesses, because they do not require a warning? [And if you will say] that [the payment of] money is lighter, [one can say against this.] that they have not done any deed? — But he derives it from both. The point common to both is that there are the payment of money and the punishment with lashes, and in either case he pays the money and does not receive the lashes. But [it may be argued] the point common to both is also that they both have a strict side? And if [you will say that the payment of] money is lighter, [one can say against this] that they have both a lighter side —

(1) Since he receives lashes, according to the Mishnah just quoted, he should not pay the fine, and this would be against our Mishnah.
(2) In our Mishnah.
(3) A na'arah (v. Glos.) and the fine is payable; v. supra 29a. In this case the penalty of lashes would not be inflicted.
(4) In Mak. 13a.
(5) A bogereth (v. Glos.), and no fine is due, v. supra 29a. In this case the penalty of lashes is inflicted.
(6) Which she has suffered, (v. infra 39a-40b). And there would be both lashes and payment.
(7) The girl is not compos mentis, and thus neither shame nor deterioration applies.
(8) Caused by the forced intercourse.
(9) In the Mishnah Mak. 13a, it was not a case of violation, but of seduction; and in seduction there is no pain: v. infra 39b.
(10) To say that the Mishnah Mak. speaks of seduction and not violation.
(11) Since her father is not alive, the damages are payable to her.
(12) And having yielded to his persuasion she will not claim the damages from him; hence lashes are inflicted.
(13) Since ‘Ulla explains the Mishnah Mak. 13a as dealing with a bogereth, as otherwise there would be, in his view, no lashes even if he were warned beforehand, but only the payment of the fine.
(14) V. Ex. XXI, 19.
(15) This is deduced from Deut. XXV, 3 (Rashi).
(16) V. infra 32b.
(17) He has to make five kinds of payments; v. B.K. 83b. The payment of money in this case is therefore particularly heavy and other money payments cannot be compared with it.

(18) And if in this case payment of money is to be made and no lashes are to be given, the same should indeed apply to other cases. Whether the payment is greater or smaller, it is a lighter punishment than lashes, and we see here that the lighter punishment is chosen (cf. Rashi).

(19) In this case the Torah has expressly stated that the Court may administer lashes (cf. Deut. XXV, 2). But the Court may prefer, and as a rule does prefer, that the person who was injured should receive money as compensation (Cf. Tosaf. s.v. נמי). Therefore in this case the money is paid and no lashes are given. But in other cases, as in those of violation and seduction, the rule may be different. In these cases the giving of lashes is not mentioned explicitly in the Torah, and thus its permissiveness is not stated. And when in such cases the punishment of lashes and the payment of money are due, lashes are given. And you cannot derive other cases from this case. With regard to the punishment of lashes v. Mak. 13b.

(21) Cf. Mak. 4a.

(22) V. infra 32b.

(23) They are subject to the lex talionis without a warning.

(24) The refuted false witnesses.

(25) Their transgression consists in words and not in deeds. Therefore the money penalty is imposed and not that of lashes. But with regard to transgressions in deeds, it may be that the transgressor receives lashes!

(26) The case of one person who injures another person and the case of the refuted false witnesses.

(27) In the one case the five kinds of payment and in the other case the non-requirement of a warning.

(28) In the one case the exception (v. p. 176, n. 9), and in the other case the transgression consisted of words and not of a deed. Therefore you cannot compare other cases with this case.

Talmud - Mas. Kethuboth 32b

But ‘Ulla derives it from the two words ‘for’. It is written here for he hath humbled her and it is written there: ‘Eye for eye’. As there he pays money and does not receive lashes, so wherever there are the payment of money and the punishment of lashes, he pays money and does not receive the lashes.

R. Johanan said: You can even say that it speaks of his sister who was a maiden. Only there it speaks of a case where they warned him, and here it speaks of a case where they did not warn him. Consequently R. Johanan holds the view that wherever there are the payment of money and the punishment of lashes and they warned him, he receives the lashes and does not pay the money. Whence does R. Johanan derive this? — The verse says: According to his guilt; [from this I infer that] you punish him because of one guilt but not because of two guilts, and immediately follow the words: Forty stripes he may give him. But behold when one person injures another person, in which case there are the payment of money and the punishment of lashes, he pays money and does not receive the lashes? And if you will say that this is only when they did not warn him, but when they warned him, he receives the lashes and does not pay — did not R. Ammi say in the name of R. Johanan that, if one person struck another person a blow, for which no perutah can be claimed as damages, he receives the lashes? How shall we imagine this case? If they did not warn him, why does he receive the lashes? Hence it is clear that they warned him, and the reason [why he receives the lashes and does not pay] is because the damages do not amount to a perutah, but if they amount to a perutah he pays the money but does not receive the lashes! — [It is] as R. Elai said: The Torah has expressly stated that the Zomemim witnesses have to pay money; so [here] also the Torah has expressly stated that the person who injures another person has to pay money. With regard to what has that [teaching] of R. Elai been said? — With regard to the following: We testify that So-and-so owes his fellow two hundred zuz and they were found to be Zomemim, they receive the lashes and pay, for it is not the verse that imposes upon them the lashes which imposes upon them the payment of money. This is the view of R. Meir; and the Sages say: He who pays does not receive lashes. [And] let us say: he who receives lashes does not pay? Upon that] R. Elai said: The Torah has expressly stated that the Zomemim witnesses have to pay more money. Where has the Torah stated this? — Consider; it is written: ‘Then shall ye do unto him as he had thought to do unto his brother’; why [is it written further,] ‘hand for hand’?\(^{22}\) [This means] a thing that is given from hand to hand, and that is money. [And] the same applies to the case of\(^{23}\) one person who injures another person. Consider; it is written: ‘As he hath done, so shall it be done to him’;\(^{24}\) why [is it written further] ‘so shall it be rendered unto him’?\(^{25}\) [This means] a thing that can be rendered,\(^{26}\) and that is money.

Why does R. Johanan not say as ‘Ulla?\(^{27}\) — If so\(^ {28}\) you would abolish [the prohibitory law]: The nakedness of thy sister thou shalt not uncover.\(^ {29}\)

(29) Lev., XVIII, 9. A prohibitory law, if wilfully transgressed, and after a warning, is punishable (also) with lashes. Therefore R. Johanan holds that where there are the payment of money and the punishment of lashes, he receives the lashes and does not pay the money. Only our Mishnah speaks of a case where there was no warning, and therefore he pays the fine.

Talmud - Mas. Kethuboth 33a

[But could not one say] also [in the case of] one person who injures another person: If so\(^ {1}\) you would abolish [the prohibitory law], ‘he shall not exceed, lest, if he should exceed.’\(^ {2}\) [And in case of] the Zomemim witnesses too, [one could say]: If so you would abolish [the law]: ‘then it shall be, if the guilty man deserve to be beaten.’ But [you must say that in the case of] the Zomemim witnesses it is possible to fulfil it when [the witnesses testified falsely about someone that he was] the son of a divorced woman or the son of a haluzah. [Similarly in the case of] a person who injured another person, it also is possible to fulfil it when he struck him a blow for which no perutah can be claimed as damages. [And so you can say] also [with regard to] his sister [that it is possible to fulfil it] in the case of his sister who was a mature girl. — R. Johanan can answer you: [The verse] for he hath humbled her is required for [the same teaching] as of Abaye, for Abaye said: The verse says, ‘for he hath humbled her’. This [he shall pay] for he has humbled her, [from which we infer], by implication, that there are also [to be paid damages for] shame and deterioration.

R. Eleazar says: The Zomemim witnesses pay money and do not receive lashes, because they cannot be warned. Raba said: You may know it [from the following]: When shall we warn them? Shall we warn them at first? They will [then] say: We have forgotten. Shall we warn them during the deed? They would [then] withdraw and not give any evidence. Shall we warn them at the end? [Then] what has been has been. Abaye demurred to this: Let us warn them immediately after they have given their evidence. R. Aha, the son of R. Ika demurred: Let us warn them at first and gesticulate to them [afterwards]. Later Abaye said: What I said was nothing. For if one were to say that Zomemim witnesses require a warning, [it would follow that], if we have not warned them, we would not kill them. [But then] is it possible that who they wished to kill without a warning, that they should require a warning? Surely, it is necessary [that the words be fulfilled,] ‘then shall ye do unto him as he has thought to do onto his brother’, and this would not be [the case here]? To this R. Samma the son of R. Jeremiah demurred. But now [according to your argument], [if the witnesses testified falsely about someone that he was] the son of a divorced woman or the son of a haluzah, since this case is not included in ‘as he had thought etc.’ a warning should be required! — The verse says: ‘Ye shall have one manner of law’; [this means] a law that is equal for you all.

R. Shisha, the son of R. Idi, said: That a person who injures another person pays money and does not receive the lashes is derived from this: [It is written:] And if men strive together and hurt a woman with child, so that her fruit depart. [Upon this] R. Eleazar said: The verse speaks of a striving with intent to kill, for it is written, But if any harm follow, then thou shalt give life for life. How shall we imagine this case? If they did not warn him, why should he be killed? Hence it is obvious that he was warned, [and it is held], when one is warned regarding a severe matter one also is warned for a light matter, and [yet] the Torah says: And yet no harm follow, he shall be surely fined. To this R. Ashi demurred: Whence [do we know] that when one is warned regarding a severe matter one also stands warned for a light matter? Perhaps it is not so! And even if we will say that it is so, whence [do we know] that [the penalty of] death is severer?

(1) cf, in this case, he has to pay money, he does not receive the lashes, v. supra 32b.
(2) Deut. XXV, 3. If the lashes are not given, this law is not fulfilled.
(3) Deut. XXV, 2, from which is derived the inflicting of lashes on Zomemim witnesses, v. Mak. 2b, and infra.

(8) Where there is no money payment and so he receives the lashes, v. supra 32b. V. Rashi.

As long as there is a possibility of fulfilling the law it is not abolished, as in the other two cases; thus there is no point in R. Johanan's objection to 'Ulla's explanation.

Deut. XXII, 29, from which 'Ulla derives that the fine is paid and no lashes are inflicted.

Whence does he derive Abaye's deduction?

Deut. XXII, 29.

So marginal glosses to text. R. Eleazar b. Pedath, generally called in the Talmud simply R. Eleazar, was a disciple and later an associate of R. Johanan. Cur. edd.: R. Eliezer.

[No verse is required to teach that Zomemim witnesses pay and receive no lashes (in opposition to R. Elai supra p. 178) as the Talmud proceeds to explain. The case of Mak. 2a (v. supra note 3) is an exception since there is no possibility of applying the lex talionis; where however it is applicable there are no lashes (Rashi).]

That they cannot be warned.

Before they gave evidence.

The warning. The warning has then lapsed.

I.e., during the evidence.

Seeing that they are under suspicion they would refuse altogether to give evidence, even true evidence.

After they had given their evidence.

I.e., what they said they cannot withdraw, and there would be no point in warning them.

‘Within as much (time) as is required for an utterance’, e.g., ‘a greeting’. V. Nazir (Sonc. ed.) p. 71 n. 1.

Before they gave evidence.

I.e., during the evidence. By gesticulating we would remind the witnesses of the warning given to them at first, and they could not say, ‘we have forgotten it’.

Or, ‘another time’.

That the Zomemim witnesses should require a warning to be lashed.

Lit., ‘if it enters thy mind’.

Although their false evidence, had it remained unrebuted, would have brought about the penalty of death on him against whom they testified.

Since their evidence proved to be false, they could not have given a warning to those against whom they testified.

Lit., ‘do we not require’?

[If the reason that Zomemim witnesses require no warning is because, otherwise, the principle ‘as he had thought’ could not be applied, a warning should be required in this case which the law excepts from the application of this principle].

Lev., XXIV, 22.

And since in most cases the Zomemim witnesses cannot be warned, they need not be warned in this case either.

And not (as supra 32b) from Lev. XXIV, 20.

Ex. XXI, 22.

Ex. XXI, 23. [‘Harm’ means ‘death’; and, the verse tells us, although there was no intent of killing the woman, the blow having been directed against the other man, yet the slayer is put to death, v. Sanh. 74a.

‘Life for life.’

The lashes for striking a person.

We thus see that although there was a warning and he should be liable to being punished with the lashes, he pays the money and does not receive the lashes.

And since he does not stand warned for the light matter, he is not liable to the punishment with lashes, and therefore pays the fine.

Talmud - Mas. Kethuboth 33b
Perhaps [the punishment with] lashes is severer, for Rab said: If they had lashed Hananiah, Mishael and Azariah, they would have worshipped the [golden] image? R. Samma the son of R. Assi said to R. Ashi; and some say [that] R. Samma the son of R. Ashi [said] to R. Ashi: Do you not make a distinction between a beating that has a limit and a beating that has no limit! R. Jacob from Nehar Pekod [also] demurred: That is alright according to the Rabbis who hold that life actually means life. But according to Rabbi, who holds that it means money, what is there to say? — But, said R. Jacob from Nehar Pekod, in the name of Raba; [it is to be derived] from the following verse: [It is written,] ‘If he rise again, and walk abroad upon his staff then shall he that smote him be quit.’ Would it enter your mind that this one walks about in the street and that one should be killed? But it teaches that they imprison him; if he dies, they kill him; and if he does not die, ‘he shall pay for the loss of his time, and shall cause him to be thoroughly healed.’ To this R. Ashi asked: Whence do you know that one who was warned for a severe matter stands warned for a lighter matter? Perhaps not? And if you will even say that he does [stand warned for the lighter matter], whence do you know that death is severer? Perhaps [the punishment with] lashes is severer, for Rab said: If they had lashed Hananiah, Mishael and Azariah, they would have worshipped the [golden] image? R. Samma the son of R. Assi said to R. Ashi, and some say [that] R. Samma the son of R. Ashi [said] to R. Ashi: Do you not make a distinction between a beating that has a limit and a beating that has no limit? R. Mari [also] demurred: Whence do you know that [one smote the other] wilfully and ‘he shall be quit’ [means] from [the penalty of] death? Perhaps [one smote the other] inadvertently and ‘he shall be quit’ [means] from exile? The difficulty remains.

Resh Lakish said: This is the opinion of R. Meir, who says: He receives the lashes and pays the money. — If it is according to R. Meir, then one who violated his daughter should also pay the fine. And if you will say that R. Meir holds [that] one may receive the lashes and pay the money, but does not hold [that] one may receive the death penalty and pay the money has it not been taught: If he has stolen and slaughtered an animal on Sabbath, or has stolen and slaughtered an animal for idolatry, or has stolen an ox that is to be stoned and slaughtered it, he shall pay fourfold or fivefold. This is the view of R. Meir, but the Sages declare him free from payment? — Has it not been stated regarding this: R. Jacob said in the name of R. Johanan, and some say [that] R. Jeremiah said in the name of R. Simeon b. Lakish: R. Abin and R. Elai and the whole company of scholars said in the name of R. Johanan that it speaks of a case when he [who stole the animal] let it be slaughtered by another person. But is it possible that one sins and another one is punished? Raba said: The Divine law says: and slaughter it or sell it; [this teaches that] as the sale is [effected] through [the participation of] another person, so may the slaughtering [of the animal] be through another person. In the School of R. Ishmael it was taught: [the word] ‘or’ [is] to include the agent. In the School of Hezekiah it was taught: [the word] ‘instead’ [is] to include the agent. Mar Zutra demurred to this: Is it anywhere to be found that if he does [the deed] himself he is not liable and if an agent does it he is liable? He himself [does not pay], not because he is not liable, but because he suffers the severer penalty. [But] if he [who stole the animal] let it be slaughtered by another person, what is the reason of the Rabbis who declare him free from paying)? — Who are the Sages?

(1) V. Dan. III.
(2) The number of lashes given by the Court is limited to forty.
(3) The lashes that might have been given to Hananiah, Mishael and Azariah would have had no limit.
(4) I.e., against the derivation of R. Shisha, based on the exposition of R. Eleazar.
(5) V. Sanh. 79a-b.
In Ex. XXI, 23.

I. e., the death penalty. In this case the text deals with an attack which was attended by a warning, and so you can make the derivation that he pays the money and does not receive the lashes, as supra p. 182, n. 8.

Since there is no question of a death penalty the text need not necessarily refer to a case where there was a warning, and thus affords no basis for the derivation.

Lit., ‘from here’.

Who was smitten.

Who smote.

Surely that is impossible! If the one was not killed by the injury, the smiter would not receive the death penalty. Then why does the Torah expressly say that ‘he that smote him be quit’?

Although there was a warning making him liable to lashes. This shews that he pays money and does not receive the lashes.

For notes v. supra p. 182, nn. 11-12.

To the derivation of R. Jacob from Nehar Pekod.

And if he killed him he is banished to one of the cities of refuge. V. Num. XXXV, 11ff and Deut. XIX, 2ff.

I. e., from banishment to one of the three cities of refuge. [The text thus speaks of a case where there was no warning, and for this reason makes him liable to a fine where the blow did not result in death; where however there was a warning there would be no payment, but lashes.]

With regard to the question from the Mishnah in Mak. 13a; v. supra 31b.

The view of our Mishnah.

Lit., ‘whose opinion is this? It is that of R. Meir’.

V. supra 32b.

And in the Mishnah infra 36b, it is stated that in such a case no fine is paid, because the penalty of death (by the hand of man) is attached to it. V. also Sanh. 75a.

Lit., ‘he dies’.

In the text follows: ‘and not’; i.e., and does he not hold that?

And has thus incurred the death penalty.

V. Ex. XXI, 28.

V. Ex. XXI, 37.

We thus see that R. Meir holds that even when there is a death penalty he pays the money.

Regarding the payment of money; v. Kid. 43a.

To pay the money.

Talmud - Mas. Kethuboth 34a

R. Simeon, who says: An unfit slaughtering is not called slaughterering. This might be right with regard to [the slaughtering for] idolatry and [the slaughtering of] the ox that is to be stoned, but the slaughtering on Sabbath is a fit slaughtering, for we learnt: If someone has slaughtered [an animal] on Sabbath or the Day of Atonement, although he is guilty of [a transgression for which he forfeits] his life, his slaughtering is a fit one? — He holds the opinion of R. Johanan ha-Sandalar, for it has been taught: If someone has cooked on Sabbath, [if] by mistake, he may eat it, [and if] wilfully he may not eat it: This is the view of R. Meir. R. Judah says: [If] by mistake, he may eat it after the outgoing of the Sabbath, [if] wilfully, he may never eat it. R. Johanan hasandalar says: [If] wilfully, others may eat it after the outgoing of the Sabbath, but not he, [if] wilfully, neither he nor others may eat it. What is the reason of R. Johanan ha-Sandalar? As R. Hiyya expounded at the entrance of the house of the Prince: [It is written:] ‘Ye shall keep the Sabbath therefore, for it is holy unto you’. [From this we derive:] As what is holy is forbidden to be eaten, so what has been prepared on the Sabbath is forbidden to be eaten. If [so, you might say that] as what is holy is forbidden to be enjoyed, so what has been prepared on the Sabbath should be forbidden to be enjoyed? — It says unto you'; from this we learn: It shall belong to you. You might think [that it is forbidden to eat] even [what has been prepared on the Sabbath] by mistake, [therefore] it is said: every one that profaneth it shall surely be put to death. [This teaches that only] when [the act was done] wilfully, have I told thee [that it is forbidden as that which is holy] but not [if it was done] by mistake.

R. Aha and Rabina differ concerning this. One says: What has been prepared on Sabbath [is forbidden] according to the Bible, and one says: [only] according to the Rabbis. He who says: According to the Bible — as we have [just] explained. [And] he who says: according to the Rabbis — the verse says: ‘It is holy’, [that means]: ‘it’ is holy, but what has been prepared on it is not holy. According to him who says [that the prohibition is only] Rabbinical, what is the reason of the Rabbis who declare him free? — The Rabbis declare him free only with regard to other cases.

But [with regard to] one who slaughtered for idolatry [one can ask:] as soon as he has cut a little it has become forbidden, so when he continues the slaughtering he does not slaughter what is the owner’s? — Raba said: [it speaks of a case] when he says [that] he worships it with the completion of the slaughtering. [But with regard to] the ox that is to he stoned [one can ask]: he does not slaughter what is his? Here we speak of a case when he handed it to a keeper and it caused the damage in the house of the keeper and it was sentenced in the house of the keeper and a thief stole it from the house of the keeper. And R. Meir holds the view of R. Jacob and holds the view of R. Simeon. He holds the view of R. Jacob who says: If the keeper returned it even after the sentence had been pronounced, it is regarded as returned. And he holds the view of R. Simeon who says: that which causes [the gain or loss of] money is regarded as money.

Rabbah said: Indeed [it speaks of a case] when he slaughtered it himself

(1) Lit., ‘its name is not’. An act of slaughter that does not for any reason whatsoever effect the ritual fitness of the animal to be eaten is not considered by them in the eye of the law a slaughter.
(2) V. supra 30a.
(3) Mishnah, Hul. 14a.
(4) Probably ‘sandal-maker’.
(5) Lit., ‘at the outgoing’.
(6) According to R. Johanan ha-Sandalar what has been cooked on Sabbath wilfully must not be eaten by any few. The same would apply to what has been slaughtered wilfully on Sabbath. Thus one can say that the slaughtering on Sabbath is an unfit slaughtering.
(7) Judah the Prince.
(8) Ex. XXXI, 14.
(9) Lit., ‘the work of’.
(10) I. e., to have any use or benefit from it.
(11) Although one may not eat it, one may have other uses or benefits from it, e.g., one may sell it to one who is not a Jew and is therefore not bound by these laws.
(12) If he did not know it was Sabbath (Rashi).
(13) Ibid.
(14) For which the death penalty is inflicted.
(15) Lit., ‘said’.
(16) I. e., the Sabbath itself.
(17) The prohibition is therefore only Rabbinical.
(18) Who stole an animal and slaughtered it on Sabbath.
(19) From paying four- or fivefold. Since the animal is, according to Biblical law, fit for food, it should be considered a fit slaughter.
(20) Lit., the rest’, i.e., the other two cases mentioned: the serving of idols and the ox condemned to death.
(21) The throat of the animal.
(22) The animal.
(23) For any use as an animal slaughtered for idol worship v. Hul. 40a.
(24) Cutting the throat of the animal until the slaughtering of the animal is complete to make it fit for food.
(25) It has already become forbidden to the owner for any use and has thus ceased to be in his possession. He should therefore be free from paying four- or fivefold.
(26) The idol. The idolatrous act is to take place when the slaughtering has been completed. Consequently he was slaughtering what was the owner's.
(27) The thief.
(28) The owner's. An ox that is to be stoned for goring a person is forbidden for any use. It is therefore regarded as not belonging any more to the owner. And he should therefore be free from paying four- or fivefold.
(29) The owner.
(30) The ox.
(31) By killing a person. Cf. Ex. XXI, 28.
(32) I. e., while in the possession of the keeper.
(33) Although the condemned animal has no value, the liability of the keeper, who has to return the animal to its owner, is discharged by the keeper returning the animal to its owner.
(34) Since the thief stole the condemned animal the keeper cannot return it to the owner and he has to pay to the owner the value of the animal as it was when he entrusted it to him. The ox that is to be stoned has therefore a money value for the keeper. The thief must therefore pay the four- or fivefold. Talmud - Mas. Kethuboth 34b and R. Meir holds the view that [though generally] one may receive the lashes and pay, one cannot receive the death penalty and pay but these cases are different, because the Torah has enacted something novel in [the matter of] fine, and [therefore] he has to pay, although he has to suffer the death penalty. And Rabbah follows his own principle, for Rabba said: If he had a kid which he had stolen and he slaughtered it on Sabbath, he is bound, for he was already guilty of stealing before he came to the profanation of the Sabbath; [but] if he stole and slaughtered it on Sabbath he is free, for if there is no stealing there is no slaughtering and no selling.

Rabbah said further: If he had a kid which he had stolen and had slaughtered it at the place he broke into, he is bound, for he was already guilty of stealing before he came to the transgression of breaking in; [but] if he stole and slaughtered it in the place he broke into, he is free, for if there is no stealing there is no slaughtering and no selling. And it was necessary [to state both cases]. For if he had let us hear [the case of the] Sabbath [I would have said that he is free from payment] because its prohibition is a perpetual prohibition, but [in the case of] breaking in, which is only a prohibition for the moment, I might say, [that it is] not [so]. And if he had let us hear [the case of] breaking in [I would say that he is free from payment] because his breaking in is his warning, but [with regard to the] Sabbath, [in which case] a warning is required, I might say that [it is] not [so]. [Therefore] it is necessary [to state both cases].

R. Papa said: If one had a cow that he had stolen and he slaughtered it on Sabbath, he is liable for he was already guilty of stealing before he came to the profanation of the Sabbath; if he had a cow that he borrowed and he slaughtered it on Sabbath, he is free. R. Aha the son of Raba said to R. Ashi: Does R. Papa mean to tell us that the same rule applies to a cow? — He answered him: R. Papa means to tell us that the same rules apply to a borrowed cow. You might possibly think [that] because R. Papa said that he becomes responsible for its food from the time of [his taking possession of the cow by] 'pulling' here also he becomes responsible for any unpreventable accident [that may befall it] from the time of borrowing, so he lets us hear [that it is not so].
Raba said: If their father left them a borrowed cow, they may use it during the whole period for which he borrowed it; if it died, they are not responsible for what happened. If they thought that it belonged to their father and they slaughtered it and ate it, they pay the value of the meat at the lowest price. If their father left them an obligation of property, they are bound to pay. Some refer it to the first case, and some refer it to the second case. He who refers it to the first case, so much the more does he refer it to the second case, and he differs from R. Papa. And he who refers it to the second case does not refer it to the first case, and he agrees with R. Papa.

It is alright [that] R. Johanan does not say according to Resh Lakish because he wants to explain it according to the Rabbis. But why does not Resh Lakish say according to R. Johanan? — He will answer you: since he is free if they warned him, he is also free [even] if they did not warn him.

And they follow their own principles for when R. Dimi came [from Palestine] he said: He who has committed inadvertently an act which, if he had committed it wilfully, would have been punishable with death or with lashes, and [which is also punishable] with something else, R. Johanan says [that] he is bound, and Resh Lakish says [that] he is free. R. Johanan says [that] he is bound, for they did not warn him. Resh Lakish says [that] he is free, for since he is free if they warned him, so he is free also when they did not warn him.

Resh Lakish raised an objection against R. Johanan: [It is written]: If no harm follow, he shall be surely fined.

(1) Cf. supra 33b.
(2) In the case of the slaughtering of the stolen animal, supra 33b.
(3) A fine of four or five times the value of the animal is in itself a novel law.
(4) In view of the novel law in these cases.
(5) Lit., ‘he is killed’.
(6) To pay the fine.
(7) Lit., ‘prohibition’.
(8) From paying the fine.
(9) The crime of stealing is, as it were, wiped out by the more serious transgression of profaning the Sabbath. There is, therefore, no payment of principal. And since there is no payment of the principal, there is also no payment of the fine for the slaughtering and selling.
(10) מותרת means here both: the place he broke into and the time of breaking into the place. This breaking in took place after the stealing of the kid, which was a separate act. Cf. Ex. XXII, 2.
(11) To pay the fine.
(12) In which case he may forfeit his life, v. Ex. XXII, 2.
(13) Here the stealing and breaking in are one act.
(14) I. e., if he has profaned the Sabbath and incurred the death penalty, this penalty can always be inflicted.
(15) The thief's life is forfeit only when he is ‘found breaking in’. If he is found later his life is not forfeited, v. Ex. XXII, 2.
(16) I. e., that he is not free from payment.
(17) I. e., he may be killed without a warning.
(18) I. e., that he is not free from payment.
(19) To pay the fine.
(20) And thus stole it.

Accidentally, without their fault.

Lit., ‘for its accident’. The children are not responsible because they did not borrow it.

Which is generally estimated to be two-thirds of the ordinary price, cf. B.B. 146b.

Ale'shion, i.e., property which is a security for the payments which would have to be made. He left them (landed) property and with it the obligation which rests upon such property. The chief point in the phrase is the obligation for which such property is a security, and which was passed on to the children.

The last statement.

I. e., they are not responsible for the accident only if their father did not leave them an obligation of property.

When they slaughtered and ate it.

Who says that the obligation is incurred when the accident happens. According to the opposing view, the father left them the obligation, which therefore was incurred at the time of borrowing.

Where the father left them landed property, they are made to pay the full value of the meat since they ought to have been more careful.

Lit., ‘and this is the view of R. Papa’. The obligation is incurred with the accident, and at the time of the accident there was no borrower, since the person that borrowed the cow was dead.

Who explains the Mishnah as dealing with a case where there was no warning. v. supra 32b.

Who explains the Mishnah as representing the view of R. Meir, v. supra 33b.

The Mishnah.

From paying the fine.

Since the offence carries with it the penalty of lashes, there is no money payment even where lashes are not inflicted.

R. Johanan and Resh Lakish.

Or ‘opinions’, stated elsewhere.

From making the money payment.

And so there is no death penalty, and therefore he pays.

From making the money payment.

Talmud - Mas. Kethuboth 35a

[Now] is not real ‘harm’ meant?¹ No, the law concerning ‘harm’ [is meant].² Some say: R. Johanan raised an objection against Resh Lakish: [It is written] ‘And if no harm follow, he shall be surely fined’. Is not the law concerning ‘harm’ [meant]?² No, real ‘harm’ [is meant].¹

Raba said: Is there any one who holds that he who committed inadvertently an act which, if he had committed it wilfully, would have been punishable with death [and which is also punishable with the payment of money] is bound [to make the money payment]? Has not the school of Hezekiah taught: [It is written] He that smiteth a man . . . he that smiteth a beast³ [from which we infer:] As in [the case of] the killing of a beast you have made no distinction between [it being done] inadvertently and wilfully, intentionally and unintentionally, by way of going down or by way of going up,⁴ so as to free him [from the payment], but [in any case] make him liable to pay, so also in [the case of] the killing of a man you shall make no distinction between [it being done] inadvertently and wilfully, intentionally and unintentionally, by way of going down or by way of going up, so as to make him liable to pay money, but to free him from paying money? But when Rabin came [from Palestine], he said: [As to] him who committed inadvertently an act which, if he had committed it wilfully, would have been punishable with death [and which is also punishable with the payment of money] — all agree that he is free [from the payment of money], they only differ when the act committed inadvertently would, if committed wilfully, have been punishable with lashes and something else. R. Johanan says [that] he is bound [to make the money payment, because] only with regard to those who commit an act punishable with death, the analogy is made, but [with regard to those who commit an act punishable with lashes, the comparison is not made. [But] Resh Lakish says [that] he is free [from making the money payment, because] the Torah has expressly included those who commit an act punishable with lashes to be as those who commit an act punishable with death. Where has the Torah included [them]—Abaye said: [We infer it from] the double occurrence of ‘wicked man’ Raba said: [We infer it from] the double occurrence of ‘smiting’. R. Papa said to Raba: Which ‘smiting’ [do you mean]? If you mean [the verse] And he that smiteth a beast shall pay for it, and he that smiteth a man shall be put to death, this speaks of the death penalty — Is it this ‘smiting’; he that smiteth a beast shall pay for it: life for life and next to it [comes] And if a man cause a blemish in his neighbour, as he hath done so shall it be done to him? But here [the term] ‘smiting’ is not mentioned! — We mean the effect of ‘smiting’. But this verse refers to one who injures his fellow, and one who injures his fellow has to pay damages— It if does not refer to a ‘smiting’ in which there is the value of a perutah, refer it to a smiting in which there is not the value of a perutah.

(1) If no harm follows, that is if the woman does not die, he pays the fine. But if the woman dies, no fine is paid, even if he was not warned. This would be according to Resh Lakish and against R. Johanan.
(2) I. e., if the woman did not die, or if she died but he was not warned, he pays the fine. The ‘law concerning harm’ would imply warning. No warning, no death penalty, and therefore payment of money. This would accord with R. Johanan.
(3) Lev. XXIV, 21. The whole verse reads: And he that smiteth a beast shall pay for it; and he that smiteth a man shall be put to death. — Smiting here means killing.
(4) A distinction which obtains in the case of unintentional manslaughter with reference to the liability to take refuge, cf. Mak. 7b.
(5) Even if the killing of the man was done inadvertently, and the death penalty is not inflicted, there is no payment of money to be made. R. Johanan could therefore not have said that he was bound to make the money payment, supra p. 190.
(6) The payment of money.
(7) Between he that smiteth a beast and he that smiteth a man; v. supra.
(8) A Gezerah shawah v. Glos. The word ‘wicked’ occurs in Num. XXXV, 31 (in the case of the death penalty) and in Deut. XXV, 2 (in the case of the penalty of the lashes), and therefore an analogy is drawn between the two cases.
(9) [Raba disapproves of this double analogy, but assumes that those who are liable to lashes are in every case exempt from payment directly from ‘he that smiteth a beast’ and not by means of the analogy between them and those liable to the death penalty.]
(10) Lit., ‘if to say’.
(11) Lev. XXIV, 21.
(12) The second half of the verse.
(13) Lit., ‘is written’.
(14) And offers no basis of deduction for the penalty’ of lashes.
(15) Lev. XXIV, 19. This is taken to mean: he shall receive the lashes; v. infra.
(16) It does not say in this verse ‘If a man smiteth his neighbour’. It says ‘If a man cause a blemish in his neighbour’.
(17) ‘We speak of’.
(18) To cause a blemish means to smite. And the smiter has to be smitten, that is, he has to receive the lashes.
But he does not receive lashes. V. infra 32b.

I. e., the words ‘so shall it be done to him’. And in this case he receives lashes and the analogy with ‘he that smiteth a beast’ serves to teach, on the view of Resh Lakish, that there is no payment even where, for one cause or another, there is no infliction of lashes.

Talmud - Mas. Kethuboth 35b

Anyhow, he is not liable to pay damages? — It necessarily [speaks of a case] where, while he smote him, he tore his silk garment.

R. Hiyya said to Raba: And according to the Tanna of the school of Hezekiah, who says: [It is written] ‘He that smiteth a man . . . He that smiteth a beast’ [etc.,] — whence does he know that it refers to a week-day and there is no distinction to be made? Perhaps it refers to the Sabbath, [in which case] there is a distinction to be made with regard to the beast itself? This cannot be, for it is written: ‘And he that smiteth a beast shall pay for it, and he that smiteth a man shall be put to death.’ How shall we imagine this case? If they did not warn him, why should he, if he killed a man, be put to death? Hence it is clear that they warned him, and if [it happened] on a Sabbath would he, if he smote a beast, pay for it? Therefore it can only refer to a week-day.

R. Papa said to Abaye: According to Rabbah, who says [that] the Torah has instituted something novel in the matter of fines and [therefore] he pays although he is killed — according to whom does he put our Mishnah? If according to R. Meir, [the law regarding] his daughter is difficult, if according to R. Nehunia b. ha-Kana, [the law regarding] his sister is difficult, and if according to R. Isaac, [the law regarding] a mamzereth is difficult. It would be alright if he would hold like R. Johanan, [for] he would [then] explain it like R. Johanan. But if he holds like Resh Lakish how can he explain it? — He [therefore], of necessity, holds like R. Johanan.

R. Mattena said to Abaye: According to Resh Lakish who says that the Torah has expressly included those who commit an act punishable with lashes to be as those who commit an act punishable with death — who is the Tanna, who differs from R. Nehunia b. ha'Kana? It is either R. Meir or R. Isaac.

Our Rabbis taught: All forbidden relations and all relations forbidden in the second degree have no claim to fine or to indemnity for seduction. A woman who refuses [her husband] by mi'un has no claim to fine or to indemnity for seduction. [In this case] a barren woman has no claim to fine for outrage or to indemnity for seduction. And a woman who has gone out on account of an evil name, has no claim to fine for outrage or to indemnity for seduction. What are ‘forbidden relations’ and what are ‘relations forbidden in the second degree’? Shall I say [that] ‘forbidden relations’

(1) Because the damages do not amount to a perutah. The verse thus affords no basis of deduction for the ruling of Resh Lakish.
(2) There the analogy is required, and we are taught that he is liable to lashes for the injury he inflicted and is free from paying for the silk garments even if the lashes are not actually inflicted.
(3) V. p. 191 and notes.
(4) Lev. XXIV, 21.
(5) Between ‘inadvertently’ and ‘wilfully’; but there is in every case liability to payment.
(6) Payment would be due only if he killed it inadvertently. If he killed it wilfully he would be liable to the death penalty on account of the desecration of the Sabbath and he would thus be free from the money payment.
(7) Lit., ‘this does not enter your mind’. It cannot be assumed that the verse refers to the offence having been committed.
Talmud - Mas. Kethuboth 36a

are really forbidden relations and prohibitions of the second degree [are those relations which were forbidden] by the Rabbis? Why should the latter not receive the fine since they are fit for him Biblically? — But, forbidden relations are those with regard to which one is liable to the penalty of death at the hand of the Court, prohibitions of the second degree are those with regard to which there is kareth; but in the case of prohibitions with regard to which one trespasses a plain prohibitory law, they receive the fine. And whose opinion is it? [It is that of] Simeon the Temanite. Some say: ‘Forbidden relations’ are those with regard to which one is liable to the penalty of death at the hand of the Court or kareth, ‘prohibitions of the second degree are those with regard to which one transgresses a plain prohibitory law. Whose opinion is this? That of R. Simeon b. Menassia.

[It is said above:] A woman who refuses her husband by mi'un has no claim to fine [for outrage] or to indemnity for seduction. But any other minor has a claim [to the fine]. Whose opinion would this be? That of the Rabbis, who say: A minor receives the fine. Read now the other clause: ‘A barren woman has no claim to fine [for outrage] or to indemnity for seduction’. This is according to R. Meir, who says: The minor does not receive the fine; and this one came from her state as minor into the state of womanhood. The first clause would then be according to the Rabbis and the last clause according to R. Meir? And if you would say that all of it is according to R. Meir, but in the case of the woman who refuses her husband by mi'un he holds like R. Judah — does he indeed hold... the view [of R. Judah]? Has it not been taught: Until when can the daughter exercise the right of mi'un? Until she grows two hairs — [these are] the words of R. Meir. R. Judah says: Until the black is more than the white? — But it is according to R. Judah, and with regard to a minor he holds like R. Meir, But does he hold this view? Did not Rab Judah say [that] Rab said: ‘These are the words of R. Meir’? Now if it had been so, he ought to have said: ‘These are the words of R. Meir and R. Judah’? — This Tanna holds according to R. Meir in one thing and differs from him in one thing. Rafram said: What is meant by ‘a woman who refuses her husband by mi’un’? One who is entitled to refuse. Let him then teach ‘a minor’? — This is indeed difficult.

[It is said above:] ‘A barren woman has no claim to fine [for outrage] or to indemnity for seduction. A contradiction was raised against this: A woman who is a deaf-mute, or an idiot, or barren, has a claim to fine [for outrage], and a suit can be brought [by her husband] against her concerning her virginity. What contradiction is there? The one [Baraitha] is according to R. Meir and the other [Baraitha] is according to the Rabbis! But he who raised the questions how could he raise it at all? — He wanted to raise another contradiction: Against a woman who is a deaf-mute, or an idiot, or has reached maturity, or lost her virginity through an accident, no suit can be brought concerning her virginity; against a woman who is blind or barren, a suit can be brought concerning her virginity. Symmachus says in the name of R. Meir: Against a blind woman a suit cannot be brought concerning her virginity! — Said R. Shesheth: This is not difficult: the one [Baraitha] is according to R. Gamaliel and the other [Baraitha] is according to R. Joshua. But say when does R. Gamaliel hold this view? When she pleads; but does he hold this view when she does not plead — Yes, since R. Gamaliel holds that she is believed, in a case like this, [the verse], Open thy mouth for the dumb.

‘And against a woman who has reached maturity, one cannot bring a suit concerning her virginity.’ Did not Rab say: To a woman who has reached maturity one gives the [whole] first night?

— If he raises the complaint with regard to the bleeding,¹ it is really so;² here we treat of a case where he raises the complaint of the ‘open door’.³

[It is said above:] ‘Symmachus says in the name of R. Meir: Against a blind woman a suit cannot be brought concerning her virginity’. What is the reason of Symmachus? — R. Zera said: ‘because she may have struck against the ground’.⁴ All the others⁵ may also have struck against the ground.⁶ All the others see it⁷ and show it to their mothers,⁸ this one does not see it and does not shew it to her mother.⁹

[It is said above]:¹⁰ ‘And a woman who goes out because of an evil name has no claim to fine [for outrage] and to indemnity for seduction’. A woman who goes out because of an evil name is liable to be stoned?¹¹ — R. Shesheth said: He¹² means it thus: if an evil name has gone out concerning her in her childhood¹³ she has no claim to fine [for outrage] or to indemnity for seduction. R. Papa said: Infer from this [that] one does not collect [a debt] with an unsound document. How shall we imagine this case? If to say that a rumour has gone out that the document is forged, and similarly here that a rumour has gone out that she has been unchaste? — Did not Raba say [that] if the rumour has gone out in the town [that] she is unchaste one does not pay any attention to it?¹⁴ — But [the case is that] two [persons] came and said [that] she asked them to commit with her a transgression¹⁵ and similarly here [that] two [persons] came and said [that] he¹⁶ said to them: Forge me [the document]. It is all right there,¹⁷ since there are many unrestrained men.¹⁸ But here¹⁹ — if he²⁰ has been established,²¹ have [therefore] all Israelites been established?²² — Here also, since he²³ was going round searching for a forgery, I can say [that] he [him. self] has forged it and written it.²⁴

*MISHNAH. AND²⁵ IN THE FOLLOWING CASES NO FINE²⁶ IS INVOLVED: IF A MAN HAD INTERCOURSE WITH A FEMALE PROSELYTE, A FEMALE CAPTIVE OR A BONDWOMAN, WHO WAS RANSOMED, PROSELYTIZED OR MANUMITTED AFTER THE AGE OF²⁷ THREE YEARS AND A DAY.²⁸ R. JUDAH RULED: IF A FEMALE CAPTIVE WAS RANSOMED SHE IS DEEMED TO BE IN HER VIRGINITY²⁹ EVEN IF SHE BE OF AGE.

A MAN WHO HAD INTERCOURSE WITH HIS DAUGHTER. HIS DAUGHTER'S DAUGHTER, HIS SON'S DAUGHTER. HIS WIFE'S DAUGHTER. HER SON'S DAUGHTER OR HER DAUGHTER'S DAUGHTER INCURS NO FINE.³⁰ BECAUSE HE FORFEITS HIS LIFE, THE DEATH PENALTIES OF SUCH TRANSGRESSORS BEING³¹ IN THE HANDS OF BETH DIN, AND HE WHO FORFEITS HIS LIFE PAYS NO MONETARY FINE FOR IT IS SAID IN SCRIPTURE, AND YET NO HARM FOLLOW HE SHALL BE SURELY FINED.³²

GEMARA. R. Johanan said: Both R. Judah and R. Dosa taught the same thing. As to R. Judah [we have the ruling just mentioned. As to R. Dosa? — It was taught: A female captive may eat terumah; so R. Dosa. ‘What after all is it’, said R. Dosa, ‘that that Arab has done to her? Has he rendered her unfit to be a priest’s wife merely because he squeezed her between her breasts?’

Said Raba: Is it not possible that there is really no [agreement between them]? R. Judah may have laid down his ruling here only in order that the sinner may gain no advantage, but there he may hold the same opinion as the Rabbis; is or else: [May not] R. Dosa have laid down his ruling only there [where it concerns] terumah which [at the present time is only] a Rabbinical enactment, but in the case of a fine which is a Pentateuchal law he may well hold the same view as the Rabbis.

Abaye answered him: Is R. Judah's reason here ‘that the sinner may gain no advantage’? Surely it was taught: R. Judah ruled, ‘If a female captive was ransomed she is deemed to be in her virginity, and even if she is ten years old her kethubah is two hundred zuz’. Now how could the reason ‘that the sinner shall gain no advantage’ apply there? — There also [a good reason exists for R. Judah's ruling, since otherwise men would abstain from marrying her.

Could R. Judah, however, maintain the view [that a female captive] retains the status of a virgin when in fact, it was taught: A man who ransoms a female captive may marry her, but he who gives evidence on her behalf may not marry her, and R. Judah ruled: In either case he may not marry her.

Is not this, however, self-contradictory? You said, ‘A man who ransoms a female captive may marry her’, and then it is stated, ‘He who gives evidence on her behalf may not marry her’; shall he not marry her [it may well be asked] because he gives also evidence on her behalf? — This is no difficulty. It is this that was meant: A man who ransoms a female captive and gives evidence on her behalf may marry her, but he who merely gives evidence on her behalf may not marry her.

In any case, however, does not the contradiction against R. Judah remain? — R. Papa replied: Read, ‘R. Judah ruled: In either case he may marry her’.

R. Huna the son of R. Joshua replied: [The reading may] still be as it was originally given, but R. Judah was speaking to the Rabbis in accordance with their own ruling. ‘According to my view he argued] the man may marry her in either case; but according to your view it should have been laid down that in either case he may not marry her.

And the Rabbis? — ‘A man who ransoms a captive and gives evidence on her behalf may marry her’ because no one would throw money away for nothing, but ‘he who merely gives evidence on her behalf may not marry her’ because he may have fallen in love with her.

R. Papa b. Samuel pointed out the following contradiction to R. Joseph:

(1) I. e., the lack of it.
(2) He is entitled to raise this complaint.
(3) V. supra 9a. This complaint cannot be raised against a bogereth.
(4) And thus lost her virginity.
(5) All other girls. Lit., ‘all of them’.
(6) And yet a suit can be brought against them concerning their virginity.
(7) I. e., notice the accidental loss of their virginity.
(8) And it is known that the virginity is lost by accident and no claim arises concerning the virginity at their marriage.
(9) But the accidental loss may have happened all the same. Therefore there is no virginity claim against a blind woman.
The translation from here to the end of the Tractate is by the Rev. Dr. I. W. Slotki.

Ex. XXI, 22; from which it may be inferred that if ‘harm’ (i.e., death) follows no monetary fine is incurred.

Who was the daughter or wife of a priest.

Because she is not suspected of intercourse with her captors. A seduced or violated woman is regarded as a harlot who is forbidden to a priest (cf. Lev. XXI, 7) and is, therefore, also ineligible to eat terumah.

Sc. her captor. Arabs were ill-famed for their carnal indulgence (v. Kid. 49b and Tosaf. s.v. בָּרֶה a.l.).

Git. 81a; cf. ‘Ed’. III. 6. Captors. R. Dosa maintains, only play about with their captives but did not violate them.

So MS.M. Cut. edd., ‘Rabbah’. Cf. Tosaf. supra 11a s.v. וְנִבְרָה רֹבּוּ and infra 37a s.v. רַבּוּ דוֹמֵר.

