(11) Because if the loan is repaid, this will appear like interest on his maneh.

(12) According to R. Judah, when the loan is repaid, any profit that has been made out of the field in the interval is to be given up. The Rabbis, however, forbid even this since the lender does after all enjoy interest for the time being on the loan. V. B.M., Sonc. ed. p. 376, n. 8.

Talmud - Mas. Megillah 28a

, nor have I said grace before a kohen,¹ nor have I eaten of a beast from which the priestly dues² have not been given,³ as R. Isaac said in the name of R. Johanan: It is forbidden to eat from an animal from which the priestly dues have not been given; and R. Isaac further said: To eat from an animal from which the priestly dues have not been given is like eating tebel.⁴ The law, however, is not as stated by him. ‘Nor did I say grace before a kohen’. This implies that this is a meritorious action. But has not R. Johanan said: ‘If a talmid hakam allows even a high priest who is all ignoramus to say grace before him, that talmid hakam commits a mortal offence,’⁵ as it says, All that hate me [mesanne'ai] love death;⁶ read not mesanne'ai [that hate me], but masni'ai [that make me hated]?⁷ — When R. Johanan made this remark, he was thinking of equals.⁸

R. Nehunia b. ha-Kaneh was asked by his disciples: In virtue of what have you reached such a good old age? He replied: Never in my life have I sought respect through the degradation of my fellow, nor has the curse of my fellow gone up with me upon my bed, and I have been generous with my money.⁹ ‘I have not sought respect through the degradation of my fellow’, as illustrated by R. Huna who once was carrying a spade on his shoulder when R. Hana b. Hanilai wanted to take it from him, but he said to him, If you are accustomed to carry in your own town, take it, but if not, I do not want to be paid respect through your degradation. ‘Nor did the curse of my fellow go up on my bed with me’. This is illustrated by Mar Zutra, who, when he climbed into his bed said, I forgive all who have vexed me. ‘I have been generous with my money’, as a Master has said, ‘Job was generous with his money; he used to leave with the shopkeeper a perutah⁰ of his change’. R. Akiba asked R. Nehunia the great: In virtue of what have you reached such a good old age? His attendants came and beat him, so he went and sat on the top of a date tree, and said to him: Rabbi, seeing that it says ‘a lamb’, why does it also say ‘one’? Thereupon he [R. Nehunia] said, He is a rabbinical student, leave him alone. He then answered his question, saying, ‘One’ means ‘unique in its flock’. Then he said to him: Never in my life have I accepted presents, nor have I insisted on retribution [when wronged], and I have been generous with my money. ‘I have not accepted presents’, as illustrated by R. Eleazar, who, when presents were sent to him from the Prince would not accept them and when he was invited there would not go. He said to them: Do you not want me to live, since it says, He that hateth gifts shall live? R. Zera, when presents were sent to him from the Prince, would not accept them, but when he was invited there he used to go, saying, They derive honour from my presence. ‘Nor did I insist on retribution’, as Raba said: ‘He who waives his right to retribution is forgiven all his sins, as it says, that pardoneth iniquity and passeth by transgression. Whose iniquity is forgiven? The iniquity of him who passes by transgression.

Rabbi asked R. Joshua b. Korha: In virtue of what have you reached such a good old age? He said to him: Do you begrudge me my life? Said Rabbi to him: This is [a point of] Torah, and it is important for me to learn. He replied: Never in my life have I gazed at the countenance of a wicked man; for so R. Johanan said: It is forbidden to a man to gaze at the form of the countenance of a wicked man, as says, Were it not that I regard the presence of Jehoshaphat the king of Judah, I would not look toward thee nor see thee. R. Eleazar said: His eyes become dim, as it says, And it came to pass that when Isaac was old that his eyes were dim, so that he could not see; because he used to gaze at the wicked Esau. But was that the cause? Has not R. Isaac said: Let not the curse of an ordinary person ever seem of small account to thee, for Abimelech cursed Sarah, and it was fulfilled in her seed, as it says, Behold he is for thee a covering [kesuth] of the eyes. Read not ‘kesuth’ but ‘kesiyath’ [blinding]? — Both caused the affliction. Raba said. We learn it from here, It is not good to respect the person of the wicked. When he was about to depart life, Rabbi said to him, Bless me. He said to him: May it be heaven's will that you attain to half my days. Not to their whole length [he exclaimed]? Shall those who succeed you, [he replied] pasture cattle?

Abbuha b. Ihi and Minyamin b. Ihi [both left sayings on this subject]. One said: May I be rewarded because I have never gazed at a Cuthean, and the other said, May I be rewarded because I have never gone into partnership with a Cuthean.

R. Zera was asked by his disciples: In virtue of what have you reached such a good old age? He replied: Never in my life have I been harsh with my household, nor have I stepped in front of one greater than myself, nor have I meditated on the Torah in filthy alleys, nor have I gone four cubits without Torah and tefillin, either a long or a short sleep, nor have I rejoiced in the downfall of my fellow, nor have I called my fellow by his nickname, (or, as some report, ‘family nickname’).

MISHNAH. R. JUDAH SAID FURTHER: IF A SYNAGOGUE HAS FALLEN INTO RUINS, IT IS NOT RIGHT TO DELIVER FUNERAL ORATIONS THEREIN NOR TO WIND ROPES NOR TO SPREAD NETS NOR TO LAY OUT PRODUCE ON THE ROOF [TO DRY] NOR TO USE IT AS A SHORT CUT, AS IT SAYS, AND I WILL BRING YOUR SANCTUARIES UNTO DESOLATION, [WHICH IMPLIES THAT] THEIR HOLINESS REMAINS EVEN WHEN THEY ARE DESOLATE. IF GRASS COMES UP IN THEM, IT SHOULD NOT BE PLUCKED, SO AS TO EXCITE COMPASSION.

, nor to dress up in them, nor to stroll about in them, nor to go into them in summer to escape the heat and in the rainy season to escape the rain, nor to deliver a private funeral address in them. But it is right to read [the Scriptures] in them and to repeat the Mishnah and to deliver public funeral addresses. R. Judah said: When is this? When they are still in use; but when they are abandoned, grass is allowed to grow in them, and it should not be plucked, so as to excite compassion’. Who was speaking about grass? — There is an omission, and the statement should read thus: ‘They should be swept and watered so that grass should not grow in them. R. Judah said: When is this? When they are in use; but when they are abandoned, grass is allowed to grow in them; if grass does grow, it is not plucked, so that it may excite compassion.
R. Assi said: The synagogues of Babylon have been built with a stipulation, and even so they must not be treated disrespectfully. What [for instance] is this? — Doing calculations [for business purposes] in them. R. Assi said: A synagogue in which people make calculations is used for keeping a dead body in over night. You actually think it is used for keeping a dead body in? — Is there no way otherwise? But [say] in the end a meth mizwah will be kept there over night.

‘Nor to dress up in it’. Raba said: The Sages and their disciples are permitted — since R. Joshua b. Levi has said: What is the meaning of ‘Be Rabbanan’? The Rabbis’ house.

‘Nor to go into them in summer to escape the heat and in the rainy season to escape the rain’. For instance, Rabina and R. Ada b. Mattenah were once standing and asking questions of Raba when a shower of rain came on. They went into the synagogue, saying, Why have we gone into the synagogue is not because of the rain, but because the discussion of a legal point requires clarity, like a clear day.

R. Aha the son of Raba asked R. Ashi: If a man has occasion to call another out of synagogue, what is he to do? He replied: If he is a rabbinical student, let him say some halachah; if he is a tanna, let him repeat a Mishnah; if he is a Kara, let him say a verse of Scripture; if none of these, let him say to a child, ‘Repeat me the last verse you have learnt’; or else let him stay a little while and then get up.

‘To deliver public funeral addresses in them’. What is meant by a public funeral address? — R. Hisda gave as an example, For instance, a funeral address at which R. Shesheth is present. R. Shesheth mentioned as an example: For instance, a funeral address at which R. Hisda is present. Rafram had a funeral address delivered for his daughter-in-law in the synagogue, saying, To pay honour to me and to the dead all the people will come.

R. Zera delivered a funeral address for a certain rabbinical student in the synagogue, saying, Whether to pay honour to me or to pay honour to the dead, all the public will come.

Resh Lakish delivered a funeral address for a certain rabbinical student who frequented the Land of Israel and who used to repeat halachoth before twenty-four rows [of disciples]. He said: Alas! The Land of Israel has lost a great man. [On the other hand] there was a certain man who used to repeat halachoth, Sifra and Sifre and Tosefta, and when he died they came and said to R. Nahman, Sir, will you deliver a funeral oration for him, and he said, How are we to deliver over him an address: Alas! A bag full of books has been lost! Observe now the difference between the rigorous scholars of the Land of Israel and the saints of Babylon.

We have learnt in another place: ‘Whoever makes use of a crown, passeth away [from the world]’ and Resh Lakish commented: This applies to one who accepts service from one who can repeat halachoth, and ‘Ulla said: A man may accept service from one who can repeat the four [orders of the Mishnah] but not from one who can [also] teach them. This is illustrated by the following story of Resh Lakish, he was once traveling along a road when he came to a pool of water, and a man came up and put him on his shoulders and began taking him across. He said to the man: Can you read the Scriptures? He answered, I can. Can you repeat the Mishnah? [He replied], I can repeat four orders of the Mishnah. Resh Lakish thereupon said: You have hewn four rocks, and you carry Resh Lakish on your shoulder? Throw the son of Lakisha into the water! He replied: I would sooner that your honour tell me something. If so, he replied, learn from me this dictum which was enunciated by R. Zera: ‘The daughters of Israel imposed spontaneously upon themselves the restriction that if they saw [on their garments] a spot of blood no bigger than a mustard seed, they waited for seven days without issue [before taking a ritual bath].
It was taught in the Tanna debe Eliyyahu:

23 ‘Whoever repeats halachoth may rest assured that he is destined for the future world, as it says, His goings [halikoth] are to eternity.

24 Read not halikoth but halachoth’.

Talmud - Mas. Megilah 29a

The study of the Torah may be suspended for escorting a dead body to the burying place and a bride to the canopy. It was recorded of R. Judah b. Ila'i that he used to suspend the study of the Torah for escorting a dead body to the burying place and a bride to the canopy. When does this rule [regarding the dead] apply? When there are not present sufficient numbers [to pay him due honour]; but if sufficient numbers are available, [the study of the Torah] is not suspended. What numbers are sufficient?—R. Samuel b. Inia said in the name of Rab: Twelve thousand and [in addition] six thousand trumpets, or, as according to another version, twelve thousand men of whom six thousand have trumpets. Ulla said: Enough to make a procession extending from the burying ground to the town gate. R. Shesheth said: The withdrawal of the Torah should correspond to its delivery: as its delivery was in the presence of sixty myriads, so its withdrawal should be accompanied by sixty myriads. This applies to one who knew by heart Scripture and Mishnah; but for one who [also] taught the Mishnah there is no limit.
It has been taught: R. Simon b. Yohai said: Come and see how beloved are Israel in the sight of God, in that to every place to which they were exiled the Shechinah went with them. They were exiled to Egypt and the Shechinah was with them, as it says, Did I reveal myself unto the house of thy father when they were in Egypt. They were exiled to Babylon, and the Shechinah was with them, as it says, for your sake I was sent to Babylon. And when they will be redeemed in the future, the Shechinah will be with them, as it says, Then the Lord thy God will return [with] thy captivity. It does not say here we-heshib [and he shall bring back] but we-shab [and he shall return]. This teaches us that the Holy One, blessed be He, will return with them from the places of exile.

Where [is the Shechinah] in Babylon?-Abaye said: In the synagogue of Huza and in the synagogue of Shaf-veyathib in Nehardea. Do not, however, imagine that it is in both places, but it is sometimes in one and sometimes in the other. Said Abaye: May I be rewarded because whenever I am within a parasang I go in and pray there.

The father of Samuel and Levi were sitting in the synagogue which ‘moved and settled’ in Nehardea. The Shechinah came and they heard a sound of tumult and rose and went out. R. Shesheth was once sitting in the synagogue which ‘moved and settled’ in Nehardea, when the Shechinah came. He did not go out, and the ministering angels came and threatened him. He turned to him and said: Sovereign of the Universe, if one is afflicted and one is not afflicted, who gives way to whom? God thereupon said to them: Leave him.

Yet have I been to them as a little sanctuary. R. Isaac said: This refers to the synagogue and houses of learning in Babylon. R. Eleazar says: This refers to the house of our teacher in Babylon.

Raba gave the following exposition: What is the meaning of the verse, Lord, thou hast been our dwelling place? This refers to synagogues and houses of learning. Abaye said: Formerly I used to study at home and pray in the synagogue, but when I noticed the words of David, O Lord, I love the habitation of thy house, I began to study also in the synagogue.

It has been taught: R. Eleazar ha-Kappara says: The synagogues and houses of learning in Babylon will in time to come be planted in Eretz Israel, as it says, For as Tabor among the mountains and as Carmel by the sea came. Now can we not draw an inference here a fortiori: Seeing that Carmel and Tabor which came only on a single occasion to learn the Torah are implanted in Eretz Israel, how much more must this be the case with the synagogues and houses of learning where the Torah is read and expounded?

Bar Kappara gave the following exposition: What is the meaning of the verse, Why look ye askance, ye mountains of peaks. A bath kol went forth and said to them: Why do ye desire litigation with Sinai? Ye are all full of blemishes as compared with Sinai. It is written here gabnunim, and it is written elsewhere or crookbacked or a dwarf. R. Ashi observed: You can learn from this that if a man is arrogant, this is a blemish in him.

IT SHOULD NOT BE USED AS A SHORT CUT [KAPANDRIA]. What is kapandria? Raba said: Kapandria is as its name implies. What does its name imply? As if one were to say, Instead of going round the block, I will go through here. R. Abbahu said: If a road passed through there originally, it is permitted. R. Nahman b. Isaac said: If one goes in without any intention of using it as a short cut, he may afterwards use it as a short cut. And R. Helbo said in the name of R. Huna: If one enters a synagogue to pray, he may afterwards use it as a short cut, as it says, But when, the people of the land shall come before the Lord at the appointed seasons, he that entereth by way of the north gate to worship shall go forth by way of the south gate.
IF GRASS HAS GROWN IN IT, IT SHOULD NOT BE PLUCKED, SO AS TO EXCITE COMPASSION. But it has been taught: ‘It should not be plucked and given as food [to cattle], but it may be plucked and left there’? — The statement in our Mishnah also refers to plucking and giving for food.

Our Rabbis taught: ‘Burying grounds must not be treated disrespectfully. Cattle should not be fed in them, nor should a watercourse be turned through them, nor should grass be plucked in them, and if it is plucked, it should be burnt on the spot, out of respect for the dead’. To what do these last words apply? Shall I say, to the last clause? If it is burnt on the spot, what respect does this show for the dead? It must be then to the preceding clauses.

and with regard to diverse seeds. I can understand it being made for diverse seeds, because it is the time for sowing. But what is the ground for making it for the shekels? — R. Tabi said in the name of R. Josiah: Because Scripture says, This is the burnt-offering of each new moon in its renewal. The Torah herein says to us: As you renew the month, bring an offering from the new contributions. And since it is in Nisan that we have to bring from the new contributions, we read beforehand on the first of Adar so that shekels should be brought [in time] to the Sanctuary. With whose view does this accord? Not with that of R. Simeon b. Gamaliel. For if you take the view of R. Simeon b. Gamaliel, he requires [only] two weeks’ [notice], as it has been taught: ‘Moot points in the law of Passover are considered from thirty days before Passover; R. Simeon b. Gamaliel, however, says, from two weeks before’. You may even say it accords with the view of R. Simeon b. Gamaliel. For since a Master has said that ‘on the fifteenth of this month [Adar] tables are set up in the provinces and on the twenty-fifth in the Sanctuary’, On account of the tables we read beforehand [on the first of Adar].

What is the portion of Shekalim? — Rab said, Commanded the children of Israel and say unto them My food which is presented unto me,9 Samuel said, When thou takest.10 We call well see how, according to the one who says the portion is ‘When thou takest’, it is called the portion of Shekalim, because shekalim are mentioned in it. But according to the one who says it is ‘My food which is presented to me’, — are shekels mentioned there? — Yes; the reason is based on the dictum of R. Tabi. I can well understand [the reason of] the one who says that ‘Command the children of Israel’ [should be read], because sacrifices are mentioned in it. But according to the one who says that ‘When thou takest’ should be read, are sacrifices mentioned there? It is the shekels for the sockets that are mentioned there!12 — [The reason is] as R. Joseph learnt: ‘There were three contributions; of the altar for the altar, of the sockets for the sockets, and of the repair of the House for the repair of the House’. There is a justification for the one who says that ‘When thou takest’ should be read, because he thus makes a difference between this New Moon and other New Moons. But the one who says that ‘Command the children of Israel’ should be read — what difference does he make?16 — He does make a difference, because on other New Moons17 six read in the portion of the day and one that of New Moon, whereas on this occasion all read in that of New Moon. This is a good answer for one who says that [when the Mishnah says that the ‘REGULAR ORDER’ IS RESUMED it means] ‘the regular order of portions’; but according to the one who says that [what it means is that] the order of haftarahs is resumed [and the order of Pentateuch portions has not been interrupted], what difference is there [between this New Moon and others]? — There is a difference, because on other New Moons six read in the portion of the day and one the special portion for New Moon, whereas on this occasion three read in the portion of the day and four in that of New Moon.

On objection was raised ‘When the New Moon of Adar falls on Sabbath, the portion of Shekalim is read, and the chapter of Jehoiada the Priest is said as haftarah’. Now according to the one who says that ‘When thou takest’ should be said, there is a good reason for reading Jehoiada the Priest as haftarah because it is similar in subject, as it is written [there], the money of the persons for whom each man is rated. But according to the one who says that ‘My food which is presented to me’ is read, is there any similarity? — There is, on the basis of R. Tabi’s dictum.

The following was then cited in objection: ‘If it [the New Moon of Adar] falls on the portion next to it [the portion of Shekalim], whether before or after, they read it and repeat it’. Now this creates no difficulty for one who holds that ‘When thou takest’ is read because [the regular portion containing this passage] falls about that time. But according to the one who says that ‘My food which is presented to me’ is read — does [the portion containing that passage] fall about that time? — Yes, for the people of Palestine, who complete the reading of the Pentateuch in three years.

It has been taught in agreement with Samuel: ‘When the New Moon of Adar falls on Sabbath, the portion ‘When thou takest’ is read, and the haftarah is about ‘Jehoiada the Priest’.

R. Isaac Nappaha said: When the New Moon of Adar falls on Sabbath, three scrolls of the Law are taken out [of the Ark], and read out of — from one the portion of the day, from one the portion of New Moon, and from one ‘When thou takest’. R. Isaac b. Nappaha also said: When the New Moon of Tebeth falls on Sabbath, three scrolls of the Law are brought and read out of; from one the regular portion, from a second the portion of New Moon, and from the third that of Hanukkah. Both statements are required. For if only the latter had been given, [I might think that] in this case R. Isaac required [three scrolls], but in the other case he followed the view of Rab who said that the portion of Shekalim is ‘My food which is presented to me’, and therefore two would be enough. Therefore we are told that this is not so. But why not state the former [only] and the other would not need to be stated? — One was inferred from the other.

It was stated: If the New Moon of Tebeth falls on a weekday, R. Isaac [Nappaha] says that three read the portion of New Moon and one the portion of Hanukkah. R. Dimi from Haifa, however, says that three read the portion of Hanukkah and one that of New Moon. Said R. Mani: The opinion of R. Isaac Nappaha is the more probable, because when it is a question between the regular and the intermittent, the regular takes precedence. R. Abin, however, said: The opinion of R. Dimi is the more probable. For what is it that causes a fourth man to read? The New Moon. Therefore the fourth ought to read the portion of the New Moon. What do we decide? — R. Joseph said: We take no notice of New Moon, while Rabbah said, We take no notice of Hanukkah. The law, however, is that we take no notice of Hanukkah, and New Moon is the main consideration.

It was stated: ‘If it [the Sabbath of Shekalim] falls when the portion ‘And thou shalt command’ is read, then six persons read from ‘And thou shalt command’ to ‘When thou takest’, and one from ‘When thou takest’ to ‘Thou shalt also make’. Abaye remarked:

(1) That it is time to pluck them up, if any have appeared, v. Shek. I, 1.
(2) More precisely, sprouting (v. Tosaf.).
The following was cited in objection to this: ‘If it [the Sabbath of Shekalim] falls on the Sabbath of the portion adjoining it, whether just before or just after, it is read and repeated’. Now if we accept the view of Abaye, this is quite in harmony with it; but on the view of R. Isaac Nappaha, it does conflict with it. R. Isaac Nappaha can answer you: And on the view of Abaye, does it create no difficulty? We may allow the Sabbath before it, but if it falls on the Sabbath after, where do you find a repetition? What you have to say in fact is that [according to Abaye] this portion of Shekalim is read on two successive Sabbaths, so I too can answer that it is read on two successive Sabbaths.

If it falls on the portion of ‘When thou takest’ itself, R. Isaac Nappaha says that six read from \textbf{‘Thou shalt also make’ to ‘And Moses assembled’},\textsuperscript{5} and one from ‘When thou takest’ to ‘Thou shalt also make’. Abaye strongly demurred to this, saying, Now people will say that we are reading backwards!\textsuperscript{6} No, said Abaye; Six read to ‘And Moses assembled’, and one repeats from ‘When thou takest’ to ‘Thou shalt also make’. It has been taught in agreement with Abaye: ‘If it falls on [the Sabbath of] ‘When thou takest itself, it is read on the Sabbath before’.

It was stated: ‘If the new moon of Adar falls on Friday, Rab says that [the portion of Shekalim] is read on the Sabbath before, while Samuel says that it is read on the Sabbath after’. Rab says it is read before, because otherwise there will be a shortage in the days of the tables.\textsuperscript{7} Samuel says it is read after, because after all the fifteenth day [from the new moon] falls on a Friday, and the tables will not be taken out till the Sunday; therefore we delay the reading [of the portion of Shekalim].

\textit{We have learnt: IF IT FALLS IN THE MIDDLE OF THE WEEK, IT IS READ ON THE SABBATH BEFORE, AND ON THE NEXT SABBATH THERE IS A BREAK. Does not this rule apply even where it falls on Friday? — No; only if it falls actually in the middle part of the week.}

Come and hear: ‘Which is the first Sabbath [of the series]? That in the week succeeding which the new moon of Adar falls, even if it is on Friday’. Now do not the words ‘even on Friday’ here [put Friday] on the same footing as the middle of the week, so that just as when it falls in the middle of the week we read before, so when it falls on Friday we read before? — Said Samuel: [The words ‘in the middle’ here mean], ‘on it’.\textsuperscript{8} So too a Tanna of the school of Samuel taught: ‘On it’. The same difference of opinion is found between Tannaim: ‘An interruption can be made [in the series] of Sabbaths. This is the ruling of R. Judah the Prince.\textsuperscript{9} R. Simeon b. Eleazar says: No interruption is made. Said R. Simeon b. Eleazar: When do I rule that no interruption may be made? When it [new moon] falls on Friday;\textsuperscript{10} but if it falls in the middle of the week, it [the portion of Shekalim] is read on the Sabbath before, even though that is still in Shebat’.\textsuperscript{11}

\textbf{ON THE SECOND ZAKOR etc.} It was stated: If Purim falls on Friday, Rab says that the portion of Zakor is read on the Sabbath before, while Samuel says it is read on the Sabbath after. Rab says it is read on the Sabbath before, so that the celebration [of Purim] should not precede the commemoration [of the miracle]. Samuel says on the Sabbath after; he can argue that since there are the walled cities which celebrate on the fifteenth, celebration and commemoration come together.

\textit{We learnt: ON THE SECOND ZAKOR. Now when the new moon [of Adar] is on Sabbath, Purim falls on Friday, and he states ON THE SECOND ZAKOR?} — R. Papa replied: What is meant by ‘second’ here? The second to the break.\textsuperscript{12}

Come and hear: ‘Which is the second Sabbath? That in the week following which Purim falls, even if on Friday’. Now is not the Friday here mentioned meant to be on the same footing as the middle of the week, so that just as when it falls in the middle of the week we read before, so when it falls on Friday we read before? Said Samuel: [The proper reading is] ‘on it’;\textsuperscript{13} and so a Tanna of the school of Samuel taught, ‘On it’.

\textit{If it falls on Sabbath itself.} R. Huna said, All authorities concur that the portion of Zakor is not read on the Sabbath before, whereas R. Nahman said, There is a difference of opinion on this point also. It was also stated: ‘R. Hyya b. Abba said in the name of R. Abba, who had it from Rab: If Purim falls on Sabbath, Zakor is read on the Sabbath before’.

\textbf{ON THE THIRD THE PORTION OF THE RED HEIFER etc.} Our Rabbis taught: Which is the third Sabbath? The one which follows Purim. It was stated: R. Hama b. Hanina said: The Sabbath next to the new moon of Nisan. There is no conflict [between these two statements]; the one refers to where the new moon of Nisan falls on Sabbath,\textsuperscript{14} and the other to where it falls in the middle of the
ON THE FOURTH, THIS MONTH SHALL BE TO YOU. Our Rabbis taught: If the new moon of Adar falls on Sabbath, we read Ki Thissa and [the account of] Jehoiada as haftarah. Which is the first Sabbath? The one in the week following which the new moon of Adar falls, even if on Friday. On the second Sabbath Zakor is read, and for haftarah, I have visited. Which is the second Sabbath? The one in the week following which Purim falls, even if on Friday. On the third Sabbath the portion of the Red Heifer is read, and for haftarah, And I shall sprinkle on you. Which is the third Sabbath? The one which follows Purim. On the fourth ‘This month’ is read, and for haftarah, Thus saith the Lord God, in the first month on the first of the month.

Talmud - Mas. Megilah 30b

Which is the fourth Sabbath? — The one immediately preceding the week in which the new moon of Nisan falls, even if on Friday.

ON THE FIFTH THE REGULAR ORDER IS RESUMED. What order? — R. Ammi said: The order of weekly portions: R. Jeremiah said, The order of haftarahs is resumed. Said Abaye: The opinion of R. Ammi is the more probable, Since we learnt: THE REGULAR READING IS INTERRUPTED FOR ANY SPECIAL OCCASION FOR NEW MOONS, FOR HANUKKAH, FOR PURIM, FOR FASTS, FOR MA’AMADOTH AND FOR THE DAY OF ATONEMENT. This accords well with the opinion of the one who says that the order of weekly portions is resumed, seeing that a portion [of the Law] is read on weekdays. But on the view of him who says that the order of haftarahs is resumed — is there any haftarah on [ordinary] weekdays? [What says] the other to this? — The one rule holds where it applies, and the other where it applies. But on fast days [according to R. Jeremiah], why should there be an interruption [of the regular portion]? Let us read in the morning from the portion of the week and at Minnah on the subject of the fast? — [R.
Jeremiah's ruling] supports R. Huna; for R. Huna sa id: 'In the morning of fast days there is a public assembly'. How do we act? Abaye said: From the morning to midday we examine the affairs of the town; from midday to evening, for a quarter of the day we read the portion of the Law and the haftarah, and for a quarter we offer up supplications as it says, And they read in the book of the law of their Lord a fourth part of the day, and another part they confessed and prostrated themselves before the Lord their God. But cannot I interpret this in the reverse way? — Do not imagine such a thing, since it is written, Then were assembled unto me every one that trembled at the words of the God of Israel because of the faithlessness of them of the captivity and I sat appalled unto the evening offering; and it goes on, And at the evening offering I arose up from my fasting.