R. Judah and R. Dosa.

That a ransomed captive retains the status of virgin and consequently is entitled to a fine from her seducer.

In our Mishnah.

By an exemption from the statutory fine (cf. supra p. 198. n. 16).

In the case of terumah cited from Git. 81a. (15) That a female captive is forbidden to a priest and is ineligible to eat terumah.

That a captive retains her status of chastity and may eat terumah if she is a priest's wife or daughter.

Pentateuchally even a woman whose seduction was a certainty is permitted to eat such terumah. Hence no prohibition was imposed even in Rabbinic law where seduction is doubtful.

And subject to greater restrictions.

The first Tanna of our Mishnah.

, so MS.M. Cut. edd., תִּנָּה בָּרֶה, ‘was taken captive’, is difficult.

The statutory sum to which a virgin is entitled. A widow is entitled to one hundred zuz only.

Tosef. Keth. III.

Lit., ‘what’.

Lit., ‘there is’.

Where the husband had committed no sin. Now since this reason is here inapplicable and R. Judah nevertheless gives the captive the status of a virgin, it follows, as R. Johanan has laid down supra, that R. Judah maintains his view in all cases including, of course, that of terumah also.
I. e., if the captive were only allowed a kethubah of one hundred zuz.

On learning that her kethubah was not the one given to a virgin, and suspecting, therefore, that she had been seduced.

As such a reason, however, is inapplicable to terumah R. Judah, as Raba had suggested. may well be of the same opinion as the Rabbis.

Cf. supra p. 199, n. 1.

That she had not been seduced.

If he is a priest (cf. supra p. 199, n. 6).

Tosef. Yeb. IV; which proves that a female captive does lose her status of virginity. How then could R. Judah maintain in our Mishnah and in the Baraitha cited from Tosef. Keth. III that she retains the status of a virgin?

The Baraitha just cited from Tosef. Yeb.

Implying presumably anyone, even the man who ransomed her.

The man who ransomed the captive and who in such circumstances is permitted to marry her.

Because no man would spend money on the ransom of a captive with the object of marrying her unless he was convinced of her chastity.

In the absence of any special effort on his part to ransom the woman while she was captive he is suspected of tendering false evidence in a desire to gratify his passions.

V. supra p. 200, n. 20.

I. e., that R. Judah ruled: ‘He may not marry her’.

That a captive retains her status of chastity.

That a captive loses the status of a virgin.

On what grounds do they draw a distinction between the man who ransoms a captive and the one who only tenders evidence in her favour?

Cf. supra note 4.

Lit., ‘put his eyes on her’. Cf. supra note 5.

Talmud - Mas. Kethuboth 37a

Could R. Judah hold the view that [a female captive] is deemed to have retained her virginity when it was, in fact, taught. ‘If a woman proselyte discovered [some menstrual] blood on [the day of] her conversion it is sufficient, R. Judah ruled, [to reckon her Levitical uncleanness from] the time she [discovered it].’ R. Jose ruled: She is subject to the same laws as all other women and, therefore, causes uncleanness [retrospectively] for twenty-four hours, or [for the period] intervening between [her last ] examination and [her previous] examination. She must also wait three months; so R. Judah. but R. Jose permits her to be betrothed and married at once? — The other replied: You are pointing out a contradiction between a proselyte and a captive [who belong to totally different categories, since] a proselyte does not protect her honour while a captive does protect her honour.

A contradiction, however, was also pointed out between two rulings in relation to a captive. For it was taught: Proselytes, captives or slaves who were ransomed, or proselytized. or were manumitted, must wait three months if they were older than three years and one day; so R. Judah. R. Jose permits immediate betrothal and marriage. [The other] remained silent. ‘Have you’, he said to him, ‘heard anything on the subject?’ — ‘Thus’, the former replied. ‘said R. Shesheth: [This is a case] where people saw that the captive was seduced’. If so what could be R. Jose's reason? — Rabbah replied: R. Jose is of the opinion that a woman who plays the harlot makes use of an absorbent in order to prevent conception. This is intelligible in the case of a proselyte, who, since her intention is to proselytize, is careful. It is likewise [intelligible in the case of] a captive [who is also careful] since she does not know whither they would take her. It is similarly [intelligible in the case of] a bondwoman [who might also be careful] when she hears from her master. What, however, can be said in the case of one who is liberated on account of the loss of a tooth or an eye? And were you to suggest that R. Jose did not speak of an unexpected occurrence, [it might be retorted,] there is the case of a woman who was outraged or seduced which may happen.
unexpectedly and yet it was taught: A woman who has been outraged or seduced must wait three months; so R. Judah, but R. Jose permits immediate betrothal and marriage! — The fact, however, is, said Rabbah, that R. Jose is of the opinion that a woman who plays the harlot turns over in order to prevent conception. And the other? — There is the apprehension that she might not have turned over properly.

FOR IT IS SAID IN SCRIPTURE, AND YET NO HARM FOLLOW HE SHALL BE SURELY FINED etc. Is, however, the deduction made from this text? Is it not in fact made from the following text: According to the measure of his crime, [which implies] you make him liable to a penalty for one crime, but you cannot make him liable [at the same time] for two crimes — One [text deals] with [the penalties of] death and money and the other with [the penalties of] flogging and money. And [both texts were] needed. For if we had been told [only of that which deals with the penalties of] death and money it might have been assumed [that the restriction applied only to the death penalty] because it involves loss of life, but not [to the penalties of] flogging and money where no loss of life is involved. And if we had been told only of flogging and money it might have been assumed [that the restriction applied only to flogging] because the transgression for which flogging is inflicted is not very grave, but not [to the penalties of] death and money where the transgression for which the death penalty is imposed is very grave. [Hence it was] necessary to have both texts.

According to R. Meir, however, who ruled: ‘A man may be flogged and also ordered to pay’. what need was there for the two texts? — One deals with the penalties of death and money and the other\(^1\) with those of death and flogging. And [both texts were] needed. For if we had been told [only of that which deals with the penalties of] death and money it might have been assumed [that the restriction\(^2\) applied to these two penalties only] because we must not inflict one penalty upon one's body and another upon one's possessions, but in the case of death and flogging, both of which are inflicted on one's body, it might have been assumed [that the flogging] is deemed to be [but] one protracted death penalty and both may, therefore, be inflicted upon one man.\(^3\) And if we had been told about death and flogging only [the restriction\(^4\) might have been assumed to apply to these penalties only] because no two corporal punishments may be inflicted on the same person, but in the case of the penalties of death and money one of which is corporal and the other monetary it might have been assumed that both may be inflicted.\(^5\) [Both texts were, therefore,] necessary.

What need was there\(^6\) for the Scriptural text, Moreover ye shall take no ransom for the life of a murderer?\(^7\) — The All-Merciful has here stated: You shall take no monetary fine from him and thus exempt him from the death penalty.

What was the need\(^8\) for the Scriptural text, And ye shall take no ransom for him that is fled to his city of refuge?\(^9\) — The All-Merciful has here stated: You shall take no monetary fine from him to exempt him from exile.\(^10\)

But why two texts?\(^11\) — One deals with unwitting, and the other with intentional [murder]. And [both texts] were required. For if we had been told\(^12\) of intentional murder\(^13\) only it might have been assumed [that the restriction\(^12\) applied to this case only], because the transgression for which death is inflicted is grave, but not to the one of unintentional murder where the transgression is not so grave. And if we had been told of unintentional murder is only it might have been assumed [that the restriction applied to this case only] because no loss of life is involved, but not to intentional murder where a loss of life is involved. [Both texts were consequently] required.

What was the object of the Scriptural text, And no expiation can be made for the land for the blood that is shed therein, but by the blood of him that shed it? — It was required for [the following deduction] as it was taught: Whence is it deduced that, if the murderer has been discovered after the heifer's neck had been broken, he is not to be acquitted? From the Scriptural text, ‘And no expiation can be made for the land for the blood that is shed therein etc.’

Then what was the need for the text, So shalt thou put away the innocent blood from the midst of thee? — It is required for [the following deduction] as it was taught: Whence is it deduced that execution by the sword must be at the neck? It was explicitly stated in Scripture, ‘So shalt thou put away the innocent blood from the midst of thee’, all who shed blood are compared to the atoning heifer. As its head is cut at the neck so [is the execution of] those who shed blood at the neck.

If [so, should not the comparison be carried further]: As there [its head is cut] with an axe and at the nape of the neck so here? — R. Nahman answered in the name of Rabbah b. Abbuha: Scripture said, But thou shalt love thy neighbour as thyself, choose for him an easy death.

What need was there for the Scriptural text, None devoted, that may be devoted of men, shall be ransomed? — It is required for [the following] as it was taught: Whence is it deduced that, when a person was being led to his execution, and someone said, ‘I vow to give his value to the Temple.’ his vow is null and void? [From Scripture] wherein it is said, ‘None devoted, that may be devoted of man, shall be redeemed.’ As it might [have been presumed that the same law applied] even before his sentence had been pronounced it was explicitly stated: ‘Of men’, but not ‘all men’.

According to R. Hanania b. ‘Akabia, however, who ruled that the [age] value of such a person may be vowed because its price is fixed, what deduction does he make from the text of ‘None devoted’? — He requires it for [the following deduction] as it was taught: R. Ishmael the son of R. Johanan b. Beroka said, Whereas we find that those who incur the penalty of death at the hand of heaven may pay a monetary fine and thereby obtain atonement, for it is said in Scripture, If there be laid down on him a sum of money, it might [have been assumed that] the same law applied also [to those who are sentenced to death] at the hands of men, hence it was explicitly stated in the Scriptures. ‘None . . . devoted of men shall be redeemed’. Thus we know the law only concerning severe death penalties since [they are imposed for offences] which cannot be atoned for if committed unwittingly; whence, [however. is it inferred that the same law applies also to] lighter death penalties seeing that [they are for offences] that may be atoned for if committed unwittingly. It was explicitly stated in Scripture, ‘None devoted’. But could not this be inferred independently from Ye shall take no ransom which implies: You shall take no money from him to exempt him [from death]? — Rami b. Hama replied: It was required. Since it might have been assumed

Num. XXXV, 31.

The death penalty for murder is considered of a lighter character since, the crime, if committed unwittingly, is atoned for by exile.

Talmud - Mas. Kethuboth 38a

that this applied only where murder had been committed in the course of an upward movement, because no atonement is allowed when such an act was committed unwittingly, but that where murder was committed in the course of a downward movement, which is an offence that may be atoned for if committed unwittingly, a monetary fine may be received from him and thereby he may be exempted [from the death penalty]. Hence we were taught [that in no circumstances may the death penalty be commuted for a monetary fine].

Said Raba to him, Does not this follow from what a Tanna of the School of Hezekiah [taught]; for a Tanna of the School of Hezekiah taught: He that smiteth a man [was placed in juxtaposition with] And he that smiteth a beast [to indicate that just] as in the case of the killing of a beast no distinction is made whether [the act was] unwitting or presumptuous, whether intentional or unintentional, whether it was performed in the course of a downward movement or in the course of an upward movement, in respect of exempting him from a monetary obligation but in respect of imposing a monetary obligation upon him, so also in the case of the killing of a man no distinction is to be made whether [the act was] unwitting or presumptuous, whether intentional or unintentional, whether it was performed in the course of a downward movement or in the course of an upward movement, in respect of imposing upon him a monetary obligation but in respect of exempting him from any monetary obligation — But, said Rami b. Hama, [one of the texts was required to obviate the following assumption]: It might have been presumed that this applied only where a man blinded another man's eye and thereby killed him, but that where he blinded his eye and killed him by another act a monetary fine must be exacted from him.

Said Raba to him: Is not this also deduced from [the statement of] another Tanna of the School of Hezekiah; for a Tanna of the School of Hezekiah [taught:] Eye for eye implies but not an eye and a life for an eye? — [This]. however, [is the explanation], said R. Ashi: [One of the texts was required] to obviate the following assumption]: It might have been presumed that since the law of a monetary fine is an anomaly which the Torah has introduced, a man must pay it even though he also suffers the death penalty. Hence we were told [that even a monetary fine may not be imposed in addition to a death penalty].

But according to Rabbah, who said that it is an anomaly that the Torah has introduced by the enactment of the law of a monetary fine [and that therefore an offender] must pay his fine even though he is also to be killed, what application can be made of the text 'None devoted. . .'? — He holds the view of the first Tanna who [is in dispute with] R. Hanania b. ‘Akabia. MISHNAH. A GIRL WHO WAS BETROTHED AND THEN DIVORCED IS NOT ENTITLED, SAID R. JOSE THE GALILEAN, TO RECEIVE A FINE [FROM HER VIOLATOR]. R. AKIBA SAID: SHE IS ENTITLED TO RECEIVE THE FINE AND, MOREOVER, THE FINE BELONGS TO HER.
GEMARA. What is R. Jose the Galilean's reason? Scripture said, That is not betrothed is not entitled to a fine. And R. Akiba — [In the case of a girl] that is not betrothed [the fine is given] to her father but if she was betrothed [the fine is given] to herself.

Now then, [the expression.] A damsel implies but not one who is adolescent; could it here also [be maintained] that [the fine is given] to herself? [Likewise the expression] virgin implies but not one who is no longer a virgin; would it here also [be maintained] that [the fine is given] to herself? Must it not consequently be admitted [that the exclusion in the last mentioned case] is complete, and so here also it must be complete? — R. Akiba can answer you: The text of ‘Not betrothed’ is required for another purpose. As it was taught: ‘That is not betrothed’ excludes a girl that was betrothed and then divorced who has no claim to a fine; so R. Jose the Galilean. R. Akiba, however, ruled: She has a claim to a fine and her fine is given to her father. This is arrived at by analogy: Since her father is entitled to have the money of her betrothal and he is also entitled to have the money of her fine [the two payments should be compared to one another]: As the money of her betrothal belongs to her father even after she had been betrothed and divorced, so also the money of her fine should belong to her father even after she had been betrothed and divorced. If so what was the object of the Scriptural text, ‘That is not betrothed’? It is free for the purpose of a comparison with it and an inference from it by means of a gezerah shawah. Here it is said, ‘That is not betrothed’ and elsewhere it is said, That is not betrothed as here [the fine is that of] fifty [silver coins] so is it fifty [silver coins] there also; and as there [the coins must be] shekels so here also they must be shekels.

What, however, moved R. Akiba to apply the text of ‘That is not betrothed’ for a gezerah shawah and that of ‘Virgin’ for the exclusion of one who was no longer a virgin?

(1) Intentionally. Lit., ‘he killed him’.
(2) Of the hand, body or instrument.
(3) By exile.
(4) Murder in the course of an upward movement of the hand or body.
(5) V. Mak. 7b.
(6) By the text, ‘None devoted’ from which deduction was made supra.
(7) Rami b. Hama.
(8) The deduction from ‘None devoted’ that, in the case of murder, the death penalty may not be commuted for a monetary fine irrespective of whether the offence had been committed in the course of an upward, or downward movement.
(9) Lev. XXIV, 21.
(10) Lit., ‘he who kills’.
(11) Which in relation to the beast was not spoken of in the text of Lev. XXIV, 21.
(12) Which was spoken of in the text ibid.
(13) I. e., the man who killed the beast must in all cases mentioned pay compensation, and under no circumstance may he evade payment.
(14) Lit., ‘he too kills’.
(15) Of which, in respect of murder, Lev. XXIV, 21 does not speak.
(16) Since the text (Lev. XXIV, 21) speaks of the death penalty as the only punishment for murder.
(17) V. supra 35a, B.K. 35a, Sanh. 79b. This shows that no distinction is made in the case of murder between a downward movement or an upward movement, but in every case no money payment can be imposed in addition to the major punishment. And the same principle must apply to the non-acceptance of a ransom in substitution for the death penalty. What need was there then for the text of ‘None devoted’ (cf. supra p. 208, n. 16)?
(18) Either ‘None devoted’ or ‘He that smiteth’ (cf. Rashi).
(19) That no monetary penalty may be imposed upon one who is to suffer the death penalty.
Simultaneously (v. Rashi).

As compensation for the eye, in addition to the death penalty for murder. [For the obvious difficulty involved in this reply of Rami b. Hama, which apparently is intended to explain the purpose of the verse ‘none devoted’ according to R. Ishmael b. R. Johanan b. Beroka; v. p. 210, n. 9.]

Rami b. Hama.

That for blinding an eye and thereby killing the man no monetary fine may be imposed in addition to the death penalty.

Ex. XXI, 24.

I. e., compensation for the loss of an eye.

[From this is derived that the Law could not mean actual retaliation, as there was always the danger of loss of life to the offender while not an eye and life for a life (Tosaf.).] B.K. 84a. The deduction from ‘He that smiteth’ since it is not needed for this case, must consequently apply to that ‘when Be Blinded his eye and killed him By another act’; and the question arises again: What need was there for one or for the other of the two previously cited texts (v. supra p. 209. n. 8)?

V. supra p. 209. n. 8.

Une dâyim, lit., ‘an innovation’ sc. different from other laws. In many instances it cannot be justified on logical grounds and can only be accepted as a divine law the reason for which is beyond human comprehension.

By means of one of the two texts (v. supra p. 209. n. 8) which is not required in respect of ordinary monetary payments.

If his offence warrants it.

Supra 34b, 3 5b.

Which, according to his view . Is not required to exclude the case just mentioned (cf. supra n. 4).

Rabbah.

Supra 37b where deduction is made from this text that a vow to give to the Temple the value of a person who was led to his execution, is null and void. [The whole passage is extremely difficult; v. Tosaf. The main difficulty is presented by the second answer of Ram B. Hama. (v. p. 209 , n. 11). The following may be offered in explanation: To revert to the very beginning of the discussion the Talmud, assuming that the verse ‘you shall take no fine’ denotes that no money payment is to be imposed in addition to a death penalty, asked, what need was there for this verse, in view of the verse ‘and yet no harm follow’ (v. p. 205). There upon follows the reply that this verse meant to exclude the commutation of the death penalty for money payment. Then the question arises, what need was there for R. Ishmael b. R. Johanan b. Beroka to resort, for what practically amounts to the same ruling, to the verse ‘None devoted’? To this Rami b. Hama in his first reply, answers that he needed this latter verse in the case where the murder was committed in a downward course. This reply, however, is rebutted by Raba, as such a contingency is already provided for in the verse ‘he that smiteth etc.’ This forces Rami b Hama to fall back on the original assumption that the verse ‘you shall take no ransom’ comes to teach that no money payment may be imposed in addition to the death penalty; and as to the very first question, what need is there, in view of the verse ‘and yet no harm shall follow’ for two verses to teach the same thing? — the reply is: it is necessary to provide for a case where the blinding and the killing result from two separate blows. Raba, however, objected that this contingency too was already provided for. Hence R. Ashi's reply, that the extra verse was required to ‘extend the rule to the case of a fine (v. Shittah Mekubbezeth. a.l.). This answer, however, the Talmud did not regard as satisfactory according to Rabbah, who held that a fine may be imposed in addition to the death penalty. On his view the verse ‘you shall take no ransom’ cannot be taken as referring to the imposition of a money payment in addition to the death penalty. Consequently, he would be forced back on the alternative explanation that it serves to teach that no death penalty may be commuted for money payment and thus the question of supra p. 208 ‘what need is there of "None devoted"’ remains. To this the answer is, that Rabbah would agree with the first Tanna who is in dispute with R. Hanania b. ‘Akabia].

Na'arah, v. Glos

Had she not been divorced, the offender is put to death and there is consequently no fine.

Not to her father.

For his ruling in our Mishnah.

Deut. XXII, 28.

The man . . . shall give . . . fifty shekels (ibid. 29).
How, in view of the Scriptural text cited, can he maintain that SHE IS ENTITLED TO RECEIVE THE FINE?

Deut. XXII, 28, Heb. na'arah.

A boqereth (v. Glos).

Since R. Akiba laid down that the exclusion of a fine that was implied by the text of ‘not betrothed’ is restricted to the girl’s father but that the girl herself is still entitled to it.

But this is absurd, since no such law is anywhere to be found.

Deut. XXII, 28.

Lit., ‘but’.

I. e., no fine is paid either to the girl or to Bet father.

The exclusion of which R. Jose the Galilean has spoken.

The previous objection against R. Akiba's ruling (cf. supra p. 211, n. 8) thus arises again.

Lit., ‘that’.

And is consequently not available for the deduction made by R. Jose the Galilean.

Talmud - Mas. Kethuboth 38b

Might [not one equally well] suggest that ‘Virgin’ should be applied for the gezerah shawah¹ and ‘That is not betrothed’ [should serve the purpose of] excluding² a girl³ that was betrothed and divorced? — It stands to reason [that the text of] ‘That is not betrothed’ should be employed for the gezerah shawah,⁴ since such a girl⁵ is still⁶ designated. A damsel that is a virgin.⁷ On the contrary; [should not the expression of] ‘Virgin’ be applied for the gezerah shawah, since [a non-virgin] may still be described as one ‘That is not betrothed’?⁸ — It stands to reason [that R. Akiba’s first view⁹ is to be preferred, since] the body of the one⁹ had undergone a change while that of the other¹⁰ had not.¹¹

As to R. Jose the Galilean,¹² whence does he draw that logical inference?¹³ — He derives it from the following where it was taught: He shall pay money according to the dowry of virgins¹⁴ [implies] that this [payment] shall be the same sum as the dowry of the virgins and the dowry¹⁵ of the virgins shall be the same as this.¹⁶

Does not a contradiction arise between the two statements of R. Akiba¹⁷ — [The respective statements represent the opinions of] two Tannaim who differ as to what was the ruling of R. Akiba.
[The ruling of] R. Akiba in our Mishnah presents no difficulty since the gezerah shawah does not altogether deprive the Scriptural text of its ordinary meaning. According to R. Akiba's ruling in the Baraitha, however, does not the gezerah shawah completely deprive the Scriptural text of its ordinary meaning? — R. Nahman b. Isaac replied. Read in the text: That is not a betrothed maiden. [But] is not a betrothed maiden one [for the violation of whom] the penalty of stoning [but not fine] is incurred? — It might have been assumed that, since it is an anomaly that the Torah had introduced by the enactment of the law of a monetary fine, an offender must, therefore, pay his fine even if he is also to be executed. According to Rabbah, however, who said that it was an anomaly that the Torah had introduced by the enactment of the law of a monetary fine and that an offender must pay his fine even if he is also to be executed, what can be said [in reply to the objection raised]? — He adopts the same view as that of R. Akiba in our Mishnah.

Our Rabbis taught: To whom is the monetary fine [of an outraged virgin to be given]? — To her father. Others say: To herself. But why ‘to herself’? — R. Hisda replied: We are dealing here with the case of a virgin who was once betrothed and is now divorced, and they differ on the principles underlying the difference between the view of R. Akiba in our Mishnah and his view in the Baraitha.

Abaye stated: If he had intercourse with her and she died, he is exempt [from the fine], for in Scripture it was stated, Then the man . . . shall give unto the damsel's father, but not unto a dead woman's father.

This ruling which was so obvious to Abaye formed the subject of an enquiry by Raba. For Raba enquired: Is the state of adolescence legally attainable in the grave or not? ‘Is the state of adolescence attainable in the grave and [the fine, therefore,] belongs to her son, or is perhaps the age of adolescence not attainable in the grave and [the fine, therefore,] belongs to her father?}

(1) And not, as has been said, to exclude a non-virgin from her right to the fine.
(2) From the tight to a fine.
(3) A na'arah.
(4) So that even a girl (na'arah) who was once betrothed and divorced should be entitled to the fine.
(5) Despite Bet Betrothal and divorce.
(6) Hence it is quite reasonable that her right to the fine shall not be lost. A non-virgin however, who is not described as ‘a damsel that is a virgin’ justly loses her right to the fine.
(7) While a na'arah that was once betrothed and divorced and cannot so be described should not be entitled to the fine.
(8) That a na'arah that was once betrothed and divorced is entitled to the fine and that a non-virgin is not.
(9) The non-virgin.
(10) Who was betrothed and divorced.
(12) Who, unlike R. Akiba, does not use the expression of ‘That is not betrothed’ for a gezerah shawah.
(13) Stated supra 38a ad fin., that a fine of fifty shekel is to be paid both in the case of seduction and that of violation.
(14) Ex. XXII, 16, the case of seduction.
(15) Viz. fifty, as specified in Deut. XXII. 29.
(16) Shekels, as implied from Ex. XXII, 16 (cf. supra p. 213. n. 5).
(17) In our Mishnah he laid down that the fine BELONGS TO HER while in the Baraitha (supra 38a) he maintains that it is shawah to her father.
(18) Because in addition to the deduction of the gezerah shawah, the ordinary meaning of the text viz. that if the ‘damsel . . . is not betrothed’ the fine is given ‘unto the damsel's father’ but if she was once betrothed it ‘BELONGS TO HER’, is also in agreement with the law.
(19) The implication of the ordinary meaning being that if the damsel was betrothed the fine is paid not to her father but to herself (cf. supra note 4.) while according to R. Akiba it ‘is given to her father’ irrespective of whether she was, or was not betrothed.
Deut. XXII. 28.

Thus excluding one formerly betrothed but now divorced. The consonants of the original אֶתִּישָׁה (Aram. vart) may be read as תִּשְׁתֵּב (as M.T.) ‘was betrothed’ as well as אֶתִּישָׁה ‘one who is betrothed’.

Since no monetary fine may be imposed in addition to the penalty of death. What need then was there a for a Scriptural text to teach the same law?

Cf. supra p. 210, n. 3.

If his crime warrants it.

Hence the necessity in this case for the additional Scriptural text.

Supra 34a, 35b, 38a.

Cf. supra p. 214, n. 5. The reply given by R. Nahman b. Isaac supra — that the offence referred to in the text is against one who was still betrothed and that the implication is that the offender, because he is suffering the penalty of death, is exempt from the monetary fine — is untenable; since, according to Rabbah, such an offender incurs both penalties.

Rabbah.

Which, as stated supra, does not ‘deprive the Scriptural test of its ordinary meaning’.

This is now assumed to mean a virgin ‘that is not betrothed’ who is spoken of in Deut. XXII. 28f.

The Scriptural text, surely, lays down that the fine is to be given ‘Unto the damsel's father’.

If she had one. As the fine would have been payable to her and not to her father if she had been alive (v. infra 41b) so it is now payable to her son who is her legal heir.

Talmud - Mas. Kethuboth 39a

But is she, however, capable of [normal] conception? Did not R. Bibi recite in the presence of R. Nahman: Three categories of women may use an absorbent in their marital intercourse: a minor, and an expectant and nursing mother. The minor, because otherwise she might become pregnant and die. An expectant mother, because otherwise she might cause her foetus to degenerate into a sandal. A nursing mother, because otherwise she might have to wean her child [prematurely] and this would result in his death. And what is the age of such a minor? From the age of eleven years and one day to the age of twelve years and one day. One who is under, or over this age must carry on her marital intercourse in a normal manner; so R. Meir. But the Sages said: The one as well as the other carries on her marital intercourse in a normal manner, and mercy will be vouchsafed from Heaven, for it is said in the Scriptures, The Lord preserveth the simple. And should you reply that this is a case where she conceived when she was a na'arah and gave birth to a child when she was still a na'arah [it could be objected:] Does one give birth to a child within six months [after conception]? Did not Samuel, in fact, state: The period between the age of na'aruth and that of bagruth is only six months? And should you suggest [that he meant to say] that there were no less but more [than six months] surely [it could be retorted] he used the expression. only! It must be this, then, that he asked: Is the state of adolescence attainable in the grave and her father consequently forfeits [his right], or is perhaps the state of adolescence not attainable in the grave and the father, therefore, does not forfeit [his right]?

Mar son of R. Ashi raised the question in the following manner: Does death effect adolescence or not? — The question stands undecided.
Raba enquired of Abaye: What [is the legal position if] he had intercourse and became betrothed? The other replied: Is it written in Scripture. ‘Then the man . . . shall give unto the father of the damsel who was not a betrothed woman’? Following, however, your line of reasoning, [the first retorted, one can argue in respect] of what was taught: ‘[If the offender had] intercourse with her and she married [the fine] belongs to herself’, is it written in Scripture. ‘Then the man . . . shall give unto the father of the damsel who was not a married woman’? — What a comparison! There [the following analogy may well be made]: Since the state of adolescence liberates a daughter from her father's authority and marriage also liberates a daughter from her father's authority [the two may be compared to one another]: As [in the case of] adolescence, if she attains adolescence after he had intercourse with her, [the fine] belongs to the girl herself; so also [in the case of] marriage, if she married after he had intercourse with her, [the fine] belongs to the girl herself. But as to betrothal, does it completely liberate a daughter from her father's authority? Surely we learned: [In the case of] a betrothed girl her father and her husband jointly may invalidate her vows.

GEMARA. [For the] PAIN of what? — The father of Samuel replied: For the pain [he has inflicted] when he thrust her upon the ground.

R. Zera demurred: Now then, if he had thrust her upon silk stuffs would he for a similar reason be exempt? And should you say that the law is so indeed, was it not [it may be retorted] taught: ‘R. Simeon b. Judah stated in the name of R. Simeon. A violator does not pay compensation for the pain [he has inflicted] because

(25) Attributed (supra 38b ad fin.) to Raba.
(26) I. e., does a na'arah (v. Glos) assume the status of adolescence the moment she dies, and her father consequently forfeits his right to the fine as if she had actually attained her adolescence in her lifetime? The former version of Raba's question differs from this in that it assumes as a certainty, contrary to Abaye's ruling, that death does not effect adolescence, the only doubt being whether adolescence is attained in due course, in the grave. According to this, the latter version, however, Abaye's very certainty is questioned, and the statement (supra p. 215) 'This ruling which was so obvious to Abaye formed the subject of enquiry by Raba' refers to this version.

The parallel passage in B.K. 59a has ‘Simeon b. Menasya’.

Talmud - Mas. Kethuboth 39b

The woman would ultimately have suffered the same pain from her husband, but they¹ said to him: One who is forced to intercourse cannot be compared to one who acts willingly² — [The reference.] in fact,³ said R. Nahman in the name of Rabbah b. Abbuhua [is to the] pain of opening the feet, for so it is said in Scripture, And hast opened thy feet to every one that passed by.⁴ But if so, the same applies to one who has been seduced⁵ R. Nahman replied in the name of Rabbah b. Abbuhua: The case of one who has been seduced may be compared to that of a person who said to his friend, ‘Tear up my silk garments and you will be free from liability’.⁶ ‘My’? Are they⁷ not her father's⁸ — This, however, said R. Nahman in the name of Rabbah b. Abbuhua, [is the explanation]: The smart women among them declare that one who is seduced experiences no pain. But do we not see that one does experience pain? — Abaye replied: Nurse⁹ told me: Like hot water on a bald head.¹⁰ Raba said: R. Hisda's daughter¹¹ told me, Like the prick of the blood-letting lancet.¹² R. Papa said: The daughter of Abba of Sura¹¹ told me, Like hard crust in the jaws.¹³

THE VIOLATOR PAYS FORTHWITH BUT THE SEDUCER [PAYS ONLY] IF HE DISMISSES HER etc. WHEN HE DISMISSES HER! Is she then his wife?¹⁴ Abaye replied: Read, ‘If he does not marry her,’¹⁵ So it was also taught: Although it was laid down that the seder pays [the statutory fine] only if he does not marry her, he must pay compensation for indignity and blemish forthwith. And [in the case of] the violator as well as [of] the seder, she herself or her father may oppose.¹⁶

As regards one who has been seduced, this¹⁷ may well be granted because it is written in Scripture. If her father will refuse,¹⁸ [since from ‘refusing’]¹⁹ I would only [have known that] her father [may refuse], whence [could it be deduced that] she herself [may also refuse]?²⁰ It was, therefore, explicitly stated ‘will refuse’, implying either of them.²¹ But as regards a violator, though one may well grant that she [may refuse him since] it is written in Scripture, ‘and onto him she shall be’²² [which implies]²³ only if she is so minded, whence, however, [it may be objected] is it deduced that her father [may also object to the marriage]? — Abaye replied: [Her father was given the right to object] in order that the sinner²⁴ might not gain an advantage.²⁵ Raba replied; It²⁶ is deduced a minori ad majus: If a seducer who has acted against the wish of her father alone may be rejected either by herself or by her father how much more so the violator who has acted both against the wish of her father and against the wish of herself.

Raba did not give the same reply as Abaye, because, having paid the fine, [the offender can] no longer be described as a sinner gaining an advantage. Abaye does not give the same reply as Raba [because it may be argued:²⁷ In the case of] a seducer, since he himself may object [to the marriage], her father also may object to it; [but in the case of] a violator, since he himself may not object [to the marriage] her father also may have no right to object to it.

Another Baraita taught: Although it has been laid down that the violator pays forthwith²⁸ she has no claim upon him²⁹ when he divorces her.³⁰ [‘When he divorces her’! Can he divorce her?]³¹ — Read: When she demands a divorce³² she has no claim upon him].³³ If he died, the fine is regarded as a quittance for her kethubah.³³ R. Jose the son of R. Judah ruled: She is entitled³⁴ to a kethubah for one maneh.³⁵

On what principle do they³⁶ differ? — The Rabbis hold the view that the only reason why³⁷ the Rabbis instituted a kethubah [for a wife was] in order that the man might not find it easy³⁸ to divorce her,³⁹ but [the violator,] surely, cannot divorce her.⁴⁰ R. Jose the son of R. Judah, however, is of the opinion that this man too might torment her until she says to him, ‘I do not want you’.⁴¹ THE why then should not this law\(^{1}\) also be inferred?\(^{2}\) — Scripture stated, He shall surely pay a dowry for her to be his wife,3 ‘her’4 [implies] only if he is so minded [need he marry her].

WHAT IS MEANT BY ‘MUST DRINK OUT OF HIS POT’ etc.? R. Kahana said, I submitted the following argument before R. Zebid of Nehardea.6 Why should not the positive commandment7 supersede the negative one?8 And he replied to me: ‘Where do we say that a positive commandment supersedes a negative one? [Only in a case], for instance, like circumcision in leprosy.9 since otherwise it would be impossible to fulfill the positive commandment, but here, if she should say that she did not want [the man for a husband], would [the question of the performance of] the positive commandment7 ever have arisen?’10

MISHNAH. IF AN ORPHAN WAS BETROTHED AND THEN DIVORCED, ANY MAN WHO VIOLATES HER, SAID R. ELEAZAR, IS LIABLE [TO PAY THE STATUTORY FINE]11 BUT THE MAN WHO SEDUCES HER IS EXEMPT.12

GEMARA. Rabbah b. Bar Hana stated in the name of R. Johanan: R. Eleazar made his statement13 on the lines of the view of his master R. Akiba who ruled: She14 is entitled to receive the fine, and, moreover, the fine belongs to her. How is this15 inferred?16 — As it was stated, IF AN ORPHAN . . . ANY MAN WHO VIOLATES HER, SAID R. ELEAZAR, IS LIABLE [TO PAY THE STATUTORY FINE] BUT THE MAN WHO SEDUCES HER IS EXEMPT, [the difficulty arises: Is not the case of] an orphan self-evident?17 Consequently it must be this that we were taught: A girl WHO WAS BETROTHED AND THEN DIVORCED has the same status as AN ORPHAN. As [the fine of] an orphan belongs to the orphan herself so does that of a girl who was betrothed and then divorced belong to the girl herself.

R. Zera said in the name of Rabbah b. Shila who said it in the name of R. Hammuna the Elder who had it from R. Adda b. Ahabah who had it from Rab: The halachah is in agreement with the ruling of R. Eleazar. Rab [in fact] designated R. Eleazar18 as the happiest19 of the wise men.

THE STATUTORY FINE22 IS THE SAME FOR ALL, AND ANY SUM THAT IS FIXED PENTATEUCHALLY REMAINS THE SAME FOR ALL.

GEMARA. Might it not be suggested that the All-Merciful intended the fifty sela23 to cover all the forms of compensation24 — R. Zera replied: [If that were so] it would be said, ‘Should one who had intercourse with a princess pay fifty and one who had intercourse with the daughter of a commoner also pay only fifty?’25 Said Abaye to him: If so, the same might be argued in respect of a slave:26 ‘Should [compensation for] a slave who perforates pearls be thirty [and that for] one who does

Thus the positive commandment of circumcision supersedes the negative one of leprosy.

(10) Obviously not, since the girl has the right of objecting to marry him. Similarly, if she happens to be one who is forbidden to marry an Israelite she is advised to object to the marriage (Rashi). [Isaiah Trani: Since the command for the performance of this positive precept is not absolute, it is not sufficiently strong to supersede a negative prohibition.]

needlework also be thirty?’ — This, however, said R. Zera, [is the proper explanation]: If two men had intercourse with her, one in a natural, and the other in an unnatural manner, it would be argued, ‘Should one who had intercourse with a sound woman pay fifty and one who had intercourse with a degraded woman also pay fifty?’

 Said Abaye to him: If so, the same might be argued in respect of a slave: ‘Should [compensation for] a healthy slave be thirty [and that for] one afflicted with boils also be thirty?’ — This, however, said Abaye, [is the explanation]: Scripture said, ‘Because he hath humbled her’; thus it may be inferred that [compensation for] indignity and blemish must also be paid.

Raba replied: Scripture said, Then the man that lay with her shall give unto the damsel’s father fifty [shekels of] silver, for the gratification of ‘lying’ [he gives] fifty. Thus it may be inferred that [compensation for] indignity and blemish must also be paid.

But say [perhaps] that [compensation for indignity and blemish is paid] to her? — Scripture said, Being in her youth in her father’s house, [implying that] all advantages of ‘her youth’ belong to her father.

[Consider,] however, that which R. Huna said in the name of Rab: ‘Whence is it deduced that a daughter’s handiwork belongs to her father? [From Scripture] where it is said, And if a man sell his daughter to be a maidservant, as the handiwork of a maidservant belongs to her master so does the handiwork of a daughter belong to her father’. Now what need is there [it may be asked, for this text when] the law, can be deduced from [the text of] ‘Being in her youth in her father's house’? Consequently [it must be admitted, must it not, that] that text was written in connection only with the annulment of vows? And should you suggest that we might infer from it, [it could be retorted that,] monetary matters cannot be inferred from ritual matters. And should you suggest that we might infer it from the law of fine, is [it could be retorted, could it not, that,] monetary payments cannot be inferred from fines? — This, however, [is the explanation]: it stands to reason that [her compensation should] belong to her father; for if he wished he could have handed her over to an ugly man or to one afflicted with boils.

AS TO BLEMISH, SHE IS REGARDED AS IF SHE WERE A BONDWOMAN TO BE SOLD. How is she assessed? The father of Samuel replied: It is estimated how much more a man would pay for a virgin slave than for a non-virgin slave to attend upon him. ‘A non-virgin slave to attend upon him’! What difference does this make to him? — [The meaning], however, [is this: How much more a man would pay for] a virgin slave than for a non-virgin slave for the purpose of marrying her to his bondman. But even if ‘to his bondman’, what difference does this make to him? — [We are dealing here] with a bondman who gives his master satisfaction.

MISHNAH. WHEREVER THE RIGHT OF SALE APPLIES NO FINE IS INCURRED AND WHEREVER A FINE IS INCURRED NO RIGHT OF SALE APPLIES. IN THE CASE OF A MINOR THE RIGHT OF SALE APPLIES BUT NO FINE IS INCURRED; IN THE CASE OF A DAMSEL A FINE IS INCURRED BUT NO RIGHT OF SALE APPLIES. TO A DAMSEL WHO IS ADOLESCENT THE RIGHT OF SALE DOES NOT APPLY NOR IS A FINE INCURRED THROUGH HER.

GEMARA. Rab Judah stated in the name of Rab: This is the ruling of R. Meir, but the Sages rule: A fine is incurred even where the right of sale applies. For it was taught: The right of sale applies to a minor from the age of one day until the time when she grows two hairs, but no fine is incurred through her. From the time she grows two hairs until she comes of age a fine is incurred through her but no right of sales applies; so R. Meir, because R. Meir has laid down: Wherever the right of sale applies no fine is incurred, and wherever a fine is incurred no right of sale applies. The Sages, however, ruled: Through a minor from the age of three years and one day until the time she becomes adolescent a fine is incurred. Only a fine [you say] but not the right of sale? — Read: A fine also where the right of sale applies.

R. Hisda said: What is R. Meir's reason? Scripture said, And unto him she shall be for a wife; the text thus speaks of a girl who may herself contract a marriage. And the Rabbis? Resh Lakish replied: Scripture said, na'ar which implies even a minor.

R. Papa the son of R. Hanan of Be Kelohith heard this and proceeded to report it before R. Shimi b. Ashi [when the latter] said to him: You apply it to that law; we apply it to the following: Resh Lakish ruled; A man who has brought an evil name upon a minor is exempt, for it is said in Scripture, And give them unto the father of the damsel, while a minor is not, is she, subject to punishment? — [The explanation,] however, [is that since] na'arah [has been written] here [it may be inferred that here only is a minor excluded] but wherever Scripture uses the expression of na'ar even a minor is included.

R. Adda b. Ahabah demurred: Is the reason then because the All-Merciful has written na'arah, but otherwise it would have been said that even a minor [was included], surely [it may be objected] it is written in Scripture, But if this thing be true, and the tokens of virginity be not found in the damsel, then they shall bring out the damsel to the door of her father's house, and [the men of her city] shall stone her, while a minor is not, is she, subject to punishment? — [The explanation,] however, [is that since] na'arah [has been written] here [it may be inferred that here only is a minor excluded] but wherever Scripture uses the expression of na'ar even a minor is included.

Talmud - Mas. Kethuboth 41a

MISHNAH. HE WHO DECLARES, ‘I HAVE SEDUCED THE DAUGHTER OF SO-AND-SO’ MUST PAY COMPENSATION FOR INDIGNITY AND BLEMISH ON HIS OWN EVIDENCE BUT NEED NOT PAY THE STATUTORY FINE.\textsuperscript{1}

HE WHO DECLARES, ‘I HAVE STOLEN’ MUST MAKE RESTITUTION FOR THE PRINCIPAL ON HIS OWN EVIDENCE BUT NEED NOT REPAY DOUBLE,\textsuperscript{2} FOURFOLD\textsuperscript{3} OR FIVEFOLD.\textsuperscript{3}

[HE WHO STATES.] ‘MY OX HAS KILLED SO-AND-SO’ OR ‘THE OX OF SO-AND-SO’ MUST MAKE RESTITUTION\textsuperscript{4} ON HIS OWN EVIDENCE. [IF HE, HOWEVER, SAID.] ‘MY OX HAS KILLED THE BONDMAN OF SO-AND-SO’\textsuperscript{5} HE NEED NOT MAKE RESTITUTION ON HIS OWN EVIDENCE.\textsuperscript{6}

THIS IS THE GENERAL RULE: WHOEVER PAYS MORE THAN THE ACTUAL COST OF THE DAMAGE HE HAS DONE\textsuperscript{7} NEED NOT PAY IT ON HIS OWN EVIDENCE. GEMARA. Why did not he\textsuperscript{8} include ‘I have violated”?\textsuperscript{9} — He implied that this was unnecessary: It was unnecessary [to state that if a man declared.] ‘I have violated’, in which case he casts no reflection on the girl's character,\textsuperscript{10} that he must pay compensation for indignity and blemish on his own evidence,\textsuperscript{11} but [if a man declared.] ‘I HAVE SEDUCED’, in which case he does cast a reflection on her character,\textsuperscript{12} it might have been assumed that he does not pay [such compensation] on his own evidence,\textsuperscript{13} hence he informs us [that he does].

Our Mishnah does not agree with the following Tanna. For it was taught: R. Simeon b. Judah stated in the name of R. Simeon, [Compensation for] indignity and blemish also a man does not pay on his own evidence\textsuperscript{14} because he\textsuperscript{15} cannot be trusted\textsuperscript{16} to tarnish the character of another man's daughter.

Said R. Papa to Abaye: What [is the ruling if] she is satisfied?\textsuperscript{17} — It is possible that her father might not be satisfied. And what if her father also is satisfied? — It is possible that the members of her family might not be satisfied. What if the members of her family are also satisfied? — It is impossible that there should not be one somewhere\textsuperscript{18} who is not satisfied.

HE WHO DECLARES, ‘I HAVE STOLEN’ MUST MAKE RESTITUTION FOR THE PRINCIPAL etc. It was stated: [In respect of liability for] half damages.\textsuperscript{19} R. Papa ruled: It is a civil obligation,\textsuperscript{20} but R. Huna the son of R. Joshua ruled: It is penal.\textsuperscript{21} ‘R. Papa ruled: It is a civil obligation’, for he is of the opinion that cattle as a rule cannot be presumed to be safe. Justice, therefore, demands that the owner should make full restitution, but the All-Merciful has shown mercy towards him because his cattle have not yet become mu’ad. ‘R. Huna the son of R. Joshua ruled: It is penal’, for he is of the opinion that cattle as a rule are presumed to be safe. Justice, therefore, demands that the owner should make no restitution at all, but it was Divine Law that imposed a fine upon him in order that he should exercise special care over his cattle.

(Mnemonic: He damaged what, and killed a general rule.)

We have learned: The plaintiff and the defendant are involved in the payment. Now according to him who holds that liability for half damages is a civil obligation it is perfectly correct [to say] that the plaintiff is involved in the payment, but according to him who maintains that liability for half damages is penal [it may well be asked:] If he receives that which [in strict justice] is not his due how can he be involved? — It may apply only to [a loss caused by] a decrease in the value of the carcass. [But have we not] already learned elsewhere [about] the decrease in the value of the carcass? ‘To compensate for the damage’ means that the owner must dispose of the carcass. — One of the statements deals with a tam and the other with a mu’ad. And [both statements are] required. For if [that relating to] a tam only had been made it might have been presumed [to apply to that alone] because the animal has not yet become mu’ad but not to a mu’ad since [in the latter case the owner] has been duly warned. And if [only the statement relating to] a mu’ad had been made it might have been assumed [to apply to that case alone] because the owner pays full compensation but not [to that of] a tam. [Both rulings were consequently] required.

Come and hear: What is the difference [in the case of compensation for damages] between a tam and a mu’ad? — In the case of a tam half damages are paid out of its own body, while in the case of a mu’ad full compensation is paid out of the best of the [defendant’s] estate. Now if it were the case [that liability for half damage is penal] why was it not also stated that in the case of a tam no compensation is paid merely on one’s own evidence? To compensate for the damage means that the owner must dispose of the carcass. — One of the statements deals with a tam and the other with a mu’ad. And [both statements are] required. For if [that relating to] a tam only had been made it might have been presumed [to apply to that alone] because the animal has not yet become mu’ad but not to a mu’ad since [in the latter case the owner] has been duly warned. And if [only the statement relating to] a mu’ad had been made it might have been assumed [to apply to that case alone] because the owner pays full compensation but not [to that of] a tam. [Both rulings were consequently] required.

Come and hear: [A MAN WHO SAID] ‘MY OX KILLED SO-AND-SO’ OR ‘THE OX OF SO-AND-SO MUST PAY COMPENSATION ON HIS OWN EVIDENCE. Now does not [this statement deal] with a tam?³ — No; with a mu'ad. What, however, [would be the law] in the case of a tam? Would no liability be established by one's own evidence? Then instead of stating in the final clause, ‘... THE BONDMAN OF SO-AND-SO HE NEED NOT MAKE RESTITUTION ON HIS OWN EVIDENCE, could not a distinction have been drawn in the very same case, thus: ‘This applies only to a mu'ad but in respect of a tam no liability is incurred by one's own evidence’? — The entire [Mishnah prefers to] deal with a mu'ad.⁵

Come and hear: THIS IS THE GENERAL RULE: WHOSOEVER PAYS MORE THAN THE ACTUAL COST OF THE DAMAGE HE HAS DONE NEED NOT PAY ON HIS OWN EVIDENCE, from which it follows,⁶ [does it not, that if the payment is] less than the cost of the damage,⁷ one must pay compensation even on one's own evidence⁸.⁹ Do not infer: ‘[But if payment is] less than the cost of the damage [one must pay ... on one's own evidence]’,¹⁰ but infer: ‘[If payment] corresponds to the actual amount of the damage one must pay compensation even on one's own evidence’. What, however, [would be the law if payment were] less than the amount of the damage?¹¹ Would no liability be established by one's own evidence? Then¹² why was it not stated, ‘This is the general rule: Whoever does not pay an amount corresponding to the actual cost of the damage he has done pays no compensation on his own evidence’, which would imply [that where compensation is] less or more¹³ [it is to be paid on one's own evidence]? — This is indeed a refutation.¹⁴

The law, however, [is that the liability for] half damage is penal. ‘A refutation’ [of a ruling]¹⁵ and [yet it is] the law? — Yes; for the sole basis of the refutation¹⁶ was that¹⁷ the statement¹⁸ did not run, ‘[whoever does not pay an amount] corresponding to the actual cost of the damage he has done’; [but such a principle]¹⁹ was not regarded by him as exactly accurate, since there is the liability for half damages [in the case of the damage done by] pebbles²⁰ Concerning which there is an halachic tradition that the liability is civil.²¹ On account of this consideration he did not adopt [the form of the expression suggested].

Now that you have laid down that liability for half damage is penal, the case of a dog that devoured lambs or that of a cat that devoured big hens is one of unusual occurrence²² and no distress is executed in Babylon.²³ If, however, they were small the occurrence is a usual²⁶ one and distress is executed.²⁶ Should the plaintiff,²⁶ however, seize [the chattels of the defendant]²⁷ they are not to be taken away from him.²⁸ Furthermore, if²⁹ he pleads. ‘Fix for me a date [by which the defendant must come with me] to the Land of Israel,’³⁰ such date must be fixed for him, and if [the defendant] does not go with him he must be placed under the ban. In any case,³¹ however, [the defendant] is to be placed under the ban;³² for he is told, ‘Abate your nuisance’,³³ in accordance with a dictum of R. Nathan. For it was taught:³³ R. Nathan said, Whence is it derived that a man may not breed a bad dog in his house nor place a shaking ladder in his house? [From Scripture] where it is said, That thou bring not blood upon thine house.³⁴

(1) Lit., 'this (is) according to whom?'

(2) V. B.K. 26a. The distinction mentioned (v. supra n. 1) does not, therefore, apply. The other distinction also, viz, that between full kofer for a mu'ad and half kofer for a tam, cannot be regarded as an omission, since it is included in the first clause which lays down that in the case of a tam half damages are paid and in that of a mu'ad full compensation is paid, a ruling which applies to kofer as well as to damages. Since there is no other omission, this Mishnah proves that the liability for half damage is civil as supra.

(3) And since liability is established by one's own evidence such liability cannot be penal but civil. Cf. supra 230. n, 17.

(4) That liability is established by one's own admission.

(5) To shew that even in respect of a mu'ad there is a case where no liability is incurred by one's own evidence.

(11) Than the actual cost of the damage.

(12) Since, however, the rule was not stated in this form it follows that liability for less than the actual cost of the damage (v. supra n. 1) is not payable on one's own admission. An objection thus arises against R. Huna the son of R. Joshua (cf. supra p. 231, n. 5),

(13) The ruling, therefore, that half damages payable in the case of a tam is penal, stands refuted.

Talmud - Mas. Kethuboth 42a

HER HANDIWORK, HOWEVER, AND ANYTHING SHE FINDS EVEN IF SHE HAD NOT COLLECTED [THE PROCEEDS], BELONG TO HER BROTHERS IF HER FATHER DIED.¹

GEMARA. What [new law] does he teach us?² Have we not [already] learned: The seducer pays three forms [of compensation] and the violator four. The seducer pays compensation for indignity and blemish as well as the statutory fine, and the violator pays an additional [form of compensation] in that he pays for the pain?³ — It was necessary [to teach us] TO HER FATHER.⁴ [But] that [the compensation is due] to her father is also obvious, since a seducer has to pay for it? For if [it were to be given] to herself [the objection could be raised], why should the seducer pay [to her when] he acted with her consent?⁵ — It was necessary [to tell us] of the case where HER ACTION WAS TRIED [which is a point in] dispute between R. Simeon and the Rabbis.⁶ We have learned elsewhere: [If a man said to another] ‘You have violated or seduced my daughter’, and the other replied. ‘I did not violate or seduce her’. ‘I adjure you’ [said the first] and the other responded. ‘Amen’, but afterwards admitted his guilt. ‘I adjure you’ [said the first] and the other responded. ‘Amen’, but afterwards admitted his guilt, he is liable.⁷ R. Simeon, however, exempts him, for no fine is paid on one's own admission.⁸ They,⁹ however, said to him: Though no man pays a fine on his own admission he nevertheless pays compensation for indignity and blemish¹⁰ on his own admission.¹¹ Abaye enquired of Rabbah:¹² What is the law according to R. Simeon¹³ where a man said to another, ‘You have violated or seduced my daughter, and I have brought you to law and you were ordered to pay me [a stipulated sum, of] money’ and the other replied. ‘I have neither violated nor seduced her, nor have you brought me to law nor have I been ordered to pay you any money’, and after he had taken an oath¹⁴ he admitted his guilt? Is [his liability], since his action had been tried,¹⁵ civil¹⁶ and he consequently incurs thereby a sacrifice for [having taken a false] oath, or is it possible that, though his action had been tried, his liability¹⁷ is still regarded as penal?¹⁸ — The other replied: It is a civil liability and he incurs thereby the obligation to bring a sacrifice for a false oath.¹⁹ He²⁰ pointed out to him²¹ the following objection: R. Simeon, said, As it might have been presumed that if a man said to another, ‘You have violated or seduced my daughter’ and the other replied ‘I have neither violated nor seduced her’, [or if the first said]. ‘Your ox has killed my bondman’ and the other replied, ‘He did not kill him’, or if a bondman said to his master,²² ‘You have knocked out my tooth’ or ‘You have blinded my eye’.²³ and he replied. ‘I have not knocked it out’ or ‘I have not blinded it’ and [the defendant] took the oath²⁴ but afterwards admitted his liability it might have been presumed that he is liable,²⁵ hence It was explicitly stated in Scripture, And he deal falsely with his neighbour23 a matter of deposit, or of pledge, or of robbery, or have oppressed his neighbour; or have found that which was lost, and deal falsely therein, and swear to a lie,26 as these are distinguished by the characteristics of being civil cases so must all [other cases where similar liabilities27 may be incurred be distinguished by the characteristics] of being civil. These, therefore, are excluded [from liability]28 since they are penal.

(1) Unlike compensation. Which is not due to their father before the action had been tried and decided in his daughter's favour, these are his due from the moment they come into existence. As they are consequently his ‘actual property’ he is entitled to transmit them to his heirs.

(2) In our Mishnah.

(3) V. 39a for notes.

(4) This was not mentioned in the Mishnah cited.

(5) If then it is also obvious that the compensation is to be paid to her father what need was there for our Mishnah?

(6) The first Tanna (v. our Mishnah).

(7) To pay the actual amount due as well as an additional fifth (v. Lev. V, 24), and also to bring a guilt-offering.

(8) As the man would have been exempt from the penal liabilities if he had himself admitted the offence in the absence of any other evidence, he must also be exempt from all liabilities (v. supra note 6) in the case of a denial. For it was not a civil liability (mamon), but a penal liability (kenas) that he had denied.

(14) In confirmation of his denial.

(15) And he was ordered to pay.

(16) [Having been ordered to pay, he can no longer secure exemption by his own admission; his liability is now considered of the mamon class (Rashi)].

(17) Since it was originally penal.

(18) [Var. lec. add: ‘and he who confesses to a liability for a fine is exempt’. On this reading, Abaye's question was also whether his own admission, after the action had been tried, exempts him from payment; v. Tosaf.]

(19) [Car. lec. omit: ‘and he incurs . . . false oath’. In that case Rabbah's answer is given in general terms. He merely replied, ‘it is a civil liability’, which for the present is taken to mean that it is so both in respect of an obligation to an oath and to liability to payment; cf. n. 6, v. Tosaf.]

(20) Abaye.

(22) Lit., ‘his bondman said to him’.

(23) In compensation for which he demands his freedom (v. Ex. XXI, 26f). Such compensation is also deemed to be penal, because a slave was regarded as his master's chattels.

(24) In confirmation of his denial.

Talmud - Mas. Kethuboth 42b

Does not [this ruling refer to a man] whose action had already been tried?1 — No, [it deals] with one whose action had not yet been tried.2 But, surely, since the first clause deals with the case of a man whose action had been tried, would not the final clause also deal with such a case? For in the first clause it was stated: ‘I only knew [that liability3 is incurred in] cases where compensation is paid for the actual value only, whence, however, is it deduced that [such liability is also incurred in] cases where the payment is double,4 fourfold5 or fivefold6 and [in those of] the violator, the seducer and the calumniator. From Scripture which explicitly stated, And commit a trespass, [7] [implying that all such are included]. Now, how is this statement to be understood? If [it is one referring to] a man whose action had not yet been tried [the objection could be raised:] Is double compensation payable in such circumstances? [8] It is obvious, therefore, that [the reference is to one] whose action had already been tried. And since the first clause deals with one whose action had been tried, the final clause also must deal, must it not, with one whose action had already been tried? [9] — The other replied: I could have answered you that the first clause deals with one whose action had already been tried, and the final clause with one whose action had not yet been tried and that the entire Baraitha represents the view of R. Simeon, but I would not give you forced interpretations, for, were I to do so, you might retort: Then either the first clause should begin with ‘R. Simeon said’ or the final clause should conclude with ‘these are the words of R. Simeon’. [10] The fact, however, is that the entire [Baraitha] refers to one whose action had already been tried, the first clause being the view of the Rabbis and the final clause that of R. Simeon, and I must agree with you in regard to the sacrifice for [taking a false] oath, [11] for the All-Merciful has exempted him [12] [as may be deduced] from [the text] And he deal falsely. [13] When I, however, said, that ‘It is a civil liability’ [I was only implying that a man had the right] to transmit such a liability as an inheritance to his sons. [14] Again he [15] raised an objection against him. [16] R. SIMEON RULED, IF HER FATHER DIED BEFORE SHE COULD COLLECT [HER DUES] THEY BELONG TO HER. Now if you maintain [that such compensation] is a civil liability in respect of being transmitted as an inheritance to one’s sons, why should the compensation belong to her? Should it not, in fact, belong to the brothers? — This subject, said Raba, both Rabbah and R. Joseph found difficult for twenty-two years [17] and no solution was forthcoming. It was only when [18] R. Joseph assumed the presidency of the academy [19] that he solved it: There, it is different [from other penal liabilities] because Scripture said, Then the man that lay with her shall give unto the damsel's father fifty [shekels of] silver [21] [which implies that] the Torah has not conferred upon the father the right of possession before the money had actually been handed to him; when Rabbah, however, said, ‘It is a civil liability in respect of being transmitted as an inheritance to his sons’ he was referring to other penal liabilities. [22] But then, in the case of a bondman it is written in Scripture, He shall give into their master thirty shekels of silver, [23] would it here [24] also [be maintained that] the Torah has not conferred upon the master the right of possession before the money had actually been handed to him? — The yitten [25] cannot be compared [26] with we-nathan. [27] If so [28] [instead of deducing the exemption from sacrifice] from the Scriptural text, ‘And he deal falsely’, [29] should not the deduction rather be made from ‘Then . . . shall give’? [30] — Raba replied: The text of ‘And he deal falsely’ was required in a case, for instance, where the girl’s action had been tried and then she became adolescent [31] and died, in which case [32] when the father receives [the fine] he inherits [it] from her. [34] If so [35] [however, how could it be said:] ‘These, therefore, are excluded [from liability] since they are in fact penal’ when they are in fact [36] civil? — R. Nahman b. Isaac replied: [The meaning is], These are excluded since they were originally penal. He [37] pointed out to him [38] another objection: R. Simeon, however, exempts him, for no fine is paid on ones own admission. [39] The reason then [40] is because his action had not been tried [41] but if it had been tried, [42] in which case he does pay, [43] even on his own admission, [44] he would incur. also, would he not, [the obligation of bringing] a sacrifice for swearing [a false oath]? [45] — R. Simeon argues with the Rabbis on the lines of their own view. According to my own view [he argued] the All-Merciful has exempted the man [46] even after he had been tried [as may be deduced] from the text ‘And deal falsely’. [47] According to your view, however, you must at least admit that [the man is exempt] if he has not yet been tried, since the claim advanced against him is penal

(1) At one court where he was ordered to pay, and he now denies his liability before another court. As R. Simeon nevertheless exempts him from liability (cf. supra p. 236, n. 6), an objection arises against Rabbah.
(2) I.e., whose liability had not yet been legally established and the amount claimed is still ‘kenas’ and not ‘mamon’.
(3) V. Supra p. 236. n. 6.
(4) V., Ex. XXII, 3.
(5) Ibid. XXI, 37.
Lit., ‘who brought out an evil name’ (V. Deut. XXII, 19).

Lev. V, 21, a general statement preceding the details enumerated in the following verses.

certainly not. For, in the first instance, there is no proof that the mail had stolen the object and, secondly, even if he had stolen it he might yet make his own confession and thereby obtain exemption from the double payment.

V. supra note 4.

Why then did R. Simeon's name appear at the beginning of the final clause, thus indicating that only that, and not the first clause represented his view?

That according to R. Simeon he is not liable to bring his sacrifice even if his action had already been tried.

Even if his action had been previously tried.

Lev. V, 22 (cf. supra p. 238, n. 1 and text).

[And much more so in regard to liability to payment on self admission, cf. p. 237 n. 7, v. Shittah Mekubbezeth]. In this respect only is it deemed to be civil if the father died after the action had been tried, though the collection of the sum had not yet been effected.

Abaye.

Rabbah.

I.e., during all the period Rabbah occupied the presidency of the academy at Pumbeditha (cf. Ber. 64a and Hor. 14a).

After the death of Rabbah.

Cf. supra n. 8.

The case of a fine for seduction or violation spoken of in our Mishnah.

Deut. XXII, 29 emphasis on ‘give’.

[ Cf. supra 237, n. 4). The whole passage is extremely difficult. Commentators explain that Rabbah had it on tradition that a penal liability becomes civil in respect of inheritance after action had been taken, and the whole discussion was to elucidate exactly the implications of this vague tradition; v. Tosaf. 42a, s.v. רדס].

Ex. XXI, 32.

Since the verb ‘to give’ was used.

which is used in Ex. XXI, 32.

Lit., alone’, ‘is in a separate category’.

(Perfect with waw consec.). The former indicates merely future action while the latter implies the pluperfect, ‘he shall have given’.

That deduction may be made from Deut. XXII, 29 to the effect that the fines of a violator and a seducer have a different legal status from that of other fines in that they remain penal even after the offender had been tried.

Cf. supra p. 238, n. 1 and text.

While the text beginning ‘And deal falsely’ (Lev. V. 21) excludes only those liabilities which were originally penal but are not so now after the court had issued its ruling (v. supra 42a, ad fin.), the text of Then . . . shall give (Deut. XXII, 29) deals specifically with the fines of a violator and a seducer, laying down that so long as no collection of the fines had been effected, they remain penal even after the court had issued its ruling (v. Rashi and cf. Tosaf. a.l., s.v. רדס). [Although the verse ‘And deal falsely’ is necessary for other penal liabilities, the fine of a violator should not have been included seeing that it belongs to a class by itself as is deduced from ‘Then . . . shall give’, v. Shittah Mekubbezeth].

A bagereth. When the fine, according to R. Simeon (cf. supra p. 235. n. 11, and text), belongs to her.

Lit., ‘for there’.

Lit., ‘inherits’.

And as far as he is concerned the liability, the payment of which had been ordered by the court, is no longer penal but civil. Hence the necessity for the text of ‘And he deal falsely’ to indicate that the defendant is nevertheless exempt from a sacrifice (cf. Tosaf. s.v. רדס) because originally the liability was penal (v. Rashi).

That the Baraita (supra 42a) deals with a case where the action had already been tried and that the father inherits the fine from his daughter.

Cf. supra n. 8.

Mishnah cited supra 42a.
Why the offender is exempt.

Previously, before a court. For if it had been tried he could not subsequently make a voluntary admission that would exempt him.

By the first court, and he was ordered to pay.

On the ruling of the second court.

The money involved being no longer penal but (on account of the ruling of the first court) civil.

Though the sum involved was originally penal. A contradiction thus arises between this Mishnah and the Baraithas both of which speak in the name of R. Simeon.

From the sacrifice for a false oath.

Talmud - Mas. Kethuboth 43a

and one who makes a voluntary admission in a penal case is exempt.\(^1\) But the Rabbis are of the opinion that the claim\(^2\) is [mainly] in respect of compensation for indignity and blemish.\(^3\) On what principle do they\(^4\) differ? — R. Papa replied: R. Simeon is of the opinion that a man would not leave that which is fixed\(^5\) to claim\(^6\) that which is not fixed,\(^7\) while the Rabbis hold the view that no man would leave a claim\(^8\) from which [the defendant] could not be exempt even if he made a voluntary admission\(^8\) and advance a claim\(^9\) from which he would be exempt\(^10\) if he made a voluntary admission. R. Abina enquired of R. Shesheth: To whom belongs the handiwork of a daughter who\(^11\) is maintained\(^12\) by her brothers?\(^13\) Are they\(^14\) in loco parentis and as in that case her handiwork belongs to her father so here also it belongs to her brothers; or [is it more reasonable that] they should not be compared to their father, for in his case she is maintained out of his own estate but here she is not maintained out of their estate?\(^15\) — He replied: You have learned about such a case: A widow is to be maintained out of the estate of [her deceased husband's] orphans, and her handiwork belongs to them.\(^16\) [But] are [the two cases in every way] alike? It may not be any satisfaction to a man that his widow should be liberally provided for,\(^17\) but he might well be pleased, might he not, that his daughter should?\(^18\) Does this\(^19\) imply that a man has preference for his daughter than for his widow? Surely. R. Abba said in the name of R. Jose:\(^20\) The relationship between\(^21\) a widow and her daughter, in the case of a small estate,\(^22\) has been put on the same level as that of the relationship between\(^23\) a daughter and her brothers. As in the case of the relationship between a daughter and her brothers, the daughter is maintained\(^23\) while the brothers can go begging at [people's] doors, so also in the case of the relationship between a widow and her daughter, the widow is maintained and the daughter can go begging at [people's] doors;\(^24\) [which shews, does it not, that the widow is given preference]? — As regards [provision against] degradation\(^25\) a man gives preference to his widow;\(^26\) as regards liberal provision\(^27\) he gives preference to his daughter.\(^28\) R. Joseph objected: HER HANDIWORK, HOWEVER, AND ANYTHING SHE FINDS, EVEN IF SHE HAS NOT COLLECTED [THE PROCEEDS], BELONG TO HER BROTHERS IF HER FATHER DIED. The reason\(^29\) then is\(^30\) that [they originated during] the lifetime of their father, but [if they originated] after his death [they would belong] to herself. Does not [this refer to a daughter] who is maintained?\(^31\) — No; [this is a case of one] who is not maintained.\(^32\) If she is not maintained, what need is there to state [such a case]?\(^33\) For even according to him who ruled that a master is entitled to say to his bondman, ‘Work for me and I will not maintain you’\(^34\) the ruling applies only to a Canaanite bondman concerning whom ‘With thee’ was not written in Scripture, but not to a Hebrew slave concerning whom with thee\(^35\) was written in Scripture. How much less [then would such a ruling apply] to one's daughter? — Rabbah b. Ulla replied: It\(^36\) was only required in the case of a surplus.\(^37\) Said Raba: Did not such a great man as R. Joseph know that [sometimes there may] be a surplus when he raised his objection?\(^38\) The fact however is, Raba explained, that R. Joseph raised his objection from our very Mishnah. For it was stated, HER HANDIWORK, HOWEVER, AND ANYTHING SHE FINDS, EVEN IF SHE HAS NOT COLLECTED [THE PROCEEDS]; but from whom [it may be asked] is she to collect anything she finds? Consequently it must be conceded that it is this that was meant: HER HANDIWORK is like ANYTHING SHE FINDS; as anything she finds belongs to her father\textsuperscript{39} [if she finds it] during his lifetime, and to herself [if she finds it] after his death\textsuperscript{40} so also in the case of her handiwork, [if it was done] during the lifetime of her father it belongs to her father [but if it was done] after his death it belongs to herself. Thus it may be concluded [that the ruling of R. Shesheth stands refuted].\textsuperscript{41} So it was also stated:\textsuperscript{42} Rab Judah ruled in the name of Rab, The handiwork of a daughter who is maintained by her brothers belongs to herself. Said R. Kahana: What is the reason? Because it is written in Scripture And ye make them an inheritance for your children after you,\textsuperscript{43} [implying]: ‘them’\textsuperscript{44} [you may make an inheritance] ‘for your children’, but not your daughters for your children. This tells us that a man may not transmit his authority\textsuperscript{45} over his daughter to his son.

To this Rabbah demurred: It might be suggested that the Scriptural text\textsuperscript{46} speaks of [payments in connection with] the seduction of one's daughter, fines and mayhem!\textsuperscript{47} And so did R. Hanina learn: The Scriptural text\textsuperscript{48} speaks of [payments in connection with] the seduction of one's daughter, fines and mayhem!\textsuperscript{49} Is not mayhem injury involving bodily pain?\textsuperscript{50} — R. Jose b. Hanina replied:

(38) Of course he knew and, therefore, he could not possibly have raised an objection in the form attributed to him.

(39) In return for her board. A father is under no legal obligation to maintain his daughter (v. infra 49a) and it was, therefore, enacted that in recognition of his consideration for her all she finds shall belong to him (v. B.M. 12b).

Talmud - Mas. Kethuboth 43b

The wound [may be supposed to] have been made in her face.² Rab Zera stated in the name of R. Mattena who had it from Rab: (others assert [that it was] Rabbi Zera who stated in the name of R. Mattena who had it from Rab): The handiwork of a daughter who is maintained by her brothers belongs to herself, for it is written in Scripture, And ye make them an inheritance for your children after you⁴ [implying]: ‘Them’⁴ [you may make an inheritance] ‘for your children’, but not your daughters for your children. This tells us that a man may not transmit his authority over his daughter to his son.⁵ Said Abimi b. Papi to him: Shakud⁶ made this statement.⁷ Who is Shakud? — Samuel. But, surely, was it not Rab who made this statement? — Read: Shakud also made this statement. Mar the son of Amemar said to R. Ashi, Thus the Nehardeans have laid down: The law is in agreement with the ruling of R. Shesheth.⁸ R. Ashi [however] said: The law is in agreement with Rab.⁹ And the law is to be decided in agreement with the view of Rab. MISHNAH. IF A MAN GAVE HIS DAUGHTER IN BETROTHAL AND SHE WAS DIVORCED, [AND THEN] HE GAVE HER [AGAIN] IN BETROTHAL AND SHE WAS DIVORCED, HER KETHUBAH BELONGS TO HIM.¹² IF HE GAVE HER IN MARRIAGE AND SHE WAS DIVORCED [AND THEN] HE GAVE HER [AGAIN] IN MARRIAGE AND SHE WAS LEFT A WIDOW, HER KETHUBAH BELONGS TO HER.¹⁴ R. JUDAH SAID: THE FIRST BELONGS TO HER FATHER.¹⁶ THEY,¹⁷ HOWEVER, SAID TO HIM: HER FATHER, AS SOON AS HE GIVES HER IN MARRIAGE, LOSES ALL CONTROL OVER HER.¹⁹ GEMARA. The reason is that when HE GAVE HER IN MARRIAGE [the first time] SHE WAS DIVORCED [and that when] HE GAVE HER [AGAIN] IN MARRIAGE, SHE WAS LEFT A WIDOW [for the first time].²² but if she had been left a widow twice she would not have been fit to marry again. The Tanna has thus indirectly laid down an anonymous ruling in agreement with Rabbi who holds that if [a thing has happened] twice presumption is established.²⁵ R. JUDAH SAID: THE FIRST BELONGS TO HER FATHER. What is R. Judah's reason? — Both Rabbah and R. Joseph explained: Since her father has acquired the right to it at the time of the betrothal.²⁷ Raba objected: ‘R. Judah ruled that the first belonged to her father; R. Judah nevertheless admitted that if a father gave his daughter in betrothal while she was still a minor and she married after she had attained adolescence he has no authority over her'.

But why? Might it not here also be argued, ‘Since her father has acquired the right to it at the time of the betrothal’? The fact, however, is that if any statement [in the nature mentioned] has at all been made it must have been made in the following terms: Both Rabbah and R. Joseph explained: Because it was written while she was still under his authority. As to the recovery [of a kethubah], from which date may distraint be effected? — R. Huna replied: The hundred or the two hundred from the date of the betrothal and the additional jointure from that of the marriage. R. Assi, however, replied: The former as well as the latter [may be distrained upon only] from the date of the marriage. But could R. Huna, however, have given such a ruling? Has it not been stated: If a wife produced against her husband two kethuboth, one for two hundred, and one for three hundred zuz, she may, said R. Huna, distraint from the earlier date if she wishes to collect the two hundred zuz [but if she desires to collect the] three hundred zuz she may distraint from the later date only. Now if the ruling were as stated she should be entitled, should she not, to distraint to the extent of two hundred zuz from the earlier date and to that of one hundred from the later date? — But [even] according to your conception [it might equally be objected why] should she [not] distraint for all the five hundred, two hundred from the earlier date and three hundred from the later date? What then is the reason why she cannot distraint for all the five hundred? [Obviously this:] Since the man did not write in her favour, ‘I willingly added to your credit three hundred zuz to the two hundred’ he must have meant to imply: ‘If you desired to distraint from the earlier date you would recover [no more than] two hundred, and if you desired to distraint from the later date you would receive three hundred’.

(1) As an exposed wound decreases her value, compensation is due to her father, since it is he who suffers the loss. (2) Zera traveled from Babylon to Palestine where he was ordained by R. Johanan and had the title of Rabbi conferred upon him. His former title was only Rab. The following statement was made by him, according to the first reading, before, and according to the second reading after his ordination. (3) Lev. XXV, 46. (4) Canaanite bondmen. (5) Cf. supra p. 244, n. 11. (6) לְכַשָּׁר ‘careful speaker’ (cf. Rashi a.1.), ‘industrious scholar’ (Jast.) ‘studious’ (Aruk). (7) The ruling and deduction reported by R. Zera. (8) V. supra p. 242, n. 12 and text. (9) In opposition to R. Shesheth. (10) While she was a minor or a na'arah (V. Glos.). (11) Of the second, as well as that of the first betrothal. (12) Because the income of a daughter under the state of bogereth (V. Glos.) belongs to her father. (13) Whether of the first or the second marriage. (14) Because a father's control over his daughter, even if she is a minor, ceases as soon as he gives her in marriage; and since the collection of a kethubah, though not its writing, must always follow the marriage the amount collected is the rightful possession of the daughter. (15) Sc. the kethubah of the first marriage. (16) The reason is stated infra. (17) The Rabbis who differed from his view. (18) Cur. edd. insert in parentheses, ‘if’. (19) Hence it is she who is entitled to receive her kethubah. (20) The interpretation of this passage is difficult and that of Rashi is here adopted (v. Tosaf. s.v. סְלָכָה). (21) For the illustration in the second clause of the Mishnah. (22) So that it is possible for her to remarry a third time. (23) Instead of having been divorced. (24) Of our Mishnah by avoiding any unhappy illustration in which the woman cannot marry again. (25) If a woman, for instance, was widowed twice she is deemed to be a dangerous companion to men, and is, therefore, forbidden to marry again (v. Yeb. 64b).
Lit., ‘them’. The plural referring generally to the two respective amounts of the statutory kethubah, two hundred so for a virgin and one hundred for a widow or divorcee (v. Rashi, s.v. קנתה).

When the daughter was still under her father's authority. In the case (if the second kethubah, however, which is subsequent to the first marriage R. Judah agrees, of course, with the Rabbis.

Cf supra p. 246, n. 8.

Sc. the kethubah belongs to herself and not to her father.

That the kethubah should being to the father (cf supra n. 5).

Since such argument, however, was not used the statement attributed above to Rabbah and R. Joseph cannot be authentic.

Lit., ‘but if it was said, it was said thus’.

The kethubah for the first marriage. On the use of the pl. קנתה cf. supra n. 2. [Although the liability in regard to the kethubah began at betrothal, it was not reduced to writing till nuptials proper; cf. Rashi. For other interpretations v. Asheri].

Unlike the Rabbis who were guided by the time of the collection (cf. supra p. 246, n. 7) R. Judah holds that the date of the writing of the kethubah is the determining factor. Hence his ruling in our Mishnah (where the writing took place while the daughter was in her minority) that the kethubah is the father's property. In the Baraitha cited, however, (where the writing took place when the daughter was already adolescent, i.e., shortly before her marriage) the kethubah rightly belongs no longer to her father but to herself.

From property sold between the date of the betrothal and that on which the kethubah was written.

I.e., does the right of distraint begin on the date of the betrothal (when the man becomes Rabbinically liable for the kethubah) or (as in the case just dealt with) on the date the kethubah was written? (V. Rashi. Cf., however, Tosaf s.v. קנתה).

For a widow or a divorcee.

In the case of a virgin.

Since these amounts are statutory liabilities applicable to all.

Which differs according to individual arrangements, v. infra.

When the kethubah is written and formal acquisition (kinyan v. Glos.) is effected.

Having accepted the written kethubah that bore the later date on which her marriage took place the woman is assumed to have surrendered her rights to the statutory amount, which she had acquired earlier on betrothal, in favour of her new advantages as well as any disadvantages that were conferred by the written document.

Lit., ‘did H. Huna say so’? That the earlier obligation (statutory kethubah) is recoverable from the earlier date (betrothal). and the latter one (additional jointure) from the later date (marriage).

V. supra note 8. Lit., ‘there is’.

In her second kethubah.

Talmud - Mas. Kethuboth 44a

Here also [it may similarly be said:] This is the reason why she cannot distraint [for the additional jointure from the earlier date]: Since he did not write in her favour, ‘I have added a hundred zuz to the two hundred’ she [having accepted the deed] must have renounced her former lien. The Master has laid down that if she wishes she may distrain with the earlier kethubahs and if she prefers she may distrain with the later one. Is it then to be assumed [that this ruling] differs from that of R. Nahman who laid down that if two deeds were issued one after the other the latter cancels the former? — [No, for] has it not been stated in connection with this statement that R. Papa said: R. Nahman nevertheless admits that if the man has added one palm the insertion was intended as an additional privilege? And here also, Surely, [the husband] has added something. [To turn to] the original text. R. Nahman laid down that if two deeds were issued one after the other the latter cancels the former. Said R. Papa: R. Nahman nevertheless admits that if the man has added one palm the insertion was intended as an additional privilege. It is obvious [that the reason why both deeds are valid where] the first [was a deed] of sale and the second [a deed] of gift [is because the action of the owner] was intended to improve the other's rights, as a safeguard against the law of pre-emption, and much more [is this obvious where] the first was for a gift and the second for a sale, for it may then be presumed that the latter was written in that manner in order to safeguard the other against a creditor's rights. What, however, is the reason why the second cancels the first where both deeds were for a sale or both for a gift? — Rafram replied: Because it might be presumed that the holder of the deeds has surrendered his security of tenure. What is the practical issue between them? — R. Aha replied: Because it might be presumed that the holder of the deeds has admitted to the other the invalidity of the first deed. The disqualification of the witnesses, payment of compensation for unsufruct and land tax. What is the decision in respect of the kethubah? — Come and hear what Rab Judah laid down in the name of Samuel who had it from R. Eleazar the son of R. Simeon: The statutory kethubah of a maneh or two hundred zuz [may be distrained for] from [the date of] the betrothal but the additional jointure only from the date of the marriage. The Sages, however, ruled: The one as well as the other [may be distrained for only] from the date of the marriage. The law is that the one as well as the other [may be distrained only] from the date of the marriage. The daughter of a proselyte woman who became a proselyte together with her mother and then played the harlot is subject to the penalty of strangulation, but not to [stoning at] the door of her father's house. If she was conceived in unholliness but her birth was in holiness, she is subject to the penalty of stoning but not to [that of bringing her out to ‘the door of her father's house’, nor does her husband pay the] hundred sela’. If she was conceived in unholliness but her birth was in holiness, she is subject to the penalty of stoning but not to [that of bringing her out to ‘the door of her father's house’, nor does her husband pay the] hundred sela’. If she was both conceived and born in holiness, she is regarded as a daughter of Israel in all respects. One who had a father but no door of her father's house, or a 'door of her father's house' but no father, is nevertheless subject to the penalty of stoning [for the regulation, ‘to the door of her father's house’, or a ‘door of her father's house’ but no father, is nevertheless subject to the penalty of stoning, [for the regulation, ‘to the door of her father's house’, but not to that of bringing her out to the door of her father's house', nor does her husband pay the] hundred sela'. If she was both conceived and born in holiness, she is regarded as a daughter of Israel in all respects. One who had a father but no door of her father's house', or a 'door of her father's house' but no father, is nevertheless subject to the penalty [of stoning, [for the regulation, ‘to the door of her father's house’, but not to that of bringing her out to the door of her father's house'], nor does her husband pay the] hundred sela'. If she was both conceived and born in holiness, she is regarded as a daughter of Israel in all respects. Another hundred zuz. Which was cited in the discussion just concluded. And related to the same transaction and the same persons. And the right to distrain begins with the second date. Were R. Nahman's ruling to be applied to the case spoken of by R. Huna, would not the second kethubah have cancelled the first and the woman would have had no choice in the matter? Another hundred zuz. Which was cited in the discussion just concluded. And related to the same transaction and the same persons as the first one. Lit., ‘he intended when he wrote for him’. Even though no material addition was made to the original sale. Lit., on account of'. In virtue of which the next abutting neighbour can insist on exercising the right of first purchase. This right applies to a sale but not to a gift.
Pre-emption.

(19) The reason for the validity of both deeds.

(20) Only a buyer may claim compensation from the original owner if a creditor of that owner had distrained upon the land he bought. A donee has no such right. By the writing of the second deed the owner has conferred upon the donee the additional rights of a buyer.

(21) Lit., ‘both of them’.

(22) And willingly accepted the second though his rights of distraint were thereby restricted to the later date.

(23) During the period intervening between the date of the first, and that of the second deed.

(24) Rafram and R. Aha.

(25) According to Rafram the witnesses, since they put their signatures to an invalid document, must be regarded as legally unfit for further evidence. (So Rashi. Tosaf., however, s.v. נ琇, object to this view and (a) restrict the disqualification of the witnesses in respect of such a deed only as is held by the man who had cast aspersion on their characters or (b) apply the disqualification to the signatures). According to R. Aha, who does not question the authenticity of the deed, the character of the witnesses is not in any way affected.

(26) Which the holder of the deeds enjoyed between the first and the second date. According to Rafram, the holder of the deeds must pay such compensation since the first deed is presumed to be invalid. According to R Aha no such compensation is paid since the holder of the deeds renounced only his security of tenure but not his unsufruct.

(27) The original owner must pay it according to Rafram and the holder of the deeds according to R. Aha.

(28) I.e., ‘from which date may distraint be effected?’ (V. p. 247, n. 11 and 248, n. 1).

(29) Var. lec. ‘Eliezer b. Shamma’ (Bomb. ed.).

(30) V. Glos.

(31) The respective amounts due (a) to a widow or divorcée, and (b) to a virgin.

(32) Lit., ‘the female proselyte whose daughter became a proselyte with her’.

(33) Having become betrothed while she was still a na’arah (v. Glos).

(34) Lit., ‘behold this’.

(35) The penalty prescribed for a faithless married woman.

(36) Lit., ‘she has not either’.

(37) Prescribed in Deut. XXII, 21 for a betrothed Israelite damsel (na’arah) who played the harlot.

(38) Due from a man who wrongfully accused his wife (v. Deut. XXII, 19). [Nor is he flagellated, the fine and the flogging being prescribed in juxtaposition to one another (Ritba)].

(39) Sc. while her mother was still a heathen.

(40) After her mother’s conversion.

(41) She is subject to the penalties and entitled to the privilege as prescribed in Deut. XXII. 19, 21.

(42) Any daughter of Israel (Rashi) who played the harlot while she was a betrothed na’arah.

(43) When her father, for instance, had no house.

(44) Lit., ‘behold this’.

(45) v. supra note I.

(47) Not as an indispensable part of the penalty.

Talmud - Mas. Kethuboth 44b

GEMARA. Whence is this deduced? — Resh Lakish replied: Since Scripture said, That she die it included also her who WAS CONCEIVED IN UNHOLINESS BUT HER BIRTH WAS IN HOLINESS: If so, [should not her wrongful accuser] also be flogged and [condemned] to pay the hundred sela? Scripture stated, That she die implying that she] was included in respect of death but not in respect of the fine. Might it not be suggested [that Scripture intended] to include one who was both conceived and born in holiness? — Such a person is a proper Israelite woman. But can it not be said that [Scripture intended] to include one conceived and born in unholiness? — If this were so what purpose would be served by the expression, ‘In Israel’? R. Jose b. Hanina ruled: A man who brought an evil name upon an orphan girl is exempt, for it is said in Scripture, And give them unto the father of the damsel, Which excludes this girl who has no ‘father’. R. Jose b. Abin, or it... might be said, R. Jose b. Zebida, raised an objection: If her father utterly refuse to include an orphan girl in respect of the fine; so R. Jose the Galilean. Why then should the orphan in this case be excluded? — He raised the objection and he himself supplied the answer: [This is a case of a girl] who became an orphan after the man had intercourse with her. Rabbah ruled: He is guilty. Whence [did he infer this]? — From that which Ammi taught: A virgin of Israel, but not a proselyte virgin. Now if you assume that in a case of this nature guilt is incurred, one can well see why it was necessary for a Scriptural text to exclude proselytes. If you, however, assume that in a case of this nature in Israel [the offender] is exempt [the difficulty would arise:] Now [that we know that the offender] is exempt [even if he sinned] against Israelites was it any longer necessary [to mention exemption if the offence was] against proselytes? Resh Lakish ruled: A man who has brought an evil name upon a minor is exempt, for it is said in Scripture, And give them unto the father of the damsel; Scripture expressed the term na'arah as plenum. To this R. Aha b. Abba demurred: Is the reason then because in this case ‘the na'arah was written [in Scripture], but otherwise it would have been said that even a minor [was included], surely, [it may be objected] it is written in Scripture, But if the things be true, and the tokens of virginity be not found in the damsel, then they shall bring out the damsel to the door of her father's house and [the men of the city] shall stone her, while a minor is not, is she, subject to punishment? — [The explanation,] however, [is that, since] na'arah has been written here [it may be inferred that only where na'arah is used is a minor excluded] but wherever Scripture uses the expression na'arah even a minor is included. Shila taught: There are three modes of execution in the case of a [betrothed] damsel [who played the harlot]. If witnesses appeared against her in the house of her father-in-law testifying that she had played the harlot in her father's house.

XXII, 28) and vice versa, and though in the latter case Scripture specifically stated that the fine is payable to the damsel's father (ibid. 29), an orphan is nevertheless entitled to the fine.

(25) Sc. an Israelite girl who is fatherless.

she is stoned at the door of her father's house,¹ as if to say,² ‘See the plant that you have reared’. If witnesses came [to testify] against her in her father's house that she played the harlot in his house she is stoned at the entrance of the gate of the city. If having committed the offence³ she eventually⁴ attained adolescence⁵ she is condemned to strangulation.⁶ This⁷ then implies that wherever there occurred a change in one's person, one's mode of execution also must be changed. But is not this contradicted by the following: 'If a betrothed damsel⁸ played the harlot and [her husband] brought upon her an evil name after she had attained adolescence,¹⁰ he is neither to be flogged¹¹ nor is he to pay the hundred sela',¹² but she and the witnesses who testified falsely against her¹³ are hurried¹⁴ to the place of stoning'?¹⁵ ‘She and the witnesses who testified falsely against her'! Can this be imagined?¹⁶ — But [this is the meaning:] ‘She¹⁷ or her witnesses¹⁹ are hurried¹⁴ to the place of stoning'?²⁰ — Raba replied: You speak [of the law relating to a husband] who brought up an evil name; but this law is different [from the others],²¹ because it is an anomaly.²² For, elsewhere, if a girl²³ entered the bridal chamber,²⁴ though no intercourse followed, she is condemned to strangulation if she committed adultery, but [a woman upon whom a husband] brought an evil name is condemned to Stoning.²⁵ Said R. Huna the son of R. Joshua to Raba: Is it not possible that the All-Merciful created the anomaly only where no constitutional change had taken place,²⁶ but where a constitutional change had occurred²⁷ the All-Merciful has created no anomaly?²⁸ — The fact however is, explained R. Nahman b. Isaac, [that the question whether a change in status] involves, or does not involve a change [in the penalty] is [a point in dispute between] Tannaim. For we have learned: If they²⁹ committed a sin before they were appointed [to their respective offices] and [then] were appointed, they are regarded³⁰ as laymen. R. Simeon ruled: If their sin came to their knowledge before they were appointed³¹ they are liable,³² but if after they were appointed³³ they are exempt.³⁴

Before her trial.

The penalty prescribed for adults. Only a na'arah (v. Glos.) is subject to the penalty of stoning.

R. Shila's last mentioned ruling that the penalty of a na'arah who attained majority is changed from stoning to strangulation.

V. p. 254, n. 20.

Sc. when their marriage took place (Rashi).

a structure twice a man's height (i.e. six cubits) from which the condemned man was thrown before he was stoned (v. Sanh. 453 [Sone. ed.] p. 295).

Obviously not. If she is condemned they must be true witnesses, and if they are condemned she must be innocent.

If she was found guilty.

The contradiction pointed out (v. supra note 1). (The penalty of a na'arah is stoning and that of one who is in her adolescence is only strangulation).

Such as the law of Shila which deals with an accusation by witnesses and not with an evil name brought by a husband.

Lit., ‘novelty’, and no comparison with, or inference from an anomalous law may be made.

Even a na'arah (v. Glos. and cf. infra 48b).

Huppah (v. Glos.).

[Although had she committed the offence at the time of the defamation, i.e., after marriage, she would be strangled. This proves that in the case where the husband himself, and not witnesses, brings a charge, after marriage, of infidelity having taken place during betrothal, we do not apply the principle that the intervening change in the woman's status effects retrospectively a change in the penalty. And it is the exception which the law makes in this case which proves the general rule to the contrary elsewhere, v. Tosaf.].

As in the case just cited where the change affects only her status — from betrothal to marriage.

i.e., when the girl had attained her adolescence as In the case spoken of by Shila.

The contradiction pointed out (v. supra p. 255, notes 1 and 14) would consequently arise again.

A High Priest and a ruler whose sin-offerings differ from those of laymen. The former's offering being a bullock (Lev., IV, 3) the latter's a he-goat (ibid. 23) while that of a layman is a she-goat (ibid. 28) or a lamb (ibid. 32).

In respect of their sin-offerings.

So that both the commission of the sin and their awareness of it occurred while they were in the same status as laymen.

To bring sin-offerings as prescribed for laymen (v. supra note 4).

So that their sin was committed while they were still laymen and subject to one kind of offering, and their awareness set in when, as a ruler or High Priest, another kind of offering was due.

Completely; on account of the change in their status (Hor. 10a). Consequently it may be assumed that the first Tanna who holds that a change in status does not involve a change of offering, maintains also that a change in the person involves no change of penalty, while R. Simeon who maintains that a change of status removes the obligation of an offering, will hold all the more so that a change in the person removes a man's liability to his former penalty and thus subjects him to the penalty appropriate to his new condition, and thus Shila's teaching will be in accordance with R. Simeon.