THE SECTION OF BLESSINGS AND CURSES. THE SECTION OF CURSES MUST NOT BE BROKEN UP, BUT MUST ALL BE READ BY ONE PERSON. ON MONDAY AND THURSDAY AND ON SABBATH AT MINNAH THE REGULAR PORTION OF THE WEEK IS READ, AND THIS IS NOT RECKONED AS PART OF THE READING [FOR THE SUCCEEDING SABBATH], AS IT SAYS, AND MOSES DECLARED UNTO THE CHILDREN OF ISRAEL. THE APPOINTED SEASONS OF THE LORD, WHICH IMPLIES THAT IT IS PART OF THEIR ORDINANCE THAT EACH SHOULD BE READ IN ITS SEASON.
GEMARA. Our Rabbis taught: ‘On Passover we read from the section of the festivals and for haftarah the account of the Passover of Gilgal.’ Now that we keep two days Passover, the haftarah of the first day is the account of the Passover in Gilgal and of the second day that of the Passover of Josiah. ‘On the other days of the Passover the various passages in the Torah relating to Passover are read’ What are these? — R. Papa said: The mnemonic is M’AP’U. ‘On the last day of Passover we read, And it came to pass when God sent, and as haftarah, And David spoke.’ On the next day we read, All the firstborn, and for haftarah, This very day. Abaye said: Nowadays the communities are accustomed to read ‘Draw the ox’, ‘Sanctify with money’, ‘Hew in the wilderness’, and ‘Send the firstborn’. ‘On Pentecost, we read Seven weeks, and for haftarah a chapter from Habakuk.’ According to others, we read In the third month, and for haftarah the account of the Divine Chariot. Nowadays that we keep two days, we follow both courses, but in the reverse order. On New Year we read On the seventh month, and for haftarah, Is Ephraim a darling son unto me. According to others, we read And the Lord remembered Sarah, and for haftarah the story of Hannah. Nowadays that we keep two days, on the first day we follow the ruling of the other authority, and on the next day we say, And God tried Abraham, with ‘Is Ephraim a darling son to me’ for haftarah. On the Day of Atonement we read After the death and for haftarah, For thus saith the high and lofty one. At minhah we read the section of forbidden marriages and for haftarah the book of Jonah.

R. Johanan said: Wherever you find [mentioned in the Scriptures] the power of the Holy One, blessed be He, you also find his gentleness mentioned. This fact is stated in the Torah, repeated In the Prophets, and stated a third time in the [Sacred] Writings. It is written in the Torah, For the Lord your God, he is the God of gods and Lord of lords, and it says immediately afterwards, He doth execute justice for the fatherless and widow. It is repeated in the Prophets: For thus saith the High and Lofty One, that inhabiteth eternity whose name is holy, and it says immediately afterwards, [I dwell] with him that is of a contrite and humble spirit. It is stated a third time in the [Sacred] Writings, as it is written: Extol him that rideth upon the skies, whose name is the Lord, and immediately afterwards it is written, A father of the fatherless and a judge of the widows.

‘On the first day of Tabernacles we read the section of the festivals in Leviticus, and for haftarah, Behold a day cometh for the Lord.’ Nowadays that we keep two days, on the next day we read the same Section from the Torah, but what do we read for haftarah.? — And all the men of Israel assembled unto King Solomon. On the other days of the festival we read the section of the offerings of the festival. On the last festival day we read, ‘All the firstlings’, with the commandments and statutes [which precede it], and for haftarah, ‘And it was so that when Solomon had made an end’. On the next day we read, ‘And this is the blessing’, and for haftarah, ‘And Solomon stood’.

R. Huna said in the name of R. Shesheth: On the Sabbath which falls in the intermediate days of the festival, whether Passover or Tabernacles, the passage we read from the Torah is ‘See, Thou [sayest unto me]’ and for haftarah on Passover the passage of the ‘dry bones’, and on Tabernacles, ‘In that day when Gog shall come’. On Hanukkah we read the section of the Princes and for haftarah [on Sabbath] that of the lights in Zechariah. Should there fall two Sabbaths in Hanukkah, on the first we read [for haftarah] the passage of the lights in Zechariah and on the second that of the lights of Solomon. On Purim we read ‘And Amalek came’, On New Moon, ‘On your new moons’. If New Moon falls on a Sabbath, the haftarah is [the passage concluding] ‘And it shall come to pass that from one new moon to another’. If it falls on a Sunday, on the day before the haftarah is, ‘And Jonathan said to him, tomorrow is the new moon’.

If the new moon of Ab falls on a Sabbath the haftarah is [the passage with the verse] ‘Your new moons and your appointed seasons my soul hateth, they are a burden unto me’. What is the meaning of ‘they are a burden unto me’? God said: ‘It is not enough for Israel that they sin before Me, but they impose on Me the burden of considering what punishment I shall bring upon them’. On the Ninth of Ab itself what is the haftarah? — Rab said: ‘[The passage containing], How is she become a harlot’. What is the section from the Torah? — It has been taught: Others say, ‘But if ye will not hearken unto me’; R. Nathan b. Joseph says, ‘How long will this people despise me’; and some say, ‘How long shall I bear with this evil congregation’. Abaye said: Nowadays the custom has been adopted of reading [from the Torah] ‘When thou shalt beget children’, and for haftarah, ‘I will utterly consume them’.

ON MA'AMADOTH THE ACCOUNT OF THE CREATION. Whence is this rule derived? — Said R., Ammi: But for the ma'amadoth, the heaven and earth would not be firmly established, as it says, But for My covenant [which continues] day and night, I had not set the statutes of heaven and earth, and it is written, And he said, O Lord God, Whereby shall I know that I shall inherit it. Said Abraham before the Holy One, blessed be He: Sovereign of the Universe, perhaps God forbid, Israel will sin before Thee and Thou wilt do to them as Thou didst to the generation of the Flood and the generation of the Division? He answered, Not so. He then said before Him: Sovereign of the Universe, by what shall I know this? He said: Take me a heifer of three years old etc. He then said before Him: Sovereign of the Universe, This is very well for the time when the Temple will be standing, but in the time when there will be no Temple what will befall them? He replied to him: I have already fixed for them the order of the sacrifices. Whenever they will read the section dealing with them, I will reckon it as if they were bringing me an offering, and forgive all their iniquities.

ON FAST DAYS [THE PORTION OF] BLESSINGS AND CURSES IS READ, AND THERE MUST BE NO BREAK IN [THE READING OF] THE CURSES. Whence is this rule derived? — R. Hyya b. Gamda replied in the name of R. Assi: Because Scripture says, My son, despise not the chastening of the Lord. Resh Lakish said: It is because a blessing should not be said for chastisement. How then is the reader to do? A Tanna taught: He commences his reading with a verse before them and concludes it with a verse after them. Said Abaye: This rule was laid down only for the curses in Leviticus, but in the curses in Deuteronomy a break may be made. What is the reason? — In the former Israel are addressed in the plural number and Moses uttered them on behalf of the Almighty; in the latter Israel are addressed in the singular, and Moses uttered them in his own name. Levi b. Buti was once reading the curses [in Deuteronomy] in the presence of R. Huna hesitatingly. Said R. Huna to him: Do just as you please, the rule [against making a break] applies only to the curses in Leviticus, but in those in Deuteronomy a break may be made.

It has been taught: R. Simeon b. Eleazar says: Ezra made a regulation for Israel that they should read the curses in Leviticus before Pentecost and those in Deuteronomy before New Year. What is the reason? — Abaye — or you may also say Resh Lakish said: So that the year may end along with its curses. I grant you that in regard to the curses in Deuteronomy you can say, ‘so that the year should end along with its curses’. But as regards those in Leviticus is Pentecost a New Year? — Yes; Pentecost is also a New Year, as we have learnt: ‘On Pentecost is the new year for [fruit of] the tree’.
It has been taught: R. Simeon b. Eleazar says: If old men say to you, throw down’, and young men say to you ‘build up’ throw down and do not build up, because destruction by old men is construction, and construction by boys is destruction; and the example is Rehoboam son of Solomon.\(^{19}\)

Our Rabbis taught: The place [in the Torah] where they leave off in the morning service on Sabbath is the place where they begin at Minhah; the place where they leave off at Minhah [on Sabbath] is the place where they begin on Monday; the place where they leave off on Monday is the place where they begin on Thursday; the place where they leave off on Thursday is the place where they begin on the next Sabbath. This is the ruling of R. Meir. R. Judah, however, says that the place where they leave off in the morning service on Sabbath is the place where they begin on Sabbath Minah, on Monday, on Thursday, and on the next Sabbath. R. Zera said: The halachah is that the place where they leave off in the morning service on Sabbath is the place where they begin at Minhah, on Monday, on Thursday and on the next Sabbath. Why does he not say, ‘the halachah follows Rabbi Judah’? —

Because [the names] might be reversed.\(^1\)

Our Rabbis taught: [The one who reads] opens the scroll and sees [the place], then rolls it together and says the blessing, then opens it again and reads. So R. Meir. R. Judah says: He opens and looks and says the blessing, and reads. What is R. Meir's reason? — It is similar to that of ‘Ulla [in a parallel case]; for ‘Ulla said: Why did they lay down that he who reads from the Torah should not prompt the translator? So that people should not say that the translation is written in the Torah. So here [R. Meir's reason is], so that they should not say that the blessings are written in the Torah. And [what says] R. Judah [to this]? — With regard to translation a mistake might be made, but no mistake will be made with regard to the blessings.\(^2\) R. Zera said in the name of R. R. Shefatiah said in the name of R. Johanan: When one rolls up a scroll of the Torah, he should make it close at a seam.\(^5\)

R. Shefatiah further said in the name of R. Johanan: One who rolls together a sefer torah should roll it from without and should not roll it from within,\(^6\) and when he fastens it he should fasten it from within and should not fasten it from without.\(^7\)

R. Shefatiah further said in the name of R. Johanan: If ten have had a reading of the Torah, the senior among them rolls up the sefer torah. He who rolls it up receives the reward of all of them, since R. Joshua b. Levi said: If ten have had a reading of the Torah, the one who rolls it up receives the reward of all of them. The reward of all of them, think you? No; say rather, he receives a reward equal to that of all of them.

R. Shefatiah further said in the name of R. Johanan: Whence do we know that we may avail ourselves of a chance utterance\(^8\) [as an omen]?\(^9\) Because it says, And thine ears shall hear a word behind thee saying.\(^10\) This applies, however, only if one hears the voice of a man in town and of a woman in the country,\(^11\) and Only if it says, yes, yes, or no, no.\(^12\)

R. Shefatiah further said in the name of R. Johanan: If one reads the Scripture without a melody\(^13\) or repeats the Mishnah without a tune,\(^14\) of him the Scripture Says, Wherefore I gave them also statutes that were not good etc.\(^15\) Abaye strongly demurred to this, saying, Because he cannot sing agreeably, are you to apply to him the verse, ‘ordinances whereby they shall not live’? No; this verse is to be applied as by R. Mesharshia, who said: If two scholars live in the same town and do not treat one another's halachic pronouncements respectfully, of them the verse says, I gave them also statutes that were not good and ordinances whereby they should not live.

R. Parnak said in the name of R. Johanan: Whoever takes hold of a scroll of the Torah without a covering\(^16\) is buried without a covering. Without a covering, think you? — Say rather, without the covering protection of religious performances. Without religious performances, think you? — No, said Abaye; he is buried without the covering protection of that religious performance.\(^17\)

R. Jannai the son of the old R. Jannai said in the name of the great R. Jannai: It is better that the covering [of the scroll] should be rolled up [with the scroll] and not that the scroll of the Torah should be rolled up [inside the covering].\(^18\)
And Moses declared unto the children of Israel the appointed seasons of the Lord. It is part of their observance that [the section relating to] each one of them should be read in its season.

Our Rabbis taught: Moses laid down a rule for the Israelites that they should enquire and give expositions concerning the subject of the day — the laws of Passover on Passover, the laws of Pentecost on Pentecost, and the laws of Tabernacles on Tabernacles.

(1) I.e., the opinion of R. Judah might be assigned to R. Meir and vice versa.
(2) For everyone knows that they are not written in the Torah.
(3) V. p. 192, n. 3.
(4) Opinions are divided as to what is meant by these two terms. We should naturally suppose ‘boards’ to mean a kind of noticeboard in the synagogue and ‘platforms’ the stand from which the Torah is read. But there is good authority for supposing that both words are technical terms for parts of the scroll of the Torah, ‘boards’ being the side margins and platforms’ the upper margins, and the meaning will be that no sanctity attaches to these if they have been cut away from the scroll (v. Tosaf.) [J. Meg. III, 1 reads בימת לוחות כותנה; this leads Krauss (Synagogale Altertumer, p. 388) to render, ‘the reading desk (made of boards, on which the Torah was read) and the platform (on which it stood)’. In a word, the almemor].
(5) So that if it is accidentally pulled, it should come asunder easily without being torn.
(6) I.e., he should have the written side of the scroll facing him (Asheri).
(7) I.e., the wrapping should be fastened in such a way that he will not need to turn the scroll over when he comes to open it again (Asheri). Rashi explains this passage differently.
(8) קֶלֶל תָּבִא ‘a reverberating sound’, ‘echoing’, — as it were — a thought in one’s mind (Rashi).
(9) In spite of the prohibition of divination (Deut. XVIII, 11).
(10) Isa. XXX, 21.
(11) I.e., in an unusual place.
(12) I.e., says the word twice.
(13) As indicated by the singing accents.
(14) To aid the memory (Tosaf.).
(15) Ezek. XX, 25.
(16) Lit., ‘naked’.
(17) I.e., the precept of reading or rolling up the scroll which he performed at that time is not accounted to him as a merit (Tosaf.).
(18) [Aliter: It is better that the covering (of the scroll) should be rolled up (round the scroll) than that the scroll of the Torah (itself) should be rolled up. MS.M. reads, The covering should be rolled (round the scroll) but not the scroll itself (without a covering); v. R. Hananel and D.S. It may however mean: It is better that the covering should be rolled round the scroll than that the scroll should be wrapped up by being rolled along the scroll].

Talmud - Mas. Mo'ed Katan 2a

CHAPTER I

GEMARA. Now, one might argue that after [having permitted] watering FROM A NEWLY EMERGING spring — which is apt to come along tearing up [the soil][12] — need further mention be made of [drawing from] A SPRING THAT IS NOT NEWLY EMERGING—which is unlikely to come tearing up [the soil];[13] — I may answer that it is necessary [to mention the latter]; for if [the Tanna] had mentioned only the newly emerging spring I might have said that only here [where it is] for an irrigation plot it is permitted — but not for a Baal-plot,[14] because it is apt to come tearing up [the soil]; but [on the other hand], from a spring that is not newly emerging, which is unlikely to come tearing up [the soil], I might say that even a Baal-plot [may be watered]; therefore he informs us[15] that there is no difference; be it a spring newly emerging, or a spring not newly emerging, an irrigation plot may be watered therefrom, but a Baal-plot may not be.[16]

And whence [know we] that the term BETH HA-SHELAHIN[17] denotes a ‘thirsty’[18] field? — It is written: When thou wast faint and weary,[19] and we render the word ‘faint’ [in Aramaic] by meshalhi.[20] And whence [know we] that Beth ha-Baal[21] denotes ‘settled’ soil? — It is written: For as a man be the husband [yib’al] of a maiden, so shall thy sons be as husbands unto thee[22] and we render [in Aramaic], ‘Behold as a young man settles down with a maiden, thy sons shall become settled[23] in the midst of thee’.

Who may be the [unnamed] Tanna[24] who maintains that [work[25] to prevent] loss is allowed,[26] but [to augment] profit[27] is not allowed; and that even in [averting] loss we should not do any laborious work?[28] Said R. Huna: It is [the view of] R. Eliezer b. Jacob, as we learned:[29] R. Eliezer b. Jacob says: Water may be trained along from tree to tree, provided that one does not water thus the entire field.[30]

I grant[31] you may understand R. Eliezer [b. Jacob][32] to disallow exertion to enhance profit,[33] but could you also understand him [from here] to disallow exertion [even] where loss is [involved]? Rather, said R. Papa, (whose view is it)?[34] It is R. Judah’s, as it is taught: ‘A spring newly emerging may be [used for] watering even (a field that is)[35] a Baal-plot. So R. Meir; R. Judah[36] says, None but (a field that is)[35] a ‘languid plot’ that has dried up may be watered [therefrom]. R. Eleazar b. ‘Azariah says, Neither one nor the other.[37] R. Judah[38] went even further and said, ‘A person may not clean out a water channel[39] and [with the dredging] water his garden of debris — [heap][40] during the festival week’. [Now] what is [meant by a ‘languid plot’] that dried up?[41] If you say, literally dried up’ what is the good of watering it? — Said Abaye, It means that this [old] spring has run dry[42] and another has [just] emerged [instead].[43] ‘R. Eleazar b. Azariah says, Neither one nor the other’. [By this he means to say that] it makes no difference whether the [old] spring has run dry or has not run dry, a newly emerging spring is not to be used.

But how [do you arrive at this conclusion]? Perhaps when R.Judah said that a languid plot may be watered from a newly emerging spring and a Baal-plot may not be,

(1) יַעֲשָׂא לָהּ עֲמָלִים means lit. ‘a house of channels’, i.e., a plot of land which owing to situation or climate or nature of the soil requires to be watered artificially. It is often a laborious process and at times of vital importance to the crop.

(2) I.e., during the middle period of the two longer Feasts, namely, the ‘Feast of Unleavened Bread’ (Passover) and that of Tabernacles, v. Introduction.

(3) Lit., ‘the seventh year’. Every seventh year in the Jubilee cycle was ordained to be a year of remissness, or sabbath for the land, when the regular processes of agriculture for its improvement were to be suspended. V. Ex. XXIII, 10-11; Lev. XXV, 2ff and infra 3a.

(4) [1] the Greek , a mechanical contrivance for raising water by water-wheel or bucket from a deep well, like the shadoof in Egypt and the denkli or paecottah in India. The reason for the objections is stated in the Gemara.

(5) Circular depressions made about the stem of the vine, or a small trench drawn about a group of vines to retain the water. V. infra 4b.

(6) Broken wells, cisterns or aqueducts; pools that have become muddy puddles, or blocked drains. (כָּלֹאות - Latin cloaculae, Baneth).

(7) For priests and pilgrims to purify themselves ritually or their vessels that have met with defilement. Cf. Lev. XI, 24-40; XXII, 1-7.

(8) E.g., removing rubbish and thorns, levelling the road and footways, mending bridges, etc. Cf. infra 5a.

(9) With whitewash of lime to warn passers-by against defilement. Cf. infra 5a.

(10) [MS.M omits ‘ALSO’ which is difficult to explain. V. Tosaf. Yom Tob].

(11) Lev. XIX, 19: Thou shall not sow thy field with two (or more kinds of) seeds (promiscuously). They are neither to be sown nor preserved by active process. Infra 2b, 6a and cf. Kil. I, 1; 9; Shek. I, 1, a.

(12) I.e., by erosion, necessitating immediate repair of the damage during the restricted period.

(13) Running on its habitual course.

(14) בַּעַל תָּחְנוֹן, lit., ‘Baal's area’, or field — an old pagan denomination of a fertile soil, i.e., a soil favoured by ‘Baal Lord of the heavens’, Baal-Shamen, with fertilizing rain and sunshine. V. Cooke’s N.S.I. p. 45, n. 1 etc. and Robertson Smith’s Religion of the Semites (ed. 1894) pp. 96-97. Cf. Isa. LV, 10 and Ta’an. 6b: ‘Rain is earth's husband'; also Krauss, TA II, p. 546, n. 115.

(15) From here to the end of the sentence is not in DS., being seemingly a gloss from 2b.

(16) From a new or old spring.

(17) Rendered ‘AN IRRIGATED FIELD’.

(18) Or ‘a languid track.’ The term יַעֲשָׂא (channels) is here explained by popular etymology as derived from יָשָׂה (the gutturals v and j interchanging), ‘weary’, ‘exhausted’. V. n. 2.

(19) Deut. XXV, 18. Han. and Aruch s.v. יַעֲשָׂא (VIII, 80b) quote more appropriately Gen. XXV, 29 referring to Esau's exhaustion and thirst. Cf. Isa. XXIX, 10 and Ps. LXIII, 2.

(20) A participle Shafel from יָשֵׂה meaning ‘exhausted’. This derivation is grammatically unsound. In B.B., Sonc. ed. p. 271 it is more correctly connected with the root in the sense of sending water across the fields in channels. Cf. Ezek. XXXI, 4.; Ps CIV, 10; Job V, 10. It is surmised that the name of the Pool of Siloam (יָשֵׂה) is derived from the same root. V. Krauss, TA II, p. 547, n. 117.

(21) V. supra p. 2, n. 7.

(22) Isa. LXII, 5.

(23) Cf. our expressions husbandry and husbandman.

(24) In the first clause of the Mishnah.

(25) During the Festival week.

(26) I.e., watering a languid soil.

(27) E.g., watering a fertile field to make it still more productive.

(28) Lit., ‘excessive trouble’, e.g., to use rainwater or raise water by swipe.

(29) V. infra 6b, Mishnah.
To water the whole field in that manner is all exertion to be avoided during the Festival week.

Lit., ‘say’.

So correctly, R. Han., DS.

As he forbids watering the entire field, presumably thinking it unnecessary to give it an extra watering to increase its fertility.

Omitted in DS.

A doublet occurring also in the texts given in the next note.

J.M.K. I, 1 (81a) and Tosef., I, I read here, ‘and the Sages say’ instead, showing that it is R. Judah's view that has been adopted in the Mishnah. Obviously, the Babylonian teachers engaged in this critical discussion did not have that reading.

I.e., that a newly emerging spring may not be used either for a generally nourished field (again at R. Meir's view), nor in a ‘languid field’ even where it has replaced a dried-up old spring (against R. Judah's view).

He went further in his restrictions, even in the case of a ‘languid field’. (Tosaf. v. Ritba).

A running brook or ditch which has become muddy and shallow, which he may clean out under certain conditions discussed infra 4b.

Used as a vegetable garden or bed for nurslings. V. Tosaf. Lit., ‘his garden and his ruin’.

i.e., that is waste.

Lit., ‘it is dried up from this spring’.

[All of which shows that R. Judah does not permit any laborious work even in order to avert loss, as in the case of the old spring having dried up, whereas R. Judah permits watering from the new spring that has emerged but not from rain-water or a swipe-well, which is in agreement with our Mishnah].

Talmud - Mas. Mo’ed Katan 2b

he was referring only to a newly emerging spring since it may come along tearing up [the soil]; but a spring that is not just newly emerging and which is unlikely to come along tearing up [the soil] he might allow even for a Baal-plot? If [you take it] thus, then whom does our Mishnah represent? The fact is that according to R. Judah it makes no difference, whether it be a newly emerging spring, or a spring not just newly emerging; in either case a languid plot may be watered [therefrom], but a Baal-plot may not be. And the reason why it states the ‘newly emerging’ spring is [merely] to show how far R. Meir is prepared to go, [namely], that even a newly emerging spring may be used for watering and even for a Baal-field!

It was stated: ‘If one is [seen] weeding or watering his seedlings on the Sabbath, under what category [of the offence] should he be cautioned? — Rabbah said, [It comes] under the category of ploughing. R. Joseph said, under the category of sowing. Said Rabbah, My view seems the more reasonable, for what is the object of the plougher? To loosen the soil; here too, he loosens the soil. Said R. Joseph, My view seems the more reasonable, for what is the object of the sower? To promote the growth of the produce; here too, he promotes the growth of the produce.

Said Abaye to Rabbah, Your view presents difficulty and R. Joseph's view presents difficulty. Your view presents difficulty, for does the act come [only] under the category of ploughing [and] not under that of sowing [only]? R. Joseph's view presents difficulty, for does it come [only] under the category of sowing [and] not under that of ploughing also? And should you rejoin that where there are two [possible categories], the offender is liable only on one count, [this cannot be] for did not R. Kahana say that if one [incidentally] pruned [his tree] in cutting it for wood he is liable on two counts, one under the category of planting and one again under that of reaping? — This is a difficulty.