Talmud - Mas. Kethuboth 45b
[But] is it not to be maintained that R. Simeon was heard to be guided by [the time of] the awareness also, did you, how ever, hear that he Was guided by [the time of] awareness alone and not also by that of the commission of sin? For were that so, should they not have brought an offering in accordance with their present status, the High Priest a bullock, and the ruler a he-goat? — Surely R. Johanan said to the Tanna: Read, ‘She is to be condemned to ston ing.’ But why? Did not the All-Merciful speak of a betrothed ‘damsel’ and this one is adolescent? — R. Elai replied: Scripture said, the damsel [implying] her who was a damsel before. Said R. Hanania to R. Elai: If so, should not [the husband] also be flogged and pay the hundred sela’? — ‘May the All-Merciful’, the other replied, ‘save us from such an opinion’. ‘On the contrary [the first retorted], may the All-Merciful save us from such an opinion as yours’. What, however, is the reason? — R. Isaac b. Abin, or, as some say, R. Isaac b. Abba, replied: In her case it was her behaviour that brought about her [punishment] but in his case it was the inclination of his lips that brought about his [penalties]. ‘In her case it was her behaviour that brought about her [punishment]’ and when she played the harlot she was still a na’arah. ‘But in his case it was the inclination of his lips that brought about his [penalty]’; and when does he incur his guilt? Obviously at that time, and at that time she Was already adolescent. Our Rabbis taught: A betrothed damsel who played the harlot is to be stoned at ‘the door of her father’s house’. If she had no ‘door of her father’s house’ she is stoned at the entrance of the gate of that city. But in a town which is mostly inhabited by idolaters she is stoned at the door of the court. Similarly you may say: A man who worships idols is to be stoned at the gate [of the city] where he worshipped, and in a city the majority of whose inhabitants are idolaters he is stoned at the door of the court. Whence are these rulings derived? — From what our Rabbis have taught: [By the expression] thy gates was meant the gate [of the city] wherein the man has worshipped. You say, ‘The gate [of the city] wherein the man has worshipped’, might it not mean the gate where he is tried? — [Since the expression] ‘thy gates’, has not a deduction already been drawn from it? — If [the purpose of the expression were only] this deduction Scripture would have used the expression ‘gate’; why thy gates? Both deductions may, therefore, be made. Thus we obtain [rulings in respect of] idolatry, whence do we [derive the law in respect of] a betrothed girl? R. Abbahu replied: ‘Door’ is inferred from ‘door’, and door from gate. Our Rabbis taught: A husband who brings up an evil name upon his wife is stoned at the gate of the court. Similarly you may say: A man who worships idols is to be stoned at the gate [of the city] where he worshipped. Another interpretation: ‘Thy gates’, but not the gates of idolaters. [As to] that [expression of] ‘thy gates’, has not a deduction already been drawn from it? — If [the purpose of the expression were only] this deduction Scripture would have used the expression ‘gate’; why thy gates? Both deductions may, therefore, be made. Thus we obtain [rulings in respect of] idolatry, whence do we [derive the law in respect of] a betrothed girl? R. Abbahu replied: ‘Door’ is inferred from ‘door’, and door from ‘gate’. Our Rabbis taught: A husband who brings up an evil name upon his wife is flogged and he must also pay a hundred sela’. R. Judah ruled: As to flogging, [the husband is] flogged in all circumstances; as to the hundred sela’, however, where he had intercourse with her he pays them but if he did not have intercourse with her he does not pay. They differ on the same principles as those on which R. Eliezer b. Jacob and the Rabbis differed, and it is this that [each of the former group] meant: [A husband] who brought an evil name [upon his wife] is flogged and he must also pay a hundred sela’, whether he had intercourse, or did not have intercourse with her, [this being] in agreement with the Rabbis. R. Judah ruled: As to flogging [the husband is] flogged in all circumstances; as to the hundred sela’, however, where he had intercourse with her he pays them but if he did not have intercourse with her he does not pay; in agreement with R. Eliezer b. Jacob. Another reading. All the statement is in agreement with the opinion of R. Eliezer b. Jacob and it is this that [each of the former group] meant: [A husband] who brought an evil name [upon his wife] is flogged and he must also pay the hundred sela’ only where he had intercourse with her. R. Judah ruled: As to flogging, [the husband is] flogged in all circumstances. Can R. Judah, however, maintain that ‘as to flogging, [the husband is] flogged in all circumstances’ when it was taught: R. Judah ruled, If he had intercourse he is flogged but if he did not have intercourse he is not flogged? — R. Nahman b. Isaac replied: [By the ruling of R. Judah that the husband] ‘is flogged’ [was meant] chastisement which is a Rabbinical penalty. committed his sin. If his liability to that offering is to be established he must have the same status when he becomes aware of his sin. It is on this account, and not because a change of status involves a change of penalty, that R. Simeon exempts a man from an offering where he became aware of his sin after he had assumed a new status.

(2) That a change of status involves a man in the offering or penalty of his new condition, in agreement with Shila's ruling, irrespective of that man's former status in which his sin was committed.

(37) Door of the gate of the court פָּקַד הַמֶּרֶד (Num. IV, 26).

(38) V. supra n. 5. Since both nouns (རָכִּית) 'door', and (ןֶּמֶרֶד) 'gate' are placed in juxtaposition, the analogy may be made: As 'door' (རָכִּית) in this text is near 'gate' (ןֶּמֶרֶד) so is 'door' in Deut. XXII, 21 (v. supra n. 4) to be regarded as occurring near 'gate'. Hence the ruling that if the girl has no 'door of her father's house' she is to be stoned at the 'gate' of the city.

(39) Deut. XVII, 5, which deals with idolatry; the analogy being: As in the case of idolatry so also in that of a betrothed girl the execution takes place at the gate of the court wherever the city is inhabited by a majority of idolaters.

(44) The Rabbis and R. Judah.
R. Papa replied: By the expression\(^1\) If he had intercourse he is flogged\(^2\),\(^3\) which was used there,\(^4\) the monetary fine\(^5\) was meant.\(^6\) But could one describe a monetary fine as ‘flogging’? — Yes, and so indeed we have learned: If a man said, ‘I will pay half of my valuation’\(^7\) he must pay half of his valuation. R. Jose the son of R. Judah ruled: He is flogged\(^8\) and must pay his full valuation. [And in reply to the question] why should he be flogged? R. Papa explained: He is ‘flogged’ by [having to] pay his\(^9\) full valuation.\(^9\) What is the reason?\(^10\) — [The ruling\(^10\) in the case of a vow for] a half of one's valuation\(^9\) is a preventive measure against the possibility [of a vow for] the value of half of one's body,\(^12\) such a half\(^13\) being an organic part\(^14\) on which one's life depends.\(^15\) Our Rabbis taught: And they shall fine him\(^16\) refers to\(^17\) a monetary fine; And chastise him\(^18\) refers to\(^17\) flogging. One can readily understand why ‘And they shall fine’ refers to a monetary payment since it is written, ‘And they shall fine him a hundred shekels of silver and give them unto the father of the damsel’,\(^16\) whence, however, is it deduced that ‘And chastise him’ refers to flogging? — R. Abbahu replied: We deduce ‘Shall chastise’\(^18\) from ‘Shall chastise’,\(^20\) and ‘Shall chastise’\(^20\) from ‘Son’,\(^21\) and ‘Son’\(^21\) from ‘Son’\(^22\) [occurring in the Scriptural text:] Then it shall be, if the wicked man deserve\(^23\) to be beaten.\(^24\) Whence is the warning\(^26\) against bringing up an evil name [upon one's wife] deduced? R. Eleazar replied: From Thou shalt not go up and dawn as a talebearer.\(^26\) R. Nathan replied: From Then thou shalt keep thee\(^27\) from every evil thing.\(^28\) What is the reason that R. Eleazar does not make his deduction\(^29\) from the latter\(^30\) text?\(^28\) — That text\(^28\) he requires for [the same deduction] as [that made by] R. Phinehas b. Jair: From the text,\(^31\) Then thou shalt keep thee from every evil thing;\(^28\) R. Phinehas b. Jair deduced\(^29\) that a man should not indulge in [morbid] thoughts by day that might lead him to uncleanness by night.\(^32\) What then is the reason why R. Nathan does not make his deduction from the former\(^33\) text?\(^34\) — That text\(^34\) is a warning to the court that it must not be lenient with one\(^35\) [of the litigants] and harsh to the other. If [a husband] did not tell the witnesses,\(^36\) ‘Come and give evidence for me’ and they volunteered to give it, he\(^37\) is not to be flogged nor is he to pay the hundred sela’.\(^38\) She, however, and the witnesses who testified falsely against her are hurried to the place of stoning. ‘She and the witnesses who testified against her!’ Can this be imagined? — But [this is the meaning]: ‘She or her witnesses are hurried to the place of stoning. Now the reason then\(^40\) is because he did not even tell them [to give their evidence].\(^41\) Had he, however, told them [he would have been subject to the prescribed penalties]\(^42\) even though he did not hire them. [This ruling thus serves the purpose] of excluding the view of R. Judah concerning whom it was taught: R. Judah ruled, [a husband] incurs no penalties\(^42\) unless he has hired the witnesses.\(^43\) What is R. Judah's reason? R. Abbahu replied: An analogy is drawn between the two forms of the root ‘to lay’.\(^44\) Here\(^45\) it is written, And lay\(^46\) wanton charges against her,\(^47\) and elsewhere it is written, Neither shall ye lay\(^48\) upon him interest,\(^49\) as there\(^49\) [the offence is committed through the giving of] money\(^50\) so here [also it can be committed only by the giving of] money.\textsuperscript{51} R. Nahman b. Isaac said, and so did R. Joseph the Zidonian recite at the school\textsuperscript{52} of R. Simeon b. Yohai: An analogy is drawn between the two forms of the root ‘to lay’.\textsuperscript{53} R. Jeremiah raised the question: What is the ruling\textsuperscript{54} where [the husband] hired them\textsuperscript{55} with a piece of land?\textsuperscript{956} What [if he hired them] for a sum less than a perutah?\textsuperscript{57} What [if both witnesses were hired] for one perutah? R. Ashi enquired: What [is the ruling where a husband]\textsuperscript{58} brought an evil name [upon his wife] in respect of their first marriage? What [if a levir\textsuperscript{59} brought up an evil name] in respect of his brother's marriage? — You may at all events solve one [of these questions].\textsuperscript{60} For R. Jonah taught: I gave my daughter unto this man\textsuperscript{61} only unto this man\textsuperscript{62} but not to a levir.\textsuperscript{63} What [is the ruling of] the Rabbis and what [is that of] R. Eliezer b. Jacob?\textsuperscript{64} — It was taught: What constitutes\textsuperscript{65} the bringing up of an evil name [against one's wife]?\textsuperscript{66} If [a husband] came to the Beth din and said, ‘I, So-and-so, found not in thy daughter the tokens of virginity’. If there are witnesses that she committed adultery while living with him she is entitled to a kethubah for a maneh.\textsuperscript{67} ‘If there are witnesses that she committed adultery while living with him [you say,] she is entitled to a kethubah for a maneh!’ But is she not in that case subject to the penalty of stoning?\textsuperscript{68} — It is this that was meant: If there are witnesses that she committed adultery while she was living with him she is to be stoned; if, however, she committed adultery before [her marriage] she is entitled to a kethubah for a maneh.\textsuperscript{69} If it was ascertained that the evil name had no foundation in fact\textsuperscript{70} the husband is flogged and he must also pay a hundred sela’ irrespective of whether he had intercourse [with her] or whether he did not have intercourse [with her]. R. Eliezer b. Jacob said: These penalties\textsuperscript{71} apply only where he had intercourse [with her]. According to R. Eliezer b. Jacob\textsuperscript{72} one can well understand why Scripture used the expressions, ‘And go in unto her’\textsuperscript{73} and ‘When I came nigh to her’,\textsuperscript{74} but according to the Rabbis\textsuperscript{75} what [could be the meaning of] ‘And go in unto her’\textsuperscript{72} and’ When I came nigh unto her’?\textsuperscript{74} ‘And go in unto her’\textsuperscript{73} with wanton charges, and ‘When I come nigh to her’\textsuperscript{74} with words. According to R. Eliezer b. Jacob\textsuperscript{72} one can well see why Scripture used the expression, ‘I found not in thy daughter the tokens of virginity’,\textsuperscript{76} but according to the Rabbis\textsuperscript{77} what [could be the sense of the expression], ‘I found not in thy daughter the tokens of virginity’? — I found not far\textsuperscript{77} thy daughter witnesses to establish her claim to tokens of virginity.\textsuperscript{78} It was quite correct for Scripture, according to R. Eliezer b. Jacob,\textsuperscript{79} to state, And yet these are the tokens of my daughter's virginity,\textsuperscript{80} but according to the Rabbis\textsuperscript{81} what could be the sense of [the expression,] ‘And yet these are the tokens of my daughter's virginity’?\textsuperscript{80} — And yet these are the witnesses who establish\textsuperscript{78} the tokens of my daughter's virginity. One can well understand, according to R. Eliezer b. Jacob,\textsuperscript{79} why Scripture wrote, And they shall spread the garment,\textsuperscript{80} but according to the Rabbis\textsuperscript{81} what [could be the sense of the instruction,] And they shall spread the garment? — R. Abbahu replied: They explain\textsuperscript{82} [the charge] which he submitted against her,\textsuperscript{83} as it was taught: ‘And they shall spread the garment’ teaches that the witnesses of the one party and those of the other party come, and the matter is made as clear as a new garment. R. Eliezer b. Jacob said: The words are to be taken in their literal sense: [They must produce] the actual garment.\textsuperscript{84} R. Isaac son of R. Jacob b. Giyori sent this message in the name of R. Johanan: Although we do not find anywhere in the Torah that Scripture draws a distinction between natural and unnatural intercourse In respect of flogging or other punishments, such a distinction was made in the case of a man who brought an evil name [upon his wife],\textsuperscript{85} for he is not held guilty unless, having had intercourse with her, [even]\textsuperscript{86} in an unnatural manner, he brought up an evil name upon her in respect of a natural intercourse. In accordance with whose view?\textsuperscript{87} If [it be said to be] in accordance with the view of the Rabbis [the husband, it could be retorted, should have been held guilty] even if he had no intercourse with her. If [it be said to be] in agreement with the view of R. Eliezer b. Jacob must not the intercourse in both cases be in a natural manner? — The fact, however, is, said R. Kahana in the name of R. R. JUDAH RULED: EVEN THE POOREST MAN IN ISRAEL MUST PROVIDE NO LESS THAN TWO FLUTES AND ONE LAMENTING WOMAN. GEMARA. ‘BY MONEY’. Whence is this deduced? — Rab Judah replied: Scripture said, ‘Then shall she go for nothing without money’,15 which implies that this master receives no money but that another master does receive money; and who is he? Her father.19 But might it not be suggested that it belongs to her? — Scripture stated, ‘Being in her youth in her father’s house’, implying that all the advantages of her youth belong to her father. [Consider], however, that which R. Huna said in the name of Rab: ‘Whence is it deduced that a daughter’s handiwork belongs to her father? ’ [From Scripture] where it is said, ‘And if a vassel sell his daughter to be a maidservant’,33 as the handiwork of a maidservant belongs to her master so does the handiwork of a daughter belong to her father’,34 Now what need was there, [it may be asked, for this text when] deduction could have been made from [the text of] ‘Being in her youth in her father's house’? Consequently [it must be admitted, must it not, that] that text was written in connection only with the annulment of vows? And should you suggest that we might infer this from it, [it could be retorted, could it not, that] monetary payments cannot be inferred from ritual matters. And should you suggest that we might infer it is from [the law of] fine, [it could be retorted, could it not, that] monetary payments cannot be inferred from fines? And should you suggest that it is might be inferred from [the law of compensation for] indignity and blemish, [it could be retorted that] indignity and blemish are different, since [the rights] of her father [are also, are they not], involved in it? — [This], however, [is the explanation]. It is logical to conclude that when the All-Merciful excluded the going out, the exclusion Was meant to be [understood in a manner] similar to the original. But one going out, surely, is not like that of the other: For in the case of the master [the maidservant] goes entirely out of his control while in the going out from the control of her father [the daughter’s] transfer to the bridal chamber is still lacking. — In respect of the annulment of vows, at any rate, she passes out of his control; for we have learned: In the case of a betrothed damsel it is her father and her husband who jointly annul her vows.53 DEED OR INTERCOURSE. Whence do we deduce this? — Scripture said, ‘And becometh another man’s wife is’.54 [It may be inferred that] the various forms of betrothal are to be compared to one another.56 HE IS ENTITLED TO ANYTHING SHE FINDS, (15) Ex. XXI, 11, referring to a Hebrew maidservant.

(16) To whom a father sold his daughter (v. ibid. 7).
(17) When she leaves him on becoming a na'arah (v. Glos. and cf. Kid. 4a).
(18) When, on marriage, she passes out of his control.
(19) Since beside the master spoken of in the Scriptural text (cf. Ex. XXI, 8) the daughter of an Israelite has no other master but her father.
(20) The money of her betrothal.
(21) The implication of the text cited merely indicating that, unlike the case of the liberation of an Israelite maidservant, her passing out of her father's control at betrothal is attended by money, without necessarily meaning that this money goes to her father.
(22) Lit. 'now'.
(23) Lit., 'accepts'.
(24) Deut. XXII, 16.
(25) Of course not. Hence it must be concluded that it, as stated in our Mishnah, belongs to her father.
(26) A father's right to the betrothal money of his daughter, as implied in the Scriptural text cited.
(27) Though the Scriptural text referred to deals with an evil name brought upon a na'arah (v. Glos.) it might nevertheless be contended that the betrothal of that na'arah took place while she was still a minor.
(28) Lit., 'a hand'.
(29) V. Glos.
(30) Lit., 'a hand'.
(31) Num. XXX, 17.
(32) Ex. XXI, 7.
(33) Since 'daughter' and 'maidservant' appear in juxtaposition an analogy between them may be drawn.
(34) Supra 40b, infra 47a, Kid. 8a.
(35) Lit., 'wherefore to me'.
(36) That a father is entitled to his daughter's handiwork.
(37) And, therefore, no deduction from it can be made in respect of handiwork. Similarly, here also, no deduction from it could be made in respect of a father's right to his daughter's money of betrothal. The previous question, therefore, arises again.
(38) That a father is entitled to his daughter's money of betrothal.
(39) From the law of the annulment of vows.
(40) As the fine prescribed in Deut. XXII, 19, belongs to her father so does the money.
(41) Which belongs to her father (v. supra 40b).
(42) From the case under consideration.
(43) As a father has the right to dispose of the indignity and blemish of his daughter while she is still a na'arah, by allowing any sort of person to marry her, he is also entitled to compensation for any indignity or blemish anyone inflicted upon her without his consent.
(44) The question, whence is it deduced that the money of betrothal belongs to her father, thus arises again.
(45) Why deduction may be made from Ex. XXI, 11 (cf. supra p. 266 notes 13-20, and text).
(46) Cf. supra p. 266 notes 15-18 and text.
(47) V. supra p. 266, n. 17.
(48) As in the original it is the master, and not the maidservant, who, in the absence of the specific text to the contrary, would have received the money for the latter's redemption, so in the implication it must be the father (who corresponds to the master), and not his daughter, who is to receive the money when she passes out of his control at betrothal (v. Rashi). [Now since we learn that her father is entitled to her betrothal money, it follows that the right to effect her betrothal is vested in him, Tosaf.].
(49) Lit., 'but that'.
(50) Lit., there'.
(51) Until her entry into the bridal chamber (Huppah, v. Glos.) a daughter is still partially under the control of her father who is still entitled to her handiwork and remains her heir.
(52) Na'arah (v. Glos.).
(53) The father alone has no longer the right to do so. For further notes on the passage v. Kid. (Sonc. ed.) p. 36.
A father's absolute right to effect the betrothal of his young daughter (v. supra p. 266, nn. 3-4) by these two methods. (15) Deut. XXIV, 2; and becometh נֶשֶׁף.

lit., 'beings', 'becomings', of the same rt. נֶשֶׁף as that of נֶשֶׁף (v. supra p. 268, n. 15).

As betrothal by money is entirely in the hands of the father (to whom the money belongs, as has been shewn supra) so is betrothal by deed or intercourse.
in order [to avert] ill feeling.\(^1\) TO HER HANDIWORK. Whence do we deduce this? — [From that] which R. Huna quoted in the name of Rab: Whence is it deduced that a daughter's handiwork belongs to her father? — [From Scripture] where it is stated, And if a man sell his daughter to be a maidservant,\(^2\) as the handiwork of a maidservant belongs to her master so does the handiwork of a daughter belong to her father.\(^3\) But may it not be suggested that this\(^4\) [applies only to] a minor whom he may sell, but the handiwork of a na'arah\(^5\) whom he cannot sell belongs to herself? — It is but logical to assume that it should belong to her father; for should it be imagined that her handiwork does not belong to him [the objection could well be advanced against] the right\(^6\) which the All-Merciful has conferred upon a father to consign his daughter to the bridal chamber: How could he consign her when he thereby\(^7\) prevents her from doing her work?\(^8\) R. Ahai demurred: Might it not be suggested that he\(^9\) pays her compensation [for the time] she is taken away [from her work] or else, that he consigns her during the night,\(^10\) or else that he might consign her on Sabbaths\(^11\) or festivals?\(^11\) — [The fact], however, [is that in the case of] a minor no Scriptural text was necessary.\(^12\) For since is he may even sell her was it at all necessary [to state that her handiwork belongs to him]?\(^13\) If a Scriptural text\(^14\) then was at all necessary [it must have been] in respect of a na'arah. TO ANNUL HER VOWS. Whence do we [deduce this]? [From Scripture] where it is written, Being in her youth in her father's house.\(^15\) AND HE RECEIVES HER BILL OF DIVORCE. Whence is this deduced? — From Scripture where it is written, And she departeth and And becometh, 'departure'\(^16\) being compared to 'becoming'.\(^19\) BUT HE HAS NO USUFRUCT DURING HER LIFETIME. Our Rabbis taught: A father has no usufruct\(^20\) during the lifetime of his daughter.\(^21\) R. Jose the son of R. Judah ruled: A father is entitled to usufruct\(^20\) in the lifetime of his daughter. On what principle do they differ? — The first Tanna is of the opinion that the Rabbis were well justified in allowing usufruct to a husband, since otherwise he might refrain from ransoming [his wife].\(^22\) What, however, can be said in respect of a father? That he would refrain from ransoming her? [It is certain that] he would ransom her in any case. R. Jose the son of R. Judah, however, is of the opinion that a father also might refrain from ransoming [his daughter], for he might think: She is carrying a purse\(^24\) about her, let her proceed to ransom herself.\(^25\) WHEN SHE MARRIES, THE HUSBAND SURPASSES HIM [IN HIS RIGHTS] IN THAT HE HAS USUFRUCT etc. Our Rabbis taught: If [a father] promised his daughter in writing\(^26\) fruit,\(^27\) clothes or other movable objects\(^28\) that she might take\(^29\) with her\(^30\) from her father's house to that of her husband, and she died,\(^31\) her husband does not acquire these objects. In the name of R. Nathan it was stated: The husband does acquire them. Must it be assumed that they\(^32\) differ on the same principles as those on which R. Eleazar b. Azariah and the Rabbis differed? For we learned: A woman who was widowed or divorced, either after betrothal or after marriage, is entitled to collect all\(^33\) [that is due to her]. R. Eleazar b. Azariah ruled: [Only a woman widowed or divorced] after her marriage recovers all [that is due to her], but if after a betrothal a virgin recovers only two hundred zuz\(^34\) and a widow only one maneh\(^34\)

(9) A father who consigns his daughter into the bridal chamber.
(10) When people usually rest from their work.
(11) On which days work is forbidden. The question thus arises again: Whence is it deduced that a daughter's handiwork belongs to her father?
To confer upon her father the right to her handiwork. (15) Lit., ‘now’.

Talmud - Mas. Kethuboth 47b

for the man wrote [the additional jointure] for her with the sole object of marrying her.¹ [Must it then be assumed] that he who ruled that ‘her husband does not acquire’ [upholds the same principle] as R. Eleazar b. Azariah² while he³ who ruled that ‘the husband does acquire’ [upholds the same principle] as the Rabbis?⁴ — No; all⁵ [may, in fact, hold the same view] as R. Eleazar b. Azariah.⁶ [For] he who ruled, ‘her husband does not acquire’, [is obviously] in agreement with R. Eleazar b. Azariah.⁷ And as to him⁸ who ruled, ‘the husband does acquire’ [it may be explained that] only [in respect of undertakings] from him⁹ towards her⁹ did R. Eleazar b. Azariah maintain his view,¹⁰ [for the reason that] ‘the man wrote [the additional jointure] for her with the sole object of marrying her’,¹¹ but [in respect of undertakings] from her¹² towards him¹³ even R. Eleazar b. Azariah may admit [that betrothal has the same force as marriage] since [undertakings of such a nature]¹⁴ are due to [a desire for] matrimonial association, and such association, surely, had taken place.¹⁵ HE IS ALSO UNDER THE OBLIGATION OF MAINTAINING HER etc. Our Rabbis taught: Maintenance was provided for a wife in return for her handiwork, and her burial¹⁶ in return for her kethubah.¹⁷ A husband is, therefore, entitled to usufruct. ‘Usufruct’! Who mentioned it?¹⁸ — A clause is missing, and this is the proper reading: Maintenance was provided for a wife in return for her handiwork, her ransom In return for usufruct,¹⁹ and her burial in return for her kethubah;²⁰ a husband, therefore, is entitled to usufruct.²¹ What [was the need for] ‘therefore’?²¹ — It might have been presumed [that a husband] must not consume the fruits²¹ but should rather leave them,²² since, otherwise,²³ he might refrain from ransoming her, hence we were informed that that [course]²⁴ was preferable, for sometimes [the proceeds of the fruit] might not suffice and he²⁵ would have to ransom her at his own expense. Might I not transpose [the sequence]?²⁷ — Abaye replied: They²⁸ ordained the common for the common²⁹ and the uncommon for the uncommon.³⁰ Said Raba: The following Tanna is of the opinion that maintenance³¹ is a Pentateuchal duty. For it was taught: She'erah³² refers to³³ maintenance, for so it is said in Scripture, Who also eat the she'er³⁴ of my people;³⁵ Her raiment³⁶ [is to be understood] according to its ordinary meaning; ‘Onatha refers to the time for conjugal duty prescribed in the Torah, for so it is said in Scripture, If thou shalt afflict my daughters. R. Eleazar said: ‘She’erah’ refers to the prescribed time for conjugal duty, for so it is said in Scripture, None of you shall approach to any that is near of kin to him to uncover their nakedness; ‘Her raiment’ [is to be taken] according to its literal meaning; ‘Onatha refers to maintenance, for so it is said in Scripture, And he afflicted thee, and suffered thee to hunger.

(1) And since he did not marry her she can have no claim to it. V. Infra 54b, 89b; B.M. 17b.
(2) As the latter makes the woman's right to her additional jointure dependent on marriage, so also does the former make the husband's right to the dowry his wife brings from her father's house dependent on marriage. In the opinion of both betrothal entitles one only to the prescribed statutory rights.
(3) R. Nathan.
(4) As they deem betrothal to be as valid as marriage in respect of conferring upon a woman the right to her additional jointure as well as to her statutory kethubah, so does R. Nathan deem betrothal to be conferring upon a husband the right to the dowry his wife has brought him. As the additional jointure which is included in the document of the kethubah is acquired on betrothal by the woman, so is the dowry which is also included in the same document acquired on betrothal by the man.
(5) R. Nathan and the first Tanna.
(6) Whose ruling is (as stated infra) the accepted law.
(7) Cf. supra note 6.
(8) A husband.
(9) A wife.
(10) That betrothal does not confer upon a woman the right of acquisition.
(11) V. supra p. 271. n. 5.
(12) A wife.
(13) A husband.
(14) The dowry e.g., which her father promises to her husband.
(15) By the betrothal. Hence the ruling that, in this respect, betrothal alone confers the same rights as marriage.
(16) Variant, ‘ransom’ (Sheitloth).
(17) Here it means the dowry (v. supra n. 4) which, like the statutory kethubah and the additional jointure, is also entered in the kethubah document.
(18) Lit., ‘their (sc. the fruits’) name’; the first clauses of the Baraitha cited speak only of ‘handiwork’ and ‘kethubah’ and these, surely, provide no reason for a husband's right to usufruct.
(19) Of her melog (v. Glos.) property which was not entered in the kethubah.
(20) V. supra note 7.
(21) The ruling ‘a husband therefore . . . usufruct’ seems superfluous after the statement, ‘her ransom in return for usufruct’.
(22) I. e., allow their proceeds to accumulate, and thus create a fund for his wife's ransom.
(23) Lit., ‘if so’; were he to consume the fruit or to spend their proceeds.
(24) That the husband shall enjoy usufruct and that in return for this he shall assume the obligation of ransoming his wife.
(25) To cover the full amount of the ransom. Lit., ‘that they he not full’.
(26) Since, in accordance with the ordinance, he enjoyed usufruct and undertook the obligation of ransom (v. supra note 14).
(27) In the Baraitha, thus: Maintenance in return for usufruct and ransom in return for handiwork. A wife would consequently be prevented from retaining her handiwork even if she declined maintenance.
(28) The Rabbis.
(29) Maintenance and handiwork are both part of a person's daily routine.
(30) Usufruct for ransom. It is rare that a wife should own melog (v. Glos.) property or that she should be carried away as a captive. Both usufruct and ransom are consequently uncommon.
(31) Of a wife by her husband.
(32) E.V. Her food, פְּלָקָיָה (פְּלָקָיָה with pronom suffix; v. infra n. 8) Ex. XXI. 10.
R. Eliezer b. Jacob interpreted: [The expressions] She'erah kesutha,¹ [imply]: Provide her with raiment according to her age, viz. that a man shall not provide his old wife² [with the raiment] of a young one nor his young wife with that of an old one. [The expressions], Kesutha we- ‘Onatha³ [imply.] Provide her with raiment according to the season of the year,⁴ viz. that she shall not give her new raiment⁵ in the summer nor worn out raiment⁶ in the winter.⁷ R. Joseph learnt: Her flesh⁸ implies close bodily contact,⁹ viz, that he must not treat her in the manner of the Persians who perform their conjugal duties in their clothes. This provides support for [a ruling of] R. Huna who laid down that a husband who said, ‘I will not [perform conjugal duties] unless she wears her clothes and I mine’, must divorce her and give her also her kethubah. R. JUDAH RULED: EVEN THE POOREST MAN IN ISRAEL etc. This then implies that the first Tanna is of the opinion that these¹¹ are not [necessary]. But how is one to imagine [the case]? If these¹¹ were required by the woman's status,¹² what [it may be objected could be] the reason of the first Tanna who ruled [that these¹¹ were] not [required]? And if these¹¹ were not required by the woman's status,¹³ what [it may be objected could be] the reason of R. Judah? — [The ruling was] necessary only [in a case], for instance, where these were demanded by his status but not by hers. The first Tanna is of the opinion that the principle that she¹⁴ rises with him¹⁵ but does not go down with him¹⁶ is applied only during her lifetime¹⁷ but not after her death, while R. Judah maintains [that the principle applies] even after her death. R. Hisda laid down in the name of Mar ‘Ukba that the halachah is in agreement with R. Judah. R. Hisda further stated in the name of Mar ‘Ukba: If a man became insane Beth din take possession¹⁸ of his estate and provide food and clothing for his wife, sons and daughters, and for anything else.¹⁹ Said Rabina to R. Ashi: Why should this be different from that concerning which it was taught: If a man went to a country beyond the sea and his wife claimed maintenance, Beth din take possession of¹⁰ his estate and provide food and clothing for his wife, but not for his sons and daughters or for anything else?²¹ The other replied: Do you not draw a distinction between one who departs²² deliberately and one who departs²³ without knowing it?²⁴ What [is meant by] ‘anything else’? — R. Hisda replied: Cosmetics were meant,²⁶ R. Joseph explained: Charity. According to him who replied, ‘Cosmetics’, the ruling²⁷ would apply with even greater force to charity.²⁸ He, however, who explained, ‘charity’ [restricts his ruling to this alone] but cosmetics [he maintains] must he given to her, for [her husband] would not be pleased that she shall lose her comeliness. R. Hiyya b. Abin stated in the name of R. Huna: If a man went to a country beyond the sea, and his wife died, Beth din take possession²⁹ of his estate and bury her in a manner befitting the dignity of his status. [You say] ‘In a manner befitting the dignity of his status’, and not that of her status!³⁰ — Read, In a manner befitting his status also; and it is this that he³¹ informs us: She rises with him [in his dignity] but does not go down with him [to a lower status] even after her death. R. Mattena ruled: A man³² who gave instructions that when [his wife] died she shall not be buried at the expense of his estate must be obeyed. What, however, is the reason [for obeying the man] when he has left instructions? Obviously because the estate falls to the orphans; but the estate falls to the orphans, does it not, even if he left no instructions? — [The proper reading], however, is: A man who gave instructions that when he dies shall not be buried at the expense of his estate is not to be obeyed, for it is not within his power to enrich his sons and throw himself upon the public.

MISHNAH. SHE REMAINS UNDER THE AUTHORITY OF HER FATHER UNTIL SHE ENTERS

(1) (Ex. XXI, 10), ‘her age, her raiment’. = flesh (cf. supra note 8), hence ‘body’, ‘age’.
(2) Lit., ‘to her’.
(3) (Ex. XXI, 10), ‘her raiment and her time’ = ‘time’, ‘season’.
(4) Lit., ‘her season’.
(5) Which might be too warm for her in the hot weather.
(6) Being worn thin they would not provide sufficient protection from cold.

(23) From his home to a foreign country.
(24) From society. sc. becomes insane.
(25) In the former case the man could have left instructions, if he were minded to do so, that his wife and family should be provided for. Since, however, he left no such instructions, it is obvious that he had no intention of providing for them. Hence the ruling that his wife, whom he is under a legal obligation to maintain, (her claim being secured on his estate in accordance with the terms of her kethubah) must be provided for by the Beth din out of his estate; not however, his sons and daughters who have no legal claim upon their father's estate. Where, however, a man becomes insane it may well be assumed that it was his wish that both his wife and family shall be properly provided for out of his estate.
(26) Lit., ‘this’.
(27) Of the Baraitha that ‘anything else’ was not to be provided for.
(28) Since the court which has no right to provide from a man's estate for his own wife's personal enjoyments would have much less power to exact from that estate for charity.
(29) Lit., ‘go down into’.
(30) Why should she suffer indignity on account of his lower status?
(31) R. Huna.
(32) While in a dying condition. The instructions of a dying man have the force of a legally written document.
(33) Having survived her husband and collected her kethubah a wife has no further claim upon his estate which is consequently inherited by his sons.
(34) Cf. supra n. 2.
(35) And they, of course, are under no obligation to bury the widow.
(36) But at the public cost.
(37) Lit., ‘all from him’.
A naarah (v. Glos.). This Mishnah is a continuation of the previous one, supra 46b.

Even after her betrothal. He is entitled to all his privileges; and, if she is the daughter of an Israelite, although betrothed to a priest, terumah is forbidden to her.

UNDER THE AUTHORITY OF HER HUSBAND1 [BY GOING INTO THE BRIDAL CHAMBER]2 AT MARRIAGE. IF HER FATHER DELIVERED HER TO THE AGENTS OF THE HUSBAND3 SHE PASSES4 UNDER THE AUTHORITY OF HER HUSBAND. IF HER FATHER WENT WITH HER HUSBAND'S AGENTS5 OR IF THE FATHER'S AGENTS WENT WITH THE HUSBAND'S AGENTS5 SHE REMAINS4 UNDER THE AUTHORITY OF HER FATHER. IF HER FATHER'S AGENTS DELIVERED HER TO HER HUSBAND'S AGENTS6 SHE PASSES4 UNDER THE AUTHORITY OF HER HUSBAND. GEMARA. What [is the purport of] REMAINS7 — To exclude [the ruling] of an earlier8 Mishnah where we learned: If the respective periods9 expired10 and they were not married11 they are entitled to maintenance out of the man's estate12 and [if he is a priest]13 may also eat terumah.14 Therefore ‘REMAINS’15 Was used.16 IF HER FATHER DELIVERED HER TO THE AGENTS OF THE HUSBAND SHE PASSES UNDER THE AUTHORITY OF HER HUSBAND etc. Rab ruled: Her delivery [is regarded as entry into the bridal chamber] in all respects17 except that of terumah;18 but R. Assi ruled in respect of terumah also. R. Huna, (or as some Say, Hiyya b. Rab,) raised an objection against R. Assi: She remains15 under the authority of her father until she enters the bridal chamber.19 ‘Did I not tell you’, said Rab to them,20 ‘that you should not be guided by an ambiguous statement?21 He22 can answer you that "her delivery" is regarded as her entry into the bridal chamber’. Samuel, however, ruled: [Her delivery has the force of entry into the bridal chamber only in respect] of her inheritance.23 Resh Lakish ruled: [Only in respect] of her kethubah.24 What is meant by ‘her kethubah”? [If it means] that should [the woman] die he inherits it,25 [then this ruling is, is it not,] the same as that of Samuel?26 Rabina replied: The meaning is27 that her [statutory] kethubah from a second husband28 is only a maneh.29 Both R. Johanan and R. Hanina ruled: Her delivery [is regarded as entry into the bridal chamber] in all respects. even that of terumah.30 An objection was raised: If the father went with the agents of the husband, or if the agents of the father went with the agents of the husband, or if she had a court-yard on the way, and she entered it with him31 to rest there for the night,32 her father inherits from her if she died, although her kethubah33 is already in the house of her husband. If, however, her father delivered her to her husband's agents, or if her father's agents delivered her to her husband's agents, or he34 had a court-yard on the way, and she entered it with him to rest there for the night,32 her father inherits from her if she died, although her kethubah33 was still in her father's house.35 This ruling36 applies only in respect of her inheritance37 but in respect of terumah [the law is that] no woman is allowed to eat terumah until she enters the bridal chamber.38 [Does not this represent] a refutation of all?39 This is indeed a refutation. [But] is not this,40 however, self-contradictory? You said. ‘She entered it with him to rest for the night’. The reason [why such an act is not regarded as entry into the bridal chamber is] because [the entrance was made specifically for the purpose of] resting for the night. Had it, however, been made with no specified intention [it would be deemed to have been made] with an intention to matrimony. Read, however, the final clause: ‘She entered it with him with an intention to matrimony’, from which it follows, does it not, that if the entrance was made with no specified intention [it would be deemed to have been made just] in order to rest there for the night? — R. Ashi replied: Both entrances mentioned41 are such as were made with no specified intention, but any unspecified [entrance into] a court-yard of hers [is presumed to have been made] in order to rest there for the night while any unspecified [entrance into] a court-yard of his42 [is presumed to have been made] with an intention to matrimony. A Tanna taught: If a father delivered [his daughter]43 to the agents of her husband and she played the harlot44 her penalty is that45 of strangulation.46 Whence is this ruling deduced? — R. Ammi b. Hama replied: Scripture stated,47 To play the harlot in her father's house,48 thus excluding one whom the father had delivered to the agents of the husband. Might it not be suggested that this excludes one who entered her bridal chamber but with whom no cohabitation had taken place? Raba replied: Ammi told me [that a woman who entered her] bridal chamber was explicitly mentioned in Scripture: If there be a damsel that is a virgin betrothed unto a man; ‘a damsel’ but not a woman who is adolescent, ‘a virgin’ but not a woman with whom intercourse took place, ‘betrothed’ but not one married. Now what [is meant by] ‘one married’? If it be suggested: One actually married, [it can be objected that stich a deduction would be practically the same as that of ‘a virgin but not one with whom intercourse took place’. Consequently it must be concluded that by ‘married’ was meant one] who entered into the bridal chamber but with whom no intercourse took place.

(1) far. lec. ‘to the bridal chamber’ (v. Tosaf. 48a, s.v. תֵּלֶל). (2) Huppah (v. Glos.); cf. Rashi, a.l. and cf. supra n. 10. (3) Who were sent to bring her from her father's house to that of her husband. (4) Lit., ‘behold she is’. (5) To her husband's house. (6) Neither they nor her father who sent them accompanying her to the house of her husband. (7) תֵּלֶל, lit., ‘for ever’, ‘always’. The omission of תֵּלֶל would not in any way alter the actual ruling except the wording which would then read, ‘She is under’ etc. Why then was an apparently superfluous word inserted? (8) Lit., ‘first’. (9) One of twelve months for a virgin and of thirty days for a widow (from the date their intended husbands claimed them) in which to prepare their marriage outfits. (10) Lit., ‘the time arrived’. (11) Through their future husbands’ delay or neglect. (12) Lit., ‘eat of his’. (13) Though they are daughters of Israelites. (14) Infra 57a. (15) V. note I. (18) The woman, if she is the daughter of an Israelite, is forbidden to eat it though the man is a priest (v. infra 57b). (19) And until then she is forbidden to eat terumah (cf. supra p. 276, n. 9). How then could R. Assi maintain that terumah is permitted to her? (20) His disciple R. Huna and his son Hiyya. (21) נַחַלָּה, lit., ‘reverse’. (22) Sc. R. Assi. MS.M., TT. (23) i.e., if she died on the way between her father's house and that of her husband, her dowry (given to her by her father) is inherited by her husband although he is not entitled to his other rights until her entrance into the bridal chamber. (24) This is explained anon. (25) Viz., the dowry her father gave her which forms one of the entries in her kethubah. (26) V. p. 277 n. 17 (27) Lit., ‘to say’. Betrothed but not actually married'. (15) Lit., 'but not?'

Since this text excluded such a case from the penalty of stoning no other text is required for the same purpose. Deut. XXII, 21, is consequently free for the deduction made by R. Ammi.

Talmud - Mas. Kethuboth 49a

But might not one suggest that if she returned to her parental home she resumes her former status? — Raba replied: A Tanna of the school of R. Ishmael has long ago settled this difficulty. For a Tanna of the school of R. Ishmael taught: What need was there for Scripture to state, But the vow of a widow, or of her that is divorced, even everything wherewith she bath bound her soul, shall stand against her? Is she not free from the authority of her father and also from that of her husband? [The fact], however, is that where her father had delivered her to the agents of her husband, or where the agents of her father had delivered her to the agents of her husband and, on the way, she became a widow or was divorced [one would not know] whether she was to be described as of the house of her father or as of the house of her husband; hence the need for the text to tell you that as soon as she has left her father's authority, even if only for a short while, he may no longer annul her vows. Said R. Papa: We also learned [a similar ruling]. A man who has intercourse with a betrothed girl incurs no penalties unless she is a na'arah, a virgin, betrothed, and in her father's house. Now one can well see that 'na'arah' excludes one who is adolescent, 'virgin’ excludes one with whom a man has had intercourse, and ‘betrothed’ excludes one who married [by entry into the bridal chamber]. What, [however, could the expression] ‘in her father's house’ exclude? Obviously this: [The case where] her father delivered her to the agents of the husband. R. Nahman b. Isaac said: We also learned [a similar ruling]. Should one have intercourse with a ‘married woman’ the latter provided she entered under the authority of her husband, although no intercourse had taken place, is to be punished by strangulation. ‘She entered under the authority of her husband’ [implies] in any form whatever. This is conclusive proof. MISHNAH. A FATHER IS UNDER NO OBLIGATION TO MAINTAIN HIS DAUGHTER. THIS EXPOSITION WAS MADE BY R. ELEAZAR B. AZARIAH IN THE PRESENCE OF THE SAGES IN THE VINEYARD OF JABNEH. [SINCE IT WAS ENACTED THAT] THE SONS SHALL BE HEIRS [TO THEIR MOTHER'S KETHUBAH] AND THE DAUGHTERS SHALL BE MAINTAINED [OUT OF THEIR FATHER'S ESTATE, THE TWO CASES MAY BE COMPARED:] AS THE SONS CANNOT BE HEIRS EXCEPT AFTER THE DEATH OF THEIR FATHER, SO THE DAUGHTERS CANNOT CLAIM MAINTENANCE EXCEPT AFTER THE DEATH OF THEIR FATHER.
GEMARA. [Since it has been said that] he is UNDER NO OBLIGATION TO MAINTAIN HIS DAUGHTER Only, it follows\textsuperscript{36} that he is under an obligation to maintain his son, [and in the case of] his daughter also, since he is only exempt from\textsuperscript{37} legal OBLIGATION he is, obviously, still subject\textsuperscript{38} to a moral duty; who, [then, it may be asked, is the author] of our Mishnah? [Is it] neither R. Meir nor R. Judah nor R. Johanan b. Beroka? For it was taught: It is a moral duty\textsuperscript{39} to feed one's daughters, and much more so ones sons, (since the latter are engaged in the study of the Torah);\textsuperscript{40} so R. Meir. R. Judah ruled: It is a moral duty to feed ones sons, and much more so one's daughters, (in order [to prevent their] degradation).\textsuperscript{41} R. Johanan b. Beroka ruled: It is a legal obligation to feed one's daughters\textsuperscript{42} after their father's death; but during the lifetime of their father neither sons nor daughters need be\textsuperscript{43} fed.\textsuperscript{44} Now who [could be the author of] our Mishnah? If R. Meir, he, surely, [it may be objected] ruled that [the maintenance of] sons [was only] a moral duty.\textsuperscript{45} If R. Judah, he, surely ruled that also\textsuperscript{46} [the maintenance of] sons [was only] a moral duty.\textsuperscript{47} And if R. Johanan b. Beroka [should be suggested, the objection would be: Is not his opinion that] one is not even subject to\textsuperscript{47} a moral duty?\textsuperscript{48} — If you wish I might say [that the author is] R. Meir; If you wish I might say: R. Judah; and if you prefer I might Say: R. Johanan b. Beroka. ‘If you wish I might say [that the author is] R. Meir’, and it is this that he meant:\textsuperscript{48} A FATHER IS UNDER NO OBLIGATION TO MAINTAIN HIS DAUGHTER, and the same law applies to his son. [Maintenance], however, is a moral duty in the case of his daughter and, much more so, in the case of his sons; and the reason why\textsuperscript{49} HIS DAUGHTER was mentioned\textsuperscript{50} was to teach us this:

\begin{enumerate}
\item Whom HER FATHER DELIVERED TO THE AGENTS OF THE HUSBAND.
\item Before she reached her husband's house.
\item Since she is again ‘in her father's house’ her penalty might again be changed from strangulation (the penalty for a married woman) to stoning (the penalty for one betrothed who is in her father's house, (Deut. XXII, 21). This does not exactly raise a difficulty against our Mishnah, but is an attempt merely at elucidating the law (Rashi).
\item Num. XXX, 10.
\item Since she was once married. A father's control over his daughter ceases with her marriage.
\item Being now a widow or a divorcee. Now since neither father nor husband may annul her vows it is self-evident that her vows 'stand against her'. What need then was there for the text of Num. XXX, 10.
\item Lit., 'behold'.
\item To her husband's house.
\item And so returned to her parental home.
\item Lit., 'how I read about her'.
\item Because, not having reached her husband's house, she has not passed entirely out of her father's control. Her father should consequently be entitled to annul her vows.
\item Who is now dead or divorced. Her vows consequently, like those of any other widow or divorcee, could no longer be annulled.
\item Lit., 'but'.
\item As, for instance, where she was delivered to the husband's agents.
\item Yeb. 87a. As in respect of vows the woman is no longer regarded as being ‘in her father's house’ so also in respect of her penalties.
\item Sc. a Mishnah which supports the ruling of the Baraitha supra 48b: ‘If a father delivered . . . her penalty is that of strangulation’.
\item Sc. the penalties prescribed in Deut. XXII, 24ff.
\item V. Glos.
\item Sanh. 66b.

Talmud - Mas. Kethuboth 49b

That even in the case of his daughter\(^1\) he is only exempt from a legal obligation but is nevertheless subject to a moral duty.\(^2\) ‘If you wish I might say: R. Judah’; and it is this that he meant: A FATHER is UNDER NO OBLIGATION TO MAINTAIN HIS DAUGHTER, and much more so\(^3\) his son.\(^4\) It is, however, a moral duty [to maintain] one's son and, much more so, ones daughters; and the only reason why HIS DAUGHTER was mentioned Was to teach us this: That even [the maintenance of] one's daughter is no\(^5\) legal obligation. ‘And if you prefer I might say: R. Johanan b. Beroka’, and what Was meant is this: HE IS UNDER NO OBLIGATION TO MAINTAIN HIS DAUGHTER, and the same law applies to his son; and this, furthermore, means\(^6\) that [such maintenance] is not even\(^5\) a moral duty; only because [the maintenance of daughters] after their father's death is a legal obligation, the expression, HE IS UNDER NO OBLIGATION, was used here also.\(^7\) R. Elai stated in the name of Resh Lakish who had it from R. Judah\(^8\) b. Hanina: At Usha\(^9\) it was ordained that a man must maintain his sons and daughters while they are young.\(^10\) The question was raised: Is the law in agreement with his statement or not? — Come and hear: When people came before Rab Judah,\(^11\) he used to tell them, ‘A Yarod\(^12\) bears progeny and\(^13\) throws them upon [the tender mercies of] the townspeople’.\(^14\) When people came before R. Hisda,\(^10\) he used to tell them, ‘Turn a mortar\(^15\) for him upside down,\(^16\) in public and let one\(^17\) stand [on it] and say: The raven cares\(^18\) for its young but that man\(^19\) does not care for his children’.\(^20\) But does a raven care\(^18\) for its young? Is it not written in Scripture,\(^21\) To the young ravens which cry?\(^22\) — This is no difficulty. The latter\(^23\) applies to white ravens\(^24\) and the former\(^25\) to black ones.\(^26\) When a man\(^27\) came before Raba he used to tell him, ‘Will it please you that your children should be maintained from the charity funds?’\(^28\) This ruling,\(^29\) however, has been laid down only for one who is not a wealthy man, but if the man is wealthy he may be compelled even against his wish; as was the case with Raba who used compulsion against R. Nathan b. Ammi and extracted from him four hundred zuz for charity. R. Elai stated in the name of Resh Lakish: It was enacted at Usha that if a man assigned all his estate to his sons in writing, he and his wife may nevertheless be maintained out of it. R. Zera, or as some say, R. Samuel b. Nahmani, demurred: Since the Rabbis went so far as to rule that [in the case that follows] a widow is maintained out of her husband's estate, was there any necessity [to state that such maintenance is allowed to] the man himself and his wife? For Rabin had sent in his letter: If a man died and left a widow and a daughter, his widow is to receive her maintenance from his estate? If the daughter married, his widow is still to receive her maintenance from his estate. If the daughter died, Rab Judah the son of the sister of R. Jose b. Hanina said: I had such a case, and it was decided that his widow was to receive her maintenance from his estate. [In view of this ruling we ask: Was it necessary [to give a similar ruling in respect of] the man himself and his wife? — It might have been assumed [that the law applies only] there, because there is no one else to provide for her, but here [it might well be argued:] Let him provide for himself and for her; hence we were taught [that here also the same ruling applies]. The question was raised: Is the law in agreement with his view or not? — Come and hear: R. Hanina and R. Jonathan were once standing together when a man approached them and bending down kissed R. Jonathan upon his foot. ‘What is the meaning of this?’ said R. Hanina to him. ‘This man’, the other replied, ‘assigned his estate to his sons in writing and I compelled them to maintain him’. Now if it be conceded that this\(^1\) was not [in accordance with the strict] law one can well understand why he had to compel them,\(^2\) but if it be contended that this\(^3\) is the law, would it have been necessary for him [it may be objected] to compel them?\(^4\) R. Elai stated: It was ordained at Usha\(^5\) that if a man wishes to spend liberally\(^6\) he should not spend more than a fifth.\(^7\) So it was also taught: If a man desires to spend liberally\(^6\) he should not spend more than a fifth,\(^7\) [since by spending more] he might himself come to be in need [of the help] of people.\(^8\) It once happened that a man wished to spend\(^6\) more than a fifth\(^7\) but his friend did not allow him. Who was it?\(^9\) — R. Yeshebab. Others say [that the man who wished to spend was] R. Yeshebab, but his friend did not allow him. And who was it?\(^9\) R. Akiba. R. Nahman, or as some say, R. Aha b. Jacob, said: What [is the proof from] Scripture?\(^10\) — And of all that Thou shalt give me I will surely give the tenth\(^11\) into thee.\(^12\) But the second tenth,\(^13\) surely, is not like the first one? — R. Ashi replied: I will . . . give a tenth of it\(^14\) [implies ‘I will make] the second like the first’. Said R. Shimi b. Ashi: [The number of those who report] these traditions\(^15\) steadily diminishes,\(^16\) and your mnemonic\(^17\) is ‘The young\(^18\) assigned in writing\(^19\) and spend liberally’\(^20\). R. Isaac stated: It was ordained at Usha\(^21\) that a man must bear\(^22\) with his son until [he is] twelve years [of age]. From that age\(^23\) onwards he may threaten\(^24\) his life.\(^25\) But could this be correct?\(^26\) Did not Rab, in fact, say to R. Samuel b. Shilath,\(^27\) ‘Do not accept [a pupil] under the age of six; a pupil of the age of six you shall accept and stuff him like an ox’?\(^28\) — Yes, ‘stuff him like an ox’, but he may not ‘threaten him’\(^24\) until after [he has reached the age of] twelve years. And if you prefer I may say: This\(^29\) is no difficulty, since one may have referred\(^30\) to Scripture\(^31\) and the other to Mishnah; for Abaye stated: Nurse\(^32\) told me that a child of six [is ripe] for Scripture; one of ten, for Mishnah; one of thirteen,\(^33\) for a full twenty-four hours’ fast, and, in the case of a girl, [one who is of] the age of twelve. Abaye stated, Nurse told me: A child of the age of six whom a scorpion has bitten on the day on which he has completed his sixth year does not survive [as a rule]. What is his remedy? — The gall of a white stork in beer. This should be rubbed into the wound [and the patient] be made to drink it. A child of the age of one year whom a bee has stung on the day he has completed his first year does not survive [as a rule]. What is his remedy? — The creepers of a palm-tree in water. This should be rubbed in and the patient be made to drink it. Said R. Kattina: Whosoever brings his son [to school] under the age of six will run after hint but never overtake him. Others say: His fellows will run after him but will never overtake him. Both statements, however, are correct. He is feeble but learned. If you prefer I might say: The former applies to one who is emaciated; the latter, to one who is in good health. R. Jose b. Hanina stated: At Usha it was ordained that if a woman had sold usufruct property during the lifetime of her husband and then died, the husband may seize it from the buyers. R. Isaac b. Joseph found R. Abbahu standing among a crowd of people. ‘Who’, he said to hint, ‘is the author of the traditions of Usha?’ — ‘R. Jose b. Hanina’, the other informed him. He learned this from him forty times and then it appeared to him as if he had it safely in his bag. Happy are they that keep justice, that do righteousness at all times. Is it possible to do righteousness at all times? — This, explained our Rabbinis of Jabneh (or, as others say. R. Eliezer), refers to a man who maintains his sons and daughters while they are young. R. Samuel b. Nahmani said: This refers to a man who brings up an orphan boy or orphan girl in his house and enables them to marry. Wealth and riches are in his house; and his merit endureth for ever. R. Huna and R. Hisda expounded the text in different ways. One said: It applies to a man who studies the Torah and teaches it to others; and the other said: It applies to a man who writes the Pentateuch, the Prophets and the Hagiographa and lends them to others. And see thy children’s children, peace be upon Israel. R. Joshua b. Levy said: As soon as your children have children there will be peace for the judges of Israel, for [doubtful claimants] will not come to quarrels.

(61) V. Glos.
R. Joseph sat before R. Hamnuna while R. Hamnuna was sitting and discoursing: As sons may obtain their inheritance only from landed property so may one's daughters obtain their maintenance only from landed property. All shouted at him: ‘Is it only from a man who leaves land that sons inherit while from him who leaves no land his sons do not inherit?’ R. Joseph to him: Might not the Master have been speaking of the kethubah [that is due to] male children? The other replied: The Master who is a great man understood precisely what I meant. R. Hyya b. Joseph stated: Rab allowed maintenance [to daughters] from wheat of ‘aliyyah. The question was raised: Was [Rab's allowance made for] a marriage outfit and by ‘aliyyah is meant, ‘in accordance with her father's generans disposition’, [his ruling being] in agreement with that of Samuel who laid down that in respect of marriage outfit the assessment is determined by [the disposition of] the father; or was it rather for actual maintenance, and by ‘aliyyah was meant ‘in accordance with the chivalrous enactments made in an upper chamber’, for R. Isaac b. Joseph stated: In an upper chamber it was enacted that daughters shall be maintained even out of movable property?

Come and hear: R. Benai the brother of R. Hyya b. Abba had in his possession orphans’ movable property, and when [he and the daughters of the deceased] came before Samuel, the latter said to him, ‘Go and provide maintenance [for them]’. Does not [maintenance refer] to actual maintenance, he being of the same opinion as R. Isaac b. Joseph? No; there [the claim] was in respect of marriage outfit, and Samuel [acted] in accordance with his own view, since he laid down that in respect of marriage outfit the assessment is determined by [the disposition of] the father. [Such] a case occurred at Nehardea, and the Nehardean judges issued an order [in favour of the daughters]. At Pumbeditha also R. Hana b. Bizna allowed [daughters] to collect [for their maintenance]. R. Nahman, however, said to them: Proceed to withdraw [your orders], otherwise I shall order the seizure of your mansions. R. Ammi and R. Assi intended to allow maintenance out of movable property. Said R. Jacob b. Idi to them: In a matter concerning which R. Johanan and Resh Lakish hesitated to act would you [venture to] act? R. Eleazar intended to allow maintenance out of movable property. Said R. Simeon b. Eliakim to him: ‘Master, I know that in your decision you are not acting on the line of justice but on the line of mercy, but [the possibility ought to be considered that] the students might observe this ruling and fix it as an halachah for future generations’. A similar case was once submitted to R. Joseph. ‘Give her’, he ordered, ‘of the dates that [are spread] on the reed-mat’. Said Abaye to him, ‘Even if she were a creditor would the Master have allowed her [a privilege] of such a nature?’ — ‘What I mean is’, the other said to him, ‘[dates] that are suitable for [spreading on] the reed-mat’. Certainly not. The Torah did not restrict the laws of inheritance to landed estates only.

R. Hamnuna.

(3) If their mother pre-deceased their father they are entitled to recover her kethubah from his estate over and above the shares to which they like the other sons are entitled.

(4) The comparison made between the maintenance of daughters and the inheritance of sons was not, as the others who shouted assumed, the ordinary inheritance of sons, which is a Pentateuchal right, but their inheritance of their mother's kethubah (v. supra n. 3) which, like the maintenance of daughters, is merely a Rabbinical obligation undertaken by their father in accordance with the terms of the kethubah which he gave to their mother. I. e., ripe.

But are still attached to the tree. Attached fruit has the status of landed property.

Talmud - Mas. Kethuboth 51a

‘After all, however, [it may be objected] is not all that is ripe for cutting regarded as already cut? — ‘I mean [dates] that are still dependent on the palm-tree’. A boy orphan and girl orphan once came before Raba. ‘Grant a bigger [maintenance allowance] to the boy’, said Raba, ‘for the sake of the girl’. Said the Rabbis to Raba: Did not the Master himself lay down [that payment may be exacted] from landed property but not from movable property whether in respect of [a daughter's] maintenance, [a wife's] kethubah or [a daughter's] marriage outfit — He answered them: Had he desired to have a handmaid to attend on him would we not have granted him [an Increased allowance for the purpose]? How much more then [should the allowance be increased] here where it serves two [purposes]. Our Rabbis taught: Both landed property and movable property may be seized for the maintenance of a wife or daughters; so Rabbi. R. Simeon b. Eleazar ruled: Landed property may be seized for daughters from sons, for daughters from daughters, and for sons from Sons; for sons from daughters where the estate is large but not where it is small. Movable property may be seized for sons from sons, for daughters from daughters and for sons from daughters, but not for daughters from sons. Although we have an established rule that the halachah is in agreement with Rabbi [where he differs] from his colleague, the halachah here is in agreement with R. Simeon b. Eleazar; for Raba stated: The law is [that payment may be exacted] from landed property but not from movable property whether in respect of a kethubah, maintenance or marriage outfit.

MISHNAH. [IF A HUSBAND] DID NOT WRITE A KETHUBAH FOR HIS WIFE

She may recover two hundred zuz

If at marriage she was a virgin, and one maneh

If she was then a widow, because [the statutory kethubah] is a condition laid down by Beth Din. If he assigned to her in writing a field that was worth one maneh instead of the two hundred zuz, and did not write in her favour, ‘all property that I possess is surety for your kethubah’, he is nevertheless liable [for the full amount] because [the clause mentioned] is a condition laid down by Beth Din. If he did not write in her favour, if you are taken captive I will ransom you and take you again as my wife, or, in the case of a priest's wife, will restore you to your parental home; he is nevertheless liable [to carry out these obligations], because [the clause] is a condition laid down by Beth Din. If she sustained an injury it is his duty to provide for her medical treatment, but if he said, here is her letter of divorce and her kethubah, let her heal herself, he is allowed [to act in accordance with his desire]. GEMARA. Whose [view is represented in our Mishnah]? It is [obviously that of] R. Meir who ruled [that the intercourse of] any man who undertakes to give a virgin less than two hundred zuz or a widow less than a maneh is an act of prostitution; for if [it be suggested that it is the view of] R. Judah, he surely, [it can be objected] ruled, if a husband wished he may write out for a virgin a deed for two hundred zuz and she writes [a quittance] ‘I have received from you a maneh,’ and for a widow [he may write out a deed for] a maneh and she writes [a quittance], ‘I received from you fifty zuz’. Read, however, the final clause: if he assigned to her in writing a field that was worth one maneh instead of the two hundred zuz, and did not write in her favour, all property that I possess is surety for your kethubah’ he is nevertheless liable [for the full amount], because [the clause mentioned] is a condition laid down by Beth Din. Does not this obviously represent the view of R. Judah who laid down that [the omission from a bond of the clause] pledging property is regarded as the scribe's error? for if [It be suggested that  it represents the view of] R. Meir, he, surely, [it can be objected] ruled that [the omission of the clause] pledging property is not [regarded as] the scribe's error. For we have learned: If a man found notes of indebtedness

Infra 54b. Now since our Mishnah insists on the payment of the full amount of the kethubah, presumably even if the woman had surrendered her claim (corresponding to a quittance), it can only represent the view of R. Meir who disallows such a surrender and not that of R. Judah who allows it.

This is assumed to include even property which he disposed of subsequent to the writing of the kethubah.

Lit., ‘it comes’.

E.g that of the debtor to the creditor.

And not as the considered consent of the creditor. Despite its error the pledging clause is deemed to have been entered.

he must not restore them\(^1\) if they contain a clause pledging property, because the court would exact payment from such property,\(^2\) but if they do not contain the clause pledging property, he must return them, because the court will not exact payment from the property;\(^3\) so R. Meir. The Sages,\(^4\) however, ruled: In either case he must not return them, because the court will exact payment from the property\(^5\) [in any case].\(^6\) Would then the first clause [represent the view of] R. Meir and the final clause that of R. Judah? And should you suggest that both clauses\(^7\) [represent the view of] R. Meir and that he draws a distinction between a kethubah and notes of indebtedness,\(^8\) [it could be retorted] does he, indeed, draw such a distinction? Has it not been taught: For five [classes of claims] may distraint be made only on free assets; they are as follows. [A claim for] produce, for amelioration shewing profits, for an undertaking to maintain the wife's son or the wife's daughter, for a note of indebtedness wherein no lien on property had been entered, and for a woman's kethubah from which the clause pledging security was omitted. Now what authority have you heard laying down that [the omission from a deed of a record of] a lien on property is not regarded as the scribe's error? Obviously it is] R. Meir; and yet it was stated, was it not, ‘a woman's kethubah’? — If you wish, I might reply: [Our Mishnah represents the view of] R. Meir; and if you prefer I might reply: [It represents the View of] R. Judah. ‘If you prefer I might reply: [It represents the view of] R. Judah’, for there she specifically wrote in the man's favour in a quittance: ‘I received’ but here she did not write in his favour. ‘I received’. ‘If you wish I might reply: [Our Mishnah represents the view of] R. Meir’, for by the expression ‘HE IS NEVERTHELESS LIABLE’ [was meant liability to pay] out of his free assets. IF HE DID NOT WRITE IN HER FAVOUR etc. Samuel's father ruled: The wife of an Israelite who had been outraged is forbidden to her husband, since it may be apprehended that the act begun under compulsion may have terminated with her consent. Rab raised an objection against Samuel's father: [Have we not learned.] IF YOU ARE TAKEN CAPTIVE I WILL RANSOM YOU AND TAKE YOU AGAIN AS MY WIFE? The other remained silent. Rab thereupon applied to Samuel's father the Scriptural text, The princes refrained talking and laid their hand on their mouth. What, however, could he have replied? [That the law] was relaxed in the case of a captive. According to Samuel's father's ruling how is it possible to conceive a case of outrage which the All-Merciful deemed to be genuine? — Where, for instance, witnesses testified that she cried from the commencement to the end. [This ruling], however, differs from that of Raba; for Raba laid down: Any woman, the outrage against whom began under compulsion, though it terminated with her consent, and even if she said, ‘Leave him alone’, and that if he had not made the attack upon her she would have hired him to do it, is permitted [to her husband]. What is the reason? — He plunged her into an uncontrollable passion. It was taught in agreement with Raba: And she be not seized [only then] is she forbidden [from which it follows] that if she was seized she is permitted. But there is another class of woman who is permitted even if she was not seized. And who is that? Any woman who began under compulsion and ended with her consent. Another Baraita taught: ‘And she be not seized’ [only then] is she forbidden [from which it follows] that if she was seized she is permitted. But there is another class of woman who is forbidden even though she was seized. And who is that? The wife of a priest. Rab Judah stated in the name of Samuel who had it from R. Ishmael: ‘And she be not seized’, [then only] is she forbidden, but if she was seized she is permitted. There is, however, another class of woman who is permitted even if she was not seized. And who is that? A woman whose betrothal was a mistaken one, and who may, even if her son sits riding on her shoulder, make a declaration of refusal against her husband, and go away. Rab Judah ruled: Women who are kidnapped are permitted to their husbands. ‘But’, said the Rabbis to Rab Judah, ‘do they not bring bread to them?’ — [They do this] out of fear. ‘Do they not, however, hand them their arrows?’ — [They do this also] out of fear. It is certain, however, that they are forbidden if [the kidnappers] release then, and they go to them of their own free will. Our Rabbis taught: Royal captives have the status of ordinary captives but those that are kidnapped by highwaymen are not regarded as ordinary captives. Was not, the reverse, however, taught? — There is no contradiction between the rulings concerning royal captives since the former refers [for example] to the kingdom of Ahasuerus while the latter refers to the kingdom of [one like] Ben Nezer. There is also no contradiction between the two rulings concerning captives of highwaymen since the former refers to [a highwayman like] Ben Nezer while the latter refers to an ordinary highwayman. As to Ben Nezer, could he be called there ‘king’ and here is ‘highwayman’? — Yes; in comparison with Ahasuerus he was a highwayman but in comparison with an ordinary robber he was a king. OR, IN THE CASE OF A PRIEST'S WIFE, ‘I WILL RESTORE YOU TO YOUR PARENTAL HOME’ etc. Abaye ruled: If a widow was married to a High Priest it is the latter's duty to ransom her, since one may apply to her: OR IN THE CASE OF A PRIEST’S WIFE, I WILL RESTORE YOU TO YOUR PARENTAL HOME”.

The section of our Mishnah, therefore, which states that, despite the omission of such a clause the husband is ‘NEVERTHELESS LIABLE’ and the kethubah may presumably be distrained on sold and mortgaged property also (v. supra p. 295. n. 2). cannot represent the view of R. Meir. How then could it be suggested that both clauses of our Mishnah (cf. supra p. 295, n. 12 and text) represent the view of R. Meir?

(21) And the object of our Mishnah is to point out that a woman's consent to dispense with the written document of her kethubah is no evidence that she has surrendered her right to recover the statutory amount to which she is entitled. It is assumed rather that her indifference to the written document is due to her reliance on her statutory rights.

but if a bastard or a nethinah⁰ was married to an Israelite the latter is under no obligation to ransom her, since one cannot apply to her:² AND TAKE YOU AGAIN AS MY WIFE.³ Raba ruled: Wherever the captivity causes the woman to be forbidden⁴ [to her husband] it is his duty to ransom her⁵ but where some other circumstance causes her to be forbidden to him⁶ it is not his duty to ransom her.⁷ Must it be assumed [that they⁸ differ on the same principles] as the following Tannaim? [For it was taught:] If a man forbade his wife by a vow [from deriving any benefit from him] and she was taken captive, he must, said R. Eliezer, ransom her⁹ and give her also her kethubah. R. Joshua said: He must give her her kethubah but need not ransom her. Said R. Nathan: I asked Symmachus,
When R. Joshua said, "He must give her her kethubah but need not ransom her" [did he refer to a case] where her husband first made his vow against her and she was then taken captive or even to a case where she was first taken captive and he made his vow against her subsequently?10 And he told me, ‘I did not hear [what he exactly said] but it seems [that he referred to] a case where [the husband] made the vow against her first and the woman was taken captive afterwards; for, should you suggest [that the ruling applied also to a woman who] was taken captive first and the man made his vow against her afterwards [the objection could be raised that in such a case] he might make use of a trick’.11 Do not they12 then differ13 in [the case of one] who made a vow against the wife of a priest,14 Abaye upholding the view of R. Eliezer15 while Raba IS maintaining that of R. Joshua?16 — No;17 here18 we are dealing [with the case of a woman] who, for instance, made the vow herself and her husband19 confirmed it,20 R. Eliezer being of the opinion that it was he21 who put his finger between her teeth22 while R. Joshua maintains that it was she herself who put her finger between her teeth.23 [But] If she herself put her finger between her teeth what claim can she have to her24 kethubah? And, furthermore, [it was stated]: Said R. Nathan: I asked Symmachus, ‘When R. Joshua said, "He must give her her kethubah but need not ransom her [did he refer to a case] where her husband first made his vow against her and she was then taken captive or even to a case where she was first taken captive and he made his vow against her subsequently?’ and he told me: ‘I did not hear [what he exactly said]’. Now if [this is a case] where she herself had made the vow, what difference is there [it may be asked] whether he made the vow first against her25 and she was taken captive afterwards or whether she was first taken captive and he then made the vow26 — The fact is that [here27 it is a case where] the husband made the vow against her, but Abaye explains the dispute28 on the lines of his view while Raba explains it on the lines of his view. ‘Abaye explains the dispute on the lines of his view’, thus: If a widow [was married] to a High Priest no one29 disputes [the ruling] that it is the husband's duty to ransom her;30 if a bastard or a nethinah [was married] to an Israelite no one30 disputes the ruling that it is not his duty to ransom her,31 if also one made a vow against the wife of a priest32 no one30 disputes the ruling that it is his duty to ransom her, since [the principle in this case] is identical with that of a widow [who was married] to a High Priest.33 They34 differ only in [respect of him who] made a vow against the wife of an Israelite.35 R. Eliezer being guided by the woman's original status36 while R. Joshua is guided by her subsequent status.37 ‘Raba explains it on the lines of his view’, thus: If a widow [was married] to a High Priest, or a bastard or a nethinah to an Israelite no one38 disputes the ruling that it is not the husband's duty to ransom her.39 They40 differ only in [the case where one] made a vow against either the wife of a priest or the wife of an Israelite.41 R. Eliezer being guided by the woman's original status42 while R. Joshua is guided by her subsequent status.37 IF SHE IS TAKEN CAPTIVE IT IS HIS DUTY TO RANSOM HER etc. Our Rabbis taught: If she was taken captive during the lifetime of her husband, and he died afterwards, and her husband was aware of her [captivity],43 it is the duty of his heirs to ransom her, but if her husband was not aware of her captivity it is not the duty of his heirs to ransom her. Levi proposed to give a practical decision43 in agreement with this Baraitha. Said Rab to him, Thus said my uncle:44 The law is not in agreement with that Baraitha but with the following45 wherein it was taught: [If a woman] was taken captive after the death of her husband it is not the duty of his orphans to ransom her, and, furthermore,46 even if she was taken captive during the lifetime of her husband, but he died subsequently, the orphans are under no obligation to ransom her, since one cannot apply to her [the clause in her kethubah:] AND I WILL TAKE YOU AGAIN AS MY WIFE.47 Our Rabbis taught: [If a woman] was taken captive and a demand was made upon her husband for as much as ten times her value, he must ransom her the first time. Subsequently, however, he ransoms her only if he desired to do so but need not ransom her48 if he does not wish to do so. R. Simeon b. Gamaliel ruled:

(1) Fem. of nathin (v. Glos.).
(2) As the Israelite is forbidden to live with her.
(3) Which is the appropriate clause entered in a kethubah given to the wife of an Israelite, and which cannot apply (v. supra n. 5) where she is one forbidden to him.
Lit., ‘the prohibition of captivity causes her’.

(5) Contrary to the opinion of Abaye, the clause entered in a ketubah of a priest's wife obliges the priest to ransom his wife though she becomes forbidden to him through her captivity, only if she was permitted to him before she had been taken captive.

(6) As, for instance, a widow to a High Priest.

(7) Because, in the case of a forbidden marriage, as the clause ‘AND TAKE YOU AGAIN AS WIFE’ was originally invalid (cf. supra n. 6) the clause ‘RESTORE YOU TO YOUR PARENTAL HOME’ also has no validity. Thus, contrary to the ruling of Abaye, Raba maintains that a High Priest is under no obligation to ransom a widow whom he married in contravention of the laws of the High Priesthood. In the case of a bastard and a nethinah Raba is, of course, of the same opinion as Abaye.

(8) Abaye and Raba.

(9) Although, owing to his vow, he would subsequently be compelled to divorce her.

(10) Though there is good reason to suspect that the object of his vow was to escape his responsibility of ransoming her.

(11) Cf. supra n. 1.

(12) R. Eliezer and R. Joshua.

(13) Lit., ‘what, not?’

(14) I. e., the man who made the vow was himself a priest. It is his duty to ransom his wife, though her being prohibited to him is not due to her captivity, because the clause, ‘I WILL RESTORE YOU TO YOUR PARENTAL HOME’ may well be applied. Their dispute could not refer to an Israelite who made such a vow, since in that case, the clause ‘AND TAKE YOU AGAIN AS MY WIFE’ being inapplicable. R. Eliezer could not have imposed upon the man the duty of ransoming his wife.

(15) Cf. supra n. 5.

(16) That the husband is exempt from ransoming his wife because her prohibition to him was not caused by her captivity but by some other circumstance, viz. his vow.

(17) R. Eliezer and R. Joshua do not differ on the same principles on which Abaye and Raba differed, both of them agreeing either with Abaye or with Raba.

(18) Lit., ‘here in what?’

(19) An Israelite.

(20) Explicitly or implicitly.

(21) By his confirmation of the vow.

(22) Metaph. It is his fault that the vow remained valid. Had he desired to annul it he had the full power to do so (v. Num. XXX, 7ff). As he is thus the cause of the woman's prohibition to him and of rendering the clause in the ketubah inapplicable, he must pay the penalty by retaining the responsibility of ransoming her.

(23) She should not have made her vow. Having made it her prohibition to her husband is her own fault. Cf. supra n. 13 mutatis mutandis.

(24) Lit., ‘what is its doing’.

(25) I. e., by confirming it.

(26) In either case, since it was she who made the vow, no trick on the part of the husband can be suspected.

(27) In the dispute between R. Eliezer and R. Joshua.

(28) Between R. Eliezer and R. Joshua.

(29) Neither R. Eliezer nor R. Joshua. Lit., ‘all the world’.

(30) Cf. supra p. 300. n. 3. The fact that she is forbidden to him for some reason other than that of her captivity being of no consequence.

(31) Cf. supra p. 300, n. 2, and text.

(32) Sc. a Priest against his own wife.

(33) In either case the clause, ‘I WILL RESTORE YOU TO YOUR PARENTAL HOME’ (cf. supra p. 300, n. 3) may well be applied after, as well as before, the woman had been taken captive.

(34) St. Eliezer and R. Joshua.

(35) Cf. supra note9 mutatis mutandis. To the wife of an Israelite it was originally possible to apply the clause, ‘I WILL TAKE YOU AGAIN AS MY WIFE’ but now, owing to the vow, it can no longer be applied.

(36) Lit., ‘goes after (the status) of the beginning’. When the clause was applicable and therefore the obligation stands.

(37) Lit., ‘in the end’.
In the case of the widow to a High Priest, as her prohibition is due to a cause other than captivity, neither the clause relating to 'remarriage' nor that of 'restoring her to her parental home' is valid (cf. supra p. 300. n. 10); and in the case of the last mentioned because the clause, 'I WILL TAKE You AGAIN AS MY WIFE could not be applied originally and cannot be applied now.

R. Eliezer and R. Joshua.

To either of whom the relevant clauses of her kethubah that were originally applicable now, on account of the vow which is a cause of prohibition 'other than that of captivity'.

And thus incurred the liability to ransom her before he died.

R. Hiyya who was Rab's father's brother.

Lit., ‘to do a deed’.

Lit., ‘as that’.

Lit., ‘and no more but’.

Since her husband is dead. V. Tosef. Keth. IV.

At all. It is his duty to ransom her no more than once (Rashi). Aliter: For an exorbitant price (v. R. Han. Tosaf. s.v. מַקְרָא א. ל.). If, however, the ransom demanded is not higher than her value he must pay it.

Talmud - Mas. Kethuboth 52b

Captives must not be ransomed for more than their value, in the interests of the public.¹ [This then implies] that they must be ransomed for their actual value even though the cost of a captive's ransom² exceeds the amount of her kethubah. Has not, however, the contrary been taught: [If a woman] was taken captive, and a demand was made upon her husband for as much as ten times the amount of her kethubah³ he must ransom her the first time. Subsequently, however, he ransoms her only if he desires to do so but need not ransom her if he does not wish to do so. R. Simeon b. Gamaliel ruled: If the price of her ransom corresponded to the amount of her kethubah, he must ransom her; if not, he⁴ need not ransom her⁵ — R. Simeon b. Gamaliel upholds two lenient rules.⁶ IF SHE SUSTAINED AN INJURY IT IS HIS DUTY TO PROVIDE FOR HER MEDICAL TREATMENT. Our Rabbis taught: A widow is to be maintained from [her husband's] orphans' estate; and if she requires medical treatment, it is regarded⁷ as maintenance. R. Simeon b. Gamaliel ruled: Medical treatment of a limited liability may be deducted⁸ from her kethubah but one which has no limited liability⁹ is regarded¹⁰ as maintenance. Said R. Johanan: Blood letting in the Land of Israel¹¹ was regarded as medical treatment of no limited liability.¹² R. Johanan's relatives had [to maintain] their father's wife who required daily medical treatment. When they came to R. Johanan¹³ he told them: Proceed to arrange with a medical man an inclusive fee.¹⁴ [Later, however], R. Johanan remarked: ‘We have put ourselves [in the unenviable position] of¹⁵ legal advisers’.¹⁶ What, however, was his opinion at first,¹⁷ and why did he change it in the end!¹⁸ At first he thought [of the Scriptural text.] And that thou hide not thyself from thine own flesh,¹⁹ but ultimately he realized [that the position of] a noted personality is different [from that of the general public].²⁰

NEVERTHELESS LIABLE, BECAUSE [THIS CLAUSE ALSO] IS A CONDITION LAID DOWN BY BETH DIN. SO DID THE MEN OF JERUSALEM WRITE. THE MEN OF GALILEE WROTE IN THE SAME MANNER AS THE MEN OF JERUSALEM. THE MEN OF JUDAEA, HOWEVER, USED TO WRITE: ‘UNTIL THE HEIRS MAY CONSENT TO PAY YOU YOUR KETHUBAH’. THE HEIRS, CONSEQUENTLY, MAY, IF THEY WISH TO DO IT, PAY HER HER KETHUBAH AND DISMISS HER. GEMARA. R. Johanan stated in the name of R. Simeon b. Yohai: Why was the kethubah for MALE CHILDREN instituted? In order that any man might thereby be encouraged to give his daughter as much as to his son. But is such a regulation found anywhere else? Seeing that the All-Merciful ordained that a son shall be heir; a daughter shall not, would the Rabbis proceed to make a provision whereby a daughter shall be the heir? This also has Scriptural sanction, for it is written, 'Take ye wives, and beget sons and daughters,' and take wives far your sons, and give your daughters to husbands; now the advice to take wives for one's sons is quite intelligible [since such marriages are] within a father's power but [as to the giving of] one's daughters [the difficulty arises:] Is [such giving] within his power? It must be this that we were taught: That a father must provide for his daughter clothing and covering and must also give her a dowry so that people may be anxious to woo her and so proceed to marry her. And to what extent? Both Abaye and Raba ruled: Up to a tenth of his wealth. But might it not be suggested [that the sons] should inherit [what their mother received] from her father but not [that which was due to her] from her husband? — If that were so, a father also would abstain from assigning a liberal dowry for his daughter. May it then be suggested that where her father had assigned a dowry her husband must also enter the clause but where her father did not assign any dowry her husband also need not enter the clause? — The Rabbis drew no distinction. But should not then a daughter among sons also be heir? — The Rabbis have treated the kethubah like an inheritance. But should not then a daughter among the other daughters be heir? — The Rabbis made no distinction. Why then is not the kethubah recoverable from movables also? — The Rabbis treated it like the statutory kethubah. Why then should not distraint be made on sold or mortgaged property? [The expression] we learned [was] SHALL INHERIT. May it then be suggested that it is recoverable even if there was no surplus of a denar? — The Rabbis have made no enactment where the Pentateuchal law of inheritance would thereby be uprooted. R. Papa was making arrangements for his son to be married into the house of Abba of Sura. He went there to write the kethubah for the bride. When Judah b. Meremar heard of his arrival he went out to welcome him. When, however, they reached the door of the bride's father's house he asked leave to depart, when R. Papa said to him, ‘Will the Master come in with me?’

(4) Since one cannot be expected to be liable for a single clause of a kethubah more than for the total amount of the kethubah. [Isaiah Trani: The amount of the kethubah here denotes the extra jointure in addition to the statutory two hundred and one hundred zuz].
(5) A ruling which contradicts the implication of the first Baraitha that he must ransom her ‘even though the cost of a captive's ransom exceeds the amount of her kethubah’.
(6) The price of the ransom need not exceed either (a) the actual value of the woman or (b) the amount of her kethubah, whichever is the less.

Lit., ‘that you will have from me’.

Who may be born from another wife. The effect of such a clause is that, if the woman predeceases her husband, her sons, on the death of their father (her husband), would inherit her kethubah, and they would recover it from their deceased father's estate, irrespective of the amount or size of the shares to which they are entitled like any of the other sons of the deceased. This clause is designated, as ‘kethubah benin dikrin’ (kethubah of male children).

Lit., ‘to men’. This clause is designated as ‘kethubah benan nukban’ (kethubah of female children).

As one of the clauses of her kethubah.

Immediately after the last mentioned clause.

Cf. supra p. 305, n. is and text.

Sc. why should not the kethubah, which on the death of his wife is legally inherited by the husband, be regarded as a part of his general estate and so be equally divided between all his sons?

By being assured that whatever dowry he may give to his daughter will remain the property of her own children and will not pass through her husband to the children of his other wives.

(56) Of another wife.
(57) To her mother, as far as her kethubah is concerned. The same reason that applies to male children should equally apply to a daughter in the absence of sons. Why then was a ‘male children’ and not a similar ‘female children’ clause instituted?
(58) In which the term ‘INHERIT’ was used (cf. our Mishnah).
(59) No daughter may ‘inherit’ among sons.
(60) Though she cannot be heir among sons (v. supra n. 8) she is well entitled, in the case of an ordinary inheritance, to be heir among daughters. Why then should she be deprived of her mother's kethubah (cf. supra n. 6. final clause)?

Talmud - Mas. Kethuboth 53a

Observing, however, that it was distasteful to him [to enter], he addressed him thus: ‘What is it that you have on your mind? [Are you reluctant to enter] because Samuel said to Rab Judah, "Shinena,¹ keep away from² transfers of inheritance³ even though they be from a bad son to a good son, because one never knows what issue will come forth from him,"⁴ and much more so [when the transfer is] from a son to a daughter⁵ this⁶ also [I may point out] is an enactment of the Rabbis; as R. Johanan stated in the name of R. Simeon b. Yohai’,⁷ The other replied, ‘This enactment applies only [to one who acts] willingly;⁸ does it also imply that one should be compelled so to act?’ — ‘Did I tell you’ said [R. Papa] to him, ‘to come in and coerce him? What I meant was: Come in but exercise no pressure upon him’. ‘My entrance’, the other replied, ‘would amount to compulsion’.⁹ [As R. Papa, however,] urged him, he entered but, having sat down, remained silent.¹⁰ [Abba] thought that he¹¹ was vexed¹² and consequently assigned¹³ [to his daughter as dowry] all that he possessed. Finally, however, he said to him,¹¹ ‘Will not the Master speak even now? By the life of the Master, I have left nothing for myself!’ — ‘As far as I am concerned’,¹⁴ the other replied, ‘even the amount you have assigned¹⁵ has given me no pleasure’. ‘This being the case’,¹⁶ the first said, ‘I will withdraw‘. ‘I did not suggest’, the other said, ‘that you should make a rogue¹⁷ of yourself’. R. Yemar the Elder enquired of R. Nahman: Does a woman who sold her kethubah to her husband retain the right to the kethubah for her male children¹⁸ or not?¹⁹ — Said Raba to him: Why do you not raise the same question in the case of a woman who surrendered her claim [to her kethubah]²⁰ ‘Now’, the other replied, ‘that I [found it necessary to] enquire [concerning a woman] who sold [her kethubah],²¹ though [in that case] it might well be assumed [that her need for] money compelled her [to the sale; and, furthermore,] it might be said [that she is] like a person who was struck a hundred blows with a hammer.²² was it then necessary [to raise the same question in respect of] a woman who [voluntarily] surrendered her claim [to her kethubah]?²³ Raba stated: I have no doubt²⁴ that a woman who sells²⁵ her kethubah to strangers²⁶ retains the right to the male children's kethubah.' What is the reason? [It is her need for] money that has compelled her [to sell]. A woman [on the other hand] who surrenders her claim [to her kethubah] in favour of her husband does not retain the right to the male children's kethubah. What is the reason? She has lightheartedly surrendered her claims. [Is, however, a woman,] Raba enquired, who sells her kethubah to her husband treated as one who sells it to strangers, or as one who renounces it in favour of her husband? After he raised the question he himself solved it: [The law concerning] a Woman who sells her kethubah to her husband is the same as that of one who sells it to strangers. R. Idi b. Abin raised an objection: [We learned]: If she died, neither the heirs of the one husband nor the heirs of the other are entitled to inherit her kethubah. And in considering the difficulty, ‘How does the question of a kethubah at all arise?’ R. Papa replied, ‘The kethubah of the male children [was meant]’. But why? Could not one argue here also: ‘Her passion has overpowered her’? — There [the loss of her kethubah] is a penalty that the Rabbis have imposed upon her. Rabin b. Hanina once sat [at his studies] before R. Hisda and in the course of the session he laid down in the name of R. Eleazar: A woman who surrenders her kethubah to her husband is not entitled to maintenance.

(2) Lit., ‘be not among’.

(3) From persons who are legally entitled to be heirs.

(4) Though the son himself is wicked his children may be righteous.

(5) By giving his daughter a dowry he deprives his sons from a portion of their inheritance. (Cf. supra p. 307, n. 2).

(6) Allowing one's daughter a dowry.

(7) Supra 52b.

(8) Lit., ‘from his (own) mind’.

(11) Judah b. Meremar who looked on in silence.

(12) At the smallness of the dowry he was offering.

(13) Lit., ‘wrote it’.

(14) Lit., ‘if from me’.

(15) Lit., ‘that also that you wrote’.

(16) Lit., ‘now also’.

(17) חִדְשָׁרְדָה (rt. חֲֽידָרְדָה ‘to return’) a retractor.

(18) V. our Mishnah and supra p. 305, n. 15.

(19) Sc. are her sons still entitled to inherit her kethubah as they are entitled to inherit their share in the estate of their father, or do they lose the former right on account of their mother's sale which had transferred her rights to their father from whose estate they can inherit no bigger shares than those to which his other sons are entitled?

(20) Which is a more common occurrence than a sale.

(21) Believing that even in such a case it is possible that the woman irrevocably loses her rights.
(22) V. Golds. who compares יָבִג רֹאָא with Syr. יָבִג רֹאָא ‘a hammer’, and renders יָבִג רֹאָא, ‘hammer blows’. Aliter. They inflicted upon her a hundred strokes with a lash to which a small weight named ‘ukla was attached (Rashi). Aliter: I may adopt the opinion of him who said, they struck (defeated) that opinion with a hundred measures against one (a hundred arguments against, for one in favour of it). ‘Ukla (cf. יָבִג רֹאָא) is a small measure of capacity and also of a weight (Jast.).

(23) Obviously not. If she might lose her rights even when she acted under the stress of circumstances, there can be no question that she loses them when she willingly surrenders them.

(24) Lit., ‘it is plain to me’.

(25) For a mere trifle, since, to the buyers the transaction is of a highly speculative and doubtful value. v. infra n. 10.

(26) Who recover it only if she is divorced or if she survives her husband, but lose it completely if she predeceases him and he inherits it.

(27) Not her indifference to the welfare of her sons. On this account, therefore (v. infra n. 1), she does not lose her rights on behalf of her sons.

(28) And, having thereby shewn her complete indifference to the interests of her sons, her surrender is deemed to be final and irrevocable.

(29) Since in both cases she sells it for a mere trifle, the husband's purchase being no less of a speculation than that of strangers (cf. p. 310, nn. 9-10). For should she predecease him, her kethubah would in any case be inherited by him; and the only advantage he might possibly derive from his purchase is the knowledge that his sons would benefit from it if he predeceased his wife. As, in fact, he did not predecease her his purchase fully assumes the same nature as that of strangers, and her male children inherit her kethubah.

(30) Since the kethubah is actually in his possession (which is not the case with strangers) and she consented to sell him all her rights.

(31) A woman whose husband went to a country beyond the sea and who, on being told by one witness that her husband was dead, contracted a marriage, and her first husband subsequently returned.

(32) Yeb. 87b.

(33) Lit., ‘what is its doing?’ How could her children submit any claim to her kethubah when she herself, as stated earlier in the Mishnah cited (Yeb. l.c.), is not entitled to one?

(34) Yeb. 91a; sc. if the woman predeceased her two husbands, who in consequence inherited her estate, her children have no claim to her kethubah and receive shares equal to those of their paternal brothers.

(35) Should her children be deprived of the kethubah of their mothers

(36) Since it has been said above that the reason why the woman does not lose her right to the kethubah for her male children is because it was her need that compelled her to sell it.

(37) In the case of the woman who married a second husband on the evidence of one witness.

(38) And this compelled her to marry again. Now since she acted under compulsion her children should not be deprived of her kethubah.

(39) V. p. 311, n. 10.

(40) For marrying again on insufficient evidence (that of one witness) before instituting further inquiries to verify his evidence.

(41) During her widowhood. As she surrendered her kethubah she surrendered thereby all her rights, including that of maintenance, that are contained therein.

(42) R. Hisda.

(43) Prov. XVII, 13.

(44) Before her marriage.

(45) [The reference is to the statutory amount of the kethubah, these Rabbis being of the opinion that the husband has been allowed to retain the kethubah of his deceased wife for the expenses he incurred in the burial.]

(47) Before her marriage.

(48) V. Glo. Unlike an onan whose married wife died, he may Partake of holy food.

(49) If he is a priest (cf. Lev. XXI, 1f).

(50) If he died.

(51) She also is permitted to partake of holy food.

(52) During a festival when not only priests but also Israelites and women are forbidden to attend on the corpses of those who are not their near relatives (v. R.H. 16b). Aliter: Nor is she under an obligation to defile herself for him. (Cf. Rashi a.l. and Yeb. 29b. s.v. מיתמקה; and Tosaf. loc. cit. s.v. מיתמקה).

(53) To the dowry her father gave her.

(54) Yeb. 29b, 43b, infra 89b. Both the statutory amount and any additional jointure, if he provided her with a kethubah on betrothal (cf. infra 89b.

(55) Contrary to the ruling supra that the man must either bury his betrothed wife or pay to her account the amount of her kethubah.

(56) For the man's exemption from the duty of burying his wife despite the statutory amount of her kethubah which he inherits.

(57) This is one of the clauses of a kethubah (v. Yeb. 117a). Since this clause can obviously have no effect except when a husband predeceases his wife or when she is divorced by him, the kethubah cannot be regarded as the wife's property whenever she predeceases her husband, and he, consequently, cannot be regarded as inheriting it from her. [As to the teaching supra 47b that the husband inherits the kethubah in return for her burial, the reference is to the dowry, v. supra p. 272, n. 7 and cf. p. 312, n. 8.

Talmud - Mas. Kethuboth 53b

‘You are deprived of your benefaction;1 it is cast upon the thorns’,2 for R. Hoshiaia has already expounded his traditional teachings3 in Babylon.4 THE FEMALE CHILDREN THAT WILL BE BORN FROM OUR MARRIAGE etc. Rab5 taught: Until they shall be taken in marriage;6 but Levi taught: Until they shall attain adolescence.7 [Would daughters then be maintained] according to Rab although they attained adolescence, and according8 to Levi even though they married9 — The fact, however, [is that where a daughter] attained adolescence though she was not married or where she was married though she did not attain adolescence no one10 disputes [the ruling that she is not entitled to maintenance]. They11 differ only on the question of a [daughter who was] betrothed but did not attain adolescence.12 So also did Levi teach in his Baraitha:13 Until they shall attain adolescence and the time for their marriages arrives. Both14 — What was meant is this:15 Either they shall attain adolescence or16 the time for their marriage17 shall arrive. [They18 differ on the same principles] as the following Tannaim: How long is a daughter to be maintained? Until she is betrothed. In the name of R. Eleazar it was stated: Until she attains adolescence. R. Joseph learnt: [Daughters must be maintained] until they become [wives]. The question was raised: Does this19 mean becoming [wives] at marriage or becoming [wives] at betrothal? — The question must stand unanswered.20 Said R. Hisda to R. Joseph: Did you ever hear from Rab Judah whether a betrothed [orphan] is entitled to maintenance21 or not?22 The other replied: I have not actually heard it, but it may logically be concluded that she is not entitled, because [her future husband], having betrothed her, would not allow23 her to be degraded.24 ‘If you have not actually heard this’, [R. Hisda] retorted ‘it may logically be concluded that she is entitled, for [her intended husband], not being sure of her,25 would not throw his money away for nothing’.26 Another reading:27 He28 replied: I have not actually heard it, but it may logically be concluded that she is entitled [to maintenance]; for [her intended husband], not being sure of her, would not throw his money away for nothing. The other29 retorted: If you have not actually heard this it may logically be concluded that she is not entitled to maintenance; because [her future husband], having betrothed her, would not allow her to be degraded. (Mnemonic of the men:30 SHak Zarap.31 [Subjects:] She refused and a sister-in-law of the second degree is betrothed and he outraged her.) R. Shesheth was asked: Is a minor who exercised her right of refusal32 entitled to maintenance33 or not?34 — You, replied R. Shesheth, have learned this: A widow35 in her father's house, a divorced woman35 in her father's house or a woman35 who was awaiting the decision of a levir36 in her father's house is entitled to maintenance. R. Judah ruled: [Only a woman who] is still in her father's house is entitled to maintenance but [a woman who] is no longer in her father's house is not entitled to maintenance. [Now is not] R. Judah's ruling exactly the same as that of the first Tanna?37 Consequently it may be concluded that38 the difference between them is the case of a minor who had exercised her right of refusal, the first Tanna being of the opinion that she is entitled to maintenance while R. Judah upholds the view that she is not entitled to it. Resh Lakish enquired: Is the daughter of a sister-in-law entitled to maintenance or not? Has she no claim to it, since the Master said, Her kethubah is a charge on the estate of her first husband or is it possible that she is entitled to it since the Rabbis have enacted that whenever she is unable to collect her kethubah from the estate of the first, she may recover it from that of the second? — The question must remain unanswered. R. Eleazar enquired: Is the daughter of a forbidden relative entitled to maintenance or not?