R. Joseph, thereupon, put an objection to Rabbah from [the following]: One who weeds or covers [with earth] diverse-seeds receives [judicial] flogging. R. Akiba says, Also one who preserves [them]. Now this is in perfect accord with my view, as I say that [he who weeds is to be cautioned] under the category of sowing, which [explains the penalty] because sowing is [explicitly] forbidden in connection with diverse-seeds; but according to your view who say that [he is to be cautioned] under the category of ploughing, is ploughing forbidden in connection with diverse-seeds? — Said he [Rabbah] to him, [He\textsuperscript{12} is flogged] under the category of preserving [them]. But surely, since the last clause states ‘R. Akiba says, Also one who preserves [them]’, may we not infer that according to the first Tanna the penalty is not on account of preserving [them]? — The entire statement is [to be taken as] recording R. Akiba's view, and the latter clause is explanatory: ‘On what ground does one who weeds or covers [with earth] diverse-seeds receive a flogging? Because he comes under the category of preserving, for R. Akiba says, Also he who preserves [them]’. What is R. Akiba's reason? — It is taught: — Thou shalt not sow thy field with two kinds of seed’.\textsuperscript{13} This tells me about ‘sowing’, whence [the prohibition against] preserving [what is already sown]? — From the instructive wording kil'ayim [diverse-seeds] in thy field not.\textsuperscript{14} We learned: An IRRIGATED FIELD MAY BE WATERED DURING THE FESTIVAL [WEEK] OR IN THE SABBATICAL YEAR. This [permission] is perfectly correct in regard to the festival [week] where [the prohibition is] merely to avoid exertion, but where loss is [threatened]\textsuperscript{15} the Rabbis have allowed it. But in regard to the sabbatical year, whether on the view that [watering] comes under the category of sowing\textsuperscript{16} or on the view that it comes under that of ploughing,\textsuperscript{17} is either sowing or ploughing permitted in the sabbatical year?\textsuperscript{18} — Said Abaye, Our Mishnah is speaking of the sabbatical year in the present time and it [expresses] the view held by Rabbi;\textsuperscript{19} for it is taught: Rabbi says, [It is written] And this is the manner of the release; release [by every creditor of that which he hath lent to his neighbour];\textsuperscript{20} the text speaks here of two forms of release, one the release of the soil [from tillage]\textsuperscript{21} and the other the release of money\textsuperscript{22} [the juxtaposition of] which tells us that so long as you must release the soil [from tillage], you must release the money [debt], but when you do not release the soil, you need not release the money!\textsuperscript{23} Said Raba [not necessarily], you may even say [it voices] the view of the Rabbis\textsuperscript{24} and that they\textsuperscript{25} are the principal [types of work] that the Divine Law has forbidden [explicitly],

1. Whereas our Mishnah forbids watering a Baal-plot from a newly emerging spring. Consequently it will not represent the view of R. Judah.
2. Lit., ‘to whom will you throw (trace the view of) our Mishnah’.
3. In the cited Baraitha: the spring might as well have been left undefined, as either is allowed for a languid plot by R. Judah.
5. An offender doing an act which is explicitly forbidden in Holy Writ had to be duly and accurately cautioned by two witnesses against that particular act, and informed of the exact penalty it involved, before he could be judicially punished by a duly constituted tribunal. Ploughing, sowing and mowing are of the thirty-nine main categories of work forbidden (Scripturally) on Sabbath or Festivals. For the list v. Shab. VII, 2 and Shab. 73aff.
6. Lit., ‘he prunes and requires the wood’. Shab. 73b. Work on the Sabbath is to be purposive, whether intended or not. If one did what he desired to do, without knowing that such a thing was not to be done on the Sabbath, or forgetting for the moment that it was the Sabbath day, he would not be punishable, but would have to bring a sin-offering in Temple times.
7. Pruning promotes growth and is therefore another form of sowing or planting.
8. Having a definite purpose for the cuttings.
9. Var. lec. omit this final admission. [The statement of R. Kahana, being of an Amora, is not deemed sufficiently authoritative to refute the views of Rabbah and R. Joseph. V. Tosaf. s.v. חַדְּרוֹב.]
10. Weeding and covering with earth diverse-seeds are here made punishable as sowing, v. Lev. XIX, 19 (cf. Deut. XXII, 9).
11. Fencing in the plot to prevent cattle from trampling them out or feeding on the young blades. Cf. A.Z. 64a (Rashi and Tosaf.).
12. He who weeds diverse-seeds.
14. Some explain a section of the Hebrew text of Lev. XIX, 19, namely, לָשֵׁם שָׁם לֹא תְרוּם כַּלָּאָם, as it were two interlocked sentences, (i) קיל'ים אין בך זר וזר בך קיל'ים i.e., ‘Kil'ayim in thy field not’, (which forbids the presence and the preservation of diverse-seed crops in the field); and (ii) וזר בך קיל'ים i.e., ‘Thy field thou shalt not sow kil'ayim’ (which forbids sowing). This explanation, however, is very strained, as the variations in the parallel passages show, having puzzled the commentators. The readings וזר בך קיל'ים and וזר בך קיל'ים are both correct and to the same effect. It is the import of the wording rather than the form of the text that R. Akiba stressed. It is the diverse mixing or crossing — ‘kil'ayim’ — that is emphatically forbidden, be it of animal, or field, or raiment (Lev. XIX, 19) and fiercest of all in the (oliveyard or) vineyard (Deut. XXII, 9). Have no share by your action in producing kil'ayim!
(17) Rabbah, above.
(18) Sowing, pruning, gleaning and reaping are directly forbidden in Lev. XXV, 4-5. Ploughing, however, is forbidden only indirectly, by implication from a positive law in Ex. XXIII, 11; XXXIV, 21. Note this point.
(19) R. Judah ha-Nasi, compiler of the Mishnah.
(20) Deut. XV, 2.
(21) I.e., let the soil lie fallow and the crops free and unguarded against the poor, Ex. XXIII, 11.
(22) Let slip the money debts owing to you.
(23) The interpretation is based on the ground that since the Nation, Israel as a whole, is no longer in possession of the Holy Land as his inheritance, the land laws relative to the sabbatical year and Jubilee re-distributions, which are made contingent on Israel's entry and possession (Lev. XXV, 2, 10ff; cf. ibid. XXVI, 34-35, and Deut. XXXI, 10-13) are of necessity in abeyance, for the time being. [This according to Rabbi, since the prohibition of tilling the soil on the sabbatical years nowadays is merely Rabbinical, it is not enforced where a loss is involved; hence the ruling of our Mishnah.]
(24) That the operation of the sabbatical year nowadays is Biblical.
(25) Those that are specified in the text of Holy Writ.

but derivative¹ operations it has not forbidden, for it is written: But in the seventh year shall be a sabbath of solemn rest for the land..., thou shalt neither sow thy field nor prune thy vineyard. That which growth of itself of thy harvest thou shalt not reap and the grapes of thy undressed vine thou shalt not gather.² Now, since pruning comes within the general process of sowing³ and grape-gathering within the general process of reaping,⁴ what law then did the All-Merciful desire to inculcate by inserting these [secondary processes] into the text? To indicate that only for these secondary processes [specified in the text] is one [to be] held liable⁵ and for [any] other [secondary processes] one is not [to be] held liable.⁶ Indeed not? Surely it has been taught: Thou shalt neither sow thy field nor prune thy vineyard,⁷ that only forbids me sowing or pruning; whence is forbidden weeding or hoeing or the trimming of wilted parts? From the instructive [form of the] text: Thy field thou shalt not... thy vineyard thou shalt not . . . [which means] no manner of work in thy field; no manner of work in thy vineyard. [Likewise] whence [is derived the rule] not to cut back shoots, or thin twigs or put up props for supporting [fruit trees]? From the [same] instructive text: Thy field thou shalt not . . . thy vineyard thou shalt not . . . [which means] no manner of work in thy field, no manner of work in thy vineyard. [Similarly] whence [is derived the rule] not to manure,⁸ or remove stones, or dust [with flower of sulphur]⁹ or fumigate the tree? From the instructive wording of the text: Thy field thou shalt not . . . thy vineyard thou shalt not, that is, no manner of work in the field, no manner of work in the vineyard. Shall I say that one should not [even] stir the soil under the olive trees, nor use the hoe under the vines, nor fill the gaps [under the olive trees]¹⁰ with water nor make drills¹¹ for the vines? There is the Instructive wording of the text: Thy field thou shalt not sow [nor thy vineyard shalt thou prune]. Now, as ‘sowing’ was already embraced in the general terms of the ordinance,¹² why then was it singled out [for mention]? To provide ground for an analogy, namely that just as sowing has the special quality of being a work common to field and orchard,¹³ so is every [other] work that is common to field and orchard [forbidden]!¹⁴ — [That is only] Rabbinically; and the text is adduced merely as a support. But, is it permitted to stir the soil [under the olive tree] in the sabbatical year? Surely [is it not taught]: It is written, But the seventh year thou shalt let it rest and lie fallow; ‘let it rest’ — not to hoe; and ‘[let it] lie fallow — not to remove stones? — Said R. ‘Ukba b. Haba, there are two sorts of hoeing, one for strengthening the [olive] tree, and another to close up fissures; that for strengthening the tree is forbidden, whereas that for closing up fissures is allowed.

It has been stated: — If one ploughed in the sabbatical year, R. Johanan and R. Eleazar [took opposite views]. One said that he is flogged and the other said that he is not flogged. Might I suggest that the issue turns on the dictum of R. Ela as reported by R. Abin? For R. Abin reported R. Ela to have stated that wherever a general [proposition] is stated in the form of a positive command and a particular [specification] in the form of a negative injunction, the hermeneutical rule of General-Particular-General does not apply to it. [Accordingly], the one who says the offender is flogged, did not agree with that dictum of R. Abin in the name of R. Ela, while the other who says that the offender is not flogged did agree with the dictum of R. Abin [in the name of R. Ela]? — Not [necessarily]. It can be maintained that nobody agrees with the dictum of R. Ela, as reported by R. Abin. As to the one who says that the offender is flogged it of course is in order, while the other who says the offender is not flogged may tell you thus: Consider: pruning comes within [the general process of] sowing and grape-gathering within [the general process of] reaping, what rule did the All-Merciful intend to inculcate by inserting these [secondary processes] into the text? To indicate that only for these secondary processes [specified in the text] is one [to be] held liable, but for any other secondary process he is not [to be] held liable. But is he not? Surely it is taught: Thou shalt neither sow thy field nor prune thy vineyard, this only forbids me sowing or pruning; whence is forbidden weeding, hoeing, or the trimming of wilted parts? From the instructive [form of] the text: Thy field thou shalt not . . . thy vineyard thou shalt not . . . [which means] no manner of work in thy field; no manner of work in thy vineyard. Whence [is derived the rule] not to cut back shoots, or thin twigs or put up props for [fruit] trees? From the [same] instructive text: thy field thou shalt not . . .thy vineyard thou shalt not . . . [which means] no manner of work in thy field, no manner of work in thy vineyard. Whence [is derived the rule] not to manure, or remove stones, [or dust] or fumigate the trees? From the instructive text: Thy field thou shalt not . . . thy vineyard thou shalt not . . . [that is], no manner of work in thy field, no manner of work in thy vineyard. Am I then to say that one may not stir the soil under the olive trees, nor use the hoe under the vines, nor fill the [open] gaps [under the olives] with water, nor make drills for the vines? There is the instructive wording of the text: Thy field thou shalt not sow and thy vineyard thou shalt not. Now, sowing was already embraced in the general terms of the ordinance, why then was it singled out [for mention]? For the purpose of providing [ground for] an analogy, that just as sowing has the special quality of being a work common to field and vineyard, so is any other work that is common to field and orchard [forbidden]? — [That is only] rabbincally; and the text is [adduced] as a mere support.

(1) Or secondary processes which are not unspecified.
(2) Lev. XXV, 4-5.
(3) Or planting, as explained above by R. Kahana.
(4) V. Shab. 73a.
(5) To a judicial flogging.
(6) I.e., scripturally (even according to the Rabbis) though reprehensible rabbincally.
(7) The order of the Hebrew words in the text is: ‘Thy field thou shalt not sow nor thy vineyard shalt thou etc.’
(8) Yalkut reads: ‘remove excrescences’ or ‘warts’.
(9) Thus J. Sheb. II, 2; Aruch explains ‘remove dust from the foliage’ and Rashi here takes it as covering with dust the exposed roots. The context seems to favour the first explanation here adopted.
(10) After thinning olive trees, by lifting some to give more room for the other young trees, the gap left in the soil would ordinarily be filled with manure and olive trees need much water. Cf. Sheb. IV, 5, and Sifra Behar Rabad's Commentary.
(11) Or small ridges with furrows on top between the vines. V. loc. cit.
Lev. XXV, 4: But the seventh year shall be a sabbath of solemn rest for the land, a sabbath unto the Lord, in direct contrast to verse 3; there was therefore no further need to continue with specific instances of the prohibition, such as sowing the field and pruning the vineyard.

(13) I.e., common to both agriculture and horticulture.

(14) I.e., mnemotechnical and Biblically only sowing, pruning, reaping and gleaning are forbidden explicitly. The inclusion of ploughing, digging, hoeing or watering in the prohibition is purely Rabbinic. Thus the ruling of the Mishnah that an irrigated field may be watered . . . in the sabbatical year has now been explained: by Abaye on the basis of Rabbi's view, namely, that the restrictions of the sabbatical year are not operative nowadays; and, on the other hand by Raba, on the view of the other Rabbis (who do not concede Rabbi's interpretation of Deut. XV, 2), by pointing out that 'watering' is, strictly speaking, not textually forbidden, it being a 'derivative' (secondary) process, and hence allowed by the Rabbis in the sabbatical year where damage (loss of crop) is likely.

(16) Ex. XXIII, 11.

(17) The former is for enhancing profit and the latter is prevention of loss, namely, to save the tree from bleeding or rotting.

(18) The same question is again discussed from a different angle in Palestinian schools.

(19) After having been duly cautioned.

(20) B. Pedath.

(21) As having offended against a Biblical prohibition.

(22) Because 'ploughing' is not distinctly forbidden, but is only an implied offence, for which no judicial flogging can be given.

(23) E.g., in Lev. XXV, 2-5. We have first a general ordinance in positive terms: The land shall keep a sabbath unto the Lord. Six years thou shalt sow . . . prune . . . gather in the produce thereof, but the seventh year shall be a sabbath of solemn rest unto the Lord (cf. Ex. XXIII,11); then follow the particulars in negative terms. Thou shalt neither sow thy field, nor prune thy vineyard. That which groweth of itself thou shalt not reap and the grapes of thy undressed vines thou shalt not gather (Lev. XXV, 4-5). Then follows a general rule again in positive form: It shall be a year of solemn rest for the land.

(24) According to this rule, the particulars are in such a case considered typical as illustrations serving to include in the general rule all such items as are similar to the particulars. E.g. in Ex. XXII, 8 the text first states that an oath can be judicially imposed 'for every matter of trespass' (General term). This is followed by: 'for ox, for ass, for sheep, for raiment' (particulars), which again is followed finally by: 'for any manner of lost thing' (General). We infer from this that an oath can be imposed for things like those specified as typical instances, but not in the case of a dispute about land, being immovable property, or in the case of sanctuary-property, as it being not one's neighbour's property, or in the case of dispute about a slave, as being a (human) chattel, or about documents, as not being 'property', but merely instruments of evidence. Similarly in the case of the sabbatical year, if the particulars are typical of the general rule, one who does any of these would break the law.

(25) But it is treated merely as a general proposition which is followed only by a particularization, in which case the general proposition does not go beyond what has actually been specified by the particularization that follows it.

(26) I.e., he interprets the Sabbatical Ordinance as a pure instance of a General-Particular-General form and takes sowing, pruning, reaping and gleaning as typical illustrative instances and, accordingly, considers 'ploughing' as included in the general terms of the Ordinance and hence as a punishable offence.

(27) I.e., that the Sabbatical Ordinance cannot be treated as a pure form of General-Particular-General, it being negative in the particulars, which amounts to saying, 'Not a, not b, not c; these, I mean, precisely, and no others'. 'Ploughing' therefore is not included among the forbidden processes and hence is not a punishable offence.

(28) For ploughing in the sabbatical year.

(29) In interpreting the import of the wording of the text, to show that there is no penalty for ploughing, although the application of the General-Particular-General rule would indicate to the contrary.

(30) I.e., ploughing.

Talmud - Mas. Mo'ed Katan 3b
Talmud - Mas. Mo'ed Katan 3b

When R. Dimi came [from Palestine] he said [the discussion went on]: Possibly, you might say that the offender be flogged [even] for the ‘extension’? But the teaching was concluded to prove that he was exempt. But [said he], I know not which was the teaching, nor what was [actually] meant by ‘extension’.

R. Eleazar [b. Pedath] said that the ‘extension’ had reference to [the inclusion of] ‘ploughing’ [as a punishable offence], and the argument proceeded thus: Possibly [you might say] that he should be flogged for ‘ploughing’ [in the sabbatical year], the rule being inferred by [treating the sabbatical ordinance as a case of] General-Particular-General; then the teaching was concluded to prove exemption. For, if it [the flogging] were correct, what is the [legal] import of all those particulars [set out in the text]?

R. Johanan said [that the ‘extension’ had reference to] the extra days [of restriction] which the sages had added prior to New Year; and the argument proceeded thus: Possibly [you might say] that he should be flogged for [ploughing during] the extended extra period prior to New Year which is based on the text: ‘In ploughing time and in reaping time thou shalt rest.’ Then the teaching was concluded to prove exemption [from a flogging], as we shall seek to explain presently.

What is meant by ‘the days [of restriction] prior to New Year’? — According to what we learned: ‘Up to what date may ploughing be done in a tree field [orchard] in the pre-sabbatical year? Beth Shammai say, As long as it is for the benefit of the fruit; Beth Hillel say, Up to the Feast of Weeks; and the [practical effect of] one ruling is much the same as that of the other. And up to what date may they plough a “white field” in the pre-sabbatical year? Up to when the moisture gives out and as long as people till for planting their cucumber and gourd beds. Said R. Simeon, If that is so, you have handed over the Torah for every individual to determine for himself the right time! No: [I say], a "white field" [they may till] up to Passover and a tree field up to the Feast of Weeks’. (And Beth Hillel say up to Passover.)

And R. Simeon b. Pazzi reported in the name of R. Joshua b. Levi who had it from Bar Kappara that Rabban Gamaliel and his Beth din took a vote on these two [terminal] periods and abrogated them. Said R. Zera to R. Abbahu, some say, Resh Lakish said to R. Johanan: How could Rabban Gamaliel and his Beth din abrogate a measure instituted by Beth Shammai and Beth Hillel? Surely we learned: ‘No Beth din has power to nullify the words [ruling] of another Beth din unless it be superior to it in learning and number!’ ‘He was astonished for a while’; then he replied: I say, they thus have stipulated among themselves that whoever might thereafter wish to abrogate that [measure] could come and abrogate it. But was it their measure? Was it not an [ancient] halachah of Moses from Sinai? As [in fact] R. Assi reported R. Johanan to have said in the name of R. Nehuniah a man hailing from the valley of Beth Hauran, that the [laws of] ‘Ten Saplings,’ the ‘Willow’ and the ‘Water Libation’ were ‘halachah’ of Moses from Sinai! — Said R. Isaac, When we received on tradition that law [of extra restriction] as [an ancient] halachah, It was only in reference to ‘thirty days prior to the New Year’; thereafter came those [of Beth Shammai and Hillel] and instituted [the cessation] from Passover and the Feast of Weeks, and [at the same time] they stipulated with reference to their [measure] that whoever might [thereafter] wish to abrogate [them] might come and abrogate them.

But were these [termini] merely halachah [-usages]? Were they not [based on Biblical] texts? For is it not taught: [Six days thou shalt work, but on the seventh day thou shalt rest]: in ploughing time and in reaping time thou shalt rest. Says R. Akiba, There is no need to be told [in the second clause] to desist from ploughing or reaping in the seventh year, since it is already stated [elsewhere at length]: thou shalt neither sow thy field nor prune thy vineyard: [that which growth of itself thou shalt not reap]. [It can be taken] only [to debar] ploughing in the pre-sabbatical year.
(1) Lit., ‘the Talmud took it up’. (3) As explained above. (4) The sabbatical year began with the New Year. It was necessary to stop tillage before that date; when, and where, did it originate? On what authority? These are the points to be discussed now at length.

(2) Ex. XXXIV, 21 The exposition of this follows presently.

(3) Sheb. I, 1.

(4) Preparing for a grain crop, i.e., of cereals or legumina. A white field=a sown field, not planted with trees that cast a shadow.

(5) Ibid. II, 1.

(6) This bracketed part is a meaningless gloss.

(7) [So MS. M. Cur. edd. insert ‘And’].

(8) Passover (Nisan) and the Feast of Weeks (Sivan); after these were abrogated, tillage was again permitted down to New Year (Tishri).

(10) A phrase from Daniel IV, 16. R. Abbahu or R. Johanan was for the moment puzzled for a reply.

(11) Should the exigencies of the time demand it.

(12) I.e., a rule of immemorial practice, whose origin is unknown. Cf. our expression ‘as old as the hills’. Cf. ‘Ed. VIII, 7; Yad. Malachi No. 663 and W. Bacher’s Tradition und Tradenten etc. (1914) p. 33ff.

(13) Also Hunya, Huna or Huna. Bacher ibid. p. 38 sect. 11.

(14) A high plain S.E. of Damascus mentioned by Ezekiel, XLVII, 18, among the boundaries of Palestine (cf. R.H. 22b). Herod established there a protectorate under Zamaris, a Babylonian Jew who offered military safety to the Babylonian pilgrims on their way to Jerusalem. V. Josephus, Antiquities XVII, 11, 1-2.

(15) A young plantation in a field of fifty by fifty cubits in dimension with at least ten saplings may be tilled entirely for their benefit, down to the edge of the sabbatical year which began with New Year's day, the first of Tishri. This implies that with old trees tilling must cease before New Year.

(16) V. infra. Willows were carried in procession once round the altar during the first six days of Tabernacles and then fixed at the side of the altar. On the seventh day the circuit was made seven times. V. Suk. 45a, where Abbahu suggests a Biblical indication, Ps. CXVIII, 27.

(17) On the same occasions the grand celebration of the water libation took place in the Temple, a golden flagon being filled with water from Siloam, was brought amidst trumpet blasts to the Temple and poured on the altar by the High Priest.

(18) For a ‘white field’, growing cereals and legumina.

(19) For a tree field, an orchard.

(20) And it is only these two earlier terms, Passover and Feast of Weeks, up to thirty days before New Year that Rabban Gamaliel and his Beth din abrogated. Cf. J. Sheb. I, 5.

(21) Ex. XXXIV, 21.

(22) As all manner of work is forbidden on the sabbath day, the particular stress on ploughing and reaping suggested a connection between the sabbath-day and the sabbath-year.

(23) Lev. XXV, 4-5.

Talmud - Mas. Mo'ed Katan 4a

[which may have beneficial effects] extending into the seventh year and [likewise] to the reaping of the seventh year's crops which mature in the post-sabbatical year.¹ Says R. Ishmael, [It is purely a Sabbath law]; as the ploughing [here forbidden on Sabbath] is optional ploughing,² so is the reaping [here mentioned] optional reaping; outside this [law] is the reaping [of the new barley] for the ‘omer³ which is a religious duty [by ordinance]⁴. In fact said R. Nahman b. Isaac, when we received on tradition [that the pre-sabbatic restrictions had their origin in] halachah [-usage], this had reference to the permission [of tilling for the benefit] of saplings;⁵ whereas the texts are for the prohibition of old trees.⁶ But since ‘halachah [-usage] allowed [tillage down to New Year] for saplings, it is not obvious that old trees were forbidden? — What we must say therefore is, the halachah [-usage] as basis for the prohibition is [necessary] according to R. Ishmael,⁷ whereas the texts [serve as basis] according to R. Akiba.

But R. Johanan said that Rabban Gamaliel and his Beth din abrogated those [restrictions] on Biblical authority. What was the reason? He deduced it by equating the term ‘Sabbath’ common to both the Sabbath-year and the Sabbath of Creation [thus]: Just as in the case of the Sabbath Day [work is forbidden] on the day itself, but on the day before and on the day after it is allowed, so [likewise] in the Sabbath Year [tillage is forbidden] during the year itself, but in the year before and in the year after it is allowed.

To this R. Ashi demurred: On the view that it [the restriction] is a halachah [-usage] can a gezerah shawah [deduction] come and eradicate a halachah [-usage]; and [likewise] on the view that it is [based on] a Biblical text, can a gezerah shawah [deduction] come and eradicate a text! — But no, said R. Ashi, Rabban Gamaliel and his Beth din concurred with R. Ishmael who held that [the presabbatical restrictions] were based on a halachah-usage. And when did the tradition of such halachah-usage [apply]? During the time when the Temple was still standing, like that of the water libation; but in times when the Temple is no longer standing the tradition of this halachah-usage does not apply.

BUT IT MAY NOT BE WATERED FROM [STORED] RAIN NOR BY THAT OF A SWIPE-WELL. It is quite correct [to prohibit water] from a swipe-well, because that is a rather extra trouble; but rain water-what trouble is there [in using it]? — Said R. Elea, reporting R. Johanan: Rain water is prohibited as a precaution on account of the swipe-well. [R. Ashi said: Rain water itself may [sometimes] come to be [just as difficult to draw] as the water of a swipe-well. And they differ on [the statement of] R. Zera; for R. Zera said that Rabbah b. Jeremiah, citing Samuel, said that rivers drawing from [adjoining] water pools may be used for watering during the festival week. One Master is in agreement with [the statement of] R. Zera, while the other is not in agreement with [the statement of] R. Zera. The text [above stated]: ‘R. Zera said that Rabbah b. Jeremiah, citing Samuel, said that rivers drawing from [adjoining] water pools may be used for watering during the festival week’. R. Jeremiah put all objection to him [R. Zera]: BUT... NOT WATERED FROM [STORED] RAIN NOR BY THAT OF A SWIPE-WELL! — Said R. Zera to him: Jeremiah, my son, these Babylonian pools are like water [pools] that do not fail.

Our Rabbis taught: Ditches and pools [even though] filled with water on the day before the festival are debarred from being used for watering during the festival week, but if a canal passes between them they may be used. Said R. Papa: This is only provided that the greater part of that field obtains its supply from that canal. R. Ashi said that [they may be used] even if the greater part of that field does not obtain its supply [from that canal], because since its flow is continuous [the owner] says. if it [the field] does not get enough drink on [this] one day, it will [soon] get its drink in two or three days. Our Rabbis taught: ‘If a pool gets tricklings from an irrigated field [higher up], it may be used for watering another field’. But is it not going [ultimately] to give out? — Said R. Jeremiah: For the present at any rate it is still trickling! Said Abaye: This is [permitted] only so long as the first source has not given out.

It has been taught: R. Simeon b. Menassia says: Where two cultivated beds lie one above the other, one should not draw from the [supply of the] lower to water the upper. R. Eleazar b. Simeon went even further, saying: Even in one bed, if half of it is low and the other half higher one should not draw from the low-lying part to water the upper part.

Our Rabbis taught: ‘One may raise [medallin] for the vegetables if they are to be eaten; but if it is to improve their appearance it is forbidden’. Rabina and Rabbah of Thospia were once walking on the road when they saw a certain man drawing buckets of water during the festival week. Said Rabbah of Thospia to Rabina: Come, Sir, put a ban on him. Said Rabina to him, But is it not taught: ‘One may raise [medallin] for vegetables to be eaten’? — Replied Rabbah, Do you think that this medallin means one may raise water [in buckets]? No, what medallin means is

1. Accordingly ‘ploughing’ is Biblically forbidden in the pre-sabbatical extension and the offender would be liable to a flogging were it not for the inferences derived from the other text of Lev. XXV, 4-5, as expounded above, 3a. Cf. Tosaf. 3b s.v. ימי שדה and Han.
2. I.e., not ordained to be done on any particular day.
3. ‘The sheaf of the first fruit of your (barley) harvest’. V. Lev. XXXIII, 10ff. R. Ishmael holds that this may be reaped even on Sabbath. R. Ishmael's statement is for the moment irrelevant, though it comes in later. R. Akiba's dictum shows that the extension, i.e., the pre-sabbatical bar on tillage, is not merely a pristine halachah-usage, but has textual basis.
5. Down to New Year's eve.
6. Thirty days before New Year, which prohibition was extended by Beth Shammai and Beth Hillel to Passover and Feast of Weeks, according to the field.
7. Who, unlike R. Akiba, uses that text for another point, namely, as permitting reaping the barley for the ‘omer even on a Sabbath, if that is the date.
8. Gezerah shawah (V. Glos.) which some admit and others do not.
9. I.e., Ex. XXXIV, 21 taken with Lev. XXV, 2 (‘a Sabbath-rest year unto the Lord’).
10. Mentioned together with the tradition regarding the ten saplings, supra 3b.
11. With the fall of the Temple and the Jewish State many of the laws appertaining to the Temple and the Land fell into abeyance owing to the force of circumstances. Recently, I. S. Zuri has attempted to establish that Rabban Gamaliel's abrogation was enacted soon after May 215 C.E. when Caracalla entered Antioch and thence marched his armies through Palestine on his way to Egypt, when the people had to pay ‘annonae’ to feed the armies. V. his She'ah, Vol. III, 58-59.
12. If stored rain water is permitted, one will also work a shadoof.
13. When much of it has been drawn off he will have to go deep down with his bucket, with almost as much exertion as from a shadoof.
14. [And we do not apprehend the possibility of the pool drying up when he might go and fetch water from another river, with all the extra trouble it involves.]
15. R. Ashi.
16. R. Johanan, who prohibits rain water on account of a swipe-well.
17. [Presumably because we apprehend lest he may go deep down with his bucket should the water be drawn off and the same should apply to the case of R. Zera.]
18. And there is no likelihood of leading to exertion during the Festival Week.
19. The former rough-cut and the latter well-made (Commentators on Alfasi). J.M.K. I, 1 reads מים יבשא, which points to the Latin piscina, reservoir, swimming bath or fish-tank.
20. Because their supply comes from a distance and may entail exertion should the supply fail.
21. I.e., if the supply is plentiful.
22. Because he will get what he may and if not enough will readily wait for a day or two for another chance, without going to exertion during the festival week.
23. [So MS.M. Cur. edd. ‘trickles water (which one gets) from’].
25. But once the trickling has ceased the pool has lost its supply and becomes like a swipe-well or stored rain water likely to entail exertion.
26. During the festival week.
27. מים either (i) ‘medallin’ (from מים), ‘raise water by means of buckets’, hence irrigate; or (ii) madlin (from מلد) ‘to lift (vegetables)’ for thinning the beds. At present the first rendering is assumed.
28. The capital of the Armemam district Thospitis.
29. To water his vegetables.
30. cf. infra 17a.
31. מים or מים from מים to raise, draw water with bucket (מים).
32. In the course of the festival week.

to pull out [vegetables], as we learned: ‘If one is [engaged in] thinning vines, just as he may thin his own, so also he may thin those due to the poor;’ so R. Judah. R. Meir says: He is permitted [to attend] to his own but not to those of the poor. Said Rabina: But it is taught [explicitly]: ‘One may raise water for vegetables if they are to be eaten’! — Said Rabbah [of Thospia] to Rabina: If it is thus taught, that settles the matter.

NOR MAY SMALL BASINS ['UGIOTH] BE FORMED ABOUT THE VINES. What is meant by 'ugioth'? — Said Rab Judah, [What we call] banki. It is also taught thus: These are 'ugioth; light hoeing done about the roots of olives and at the roots of vines. [But] this is not so, for did not Rab Judah allow the family of Bar-Zittai to make banki in their vineyards? — This is not difficult: The one statement [in the Mishnah] refers to fresh [trenchings], the other [Rab Judah's] refers to re-trenching.

R. ELEAZAR B. AZARIAH SAYS A [WATER] CHANNEL MAY NOT BE NEWLY MADE [DURING THE FESTIVAL WEEK, NOR IN THE SABBATICAL YEAR; BUT THE SAGES SAY]. It is perfectly in order in regard to the festival week, because he performs laborious work, but what reason can there be [against making a channel] in the sabbatical year? — R. Zera and R. Abba b. Memel differ in the matter: One says [it is forbidden] because [the digger] seems to be doing spadging [in his field]; the other says, because he is [thereby] preparing the banks for sowing. What is the [practical] difference between the two [explanations]? — There is a difference where water comes along forthwith; according to the one who says that [it is] because he is preparing the banks for sowing, there is [still an objection], but according to the one who says that [it is] because he seems to be doing spadging, there is none. But, the one who objects on the ground that he seems to be doing spading, should he not likewise object on the ground that he seems to be preparing the bank for sowing? — Rather, the [practical] difference between them is where he takes [the mould] from the trench and throws it outside. According to the one who says that [it is] because he seems to be preparing the banks for sowing, there is no objection, whereas according to the one who says that [it is] because he seems to be spading, there is [still an objection]. But, he who takes the view that he seems to be preparing the banks for sowing, should he not likewise admit the objection that he seems to be doing spading? — [No,] because one who does spading, as soon as he takes up a spadeful he puts it down again in its place.

Amemar taught this [clause of the] Mishnah with the explanation [that R. Eleazar b. 'Azariah forbids making a channel] ‘because he seems to be doing spading [in his field]’ but felt some difficulty about it in view of another statement of R. Eleazar b. ‘Azariah. Could R. Eleazar b. ‘Azariah [said he] have held the view that wherever one seems to be spading [his field], it is forbidden? And he contrasted that with the [statement in the] following [Mishnah]: One may lay up a store of manure [in his field]. R. Meir says he may not until he places it either three handbreadths below or three handbreadths above [the surface]. If he had some small quantity [already there] he may go on adding thereto. R. Eleazar b. ‘Azariah says [even then] he may not until he puts it down either three handbreadths below, or raises it three handbreadths above [the surface], or places it on a rock!’ — R. Zera and R. Abba b. Memel [explained this seeming discrepancy], one said: [The latter Mishnah means where], for instance, he has had the place excavated; the other said: [The reason there is because] the manure heap itself attests his intention.

AND [A CHANNEL] THAT HAS GOT OUT OF ORDER MAYBE RE-PAIRED. What is meant by OUT OF ORDER? — Said R. Abba: ‘It means that if it is [now, for instance] but one handbreadth in depth, he may restore it to [a depth of] six handbreadths’. It is obvious that [to restore it] from half a handbreadth to [the original] three, seeing that there was [originally] scarcely any flow of water, it is nothing at all; [to deepen it] front two handbreadths to [the original] twelve which involves extra exertion,\textsuperscript{21} is not [allowed]. What about [deepening it] front two [handbreadths] to [the original] seven? [Do we argue that] as in the first instance [it was explained above] he deepens it by five handbreadths, [from one to six], so here he deepens it by five handbreadths [from two to seven],\textsuperscript{22} or, maybe that as in this instance he [actually] deepens the channel by an extra handbreadth there is extra exertion, and hence it is forbidden? — It stands undecided.

Abaye allowed the people of Harmek to clear away\textsuperscript{23} [the growths obstructing]\textsuperscript{24} the canal.\textsuperscript{25} R. Jeremiah allowed the people of Sacutha to dredge the canal that had become blocked.\textsuperscript{26} R. Ashi allowed the people of Matha-Mehasia to clear obstructions from the river Barnis, saying that as the public obtained their drinking water from it it was virtually a [pressing] public need, and we learn: AND ALL PUBLIC NEEDS MAY BE PERFORMED.

\textbf{Talmud - Mas. Mo’ed Katan 5a}

AND IMPAIRED WATER-WORKS\textsuperscript{1} IN THE PUBLIC DOMAIN MAY BE REPAIRED AND CLEANED OUT. [That is to say only] to repair, but not to be dug [afresh]. Said R. Jacob as reporting R. Johanan: This was taught only where there is no public need; but where there is public need\textsuperscript{2} for it even [fresh] digging is allowed.

And where there is a public need is digging allowed? Surely it is taught: ‘Wells\textsuperscript{3} ditches or caverns of a private person may be cleaned out, and needless to say, those of the public; but wells, ditches or caverns of the public may not be dug and still less those of a private person’. Does not that mean that digging is not allowed even where the public has need of it? — No, only where the public has no need of it. Then similarly the reference to a private person is where the private person has no need of it, but in that case is ‘cleaning out’ allowed? Surely it is taught: ‘Wells, ditches or caverns of a private person may have water run into them, but they may not be cleaned out, nor may their cracks plastered; but those of the public may be cleaned out and their cracks may be plastered’? — But what else are we to say but that the private person has need of it; in which case [the references to the public is similarly where the public has need of it? But where the public has need of it, is digging forbidden? Surely it is taught: ‘Wells, ditches or caverns of a private person may be cleaned out’ — providing he has need of them, ‘and needless to say those of the public’ — when the public has need of them, as then, even digging is allowed. ‘But wells, ditches or caverns of the public are not to be dug’ — when the public has no need of them, ‘still less, those of a private person’, as when a private person has no need of them, even cleaning out is not allowed. R. Ashi remarked: Our own Mishnah is also precisely worded [to the same effect] as it states AND ALL PUBLIC NEEDS MAY BE PERFORMED. What is the force of ALL? Is it not meant to include digging? — No; it is to include [other instances] such as are taught [in the following]: ‘They [Public Commissioners] go forth to clear the roads of thorns, to mend the broadways and [main] highways and to measure the [ritual] pools; and if any [ritual] pools be found short of forty [cubic] se’ahs of water they train a continuous flow into it [to ensure forty se’ahs]. And whence do we know that if they did not go forth and attend to all these [public needs], then if any blood be shed there [through] this neglect [Scripture] lays [blame] on them, as if they themselves had shed it? From the instructive text, And so blood be upon thee. But surely the Mishnah does state these instances expressly: AND ROADS, BROADWAYS AND [RITUAL] WATER POOLS AND ALL PUBLIC NEEDS MAY BE PERFORMED! What else [then] may be included under this word ALL? Is it not digging [afresh if required by the public]? This proves it.

AND GRAVESIDES MAY BE MARKED. R. Simeon b. Pazzi said: Where is an indication in the Torah that gravesides should be marked? In the instructive text: [And when they pass through . . . the land] and one seeth a man’s bone then shall he set up a sign by it. Said Rabina to R. Ashi, But who told us that before Ezekiel came? — [Said the other]: Accepting your view, with regard to the statement made by R. Hisda: This point we do not learn from the law of our Master Moses; we learn it from the words of [prophet] Ezekiel the son of Buzi: No alien, uncircumcised in heart and uncircumcised in flesh, shall enter into My Sanctuary. [We might equally ask], who had told us that before Ezekiel came and stated it? Only, that was first learnt by oral tradition and then Ezekiel came and gave us a textual basis for it; here too, it was first learnt as an oral tradition and then Ezekiel came and gave us a textual basis for it. R. Abbahu suggested that it may be derived from this [text]: And he shall cry, ‘Unclean! Unclean!’ [That is], impurity cries out [to the passer-by] and tells him, ‘Keep off!’ And R. ‘Uzziel, the grandson of the elder R. ‘Uzziel said the same, [that] impurity cries out and tells him, ‘Keep off!’ But was this [text] intended for this lesson? It is required for what has been taught: And he shall cry ‘Unclean! Unclean!’; [this teaches that] one must needs make his distress known to many, that many pray for mercy on his behalf? — If that be so, let the text read ‘Unclean’ [but once]; why has it ‘Unclean’, ‘Unclean’ [twice over]? Infer [from it] the two points. Abaye said [that the rule may be derived] from here: And put not a stumbling-block before the blind. R. Papa said: And he will say, Cast ye up, cast ye up, clear the way. R. Hinena suggested, Take up the stumbling-block out of the way of My people. R. Joshua the son of R. Idi said: And thou shalt show them the way wherein they must walk. Mar Zutra said: And ye shall separate the Children of Israel from their uncleanness. R. Ashi said: And they shall have charge of My charge, [which implies], make safeguards to My charge. Rabina said: And to him who ordereth [we-sam] his way will I show the salvation of God.
Said R. Joshua b. Levi, Whoever appraises [ha-sham] his ways [in this life] becomes privileged to behold the salvation of the Holy One, blessed be He, for it is said: ‘[And to him] who ordereth his way’. Read not [we-sam] who sets [his way], but [we-sham] who appraises the worth [of his way], him will I show the divine salvation. R. Jannai had a certain disciple who daily raised critical points [at his college] but refrained from raising any critical points at the periodic lectures of the Festival Sabbaths.

He [R. Jannai] applied to him the text: And to him who ordereth his way will I show the salvation of God.1

Our Rabbis taught: ‘No markings are made to indicate [the presence of] a piece of flesh [from a corpse] no larger than an olive, nor of [human] bone no larger than a barley-corn, nor of any [human] remains which do not diffuse defilement under ‘tent’. But markings are made to indicate [the presence of] a [human] spine, a skull or the major members of a skeleton or the major number of lesser bones thereof. And the markings are not made in cases of certainty but [only] in cases of uncertainty. These are [instances of] uncertainty: Leafy bowers,7 jutting ledges8 and a Peras-area.9 And the markings are not placed on the site of the impurity [itself], in order to avoid wasting what is [preserved as] pure;10 nor is the marking placed far away from the spot, in order to avoid wasting any space11 of the Land of Israel’.12 But does not flesh of an olive's size from a human body diffuse defilement under a tent? For we learned: ‘The following diffuse defilement by tent [overspreading]: Flesh of an olive's size from a human dead body . . .!’ — Said R. Papa. We speak here of an olive's size precisely which after all shrinks [to less]: far better is it that terumah and other meats that are pure13 should be burnt [unnecessarily] on one occasion14 than that they should be burnt continuously.15

And these are [instances] of uncertainty: Leafy bowers and jutting ledges16 ‘Leafy bowers’ [means] a tree which overspreads the ground17 and ‘jutting ledges’ are [stones]18 projecting from wall enclosure.17 ‘And a Peras-area’: as we learned: ‘One who runs a plough over a grave makes the site a Peras-area’; and how much thereof has he thus affected? The full length of a furrow, one hundred cubits [each way].19 But does a Peras-area convey defilement by tent? Surely, Rab Judah, citing Samuel, said that one [a pilgrim] may walk across a Peras-area cautiously fanning his way [in front of him].20 Moreover, R. Judah b. Ammi, in the name of ‘Ulla, said that a Peras-area which has been [much] trampled is [considered as] clean;21 — Said R. Papa: ‘This [discrepancy] is not difficult [to explain]. The former statement refers to a field where a grave has become lost;22 whereas the latter refers to a field where a grave had been run over by the plough.23 But is a field where a grave has been lost24 [correctly] called a Peras-area? — Yes [indeed], for we learned: ‘There are three kinds of Peras-areas — [a] a field where a grave has been lost25 [b] a field where a grave has been run over by the plough26 and [c] the weepers’ field’.27 What is the weepers’ field? — R. Joshua28 b. Abba explained in the name of ‘Ulla that it is a field where they bid final farewell29 to the dead. And wherefore [is it held as a defiling area]? — Said [R. Hisda, as reporting]30 Abimi, [It is] because there is here a possibility31 of abandoned ownership.32 But does not a field where a grave has been run over by the plough require to be marked? Surely it is taught: ‘If one came upon a marked field without knowing its character,33 then if there are trees on it, it is thereby indicated that a grave in it had been run over by the plough;34 if there are no trees, it is thereby indicated that a grave has been lost in it.35 R. Judah says: [The presence of trees is no criterion] until there is some elder or disciple [to attest it], for not all are well versed on the subject [of proper markings!’ — Said R. Papa: What is taught in this [latter Baraitha] refers to a field in which a grave had been lost, and which had [consequently] been marked. If there are trees on it, it is thereby indicated that a grave had been run over by the plough [subsequently]; if there are no trees on it, it is indicated that a grave had been lost in it.36 But is there not a danger that the trees are situate within the field and the grave was outside?37 — as ‘Ulla said [elsewhere that we speak of a case where]38 the trees are situate on the boundaries [of the field] here likewise they were situate on the boundary line.39

(2) As flesh soon shrinks to less than its (traditional) minimum size of an olive and is then impotent to cause defilement without direct contact, Num. XIX, 13-16; Ohal. II, 3.
(3) Which is (traditionally) the minimum size for human bone to cause defilement by direct contact. V. references in previous note and Tosaf. s.v.
(4) Anything extending to one handbreadth over dead human remains represents the ‘tent’ of Num. XIX, 14, to diffuse defilement without contact, unless it is less than the minimum size.
(5) Any of these enumerated defile under cover without coming into direct contact with the object or grave. Any covering to the extent of one handbreadth, say his coat tail or sleeve spread, or hanging down over the spot, is enough to defile him, even if neither he nor his garment touch the unclean thing or spot.
(6) As people take care of their own accord not to run the risk of personal defilement or the loss of sacred meats.
(7) Lit., ‘coverings’, arbours, groves, avenues or single trees whose thick branches are full of foliage, constitute a ‘tent’, to spread the defilement to the walker; cf. Tosaf. s.v. יַהַנָּא.
(8) E.g., stone copings, boards and ledges projecting from cemetery walls each way within and without, constitute a ‘tent’. These are doubtful, as one is not certain whether there is a corpse near by within.

(10) Which may be brought close to the grave and defiled before one is aware. To those pure’ things belong e.g., the priest's due — terumah ‘first-fruits’, ‘second tithe’, etc. Cf. Num. XVIII, 11-13;26-30.

(20) With bellows or a spade to blow away from his path, without touching any piece of splintered bone cast up by the plough. They used to bury the dead in a very shallow grave, barely three handbreadths under the surface, which were therefore easily exposed. Cf. Tosafl s.v. מַמָּרָה and Ohal. XVIII, 5.

(21) And need not be marked or avoided. (Han.).

(22) And, as it cannot be located, the whole field is considered a place of defilement.

(23) The plough, we assume, crushes the bones rendering them impotent to communicate tent-defilement.

(24) So according to Wilna Gaon. Cur. edd., that was ploughed over.

(32) Loose limbs may have been dropped in transit, which the mourners being unable to identify, leave abandoned. On the practice of collecting bones after temporary burial and transferring them to their permanent place of rest v. infra 8a and Ber. 18a.

(33) Whether a grave had been lost in it, and the field cannot then be traversed by ‘fanning’, or whether the grave had the plough run over it in which case it may be traversed by ‘fanning’.

(34) For the sake of the trees, this shows that a field in which a grave had been run over by the plough is marked.

(35) As such a field is not to be planted, Ohal. XVIII, 3; Tosef. Ohal. XVII.

(36) And had not been ploughed over.

(37) I.e., where the soil had not been ploughed, so that it is treated like a field wherein a grave had been lost.

(38) Ned. 42b.

(39) And since dead are not buried on the road, the grave must be among the trees and has been run over by the plough, when the field has been tilled for the good of the trees.

Talmud - Mas. Mo’ed Katan 6a

But perhaps the defilement lies within the field while the trees stand on the outer sides [of it]?1 — They were planted irregularly.2 Or, if you like, I may explain by what was said above: Nor is the marking placed far away from the spot, in order to avoid wasting any space of the Land of Israel.3

‘R. Judah says [the presence of trees is no criterion] until there be some elder or disciple [to attest that it has been ploughed], for not all are well versed in the subject [of markings]’. Said Abaye: You may infer from here, that when a scholar is resident in a place, all local matters devolve upon him.
Said Rab Judah: If one comes across a [single] stone which is marked [with lime], the space under it is defiled; if two stones [with markings] then if there is lime on the space between them, the space between is defiled, and if there is no lime between them, the intervening space is clean, even though there is no [sign of] tilling [there]. But surely it is taught: ‘If one comes upon one stone which is marked, the space under it is defiled, if on two stones, if there is tilling between them, the intervening space is clean, if not, it is defiled’? — Said R. Papa. Here [it is a case where] the lime had been poured on top of the stones and got spread here and there. [Now] if there is any tilling [in the space] between them, [the space] between is clean, because it may be presumed that the [splashed] lime had got peeled off by the tilling; whereas if there is not [any trace of tilling] the lime is intended to mark the space between and it is ‘defiled’.

Said R. Assi:4 If one boundary is marked, that side [alone] is ‘defiled’, but the rest of the entire field is ‘clean’. If two [are marked] those [alone] are ‘defiled’, but the rest of the entire field is ‘clean’; if three [are marked], those are ‘defiled’, but the rest of the entire field is clean; if the four [boundaries are marked] they are clean and the entire field [within] is ‘defiled’, for the Master5 said: ‘Nor is the marking place far away from the spot, in order to avoid wasting space of the Land of Israel’.

AND [PUBLIC COMMISSIONERS] SET OUT [ALSO] TO INSPECT DIVERSE SEED-CROPS. But do we set out for inspecting seed-crops during the festival week? This is contradicted by the [following]: On the first of Adar announcements are made about the [contribution of] shekels and about the diverse crops. On the fifteenth thereof the scroll [of Esther] is read in the [ancient] walled cities and [commissioners] go forth to clear the roads of thorns, mend the broadways, measure the [ritual] water-pools and to perform all public needs, and they mark the gravesides and go forth to inspect the diverse seed-crops?7 — R. Eleazar and R. Jose b. Hanina [gave differing explanations], One said, The latter statement speaks of earlier crops,8 the other of later9 crops; the other said, In one case8 [they go out to attend] to grain crops, in the others to vegetable crops.

R. Assi, reporting R. Johanan said: The rule laid down [in the Mishnah] applies only when the sproutings [of the season are late and] had not become recognizable10 [before then]; but where the sproutings had become recognizable [before], they went forth about them [even earlier].

Why do we particularly set out during the festival week? R. Jacob reporting R. Johanan explained that it was because the wages given for labour are then low with us.11

R. Zebid, or some say, R. Mesharsheya said: From the afore — mentioned [explanation] you may infer that when pay was given,12 it was given them out of the Terumah of the [Shekel] Chamber,13 for if you should suppose that they [the owners of the fields] themselves paid, what difference does it make to us? Let them pay whatever they ask.14

And how much [constitutes an admixture]?15 Said R. Samuel b. Isaac, The same as we learned.16

Every se'ah of seeds that contains one quarter [of a kab]17

(1) And the grave has not been disturbed at all. What is the indication of the trees in such a case?
(2) Not in even rows, but promiscuously and thus the whole site had to be disturbed by the ploughing.
(3) [And since the marking is in proximity to the trees, it is evident that the defilement lay between the trees].
(4) Explaining the precise principle and system of marking, by confining the markings close to the spot of defilement.
(5) In the Baraita, supra 5b.
(6) [Consequently where the whole field was defiled the whole of the four boundaries had to be marked. As to the cleanliness of the boundaries themselves, v. Tosaf. s.v. בבראשית ויבט ]
In mid Adar.

In our Mishnah again directing it to be done in mid Nisan during the festival week.

Cf. e.g., Ex. IX, 32.

As ordinary work, apart from emergencies, is suspended during the festival week.

For the work.

V. Shek. III, 1.

As this was a punitive campaign against the inobservant, let them be mulcted.

What quantity of diverse seeds necessitate; the pulling up of the (offensive) crop?

In reference to initial sowing, Kil. II, 1.

As this was a punitive campaign against the inobservant, let them be mulcted.

What quantity of diverse seeds necessitate; the pulling up of the (offensive) crop?

In reference to initial sowing, Kil. II, 1.

A se'ah contains six kabs and a quarter of a kab's admixture is therefore one twenty-fourth of the se'ah, or enough seed to be sown in a field of 50 X 50 cubits.

of another kind must be reduced. But it is taught: They [the authorities] introduced a rule that they should declare ownerless the [crop of the] entire field? — That is not difficult [to explain]. The former [Mishnah] states the practice before the [new] rule, while the latter [of the Baraitha] gives the practice after the [introduction] of the rule, as it is [distinctly] taught: Formerly they [the public commissioners] used to uproot [the diverse-crop], throwing it to the cattle, at which the owners were doubly pleased, for one thing that they weeded their fields for them, and again that they threw [the forbidden crop] to the cattle; thereupon they made a [new] regulation that they should pull up [the forbidden crop] and cast it on the road. And still the owners were greatly pleased, because they weeded their fields. Thereupon they instituted that they should declare ownerless the crop of the entire field.

GEMARA. [NOT...THE ENTIRE FIELD]. Said Rab Judah, If the field has a clayey soil he may [water it]. It is likewise taught: When they said that it is forbidden to water them during the festival [week], they referred only to seeds that had not drunk before the festival; but seeds that had drunk before the festival may [again] be watered during the festival [week]; and if the field was a clayey soil, it is allowed [to water it]. And a bare field is not watered during the festival [week]; but the Sages allow it in the one case and in the other. Said Rabina: You may infer from here that a garden plot may be sprinkled in the festival week. For in the case of a bare field, why is it permitted? Because it just quickens a tardy soil; here too, it just quickens a tardy soil.

Our Rabbis taught: ‘A white field may be sprinkled in the sabbatical year, but not during the festival [week]’. But it has been taught: It may be sprinkled either in the sabbatical year or during the festival [week]? — Said R. Huna, This [discrepancy] is not difficult [to explain]; the former [quotation] states the view of R. Eliezer b. Jacob and the latter that of the Rabbis.

Another [Baraitha] taught: A white field may be sprinkled in the pre-sabbatical year so that the greens may sprout in the sabbatical year. Nay, more, a white field may be sprinkled in the sabbatical year, so that the greens may sprout [better] in the post-sabbatical year.

WHITE FIELD NOT IN THE USUAL WAY: AND A BREACH MAY BE BLOCKED UP DURING THE FESTIVAL [WEEK] AND IN THE SABBATICAL YEAR ONE MAY BUILD IN THE USUAL WAY.

GEMARA. What is ESHUTH?24 — Said Rab Judah: [It is] a creature which has no eyes. Raba b. Ishmael, some say, R. Yemar b. Shelemia, said, What [may be the] text [for this]? — ‘Let them [the wicked] be as a snail which melteth and passeth away; like the young mole [esheth]25 which hath not seen the sun.26

Our Rabbis taught: Moles and mice may be trapped in a white field and in a tree-field in the usual way and ants’ holes may also be destroyed. How are they destroyed? Rabbah Simeon b. Gamaliel says: Earth is fetched from one hole and put into another and they27 strangle each other. R. Yemar b. Shelemia said in the name of Abaye, That is [effective] only if [the nests are] situate on two sides of the river; and that [again], if there is no bridge; and that [again], if there is not [even] a [crossing] plank; and that [again], if there is not even a rope [to cross by].

(1) Or when already sown and sprouting the admixture is to be pulled up.
(2) As a deterrent, s.v. Shek. 1, 3.
(3) If the fruit-trees need it.
(4) I.e., under this pretext.
(5) Grain crops, white and leguminous, in contrast to fruit-trees.
(6) Either because they then require fuller attention, entailing greater exertion, or to discourage leaving the task for this week of leisure.
(7) The Sages disagree in both clauses of the Mishnah, i.e., that they do allow watering the entire orchard by training from tree to tree, and allow watering seeds even if they had not been watered before the festival.
(8) D.S.: R. Huna.
(10) Otherwise the soil goes hard.

(14) Both in the case of seeds that were not watered before the festival, and in the case of a bare field when an extra chance supply of water occurs, thereby to fit the soil for its turn to be sown or planted.
(15) By hand, jug or watering pot but not by regular irrigation, i.e., running the water into the field by ridges or channels.
(16) According to the Rabbis. So taken in Otz. Hag. l.c. and Tosaf. here s.v. ־ but Han. explains differently.
(17) Of cereals and legumina. Rashi here takes it as a Baal-field, i.e., one favourably situated as regards rain and sunshine.
(18) This is in agreement with Rashi and Tosaf. according to the reading in our text. Var. lec.: ‘May not be sprinkled… neither in the sabbatical year nor during the festival (week)’. V. Han. Alfasi. The reading is discussed by the Tosafist R. Shimshon (b. Abraham) of Sens in his commentary on Sheb. II, 10.
(19) Who disallows (in the Mishnah) watering the whole field in the festival week (and sprinkling marrows with ‘white earth’ even in the sabbatical year). Sheb. II, 10 q.v.
(20) Both in our Mishnah and in the first cited Baraitha, as regards the tree-field and seeds.
(21) Tosef. Sheb. II, 1 reads ‘a field’.
(22) Mishnah texts read here ‘not in the usual way’.
(23) Var. lec. R. Judah; v. Gemara infra. Obviously, it is ultimately the view adopted by the Sages. 7a.
(24) The Hebrew word for ‘moles’ in the Mishnah.
(26) Ps. LVIII, 9.
(27) The ants of the two nests not knowing each other.
R. JUDAH says: IN THE TREE-FIELD IN THE USUAL WAY AND IN THE WHITE FIELD NOT IN THE USUAL WAY. Our Rabbis taught: How is the usual way? He digs a hole and suspends a trap in it. How is the unusual way? He drives a stake [into the spot] or strikes it with a pick and flattens out the soil underneath. It is taught: R. Simeon b. Eleazar says, When they said, ['And in the white field not in the usual way'], they said it only in reference to a white field situate near the city; but in a white field that is situate near a tree-field [they may trap them] even in the usual way, lest these [pests] come away from the white field and destroy the tree-field.

AND A BREACH IS BLOCKED UP DURING THE FESTIVAL [WEEK]. How is it ‘blocked up’? — Said R. Joseph: With [a hurdle made of] twigs and daphne stakes. In a Baraitha it is taught: ‘Loose rubble is piled up without being plastered with clay.’ Said R. Hisda, This is taught only with regard to a garden wall, but the wall of a court is built in the usual way. Might one suggest that the following supports him: A wall that is bulging out into the public domain may be pulled down and built in the ordinary way, because it constitutes a danger [to the passers-by]! — [Not necessarily]. There the reason is as stated: ‘Because it constitutes a danger’. Some [put the argument] as follows: Come and hear: A wall that is bulging out into the public domain may be pulled down and built in the ordinary way, because it constitutes a danger. That is, where it constitutes a danger he may, but if it is not a danger he may not build. May we see in this a confutation of R. Hisda? — [Not necessarily], as R. Hisda might reply: There he may ‘pull down and build’, whereas here he may build but not pull down. Then let one in that case likewise [merely] pull down and not build! — If so, he might refrain even from pulling down. R. Ashi said: Our Mishnah, here, gives an indication to the same effect, for it states: BUT IN THE SABBATHICAL YEAR, ONE BUILDS IN THE ORDINARY WAY. Now of what is it [that he may block up the breach]? If it means [the wall of] his courtyard, does this need to be stated? It can only be, therefore [a breach in] his garden [wall] although he might seem to be doing it in order to safeguard his fruits. You can infer it [from this].

GEMARA. It is taught: R. Meir says that an inspection is made [during the festival week] to make a lenient pronouncement but not for a severe one. R. Jose says: Neither for making a lenient nor a severe pronouncement; as, if you arrive at the necessity of having to make a lenient pronouncement [on the findings] you are [likewise] bound to make a severe pronouncement. Said Rabbi: R. Meir's statement seems appropriately applied to the case of an [observational] detention and R. Jose's to that of a decided leper.