(1) Or ‘recognition’ (v. Rashi).
(2) renders, a proverb. The information whereby he intended to benefit the students was of no use to them. Aliter: Your good-natured information is taken and thrown over the hedge (slight adaptation from fast.). Aliter: Take your favours and throw them in the bush, v. B.M. Sonc. ed. p. 377.

(4) They were in no need, therefore, to wait for the Palestinian report of Rabin.
(5) In dealing with this clause in the kethubah.
(6) Lit., ‘to men’. Cf. our Mishnah which agrees with Rab's ruling.
(7) V. Glos. s.v. bogereth.
(9) Surely not; since either of these conditions liberates a daughter from her father's control and she must in consequence lose her claim to maintenance (cf. infra 68b).
(10) Lit., ‘all the world’. V. infra n. 2.
(11) Rab and Levi.
(12) According to Rab she is maintained only until betrothal though by that time she may still be under age, and according to Levi, either adolescence or marriage deprives her of her rights to maintenance.
(13) Levi, like R. Hyya and R. Oshaia, was the compiler of six orders of Baraithoth corresponding to the six orders of the Mishnah compiled by R. Judah the Patriarch.
(15) Lit., ‘but’.
(16) The ‘Waw’ in may be rendered, ‘and’ as well as ‘or’.
(17) A period of twelve months from the time her intended husband had claimed her, in the case of a virgin, and one of thirty days in the case of a widow (v. Mishnah infra 57a).

(23) Lit., ‘it would not be pleasing to him’.
(24) As the maintenance of an orphan daughter by her brothers was ordained in order to prevent her degradation (v. supra 49a) it cannot be enforced in this case where no degradation is to be expected.
(25) A betrothal does not always lead to marriage.
(26) As he would not maintain her, the duty (for the reason stated supra p. 314, n. 15) devolves upon her brothers.

(32) V. Glos. s.v. mi’un.
(33) By her brothers, out of their deceased father's estate.
(34) The point of the question is whether (a) the declaration of refusal to live with her husband dissolved her marriage retrospectively and she resumes in consequence the status of one who was never married and is, therefore, entitled to maintenance until she reaches her adolescence; or (b) since her marriage had once removed her from her father's control, in consequence of which she has lost her right to maintenance, her subsequent declaration of refusal cannot again restore to her the right she had once lost.

(35) Who had been only betrothed but had never married.
(36) Shomereth yabam. v. Glos.

(39) V. Glos. s.v. mi’un.
(40) Cf. p. 315, n. 10. By mentioning a ‘widow (cf. supra n. 11) in her father's house’ the first Tanna meant to include also the minor who exercised her right of refusal who is thereby restored to the status of one who had never been married and had always been ‘in her father's house’.
(41) V. supra p. 315. n. 10. He ruled, ‘who is still in her father's house’, sc. who has never left it to be married, is entitled to maintenance; not, however, one who had once been married though that marriage had taken place during minority.

(45) This refers to the sister-in-law. That is to say the mother of the daughter in question. As her kethubah cannot be made a charge upon the estate of her second husband (her original brother-in-law), so cannot the maintenance of her daughter, which is one of the obligations undertaken in the same document.

Talmud - Mas. Kethuboth 54a

Has she no claim to maintenance since [her mother] is not entitled to a kethubah, or is it likely that the Rabbis have imposed a penalty only upon her mother who had committed a transgression but not upon her who had committed no transgression? — This remains unanswered. Raba asked: Is the daughter of a betrothed wife entitled to maintenance or not? Is she entitled to maintenance since [her mother] is entitled to a kethubah or is it possible that she is not entitled to maintenance since the Rabbis have not ordained [the writing of] the kethubah until the time of the marriage — The question must stand unanswered. R. Papa asked: Is the daughter of an outraged woman entitled to maintenance or not? According to the ruling of R. Jose the son of R. Judah, who has laid down that [her mother] is entitled to recover a kethubah for one maneh, the question does not arise. It arises only according to the ruling of the Rabbis who have laid down that the fine is regarded as a quittance for her kethubah. What, [it may be asked, is the decision]? Has she no claim to maintenance since [her mother] is not entitled to a kethubah, or might it possibly be argued thus:] What is the reason why a kethubah [has been instituted for a wife]? In order that the man might not find it easy to divorce her, but [this man], surely, cannot divorce her? — This must stand unanswered. YOU SHALL DWELL IN MY HOUSE etc. R. Joseph learnt: IN MY HOUSE but not in my hovel. She is entitled, however, to maintenance. Mar son of R. Ashi ruled: She is not entitled even to maintenance. The law, however, is not in agreement with Mar son of R. Ashi. R. Nahman stated in the name of Samuel: If marriage was proposed to her and she accepted, she is no longer entitled to maintenance. This is to imply that if she did not accept, she would not be entitled to maintenance! — R. Anan replied: This was explained to me by Mar Samuel: If she said, ‘[I cannot accept the proposal] out of respect for the memory of So-and-so, my husband’, she is entitled to maintenance; but if she said, ‘Because the men are not suitable for me,’ she is not entitled to maintenance. R. Hisda ruled: If she played the harlot she is not entitled to maintenance. R. Joseph ruled: If she painted her eyes or dyed her hair she is not entitled to maintenance. He who ruled: ‘If she played the harlot’ would even more so deprive her of maintenance if she paints her eyes or dyes her hair. He, however, who ruled: ‘If she painted her eyes or dyed her hair’ would allow her maintenance if she played the harlot. What is the reason? — Her passions have overpowered her. The law, however, is not in agreement with any of these reported rulings but with that which Rab Judah laid down in the name of Samuel: She who claims her kethubah at court is not entitled to maintenance. But is she not entitled? Surely it was taught: If she sold her kethubah, pledged it, or mortgaged [the land that was pledged] for her kethubah to a stranger, she is not entitled to maintenance. [Does not this imply] that only such [acts deprive a widow of her maintenance] but not [the act of] claiming [her kethubah at court]? — These [acts] deprive her of her maintenance] whether she appeared at court or not, but the act of claiming [her kethubah deprives her of maintenance] only if she appeared in court but does not [deprive her of it] if she did not appear at court. SO DID THE MEN OF JERUSALEM etc. It was stated: Rab ruled, ‘The halachah is in agreement with [the practice of] the MEN OF JUDAEA’, but Samuel ruled, ‘The halachah agrees with [the practice of] the MEN OF GALILEE’. Babylon and all its neighbouring towns followed a usage in agreement with the ruling of Rab; Nehardea and all its neighbouring towns followed a usage agreeing with the ruling of Samuel. A woman of Mahuza was once married to [a man of] Nehardea. When they came to R. Nahman, and he observed from her voice that she was a native of Mahuza, he said to them, ‘[The decision must be in agreement with Rab, for] Babylon and all its neighbouring towns have adopted a usage in agreement with the ruling of Rab’. When, however, they pointed out to him, ‘But, surely, she is married to [a man of] Nehardea,’ he said to them, ‘If that is the case, [the decision will be in agreement with Samuel for] Nehardea and all its neighbouring towns followed a usage agreeing with the ruling of Samuel. How far does [the usage of] Nehardea extend? — As far afield as the Nehardean kab is in use. It was stated: [When a kethubah is being paid to] a widow, said Rab, assessment is made of what she wears, but Samuel said: That which she wears is not assessed. Said R. Hiyya b. Abin: [Their opinions] are reversed in the case of a retainer. R. Kahana taught: And so [are their opinions] in the case of a retainer; and [Rab] had laid down this mnemonic, ‘Strip the widow and the orphan and go out’. R. Nahman said: Although we have learned in a Mishnah in agreement with the view of Samuel the law is in agreement with that of Rab. For we learned: Whether a man has consecrated his estate, or whether he has consecrated the valuation of himself [the Temple treasurer] has no claim either upon the clothes of that man's wife, or upon the clothes of his children, or the coloured articles that were dyed for them, or any new sandals that [their father] may have bought for them. Said Raba to R. Nahman: Since, however, we have learned in a Mishnah in agreement with the view of Samuel, why does the law agree with that of Rab? The other replied: At first sight it might appear to run parallel to the principle of Samuel, but if you examine it carefully you will find that the law, in fact, must be in agreement with [the view of] Rab. For this is the reason: When he bought [the clothes] for her [he did so] on the assumption that she would live with him. He did not, however, buy them for her on the assumption that she should take them and depart. A daughter-in-law of the house of Bar Eliashib was claiming her kethubah from orphans. When she summoned them to court and they said, ‘It is degrading for us that you should come with us in such [clothes]’, she went home and dressed and wrapped herself in all her garments. When they came before Rabina he told them: The law is in agreement with the ruling of Rab who laid down [that when a kethubah is being paid to] a widow, assessment is made of what she wears. A man once said, ‘Let a bride's outfit be provided for my daughter’, and the price of an outfit was subsequently reduced. ‘The benefit’, ruled R. Idi b. Abin, ‘belongs to the orphans’. A man once said,

(1) Which is only one of the obligations a man undertakes in the kethubah he gives to his wife.
(2) Out of her deceased father's estate if he had sons from another wife.
(3) V. supra p. 316, n. 13.
(4) If her father had written one for her on betrothal. As he is responsible for the kethubah of his wife so should he be responsible for the maintenance of his daughter (v. supra p. 316, n. 13).
(5) As the obligation of the kethubah does not begin before marriage, that of maintenance also does not begin earlier.
(6) Whom the offender has subsequently married (v. Deut. XXII, 28f).
Out of the man's estate, though he had already paid to her father the fine prescribed in Deut. XXII, 29. v. supra 39b.

As the kethubah is recoverable from the man's estate so is the daughter's maintenance (v. supra p. 316, n. 13).

That is paid to her father (Deut. XXII, 29).

As regards the daughter's maintenance.

V. supra p. 316, n. 13).

As the kethubah cannot be recovered so cannot the daughter's maintenance.

Lit., 'that she shall not be easy in his eyes'.

He cannot easily divorce her if his act involves him in the payment of the amount specified in the kethubah.

Who committed outrage.

V. Deut. XXII, 29.

Hence the ruling that the woman is not entitled to a kethubah. As this argument, however, does not apply to her daughter the latter may well be entitled to maintenance.

Sc. only if the deceased left a proper house must his sons provide living accommodation for his widow. (Cf. however, fast. infra n. 20.)

M.S.M. (v. Shab. 77b), 'a house of distress', 'a poor man's house' (Rashi). If the house is too small the orphans may ask her to live elsewhere. Aliter. קַישָׁה = קִישׁוֹת, 'valley', 'group of fields', estate'; the widow 'must be content to live in her late husband's house with his heirs, but she cannot claim a separate residence' (Jast.).

Though she is in residence in her paternal home, she does not forfeit her claim to maintenance from her late husband's estate. Though the first part of the clause of her kethubah, DWELL IN MY HOUSE, is not carried out, the second part, BE MAINTAINED OUT OF MY ESTATE, nevertheless remains valid.

As one part of the clause is inapplicable the other part also becomes void.

The widow.

Her WIDOWHOOD is deemed to have terminated thereby, and in consequence she loses the rights attached to it.

Whatever the reason.

Lit., 'on account of'.

The heirs cannot be compelled to continue her maintenance once she has had an offer from a man who is willing to provide for her.

The widow.

Lit., 'she has'.

The widow.

V. Rashi.

Lit., 'these, yes'.

Whereby the widow actually recovers her kethubah.

Lit., 'yes'.

[Stands here for Sura which was in the neighbourhood of the old great city of Babylon, v. Git. Sonc. ed. p. 17, n. 3.]

So Rashi, 'her dependencies', sc. places following her usages (Jast.); 'seine Nachbarorte' (Golds).

V. supra p. 222. n. 8.

A Jewish trading centre. One of the 'neighbouring towns' or 'dependencies' of Babylon.

In connection with a dispute concerning the fulfilment of the terms of the kethubah (v. the final clauses of our Mishnah).

V. Glos. Here a term for a dry measure in general, not the specific kab (Obermeyer p. 242).

Lit., 'spreads'.

Sc. the value of her clothes is deducted from the amount of her kethubah.
Those of Rab and Samuel.

Samuel ruling that the value of clothes is, and Rab maintaining that it is not to be deducted from the man's wages.

Or ‘client’ (v. Jast.), when he leaves the employ of his master who, during the period of his service, had been supplying him with his clothes. פֶּלֶךְ פֶּלֶךְ (rt. פֶּכֶם ‘to gather’) ‘gleaner’, ‘field labourer’.

As in the case of a widow.

Sc. the retainer or client.

Viz. that a wife's clothes are the property of her husband.

V. Lev. XXVII, 1ff.

Who comes to collect such offerings.

Cf. supra note 9.

Though they have not yet used them (cf. Rashi). This shews that the raiments are the property of the wife.

‘Ar. 24a, B.K. 102b.

רָחִיל adv., Lamed and Kaf. prefixed to the noun רָחִיל, ‘light’.

Lit., ‘what’.

Why the Temple treasurer has no claim upon a wife's clothes though their value is rightly to be deducted from the amount she is paid in settlement of her kethubah.

The husband.

Or, ‘transferred possession’.

Consequently, so long as she lives with him, they are her absolute property and no one can take them away from her. Hence the ruling of the Mishnah of ‘Ar. that the Temple treasurer cannot claim them.

When he died.

Hence the ruling of Rab that their value is to be deducted from her kethubah.

On his death bed. The instructions of a person in such a condition have the force of a legally written document.

The cost of which was well known, all brides being similarly provided for (Rashi).

דָּשָׁן adv., Lamed and Peh prefixed to the noun דָּשָׁן, ‘to cut’, hence ‘to endow’) ‘endowment’, hence ‘good luck’ (v. fast.); ‘surplus’ (Colds.).

It is their duty to provide the outfit, and since they can obtain it at a reduced price the balance is theirs.

Talmud - Mas. Kethuboth 54b

‘Four hundred zuz’ [of the value of this] wine shall be given to my daughter’, and the price of wine rose. ‘The profit’, ruled R. Joseph, ‘belongs to the orphans’. Relatives of R. Johanan had [the responsibility of maintaining their] father's wife who was in the habit of consuming much food. When they came to R. Johanan she told them, ‘Go and ask your father that he should assign a plot of land for her maintenance’. When they subsequently came before Resh Lakish, he said to them, ‘[By such an assignment] he has increased all the more [the allowance for] her maintenance’. ‘But’, they said to him, ‘R. Johanan did not say so?’ — ‘Go’, he told them, ‘and give her [proper maintenance], otherwise I shall pull R. Johanan out of your ears’. R. Johanan, when they came to him again, said to them, ‘What can I do when one of equal standing differs from me?’ R. Abbahu stated: This was explained to me by R. Johanan: [If the husband] said, ‘towards maintenance’ he has thereby increased [the allowance for] her maintenance; but if he said, ‘for maintenance’ he has thereby limited the allowance for her maintenance.

MISHNAH. ALTHOUGH [THE SAGES] HAVE ENACTED THAT A VIRGIN COLLECTS TWO HUNDRED ZUZ AND A WIDOW ONE MANEH, IF HE [THE HUSBAND] WISHES TO ADD, EVEN A HUNDRED MANEH, HE MAY DO SO. [A WOMAN] WHO WAS WIDOWED OR DIVORCED, EITHER AFTER BETROTHAL OR AFTER MARRIAGE, IS ENTITLED TO COLLECT ALL [THAT IS DUE TO HER]. R. ELEAZAR B. AZARIAH RULED: [ONLY A WOMAN WIDOWED] AFTER HER MARRIAGE RECEIVES ALL [THAT IS DUE TO HER], BUT IF AFTER A BETROTHAL, A VIRGIN RECOVERS ONLY TWO HUNDRED ZUZ AND A WIDOW ONLY ONE MANEH, FOR THE MAN PROMISED

R. MEIR RULED: [THE INTERCOURSE OF] ANY MAN WHO UNDERTAKES TO GIVE A VIRGIN LESS THAN TWO HUNDRED ZUZ\textsuperscript{13} OR A WIDOW LESS THAN A MANEH\textsuperscript{13} IS AN ACT OF PROSTITUTION.

GEMARA. [Is not this]\textsuperscript{19} obvious? — It might have been presumed that the Rabbis have fixed a limit in order that the man who has no means might not be put to shame; hence we were taught [that there was no limit]. IF HE WISHES TO ADD etc. It was not stated, ‘If he wishes to write’,\textsuperscript{20} but ‘WISHES TO ADD’.\textsuperscript{21} This then provides support for [a ruling which] R. Aibu stated in the name of R. Jannai. For R. Aibu stated in the name of R. Jannai: The supplementary provisions\textsuperscript{22} [that are included] in a kethubah are subject to the same regulations as the statutory kethubah.\textsuperscript{23} [In what respect] can this\textsuperscript{24} matter?\textsuperscript{25} — In respect of a woman who sells or surrenders [her kethubah], or one who rebels,\textsuperscript{27} one who impairs,\textsuperscript{28} or claims [her kethubah],\textsuperscript{29} or one who transgresses the Law;\textsuperscript{30} mentioned when the transaction took place.

(27) Against her husband, by refusing conjugal rights or work (v. infra 63a). If, in consequence, reductions are made from her kethubah (v. loc. cit.) her additional jointure, like her statutory kethubah, is subject to these deductions.

(28) By admitting that she had already been paid a part of her kethubah (infra 87a). In such a case she cannot recover the balance of the additional jointure even though that part of the kethubah had been left unimpaired. (v. Tosaf. s.v. תקנות).

(29) V. supra 54a. As she loses her maintenance by claiming her statutory kethubah so she loses it by claiming only her additional jointures (Rashi).

(30) A woman who transgresses the Mosaic law or traditional Jewish practice may be divorced without receiving her kethuhah (infra 72a). This applies to her additional jointures also.

_Talmud - Mas. Kethuboth 55a_

in respect of amelioration, an oath, and the Sabbatical year, in respect of him who assigned all his property to his sons, or the recovery of payment out of real estate and from the worst part of it, also in respect of [the law of a widow] while in her father's house, and of the kethubah for male children. It was stated: The kethubah for the male children, [the scholars of] Pumbeditha ruled, may not be collected from sold or mortgaged property, for we have learned, 'They shall inherit'; and the scholars of Matha Mehasia ruled: It may be collected from sold or mortgaged property, for we have learned, 'They shall take'. The law, however, is that it may not be collected from sold or mortgaged property, since we have learned, 'They shall inherit'. Movables which are available [may be collected] without an oath; but if they are not available, [the kethubah may, the scholars of] Pumbeditha ruled, [be collected] without an oath and the scholars of Matha Mehasia ruled: Only with an oath. The law [is that they may be collected] without an oath. If [her husband] has set aside for her a plot of land [defining it] by its four boundaries, [she may collect from it] without an oath, but if [he only defined it] by one boundary, [the scholars of] Pumbeditha ruled [that collection may be made from it] without an oath, but the scholars of Matha Mehasia ruled: Only with an oath. The law, however, is that collection may be effected without an oath. If a man said to witnesses, 'Write out [a deed], sign it and give it to a certain person', and they took from him symbolic possession there is no need to consult him. [If, however,] no symbolic possession was taken, [the scholars of] Pumbeditha ruled, there is no need to consult him, but the scholars of Matha Mehasia ruled: It is necessary to consult him. The law is that it is necessary to consult him. R. ELEAZAR B. AZARIAH etc. It was stated: Rab and R. Nathan [differed]. One maintained that the halachah was in agreement with R. Eleazar b. Azariah and the other maintained that the halachah was not in agreement with R. Eleazar b. Azariah. You may conclude that it was R. Nathan who maintained that the halachah was in agreement with R. Eleazar b. Azariah since R. Nathan was heard [elsewhere] to follow [the rule of] assumption, having stated that the halachah was in agreement with R. Simeon Shezuri in the case of a man dangerously ill.

(1) Of the estate of the husband after his death. As the statutory kethubah cannot be recovered from such amelioration (v. Bek. 51b) so cannot the additional jointure either.

(2) A woman must take an oath in respect of her additional jointure in all cases where she takes an oath in respect of her statutory kethubah (infra 87a).

(3) In which all debts must be released (v. Deut. XV. Iff) but not the obligation of a kethubah (v. Git. 48b). The exemption applies to both the statutory kethubah and the additional jointure.

(4) And left any fraction of land for his wife. Thereby she loses her kethubah (v. B.B. 132a) and her additional jointure also.

(5) These restriction apply to the additional jointure as well as to the statutory kethubah (v. Git. 48b).

(6) She may claim her kethubah within twenty-five years only (v. infra 104a). This applies also to her additional jointure. There is no time limit in the case of a widow who lives in her late husband's house.

(7) The children are entitled to their mother's additional jointure just as they are entitled to her statutory kethubah and to the dowry, which her father gave to her husband on the occasion of their marriage, and which also forms a part of the kethubah obligations of a husband.

(8) V. Mishnah supra 52b.

(9) מַעֲרָת בֵּיתִית (lit., ‘mouth of Beditha’, one of the canals of the Euphrates), was a Babylonian town famous as a Jewish centre of learning.

(10) Of the widow's late husband.

(11) One inherits free assets only.

(12) Lit., ‘sons of’.

(13) מַעֲרָת מָתִיס (lit., ‘mouth of Matiss’), is a suburb of Sura in Babylonia.

(14) Instead of they shall inherit. This implies that the children are entitled to the kethubah as a gift made to them by their father at the time of his marriage with the right to seize his property wherever it may be found.

(15) Pledged by a husband for the kethubah of his wife.

(16) At the time of the man's death.

(17) By the widow who, in other circumstances, is required to take an oath to the effect that her late husband had not given her some money or objects of value as a security for her kethubah.

(18) Since it is definitely known what objects of value had been set aside for her kethubah there is no reason to suspect that any other objects or money also had been secretly deposited with her.

(19) If, e.g., they were lost.

(20) From the landed property of the deceased, since all of it is legally pledged for the kethubah of one's wife.

(21) Lit., ‘sons’.

(22) As a special security for her kethubah.

(23) When her husband dies.

(24) Cf. supra p. 325, n. 14, mutatis mutandis.

(25) V. loc. cit. n. 13.

(26) As only one of the four boundaries had been indicated the plot of land cannot be regarded as a definite security, and the suspicion may be entertained that her husband may have given her some private deposit as a security for her kethubah (cf. supra p. 325, n. 13).

(27) E.g., of a gift of land.

(28) Lit., ‘to him’.

(29) Before the deed is written (Rashi).

(30) Whether his instructions were seriously meant or whether he has not since changed his mind (cf. Rashi). According to some authorities the consultation relates to the question of entering a clause pledging the donor's property (cf. Tosaf. s.v. בָּעָר בֵּיתִית).

(31) Whose opinion in our Mishnah is based on the assumption that THE MAN PROMISED . . . WITH THE SOLE OBJECT etc.

(32) Wherever a man did not specify his intention or motive.

(33) Cur. edd. read ‘R. Nathan’. In Hul. 75b the reading is ‘R. Jonathan’, and in Men. 30b ‘R. Johanan’.

(34) Who gave instructions for a letter of divorce to be written for his wife. The document may be delivered to the woman, even though its delivery was not mentioned in the instructions, because it is assumed that the dying man intended it for this purpose (v. Git. 65b).

and in that of terumah1 of the tithe of demai2 produce.3 But does not Rab, however, follow [the rule of] assumption? Surely it was stated: As to the gift of a dying man4 [in the deed of] which was recorded [symbolic] acquisition, the school of Rab in the name of Rab reported [that the testator] has [thereby] made him5 ride on two harnessed horses,6 but Samuel said: I do not know what decision to give on the matter. ‘The school of Rab in the name of Rab reported [that the testator] has [thereby] made him ride on two harnessed horses’, for it is like the gift of a man in good health,7 and it is also like the gift of a dying man.8 ‘It is like the gift of a man in good health’, in that, if he recovered, he cannot retract,9 and ‘it is like the gift of a dying man’ in that, if he said that his loan9 [shall be given] to X, his loan [is to be given] to X.10 ‘But Samuel said: I do not know what decision to give on the matter’, since it is possible that he11 decided not to transfer possession to him12 except through the deed,\textsuperscript{13} and no [possession by means of a] deed [may be acquired] after [the testator's] death!\textsuperscript{14}

\item Not merely by virtue of the legal validity of his instructions (v. supra note 3).
\item Hence it was difficult for Samuel to give a decision on the matter (v. B.B. Sonc. ed. p. 658, n. 11). As Rab, however, definitely ruled in favour of the donee on the assumption that the donor ‘made him ride on two harnessed horses’, it follows that Rab is guided by the rule of assumption. How then could it be implied supra that it was Rab who held that the halachah was not in agreement with R. Eleazar b. Azariah!

\textbf{Talmud - Mas. Kethuboth 56a}

— The fact, however, is that both\textsuperscript{1} follow [the rule of] assumption; and he who stated that the halachah [was so]\textsuperscript{2} was well justified, [while in respect of] him who stated that the halachah was not [so],\textsuperscript{3} [it may be explained that] here\textsuperscript{4} also [the ruling is based on] an assumption, that the man's object\textsuperscript{5} [it is assumed] was the formation of a mutual attachment,\textsuperscript{6} and such attachment has indeed been formed.\textsuperscript{7} R. Hanina\textsuperscript{8} once sat in the presence of R. Jannai when he stated: The halachah is in agreement with R. Eleazar b. Azariah. [The Master] said to him, ‘Go Out’ read your Biblical verses outside;\textsuperscript{9} the halachah is not in agreement with R. Eleazar b. Azariah’. R. Isaac b. Abdimi stated in the name of our Master.\textsuperscript{10} The halachah is in agreement with R. Eleazar b. Azariah. R. Nahman stated in the name of Samuel: The halachah is in agreement with R. Eleazar b. Azariah. R. Nahman in his own name, however, stated that the halachah was not in agreement with R. Eleazar b. Azariah, while the Nehardeans stated in the name of R. Nahman that the halachah was in agreement with R. Eleazar b. Azariah. And though R. Nahman uttered a curse, proclaiming, ‘Such and such a fate shall befall every judge who gives a ruling in agreement with the opinion of R. Eleazar b. Azariah’, the halachah is nevertheless in agreement with R. Eleazar b.Azariah. And the halachah in practice is In accordance with the Opinion of R. Eleazar b. Azariah. Rabin enquired: What is the law\textsuperscript{11} where the bride only entered the bridal chamber but there was no intercourse? Is the kinyan\textsuperscript{12} effected by the affectionate attachment in the bridal chamber\textsuperscript{13} or is the kinyan effected by the affectionate attachment of the intercourse?\textsuperscript{14} — Come and hear what R. Joseph learnt: ‘Because he assigned\textsuperscript{15} it to her only on account of the affectionate attachment of the first night’. Now, if you grant that it is the affectionate attachment in the bridal chamber that effects the kinyan it was correct for him to state ‘the first night’. If, however, you contend that it is the affectionate attachment of the intercourse that effects the kinyan, does this [it may be objected, first] take place on the first night only and not subsequently? — What then [do you suggest]? The [affectionate attachment in the] bridal chamber? Is the bridal chamber [it may be retorted] entered\textsuperscript{16} in the night only and not in the day time!\textsuperscript{17} — But according to your argument does intercourse take place at night and not in the day time? Surely Raba stated: If one was in a dark room [intercourse] is permitted\textsuperscript{18} — This is no difficulty. He\textsuperscript{19} may have taught us that it is proper conduct\textsuperscript{20} that intercourse should be at night; but [if it is maintained that it is the affectionate attachment in the bridal chamber that effects the kinyan; the difficulty arises! — The assumption that kinyan is effected in the bridal chamber also presents no difficulty. Since, usually, the bridal chamber is a prelude to intercourse he taught us that it was proper that it should be entered at night. R. Ashi enquired: What is the law where a bride entering the bridal chamber became menstruous? If you should find some reason for saying that it is the affectionate attachment in the bridal chamber that effects the kinyan! [the question still remains whether this applies only to a bridal chamber that is a prelude to intercourse but not to a bridal chamber that is no prelude to intercourse, or is there perhaps no difference? — This remains unanswered. R. JUDAH SAID: IF A HUSBAND WISHES HE MAY WRITE OUT FOR A VIRGIN etc. Does R. Judah hold the opinion that a quittance is written? Surely we learned: If a person repaid part of his debt, R. Judah said, he must exchange [the bond for another]. R. Jose said: He must write a quittance for him! — R. Jeremiah replied: [Here it is a case] where the quittance is [written] within. Abaye replied: You may even say [that here it is a case] where the quittance is not written within. There it is quite correct to disallow the use of a quittance, since the debtor had undoubtedly repaid him and it is possible that the quittance might be lost and that he would produce the bond and thus collect the paid portion of the debt a second time. Here, however, did he indeed give her anything? It is a mere statement that she addressed to him. If, then, he preserved [the quittance] well and good, and if he did not preserve it, well, it is he himself who is the cause of his own loss. One can well understand why Abaye did not give the explanation as R. Jeremiah, since it was not stated that the quittance was entered within, but why did not R. Jeremiah give the same explanation as Abaye? — The quittance here is forbidden as a preventive measure against the [erroneous permitting of] a quittance elsewhere. The reason [for the husband's exemption is apparently] because she gave him a quittance in writing. If, however, [she had surrendered a portion of her kethubah by word of mouth only] he would not have been exempt; but why? This, surely, is a monetary matter, and R. Judah was heard to rule that in a monetary matter one's stipulation is valid. For was it not taught: If a man said to a woman, 'Behold thou art consecrated unto me on condition that thou shalt have no claim upon me for food, raiment or conjugal rights', she is consecrated, but the stipulation is null; so R. Meir. R. Judah, however, said: In respect of monetary matters his stipulation is valid? — R. Judah is of the opinion that the kethubah is a Rabbinical enactment, and the Sages have applied to their enactments higher restrictions than to those of the Torah. But what of the case of usufruct which is a Rabbinical law and the Rabbis nevertheless did not apply any restriction to it; for we learned: R. Judah said, He may for all time eat the fruit of the fruit unless he wrote out for her [the undertaking], 'I have no claim whatsoever upon your estates and their produce and the produce of their produce forever';
And since this has not taken place the bride can only claim the statutory minimum.

Lit., ‘wrote’.

Why then did R. Joseph mention ‘night’?

In the day time. V. infra 65b, Shab. 86a.

R. Joseph. V. supra n. 5.

Lit., ‘the way of the earth’.

V. supra n. 5.

Lit., ‘stands for’.

Is the bride entitled to the additional jointure of her kethubah? Cf. supra p. 328, n. 9.

The bridegroom dying before intercourse had taken place. Intercourse with a menstruant is Pentateuchally forbidden. (Cf. Lev. XVIII, 19). (13) Cf. supra p. 328, n. 10.

Lit., ‘suitable’.

Lit., p. 329, n. 12. The bride would consequently have no claim upon the additional sum she was promised.

The bride being entitled in either case to the full amount.

By a creditor to whom part of a debt was repaid; and consequently there is no need to exchange the bond for one in which the balance only is entered.

The creditor.

In which only the balance of the original debt is entered while the first bond is destroyed. The debtor cannot be compelled to accept a quittance which he would have ‘to guard from mice’ and the loss of which might involve him in a claim for the repayment of the full loan. It is more equitable that the creditor should change the bond.

The creditor.

B.B. 170b. Such a course is advantageous to the creditor, since a bond entitles its holder to seize any real estate which the debtor has sold or mortgaged after, but not before the date of his bond. Were a new bond for the balance to be written, the creditor would lose his right to seize any of the debtor's property that was sold or mortgaged between the date of the original bond and that of the new one. In the opinion of R. Jose the rights of the creditor must not be impaired, while in the opinion of R Judah equity demands that the debtor be not encumbered with the necessity of taking care of the quittance (cf. supra n. 6). How then could it be stated here that R. Judah allowed the writing of a quittance?

I.e., is entered on the kethubah itself, so that the husband, unlike the debtor spoken of in B.B., has no need to preserve any document.

Cf. supra n. 9.

The case of the kethubah.

A debt, for instance, where R. Judah does not allow it (cf. supra p. 330, n. 6).

From the payment of the part of the kethubah which his wife has surrendered (v. our Mishnah).

Talmud - Mas. Kethuboth 56b

and it had been established that by ‘writing’ only saying was meant — Abaye replied: All [married women] have a kethubah; not all, however, have fruit. In respect of what is usual the Rabbis have applied restrictions. In respect of what is not usual, however, the Rabbis have made no restrictions. But what of the case of ass-drivers which is a common occurrence and the Rabbis have nevertheless applied no restrictions to it; for we learned: Where ass-drivers entered a town and one of them declared, ‘My [produce] is new and that of my fellow is old’ or ‘Mine is not fit for use but that of my fellow is fit’, they are not believed; but R. Judah said, They are believed — Abaye replied: To any Rabbinical enactment of an absolute character the Rabbis have applied further restrictions, but to any Rabbinical enactment of uncertain origin the Rabbis have added no further restrictions. Raba replied: They relaxed the law in respect of demai. R. MEIr RULED . . . ANY MAN WHO . . . GIVE . . . LESS etc. The expression, ‘WHO . . . GIVE . . . LESS’ [implies] even [if the assignment remained a mere] stipulation. Thus it follows that he is of the opinion that the man's stipulation is void and that the woman receives [her full kethubah]; yet since the man had said to her: ‘You will have but a maneh’, her mind is not at ease and his intercourse is regarded as an act of prostitution. But, surely, R. Meir was heard to rule that any stipulation which is contrary to what is written in the Torah is null and void, [from which it may be inferred, may it not, that if it is] but against a law of the Rabbis it is valid — R. Meir holds the view that the kethubah is a Pentateuchal institution. It was taught: R. Meir ruled, If any man assigns to a virgin a sum less than two hundred zuz or to a widow less than a maneh his marriage is regarded as an act of prostitution. R. Jose ruled: One is permitted [to contract such a marriage]. R. Judah ruled: If the man wished he may write out for a virgin a bond for two hundred zuz while she writes for him, ‘I have received from you a maneh’; and [he may write a bond] for a widow for a maneh while she writes for him, ‘I have received from you fifty zuz’. Is R. Jose then of the opinion that ‘one is permitted [to contract such a marriage]’? — R. Meir holds the view that the kethubah may not be made [a charge on] movable property as a social measure. Said R. Jose: What social measure is this? Their price, surely, is not fixed and they deteriorate in value. Now, did not the first Tanna also say that [a kethubah] may not be made [a charge on movable property]? Must he not, consequently, have meant to say: This applies only where he accepted no responsibility, but where he accepted responsibility [the kethubah] may be made [a charge upon them]. Thereupon came R. Jose to question: Even If he did accept responsibility how [could the kethubah be] made [a charge upon them] when their price, surely, is not fixed and they deteriorate in value. Now, if there, where the diminution in value [of the movables] is only a possibility, R. Jose provides against it, would he not even more so [adopt a similar course] here where the diminution [of the kethubah] is a certainty? — How now! There she did not know it to think of surrendering her rights, but here she was well aware [of the fact] and has definitely surrendered her rights. The sister of Rami b. Hama was married to R. Iwia

(1) In R. Judah's statement.
(2) Lit., ‘what writes? says’. Which proves that, according to R. Judah no restrictions were made even in the case of a Rabbinical law.

(3) About whose imported produce it is uncertain whether it has been tithed (v. Glos. s.v. Demai). Such produce is only Rabbinically forbidden.

(4) I.e., it had not been duly tithed.

(5) Demai IV, 7, v. supra p. 131 notes. Which shows that, according to R. Judah, no restriction was imposed even on a Rabbinically forbidden produce. (Cf. supra note 8).

(6) Lit., ‘a certainty of their words’.

(7) As in the case of demai where the prohibition is due to the uncertainty whether or not the produce had been tithed.

(8) The Rabbis, though they applied restriction even in cases where their prohibition was due merely to an uncertainty.

(9) V. Glos. The uncertainty here is so great, since most people even among the ‘amme ha-’arez (v. Glos. s.v. ‘Am ha-’arez) do give tithe, that no restrictions were applied to it. (Cf. supra note 8).

(10) Since the expression used is not ‘if the virgin received less’.

(11) While the woman in fact receives the full amount of her kethubah.

(12) R. Meir.

(13) Cf. supra n. 2. Lit., ‘and there is to her’.

(14) [Lit., ‘and since’. The text is not smooth. MS.M. preserves a better reading ‘but since she had (a full kethubah) what is the reason (of R. Meir)?’ — Since he said to her etc.].

(15) The virgin who is entitled to two hundred zuz.

(16) One hundred zuz (v. Glos.).

(17) [Lit., ‘her mind does not rest, rely upon’, i.e., she contracted her marriage on the expectation of a kethubah of a smaller amount than the prescribed minimum.]

(18) [Since the marriage was not performed in accordance with the requirements of the law, it is regarded as an act of prostitution.]

(19) Lit., ‘whoever makes a stipulation’.

(20) Lit., ‘his stipulation’.

(21) Since he mentions the Torah only.

(22) As a kethubah is an enactment of the Rabbis (v. R. Judah's view supra 56a), why is the stipulation void?

(23) As her kethubah.

(24) Lit., ‘behold this’.

(25) The stipulation being valid even if the woman's surrender of her right was only verbal.

(26) Contrary to the opinion of R. Jose, R. Judah maintains that a verbal stipulation or undertaking against a Rabbinical measure is of no validity.

(27) Half a maneh.

(28) I.e., one where the kethubah amounts to less than the prescribed minimum.

(29) Lit., ‘because of making the world right’. Movable objects may be easily lost and do not provide a reliable security for the kethubah.

(30) Lit., ‘there is in this’.

(31) Movable objects.

(32) While a kethubah must always amount to a legally fixed minimum.

(33) Wherein, then, does R. Jose differ from him?

(34) The first Tanna.

(35) That movable property provides no security for a kethubah.

(36) The husband.

(37) For the loss of the movable property.

(38) The possibility of deterioration in value being disregarded by the first Tanna.

(39) Movable objects.

(40) R. Jose is consequently of the opinion that it is not only against loss but also against a diminution in value that provision must be made.

(41) Where movable objects are assigned as a security.

(42) Lit., ‘perhaps they diminish’.

(43) Where the husband definitely assigned no more than half of the legal maximum.
and her kethubah was lost. When they came before R. Joseph he said to them, Thus said Rab Judah in the name of Samuel: This is the opinion of R. Meir, but the Sages ruled that a man may live with his wife without a kethubah for two or three years. Said Abaye to him: But did not R. Nahman state in the name of Samuel that the halachah is in agreement with R. Meir in his preventive measures? — If so, [the other replied] go and write one for her. When R. Dimi came he stated in the name of R. Simeon b. Pazzi in the name of R. Joshua b. Levi who had it from Bar Kappara: The dispute refers to the beginning, but at the end she cannot, according to the opinion of all, surrender [any portion of her kethubah]. R. Johanan, however stated that their dispute extended to both cases. Said R. Abbahu: [The following] was explained to me by R. Johanan: ‘I and R. Joshua b. Levi do not dispute with one another. The "beginning" of which R. Joshua b. Levi spoke means the beginning of [the meeting in] the bridal chamber, and by the "end" was meant the termination of the intercourse; and when I stated that the dispute extended to both cases [I meant] the beginning [of the meeting in] the bridal chamber and the end of that meeting which is the beginning of the intercourse.’ When Rabin came he stated in the name of R. Simeon b. Pazzi in the name of R. Joshua b. Levi who had it from Bar Kappara: The dispute refers only to the end, but at the beginning she may, so is the opinion of all, renounce [any portion of her kethubah]. R. Johanan, however, stated that their dispute extended to both cases. Said R. Abbahu: This was explained to me by R. Johanan: ‘I and R. Joshua b. Levi do not dispute with one another. The "end" of which R. Joshua b. Levi spoke meant the end of [the meeting in] the bridal chamber, and by the "beginning" was meant the beginning of [the meeting in] the bridal chamber; and when I stated that the dispute extended to both cases [I meant] the beginning, and the termination of the intercourse.’ Said R. Papa: Had not R. Abbahu stated, ‘This was explained to me by R. Johanan: "I and R. Joshua b. Levi do not dispute with one another"’ I would have submitted that R. Johanan and R. Joshua b. Levi were in dispute while R. Dimi and Rabin were not in dispute. The ‘end’ of which Rabin spoke might mean the end of [the meeting in] the bridal chamber, and the ‘beginning’ of which R. Dimi spoke might mean the beginning of the intercourse. What does he teach us thereby? — It is this that he teaches us: [It is preferable to assume] that two Amoraim differ in their own opinions rather than that two Amoraim should differ as to what was the view of another Amora. MISHNAH. A VIRGIN IS ALLOWED TWELVE MONTHS FROM THE [TIME HER INTENDED] HUSBAND CLAIMED HER, [IN WHICH] TO PREPARE HER MARRIAGE OUTFIT. AND, AS [SUCH A PERIOD] IS ALLOWED FOR THE WOMAN, SO IS IT ALLOWED FOR THE MAN FOR HIS OUTFIT. FOR A WIDOW THIRTY DAYS [ARE ALLOWED]. IF THE RESPECTIVE PERIODS EXPIRED AND THEY WERE NOT MARRIED THEY ARE ENTITLED TO MAINTENANCE OUT OF THE MAN’S ESTATE AND [IF HE IS A PRIEST] MAY ALSO EAT TERUMAH. R. TARFON SAID: ALL [THE SUSTENANCE] FOR SUCH A WOMAN MAY BE GIVEN OF TERUMAH. R. AKIBA SAID: ONE HALF OF UNCONSECRATED FOOD AND ONE HALF OF TERUMAH. A LEVIR [WHO IS A PRIEST] DOES NOT CONFER [UPON HIS SISTER-IN-LAW] THE RIGHT OF EATING TERUMAH. IF SHE HAD SPENT SIX MONTHS WITH HER HUSBAND AND SIX MONTHS WITH THE LEVIR, OR EVEN ALL OF THEM WITH HER HUSBAND LESS ONE DAY WITH THE LEVIR, SHE IS NOT PERMITTED TO EAT TERUMAH. THIS WAS THE RULING ACCORDING TO] AN EARLIER MISHNAH. THE COURT, HOWEVER, THAT SUCCEEDED...
I.e., the written marriage contract. V. Glos.

To obtain his ruling on the question whether she may continue to live with her husband without the kethubah.

That living with a wife whose kethubah is less than the prescribed minimum, and much more so with one who has no kethubah at all, is regarded as mere prostitution, even though the woman remained legally entitled to collect the full amount of her kethubah.

Who holds that since the woman is not absolutely certain that she will obtain the full amount of her kethubah (either in the case, supra, because she believes the man's stipulation to be valid or, in this case, because she has no document to prove her claim) it can only be regarded as an act of prostitution (v. supra p. 333, n. 8).

R. Joseph.

The Rabbinical restrictions he added to those of the Torah.

A new marriage contract.

Between R. Judah and R. Jose on the question whether a verbal renouncement of the woman is valid (supra 56b).

This is explained infra.

By a mere verbal statement.

Since she has already acquired it. Only by means of a written quittance may her rights then be surrendered.

I.e., to the ‘beginning’ and ‘end’.

Lit., ‘what’.

R. Judah and R. Jose dispute only in respect of the period between the beginning and the conclusion of the meeting in the bridal chamber but agree that after intercourse the man's stipulation is invalid unless the woman has surrendered her rights in writing. It was, therefore, quite correct for R. Joshua b. Levi to state that ‘at the end (i.e., of the intercourse), she cannot, according to the opinion of all, surrender (i.e., verbally) any part of her kethubah’.

To which the dispute indeed refers (cf. supra p. 335, n. 14).

From Palestine to Babylon.

Supra p. 335, nn. 8-10.

Since she has not yet legally acquired it.

Which corresponds to the termination of the meeting in the bridal chamber.

Whose reports appear contradictory.

Lit., ‘what’.

R. Papa.

In view of R. Abbahu's definite statement R. Papa's remark seems pointless.

Unless there is proof to the contrary.

It is natural and legitimate for opinions to differ.

In which case one of the two must be definitely wrong since the view of the Amora which both of them claim to represent could not possibly have agreed with what both of them submit. Had not R. Abbahu's statement been authoritative, coming as it did from R. Johanan himself, R. Papa's submission would have been preferred to his.

After their betrothal.

Jewels and similar ornaments (v. Rashi).

The preparations for the wedding dinner and the bridal chamber (v. ibid.).

Who is presumed to be in the possession of some trinkets and jewellery from her first marriage.

Lit., ‘the time arrived’.

Owing to the man's delay (v. supra 2b).

The women.

Lit., ‘they eat of his’.

Out of the proceeds of which she may buy unconsecrated food for consumption during the days of her Levitical uncleanness.

For consumption during her period of uncleanness.

For her use in her clean state.

Who became a widow while still betrothed.