Said Raba, In the case of one who is [as yet nominally] ‘clean’ all are agreed that he is not examined. In regard to one under preliminary [observational] detention, all agree that he is examined; where a difference of opinion arises is in the case of one under a second [observational] detention: one Master [R. Meir] considers that it is left to [the discretion of] the priest, so that if the patient is [found] ‘clean’ he declares him ‘clean’, and if he is [found] ‘unclean’ he holds his peace; while the other Master [R.Jose] considers that, [since] it is written: [This is the law of the plague and leprosy. . .], to pronounce it clean or unclean,¹ [the priest has no choice].²

The Master said: Said Rabbi, R. Jose's statement seems appropriately applied to the case of a decided leper³ and R. Meir's to one under [observational] detention.⁴ But the reverse⁵ is taught [elsewhere]? — Both versions are [variant] tannaitic interpretations of Rabbi's observation. One [authority]⁶ is of the opinion that the patient prefers the company of the world at large⁷ [during the Festival], while the other [authority]⁸ holds that he prefers to retain his wife's company.⁹

Is that to say that [according to Rabbi]¹⁰ a confirmed leper may have the use of the [conjugal] bed? — [Yes], it is taught: But he shall dwell outside his tent seven days,¹¹ [that is] he shall be¹² precluded from the use of the [conjugal] bed; for ‘tent’ means nothing but [living with] his wife, as it is said: Go, say unto them, return ye unto your tents.¹³ R. Judah says:¹⁴ [It is written,] [And after he is cleansed] they shall reckon for him seven days,¹⁵ [which implies that he is precluded only] while counting his seven days [‘after he is cleansed'] but not while he is a confirmed leper’. R. Jose b. Judah says: ‘[I take it to mean he is precluded] while counting seven days [and] all the more so while he is a confirmed leper’. ‘And’ ‘said R. Hiyya: ‘I argued on this point before Rabbi’. Our Master! [said I], You taught that [King] Jotham could not have been born unto Uzziahu¹⁶ save during the time that he was a confirmed leper,¹⁷ [to which] Rabbi replied, ‘and I said so too’.¹⁸

Wherein do they differ? — R. Jose b. Judah argues that as the All Merciful has plainly indicated¹⁹ that a convalescent leper [‘shall dwell outside his tent’]²⁰ while counting his seven days [of preliminary ritual purification] it is all the more [to be expected that he be apart from his wife] while being in the state of a confirmed leper; and the [other] Master [Rabbi] argues that what has been plainly indicated is [to be kept as] indicated and what has not been indicated is not [to be assumed as] indicated.²¹

[Reverting to Raba's explanation above], do you mean to say that [the postponement of an unfavourable pronouncement or of the time of inspection]²² is [solely] dependent on the discretion of the priest?²³ — Yea, indeed, as it is taught [in the following]: And on a day when [raw flesh] shall be seen in him [he shall be unclean; and the priest shall lood on the raw flesh and pronounce him unclean],²⁴ which means that there is a day when you do see it in him as well as a day when you do not see it in him. Hence said they [the Sages] that if a groom developed symptoms of leprosy they grant him [delay of inspection to the end of] the seven days of the [marriage] feast,²⁵ whether it be his person, or his house²⁶ or his garment²⁷ [that is affected]; and likewise [if the symptoms developed] during a festival they grant him [the patient] all²⁸ the seven days of the festival: thus R. Judah. Rabbi says: There is no need [to resort to this text] as it says: And the priest shall command that they empty the house²⁹ [before the priest goes in to see the plague that all that is in the house be not made unclean].³⁰ Now if [the inspection is] here delayed for his convenience, which is just an optional [matter],³¹ may it not all the more be deferred for his [due observance of a] religious obligation?³² What is the [actual] issue between them? — Said Abaye: Merely the different expository results obtained by each from his text. And Rab said, it is the delay of inspection in an optional [matter]³³ that is the issue between them, R. Judah [holding] that from the [other] text [cited above by Rabbi]³⁴ we cannot learn [this],³⁵ as it is an anomaly.³⁶

(2) And he must declare one or the other, according to his findings.
(3) To make no inspection so as to avoid the adverse decision being given in the festival week.
(4) The order of the statements is reversed but not the substance.
(5) Viz., that R. Jose's ruling is appropriate to a case under second observation and R. Meir's to that of a confirmed leper.
The second Baraitha which regards the view of R. Meir as appropriate to a confirmed leper and that of R. Jose to a case under second detention.

Thus: R. Meir, having in mind a confirmed leper, says: ‘Inspect him now to mitigate his plight. If he is still a leper, he loses nothing. If he is found cured, he can at once get back to the town by beginning his first ritual cleansing; and although he has thereupon to part from his wife for seven days, he does not mind it as he prefers to get back to his friends in town’. And R. Jose, thinking of the case of a second detention, says: ‘No inspection! For if you find him a leper you must confirm him as such and send him into complete isolation, right away from everybody (save from his wife)’.

The first Baraitha quoted.

Thus: R. Jose, thinking of a confirmed leper says: ‘No inspection! For if you examine and find him clean’ (cured), he must at once begin counting seven days of his ceremonial cleansing (referred to infra) and live apart from his wife. Leave him alone, therefore, just now; he prefers his wife's company to getting back to the town’. And R. Meir, thinking of a case of second observation, says: ‘Examine him to ease his plight. If you find him ‘clean’ (cured) he is happy with the favourable decision; if "unclean", (make no pronouncement just yet, or) even if you declare him a confirmed leper and he had to be strictly isolated, he will not be much worse off, as he still retains his wife's company’.

As implied in the discussion.

And he that is to be cleansed shall wash his clothes . . . and bathe himself in water and he shall be clean; and after that he may come (back) into the camp, but he shall dwell . . ., Lev. XIV, 8.

Lev. XIV, 36.

That inspection is delayed in an optional matter.

Lit., ‘novel’, something exceptional altogether. You cannot take an exceptional instance as a basis for argument or deductions.
inasmuch as wood and stones elsewhere are not subject to [ceremonial] uncleanness whereas here [in a house affected by leprosy] they are [made] subject to uncleanness. And [on the other hand] Rabbi says [that this text] is also needed. For had the All Merciful prescribed [only], ‘And on a day when [raw flesh] shall be seen in him . . .’ I might have said that postponement [of inspection or pronouncement on the findings] is granted only for the [due observance of a] religious obligation, but not for the sake of an optional [matter]; therefore did the All Merciful prescribe also, ‘And the priest shall command’. Again, had the All Merciful prescribed only ‘And the priest shall command that they empty the house . . .’, I might have said that [postponement is granted] in the case of these effects [of the house] because the uncleanness is not that of a person, but where the uncleanness is that of a person I might say that the priest should inspect him, [without delay]: therefore it is necessary [to have both texts].

The Master said: ‘There is a day when you do see it in him and there is a day when you do not see it in him. How is this implied? — Said Abaye, If it is just so, the Divine Law should have written: ‘On a day [when]’; what then is the [import of] ‘And on a day [when]’? From this you infer that there is ‘a day’ when you see in him . . . and there is ‘a day’ when you do not see . . . in him. Raba said: The whole text is redundant altogether for if it be just so, Divine Law might have had ‘And when [raw flesh] is seen [in him]’. What then is the import of the [amplification] ‘And on a day’? From this infer that there is a day when you do see it in him and there is a day when you do not see it in him. And Abaye? He needs that [to teach that the inspection is held] by ‘day’, and not at night. And whence derives Raba this [point] ‘by day and not at night’? — It is derived by him from, ‘According to all the sight of the eyes of the priest’. And Abaye? — He needs that [text] to exclude a person blind in one eye [inspecting a leper]. But does not Raba also require this text for that same point? — Yea, [he does] so also. But then, whence [does he derive the point] ‘by day but not at night’? — He derives it from, ‘Like as a plague was seen by me in the house’, [that is, seen] by me, not by [the aid of] my [candle] light. And Abaye? — If he did learn from there, I might have said that these [restrictions] obtain [only] where the uncleanness is not personal [of one's body]; but where uncleanness is that of the body, [it may be inspected] also by one's [candle] light. [Therefore] the [original] text conveys it to us [best].

MISHNAH. FURTHERMORE R. MEIR SAID, A MAN MAY GATHER HIS FATHER'S AND MOTHER'S BONES, SINCE THIS IS [AN OCCASION] ‘OF JOY’ FOR HIM; R. JOSE SAYS, IT IS AN [OCCASION] ‘OF MOURNING’ FOR HIM. A PERSON SHOULD NOT STIR UP WAILING FOR HIS DEAD, NOR HOLD A LAMENTATION FOR HIM THIRTY DAYS BEFORE A FEAST.

GEMARA. AS IT IS A JOY FOR HIM. [The following] was cited in contrast to this: ‘One who gathers his father's or mother's bones holds himself in mourning for them all the day, but in the evening he does not hold himself in mourning for them [any longer].’ And R. Hisda commented thereon, even if he had them by him tied up in a sheet. Said Abaye, I should suggest [it means], ‘because the joyousness of the feast prevails with him’.

A PERSON SHOULD NOT STIR UP A WAILING FOR HIS DEAD: What is the meaning of ‘stirring up a wailing for one's dead’? Rab said: In Palestine [it is customary that] whenever a professional lamenter comes round people say, ‘Let all those who are sore at heart weep with him’.

THIRTY DAYS BEFORE A FEAST. Why [just] thirty days? R. Kahana said that Rab Judah as reporting Rab told him that once it happened that a man saved money to ‘go up for the feast’ [to Jerusalem] when a [professional] lamenter came and stopped at his door and the wife took her husband's savings and gave them to him, and so he was prevented from going. Then it was that they [the Rabbis] said, One should not stir up a wailing for his dead, nor hold a [funerary] lament for him thirty days before a Feast; but Samuel gave another reason, namely,

(1) I.e., although Rabbi holds that delay is afforded in the case of body leprosy even for the sake of an optional matter on the analogy of leprosy of houses etc., yet he requires the verse quoted by R. Judah.
(2) To be read just ordinarily.
(3) The word ‘on a day’.
(4) To be read just ordinarily.
(5) Which suggests, ‘yet another day’.
(6) Cf. Yeb. 72b.
(7) Why does he not explain thus the redundant phrase ‘on a day’?
(9) Lev. XIII. 12, so lit. This implies that it must be held by day when it can be seen well.
(10) Ibid. XIV, 35.
(11) Why does he not derive it from this latter text.
(12) ‘And on a day etc.’ that there is a time when you see etc.
(13) During the festival (week).
(14) It was an ancient custom to give first a temporary burial, and after the flesh had decayed to transfer the bones to a reserved tomb or mausoleum, where they were kept in cedar or marble coffins. Cf. Sem. XII.
(15) To perform a filial duty while he is free to go and ‘bring them home’ to their assigned resting place. There is another possible meaning, see the discussion later.
(16) And should not be undertaken during the festival week.
(17) The meaning apparently is (as explained by Rab later) to join others in lamenting their dead and resuscitate ones own old grief on the occasion. A funeral in the town or village provided a good occasion for such a renewed lament, when professional funerary orators, ‘lamenters’ and female dirge-singers, were available.
(18) I.e., The ceremonial lament for an individual at the time of his death and funeral.
(19) Contrary to R. Meir who allows it during the festival week and furthermore says, ‘it is a joy for him’.
(20) Even if he had not gathered them himself that day, their presence is mournful enough and it is surprising that R. Meir allowed transference and even said ‘it was a joy for him’.
(21) Not that it is an occasion of joy, but that the joy of the festive season prevails in dispensing with formal mourning. Or, that the performance of his filial duty will afford him a sense of satisfaction throughout the remaining festival days (J.M.K.).
(22) On one of the three pilgrim feasts. V. Deut. XVI, 16. Cf. Ex. XXIII, 14ff. ibid. XXXIV, 23. The festival atmosphere is introduced by the study and discussion of its laws thirty days before. Pes. 6b.

because the dead cannot be put out of mind and heart for [at least] thirty days. What practical difference is there between the two [explanations]? — There is [a difference] between them, where [say], the [professional] lamenter does it without a charge.¹

GEMARA. What are KUKIN and what are BURIAL PLACES? — Said Rab Judah, kukin are [recesses made] by excavation and ‘burial-places’ [are structures made by] building. It is [actually] taught thus: ‘These are kukin and these are burial places: Kukin, are [niches made] by excavation and ‘burial places’ are [structures made] by building’.
BUT KUKIN MAY BE ADAPTED. How are they adapted? — Rab Judah said: If [for instance] one is [too] long it may be shortened. A. Tanna taught: ‘He lengthens or shortens [the recess] within the cave’.

AND THEY [MAY] MAKE A NIBREKETH . . . What is NIBREKETH? — Rab Judah said: It is [the same as] bekia’. But then, is it not taught: ‘The nibreketh and the bekia’ [etc.]? — Abaye, or as some say R. Kahana, replied [They have the same relation as] a trough and a troughlet.

AND A RON WITH THE DEAD [BODY] CLOSE BY IN THE COURT [YARD]. We learn here what our Rabbis taught [elsewhere]: ‘They [may] do all that the dead requires, they cut his hair and wash a garment for him and make him a box of boards that had been sawn on the day before the Festival. Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel says, they [may] even bring trees and he saws them [into] boards in his house, behind closed doors’.

MISHNAH. ONE MAY NOT TAKE A WIFE DURING THE FESTIVAL [WEEK], WHETHER A VIRGIN OR A WIDOW, NOR EFFECT A LEVIRATE MARRIAGE, AS IT IS A REJOICING FOR THE GROOM; BUT ONE MAY REMARRY HIS DIVORCED WIFE. AND A WOMAN MAY MAKE HER ADORNMENTS IN THE FESTIVAL [WEEK]. R. JUDAH SAYS, SHE MAY NOT USE LIME, AS THAT IS A [TEMPORARY] DISFIGUREMENT TO HER. AN ORDINARY PERSON SEWS IN THE USUAL WAY; BUT A CRAFTSMAN SEWS A TUCK-STITCH. AND THE CORDS IN BED-FRAMES MAY BE INTERLACED. R. JOSE SAYS, THEY MAY [ONLY] BE TIGHTENED. GEMARA. [A REJOICING FOR THE GROOM]. And if it is a rejoicing for him, what is amiss? — Said Rab Judah, as reporting Samuel, and so said R. Eleazar, as reporting R. Oshaia — and some say, R. Eleazar, as reporting R. Hanina: — It is barred, because one ‘rejoicing’ may not be merged in another ‘rejoicing’. Rabbah son of R. Huna said: It is barred because he abandons the ‘rejoicing’ of the festival and busies himself with that of his wife. Said Abaye to R. Joseph: That explanation of Rabbah son of R. Huna is the same as that given by Rab. For R. Daniel b. Kattina reporting Rab, said, Whence [is the ruling] that ONE MAY NOT TAKE A WIFE DURING THE FESTIVAL [WEEK]? For it is said, And thou shalt rejoice in thy feast, but not with thy [new] wife [instead]. ‘Ulla said, [It is] because of the exertion [it occasions]. R. Isaac b. Nappaha said, Because it may cause a decline in marriage and priesthood.

An objection was raised: ‘All those who have been declared to be forbidden to take wives during the festival [week]

From the context however, it is quite obvious as Ritba points out — that here it is not the fuller's trough or tank, but the dead man's sarcophagus, a stone, clay or wooden coffin (box) that is allowed, such as the labella-troughs used as coffins.

are free to marry on the day previous to the festival’, which presents a difficulty to all those authorities. — There is no difficulty: As to one who states [that it is forbidden] because of the ‘rejoicing’, [it may be said that] the main rejoicing [of a marriage celebration] lasts mainly one day. As to the one who states [that it is] because of the exertion [it occasions here too] the main exertion falls on one day. As to the one who says [that it is] because it may lead to a decline in marriage and parenthood, [it may be said] that for the sake of one day a person would not put himself off indefinitely]. Whence do we derive the principle that ‘rejoicing should not be merged in rejoicing’? From the text: So Solomon made the feast at that time and all Israel with him, a great congregation from the entrance of Hamath unto the Brook of Egypt, before the Lord our God seven days and seven days, even fourteen days. Now, if it is the fact that one rejoicing may be merged in another rejoicing, he should have kept back the consecration ceremony [of the Temple] for the time of the feast and then have held it for seven days [concurrently], for both one and the other. Maybe that the rule is [only] that we should not [deliberately keep a marriage] for the time of a festival, but where it so turns out to be [opportune], we might as well hold it then? — [If so], Solomon should have left some small part [unfinished]. But perhaps this could not be done because we brook no delay in the building of the Temple! — Then he could have left [say], an ell of the Ravens’ S care Palisade. [But, it may be asked,] The ell of the Ravens’ Scare Palisade was an essential part of the Temple building! Rather [it is derived] from [the fact that] the text is redundant. Consider, it is written ‘fourteen days’, wherefore the need of ‘seven days and seven days’? Infer from this that these [first] seven days and those [second] seven days were distinct from each other.

R. Parnak, reporting R. Johanan, said that that year Israel did not observe the Day of Atonement, whereat they were perturbed, saying, that perhaps the enemies of Israel had thereby incurred their doom; whereat a Bath Kol came forth and announced to them: ‘All of you are destined for the life of the world to come.’ What was the basis of their exposition? — They argued a fortiori [thus]: If within the Tabernacle, the sanctity of which was not to be in perpetuity, yet an individual's sacrificial gifts were allowed [at the consecration] to be offered on the Sabbath day, which ordinarily is an offence punishable by stoning to death; all the more is it the case [that it is permitted] with the Temple, the sanctification of which is to be for ever, and with public offerings, and that on the Day of Atonement, whose desecration is an offence punished only by kareth! But then, why were they perturbed? — Because there [in the former case] the offerings were brought as dues to the Supreme Being; whereas here, they were brought for their [own] common needs. Then here too, should they not have made their offerings without partaking [on that day] of any meat or drink? — There is no joyous celebration without eating and drinking.
Whence do we know that at [the consecration of] the Tabernacle the Sabbath restrictions were suspended? Shall I say because it is written, ‘On the first day [So-and-so offered] . . . on the seventh’24 day [So-and-so offered], then [say I], maybe it means the seventh day [in the order] of the offerings?25 Said R. Nahman b. Isaac: The text says, ‘On the day of the eleventh, day’26 just as a day is continuous, so were the eleven days continuous.27 But perhaps, it means [continuous] on days appropriate? — Then there is yet another such text, On the day of the twelfth day,28 — just as a day was continuous, so had the whole twelve days been entirely continuous. But that too, maybe means only continuous on days appropriate? — If that be so, why do I require two [peculiarly worded] texts?

Again, whence do we know that during the consecration of the Temple the restrictions of the Day of Atonement were suspended? — Shall I say because it is written, ‘even fourteen days’, maybe it means days appropriate?29 — That is learnt from the analogy between the repeated word ‘day’ here and in the other place.30

‘Whereat a Bath kol came forth and announced to them: "All of you are destined for the life of the world to come".’ And whence know we that pardon was granted them? — For R. Tahlifa taught: [It is written], On the eighth day he sent the people away and they blessed the king and went unto their tents joyful and glad of heart for all the goodness that the Lord had shown unto David His Servant and to Israel His people.31 ‘To their tents’, that is, they went [home] and found their wives in [a state] of purity32 [to receive their husbands]; joyful’, that is, that they had enjoyed the radiance of the Shechinah;33 ‘and glad of heart’, that is, each man's wife conceived and bore him a male child. ‘For all the goodness’ that is, a Bath kol had come forth and announced to them: ‘All of you are destined for the life of the world to come ; That the Lord had shown unto David His servant and to Israel His people’: It is perfectly clear [as to what is referred to] by ‘all the goodness shown to Israel His people’, as indicating that God had granted them pardon for their sin against [the non-observance of] the Day of Atonement; but what is the point of ‘the goodness shown unto David His servant’? — Said Rab Judah, as reporting Rab; At the moment when Solomon wanted to bring the Ark into the Temple, the gates held fast together. Solomon recited [a prayer of] four and twenty [expressions of] intercession34 but had no response. He began [anew] and said: lift up your heads, O ye gates35 and again he had no response. As soon as [however] he said: [Now therefore arise, O Lord God . . . Thou and the Ark of Thy strength . . .] O Lord, turn not away the face of Thine anointed, remember the good deeds of David Thy servant,36 he was answered forthwith.37 At that moment the faces of David's foes turned [livid] like the [blackened] sides of a pot and all became aware that the Holy One, blessed be He, had pardoned David that misdeed.38

R. Jonathan b.'Asma39 and R. Judah son of proselyte parents were studying the section of 'Vows’40 at the school of R. Simeon b. Yohai. They had taken leave from him in the evening, but in the morning they came and again took leave from him. Said he to them: But did you not take leave of me yesternight? Said they to him: Our Master, You taught us, a disciple who had taken leave from his Master and remained overnight in the city must needs take leave from him once again, for it is said: ‘On the eighth day’41 he [King Solomon] sent the people away and they blessed the King,42 and [then] it is written: ‘And on the three and twentieth day of the seventh month he sent the people away’.43 Hence we learn from here that a disciple who had taken leave from his Master and remained overnight in the city must needs take leave from him once again. Said he to his son, ‘These are men of countenance,44 go along with them, that they may bless you’. He went and found them comparing text with text: It is written: Balance the path of thy feet and let all thy ways be established;45 and it is written: Lest thou shouldst balance the path of life?46 It is not difficult [to explain]: the former text applies where an obligation can be discharged through another person.47

Temporary, to be replaced by a permanent structure after the settlement in the Land of Promise.

Num. VII, records the gifts which the Princes of the tribes, as individuals, brought day after day, in succession, among them ‘burnt-offerings’ and ‘sin-offerings’ which were not permitted to be eaten by the donors or the people, and the male priests alone were allowed to eat of the sin-offerings as if partaking of ‘the table of the Lord’.

Only the prescribed offerings were permitted on Sabbaths and festivals. Cf. Num. XXVIII.

Men of importance.

Prov. IV, 26, i.e., carefully pick and choose your actions and duties.

Ibid. V, 5, i.e., do not pick and choose.

Should duty's calls come from several directions some of which may be discharged through some other trusty person, choose the more important and responsible tasks for yourself.

Talmud - Mas. Mo'ed Katan 9b

the latter where the obligation cannot be discharged through another person.¹ Again they were sitting and enquiring [into the following]: It is written: She [Wisdom]² is more precious than rubies; and all the things thou canst desire are not to be compared unto her³ [which implies] that heaven's demands [of you] are comparable to Her.⁴ Again it is written: And all things desirable are not to be compared unto Her.⁵ [which means] that even things that are of Heaven's desire are not comparable to Her?⁶ The former text applies where the duty can be discharged through others, the latter — where the Duty cannot be discharged through others. Then [turning to him] they said: ‘What is your business here?’⁷ He replied: ‘Father told me, “Go along with them that they may bless you”’.⁸ Said they to him: ‘May it be [Heaven's] pleasure that you sow and mow not; that what you bring in go not out; that what goes out you bring not in; that your house be desolate and your inn be inhabited; that your board be disturbed and you behold not a new year’. ‘When he came home to his father, he said to him: ‘So far were they from blessing me that they [even] distressed me sorely⁹ . His father asked him: ‘What did they say to you?’ — They said thus and thus. Said the father to him: ‘Those are all blessings. That "you sow and mow not [means], that you beget children and they do not die. That "what you bring in go not out" [means], that you bring home daughters-in-law and your sons do not die, so that their wives need not leave again. "What goes out you bring not in" [means], that you give your daughters [in marriage] and their husbands do not die so that your daughters need not come back. "That your house be desolate and your inn be inhabited" [means], that this world is your inn and the other world⁷ is a home, as it is written, Their grave is their house for ever;¹⁰ reading not "their inward thought" [Kirbam] but "their grave (Kibram) is their house for ever, and their dwelling places be for generations."¹¹ "That your board be disturbed" [that is]; by sons and daughters and "that you behold not a new year [means] that your wife do not die and you have not to take you a new wife’.¹²

R. Simeon b. Halafta took his leave from Rabbi.¹³ Said Rabbi to his son: ‘Go along with him that he may bless you’ — Said [the parting Rabbi] to him: ‘May it be [Heaven's] pleasure that you be not put to shame nor feel ashamed yourself’.¹⁴ When he came to his father, he asked him: ‘What did he say to you?’ — He replied: ‘He made some commonplace remark¹⁵ to me — Said [Rabbi] to his son: ‘He blessed you with the blessing with which the Holy One [blessed be He] blessed Israel twice over; for it is written: And ye shall eat in plenty and be satisfied and shall praise the name of the Lord your God . . . And My people shall never be ashamed. And ye shall know that I am in the midst of Israel, and that I am the Lord your God, and there is none else; and My people shall never be ashamed.’¹⁶

AND A WOMAN MAY MAKE HER TOILET DURING THE FESTIVAL [WEEK]. Our Rabbis taught: These are [permitted in] woman's adornment. She [plaits her hair]¹⁷ treats her [eyes] with kohl; fixes a parting,¹⁸ trims her hair and nails¹⁴ and] puts rouge on her face; some say she may use a razor for her privy parts. R. Hisda's wife made her toilet in front of her daughter-in-law.¹⁶ R. Hina
b. Hinena sat before R. Hisda; as he sat he said that the instances [mentioned in the Mishnah] applied only to a young woman, but not to an elderly woman. Said R. Hisda to him: God! even to your mother, even to your mother's mother, yea even if she be standing at the [brink of the] grave, as the saying goes: 'At sixty as at six; the sound of a timbrel makes her nimble'.

R. JUDAH SAYS SHE SHOULD NOT USE LIME. It is taught: R. Judah says, a woman should not use lime, as it is a disfigurement to her. R. Judah concedes, however, that [if it is] a lime [preparation] that can be peeled off during the festival week she may apply it during the festival week, because, although it is irksome to her at the moment, It is a pleasure to her afterwards. But does R. Judah hold this view? Surely we learned [elsewhere]: ‘R. Judah said, Debts may be recovered [from pagan creditors during their festivals] as it is irksome to them’. They said to him, Although it is irksome [for them] at the moment, they feel pleased afterwards?

Rab Judah [reporting Rab] said: The daughters of Israel, who attain puberty before the [normal] age, if they are poor, put on a cosmetic preparation made of lime; richer girls put on fine-flower, and the wealthy girls put on oil of myrrh, as it is said: ‘Six mouths with the oil of myrrh’. What is this ‘oil of myrrh’? — Said R. Huna b. Hiyya, [It is what is called] stacte. R. Jeremiah b. Ammi said, It is oil obtained from olives that have reached but a third of their [normal] growth. It is taught: ‘R. Judah says omphacinon is an oil made of [unripe] olives that have reached but a third of their [normal] growth’ — And why do they put it on? Because it is a depilatory and softens the flesh [skin]. R. Bebai had a dark-skinned daughter; he applied to her that unguent one limb at a time and this brought her a husband with four hundred zuzim. There was a pagan neighbour of his who had a daughter, and he applied it all over her at once [and] she died; [whereupon] he said, Bebai killed my daughter. Said R. Nahman: ‘R. Bebai drinks beer, therefore his daughters needed unguents; [but as] we do not drink beer, our daughters need no unguents’.

Talmud - Mas. Mo'ed Katan 10a

AN ORDINARY PERSON SEWS IN THE USUAL WAY. How do we define ‘an ordinary person’? — At the school of R. Jannai they said, [It means] anyone who cannot draw a needleful during their festivals, as the means afforded them by the Jew may go to enhance the heathen celebrations. The settlement of a debt leaves the debtor with an easy mind. of stitches in one sweep. R. Jose b. Hainna said, [It means] anyone who cannot sew an even seam on the hem of his tunic.