Prior to their marriage (v. supra n. 12).
A WOMAN MAY NOT EAT TERUMAH UNTIL SHE HAS ENTERED THE BRIDAL CHAMBER. GEMARA. Whence is this derived? — R. Hisda replied: From Scripture which states, ‘Let the damsel abide with us yamim, at the least ten.’ Now, what could be meant by yamim? If it be suggested ‘two days’, do people, [it might be retorted,] speak in such a manner? [If when] they suggested to him two days he said no, would they then suggest ten days? Yamim must consequently mean a year, for it is written, yamim shall he have the right of redemption. But might it not be said [that yamim means] a month, for it is written, But a month of yamim? — I will tell you: The meaning of an undefined expression of yamim may well be inferred from another undefined expression of yamim, but no undefined expression of yamim may be inferred from one in connection with which month was specifically mentioned. R. Zera stated that a Tanna taught: In the case of a minor, either she herself or her father is empowered to postpone [her marriage]. One can well understand why she is empowered to postpone [the marriage], but [why also her] father? If she is satisfied, what matters it to her father? — He might think this: Now she does not realize [what marriage implies] but to-morrow she will rebel [against her husband], leave him and come back to, and fall [a burden] upon me. R. Abba b. Levi stated: No arrangements may be made for marrying a minor while she is still in her minority. Arrangements may, however, be made while she is a minor for marrying her when she becomes of age. Is not this obvious? — It might have been suggested that [this should not be allowed] as a precaution against the possibility of her beginning to feel anxiety at once and so becoming ill. Hence we were taught [that no such possibility need be considered]. R. Huna stated: If on the day she became adolescent she was betrothed, she is allowed thirty days like a widow. An objection was raised: One who has attained adolescence is like one who has been claimed [by her intended husband in marriage]. Does not this imply, ‘Like a Virgin who was claimed’? — No, like a widow who was claimed. Come and hear: If a woman who is adolescent had waited for twelve months her husband, said R. Eliezer, since he is liable for her maintenance, may also annul [her vows]. Read: A woman who is adolescent or one who waited twelve months. Come and hear: If a man betrothed a virgin, whether he claimed her and she held back or whether she claimed him and he held back, she is allowed twelve months from the time of the claim but not from the time of the betrothal; and one who is adolescent is like one who has been claimed. How [is this to be understood]? If she was betrothed on the day she became adolescent, she is allowed twelve months; while one betrothed [is sometimes allowed] thirty days. Is not this a refutation against R. Huna? — It is a refutation. What [was meant by] ‘while one betrothed [is sometimes allowed] thirty days’? — R. Papa replied, It is this that was meant: If an adolescent woman was betrothed after twelve months of her adolescence have elapsed, she is allowed thirty days like a widow. IF THE RESPECTIVE PERIODS EXPIRED AND THEY WERE NOT MARRIED. ‘Ulla stated: The daughter of an Israelite who is betrothed [to a priest] is, according to Pentateuchal law, permitted to eat terumah, for it is written in Scripture, But if a priest buy any soul, the purchase of his money, and that [woman] also is the purchase of his money. What then is the reason why [the Rabbis] ruled that she is not permitted to eat [terumah]? Because it might happen that when a cup [of terumah] will be offered to her in the house of her father she might give her brother or sister to drink [from it]. If so, [the same reason should apply] also where "THE RESPECTIVE PERIODS EXPIRED AND THEY WERE NOT MARRIED! — In that case he appoints for her a special place. If they feed him from their own [victuals], Would they eat of his? R. Samuel son of Rab Judah explained: Owing to a bodily defect [that might subsequently be detected]. If so, [should not the same reason] also [be applicable to a woman who] had entered the bridal chamber, but intercourse with whom did not take place? — In that case he arranges for her to be first examined and only then takes her in. Now then, the slave of a priest, bought from an Israelite, should not be allowed to eat terumah on account of a bodily defect [that might be discovered]! — [The law of cancellation of a sale owing to a subsequent detection of a] bodily defect does not apply to slaves. For if the defect is external [the buyer] has presumably seen it; and if it is internal, since [the buyer] requires [the slave] for work only he does not mind a private defect. a gambler\(^1\) the sale is still valid.\(^2\) What else is there?\(^3\) [Only that the slave might be found to have been] an armed robber or one proscribed by the government;\(^4\) but such characters are generally known.\(^5\) Consider! Whether according to the [explanation of the one] Master\(^6\) or according to that of the other Master\(^7\) she\(^8\) is not permitted to eat [terumah], what then is the practical difference between them? — The difference between them [is the case where her intended husband] accepted [her defects,\(^9\) or where her father] delivered [her to the intended husband's agents]\(^10\) or went\(^11\) [with them].\(^12\) R. TARFON SAID: ALL [THE SUSTENANCE] FOR SUCH A WOMAN MAY BE GIVEN OF TERUMAH etc. Abaye stated: The dispute\(^13\) applies only to the daughter of a priest\(^14\) who was betrothed to a priest but with respect to the daughter of an Israelite\(^15\) who was betrothed to a priest all\(^16\) agree [that she is supplied with] one half of unconsecrated food\(^17\) and one half of terumah. Gamaliel said, Wherever terumah was mentioned [the woman] is to be given [a supply equal to] twice the quantity of unconsecrated victuals. What is the practical difference between them? — The difference between them [is the question of the woman's] trouble. A LEVIR [WHO IS A PRIEST] DOES NOT CONFER [UPON HIS SISTER-IN-LAW] THE RIGHT OF EATING TERUMAH. What is the reason? — The All-Merciful said, The purchase of his money while she is the purchase of his brother. IF SHE HAD SPENT SIX MONTHS WITH HER HUSBAND. Now that you stated [that even if she spent the full twelve months less one day] WITH THE HUSBAND [she is] not [permitted to eat terumah] is there any need [to mention also] WITH THE LEVIR? — This is a case [of anti-climax:] ‘This, and there is no need to say that’. THIS [WAS THE RULING ACCORDING TO] AN EARLIER MISNAH etc. What is the reason? — ‘Ulla, or some say R. Samuel b. Judah, replied: Owing to a bodily defect [that might subsequently be detected]. According to ‘Ulla one can well understand [the respective rulings of the earlier, and the later rulings], the former being due to the possibility that a cup [of terumah] might be offered to her in the house of her father, and the latter to [the possibility of] the detection of a bodily defect.

In the subject under discussion.

Tosef. Keth. V. ab. init.

In the selling of her terumah. It is difficult to sell terumah (the buyers of which, being priests only, are naturally few) and it must be offered at a very low price. To save the woman trouble R. Gamaliel allows her terumah double the quantity of unconsecrated victuals so that by reducing the price of the former by a half she would easily dispose of it and be able to acquire with the proceeds her required ordinary victuals. R. Judah, however, makes no provision for saving her trouble, and allows her only a slight margin of terumah above that of ordinary food estimated at the current prices.

Who (supra 75b) gave as the reason for the ruling of the earlier Mishnah that the woman might allow her relatives to drink of her cup of terumah.

Forbidding terumah during the first twelve months also permitting it after the expiration of that period.

Which extends the prohibition until the entry into the bridal chamber.

And she might allow her relatives to drink from it (v. supra note 6). As this would not happen after the twelve months when the intended husband, becoming liable for her maintenance and desirous of preventing her from giving away his victuals to her relatives in her father's house, provides for her an abode of her own, the woman was permitted to eat terumah.

V. supra p. 341, n. 3. Hence the extension of the prohibition until the entry into the bridal chamber.

According to R. Samuel b. Judah, however, the earlier [ruling of the] Mishnah is due to [the possible detection of] a bodily defect and the later is also due to [the possible detection of] a bodily defect, what then is [the reason for] their difference? — [The principle underlying] the difference is the [efficacy of an] examination by outsiders. One Master is of the opinion that an examination by others is regarded as effective, while the other Master holds the opinion that an examination by others is not regarded as effective. MISHNAH. IF A MAN CONSECRATED HIS WIFE'S HANDIWORK, SHE MAY NEVERTHELESS CONTINUE TO WORK AND TO CONSUME [THE PROCEEDS HERSELF]. [IF, HOWEVER, HE CONSECRATED] THE SURPLUS ONLY. R. Huna stated in the name of Rab: A woman is entitled to say to her husband, ‘I do not wish either to be maintained by you or to work for you’. He holds the opinion that when the Rabbis regulated [the relations of husband and wife] her maintenance was fundamental while [the assignment of the proceeds] of her handiwork [to her husband] was due [only to their desire for preventing] ill-feeling. If, therefore, she said, ‘I do not wish either to be maintained by you or to work for you’, she is entitled to do so. As the Rabbinical enactment aimed at the benefit of the woman only, she may well decline that favour if she is so minded.

maintenance [for a wife] in return for her handiwork,¹ and a silver ma'ah² in return for the surplus;³ and since the husband does not give her the silver ma'ah, the surplus remains hers.⁴ R. Adda b. Ahabah, however, is of the opinion that maintenance was ordained in return for the surplus,³ and the silver ma'ah in return for her handiwork; and since [the husband] supplies her maintenance, the surplus is his. On what principle do they⁵ differ? — The Masters hold that the usual⁶ is for the usual,⁷ and the Master holds that the fixed [sum]⁸ is for the fixed [quantity].⁹ An objection was raised: Maintenance [for a wife] was provided in return for her handiwork!¹⁰ — Read: In return for the surplus of her handiwork. Come and hear: If he does not give her a silver ma'ah for her other requirements, her handiwork belongs to her!¹¹ — Read: The surplus of her handiwork belongs to her. But, surely, in connection with this statement it was taught: What is the quantity of work that she must do for him? The weight of five sela's of warp in Judaea which is ten sela's in Galilee. Samuel stated: The halachah is in agreement with R. Johanan ha-Sandelar. But could Samuel have made such a statement? Have we not learned: [If a woman said to her husband, ‘Konam, if I do aught for your mouth’,] he need not annul her vow. R. Akiba, however, said: He must annul it, since she might do more work than is due to him. R. Johanan b. Nuri said: He must annul her vow since he might happen to divorce her and she would [owing to her vow] be forbidden to return to him. And Samuel stated: The halachah is in agreement with R. Johanan b. Nuri? — When Samuel stated, ‘The halachah is in agreement with R. Johanan b. Nuri’ [he referred only] to the surplus. Then let him specifically state, ‘The halachah is in agreement with R. Johanan b. Nuri in respect of the surplus’, or else ‘The halachah is not in agreement with the first Tanna’, or else, ‘The halachah is in agreement with R. Akiba! — But, replied R. Joseph, you speak of konamoth? Konamoth are different. For, as a man may forbid to himself the fruit of his fellow so may he also consecrate that which is not yet in existence. Said Abaye to him: It is quite logical that a man should be entitled to forbid the use of the fruit of his fellows to himself, since he may also forbid his own fruit to his fellow; should he, however, have the right to forbid something that is not yet in existence, seeing that no man has the right to forbid the fruit of his fellow to his fellow? — But, replied R. Huna son of R. Joshua, [that is a case] where the woman said, ‘My hands shall be consecrated to Him who created them’, such consecration being valid since her hands are in existence. But even if she had said so, could she consecrate them? Are they not mortgaged to him? — [This is a case] where she said, ‘When I shall have been divorced’. But is there a consecration that could not take effect now and would nevertheless become effective later? — And why not? retorted R. Elai. Were a man to say to his friend, ‘This field that I am selling you shall be consecrated as soon as I shall have re-purchased it from you’, would it not become consecrated? R. Jeremiah demurred: What a comparison? There both the field itself and its produce are in the possession of the buyer, but here the wife's person is in her own possession. This is rather similar to the case of a man who said to another, ‘This field which I have sold to you shall become consecrated after I shall have re-purchased it from you’, where it does not become consecrated. R. Papa demurred: Are the two cases at all similar? There both the field itself and its produce are in the possession of the buyer, but here the wife's person is in her own possession. This is rather similar to the case of a man who said to another,

In our Mishnah.

(18) קנה, (konam) one of the expressions of a vow. V. Glos.

(19) I.e., that her husband shall be forbidden to eat anything prepared by her or purchased from the proceeds of her work.

(20) The husband who is empowered to annul his wife's vows. V. Num. XXX, 7f.

(21) As a wife's work belongs to her husband she has no right to dispose of it by vow or in any other way. Her vow is, therefore, null and void and requires no invalidation.

(22) More than the quantity to which he is entitled (v. infra 64b). Any work in excess of that quantity remains at the disposal of the wife who is entitled to forbid it to her husband by a vow. Hence the necessity for annulment.

(23) Not only on account of the surplus as stated by R. Akiba.

(24) When he loses all claim to her work, and her vow becomes effective.

(25) He would not be able to remarry her because her vow would prevent her from performing for him any of the services which a wife must do for her husband. [R. Johanan b. Nuri is of the opinion that the surplus belongs to the husband and the woman has thus no right to forbid it to him by vow.]

(26) V. Ned. 85a and infra 66a and 70a.

(27) According to whom the woman's vow becomes valid after her divorce though at the time the vow was made the work she will do afterwards has not yet come into existence. From this it follows that a person may similarly consecrate anything that is not yet in existence. How, then, could Samuel who adopts this view as the halachah also state that the halachah is in agreement with R. Johanan ha-Sandelar according to whom a thing which is not yet in existence cannot be consecrated? [For this can be the only reason for R. Johanan ha-Sandelar's view in the Mishnah according to Samuel who explained the reference in the Mishnah to be to the surplus after the wife's death (v. supra p. 347) which R. Johanan ha-Sandelar will regard as unconsecrated because, at the time when the husband consecrated his wife's handiwork, it was not yet in existence (Rashi).]

(28) And not to all her work which has not yet come into existence. This answer could be easily refuted, since the same objection that has been raised against the 'handiwork' may equally be raised against the 'surplus' which also was not in existence when the vow was made. This had been waived, however, in view of the more general objection that follows (Rashi). [Tosaf: Samuel's statement that the halachah is like R. Johanan b. Nuri is limited to his view that the surplus belongs to the husband v. supra p. 349. n. 14].

(29) Samuel.

(30) From which it would be inferred that annulment of the vow is necessary only on account of the surplus.

(31) Who specifically mentioned the surplus. Since none of these expressions was used it is obvious that Samuel could not have referred to the surplus only.

(32) Plural of konam, a general term for vows which are usually introduced by konam.

(33) In making a vow.

(34) Though he could not consecrate such fruit to the Sanctuary.

(35) I.e prohibit to himself by a vow.

(36) I.e., seeing that he can, by means of a vow, prohibit to himself a thing which is not in his possession, he can also prohibit a thing which is not yet in existence. Hence the validity of the vow. In our Mishnah, however, where the subject is ordinary consecration to the sanctuary, halachah is indeed in agreement with R. Johanan ha-Sandelar that the consecration is invalid.

(37) R. Joseph. ‘To him’ is wanting in MS.M.

(38) By a vow.

(39) To any particular person, by means of a vow, or to everybody by a general consecration to the Sanctuary.

(40) He may forbid his fellow's fruit to himself as the master of his own body; and he may forbid his fruit to his fellow as the owner of his fruit.

(41) The woman's work. Neither her work (which has not yet been done) nor her right to it (which she will regain only after divorce) is yet in existence.

(42) Even by a vow.

(43) Certainly not. As a person has no right to do the latter, he being neither master of his fellow's body nor owner of his fruit, so he should not be entitled to do the former (v. supra note 1.)

(44) R. Johanan b. Nuri's ruling which Samuel adopted as the halachah.

(45) Whereas our Mishnah deals with the case where she consecrated her handiwork, and this is not yet in existence.
Her husband. How then could she consecrate that which is not hers?

The consecration shall take effect.

At that time she is again independent of her husband.

As in the case under discussion where the woman while living with her husband is ineligible to dispose of her work.

Obviously not. How then could the halachah be in agreement with R. Johanan b. Nuri?

When it is re-purchased.

It certainly would. Similarly in the case of a woman's work after she is divorced.

Since at the time of the consecration it is still to his possession. Hence also the effectiveness of his present consecration after he had re-purchased that field.

In the case of the consecration of a wife's work while she is still with her husband.

How then could she have the power to consecrate her work even for the future?

Lit., 'this is not equal but',

Because at the time of the consecration it was no longer in his possession.

'This field which I have mortgaged to you shall be consecrated after I have redeemed it,' where it is consecrated. R. Shisha son of R. Idi demurred: Are these cases similar? There it is in his power to redeem it; but here she has no power to divorce herself. This is rather similar to the case of a man who said to his fellow, 'This field which I have mortgaged to you for ten years shall be consecrated when I shall have redeemed it', where it becomes consecrated. R. Ashi demurred: Are these cases similar? There he has the power to redeem it at least after ten years, but here she has never the power to divorce herself!— But, replied R. Ashi, you speak of konamoth! Konamoth are different from ordinary vows since they effect the consecration of the body itself; and [the reason here is the same] as that of Raba, for Raba stated: Consecration, leavened food and manumission cancel a mortgage. They should then become consecrated forthwith! — The Rabbis have imparted force to a husband's rights over his wife so that they shall not become consecrated forthwith.

MISHNAH. THE FOLLOWING ARE THE KINDS OF WORK WHICH A WOMAN MUST PERFORM FOR HER HUSBAND: GRINDING CORN, BAKING BREAD, WASHING CLOTHES, COOKING, SUCKLING HER CHILD, MAKING READY HIS BED AND WORKING IN WOOL. IF SHE BROUGHT HIM ONE BONDWOMAN SHE NEED NOT DO ANY GRINDING OR BAKING OR WASHING. [IF SHE BROUGHT] TWO BONDWOMEN, SHE NEED NOT EVEN COOK OR SUCKLE HER CHILD. IF THREE, SHE NEED NEITHER MAKE READY HIS BED NOR WORK IN WOOL. IF FOUR, SHE MAY LOUNGE IN AN EASY CHAIR. R. ELIEZER SAID: EVEN IF SHE BROUGHT HIM A HUNDRED BONDWOMEN HE MAY COMPEL HER TO WORK IN WOOL; FOR IDLENESS LEADS TO UNCHASTITY. R. SIMEON B. GAMALIEL SAID: EVEN IF A MAN FORBADE HIS WIFE UNDER A VOW TO DO ANY WORK HE MUST DIVORCE HER AND GIVE HER KETHUBAH TO HER FOR IDLENESS LEADS TO IDIOCY. GEMARA. GRINDING CORN! How could you imagine this? — Read: Attending to the grinding. And if you prefer I might say: With a hand mill. Our Mishnah does not agree with the view of Beth Shammai. For was it not taught: If a woman vowed not to sickle her child she must, said Beth Shammai, pull the breast out of its mouth, and Beth Hillel said: [Her husband] may compel her to suckle it. If she was divorced he cannot compel her; but if [the child] knows her [her husband] pays her the fee and may compel her to suckle it in order [to avert] danger. It may be said to be in agreement even with the view of Beth Shammai, but here we are dealing with such a case, for instance, where the woman made a vow and her husband confirmed it; Beth Shammai being of the opinion that he has thereby put his finger between her teeth, while Beth Hillel hold that it is she that has put her finger between her teeth. Then let them express their disagreement as regards a kethubah generally. Furthermore, it was taught: Beth Shammai said: She need not suckle her child. — But, clearly, our Mishnah is not in agreement with the view of Beth Shammai. 'If [the child] knows her'.

(1) The mortgaged field.
(2) The man who consecrated the field.
(3) During which period he has no power to redeem it, as a wife has no power to divorce herself.
(4) The ten years’ mortgage.
(5) The two cases, therefore, cannot be compared.
(6) Of the animal or object consecrated.
(7) In relation to the man concerned; and unlike other consecrations to the Temple Treasury, can never be redeemed.
(8) For the validity of the consecration of the wife’s work.
(9) Of a pledged animal for the altar.
(10) Which is pledged to a non-Israelite but kept in the possession of an Israelite when the time for its destruction on the Passover Eve arrives. No leaven or leavened food though pledged to a non-Jew may be kept in Jewish possession from the mid-day of Passover Eve until the conclusion of the Passover festival.
(11) Of a mortgaged slave.
(12) Similarly here, the consecration cancels the husband’s claim upon the body or work of his wife. Hence the validity of her consecration.
(13) The wife’s hands.
(14) V. supra n. 15.
(15) Why then has it been stated that the consecration becomes effective only after her divorce.
(16) lit., ‘the subjection or pledging to the husband’.
(17) His rights, as long as she lives with him, are not merely those of a creditor to whom an object has been mortgaged or pledged but the fuller rights of a buyer. For further notes on the whole of this passage, v. Ned. Sonc. ed. pp. 265ff.
(18) Or a sum that would purchase one.
(19) Or their value. V. supra n. 1.
(20) Lit., ‘sit’.
(21) I.e., she need not perform even minor services for him. She is under no obligation to leave her chair to bring him any object even from the same house (cf. Rashi). cf. , ‘an easy chair’, ‘soft seat’.
(22) Her husband.
(23) Or, according to another interpretation, ‘should’.
(24) I.e., precautions must be taken against idleness not only in the case mentioned by R. Eliezer but also in the following where the husband himself forbade the work.
(25) Thus enabling her to engage in work again.
(27) A woman, surely, could not be expected to turn the sails or the wheels of a mill.
(28) Lit., ‘causing’.
(29) She performs the accompanying services only.
(30) Which imposes duties of work upon a wife.
(31) Lit., ‘a woman is not but’.
(33) Not as a bondwoman for her husband. R. Hiyya agrees, however, that a wife is expected to work in wool in return for the maintenance her husband allow’s her. His only objection is to menial work such as the grinding of corn which has an injurious effect upon her womanly grace. V. Tosaf. s.v.ignant.
(34) Lit., ‘to nurse’, ‘to make pliant’, ‘to make graceful’.
(35) Lit., ‘that he may make white’.
(36) Which imposes upon a wife the duty of suckling her children.
(37) I.e., her vow is valid, because she is under no obligation to suckle her child.
(38) According to their view it is a mother's duty to suckle her child and her vow is, therefore, null and void.
(39) And refuses to be nursed by any other woman (Rashi). [Isaiah Trani: Even if it does not refuse to be suckled by another woman, its separation from its mother, whom it has learnt to recognize, may prove injurious to the infant].
(40) Tosef. Keth. V. Since Beth Shammai maintain here that a wife is under no obligation to suckle her children (cf. supra n. 6) out Mishnah (cf. supra n. 5) obviously cannot be in agreement with their view.
(41) In the cited Baraitha.
(42) I.e., it is the husband's fault that the vow remained valid. He could easily have annulled it had he wished to do so. (V. Num. XXX, 7ff).
(43) She should not have vowed (cf. supra note 7).
(44) If, as now suggested, the husband has confirmed the vow the woman had made.
(45) Beth Shammai and Beth Hillel.
(46) Where a woman vowed that her husband was to have no benefits from her. According to Beth Shammai she would be entitled to her kethubah because it is the man's fault that her vow remained valid (cf. supra p. 354, n. 11), while according to Beth Hillel she would receive no kethubah because the making of the vow was her fault (cf. p. 354. n. 12).
(47) In respect of any woman, even one who made no vow.
(48) How then could it be suggested that our Mishnah is in agreement with the view of Beth Shammai?

Talmud - Mas. Kethuboth 60a

At what age? — Raba in the name of R. Jeremiah b. Abba who had it from Rab replied: Three months. Samuel, however, said: Thirty days; while R. Isaac stated in the name of R. Johanan: Fifty days. R. Shimi b. Abaye stated: The halachah is in agreement with the statement of R. Isaac which was made in the name of R. Johanan. One can well understand [the respective views of] Rab and R. Johanan since they are guided by the child's keenness of perception. According to Samuel, however, is such [precocity] at all possible? — When Rami b. Ezekiel came he said, ‘Pay no regard to those rules which my brother Judah laid down in the name of Samuel; for this said Samuel: As soon as [the child] knows her’. A [divorced woman] once came to Samuel [declaring her refusal to suckle her son]. ‘Go’, he said to R. Dimi b. Joseph, ‘and test her case’. He went and placed her among a row of women and, taking hold of her child, carried him in front of them. When he came up to her [the child] looked at her face with joy, but she turned her eye away from him. ‘Lift up your eyes’, he called to her, ‘come, take away your son’. How does a blind child know [its mother]? R. Ashi said: By the smell and the taste.

Our Rabbis taught: A child must be breast fed for twenty-four months. From that age onwards he is to be regarded as one who sucks an abominable thing; these are the words of R. Eliezer. R. Joshua said: [He may be breast fed] even for four or five years. If, however, he ceased after the twenty-four months and started again he is to be regarded as sucking an abominable thing. The Master said, ‘From that age onwards he is to be regarded as one who sucks an abominable thing’. But I could point out a contradiction: As it might have been presumed that human milk is forbidden since such [prohibition may be deduced from the following] logical argument: If in the case of a beast in respect of which the law of contact has been relaxed [the use of] its milk has nevertheless been restricted, how much more should the use of his milk be restricted in the case of a human being in respect of whom the law of contact has been restricted; hence it was specifically stated, The camel because it cheweth the cud [. . . it is unclean unto you]. only ‘it’ is unclean; human milk, however, is not unclean but clean. As it might also have been presumed that only [human] milk is excluded because [the use of milk] is not equally [forbidden] in all cases but that [human] blood is not excluded since [the prohibition of eating blood] is equally applicable in all cases, hence it was specifically stated, it, only ‘it’ is forbidden; human blood, however, is not forbidden but permitted. And [in connection with this teaching] R. Shesheth has stated: Even [a Rabbinical] ordinance of abstinence is not applicable to it! — This is no difficulty. The latter [refers to milk] that has left [the breast] whereas the former [refers to milk] which has not left [the breast]. [This law, however], is reversed in the case of blood, as it was taught: [Human] blood which [is found] upon a loaf of bread must be scraped off and [the bread] may only then be eaten; but that which is between the teeth may be sucked without any scruple. The Master stated, ‘R. Joshua said: [He may be breast fed] even for four or five years’. But was it not taught that R. Joshua said: Even when [he carries] his bundle on his shoulders? — Both represent the same age. R. Joseph stated: The halachah is in agreement with R. Joshua. It was taught: R. Marinus said, A man suffering from an attack on the chest may suck milk [from a beast] on the Sabbath. What is the reason? — Sucking is an act of unusual unloading against which, where pain is involved, no preventive measure has been enacted by the Rabbis. R. Joseph stated: The halachah is in agreement with R. Marinus. It was taught: Nahum the Galatian stated, If rubbish was collected in a gutter it is permissible to crush it with one's foot quietly on the Sabbath, and one need have no scruples about the matter. What is the reason? — Such repair is carried out in an unusual manner against which, when loss is involved, the Rabbis enacted no preventive measure. R. Joseph stated: The halachah is in agreement with the ruling of Nahum the Galatian. ‘If he ceased, however, after the twenty-four months and started again he is to be regarded as one who sucks an abominable thing’. And for how long? — R. Judah b. Habiba replied in the name of Samuel: For three days. Others read: R. Judah b. Habiba recited before Samuel: ‘For three days’. Our Rabbis taught: A nursing mother whose husband died within twenty-four months [of the birth of their child] shall neither be betrothed nor married again.

(1) Lit., ‘until how much?’ i.e., at what age is a child assumed to know its mother, and to refuse in consequence to be suckled by another woman?
(2) Lit., ‘every one according to his sharpness’; the former fixing it at the age of three months and the latter at that of fifty days.
(3) That a child should know its mother at the age of thirty days.
(4) From Palestine to Babylon, v. infra 111b.
(5) Whatever its age.
(6) May a mother be compelled to suckle it, even after she has been divorced. She is only entitled to a fee from the child's father.
(7) To ascertain whether the child knew its mother.

(18) Of the unclean classes enumerated in Lev. XI, 4ff and Deut, XIV, 7ff.
(19) By a human being.
(20) Contact with a live animal, even of the unclean classes (v. supra n. 10), does not cause uncleanness.
(21) It is forbidden for human consumption (v. Bek, 6b).
(22) Contact with a menstruant, for instance, causes uncleanness.
(23) Emphasis on ‘it’ ( נַנְתָּה) (v. infra n. 20).
(25) Lit., ‘I take out’, sc. from the prohibition of consuming it.
(26) The milk of a clean beast being permitted.
(27) From the restriction of consuming it.
(28) Even the blood of a clean beast is forbidden.

30 Cf. Ker. 22a and infra n. 6.

31 I.e., human milk is not only Pentateuchally, but also Rabbinically permitted. How then is this ruling to be harmonized with the previous Baraitha cited from Niddah which regards human milk as an ‘abominable thing’?

32 Lit., ‘that’, the last mentioned Baraitha which permits the consumption of human milk.

33 And is collected in a utensil.

34 Which, regarding the milk as an ‘abominable thing’, forbids it to one older than twenty-four months.

35 As long as it remains within the body it is permitted; but as soon as it leaves it is forbidden as a preventive measure against the eating of animal blood.

36 I.e., which has not been separated from the body.

37 Ker. 21b.

38 I.e., even at an age when the child is capable of carrying small loads he may still be breast fed. How then is this to be reconciled with the Baraitha cited from Niddah (V. supra note 5)?

39 Lit., ‘one size’ or ‘limit’.

40 vbud (rt. vbv, ‘to groan’), one sighing painfully under an attack angina pectoris. V. Jast.

41 Goat's milk which has a curative effect (v. Rashi).

42 Though the release of the milk from the animal's breast resembles the plucking of a plant from its root, or the unloading of a burden, which is forbidden on the Sabbath,

43 sh rjtkf, lit., ‘as if by the back of the hand’.

44 erpn (rt. erp, Piel, ‘break down’, ‘detach’). Milking an animal with one's hands is regarded as direct unloading (or detaching) which on the Sabbath is Pentateuchally forbidden (cf. Shab. 95a); releasing the milk by sucking is an unusual or indirect unloading or detaching which is only Rabbinically forbidden.

Talmud - Mas. Kethuboth 60b

until [the completion of the] twenty-four months;1 so R. Meir. R. Judah however, permits [remarriage] after eighteen months.2 Said R. Nathan3 b. Joseph: Those surely, are the very words of Beth Shammai and these5 are the very words of Beth Hillel; for Beth Shammai ruled: Twenty-four months,6 while Beth Hillel ruled: Eighteen months!6 R. Simeon b. Gamaliel replied, I will explain:7 According to the view8 [that a child must be breast fed for] twenty-four months9 [a nursing mother] is permitted to marry again after twenty-one months,10 and according to the view11 [that it is to be breast fed for] eighteen months12 she may marry again after fifteen months;13 because a [nursing mother's] milk deteriorates only three months after [her conception].14 ‘Ulla stated: The halachah is in agreement with the ruling of R. Judah;15 and Mar ‘Ukba stated: R. Hanina permitted me to marry [a nursing woman] fifteen months after [the birth of her child].16 Abaye's metayer once came to Abaye and asked him: Is it permissible to betroth [a nursing woman] fifteen months after [her child's birth]? — The other answered him: In the first place17 [whenever there is disagreement] between R. Meir and R. Judah the halachah is in agreement with the view of R. Judah;15 and, furthermore, [in a dispute between] Beth Shammai and Beth Hillel the halachah is in agreement with the view of Beth Hillel;18 and while ‘Ulla said, ‘The halachah is in agreement with R. Judah’,15 Mar ‘Ukba stated, ‘R. Hanina permitted me to marry [a nursing woman] fifteen months after [the birth of her child]’, how much more then [is there no need for you to wait the longer period] since you only intend betrothal.
When he came to R. Joseph the latter told him, ‘Both Rab and Samuel ruled that [a nursing woman] must wait twenty-four months exclusive of the day on which her child was born and exclusive of the day on which she is betrothed’. Thereupon he ran three parasangs after him, (some say, one parasang along sand mounds), but failed to overtake him. Said Abaye: The statement made by the Rabbis that ‘Even [a question about the permissibility of eating] an egg with kutha a man shall not decide in a district [which is under the jurisdiction] of his Master’ was not due [to the view that this might] appear as an act of irreverence but to the reason that [a disciple] would have no success in dealing with the matter. For I have in fact learned the tradition of Rab and Samuel and yet I did not get the opportunity of applying it. Our Rabbis taught: [If a nursing mother] gave her child to a wet nurse or weaned him, or if he died, she is permitted to marry again forthwith. R. Papa and R. Huna son of R. Joshua intended to give a practical decision in accordance with this Baraitha, but an aged woman said to them, ‘I have been in such a position and R. Nahman forbade me [to marry again].’ Surely, this could not have been so; for has not R. Nahman in fact permitted [such remarriage] in the Exilarch’s family? — The family of the Exilarch was different [from ordinary people] because no nurse would break her agreement with them. Said R. Papi to them: Could you not have inferred it from the following? It has been taught: [A married woman] who was always anxious to spend her time at her paternal home, or who has some angry quarrel at her husband’s home, or whose husband was in prison, or had gone to a country beyond the sea, or was old or infirm, or if she herself was barren, old, incapable of procreation or a minor, or if she miscarried after the death of her husband, or was in any other way incapacitated for propagation, must wait three months. These are the words of R. Meir. R. Jose, however, permits betrothal or marriage forthwith. And [in connection with this] R. Nahman stated in the name of Samuel: The halachah is in agreement with R. Meir in respect of his restrictive measures! — ‘This’, they answered him, ‘did not occur to us’. The law is [that if the child] died [remarriage by his mother] is permitted [forthwith], but if she has weaned him [her remarriage] is forbidden. Mar son of R. Ashi ruled: Even if the child died [the remarriage of the mother] is forbidden, it being possible that she has killed it so as to be in a position to marry. It once actually happened that a mother strangled her child. This incident, however, is no proof. That woman was an imbecile, for it is not likely that sane women would strangle their children. Our Rabbis taught: If a woman was given a child to suckle she must not suckle together with it either her own child or the child of any friend of hers. If she agreed to a small allowance for board she must nevertheless eat much. Whilst in charge of the child she must not eat things which are injurious for the milk. Now that you said [that she must] not [suckle] ‘her own child’ was there any need [to state] ‘nor the child of any friend of hers’? — It might have been assumed that only her own child [must not be suckled] because owing to her affection for it she might supply it with more [than the other child] but that the child of a friend of hers [may well be suckled] because if she had no surplus [of milk] she would not have given any at all. Hence we were taught [that even the child of a friend must not be suckled]. ‘If she agreed to a small allowance for board she must nevertheless eat much’. Wherefrom? — R. Shesheth replied: From her own. ‘Whilst in charge of the child she must not eat things which are injurious’. What are these? — R. Kahana replied: For instance, cuscuta, lichen, small fishes and earth. Abaye said: Even pumpkins and quinces. R. Papa said: Even a palm’s heart and unripe dates. R. Ashi said: Even kamak and fish-hash. Some of these cause the flow of the milk to stop while others cause the milk to become turbid. A woman who couples in a mill will have epileptic children. One who couples on the ground will have children with long necks. [A woman] who treads on the blood of an ass will have scabby children. One who eats mustard will have intemperate children. One who eats cress will have bleary-eyed children. One who eats fish brine will have children with blinking eyes. One who eats clay will have ugly children. One who drinks intoxicating liquor will have ungainly children. One who eats meat and drinks wine will have children

(1) Were she to marry sooner and happen to become pregnant, the child would have to be taken from her breast before the proper time.

(2) The shorter period is in his opinion quite sufficient for the suckling of a child.
(4) The words of R. Meir.
(5) R. Judah's words.
(6) As the period during which a child must be breast fed. What then was the object of the repetition of the same views?
(7) Read וְהָּרָאָסִֹנְּא (v. She'iltoth, Wayera, III). Cur. edd. וְרָאָסִֹנְּא (rt. וְרָאָסִֹנְּא, Hif. ‘to over-balance’, ‘compromise’).
(8) Lit., ‘the words of him who says’.
(9) Beth Shammai.
(10) Not, as R. Meir ruled, twenty-four.
(11) Lit., ‘the words of him who says’.
(12) Beth Hillel.
(13) And not, as R. Judah ruled, eighteen.
(14) For three months, at least, after her remarriage the child's breast feeding need not be interrupted. The views of Beth Shammai and Beth Hillel thus differ from those of R. Meir and R. Judah respectively.
(15) That a nursing mother need not wait more than eighteen months.
(16) In agreement with the view of Beth Hillel as interpreted by R. Simeon b. Gamaliel.
(17) Lit., ‘one’.
(18) Who, according to R. Simeon b. Gamaliel's interpretation, require a nursing mother to postpone remarriage for no longer a period than fifteen months.
(19) Abaye, who was a disciple of R. Joseph.
(20) To consult him on the question his metayer addressed to him.
(21) Yeb. 43a.
(22) Abaye.
(23) In an attempt to stop his metayer from acting on his decision.
(24) V. Glos.
(25) That was found in a slaughtered fowl (v. Tosaf. s.v. יָחוֹם a.l.). The question of eating a properly laid egg with milk (v. next note) could of course never arise.
(26) A preserve containing milk.
(27) Though the answer is simple and obvious.
(28) Lit., ‘solve’.
(29) Against the Master.
(30) When the question was addressed to him. MS.M. adds; ‘because at that time I forgot it’.
(31) After her husband's death. She need not wait until the period for suckling mentioned above has expired.
(32) Lit., ‘with me was (such) an event’.
(33) Before the expiration of the period prescribed for the breast feeding of the child.
(34) Lit., ‘Is it so’?
(35) V. supra n. 12.
(36) The children having been entrusted to hired nurses. This actually happened in the case of his own wife Yaltha (v. She'iltoth, Wayera, XIII and cf. Golds. a.l.).
(37) Lit., ‘return’, ‘retract’.
(38) Hence it was safe to allow their widows to remarry (note 12). In the case of ordinary people, however, the nurse might well change her mind at any moment and the child would consequently have to fall back upon the nursing of his own mother. Should she then happen to be in a state of pregnancy the child would be in danger of starvation.
(39) R. Papa and R. Huna.
(40) The decision of R. Nahman reported by the woman,
(41) Pass. particip. of הָלַב ‘to pursue’, ‘be anxious’.
(42) Lit., ‘to go’.
(43) And she was there when her husband died.
(44) At the time of his death.
(45) And there he died.
(46) When her husband's death occurred.
(47) Though in all such cases it is obvious that the woman cannot be pregnant.
(48) Before remarriage or betrothal. This is a precaution against a similar marriage or betrothal on the part of a normal woman who might be pregnant.

(49) This is also the reading of She'iltoth. The reading of Tosef. Yeb. VI, 6 and ‘Erub. 47a is ‘R. Judah’.

(50) After the husband's death. Cf. Yeb, and ‘Erub. l.c.

(51) It is consequently forbidden for any widow to marry again before the prescribed period of three months has elapsed even where the cause of the prohibition, i.e., that of possible pregnancy, does not apply. Similarly in the case of a nursing mother remarriage would obviously be forbidden even where the child died or is otherwise independent of his mother's nursing. Why then had R. Papa and R. Huna to rely solely upon the aged woman's report?

(52) R. Papa and R. Huna.

(53) Since it is possible that her action was due to her desire to marry.

(54) Lit., ‘and went’.

(55) Lit., ‘and this is not’.

(56) Who strangled her child.

(57) Lit., ‘behold that they gave her a son to give (him) suck’.

(58) Of her own (v. infra) in order to maintain a healthy supply of milk.

(59) Lit., ‘with it’.

(60) Cf. supra n. 2.

(61) , v. Jast., hops (Rashi).

(64) Lit., ‘palm branch’.

(65) קָרִמָא, ‘curdled milk’, ‘an appetizing sauce made of milk’, (cf. Fleischer to Levy, and Jast.).

(66) During her pregnancy.

(67) Read רַמְח (Aruk.). Cur. edd,. רַמְח .

(69) Or ‘gluttons’.

(70) Or ‘small fish’ (Rashi) in brine (Jast.).

(71) Aruk (s.v. רַמְח ), ‘small eyes’.

(72) During her pregnancy.

(73) רַמְח דִּינְרָא , a certain kind of reddish clay was believed to possess medicinal qualities as an astringent. Cf. Smith, Dict. Gk. Rom. Ant. s.v. creta, v. Jast.

of a robust constitution. One who eats eggs will have children with big eyes. One who eats fish will have graceful children. One who eats parsley will have beautiful children. One who eats coriander will have stout children. One who eats ethrog will have fragrant children. The daughter of King Shapur, whose mother had eaten ethrog [while she was pregnant] with her, used to be presented before her father as his principal perfume. R. Huna related: R. Huna b. Hinena tested us [with the following question:] If she says that she wishes to suckle her child and he says that she shall not suckle it her wish is to be granted, for she would be the sufferer. What, however, is the law where he says that she shall suckle the child and she says that she will not suckle it? Whenever this is not the practice in her family we, of course, comply with her wish; what, however, is the law where this is the practice in her family but not in his? Do we follow the practice of his family or that of hers? And we solved his problem from this: He rises with him but does not go down with him. What, said R. Huna, is the Scriptural proof? — For she is a man's wife, [she is to participate] in the rise of her husband but not in his descent. R. Eleazar said, [The proof is] from here: Because she was the mother of all living she was given [to her husband] to live but not to suffer pain. IF SHE BROUGHT HIM ONE BONDWOMAN etc. Her other duties, however, she must obviously perform; [but why?] Let her say to him, ‘I brought you a wife in my place’ — Because he might reply, ‘That bondwoman works for me and for herself, who will work for you!’ [IF SHE BROUGHT] TWO BONDWOMEN, SHE NEED NOT EVEN COOK OR SUCKLE etc. Her other duties, however, she must obviously perform; [but why]? Let her say to him, ‘I brought you another wife who will work for me and for her, while the first one [will work] for you and for herself!’ —
Because he might reply, ‘Who will do the work for our guests and occasional visitors!’ — Because he might reply, ‘The more the number of the household the more the type of work for our guests and occasional visitors’. If so, the same plea could also be advanced [when the number of bondwomen was] four! — [In the case of] four bondwomen, since their number is considerable they assist one another. R. Hana, or some say R. Samuel b. Nahmani, stated: [SHE BROUGHT] does not mean that she had actually brought; but: Wherever she is in a position to bring, even though she has not brought any. A Tanna taught: [A wife is entitled to the same privileges] whether she brought [a bondwoman] to him or whether she saved up for one out of her income. IF FOUR, SHE MAY LOUNGE IN AN EASY CHAIR. R. Isaac b. Hanania stated in the name of R. Huna: Although it has been said, SHE MAY LOUNGE IN AN EASY CHAIR she should nevertheless fill for him his cup, make ready his bed and wash his face, hands and feet.
R. Isaac b. Hanania further stated in the name of R. Huna: All kinds of work which a wife performs for her husband a menstruant also may perform for her husband, with the exception of filling his cup, making ready his bed and washing his face, hands and feet. As to ‘the making ready of his bed’ Raba explained that [the prohibition] applies only in his presence but [if it is done] in his absence it does not matter. With regard to ‘the filling of his cup’. Samuel's wife made a change [by serving] him with her left hand. [The wife of] Abaye placed it on the edge of the wine cask. Raba's [wife placed it] at the head-side of his couch, and R. Papa's [wife put it] on his foot-stool. R. Isaac b. Hanania further stated: All [foodstuffs] may be held back from the waiter except meat and wine. Said R. Hisda: [This applies only to] fat meat and old wine. Raba said: Fat meat throughout the year but old wine only in the Tammuz season. R. Anan b. Tahlifa related:
I was once standing in the presence of Samuel when they brought him a dish of mushrooms, and, had he not given me [some of it], I would have been exposed to danger. I, related R. Ashi, was once standing before R. Kahana when they brought him slices of turnips in vinegar, and had he not given me some, I would have been exposed to danger. R. Papa said: Even a fragrant date [if not tasted may expose one to danger]. This is the rule: Any foodstuff that has a strong flavour or an acrid taste [will expose a man to danger if he is not allowed to taste of it]. Both Abbuha and Minjamin b. Ihi [shewed consideration for their waiter] the one giving [him a portion] of every dish while the other gave [him a portion] of one kind only. With the former Elijah conversed, with the latter he did not. It was related of] two pious men, and others say of R. Mari and R. Phinehas the sons of R. Hisda, that one of them gave [a share to his waiter] first while the other gave him last. With the one who gave [the waiter his share] first, Elijah conversed; with the one, however, who gave his waiter last, Elijah did not converse. Amemar, Mar Zutra and R. Ashi were once sitting at the gate of King Yezdegerd when the King's table-steward passed them by.
R. Ashi, observing that Mar Zutra

They examined [the dish] but did not find [such a thing]. Thereupon he took hold of his finger and put it on it,5 saying, ‘Did you examine this part?’ They examined it and found it [to be as R. Ashi had said]. ‘Why did you rely upon a miracle?’ the Rabbis asked him. ‘I saw’, he replied, ‘the demon of leprosy hovering over him’.6 A Roman once said to a woman, ‘Will you marry me?’ — ‘No,’ she replied. Thereupon7 he brought some pomegranates, split them open and ate them in her presence. She kept on swallowing all the saliva8 that irritated her, but he did not give her [any of the fruit] until [her body] became swollen.9 Ultimately he said to her, ‘If I cure you, will you marry me?’ — ‘Yes’, she replied. Again7 he brought some pomegranates, split them and ate them in her presence. ‘Spit out at once, and again and again’,10 he said to her, all saliva that irritated you’. [She did so] until [the matter] issued forth from her body in the shape of a green palm-branch; and she recovered. AND WORKING IN WOOL. Only IN WOOL but not in flax. Whose [view then is represented in] our Mishnah? — It is that of R. Judah. For it was taught: [Her husband] may not compel her to wait11 upon his father or upon his son, or to put straw before his beast;12 but he may compel her to put straw before his herd.13 R. Judah said: Nor may he compel her to work in flax because flax causes one's mouth to be sore14 and makes one's lips stiff.15 This refers, however, only to Roman flax. R. ELIEZER SAID: EVEN IF SHE BROUGHT HIM A HUNDRED BONDWOMEN. R. Malkio stated in the name of R. Adda b. Ahabah: The halachah is in agreement with R. Eliezer. Said R. Hanina the son of R. Ika: [The rulings concerning] a spit,16 bondwomen17 and follicles18 [were laid down by] R. Malkio; [but those concerning] a forelock19 wood-ash20 and cheese21 [were laid down by] R. Malkia. R. MISHNAH. IF A MAN FORBADE HIMSELF BY VOW TO HAVE INTERCOURSE WITH HIS WIFE31 BETH SHAMMAI RULED: [SHE MUST CONSENT TO THE DEPRIVATION FOR] TWO WEEKS;32 BETH HILLEL RULED: [ONLY FOR] ONE WEEK.32 STUDENTS MAY GO AWAY33 TO STUDY THE TORAH, WITHOUT THE PERMISSION [OF THEIR WIVES FOR A PERIOD OF] THIRTY DAYS; LABOURERS [ONLY FOR] ONE WEEK. THE TIMES FOR CONJUGAL DUTY PRESCRIBED IN THE TORAH34 ARE: FOR MEN OF INDEPENDENCE,35 EVERY DAY; FOR LABOURERS, TWICE A WEEK; FOR ASS-DRIVERS,36 ONCE A WEEK; FOR CAMEL-DRIVERS,37 ONCE IN THIRTY DAYS; FOR SAILORS,38 ONCE IN SIX MONTHS. THESE ARE THE RULINGS OF R. ELIEZER. GEMARA. What is the reason of Beth Shammai?39 — They derive their ruling from [the law relating to] a woman who bears a female child.40 And Beth Hillel? — They derive their ruling from [the law relating to] one who bears a male child.41 Why should not Beth Hillel also derive their ruling from [the law relating to] a woman who bears a female child?42 — If they had derived their ruling from [the law relating to] a woman who bears a child they should indeed have ruled thus, but [the fact is that] Beth Hillel derive their ruling from [the law of] the menstruant.43 On what principle do they44 differ? — One45 is of the opinion that the usual46 [is to be inferred] from the usual,47 and the other48 is of the opinion that what a husband has caused49 should be derived from that which he has caused.50 Rab stated: They44 differ only in the case of one who specified [the period of abstention] but where he did not specify the period it is the opinion of both that he must divorce her forthwith and give her the kethubah. Samuel, however, stated: Even where the period had not been specified the husband may delay [his divorce],51 since it might be possible for him to discover some reason52 for [the remission of] his vow. But surely, they once disputed this question; for have we not learned: If a man forbade his wife by vow to have any benefit from him he may, for thirty days, appoint a steward, but if for a longer period he must divorce her and give her the kethubah. And [in connection with this] Rab stated: This ruling applies only where he specified [the period] but where he did not specify it he must divorce her forthwith and give her the ket hubah, while Samuel stated: Even where the period had not been specified the husband may also postpone [his divorce], since it might be possible for him, to discover some grounds for [the annulment of his vow]? — [Both disputes are] required. For if [their views] had been stated in the former only it might have been assumed that only in that case did Rab maintain his view, since [the appointment] of a steward is not possible but that in the second case where [the appointment] of a steward is possible he agrees with Samuel. And If the second case only had been stated it might have been assumed that only in that case did Samuel maintain his view but that in the former case he agrees with Rab. [Hence both statements were necessary. STUDENTS MAY GO AWAY TO STUDY etc. For how long [may they go away] with the permission [of their wives}? — For as long as they desire.

What should be the usual periods? — Rab said: One month at the college and one month at home; for it is said in the Scriptures, In any matter of the courses which came in and went out month by month throughout all the months of the year. R. Johanan, however, said: One month at the college and two months at home; for it is said in the Scriptures, A month they were in Lebanon and two months at home. Why does not Rab also derive his opinion from this text? Then why does not R. Johanan derive his opinion from the former text? — The building of the holy Temple is different [from the study of the Torah] since it could be carried on by others. R. Johanan, however, said: One month at the college and two months at home; for it is said in the Scriptures, And it shall be when they say unto thee: Wherefore sighest thou? that thou shalt say: Because of the tidings, for it cometh; and every heart shall melt, and all hands shall be slack, and every spirit shall faint, and all knees shall drip with water. As to R. Johanan, is it not also written, ‘With the breaking of thy loins’? — [The meaning of] this is that when [the breaking] begins it does so from the loins. And as to Rab, is it not also written, ‘And every heart shall melt, and all hands shall be slack, and every spirit shall be faint’? — The report of the holy Temple is different since [the calamity] was very severe. An Israelite and an idolater were once walking together on the same road and the idolater could not keep pace with the Israelite. Reminding him of the destruction of the holy Temple [the latter] grew faint and sighed; but still the idolater was unable to keep pace with him. ‘Do you not say’, the idolater asked him, ‘that a sigh breaks half of the human body’? — ‘This applies only’, the other replied, ‘to a fresh calamity but not to this one with which we are familiar. As people say: A woman who is accustomed to bereavements is not alarmed [when another occurs]’. MEN OF INDEPENDENCE EVERY DAY. What is meant by tayyalin? — Raba replied: Day students. Said Abaye to him: [These are the men] of whom it is written in Scripture, It is vain for you that ye rise early, and sit up late, ye that eat of the bread of toil; so He giveth unto those who chase their sleep away; and ‘these’, R. Isaac explained, ‘are the wives of the scholars, who chase the sleep from their eyes in this world and achieve thereby the life of the world to come’, and yet you Say. Day students? — [The explanation]. however, said Abaye, is in agreement [with a statement] of Rab who said [a man of independence is one. for instance, like R. Samuel b. Shilath who eats of his own, drinks of his own and sleeps in the shadow of his mansion and a king's officer never passes his door. When Rabin came he stated: [A man of independence is one]. for instance, like the pampered men of the West. R. Abbahu was once standing in a bath house, two slaves supporting him, when [the floor of] the bath house collapsed under him. By chance he was near a column [upon which] he climbed taking up the slaves with him. R. Johanan was once ascending a staircase, R. Ammi and R. Assi supporting him, when the staircase collapsed under him. He himself climbed up and brought them up with him. Said the Rabbis to him, ‘Since [your strength is] such, why do you require support?’ — ‘Otherwise’, he replied. what [strength] will I reserve for the time of my old age?’ FOR LABOURERS TWICE A WEEK. Was it not, however, taught: Labourers, once a week? — R. Jose the son of R. Hanina replied: This is no difficulty; the former speaks of labourers who do their work in their own town while the latter speaks of those who do their work in another town — So it was also taught: Labourers [perform their marital duties] twice a week. This applies only [to those] who do their work in their own town, but for those who do their work in another town [the time is only] once a week FOR ASS-DRIVERS ONCE A WEEK. Rabhah son of R. Hanan said to Abaye: Did the Tanna go to all this trouble to teach us [merely the law relating to] the man of independence and the labourer? — The other replied: No;

(1) That students should (a) be permitted to be away from their wives even with their consent, and (b) remain at home (v. Rashi). According to one opinion the restrictions spoken of here apply to labourers only. Students are allowed greater freedom. (V. Tosaf. s.v. הַשְּׁלִיקָם אֶל, a.l.)

I Chron. XXVII, emphasis on ‘month by month’.

I Kings V, 28.

Solomon had sufficient men for the work and required each group for no longer than one month out of every three. The study of the Torah demands more time.

The stipend allowed by the king. This allowance enabled a husband to provide a comfortable living for his wife who, in return, consented to his absence from home every alternate month. In the case of students, however, whose study brings no worldly reward to their wives, the period of absence from home should not exceed one month in every three.

The following discussion is introduced here on account of the difference of opinion between Rab and R. Johanan on the application of Scriptural texts, which is characteristic of this as of the previous discussion.

‘Those who chase their sleep away’.

V. Glos. s.v. talmid hakam.

In sitting up all night waiting for the return of their husbands from the house of study.

As a reward for the consideration they shew to their studious husbands. Since the wives of students who come from other towns would not be expecting their husbands to return home every day, the reference must obviously be to those who live in the college town, i.e., the day students, which proves that even these remain all night at the college.

How could men who spend their nights in study be expected to perform the marital duty daily?

A teacher of children (v. supra 50a) who made an unostentatious but comfortable living.

‘mansion’, ‘palace’, i.e., his own home (cf. ‘the Englishman's home is his castle’).

‘a detachment of soldiers’.

To exact from him service or money. As his wants were moderate, he had no need to be under obligation to anyone for his food or drink and had no need to go fat to seek his livelihood. A man in such a position might well be described as a man of independence.

Talmud - Mas. Kethuboth 62b
to all.1 But was it not stated ONCE IN SIX MONTHS?2 — One who has bread in his basket is not like one who has no bread in his basket.3 Said Rabbah4 son of R. Hanan to Abaye: What [is the law where] an ass-driver becomes a camel-driver?5 — The other replied: A woman prefers one kab6 with frivolity to ten kab6 with abstinance.7 FOR SAILORS, ONCE IN SIX MONTHS. THESE ARE THE WORDS OF R. ELIEZER. R. Beruna8 stated in the name of Rab:9 The halachah follows R. Eliezer. R. Adda b. Ahabah, however, stated in the name of Rab: This is the view of R. Eliezer only, but the Sages ruled: Students may go away to study Torah without the permission [of their wives even for] two or three years.10 Raba stated: The Rabbis11 relied on R. Adda b. Ahabah12 and act accordingly at the risk of [losing] their lives.13 Thus R. Rehumi who was frequenting [the school] of Raba at Mahuza14 used to return home on the Eve of every Day of Atonement. On one occasion15 he was so attracted by his subject [that he forgot to return home]. His wife was expecting [him every moment, saying:] ‘He is coming soon,16 he is coming soon’16 As he did not arrive she became so depressed that tears began to flow from her eyes. He was [at that moment] sitting on a roof. The roof collapsed under him and he was killed.17 How often18 are scholars to perform their marital duties? — Rab Judah in the name of Samuel replied: Every Friday night.19 That bringeth forth its fruit in its season,20 Rab Judah, and some say R. Huna, or again, as others say. R. Nahman, stated: This [refers to the man] who performs his marital duty every Friday night.21 Judah22 the son of R. Hiyya and son-in-law of R. Jannai was always spending his time23 in the school house but every Sabbath eve24 he came home. Whenever he arrived the people saw25 a pillar of light moving before him. Once he was so attracted by his subject of study [that he forgot to return home]. Not Seeing26 that Sgn. R. Jannai said to those [around him], ‘Lower27 his bed,28 for had Judah been alive he would not have neglected the performance of his marital duties’. This [remark] was like an error that proceedeth from the ruler,29 for [in consequence] Judah’s30 soul returned to its eternal rest. Rabbi was engaged in the arrangements for the marriage of his son into the family of R. Hiyya,31 but when the kethubah32 was about to be written the bride passed away.33 ‘Is there, God forbid’, said Rabbi, ‘any taint [in the proposed union]?’34 An enquiry was instituted35 into [the genealogy of the two] families [and it was discovered that] Rabbi descended from Shephatiah36 the son of Abital37 while R. Hiyya descended from Shimei a brother of David.38 Later39 he40 was engaged in preparations for the marriage of his son into the family of R. Jose b. Zimra. It was agreed that he41 should spend twelve years at the academy.42 When the girl was led before him41 he said to them, ‘Let it43 be six years’. When they made her pass before him [a second time] he said, ‘I would rather marry [her first] and then proceed [to the academy]’. He felt abashed44 before his father, but the latter said to him.’My son, you45 have the mind of your creator.46 for in Scripture it is written first, Thou bringest them in and plantest them47 and later it is written, And let them make Me a sanctuary. that I may dwell among them.48 [After the marriage] he departed and spent twelve years at the academy. By the time he returned his wife49 had lost the power of procreation. ‘What shall we do?’, said Rabbi. ‘Should we order him to divorce her, it would be said: This poor soul waited in vain! Were he to marry another woman, it would be said: The latter is his wife and the other his mistress.’ He prayed for mercy to be vouchsafed to her, and she recovered. R. Hanania b. Hakinai was about to go away to the academy towards the conclusion of R. Simeon b. Yohai's wedding. ‘Wait for me’, the latter said to him, ‘until I am able to join you’.50 He, however, did not wait for him but went away alone and spent twelve years at the academy. By the time he returned the streets of the town were altered and he was unable to find the way51 to his home. Going down to the river bank and sitting down there he heard a girl being addressed thus: ‘Daughter of Hakinai, O, daughter of Hakinai, fill up your pitcher and let us go!’ ‘It is obvious’,52 he thought, ‘that the girl is ours’, and he followed her. [When they reached the house] his wife was sitting and sifting flour. She53 lifted up her eyes and seeing him, was so overcome with joy54 that she fainted.55 ‘O, Lord of the universe’,[the husband] prayed to Him, ‘this poor soul; is this her reward?’56 And so he prayed for mercy to be vouchsafed to her and she revived. R. Hama b. Bisa went away [from home and] spent twelve years at the house of study. When he returned he said, ‘I will not act as did b. Hakina’.57 He therefore entered the [local] house of study and sent word to his house. Meanwhile his son, R. Oshaia58 entered, sat down before him and addressed to him a question on [one of the] subjects of study. [R. Hama], seeing how well versed he was in his studies, became very depressed. ‘Had I been here,’ he said, ‘I also could have had such a child.'—[When] he entered his house his son came in, whereupon [the father] rose before him, believing that he wished to ask him some [further] legal questions. ‘What, father’, his wife chuckled, ‘stands up before a son!’ Rami b. Hama applied to him [the following Scriptural text:] And a threefold cord is not quickly broken is a reference to R. Oshaia, son of R. Hania, son of Bisa. R. Akiba was a shepherd of Ben Kalba Sabua. The latter's daughter, seeing how modest and noble [the shepherd] was, said to him, ‘Were I to be betrothed to you, would you go away to [study at] an academy?’ ‘Yes’, he replied. She was then secretly betrothed to him and sent him away. When her father heard [what she had done] he drove her from his house and forbade her by a vow to have any benefit from his estate. [R. Akiba] departed, and spent twelve years at the academy. When he returned home he brought with him twelve thousand disciples. [While in his home town] he heard an old man saying to her, ‘How long will you lead the life of a living widowhood?’ ‘If he would listen to me,’ she replied. ‘he would spend [in study] another twelve years’. Said [R. Akiba]: ‘It is then with her consent that I am acting’. and he departed again and spent another twelve years at the academy. When he finally returned he brought with him twenty-four thousand disciples. His wife heard [of his arrival] and went out to meet him, when her neighbours said to her, ‘Borrow some respectable clothes and put them on’, but she replied: A righteous man regardeth the life of his beast.1 On approaching him she fell upon her face and kissed his feet. His attendants were about to thrust her aside, when [R. Akiba] cried to them, ‘Leave her alone, mine and yours are hers’.2 Her father, on hearing that a great man had come to the town, said, ‘I shall go to him; perchance he will invalidate my vow’,3 When he came to him [R. Akiba] asked, ‘Would you have made your vow if you had known that he was a great man?’ ‘[Had he known]’ the other replied. ‘even one chapter or even one Single halachah [I would not have made the vow]’. He then said to him, ‘I am the man’.4 The other fell upon his face and kissed his feet and also gave him half of his wealth.5 The daughter of R. Akiba acted in a similar way6 towards Ben Azzai. This is indeed an illustration of the proverb:7 ‘Ewe follows ewe; a daughter’s acts are like those of her mother.’ R. Joseph the son of Raba [was] sent [by] his father to the academy under R. Joseph. and they arranged for him [to stay there for] six years. Having been there three years and the eve of the Day of Atonement approaching, he said, ‘I would go and see my family’. When his father heard [of his premature arrival] he took up a weapon and went out to meet him. ‘You have remembered’, he said to him, ‘your mistress!’ Another version: He said to him, ‘You have remembered your dove!’ They got involved in a quarrel and neither the one nor the other ate of the last meal before the fast. MISHNAH. IF A WIFE REBELS AGAINST HER HUSBAND, HER KETHUBAH MAY BE REDUCED BY SEVEN DENARI. FOR HOW LONG MAY THE REDUCTION CONTINUE TO BE MADE? UNTIL [A SUM] CORRESPONDING TO HER KETHUBAH [HAS ACCUMULATED]. R. JOSE SAID: REDUCTIONS MAY BE MADE CONTINUALLY UNTIL [SUCH TIME] WHEN, SHOULD AN INHERITANCE FALL TO HER FROM ELSEWHERE, [HER HUSBAND] WILL BE IN A POSITION TO COLLECT FROM HER THE [FULL AMOUNT DUE]. SIMILARLY, IF A HUSBAND REBELS AGAINST HIS WIFE, AN ADDITION OF THREE DENARI A WEEK IS MADE TO HER KETHUBAH. R. JUDAH SAID: THREE TROPAICS. GEMARA. REBELS in what [respect]? — R. Huna replied: [In respect] of conjugal Union. R. Jose the son of R. Hanina replied: [In respect] of work. We learned, SIMILARLY, IF A HUSBAND REBELS AGAINST HIS WIFE, AN ADDITION OF THREE DENARI A WEEK IS MADE TO HER KETHUBAH. R. JUDAH SAID: THREE TROPAICS.

but according to him who said, ‘[In respect] of work’, is a sick woman [it may be objected] fit to do work?1 — The fact, however, is that2 [in respect] of conjugal union all3 agree that [a wife who refuses] is regarded as a rebellious woman.4 They5 differ only in respect of work. One Master is of the opinion that [for a refusal] of work [a wife] is not to be regarded as rebellious and the other Master holds the opinion [that for a refusal] of work also [a wife] is regarded as rebellious. [To turn to] the main text,5 If a wife rebels against her husband, her kethubah may be reduced by seven denarii a week. R. Judah said: Seven tropaics. Our Masters, however, took a second vote6 [and ordained] that an announcement regarding her shall be made on four consecutive Sabbaths and that then the court shall send her [the following warning]: ‘Be it known to you that even if your kethubah is for a hundred maneh7 you have forfeited it’.8 The same [law is applicable to a woman] betrothed or married, even to a menstruant, even to a sick woman, and even to one who was awaiting the decision of the levir.9 Said R. Hiyya b. Joseph to Samuel: Is a menstruant capable of conjugal union?10 — The other replied: One who has bread in his basket is not like one who has no bread in his basket11 Rami b. Hama stated: The announcement concerning her12 is made only in the Synagogues and the houses of study. Said Raba: This may be proved by a deduction,13 it having been taught, ‘Four Sabbaths consecutively’.14 This is decisive.15 Rami b. Hania further stated: [The warning] is sent to her16 from the court twice, once before the announcement and once after the announcement. R. Nahman b. R. Hisda stated in his discourse: The halachah is in agreement with our Masters.17 Raba remarked: This is senseless.18 Said R. Nahman b. Isaac to him, ‘Wherein lies19 its senselessness? I, in fact, told it to him, and it was in the name of a great man that I told it to him. And who is it? R. Jose son of R. Hanina!’ Whose view then is he20 following? — The first of the undermentioned.21 For it was stated: Raba said in the name of R. Shesheth, ‘The halachah is that she21 is to be consulted’,22 while R. Huna b. Judah stated in the name of R. Shesheth, ‘The halachah is that she is not to be consulted’.23 What is to be understood by ‘a rebellious woman’?24 — Amemar said: [One] who says, ‘I like him25 but wish to torment him’.26 If she said, however, ‘He is repulsive to me’, no pressure is to be brought to bear upon her.27 Mar Zutra ruled: Pressure is to be brought to bear upon her.28 Such a case once occurred, and Mar Zutra exercised pressure upon the woman and [as a result of the reconciliation that ensued] R. Hanina of Sura29 was born from the re-union. This, however,30 was not [the right thing to do]. [The successful] result was due to the help of providence.31 R. Zebid's daughter-in-law rebelled [against her husband]32 and took possession of her silk [cloak].33 Amemar, Mar Zutra and R. Ashi were sitting together34 and R. Gamda sat beside them; and in the course of the session they laid down the law: [If a wife] rebels she forfeits her worn-out clothing that may still be in existence. Said R. Gamda to them, ‘Is it because R. Zebid is a great man that you would flatter him? Surely R. Kahana stated that Raba had only raised this question36 but had not solved it’. Another version:37 In the course of their session they decided: [If a wife] rebels she does not forfeit her worn-out clothing38 that may still be in existence. Said R.

(20) Raba who regarded the statement as senseless.
(21) Lit., ‘like that’
(22) With a view to inducing her to resume her duties, and during the negotiations. contrary to the view of our Masters, only the weekly sum mentioned is deducted from her kethubah. [On this interpretation which follows Rashi, Raba decides in accordance with our Mishnah against our Masters. Tosaf. explains differently R Nahman, In stating that the halachah is with our Masters, meant to exclude thereby the view of Rami B Hama regarding the two warnings. He maintained that the words of our masters had to be taken as they stand, with no mention of any warning before the proclamation. This is however rejected by Raba, who declares, on the authority of R. Shesheth, the halachah to be that a warning is given prior to the proclamation The warning will, In this case, be that she will lose the while of her kethubah should she still prove recalcitrant after the proclamation].

(36) As to the forfeiture of worn-out clothes.
(37) Lit., ‘there are who say’.
‘Is it because R. Zebid is a great man that you turn the law against him? Surely R. Kahana stated that Raba had only raised the question but had not solved it. Now that it has not been stated what the law is, [such clothing] is not to be taken away from her if she has already seized them, but if she has not yet seized them they are not to be given to her. We also make her wait twelve months, a [full] year, for her divorce, and during these twelve months she receives no maintenance from her husband. R. Tobi b. Kisna stated in the name of Samuel: A certificate of rebellion may be written against a betrothed woman but no such certificate may be written against one who is awaiting the decision of the levir. An objection was raised: The same [law is applicable to a woman] betrothed or married, even to a menstruant, even to a sick woman and even to one who was awaiting the decision of the levir! — This is no contradiction. The one refers to the case where the man claimed her, the other to that where she claimed him. R. Tahlifa b. Abimi stated in the name of Samuel: If he claimed her he is attended to; if she claimed him she is not attended to. To what case did you explain the statement of Samuel as referring? To the one where she claimed him? [But if so] instead of Saying ‘A certificate of rebellion may be written against a betrothed woman’ it should have been said, ‘On behalf of a betrothed woman’ — This is no difficulty. Read, ‘On behalf of a betrothed woman’. Wherein does a woman awaiting the decision of the levir differ [from the man] that no [certificate of rebellion should be issued on her behalf]? Obviously because we tell her, ‘Go, you are not commanded [to marry]’; [but then.] a betrothed woman also should be told, ‘Go, you are not commanded [to marry]’ Again should [it be explained to be one] where she comes with the plea Saying. ‘I wish to have a staff in my hand and a spade for my burial’ [this then should] also apply to a woman awaiting the decision of the levir if she comes with such a plea! — [The proper explanation] then [must be this]: Both statements [refer to the case] where the man claimed, and yet there is no difficulty. since one may refer to the performance of halizah and the other to that of the levirate marriage. For R. Pedath stated in the name of R. Johanan: [If the levir] claimed her for the performance of halizah his request is to be attended to, but if he claimed her for the levirate marriage his request is disregarded. Why [is he] not [attended to when he claims her] for the levirate marriage? Naturally because we tell him, ‘Go and marry another woman’; [but then even when he claims her] for the performance of halizah could we not also tell him, ‘Go and marry another woman’? Again should the answer be: [Because] he can plead. ‘As she is bound to me no other wife will be given me’. Here also [could he not plead] ‘As she is bound to me no other wife will be given to me’? — [The proper explanation] then [is this]: Both statements [deal with one] who claimed her for the levirate marriage, but there is really no difficulty. one being in agreement with the earlier Mishnah while the other is in agreement with the latter Mishnah. For we have learned: The commandment of the levirate marriage must take precedence over that of halizah. [This was the case] in earlier days when [levirs] had the intention of observing the commandment — Now, however, when their intention is not the fulfilment of the commandment, it has been ruled that the commandment of halizah takes precedence over that of the levirate marriage. For how long may the reduction continue to be made? etc. What [is meant by] TROPAICS? R. Shesheth replied: [one tropaic is] an istira. And how much is an istira? — Half a zuz. So it was also taught: R. Judah said: Three tropaics which [amount to] nine ma'ah [the reduction being at the rate of] one ma'ah and a half per day. R. Hiyya b. Joseph asked Of Samuel: In what respect is he different [from his wife] that he is allowed [a reduction] for the Sabbath, and in what respect is she different [from him] that she is not allowed [an addition] for the Sabbath? — In her case, since it is a reduction that is made, [the seventh tropaic the husband gains] does not have the appearance of Sabbath pay. In his case, however, since it is additions that are made, [Tropics? R. Shesheth replied: [one tropaic is] an istira. And how much is an istira? — Half a zuz. So it was also taught: R. Judah said: Three tropaics which [amount to] nine ma'ah [the reduction being at the rate of] one ma'ah and a half per day. R. Hiyya b. Joseph asked Of Samuel: In what respect is he different [from his wife] that he is allowed [a reduction] for the Sabbath, and in what respect is she different [from him] that she is not allowed [an addition] for the Sabbath? — In her case, since it is a reduction that is made, [the seventh tropaic the husband gains] does not have the appearance of Sabbath pay. In his case, however, since it is additions that are made,
(2) Lit., ‘neither thus nor thus’.
(3) To afford her an opportunity of changing her attitude.
(4) [Rashi and Adreth among others restrict this procedure to a rebellion out of repulsion, a case illustrated in their view by the daughter-in-law of R. Zebid (v. Supra p. 383, n. 10). Where the rebellion was out of malice she loses her kethubah and dowry completely after the warning at the end of four weeks. Maim., on the other hand, applies it to rebellion out of malice. In the case of rebellion out of repulsion, she is granted a divorce immediately because ‘she is not a captive to her husband that she should be forced to have intercourse with him’, and though she forfeits her kethubah, she loses none of her dowry (v. Maim. Yad. Ishuth XIV, 8, and commentaries a.l.). In his view the case of R. Zebid’s daughter-in-law was one of rebellion out of malice].

SHE IS NOT TO BE GIVEN NEW [CLOTHES]  IN THE SUMMER OR WORN-OUT CLOTHES IN THE WINTER, BUT MUST BE GIVEN THE CLOTHING [OF THE VALUE] OF FIFTY ZUZ DURING THE WINTER, AND SHE CLOTHES HERSELF WITH THEM WHEN THEY ARE WORN-OUT DURING THE SUMMER; AND THE WORN-OUT CLOTHES REMAIN HER PROPERTY.  HE MUST ALSO GIVE HER [EVERY WEEK] A SILVER MA’AH FOR HER [OTHER] REQUIREMENTS  AND SHE IS TO EAT WITH HIM ON THE NIGHT OF EVERY SABBATH.  IF HE DOES NOT GIVE HER A SILVER MA’AH FOR HER OTHER REQUIREMENTS, HER HANDIWORK BELONGS TO HER.  AND WHAT [IS THE QUANTITY OF WORK THAT] SHE MUST DO FOR HIM?  THE WEIGHT OF FIVE SELA’S OF WARP IN JUDEA, WHICH AMOUNTS TO TEN SELA’S IN GALILEE,  OR THE WEIGHT OF TEN SELA’S OF WOOF  IN JUDEA, WHICH AMOUNTS TO TWENTY SELA’S IN GALILEE.  IF SHE WAS NURSING [HER CHILD] HER HANDIWORK IS REDUCED AND HER MAINTENANCE IS INCREASED. ALL THIS APPLIES TO THE POOREST IN ISRAEL, BUT IN THE CASE OF A MEMBER OF THE BETTER CLASSES  ALL IS FIXED ACCORDING TO THE DIGNITY OF HIS POSITION. GEMARA. Whose [view is represented in] our Mishnah?  [It seems to be] neither that of R. Johanan b. Beroka nor that of R. Simeon. For we learned: And what must be its  size? Food for two meals for each, [the quantity being] the food one eats on weekdays and not On the Sabbath; so R. Meir. R. Judah said: As on the Sabbath and not as on weekdays. And both intended to give the lenient ruling.  R. Johanan b. Beroka said:  A loaf that is purchased for a dupondion  when the cost of wheat is at the rate of four se’ah  for a sela’.  R. Simeon said: Two thirds of a loaf, three of which are made from a Kab.  Half of this [loaf is the size prescribed] for a leprous house,  and half of its half  renders one's body  unfit;  and half of the half of its half to be susceptible to Levitical uncleanness,  Now, whose [view is that expressed in our Mishnah]?  If [it be suggested that it is that of] R. Johanan b. Beroka [the prescribed TWO KABS would only] be [sufficient for] eight [meals].  and if [the suggestion is that it is that of] R. Simeon [the TWO KABS would] be [sufficient even for] eighteen [meals].  — [Our Mishnah may] in fact [represent the view of] R. Johanan b. Beroka but, as R. Hisda said elsewhere,  ‘Deduct a third of them for the [profit of the] shopkeeper’,  so here  also take a third  and add to them.  But [do not the meals] still amount only to twelve?  — She eats with him on Friday nights —. This is satisfactory according to him who explained  TO EAT In our Mishnah as actual eating. What, however, can be said according to him who explained ‘eating’ [to mean] intercourse? Furthermore, [would not her total number of meals still] be only thirteen?  — The proper answer is really this:  As R. Hisda said elsewhere, ‘Deduct a half for the [profit of the] shopkeeper’.  so here  also take a half  and add to them.  (Does not a contradiction arise between the two statements of R. Hisda?  — There is no contradiction. One statement refers to a place where [the sellers of the wheat] supply also wood  while the other refers to a place where they do not supply the wood.)

If so  [the number of meals] is sixteen.  With whose [view then would our Mishnah agree]? With R. Hidka who ruled: A man must eat on the Sabbath four meals?  — It may be said to represent even the view of the Rabbis, for one meal is to be reserved for guests and occasional visitors. Now that you have arrived at this position [our Mishnah] may be said to represent even the view of R. Simeon, according to the Rabbis three meals should be deducted for guests and occasional visitors and according to R. Hidka two only are to be deducted for guests and occasional visitors. Said R. Jose: Only . . . granted a supply of barley etc. Do they eat barley at Edom only and throughout the world none is eaten? — It is this that he meant: Only R. Ishmael who lived near Edom granted a supply of barley equal to twice the quantity of wheat, because the Idumean barley was of an inferior quality. The man must also give her half a kab of pulse. Wine, however, is not mentioned. This provides support for a view of R. Eleazar. For R. Eleazar stated:

(1) I.e., why does the former lose only half a tropaic a day while the latter loses a full tropaic each day?
(2) The man naturally hires the woman; which shows that the male feels the deprivation more than the female, His compensation, therefore, must be proportionately higher.
(3) A husband who does not live with his wife.
(4) V. Glos.
(5) In the South of Palestine.
(6) This is explained in the Gemara infra.
(7) דָּבָר דָּבָר, a cake of pressed figs. The latter is sold by weight; the former by measure,
(8) Lit., ‘from another place’.
(9) מֵאָלָה, a mat of bark or reeds,
(10) The separate edd. of the Mishnah read, ‘And if he has no mattress he gives her a rush mat’.
(11) I.e., Passover, Pentecost and Tabernacles.
(12) Which provide more warmth than outworn clothes.
(13) Even after her husband had provided her with the new outfit. This is further discussed in the Gemara infra.
(14) Smaller expenses.
(15) I.e., Friday nights, the prescribed time for marital intercourse.
(16) This is explained supra 59a as referring to the surplus.
(17) Where he supplies her with the prescribed allowances.
(18) The Galilean sela’ being equal in weight to half of the Judaean sela’.
(19) It is twice as difficult to web the warp than the woof. Hence a larger Output is required of the latter than of the former.
(20) פֹּלַע ד, lit., ‘honoured’, respected’.
(21) Which prescribed for a wife a minimum of TWO KABS.
(22) The loaf of bread required for an ‘erub tehumin. (v. Glos.).
(23) I.e., to reduce the prescribed minimum of the ‘erub. R. Meir used to consume at a weekday meal less bread than at a Sabbath meal at which the richness of the additional Sabbath dishes tempted him to eat more bread. R. Judah, however, consumed on Sabbath, when several satisfying courses are served, less bread than he would on weekdays owing to the smaller number of courses.
(24) In determining the quantity of bread required for two meals.
(25) V. Glos.
(26) V. p. 388, n. 12.
(27) Of wheat.
(28) If a person remained in such a house (v. Lev. XIV, 33ff) for a length of time during which the quantity of bread mentioned can be consumed his clothes become unclean and require ritual washing (cf. Neg. XIII, 9).
(29) If it consists of Levitically unclean food.
(30) Of the person who ate it.
(31) To eat terumah before he performs ritual immersion, v. ‘Er. 82b.
(32) [This latter passage does not occur in the Mishnah ‘Er. but is introduced in the Gemara on 83a as a teaching by a Tanna].
(33) Where a wife is allowed a minimum of TWO KABS of wheat for the week. Since she must have at least two meals a day, the two Kabs should provide fourteen (seven times two) meals, besides an additional one or two (respectively. according to the Rabbis or to R. Hidka, infra) for the Sabbath day.

(34) According to R. Johanan b. Beroka a loaf that contains food for two meals (v. supra p. 388. n. 12) is one ‘that is purchased for a dupondium when the cost of wheat is at the rate of four se'ah for a sela’. Each sela’ = four denarii, each denar = six ma'ahs and each ma'ah = two dupondia. Consequently a sela’ = (4 X 6 X 2) forty eight dupondta. a se'ah = six Kabs = twelve half-Kabs. Consequently four se'ahs (4 X 12) forty-eight half-Kabs. For a dupondium, therefore, half a Kab of wheat is obtained; and since this quantity supplies two meals each quarter of a Kab provides one meal. The TWO KABS consequently provide only eight meals.

(35) R. Simeon's minimum is ‘two thirds of a loaf, three of which were made of a Kab’. If two thirds represent two meals (v. supra p. 388, n. 12) each third represents one meal. If three loaves are made from one Kab, each Kab represents (3 X 3) nine meals. The TWO KABS, therefore, represent (6 X 9) = eighteen meals. Now since according to our Mishnah a wife must be allowed fourteen meals plus one additional meal or two for the Sabbath (v. supra note 9) neither the view of R. Johanan b. Beroka nor that of R. Simeon can be represented by it.

(36) V. ‘Er. 82b.
(37) Though the shopkeeper buys at the rate of four se'ahs for a sela’ = half a kab for a dupondium (v. supra p. 389. n. 10) he sells at a higher price, leaving for himself a profit of one third of the purchase price. For each dupondium, therefore, he sells only two thirds of half a kab. One third of half a Kab or one sixth of a Kab thus provides one meal. Two Kabs therefore, would produce (2 x 6) = twelve meals.

(38) In our Mishnah.
(39) The shopkeeper's profit which the husband saves by the supply of wheat instead of shop baked loaves.
(40) To the presumed number of eight. Four is a third of twelve which is the number of meals two Kabs provide.
(41) Cf. supra p. 389. n. 13 ad fin. As, however, she requires fourteen plus one or plus two meals for the week (v. supra p. 389. n. 9) she is still short of three or four meals.
(42) Lit., ‘the nights of the Sabbath’. Friday night belongs to the Sabbath, the day always beginning with the sunset of the previous day.
(43) Infra 65b.
(44) The twelve mentioned (v. supra p. 389. n. 13 ad fin.) plus the one she has on Friday night. She is thus still short of a meal or meals (v. supra p. 389. n. 9) for the Sabbath day.
(45) Lit., ‘but’.
(46) V. ‘Er. 82b.
(48) In our Mishnah.
(49) V. supra note 1.
(50) Cf. supra note 2 mutatis mutandis. The woman thus obtains her full number of meals.
(51) Lit., ‘a difficulty of R. Hisda against R. Hisda’.
(52) Lit., ‘that’.
(53) For the baking of the bread. In such a case the shopkeeper deducts only a third for his profit.
(54) And the shopkeeper sells at a profit equal to half of his purchase price to compensate himself for the cost of the wood.
(55) That a half is to be added.
(56) Each half Kab producing four, instead of the presumed two meals, the two Kabs would produce (4 X 4 ) sixteen meals.
(57) Shab. 117a. As R. Hidka is in the minority, would an anonymous Mishnah which usually represents the halachah agree with the opinion of an individual against that of a majority?
(58) Cf. supra p. 364. nn. 5-6. This leaves the woman with fifteen meals, twelve for the six weekdays and three for the Sabbath.
(59) According to whom the TWO KABS would provide eighteen meals.
(60) Who maintain that only three meals are prescribed for the Sabbath.
(61) From the eighteen.
(63) Whose view is that for the Sabbath four meals are prescribed.
(64) Leaving for the woman four Sabbath meals plus twelve for the week days.

Talmud - Mas. Kethuboth 65a
No allowance for wine is made for a woman. And should you point out the Scriptural text, I will go after my lovers, that give me my bread and my water, my wool and my flax, mine oil and my drink, [it may be replied that the reference is to] things which a woman desires. And what are they? Jewellery. R. Judah of Kefar Nabiryâ4 (others say: of Kefar Napor5 Hayil) made the following exposition: Whence is it derived that no allowance for wines is made for a woman? — [From Scripture in] which it is said, So Hannah rose up after she had eaten6 in Shiloh, and after drinking, only ‘he had drunk’ but she did not drink. Now, then, would you also [interpret:] ‘She had eaten’7 that he8 did not eat? — What we say is [that the deduction may be made] because the text has deliberately been changed. For consider: It was dealing with her, why did it change [the form]? Consequently it may be deduced that it was ‘he who drank’ and that she did not drink. An objection was raised: If [a woman] is accustomed [to drink] she is given [an allowance of drink]! — Where she is accustomed to drink the case is different. For R. Hinena b. Kahana stated in the name of Samuel, ‘If she was accustomed [to drink] she is given an allowance of one cup; if she was not accustomed [to it] she is given an allowance of two cups’. What does he mean? — Abaye replied: It is this that he means: If she was in the habit [of drinking] two cups in the presence of her husband she is given one cup in his absence; if she is used [to drink] in the presence of her husband only one cup, she is given none at all in his absence. And if you prefer I might say: If she is used [to drink] she is allowed some wine for her puddings10 only. For R. Abbahu stated in the name of R. Johanan: It happened that when the Sages granted the daughter-law of Nakdimon11 b. Gorion a weekly12 allowance of two se'ahs of wine for her puddings she13 said to them, ‘May you grant such allowances to your daughters’. A Tanna taught: She was a woman awaiting the decision of the levir.14 Hence they did not reply Amen after her.15 A Tanna taught: One cup16 is becoming to a woman; two are degrading. [and if she has] three she solicits publicly,17 [but if she has] four she solicits even an ass in the street and cares not. Raba said: This was taught only [in respect of a woman] whose husband is not with her; but if her husband is with her [the objection to her drinks] does not arise.18 But, Surely. [there is the case of] Hannah whose husband was with her!19 — With a guest20 it is different,21 for R. Huna stated Whence is it inferred that a guest is forbidden marital union? [From Scripture in] which it is said, And they rose up in the morning early and worshipped before the Lord, and returned, and came to their house to Ramah; and Elkanah knew Hannah his wife; and the Lord remembered her,22 and cares not. Raba came before R. Joseph and said to him, ‘Grant me an allowance of board’, and he granted her the allowance. ‘Grant me [she again demanded] an allowance of wine’. ‘I know’, he said to her, ‘that Nahmani26 did not drink wine’. ‘By the life of the Master [I swear]’. she replied. ‘that he gave me to drink27 from horns28 like this’.29 As she was showing it to him her arm was uncovered and a light shone30 upon the court. Raba rose, went home and solicited R. Hisda's daughter.31 ‘Who has been to-day at the court?’ enquired R. Hisda's daughter. ‘Homa the wife of Abaye’. he replied. Thereupon she followed her, striking her with the straps32 of a chest33 until she chased her out of all Mahuza.34 ‘You have’, she said to her, ‘already killed three [men],35 and now you come to kill another [man]!’ The wife of R. Joseph the son of Raba came before R. Nehemiah the son of R. Joseph and said to him, ‘Grant me an allowance of board’, and he granted her. ‘Grant me also an allowance of wine’ [she demanded], and he granted her. ‘I know’, he said to her, ‘that the people of Mahuza drink wine’. The wife of R. Joseph the son of R. Menashya of Dewil36 came before R. Joseph and said to him, ‘Grant me an allowance of board’, and he granted her. ‘Grant me’, she said, ‘an allowance of wine’, and he granted her. ‘Grant me’, she said again. ‘an allowance of silks’. ‘Why silks?’ he asked. ‘For your sake’, she replied. ‘and for the sake of your friend and for the sake of your associates’.37 HE MUST ALSO PROVIDE HER WITH A BED, A MATTRESS etc. Why38 should he give her A MATTRESS AND A RUSH MAT?39 — R. Papa replied: [This is done only] in a place where it is the practice to girth the bed with ropes,40 which would hurt41 her. Our Rabbis taught: She42 is not given43 a cushion and a bolster. In the name of R. Nathan it was stated: She is given a cushion and a bolster. How is this to be understood? If it is a case where she is used to it,44 what [it may be objected] is the reason of the first Tanna?45 And if it is a case where she is not used to it, what [it may be asked] is the reason of R. Nathan? — [The statement was] necessary only in the case where it was his habit but not her habit. The first Tanna is of the opinion that [her husband] may say to her, ‘When I go away I take them and when I return I bring them back with me,’ while R. Nathan holds the opinion that she can tell him, ‘It might sometimes happen [that you will return] at twilight when you will be unable to bring them and so you will take mine and make me sleep on the ground’. HE MUST ALSO GIVE HER [ONCE A YEAR] A CAP. Said R. Papa to Abaye:

(1) Alcoholic drinks might lead her to unchastity (v. Rashi).

(40) Instead of the skin girth.

(41) דְּרָכָן (Af. of דִּרְכֵנִי) lit., ‘which produce a roughness’ (v. Jast.). According to Rashi בְּרָכָה is to e taken in the sense of ‘age’. The ropes cause her pain and ‘age her’ prematurely.

(42) The wife spoken of to Our Mishnah.

(54) The other bed clothes that he had given her or that she herself had purchased. (V. however, next note).

(55) Hence R. Nathan's ruling that a husband must in all cases provide his wife with cushion and bolster. [Var. lec. (v. Tosaf.) omit ‘so you will take mine’. On that reading the woman will argue that she would be made to sleep on the ground, even in his presence, when she is entitled to all the comfort to which he is accustomed, v. supra note 2].

Talmud - Mas. Kethuboth 65b

This Tanna¹ [expects a person to be] ‘stripped naked and to wear shoes’!² ‘The Tanna,’ the other replied. ‘was dealing³ with a mountainous region where one cannot possibly manage with less than three pairs of shoes [a year].⁴ and indirectly he informed us that these should be given to her on the occasion of a major festival so that she might derive joy from them. AND CLOTHING [OF THE VALUE] OF FIFTY ZUZ. Abaye said: Fifty small zuz.⁵ Whence is this deduced? — From the statement:⁶ ALL THIS APPLIES TO THE POOREST IN ISRAEL, BUT IN THE CASE OF A MEMBER OF THE BETTER CLASSES ALL IS FIXED ACCORDING TO THE DIGNITY OF HIS POSITION. Now, should one imagine [that the reference is to] fifty real zuz,⁷ whence [it could be objected] would a poor man obtain fifty zuz? Consequently it must be concluded [that the meaning is] fifty small zuz. SHE IS NOT TO BE GIVEN NEW etc. Our Rabbis taught: Any surplus of food⁸ belongs to the husband, while any Surplus of worn out clothes belongs to the woman. [You said:] ‘Any surplus of worn out clothes belongs to the woman’; of what use are they to her? — Rehaba replied: For putting on during the days of her menstruation so that she may not [by the constant wearing⁹ of the same clothes] become repulsive to her husband. Abaye stated: We have a tradition that the surplus of the worn out clothes of a widow¹⁰ belongs to her husband's heirs. For the reason in the former case¹¹ is that she shall not become repulsive to her husband¹² but in this case¹³ let her be ever so repulsive. HE MUST ALSO GIVE HER [EVERY WEEK] A SILVER MA’AH etc. What [is meant by] SHE IS TO EAT? — R. Nahman replied: Actual eating. R. Ashi replied: Intercourse. We have learned: SHE IS TO EAT WITH HIM ON THE NIGHT OF EVERY SABBATH. Now, according to him¹⁴ who said, [actual] eating’ it is quite correct to use the expression SHE IS TO EAT. According to him,¹⁵ however, who said, ‘intercourse’, why [it may be asked] was the expression SHE IS TO EAT used?¹⁶ — It is a euphemism,¹⁷ as it is written in Scripture. She¹⁸ eateth, and wipeth her mouth, and saith: ‘I have done no wickedness’.¹⁹ An objection was raised: R. Simeon b. Gamaliel said, ‘She is to eat with him on the night of the Sabbath and on the Sabbath [day]’. Now, according to him²⁰ who said, ‘[actual] eating’, it is correct to state, ‘and on the Sabbath [day]’.²¹ According to him,²² however, who said, ‘intercourse’, is there any intercourse on the Sabbath day? Did not R. Huna state, The Israelites are holy and do not have intercourse in the day-time”?²³ — But, Surely, Raba stated: It is permitted in a dark room.²⁴ IF SHE WAS NURSING [HER CHILD]. R. ‘Ulla the Great made at the Prince's²⁵ door the following
Although it was said:26 ‘A man is under no obligation to maintain his sons and daughters when they are minors’, he must maintain them while they are very young.27 How long?28 — Until the age of six; in accordance [with the view of] R. Assi, for R. Assi stated: A child of the age of six is exempt29 by the ‘erub30 of his mother. Whence [is this31 derived]? — From the Statement: IF SHE WAS NURSING [HER CHILD] HER HANDIWORK IS REDUCED AND HER MAINTENANCE IS INCREASED. What can be the reason?32 Surely because he33 must eat together with her. But is it not possible [that the reason32 is] because she34 ailing? — If that were the case it should have been stated, ‘If she was ailing’, why then [was it stated]. IF SHE WAS NURSING?35 But is it not possible that it was this that we were taught:36 That nursing mothers are commonly ailing?37 It was stated: What is the addition38 that he makes for her?39 R. Joshua b. Levi said: She is given an additional allowance for wine, because wine is beneficial for lactation.

Chapter VI

Mishnah. A wife's find and her handiwork belong to her husband. And [of] her inheritance40 he has the usufruct during her lifetime.41 [Any compensation for] an indignity or blemish [that may have been inflicted upon] her belongs to her. R. Judah b. Bathyra ruled: When in privacy42 she receives two-thirds [of the compensation] while he43 receives one-third, but when in public44 he receives two-thirds45 and she receives one-third. His share is to be given to him forthwith, but with hers land is to be bought and he43 enjoys the usufruct.46

Gemara. What does he47 teach us? This surely was already learnt: A father has authority over his daughter in respect of her betrothal [whether it was effected] by money, by deed or by intercourse; he is entitled to anything she finds and to her handiwork; [he has the right] of invalidating her vows, and he receives her letter of divorce; but he has no usufruct during her lifetime. When she marries, the husband surpasses him [in his rights] in that he has usufruct during her lifetime!48 — He49 regarded this50 as necessary [on account of the law relating to] indignity or blemish [that may have been inflicted upon] her, [which is the subject of] a dispute between R. Judah b. Bathyra and the Rabbis.51

A tanna recited in the presence of Raba: A wife's find belongs to herself; but R. Akiba ruled: [It belongs] to her husband. The other52 said to him: Now that [in respect of the] surplus53

Lit., ‘the small of the small’.

Must he maintain them.

i.e., he does not require one specially prepared for himself (v. Golds.). Rashi takes יִצְחָק in the literal sense, ‘he goes out’. i.e., should his father place an ‘erub in one direction and his mother to the opposite direction he would be allowed to move only in the direction his mother had chosen. In any case it follows that a child of the age of six is entirely attached to and dependent upon his mother and, consequently, just as a man must provide for his wife so must he provide for the child who is entirely dependent upon her.

V. Glos.

The conclusion, therefore, must be that she was not ailing.

As this is quite possible no positive proof is available that it is a father's legal duty to maintain his young children.