BUT A CRAFTSMAN MAY SEW A TUCK-STITCH. What is meant by sewing a ‘tuck-stitch’? — R. Johanan said, [It means] ‘overstepping’. Rabbah b. Samuel said, [It means that the stiches resemble] dogs’ teeth.2

AND THE CORDS MAY BE INTERLACED IN BED-FRAMES. [R. JOSE SAYS THEY MAY ONLY BE TIGHTENED]. What is meant by ‘interlacing’ and what by ‘tightening’? When R. Dimi came [from Palestine] he said that R. Hiyya b. Abba and R. Assi had different views on this, both reporting in the name of Hezekiah and R. Johanan. One said that ‘interlacing’ meant [interlacing] both the warp and the woof, and that ‘tightening’ meant putting in the warp without the woof; while the other said that ‘interlacing’ meant putting in the warp without the woof, and tightening’ meant that he may tighten a girth cord if it has become slack.

But this cannot be [correct], for R. Tahlifa4 b. Saul taught: ‘And all agreed that no cords may be let in afresh’. Now this is perfectly in accord with the one who says that the ‘interlacing’ [permitted in the Mishnah] means interlacing both the warp and the woof, and that the ‘tightening’ [that R. Jose permitted] means putting in the warp without the woof; hence R. Tahlifa could say: ‘And all agreed that no cords may be let in afresh’ — But, according to one who says that ‘interlacing’ means putting in the warp without the woof and that ‘tightening’ means that he may tighten a cord if it has become slack, [how do you explain R. Tahlifa b. Saul's statement? For,] if you say that interlacing the warp and the woof is forbidden, need one [at all state] that cords are not to be let in afresh? — This is a difficulty. Said R. Nahman b. Isaac to R. Hiyya b. Abin: Is there anybody who applies the term ‘Interlacing’ to inserting a warp without the woof? For surely we learned:5 R. Meir says: A bed [frame] is not [subject to ritual defilement] until three warp spaces in it have been crossed? The fact is that when Rabin came [from Palestine] he said that all agree that ‘interlacing’ means interlacing the warp and woof; but where the difference arose was on the interpretation of ‘tightening’: one Master held that the ‘tightening’ [that was permitted] was inserting the warp without the woof, and the other Master held [that what was allowed was] the tightening of a cord which has become slack. An objection was raised: Bed-frames may be interlaced [during the festival week] and needless to say that they may be tightened: these are the words of R. Meir. R. Jose says: They may be tightened, but not interlaced and ‘Some say’⁶ that tightening may not be done at all — Now here [the several views are] perfectly understandable according to the one who says that by ‘tightening’ is meant ‘inserting the warp without the woof’, as then, ‘Some’ come and express their dissent [on that kind of mending]. But according to the one who says that by the ‘tightening’ [which is allowed] is meant that when a cord has become slack one may make it taut, then according to the view of ‘Some’ not even this [simple adjustment] is allowed! — Yes, indeed; because, since it is possible [temporarily] to fill [the sag] with bedclothes, we should not go to [further] exertion [during the festival week].

MISHNAH. AN OVEN STOVE⁷ OR MILL MAY BE SET UP [IN POSITION] DURING THE FESTIVAL [WEEK]; R. JUDAH SAYS, A PAIR OF MILLSTONES IS NOT TO BE COMPRESSED FOR THE FIRST TIME [IN THE FESTIVAL WEEK].

GEMARA. What is meant by ‘compressing’? — Rab Judah said that [it means] chiselling⁸ the millstones; R. Jehiel said, It means [fixing] an eye-hole.⁹ An objection was raised: An oven or stove [or mill] may be set up in the festival [week], provided that the work is not entirely completed; these are the words of R. Eliezer; but the Sages say, It may even be finished off. R. Judah, speaking in his¹⁰ name says: A new one may be set up and an old [mill] compressed, and ‘Some’¹¹ say compressing may not be done at all. Now this accords well with the one who says that ‘compressing’ means scoring the mill [stones], hence this process is applicable in the case of an old mill; but according to the one who says that it means [fixing] an eye-hole, what fixing of an eye-hole does an old mill need?¹² — I may say, for instance, that it needs widening a little more. R. Huna [once] hearing someone scraping his millstones during the festival week said: ‘Who is that? May he himself suffer desecration that desecrates the festival week!’ He [evidently] held the view of ‘Some say’ [cited above]. R. Hama expounded:¹³ ‘One [may] scrape millstones during the festival [week]’. In the name of our Master¹⁴ they said: One [may] trim the hoofs of the horse he rides or the ass he rides during the festival week; but not those of the ass turning the mill.¹ Rab Judah² declared it permissible to trim the hoofs of the ass turning the mill or to set up the mill or build a mill, or to construct a base for the mill or build a horse stable. Rab³ declared it permissible to curry horses and to construct a bed⁴ or make a mattress-box.⁵ Raba allowed bleeding of cattle during the festival week. Said Abaye to him: There is a Tanna who supports you: Cattle [may] be bled and no curative means are [to be] withheld from an animal during the festival week’. Raba allowed fulled clothes\(^\text{6}\) to be rubbed.\(^\text{7}\) On what ground? It is an ordinary unskilled process. Said R. Isaac b. Ammi, as citing R. Hisda: To pleat sleeve-ends\(^\text{8}\) is forbidden; on what ground? Because that is a craftsman’s process.

Raba said: [With regard to] a man who levels up his ground, if it is to even [the slope of] the threshing floor\(^\text{9}\) it is allowed; if merely to level the soil, it is forbidden. How can one tell? If he takes up heaped [soft] soil to heap on [soft] soil, or stiff soil to lay on stiff soil, it shows that it is done for [improving] the threshing floor; but if he takes up heaped [soft] soil and casts it on the stiff soil, this shows that it is for [improving] the ground.\(^\text{10}\)

Raba said: With regard to one who clears his field [of chips of wood], if it is for gathering [fire] wood, it is allowed; if for clearing the ground, it is forbidden. How can we tell? If he picks up the larger pieces and leaves the smaller, this shows that it is to gather [fire] wood; but if he picks up both large and small, this shows that it is to clear the field. Raba said also: With regard to one who opens [sluices] to let water run off into his field, if it be to get the fish,\(^\text{11}\) it is permitted; if it is to water the soil, it is forbidden. How can we tell? If he opens two flood-gates one above\(^\text{12}\) and another below,\(^\text{13}\) this shows that it is for getting the fish; but if only one gate, it is [obviously] for watering the soil. Raba further said: With regard to one who trims his palm,\(^\text{14}\) if it is for the [benefit of his] beasts it is allowed; but if for the [benefit of the] palm it is forbidden. How can we tell? If he trims one side only, this shows that it is for the beasts; if both one side and the other, it is for the [benefit of the] palm, and it is forbidden. And furthermore said Raba: Those [unripe] tauhla\(^\text{15}\) dates one may pick, but to press them is not permitted. R. Papa remarked that as [if these are left] the worms get at them, they are on the same footing as a business deal\(^\text{16}\) [the postponement of which] would entail loss,\(^\text{17}\) and therefore may be [pressed during the festival week]. Raba also said: Any business transaction whatsoever is forbidden. R. Jose b. Abin said: And if there be a risk of loss, it is permitted. Rabina had some deal on hand which would have fetched six thousand zuzim;\(^\text{18}\) he deferred the sale till after the festival and sold at twelve thousand. Rabina had advanced some money to the people living at Akra di-Shanutha.\(^\text{19}\) He came to consult R. Ashi and said: ‘What about going over to them just now [during the festival week]?’ — Said R. Ashi to him: ‘As they had ready cash just then which they might not have later, it is [practically] like a deal [the postponement of which] would entail loss, and [accordingly] is allowed’. It is also similarly taught with reference to heathens: One may go to a heathen fair and buy cattle, male and female slaves, houses, fields and vineyards, and draw up contracts and have them registered at their Registry Offices," because it is [practically] like rescuing something of which they [the heathens] had got possession. Rab permitted R. Hiyya b. Ashi to mend basket-traps during the festival week. What is the reason? — It is ordinary [unskilled] work; but [to mend] mesh-nets is forbidden. What is the reason? It is work of craftsmanship. Rab Judah allowed Ammi the ovenmaker to put up ovens and Rabbah b. Ashbi he allowed to plait sieves. But this cannot be [correct], as Rabbah b. Samuel learned: And all [authorities] are agreed that an oven may not be set up for the first time [during the festival week]! — There is no difficulty [here]: The former ruling obtains during the ‘warm season’ while the latter ruling obtains in the ‘rainy season’.

MISHNAH. A PARAPET MAY BE PUT ROUND A ROOF OR [A RAILING ROUND] A GALLERY ROUGHLY BUT NOT IN FINISHED STYLE. PLASTER MAY BE SMEARED ON THE CREVICES AND FLATTENED DOWN WITH A ROLLER, WITH HAND OR FOOT, BUT NOT WITH RAMMING TOOLS. PIVOTS AND SOCKETS, LINTELS, LATCHES, BOLT-LOCKS AND DOOR-HANDLES THAT HAVE GIVEN WAY MAY BE REPAIRED DURING THE FESTIVAL [WEEK], ONLY THEY MUST NOT BE LEFT PURPOSELY FOR THE FESTIVAL [WEEK]; AND ALL PRESERVES THAT MAY BE EATABLE IN THE FESTIVAL [WEEK] ONE MAY PUT IN PICKLE.

GEMARA. What, for instance, is meant by putting up a parapet or railing ‘roughly’? — R. Joseph explained: [Something like a fence of] palm-leaves and daphne-stakes. A Tanna taught: One may pile up rubble without daubing with clay. PLASTER MAY BE SMEARED ON THE CREVICES AND FLATTENED DOWN WITH A ROLLER, WITH HAND OR FOOT, BUT NOT WITH RAMMING TOOLS. Now, if you say it is allowed to flatten down with a roller, need one [be told] ‘with hand or foot’? — What it means is: One may smear [plaster on] the crevices and flatten down as with a roller, by hand or foot, but not with ramming-tools.

PIVOTS AND SOCKETS, LINTELS, LATCHES, BOLT-LOCKS AND DOOR-HANDLES THAT HAVE GIVEN WAY MAY BE REPAIRED DURING THE FESTIVAL [WEEK]. Some contrasted this with [the following]: ‘Up to his days, the hammer was beating in Jerusalem during the festival [week] . . .’, [that is], ‘up to his days’, but not thereafter! — [Said R. Huna] that is not difficult [to explain]; the reference there is to the smith's [hammer], while here [the tool allowed] is the joiner's [mallet]. R. Hisda demurred to this [explanation] as according to this some will say that a loud din is forbidden, [but] a faint sound is allowed. No, said R. Hisda, it is not difficult [to explain]: One [the tool allowed here] is the bill-hook and the other [which is not allowed] is an adze. R. Papa said that in one statement we have the [older view held] before the restriction [had been introduced] and in the other the [later] view held after the restriction [was introduced]. R. Ashi said that one [Mishnah] expresses R. Judah's view and the other R. Jose's; for R. Isaac b. Abdimi said: ‘Who may be the [anonymous] Tanna that [holds] that work must be done in a different way from the ordinary [in working] during the festival [week] even where its [postponement would entail] loss? Not R. Jose’. Rabina said, Whose ruling do we follow nowadays when we raise the pivot-cups of the doors during the festival week? — R. Jose's. AND ALL PRESERVES THAT MAY BE EATABLE IN THE FESTIVAL [WEEK] ONE MAY PUT IN PICKLE. On Baditha Luba, everybody engaged in fishing and they brought in fish, and Raba allowed to put them in salt. Said Abaye to him: But why? We learned: PRESERVES THAT MAY BE EATABLE IN THE FESTIVAL [WEEK] ONE MAY PUT IN PICKLE? — Said he [Raba] to him, Since they brought them home with the intention of eating them and if they leave them [uneaten] they will be spoilt, it is similar to [a case of] business that might be lost and is therefore permitted. And some say that Raba [actually] allowed them to him, But surely we learned: PRESERVES THAT MAY BE EATABLE go fishing, fetch the fish home and put them in salt. Said Abaye to IN THE FESTIVAL [WEEK] ONE MAY PUT IN PICKLE! — Said he [Raba] to him, These may be eaten [also] by means of ‘pressing’, as was the case with Samuel when they applied pressure [to the fish in salt] sixty times and he ate thereof. When Raba [himself] once happened to be at the house of the Exilarch, they prepared for him [a dish of fish] pressed sixty times and he ate it. Raba was [on a festival week] once at Bar-Shappir [Perissabora?] where they put before him some kind of fish which was a third boiled, a third salted and a third broiled. Raba said, Adda the fisherman told me that a fish is at its best when it is about to putrid. Rab also said this, Adda the fisherman told me: Broil the fish with his brother [salt], plunge it into its father [water], eat it with its son [sauce] and drink after it its father [water]. This too Rab said: Adda the fisherman told me: [After eating] fish, cress and milk occupy your body, don't occupy your couch. And furthermore said Rab, Adda the fisherman told the: [After] fish, cress and milk drink [rather] water, not mead; mead and not wine.

(20) E.g., by using an improvised tool, or be satisfied with a temporary adjustment.
(21) V. infra 11a and 12a.
(22) Or the cavity which receives the bolt. Cf. Ar. Compl. s.v. VI, 161b. There are different readings.
(23) The time of flood in Mesopotamia is between March and May and there was therefore at Passover-time a plentiful supply of fish in the streams.
(24) Cf. supra 10b for Raba's view in regard to merchandise, as modified by R. Jose b. Abin.
(26) Ab initio, or to purchase fish, i.e., to take advantage of the opportunity.
(27) Sixty is a Babylonian unit, e.g., sixty minutes an hour, a minute sixty seconds etc. and is used often as conventionally as here for ‘ever so many times’.
(28) Resh Galutha. The official head of the Jewish community in Babylon, an office held in succession by descendants of the royal house of David, and recognized by the Government. It was, in this distance, either Mar Huna III or Abba son of Mar 'Ukban III, to both of whom Raba was official adviser on religious matters. V. W. Bacher's article, Jew. Encycl. V, 289, s.v. Exilarch.

(29) MS.M. Piruz-Shabur = Perisaboras was however rebuilt and so named later by Sapor II. Cf. Obermeyer p. 226.

(30) I.e., move about and do not lie down to sleep.

(31) A fermented beverage made of dates used in Babylon.

CHAPTER I I

GEMARA. The Mishnah begins with mourning and finally [only] deals with the festival [week]!5 — Said R. Shisha6 son of Idi: This implies that things one is permitted [to do] during the festival [week] are forbidden him during [the week of] his mourning.7 R. Ashi says, [Not so], this wording is cast in the form of, ‘No need to say’ . . .,8 no need to say [that he may put on the beam for the first time] during [the week of] his mourning when [the restriction on work] is but rabbinical, but even during the festival [week], when [work] is restricted on Scriptural grounds, the Rabbis still permit it where loss is involved.

It was taught6 in the sense of R. Shisha son of Idi: These are the things they may do for the mourner during his [week of] mourning: If his olives had been turned they may put on for him [the beam for the first time], or if his wine [cask] is to be bunged, or his flax is to be lifted from the retting, or his wool is to be lifted from the dye-bath; and they may besprinkle his field9 for him when his turn for water-rights arrives. R. Judah says they may even sow for him the ploughed field or the field awaiting a flax-crop. Said they [the Rabbis] to him: [Not so], if the field is not sowed in the early season it could be sowed in the latter season and if It cannot be sowed with flax let it be sowed with some other kind [of crop].10 Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel says, If his olives had been turned and there is no skilled worker save himself, or his cask is [ready] for bunging and there is no skilled worker save himself, or his flax is [ready] for lifting from the retting or his wool for lifting from the dye-bath and there is no skilled worker save himself, such a one may perform [his task] behind closed doors. Furthermore, said Rabban Gamaliel, if he is a skilled worker engaged in the service of the public, or a hairdresser or a bath-attendant in the service of the public, and the Festival is close at hand and there is no skilled worker save him, such a one may do the work. Farmkeepers,12 tenant-farmers13 and contractors of labour may have others doing work for them.14 Ass-drivers, camel-drivers and bargemen may not work;15 but if they were [already] engaged on the job or were [just then] in the hire of others, they [themselves] may do their work.14 A daily worker16 may not work, even in another town.17 One who has others’ work in hand,18 even if it is a contract job,19 he may not do it. [You say,]’ Even if it is a contract job’, [which implies] and all the less so if it is not a contract job. On the contrary, a contract job is like his own [work]!20 Rather, whether it is a contract job or not a contract job he may not do it. If his work21 was placed in the hand of others, they may not do it in his own house, but in another house they may do it.

Marion the son of Rabin and Mar the son of R. Aha the son of Raba had a yoke of oxen22 between them, when a misfortune23 befell Mar the son of R. Aha the son of Raba; he broke up the team [and did not send his animal to work]. Said R. Ashi, A great man like Mar the son of R. Aha acting in such a manner! Granted that he minds not his own loss [of earning], is he not concerned about the loss [caused] to others? Surely it is taught: ‘But if they were [already] engaged [on the job] or were [just then] in the hire of others, these may do their work’?24 — He [Mar] however held the view that [the case of] a prominent man is different.25

(1) For maturing before pressing (or milling).
(2) For the death of a parent, wife, child, brother or sister.
(3) Of a second or third pressing, etc.
(4) Omitted in most texts as rather more applicable to the next case, that of wine.
(5) Without stating how to proceed in the case of mourning.
(6) Var. lec. Shesheth.
(7) Namely, that the permission to do those things now was granted only in connection with the festival week, but not during the week of mourning.
(8) ‘No need to say only this . . . but even that’ may or may not be done.
(10) Sem. has ‘besprinkle for him a white field’ and J.M.K. has ‘irrigate for him a languid field’.
(11) Abstention would thus involve no loss.
(12) Gardeners or metayers who receive from the owner of the field or orchard a certain proportion of the produce for their labour.
(13) Who pay a fixed annual rent in money or in kind.
(14) While in mourning, as their abstention means a loss to the workers besides the mourners themselves.
(15) Either drive the animal or let it out on hire just then.
(16) I.e., on a day to day employment.
(17) Where he is not known. [Since according to the law he may withdraw during any part of the day, v. B.K. 116a.]
(18) I.e., he does the work at home.
(19) I.e., he is paid by piece and not by day.
(20) And therefore should be forbidden.
(21) Here the quotation is resumed.
(22) Gemella. A pair of oxen owned in partnership which they let on hire to farmers.
(23) A bereavement.
(24) In the Baraitha cited above, with a slight variation in the order to suit the case.
(25) I.e., he was not unaware of the ruling in the Baraitha, but felt that a man of his status (and maybe, his partner too) should be stricter in the application of the law. Cf. Bez. II, 6; 22b; Shab. 51a.

Talmud - Mas. Mo'ed Katan 12a

Samuel said: ‘[If non-Jews] take work on contract they may not [work for a Jew]1 within the [limits of the Sabbath] boundary,2 but outside the boundary they may’. Said R. Papa, Even outside the boundary we do not say [they may] save where there is no town in the Vicinity; but where there is a town near by, it is forbidden. Said R. Mesharshaya: And even if there be not a town close by we [still] do not say [they may carry on the work] save on Sabbaths and festivals when there are not frequent [Jewish] passers-by, but during the festival week when people are often passing to and from the place it is forbidden. Mar Zutra son of R. Nahman had a mansion erected for himself by [non Jewish] contractor [builders] outside the boundary.3 R. Safra and R. Huna b. Hinena happened to come thither and did not enter his house; and some report that he [R. Nahman] himself did not enter the building. But did not Samuel say that contractors may not carry on their work within the boundary, but outside the boundary they may? — [The case of] a prominent man is different. Some say [his servant]4 had assisted then with straw. R. Hama allowed the Exilarch's table-stewards to do their work5 during the festival week; he said that as they received no remuneration they only intend to benefit him6 which concerns us nought.

Our Rabbis taught: Contracts may be made during the festival [week for work] to be executed after the festival [week]; but [to do it] during the festival [week] is forbidden. The general principle on this point is that whatever one may do himself he may tell a non-Jew to do; and what he himself may not do, he may not tell a non-Jew to do. Another [Baraitha] taught: Contracts may be made during the festival [week] to be executed after the festival [week], only that one should not measure, weigh or count [quantities] after the manner in which this is done on an ordinary day.

Our Rabbis taught: One may not bring a sire to mate during the festival week. Similarly, a ‘first-born, sire should not be [used to] mate, nor a votive beast that has become disqualified. Another [Baraitha] taught: They may not bring a sire to mate during the festival week. R. Judah says, Where an ass is hankering [for the male] they may bring her the jackass to mate lest she become chilled. All other beasts are [merely] brought into the stalls.

Our Rabbis taught: Sheep may not be turned out to graze in a hurdled enclosure on Sabbaths, festivals, or in the festival week, but if they come [and do it] of their own accord, it is allowed; and they may not be assisted [to it]. Nor may a watchman be assigned [to the shepherds] to move the sheep about. If [the herdsman was] engaged by the week, month, year or septennate, assistance may be given to these and a watch may be assigned to them to move the sheep about. Rabbi says, [This may be done] on the Sabbath by way of favour, on the festival for meals and during the festival [week] for payment. R. Joseph stated that the law is according to Rabbi.

GEMARA. [LIKEWISE IF ONE HAD etc.] And this [wine clause] is necessary. Because, if [the Tanna] had told us the first [clause alone], we might have argued that only in that case did R. Jose say [he may complete the process] as the loss on oil is considerable, whereas in the case of wine, where the loss is not much, one might presume that he concurred with the [stricter] view of R. Judah. And if [the Tanna] had told us the latter [clause alone], we might have argued that only in this case [of wine] did R. Judah say [he may not do more], whereas in that [former case of oil], one might presume that he concurred with the [more lenient] view of R. Jose: [therefore] it was necessary [to enunciate both clauses]. Said R. Isaac b. Abba, Who is the Tanna who requires that work [if done] should be done with a difference during the festival [week] where loss is threatened? It is not R. Jose. Who is the Tanna who requires that work [if done] should be done with a difference during the festival [week] where loss is threatened? It is not R. Jose.

Some [scholars] asked of R. Nahman b. Isaac: Is it permitted to coat a mead-cask [with resin] in the festival week? — Said he to them: Sinai stated that the halachah is according to R. Jose. Supposing that R. Jose said [one may] in the case of wine, [does it follow] that he said [that one may] also in the case of mead? — [Indeed,] for what is the reason [that he allows] in the case of wine? [It is] because the loss on it is considerable; it is also considerable In the case of mead, as Abaye said, Mater told me: ‘Better a coated cask of Six se'ahs than an uncoated cask of eight se'ahs.’

R. Hama b. Guria citing Rab said: The halachoth appertaining to the festival [week] are like the halachoth regulating the dealings with Kuthites. What is the legal import [of this dictum]? — Said R. Daniel son of R. Ketina, It is to say that they are ‘sterile’ [regulations] and communicate nought to each other, as [for instance] Samuel said that they [may] coat a jug with pitch but may not coat a cask; while R. Dimi of Nehardea said that they [may] coat a cask with pitch but they may not coat a jug; one master being solicitous to avert loss, the other master being solicitous to avoid exertion [during the festival week]. Said Abaye, We have it as tradition that the halachoth appertaining to the festival [week] are like the halachoth appertaining to the Sabbath:

(1) People might say that they were given the work on the Sabbath.
(2) On a Sabbath or Festival (Rash). V. however, Asheri.
(3) On a Sabbath or a Festival.
(4) Han. and other texts.
(5) He allowed these non-Jewish servants to mend or improvise extra tables for the guests of the Exilarch. R. Hama is mentioned with Mar zutra in B.B. 7a.
(6) By working for the Exilarch during the festival week.
(7) At any time. Cf Tosef. M.K. II.
(8) ‘Firstborn’ males of ‘clean’ animals are from birth dedicated to the altar and as such claimed by the priest (v. Num. XVIII, 15, 17). These may not be worked, nor shorn for fleece, nor milked (v. Deut. XV, 19-20). Cf. Mak. 22a, (Sonc. ed. p. 155) and Bek. 15a.
(9) Having become blemished, it is unfit for the altar and may be redeemed for ordinary slaughter but not for any other use. V. Bek. 15b.
(10) To mate without assistance.
(11) To manure the field.
(12) i.e., if the non-Jewish herdsmen drive the cattle into the field without any instruction or request from the owner of the field.
(13) i.e., to use means whereby to expedite the discharge of excrements of the flock on the spot to be manured. V. Jast. s.v. רעב, II.
(14) As these non-Jewish herdsmen carry out their own work according to undertaking.
(16) It is Isaac b. Abdimi on 11b.
(17) Since R. Jose holds that he can complete the process in the usual way.
(18) Or pitch, to make it air-tight. V. A.Z. 33a (Sonc. ed. p. 162). Han. takes it as sealing the stopper, by smearing it over with clay or pitch to prevent the wine or mead becoming vapid. The mead made from the syrup of dates was a Babylonian beverage, cf. Pes. 107a and 113b.
(19) A complimentary appellation of R. Joseph as an eminent authority on the body of Baraita-comments (on the Mishnah), in contrast to Rabbah b. Nahmani, his great contemporary and predecessor as Principal of the Academy at Pumbeditha, who was called ‘Uprooter of Mountains’, a title descriptive of his method of acute analysis. V. Ber. 64a and Hor. 14a, (Sonc. ed. p. 105).
(20) Abaye was a posthumous child and his mother died in childbirth. He was brought up by a foster mother whose instructive sayings he frequently quotes as here. V. Kid. 31b.
(21) A se’ah is about two and a third gallons.
(22) Traditional rules of practice.
(23) The Samaritans who, when friendly, were treated as observant Jews, and when hostile and making common cause with the heathens in persecuting Jews and jeering at their religious practices, were treated as heathens. The attitude towards them, therefore, varied from time to time, according to circumstances.
(24) Some texts have נְדֵרִיב ‘tethered’, i.e., inapplicable as ‘rules in practice’ owing to their frequent variability.
(25) Serving no purpose as definite instances from which to argue any definite principle.
(26) There is more loss involved in neglecting a cask than a jug, which is much smaller.
(27) The exertion entailed in coating a cask is greater than with a jug.
(28) Abaye often uses that expression.

Talmud - Mas. Mo'ed Katan 12b

some acts involve no penalty, though forbidden,¹ while other acts are allowed ab initio.

R. Huna had his harvest reaped during the festival [week], whereupon Rabbah put an objection to R. Huna [from the following]: They may mill flour during the festival [week] for the requirements of the festival; what is not required for the festival is forbidden. A thing that is perishable in the festival [week] is permitted to be done; a thing that is not perishable in the festival [week] is forbidden. When does this [rule] obtain? In the case of something that is [already] severed from the soil, but where [the crop is still] attached to the soil, even though only part of it might perish, yet may it be worked; while that which is [still] attached to the soil, even though it might all perish, is forbidden. But if [as you say] that [anonymous] Baraitha be R. Jose's opinion, then he should also be allowed to thresh with cows! For Surely R. Isaac b. Abba said: 'Who is the Tanna that demands some variation In the working during the festival [week] where loss is involved? It is not R. Jose! — [Said R. Huna], He [R. Jose] might reply: 'Yea indeed, so; yet as one does not usually thresh with cows, threshing without them [during the festival week] would be no variation now.

Our Rabbis taught: Flour may be ground during the festival [week] for the needs of the festival; but if not for the requirements of the festival [week], it is forbidden. If, however, one ground and had some flour over, he is allowed to use it. Trees may be cut down during the festival [week] for the needs of the festival; but if it is not for the needs of the festival it is forbidden; if one, however, had cut down and had some over, it is permitted. [The ingredients] for brewing mead may be put in during the festival [week] for the needs of the festival; but if it is not needed for the festival it is forbidden; and if one put in [the ingredients] and had some [brew] left over, it is permitted, provided only that there is no guile. A contradiction was raised [from the following]: 'They may put in [ingredients for brewing] mead during the festival [week] for the needs of the festival; but what is not for the needs of the festival is forbidden, be it a brew of dates or a brew of barley, and even though one have some old [brew] he may act with guile and drink of the new'? — There is a difference among Tannaim as was taught: There should be no resort to guile in such matters; R. Jose son of R. Judah says, One may act with guile sometimes.

R. Judah the Prince [once] went out [on the Sabbath] wearing an amethyst signet and [once] drank water which an Aramean [non-Jewish] cook had heated. R. Ammi hearing of it was annoyed. Said R. Joseph: What is the reason he was annoyed? Was it on account of the amethyst signet? Why, it is taught: Chains, earrings and rings are all articles of dress that may be worn in the courtyard! [Again], if because he drank water which an Aramean had made hot? Why, Samuel b. Isaac, citing Rab, stated that whatever can be eaten raw is not [debarred] as in the category of heathen-cooked food! — [The case of] a prominent person is different.

R. Hananel, citing Rab, said that one may lop off branches from a palm tree during the festival [week] even though he needs only the chips. Abaye denounced this [dictum] vehemently. R. Ashi had a wood in Shelania. He went to cut it down during the festival week. Said R. Shela of Shelania to R. Ashi, What is your ground [for acting thus]? Is it because of what R. Hananel, citing Rab, said, that one may lop branches from a palm during the festival [week] even though he needs only thee chips? But surely Abaye denounced it vehemently! — Said he [R. Ashi] to him: 'I heard it not', as much as to Say, 'I do not concur [with Abaye's view]'. The hatchet then slipped threatening to cut off his leg. He then abandoned his task and came again.
Rab Judah permitted pulling up flax, picking hops and pulling up sesame crops. Said Abaye to R. Joseph: It is quite correct to do this in the case of flax, as if may be used for covering [fruits]; in the case of hops, as they may be used for [brewing] beer; but sesame — to what [immediate] use can it be put? — [It may be picked] on account of the seeds\textsuperscript{27} it contains. R. Jannai had an orchard\textsuperscript{28} that had become ripe for picking during the festival week [and] he picked it. The year [after] all the people kept their orchards waiting for the festival week. R. Jannai [thereupon] renounced his [proprietary rights in the] orchard that year.\textsuperscript{29}

MISHNAH. A MAN MAY BRING HIS FRUITS INDOORS FOR FEAR OF THIEVES AND PULL HIS FLAX OUT OF RETTING TO PREVENT IT SPOILING, PROVIDED HE DOES NOT PURPOSELY HOLD THE WORK OVER TILL THE FESTIVAL [WEEK]; AND ALL THOSE WHO HAVE DELIBERATELY HAD THEIR WORK HELD OVER FOR THE FESTIVAL [WEEK] SHALL HAVE IT DESTROYED.\textsuperscript{30}

GEMARA. BRING INDOORS. A Tanna taught: Provided only that he bring them into his house privily. R. Joseph had some beams of timber which he brought in during daylight. Said Abaye, But it is taught: ‘Provided only that he bring them into his house privily’! — He replied, The [requisite] privacy for these is [attained best] during daylight, since at night more men would be needed and torchbearers too would be required, making much ado.\textsuperscript{31}

AND PULLS HIS FLAX OUT OF RETTING. R. Jeremiah asked of R. Zera: If a man keeps work over for the festival [week] and dies, should his children be penalized after him? Should you cite\textsuperscript{32} [the case of],

(1) Cf. rules of Ulpian: ‘An in imperfect law is one which forbids something to be done, and yet if it be done, neither rescinds it nor imposes a penalty on him who has acted contrary to the Law’. I, I.
(2) That which is perishable may be attended to in the festival week.
(3) I.e., one may do anything and everything that is necessary.
(4) I.e., he must introduce some variation. This Baraitha forbidding to reap except in the case where he has no food to eat, refutes R. Huna who, it is assumed, was not short of ready food.
(5) R. Jose's view which is given in the citation that follows and which is, however, not generally accepted.
(6) Which, however, is distinctly debarred in the anonymous Baraitha, above.
(7) As may be seen from his attitude in the first and second Mishnah (11b and 12a) in contrast to that of R. Judah in regard to both oil and wine. Whereas, In the anonymous Baraitha ascribed to him he distinctly stipulates not to thresh with cows, insisting on a variation.
(8) To explain that there is really no contradiction in the discrepancy.
(9) SBH reads better: ‘Said he, R. Huna, to him (to Raba)’.
(10) Lit., ‘every day’.
(11) On the contrary to use cows would be in this case an undesirable offensive display of his work (Rashi).
(12) During the festival week for the needs of the festival.
(13) After the festival.
(14) Or beer.
(15) To prepare which under the guise of forgetfulness or mistake for the needs of the festival with the intention of having some left over after the festival.
(16) Indicating thereby that he made the brew for the festival week.
(18) Cf. supra R. Huna's reply to Rabbah's question.
(19) R. Judah III, Rabbi's grandson.
(20) ידידים בהימים representing the Greek form . The amethyst was often worn (as its name implies) as a talisman against drunkenness. Or the phrase may possibly be a talisman ring having a setting of a Medusa head, a popular charm against spells and against the power of enemies; and, although this could not have been the case in our instance, it is not unlikely in the instance cited in ‘Er. 69a, where the wearer on sighting R. Judah the Prince, quickly covered it; he is considered there as a semi-heathen or renegade.

(21) Or tavern keeper.

(22) Cf. ‘Er. 69a and R. Tam's comments, Tosaf, s.v., ת"דו.

(27) For sesame oil.

(29) As a self-imposed penalty for having led others to do wrong.

(30) I.e., they must be deprived of any advantage gained.

(31) Lit., ‘a noisy affair’.

(32) Lit., ‘Find a case to explain (my question) by saying...’; or, ‘Extract an answer from the case of...’

Talmud - Mas. Mo'ed Katan 13a

‘One who had [craftily] clipped the ear of his first-born beast’, and whose son is penalized after him,¹ [I can reply that] that is because that is [an offence against] a Scriptural prohibition. Or should you cite [the case of], ‘One who sold his [non-Jewish] slave to a non-Jew’, and whose son was penalized after him, [I can say that] that is because he debarred him daily from the [performance of] religious duties.² Here, what do we say? That the Rabbis’ intention was to penalize the man personally and he is no more, or, maybe that it was only to impose a pecuniary penalty [on his estate] and that is to be had? — R. Zera replied, You learned it [in the Mishnah]: ‘A field that has been cleared of thorns³ during the seventh year may be sowed in the post-sabbatical year; if it had been well improved⁴ or manured⁵ by hurdling cattle⁶ on it, it may not be sowed in the post-sabbatical year’,⁷ and [on this Point] R. Jose b. Hanina said: ‘We have it on tradition that if one had well improved his field and died, his son may Sow it’. This shows that our Rabbis did [intend to] penalize him,⁸ but his son the Rabbis did not [intend to] penalize; here too, then, it is the man himself that they would penalize, but his son the Rabbis would not have penalized. Said Abaye, We have it on tradition that if a man has defiled his fellow’s clean [produce]⁹ and dies they do not penalize his son after him [to pay for the damage caused]. What is the reason? ‘Imperceptible damage’¹⁰ is not in the category of [legal] damage;¹¹ the man himself the Rabbis would have penalized, but his son the Rabbis would not have penalized.

MISHNAH. HOUSES, [STONES],¹² SLAVES AND CATTLE MAY NOT BE BROUGHT SAVE FOR THE NEEDS OF THE FESTIVAL, OR THE NEED OF A VEND OR WHO HAS NOT [ENOUGH] TO EAT. GEMARA. Raba asked of R. Nahman: What about [affording] ‘earning-jobs’¹³ in aid of one who has not [enough] to eat? — He replied: We learned: OR THE NEED OF A VENDOR WHO HAS NOT [ENOUGH] TO EAT. What is this [relative] clause, ‘Who has not enough to eat’ intended to cover?¹⁴ Is it not to include such [casual] ‘earning-jobs’? — Not [necessarily]; it is an explanatory clause.¹⁵ Thereupon Abaye pointed out to him an objection: ‘One should not write credit-bills during the festival [week]; but if [the creditor] does not trust [the person] or he [the clerk] has not [enough] to eat, one may [then] write’.¹⁶ What is the clause, ‘Or he has not [enough] to eat’ intended to cover here? Is it not to include [casual] ‘earning-jobs’?¹⁷ — [Yes], you may infer that.

R. Shesheth raised an objection: ‘And the Sages say, Three craftsmen [may] do work until midday on the day preceding the [Feast of] Passover,¹⁸ [namely], tailors, hairdressers and fullers; tailors, for the same reason that a private person may do [some] sewing in his usual way during the festival [week]; hairdressers and fullers, for the same reason that persons returning home from abroad,¹⁹ or coming out of prison may crop their hair and wash their clothes during the festival [week]’.¹⁹ Now, if you presume that ‘earning-jobs’ are allowed where one has not [enough] to eat, then also all [other] work should have been allowed here, because ‘earning-jobs’ are permitted where one has not [enough] to eat! R. Papa demurred to this [argument]: Then accordingly, building [work should] be allowed, just as a wall which is bulging outward into the public domain, may be pulled down and rebuilt in the usual way, because it is a [public] danger! Rabina also demurred to this [argument]: Accordingly then, a scrivener should be allowed [to work] just as one may ‘write marriage deeds, bills of divorcement and receipts’! Said R. Ashi: [How] can you argue thus from regulations governing the festival [week] to those governing the fourteenth of Nisan? Those governing the festival [week] are based on [the avoidance of] exertion and where loss is threatened the Rabbis have allowed [exertion]; whereas the regulations governing the fourteenth of Nisan are based on the exigencies of the Festival; anything which is required for the Festival our Rabbis have permitted and anything that is not required for the Festival our Rabbis have not permitted.

MISHNAH. ONE MAY NOT REMOVE [EFFECTS] FROM HOUSE TO HOUSE, BUT ONE MAY REMOVE THEM TO HIS COURT. WARES MAY NOT BE BROUGHT HOME FROM THE HOUSE OF THE CRAFTSMAN. IF ONE IS ANXIOUS ABOUT THE THINGS, HE MAY REMOVE THEM TO ANOTHER COURT.

GEMARA. [BUT ONE MAY REMOVE THEM TO HIS COURT]. But you said at first that one's effects may not be removed at all? — Said Abaye, The latter part comes to [tell] us that [to another] house in that [same] court he may [remove his effects].

AND WARES MAY NOT BE BROUGHT HOME FROM THE HOUSE OF THE CRAFTSMAN. Said R. Papa: Raba [once] gave us a test: We learned, ‘WARES MAY NOT BE BROUGHT HOME FROM THE HOUSE OF THE CRAFTSMAN’ and this he contrasted [with the following]: ‘Wares may be conveyed [to] and brought home from the house of the craftsman, even though they be not needed for the festival’! And we replied to him: The latter [Baraitha] refers to the fourteenth of Nisan, while here it refers to the festival week. Or, if you like, I might suggest that both [passages] refer to the festival week, [but that the ruling] here [obtains] where he trusts him [and] the latter [ruling obtains] where he does not trust him.

(1) The firstborn male of ‘clean’ animals is from birth ‘dedicated’ or destined for the altar and its flesh is the priests’ due (Num. XVIII, 15-18). It may not be used for work or be shorn, unless it be born blemished or becomes accidentally permanently maimed, when it is no longer fit for sacrifice (Deut. XV, 19-22; cf. Lev. XXII, 18ff). If the owner cunningly contrives to get it injured either to avoid the trouble and expense of keeping it or to have the flesh, he is penalized to have it buried and is mulcted to half its value for the loss he caused to a priest. V. Shul. ‘Ar. Yor. De‘ah. 309-310.

(2) Non-Jewish male slaves who (with their consent) had been circumcised (cf. Gen. XVII. 12-13) and (male and female) ritually received into the household, enjoyed the privileges of resting on the Sabbaths (Ex. XX, 10) and Feasts (Deut. XII, 12 and 18) and to partake of holy meats (ibid. XVI, 11) even in the priest's household (Lev. XXII, 11) and to perform such Jewish religious observances as they chose. (Cf. Ber. 20a and Suk. 20b). By selling him to a non-Jew he debared the slave from the religious observances he learned to love and enjoy, and for this heartless act the offending master was penalized by the loss of his monetary gain.

(3) Merely picked up, cleared, lifted from the soil by the first superficial ploughing which did not constitute working the soil, forbidden Scripturally.

(4) By regular harrowing or deeper or cross ploughing. V. Tosaf. s.v. מַעֵה בָּהַיָּה and commentary of R. Samson of Sens on M. Sheb. IV, 2.

(5) By bringing cartloads of manure and methodically spreading it over the field.

(6) Methodically, instead of just letting cattle roam about on it.

(7) M. Sheb. IV, 2.

(8) For clearing thorns by harrowing, manuring and hurdling cattle on the field, are not of the processes explicitly forbidden in Scripture (Lev. XXV, 1-5); and though some included even such ‘secondary processes’ under the Scriptural prohibition (cf. supra 3a), the Rabbis did not press the penalty against the dead man’s son.
(9) Which had been carefully guarded by the owner from contamination, if the malefactor spitefully threw (for instance) a dead reptile on the heap of washed corn or among the gathered olives or grapes (cf. Lev. XI, 29-34). Priests’ due of these could not be eaten, but might only be burnt as fuel. Pious lay-people would not buy such produce.

(10) As there is no visible change in the produce that has been thus deteriorated, he can say that all is still as it was.

(11) MS. M. and in parallel passages add here: ‘The penalty (imposed) is rabbinical (in origin)’.

(12) V. D.S. Other texts add also ‘fields’.

(13) i.e., find a poor man some odd, unnecessary job to do, as a chance of earning something wherewith to buy provisions for the Festival.

(14) It is assumed that the words THE NEED OF A VENDOR imply that he has not enough to eat.

(15) Explaining the phrase THE NEED OF A VENDOR. But there is no indication according to this interpretation of the Mishnah — to have any unnecessary job done in the festival week.

(16) During the festival week, plainly allowing it as a means of helping the borrower or the (professional) scribe.

(17) The fourteenth of Nisan, when from early afternoon the people began the preparation of the Paschal Lambs. Cf. pes. V, 1, 5ff.

(18) Lit., ‘from the maritime province’, generally denoting the Diaspora.

(19) V. Pes. 55b and cf. with the Mishnah 55a on the variations in the text.

(20) During the festival week.

(21) On the fourteenth of Nisan, instead of limiting the permission to three crafts only, because there may be other craftsmen who may be in need of money for food. But, as there is no mention of such a contingency there, it shows that even in such a case, unnecessary odd ‘earning-jobs’ may not be given in the festival week.

(22) On the fourteenth of Nisan.

(23) During the festival week.

(24) V. supra 7a.

(25) Lat. librarius.

(26) The terms of the marriage contract agreed to by the parents, the bride and bridegroom.

(27) To end an unhappy marriage all the sooner, it is allowed even in the festival week.

(28) V. infra 18b.

(29) There is a flaw in K. Shesheth's argument.

(30) Either (i) from one house to another in the same court, or (ii) from another's house into his own, as this is gratifying to him. V. Han., Asheri and Ritba.

(31) מָזוּבָה ; the term covers articles of household furniture, utensils, clothing and bedding; but obviously not tools, etc.

(32) Fearing they might be stolen.

(33) To ensure their safety.

(34) Cf. p. 75. n. 9 (ii).

(35) So SBH. p. 62. In our text as it stands, both here and pes. 55b מָזוּבָה might possibly refer to the conveyance of larger, unportable objects, while מֵתָא מַכְבַּת refers to smaller, portable things. The concluding words of this discussion, however, do not take note of this possibility.

(36) V. pes. 55b.

(37) The craftsman, and may leave his things with him safely to avoid all unnecessary ‘exertion’.

(38) Fearing they might be stolen.

Talmud - Mas. Mo'ed Katan 13b

And [in fact] it is taught [thus]: ‘Wares may be brought [home] from the house of the craftsman, for instance, jugs from the jug maker's and tumblers from the glass maker's, but not wool from the dyer's nor articles from the house of the craftsman; but if he has not [enough] to eat one gives him his pay [in advance] and leaves the object with him, if however he does not trust him he leaves It In a house near him and if he is anxious about the things lest they be stolen he brings them home privily’. You have thus explained4 [the discrepancy] about ‘bringing home’, [but] the discrepancy about ‘conveying’ still remains a difficulty; for when it states WARES MAY NOT BE BROUGHT HOME, [it follows] much less may one convey [wares to the house of the craftsman]! Hence [obviously] the explanation given at first5 is the correct one. MISHNAH. FIGS [WHILE DRYING]

...

GEMARA. R. Hiyya b. Abba and R. Assi differ [in their interpretation] both in the name of Hezekiah and R. Johanan. One says that the [former expression], they MAY BE COVERED, MEHAPPIN, means [covering but] lightly, and [the latter] MAY EVEN BE PILED UP, ME'ABBIN, means [spreading the straw] closely; the other says that MAY BE COVERED, means [spreading the straw] lightly or densely, while [the latter expression], MAY EVEN BE PILED UP, means making a sort of pile. It is also taught thus: ‘May be piled up [me'abbin] — making a sort of pile: these are the words of R. Judah’.

VENDORS OF FRUITS, CLOTHING AND [OTHER] WARES MAY SELL PRIVILY. The question was asked: Does THEY HAVE IMPOSED A RESTRICTION ON THEMSELVES, mean that they do not work at all, or perhaps that they do it privily? Come and hear: ‘Vendors of fruits, clothing and [other] wares sell privily for the requirements of the festival [week]; R. Jose says, The Tiberian traders have imposed a restriction on themselves not to sell at all. Deerstalkers, fowlers and fishermen catch privily for the requirements of the festival [week]; it. Jose says, The catchers of Acra have imposed a restriction on themselves not to catch at all. Groats-pounders make hilka [coarse meal], tragus [pulse-porridge] and tisana [pearl-barley] privily for the requirements of the festival [week]; R. Jose says, The grist-pounders of Sepphoris have imposed a restriction on themselves not to pound at all’. Abaye explained: Hilka means [groats of] one [grain broken] in two; tragus, one into three; tisana, one into four. When R. Dimi came [from Palestine] he said: [All these are] kuntha [spelt].

An objection was raised: Hilka, tragus and tisana are [considered as] ‘tainted’ everywhere. Now this harmonizes well with the explanation that it is one [grain broken] in two, three or four; they are [considered] ‘tainted’ everywhere, because they have been rendered ‘fit’ [liable to take the taint of impurity]; but according to the explanation that they are all ‘spelt’, why then are they taken as ‘tainted’ everywhere, for these have not [necessarily] been rendered ‘fit’ [by damping]? [Sometimes they are], for instance, where the groats are [made of] peeled [spelt]; because, unless the grain had been soaked in water it would not peel. And why is it called hilka? Because it has had its ‘tunic’ [husk] taken off. An objection was raised: ‘One who vowed [to abstain] from dagan is debarred even from [partaking of] the Egyptian bean when dry, but is allowed to eat it when fresh [green]; and he is permitted rice, hilka, tragus and tisana. Now, this harmonizes well with the explanation that these [varieties] are so called because one [grain] is broken into two, three or four; it is Proper [to allow him to eat] because these [being now meal] no longer belong to the [category] of dagan [grain]; but according to him who says that hilka is [what we call] ‘spelt’, it is [still] properly [designated as] dagan! — This is a difficulty.

R. Huna permitted vendors of Pot-herbs to go and sell in the festival week in the market Place in the ordinary way. R. Kahana thereupon put an objection to him [from the following]: ‘A shop which opens into a colonnade may be opened and closed in the ordinary way; if it opens into the public domain, [the shopkeeper] may open one door and close one; and on the day preceding the last day of the Feast [of Tabernacles] he may bring out fruit and decorate the markets all round the town in honour of the last day of the Feast’. [That is to say], ‘In honour of the last day of the Feast, he may open; but if not in honour of the last day of the Feast, he may not [open]! That is not difficult [to explain]: This latter prohibition refers to the sale of fruits, whereas in the former case it is the sale of seasoning [pot-herbs that is allowed].

, OR ONE UNDER A BAN TO WHOM THE SAGES HAVE [JUST] GRANTED ABSOLUTION. AND LIKewise ONE WHO APPLIED TO A SAGE AND WAS ABSOLVED [BY HIM]. HAND-TOWELS, BARBERS’ TOWELS AND BATH-TOWELS [MAY BE WASHED]. MEn OR WOMEn [AFFECtED] WITH ‘THE FLux’1 OR MENSTRUANTS,2 OR WOMEN AFTER CHILdBIRTH3 AND ALL THOSE EMERGING FROM [A STATE OF RITuAL.] IMPuRITY4 TO [BEGIN] THEIR PuRIFICATION ARE ALLOWED [TO WASH THEIR GARMENTS]; BUT ALL OTHER MEN ARE FORBIDDEN.

GEMARA. What is the reason that all other men are forbidden? — As we learned: ‘Members of the ward on duty5 and [communal] Deputies at their Posts6 are forbidden [during their turn] to crop [their hair] or wash [their garments]. But on Thursday they are allowed, in honour of the Sabbath’. Now Rabbah b. Bar-Hana reporting R. Eleazar [as commenting on this] said: ‘What is the reason [they may on Thursday]? So that they should not enter [on the duty of] their Ward in a state of untidiness’. Here also the reason is that they do not enter upon the festival in a state of untidiness.

R. Zera inquired: Suppose one had lost something on the day before the festival? [Do we say], since he was prevented [from attending to himself before] he may,7 or perhaps, as the reason is not obvious, he may not? — Said Abaye: [Obviously not], as people would then say: ‘[So] all Syrian [fancy] loaves are forbidden, but the Syrian [fancy] loaves of Boethus are allowed’;8 But admitting your argument [against], yet what about it. Assi’s statement? who citing R. Johanan said: ‘Anybody who has but one tunic9 is allowed to wash it during the festival week’. Would not people say in that case, too: ‘[So] all Syrian [fancy] loaves are forbidden, but the Syrian [fancy] loaves of Boethus are allowed’? — Surely it has been stated in this connection: ‘Said Mar son of R. Ashi, His girdle10 proves his plight’.11 R. Ashi’s comments on our Mishnah were [in this form]: R. Zera enquired, What if a craftsman12 had lost something on the day before the festival? Do we say that since he is a craftsman, the reason [why he is allowed] is obvious, or since the reason is not so obvious as in those other cases [mentioned in the Mishnah], he may not [attend to himself in the festival week]? Let this question stand [adjourned].13

[ONE ARRIVING HOME] FROM ABROAD [MAY CROP]. The anonymous view of our Mishnah is not that of R. Judah. For it is taught: R. Judah says, One arriving [home] from abroad may not crop himself [during the festival week] because he had set out [on his voyage] without the approval [of the Rabbis].14 Said Raba: ‘If he merely went on a tour all [authorities] are agreed that he is forbidden;15 if to seek his bread, all are agreed that he is allowed.15 Difference of opinion arises only in the case of a voyage for business profits, one master looking upon it as equivalent to [mere] travelling, and the other master looking upon it as equivalent to seeking his bread’.

An objection was raised: ‘Said Rabbi: R. Judah’s opinion seems apposite where he had set out without approval and the Sages’ opinion seems apposite where he had set out with approval’. Now, what is ‘without approval’? If I say for going on a tour, did you not say that all are agreed that he is forbidden?\(^{15}\) Again [should it mean] for seeking [his] bread; surely did you not say that [if with this object] all are agreed that he is allowed?\(^{16}\) It is obvious therefore that it means for profit-seeking.\(^{17}\) Now consider the latter clause: ‘And the Sages’ opinion seems apposite where he had set out with approval’; what is meant by ‘with approval’? If I say [approval to set out] for earning his bread, have you not said that all are agreed that he is allowed?\(^{16}\) Again, should it [rather] mean for profit [seeking]; but surely then, did you not say that R. Judah's [adverse] opinion seems apposite in this case [that he is forbidden]?\(^{18}\) — This is what he [Rabbi] meant to say: The Rabbis accept R. Judah's opinion where he had started out ‘without approval’, and what means it? For going on a tour; because, even the Sages disagree with him only on [the question of a voyage] for gaining profit, whereas in regard to going on a tour they concur with him.\(^{19}\) And again, R. Judah accepts the Rabbis’ opinion [that he may attend to himself]\(^{16}\) where he had set out ‘with approval’, and what means it? For seeking his bread; because even R. Judah disagrees with them only on [the question of a voyage] for gaining profit, whereas in regard to going out for seeking his bread he concurs with them.\(^{20}\)

Samuel said: ‘If an infant is born during the festival [week] it is allowed to cut his hair\(^{21}\) during the festival [week] because there is no imprisonment\(^{22}\) more real than this’. [That is, only ‘if . . . born] during the festival [week]’ it may be done, but [if born] before then, it is [presumably] not allowed.\(^{23}\)

R. Phineas raised all objection: ‘Every one of those mentioned [by the Sages] as being permitted to crop his hair during the festival [week] may [likewise] crop his hair during the [thirty]\(^{24}\) days of his mourning’;\(^{25}\) [which means conversely] that every one of those who is forbidden to crop his hair during the festival [week] is [likewise] forbidden to crop his hair during the [thirty]\(^{26}\) days of his mourning.

(7) Trim himself and wash his garments during the festival week.
(8) A proverbial expression, protesting against discrimination. The origin of the proverb is found in Pes. 37a where it is objected to fancy-shaped loaves for Passover use, as the shaping of the piece of dough may delay the baking to the point of leavening. R. Boethus b. Zonin suggested that the use of moulds might easily obviate this fear, which evoked the (proverbial) retort.

(10) Or loin cloth.
(11) While washing his shirt, he is either girded with a loin cloth or wears his outer garment fastened by the belt to avoid exposure of his body.
(12) A barber or bath attendant who is permitted to work on the fourteenth of Nisan, who mislaid or lost one of his tools, and his customers see him worried and hindered in his work.
(13) For a future adequate solution.
(14) Quoted in J.M.K. I, 1: ‘For R. Judah said it is forbidden to set out on a voyage on the great sea’. The reason for his disapproval is probably on account of the risk of not arriving home in time for the festival. Cf. Shab. 19a and J. Shab. 1,
Now if you say that there is a difference here in the case of the infant, you are this implying that [the observance of] mourning obtains in the case of a minor, whereas it is taught: ‘A minor's garment is rent out of grief of soul’? R. Ashi said [that the negative inference is faulty, for] does it [actually] state ‘but those who are forbidden’? Perhaps [it means to state] that some there are who are forbidden and some others who are permitted.

Amemar, or some say. R. Shisha son of R. Idi, taught thus: ‘Samuel said: "An infant may be cropped in the festival [week]; it makes no difference whether he was born during the festival [week] or was born before"’. Said R. Phineas: We learned this also [indirectly] from [the following]: ‘Every one of those mentioned [by the Sages] as being permitted to crop during the festival [week] may likewise crop his hair during the [thirty] days of his mourning’; which means conversely, but every one of those who is forbidden to crop during the festival [week] is likewise forbidden to crop during the [thirty] days of his mourning. Now if you say that a [newly-born] infant is forbidden [to be cropped] you find yourself [implying] that [the observance of] mourning obtains in the case of a minor; whereas it is taught [distinctly]: ‘The garment of a minor is rent [merely] out of grief of soul’? — Said R. Ashi: [That negative inference is faulty for] does it [actually] state, ‘But he who is forbidden [in the festival week] is also forbidden during his [thirty] days of mourning? Probably it means that some there are who are forbidden and some others who are permitted.

A mourner does not deport himself as one in mourning during a festival, as it is said: And thou shalt rejoice in the feast. [For], if his mourning began before [the festival], a positive precept incumbent on the community overrides one incumbent on him as an individual, and if his mourning began just then [during the festival], an individual's function cannot come and put off that of the public.

Now what about one separated [under a ban]? Should he deport himself as one in ‘separation’ during a festival? — Said R. Joseph: Come and hear: ‘They [the Courts] deal with capital offenses, with [offenses involving judicial] floggings and monetary suits, [during the festival week]’. [This implies that] if one heeds not the [court's] decision, we put him under a ban. Now if you presume that he should not deport himself during the festival like one under ‘separation’, [then] seeing that where one is already fallen under a ban, the festival comes and suspends [the ban], shall we pronounce him banned in the first instance [during the festival]? Abaye replied: Perhaps [the object of the adjudication is] to examine the charge against him. For, should you not say thus, then ‘capital offenses’ therein mentioned would likewise mean indeed that they would have him slain; but surely thereby they [the judges] themselves would be debarred from ‘rejoicing in the feast’ [as is Scripturally ordained], as it is taught:¹⁴ Says R. Akiba: Whence may it be shown that a Sanhedrin [Court] that put a [sinner] soul to death do not taste [food] all that day? From the instructive text ‘Ye shall not eat on the blood’.¹⁵ Therefore [I say] it must be only to examine the charge against him, and likewise here it is only to examine the charge against him. Said R. Joseph to him: If [you explain it] so, the result is that you delay the execution of his sentence [which is forbidden]?¹⁶ But [I take it], they come early in the morning and examine the charges against him; then they go home and eat and drink all that day¹⁷ and, coming back with the setting sun, they do give a final decision and [also] have him put to death.¹⁸

Said Abaye: Come and hear.¹⁹ OR ONE UNDER A BAN TO WHOM THE SAGES HAVE GRANTED ABSOLUTION.²⁰ Said Raba: Does it state: ‘Whom the Sages granted absolution’? It says: OR ONE UNDER A BAN TO WHOM THE SAGES HAVE [JUST] GRANTED ABSOLUTION, [that is] where he [the offender] went and appeased the plaintiff and then came before our Rabbis²¹ and they then set him free [from restraints].²²

What about a leprous person; does he deport himself as a leper during the festival?²³ — Said Abaye: ‘Come and hear: AND [ALSO] A NAZIR OR LEPER EMERGING FROM HIS [STATE OF] IMPURITY TO [BEGIN] HIS PURIFICATION [may crop his hair and wash his garments],²⁴ which implies that during the days of his impurity he does deport himself [as a leper]!¹ — [No]; the Tanna considered that this goes without saying [and is to be understood thus]: It goes without saying that he does not deport himself [as a leper] during the festival.²⁵ But when [he is emerging] into his state of cleanliness we might [be inclined to] restrict him, in case he might defer²⁶ making his [preliminary] offerings [of purification].²⁷ Therefore he informs us [that he may, nevertheless].²⁸ Said Raba: Come and hear:²⁹ ‘[It is taught]: And the leper. [in whom the plague is, his clothes shall be rent and the hair of his head shall be loose . . .],³⁰ that is meant to include a High Priest [in this rule]’. Now [we learned] a High Priest all through the year is on a par with any other person on a festival, as we learned: The High Priest may make sacrifice [on the altar] even when he be onen,³¹ without however eating thereof! From this [latter restriction of even a High Priest] you can infer [about the former] that he should deport himself as a leper during the festival. — Infer that.

A mourner is forbidden to cut his hair, because since the Divine Law ordained the sons of Aaron:³² Let not the hair of your heads go loose,³³ we infer that for everybody else [cutting the hair] is forbidden

. What about those ‘separated’ [under a ban], and [segregated] lepers in regard to cutting [their hair] during the festival week? — Come and hear. ‘Those "separated" [under a ban] and [segregated] lepers are forbidden to cut [their hair] and wash [their garments]. If one "separated" [under a ban] died,1 the Beth din stone his coffin; R. Judah says, not that they set up a heap of stones over him like the heap of Achan,2 but the Beth din send [commissioners]3 and have a large stone4 placed on his coffin, which teaches you that if anyone is placed under a ban and dies in his "separation", the Beth din stone his coffin’.5

A mourner is obliged to muffle his head. Since the All Merciful enjoined Ezekiel: And cover not thine upper lip,6 we infer that everybody else is obliged [to do so].7 What about one ‘separated’ [under a ban] in regard to muffling the head? — Said R. Joseph, Come and hear: ‘And they8 muffle themselves and sit as men "separated" [under a ban] and like mourners until Heaven grants them mercy’. Said Abaye: Perhaps it is different with one who is ‘separated’ [under a ban] by displeasure of Heaven9 [as it were]; for that is [more] serious [than being in disfavour with man]!

What about a leper, in regard to muffling the head? — Come and hear: And he shall cover his upper lip;10 we infer from this that he is obliged to muffle his head. — Infer that.
A mourner is forbidden to put on tefillin. Since the All Merciful ordained Ezekiel: Bind thy headtire upon thee, this implies that everybody else is forbidden [to do so in deep mourning]. What about one ‘separated’ [under a ban], in regard to tefillin? — It stands [adjourned].

What about a leper, in regard to [putting on] tefillin? — Come and hear: [Holy Writ prescribes], ‘And the leper’; this [amplification] is to include [even] a High Priest [in this law]. ‘his clothes shall be perumim’, that is, they shall be torn. ‘And [the hair of] his head shall be parua’. ‘Parua’ means only letting the hair grow long; these are the words of R. Eliezer. R. Akiba explains [otherwise]: ‘Shall be’ is stated in connection with the leper's head; and ‘shall be’ is stated in connection with the leper's garment. [Therefore] just as ‘shall be’ stated in connection with the garment refers to something external to the body [clothes], so also ‘shall be’ stated in connection with the head refers to something external to the body. What then [is to be discarded]? Is it not the reference to tefillin? — Said R. Papa, [Not necessarily these], it may refer to [not putting on] a cap or sudarium.

A mourner is forbidden to give the usual greeting [of wellbeing], because the All Merciful said to Ezekiel: Sigh in silence. What about one ‘separated’ [under a ban] in regard to [abstaining from] the usual greeting? — R. Joseph said, Come and hear: And in regard to greeting one another ‘with peace’, as man to man, they [that are fasting] behave like persons who are ‘separated’ [under a ban] by the Omnipresent. Said Abaye to him, Perhaps [the case of] the ‘separated’ [as under a ban] by displeasure of Heaven is different because it is [more] serious.

What about a leper in regard to [abstaining from] greeting one ‘with peace’? — Come and hear: [It is written]: And he shall cover his upper lip, that is, his lips shall be compressed together, that he should behave like one ‘separated’ [under a ban] and like a mourner, and he is forbidden to greet one ‘with peace’. Then why not solve now [the above question] about one ‘separated’ [under a ban]? — Said R. Ahab b. Phineas in the name of R. Joseph: Does it [actually] state that he [the leper] is forbidden to greet one ‘with peace’ like one ‘separated’? It only states that he behaves like one ‘separated’ or like a mourner with reference to other things and at the same time that he is also forbidden to greet one ‘with peace’.

A mourner is forbidden [to engage] in the words of the Torah, because the All Merciful said to Ezekiel: ‘Sigh in silence’. What about one ‘separated’ [under a ban engaging in] the words of the Torah? — Said R. Joseph, Come and hear: One ‘separated’ [under a ban] may teach [others] and others may teach him; he may be hired [for work] and others may be hired by him. One under anathema neither teaches others, nor do others recite it to him; he is not hired [for work] nor are others [to be] hired by him; but he recites to himself in order that he does not interrupt his study; and he makes a small stall for himself [as a means] for ‘his livelihood’. Whereat Rab remarked, [As for instance] selling water at the pass of Arboth. Infer from that. What about a leper [engaging] in the words of the Torah? — Come and hear: [It is written], And make them known unto thy children and thy children's children; the day that thou stoodest before the Lord thy God in Horeb. [that they may learn to fear Me all the days . . . and that they may teach their children], that is, just as [they heard God's word] then [at Sinai] with awe, fear, trepidation and perspiration; [so be it now studied with awe, fear, trepidation and perspiration]. Hence sad they [the Sages], that men who are [affected] with flux, lepers, or such as [in error] consorted with their wife while in separation are allowed to read [Scripture] out of the Torah [Pentateuch], the Prophets or the Hagiographa or to recite [orally] Mishnah, Midrash, Gemara, Halachah or Aggadah; while those who have night pollutions are forbidden. You may infer it from that.

A mourner is forbidden to wash his clothes, for it is written, And Joab sent to Tekoa and fetched thence a wise woman and said unto her: ‘I pray thee, feign thyself to be a mourner and put mourner apparel, I Pray thee and anoint not thyself with oil, but be as a woman that had a long time mourned for the dead’. What about the ‘separated’ [under a ban] and the lepers washing their clothes? — Come and hear: Persons ‘separated’ [under a ban] and lepers are forbidden to cut [their hair] or wash [their clothes]. You may infer it from here.

A mourner is in duty bound to rend [his garments], because the All Merciful enjoined the sons of Aaron, ‘Neither rend [your clothes]’. From here you infer that everyone else is bound to do it. What about one ‘separated’ [under a ban] rending his garments? It stands [adjourned].

What about the leper rending his garments? — Come and hear: ‘His clothes shall be perumim’ which means they shall be rent. [Yes], infer it.

A mourner is bound to overturn his couch, because Bar Kappara taught:

Talmud - Mas. Mo'ed Katan 15b

‘[God says], "I have set the likeness of mine image on them and through their sins have I upset it; let your couches be overturned on account thereof"’. What about one ‘separated’ [under a ban] and a leper overturning couches? Let this stand [adjourned].

A mourner is forbidden to engage in work, for it is written: And I shall turn your feasts into mourning;² [hence we say] that just as it is forbidden to engage in work during a Feast [festival], so is it forbidden to engage in work during mourning. What about one ‘separated’ [under a ban] in regard to doing work? — Said R. Joseph: ‘Come and hear: "When the Sages said that it is forbidden them³ to engage in work, [about themselves, bathe, don shoes. . .], they laid this down only for the daytime, but at night it is all permitted and [the same restrictions] you find also in the case of one ‘separated’ and a mourner."⁴ Does not this refer to all those [restrictions]?’ — No, it is only to the other things, [but not to work].

Come and hear: ‘One "separated" [under a ban] teaches [others] and others teach him; he is hired [for work] and others are hired by him’.⁵ You may infer from that. What about a leper engaging in work? — Let this stand [adjourned]. A mourner is forbidden to wash himself, as it is written, And anoint not thyself with oil,⁶ and bathing is implied in anointing.⁷ What about one ‘separated’ [under a ban] bathing? — Said R. Joseph, Come and hear: ‘When the Sages said that it is forbidden then, to wash [on the fast day] they meant only in regard to washing the whole body, but one is permitted to wash one's face, hands or feet, and [the same restrictions] you find also in the case of one "separated" [under a ban] and a mourner’.⁸ Now, does not this refer to all the restrictions? — No, [only] to the others [but not to bathing]. What about the leper washing himself? — Let this stand [adjourned].
A mourner is forbidden to put on sandals [shoes], as the All Merciful ordained Ezekiel, And put thy shoes upon thy feet,⁹ which implies that for everyone else it is forbidden [to do so]. What about one ‘separated’ [under a ban] putting on sandals? — Said R. Joseph, Come and hear: ‘When the Sages said that it is forbidden then, [on the fast day] to put on sandals, they meant only in town, but on the road it is permitted. When, for instance? When one sets out on the road he puts on [shoes], on entering town, he takes them off: and [the same] you find also in the case of one "separated" [under a ban]’.⁸ Now, does not this refer to all those [restrictions]?¹⁰ — No, [only] to the other.¹¹ What about the leper putting on sandals? — Let this stand [adjourned].

A mourner is forbidden the use of the [conjugal] bed, as it is written: And David comforted Bath-Sheba his wife and went in unto her,¹² which implies that before then¹³ it was forbidden [him]. What about one ‘separated’ [under a ban] in regard to the use of the [conjugal] bed? — Said R. Joseph, Come and hear: All those years that Israel spent in the wilderness they were ‘separated’ [under a ban]¹⁴ yet they used their [conjugal] beds.¹⁵ Said Abaye: But, maybe, the case of those who are ‘separated’ by [displeasure] of Heaven is different because it is less serious? [You say], ‘less serious’! But you argued [before]¹⁶ that it was more serious? — He is uncertain on the point; [if you] go [and argue] this way, he rebuts it, and if you go [and argue] the other way, he [again] rebuts it. What about a leper, in regard to the use of the [conjugal] bed? — Come and hear, for it is taught: ‘[It is written], But [he] shall dwell outside his tent seven days’,¹⁷ that is, he shall be like one ‘separated’ [under a ban] and like a mourner; and he is forbidden the use of the [conjugal] bed, as ‘outside’ his tent means only [apart from] his wife, as it is said: Go say to them: Return ye to your tents.¹⁸ You may infer it from that. Then could not one now by this [conclusion] solve the above question [on this point] about one ‘separated’ [under a ban]? — Said R. Huna¹⁹ son of Phineas in R. Joseph's name: Does it state [categorically] that he [the leper] is forbidden [like one ‘separated’]? It only states that he is like one ‘separated’ [under a ban] and like a mourner in respect of other things and that he be [also] forbidden the use of the [conjugal] bed.²⁰

A mourner does not send his sacrifices [to the Temple], for it is taught: Says R. Simeon, [It is written, And thou shalt sacrifice] peace-offerings²¹ and eat there,²² and thou shalt rejoice before the Lord thy God,²³ that is, one offers ‘peace-offerings’ [only] at times when one is untroubled,²⁴ but not at a time when one is onen,²⁵ What about one ‘separated’ [under a ban], should he [then] send his offerings? — Said R. Joseph, Come and hear: All those years that Israel spent in the wilderness they were ‘separated’ [under a ban]²⁶ and [yet] they sent their offerings [to the Tabernacle]. Said Abaye to him: But perhaps one ‘separated’ by [the displeasure of] Heaven is different, because it is not so serious? [You say], ‘Not so serious’! But you argued [before] that it was more serious! — [Abaye being uncertain] rebutted it [either way]. What about a leper, may he send his [sacrificial] offerings? — Come and hear: And after he [a defied priest] is cleansed²⁷ — [that is, cleansed]²⁸ after coming away from his dead near of kin — they shall reckon unto him seven days²⁹ — those are the seven days which he has to count³⁰ — and in the day that he goeth into the Sanctuary,³¹ into the inner court,³² to minister in the Sanctuary, he shall offer his sin-offering³³

VII, 29-34), the worshippers with their family group ate the remainder of the sacrificial meat in a state of ritual purity as joyous celebrants (Deut. XII, 6-7; 17-19; XXVII, 7).

(28) V. verse 25; about the ritual sprinkling after being defiled by the dead (before one may enter the sanctuary), Num. XIX, 11-13; 19-20.
(29) The (above) ritual sprinkling from defilement by contact with the dead was done on the third and seventh days after having separated from the corpse; but the use of the phrase ‘they shall reckon seven days’ instead of ‘they shall sprinkle upon him’ is taken to be reminiscent of the seven days for a leper on his recovery and his preliminary ritual cleansing, before leaving his place of Isolation (Lev. I V, 1-8), which were followed by another seven days of ritual purification before he may proceed on the eighth day with his final purification and atonement. (Ibid. 8-11). Accordingly, the case of a leprous priest is read into the text of Ezekiel. For obviously it would be useless to cleanse a leprous priest (or layman) from his defilement by the dead while still being unclean as a leper, and as such unfit to enter the camp or sanctuary.

Talmud - Mas. Mo’ed Katan 16a

— which is his [own meal-oblation consisting of] one tenth part of an ephah [of fine flour]: These are the words of R. Judah. R. Simeon says, [the wording:] And in the day that he goeth into the sanctuary [into the inner court to minister in the sanctuary], he shall offer his sinoffering [implies that only] when he is fit to go into the sanctuary he is fit to offer up [his own oblation]: and when he is not fit to go into the sanctuary, he is not fit to offer up [his own oblation]. Raba said: Whence do we know the regulation that we send a messenger of the Court? — From what is written: And Moses sent to call Dathan and Abiram the sons of Eliab. And whence do we know that we summon him to attend [in person]? — From what is written, And Moses said to Korah, Be thou and all thy congregation before the Lord, thou and Aaron [tomorrow]. [Whence, to appear] ‘before a great personage’? — From what is written, Before the lord. [To name both parties], ‘thou and So-and-so’? — From what is written, Thou and they [that are with thee] and Aaron. That we fix a time? — As it is written, To-morrow. Time and again? — As it is written: They called there, Pharaoh the king of Egypt [the author of] ‘commotion’; he hath let the appointed time pass by. [As I live, saith the King, the Lord of Hosts, surely like Tabor among the mountains and like Carmel by the sea, so shall he come]. And whence do we know that if one behaves insolently towards the Court's messenger and the latter comes and reports it, this is not deemed slander [on his part]? — As it is written: [And Moses sent to call Dathan and Abiram the sons of Eliab]; And they said: [We will not come up]. Whence do we derive that we [may] pronounce a shammetha [imprecation]? — From the text: Curse ye Meroz. Whence do we derive that it must be according to the considered opinion of some prominent person? — From the text: [Curse ye Meroz] said the angel of the Lord [to Barak]. And whence do we derive that we pronounce the herem? — From the [same] text: Curse ye a cursing. Whence do we derive that [it falls on one who] eats and drinks with the offender or stands within four cubits of him? — From the same text: [Curse ye a cursing] the inhabitants thereof. Whence do we derive that we publish the details of his offence? — From the [same] text: Because they [the denizens of Meroz] came not to the help of the Lord. And, said ‘Ulla, Barak pronounced the shammetha against Meroz with [the blast of] four hundred horns. Some say that Meroz was [the name of] a great personage; others say that it was [the name of] a star, as it is written [there]: They fought from Heaven, the stars in their courses fought against Sisera. Whence do we derive that we pronounce the herem? — From the text: And whosoever come not within three days, according to the counsel of the princes and the elders, all his substance should be forfeited and himself separated from the congregation of the captivity. Whence do we derive that we may quarrel [with an offender], curse him, smite him, pluck his hair and put on him an oath? — From the text: And I contended with them, and cursed them, and smote certain of them and plucked off their hair and made them swear by God. Whence do we derive that we may fetter, arrest and prosecute them? — From the text: [Let judgment be executed upon him with all diligence], whether it be unto death, or to uprooting, or to confiscation of goods or to imprisonment. What is meant by ‘uprooting'? Said [R.] Adda Mari, reporting Nehemiah b. Baruch, who said in the name of R. Hiyya b. Abin, who had it from Rab Judah, it mean the hardafah. What is denoted by hardafah? — Said Rab Judah son of R. Samuel b. Shelath in the name of Rab: It means, They declare him 'separated’ forthwith; then [if he still persists] they repeat [the same declaration] after thirty days, and finally they pronounce the herem on him after sixty days. Said R. Huna b. Hinena, This is what R. Hisda said: They [first] warn him on Monday, [then] on the Thursday [following] and [again on the] Monday. This rule applies if he disregards a monetary judgment; but in a case of sheer contumacy the ban is imposed forthwith. When a certain butcher had been insolent to R. Tobai b. Mattena, Abaye and Raba were appointed to investigate and they pronounced the shammetha on him. In the end, the fellow went and appeased his litigant. Said Abaye, What is one to do? Should we absolve him now? The shammetha had not lasted [its] thirty days. Shall we not absolve him? The Rabbis want to go in to him! Said lie to R. Idi b. Abin: ‘Have you [perchance] heard aught bearing on this?’ He replied: ‘Thus said R. Tahlifa b. Abimi as reporting Samuel: “A toot binds and a toot releases!”’ [Said Abaye] to him, Yea, but this obtains only in the case of disregarding a monetary decision, but in a case of contumacy [it holds] until it has rested on him for thirty days! Anyhow, that shows that Abaye was of opinion that if three people had pronounced the shammetha on a man three others cannot come and release him. For the question was raised: If three people had pronounced the shammetha on a man, can three others come and remit it for him? — Come and hear: ‘One who has been "separated" [under a ban] by the master is [deemed as] "separated" from the disciple; but one who has been "separated" by the disciple is not [considered as] "separated" from the master. One who is "separated" by his own town is also "separated" from another town; but one who is "separated" by another town is not [considered] "separated" from his own town. One who is "separated" by the Nasi [Prince] is "separated" in all Israel; but one who is "separated" by all Israel is not [thereby] "separated" from the "Prince". Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel says that if one of the disciples had "separated" someone and died, his part is not nullified’. From this you derive three points: — [a] That if a disciple ‘separated’ someone in [defence of] his personal dignity, the ‘separation’ lies, and you infer [b] that each person revokes his own part, and you infer [c] that if a body of three have pronounced a shammetha on a person, three others may not come and release him. Amemar said: ‘The rule in practice is, that if a body of three have laid a shammetha on a person, a body of three others [can] come and release him’. Said R. Ashi to Amemar, But it is taught: ‘Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel says that if one of the disciples "separated" someone and died, his part is not nullified!’ Does not this meal, that it cannot be nullified at all? — No, [it means] not until a body of three others come and release him.

Our Rabbis taught: No ‘separation’ ban holds less than thirty days and no ‘reproof’ holds less than seven days; and although there is no direct proof on that point, there is an [indirect] ‘indication’ of it: If her father had but spit in her face, should she not hide in shame seven days? [Let her be shut up without the camp seven days and after that she shall be brought in again].

R. Hisda remarked, ‘Our "separation" [in Babylon] corresponds to their "reproof" [in Palestine]’. But is their ‘reproof’ of only seven days’ duration, not more? Is it not a fact that R. Simeon, Rabbi's son, and Bar Kappara were once sitting rehearsing the lesson together when a difficulty arose about a certain passage and R. Simeon said to Bar Kappara, ‘This [matter] needs Rabbi [to explain it]’, and Bar Kappara replied: ‘And what forsooth can Rabbi [have to] say on this?’ He went and repeated it to his father, [at which] the latter was vexed, and [when] Bar Kappara next presented himself before Rabbi, he said: ‘Bar Kappara, I have never known you!’ He realized that he had taken the matter to heart and submitted himself to the [disability of a] ‘reproof’ for thirty days. Again, on one occasion, Rabbi issued an order that they should not teach disciples in the open public market place. (What was his exposition? — How beautiful are thy steps in sandals, O prince's daughter! The roundings of thy thighs are like the links of a chain [the work of the hands of a skilled workman].

(1) If he is a common priest, after full purification and re-admission into the inner court of the priests, he might on that very day officiate and offer up his own free-gift oblation (v. (3) That is, R. Simeon does not allow a leper and common priest or a layman to send his offerings to the Temple until after his purification and atonement by sacrifices. For a leper had to attend in person to be purified by the stated ceremony (Lev. XIV, 11, 14-18, 20).

Ezra VII, 26.

Repel or expel him from their midst. Niddui and herem are Mishnaic, Palestinian terms, while shammetha is a popular Babylonian term loosely used for either, and whose legal denotation was the subject of discussion in Talmudic times (e.g., Ned. 7a-b) and later in Geonic responsa; as to its precise meaning, v. B.M. Lewin's Otzar ha-Geonim IV on Mashkin, Responsa 29ff, pp. 17-19.

The ordinary period of niddui, ‘separation’.

The Beth din had their regular sessions on Mondays and Thursdays: a practice said to have been one of the Ten Institutions introduced by Ezra, B.K. 82a (Sonc. ed. p. 466).

The normal period of a ‘separation’. V. R. Han.

They need him to obtain their meat. [Var. lec. ‘The Rabbis wish to depart’ (Han.). The Rabbis, who took part in imposing the ban and who must consequently be present at the absolution, wish to depart and the opportunity of releasing him will thus be lost, v. infra].

The horn blown at banning.

[Rashi! Since he himself was anxious to perform the release. In var. lec. supra n. 6 the question is clear.]

I.e., the ban is effective also as far as the disciple is concerned; and similarly in all the other cases that follow.

[Since we find that a disciple's ban has no force as far as the teacher is concerned, which can apply only to a ban imposed in defence of the disciple's own dignity, and not to one for a general transgression.]

; something ‘heard’ or ‘repeated’, usually a halachic interpretation repeated in the name of a well-known master.

I.e., I don't (want to) know you, stay away, or I have never been able to understand your attitude towards me. B. Kappara clashed with Rabbi on several occasions. The cause, it seems, was not personal, but rather due to the different schools to which they each belonged. B. K. belonged to the ‘Southern Sages’ (Lydda and Caesarea) and was himself the compiler of an often quoted collection of Mishnah (Baraitha).

A question interrupts the quotation.

The Torah, which is allegorically represented by Shulammit, ‘Perfection’ or ‘Pence’, the beloved of Solomon (the divine) King of Perfection or Peace. Cf. Prov. III, 13-18; VIII, 1 ff.

Cant. VII, 2. (Cf. its counterpart V, 15).

so the [discussions on the] words of the Torah are also [to be] under cover.) — R. Hiyya went out and taught the sons of his two brothers in the [open] marketplace, Rab and Rabbah son of Kar Hana. Rabbi heard [of this and] was vexed. [When] R. Hiyya [next] presented himself before him, Rabbi said to him, ‘Iyya! Who is calling you outside?’ He realized that he [Rabbi] had taken the matter to heart, and submitted himself to [the disability of] a ‘reproof’ for thirty days. On the thirtieth day Rabbi sent him a message saying ‘Come!’ Later he sent him a message not to come! (What was his idea in sending the first [message] and what in sending the second? At first he thought ‘part of the day may be deemed equivalent to the whole day’ and in the end he thought, we do not say part of the day may be deemed equivalent to the whole day’.) In the end he came. Said Rabbi to him, Why have you come? R. Hiyya replied: ‘Because you, Sir, sent for me to come’. But then I sent to you not to come! He replied: ‘The one [messenger] I saw and the other I have not seen’. Thereupon he [Rabbi] cited [as appropriate] the text: When a man's ways please the Lord, He maketh even his enemies to be at peace with him.
— Because, replied R. Hyya, it is written: Wisdom crieth aloud it, the street: [She uttereth her voice in the broad places; she calleth at the head of the street; at the entrance of the gates, in the city she uttereth her words].

5 Said Rabbi to him: ‘If you read Holy Writ [once], you have not read it a second time; if you have read it a second time, you have not react it a third time; and if you have read it a third time, they [who taught you] have not explained it to you’.

6 [The text] ‘Wisdom crieth aloud in the streets’ is [to be taken] in the sense in which Raba [explained it]; for Raba said: ‘If one studies the Torah indoors, the Torah proclaims his merit abroad’. But then is it not written [otherwise]: ‘From the beginning I have not spoken in secret’?

7 Said Rabbi to him: ‘If you read Holy Writ [once], you have not read it a second time; if you have read it a second time, you have not react it a third time; and if you have read it a third time, they [who taught you] have not explained it to you’.

8 The ‘reproof’ of a Nasi is different. And our ‘reproof’, how long [is its disability]? — One day [only], as in the case of Samuel and Mar ‘Ukba.

9 When they were sitting together [at the College] engaging in the revision of some theme, Mar ‘Ukba sat before him at a distance of four cubits; and when they sat together at a judicial session, Samuel sat before him at a distance of four cubits and a place was dug out for Mar ‘Ukba where he sat on a matting so that what he said should be heard. Every day Mar ‘Uba accompanied Samuel to his house. One day he was [rather] engrossed in a suit, and Samuel walked behind him. When he had reached his house, Samuel said to him: ‘Haven’t you been rather a long time at it?’ Take up now my case!’ He then realized that he felt aggrieved and submitted himself to the [disability of a] ‘reproof’ for one day.

There was a certain woman who sat sprawling on the footway fanning the husks out of her barley groats, and when a Collegiate was walking past her she did not make way for him. He said, ‘How impudent is this woman!’ She came before R. Nahman. Said he to her, Did you hear him utter the shammetha?

19 She replied [she had] not. Said he to her, Go and submit yourself to the [disability of a] ‘reproof’ for one day.

19 Zutra b. Tobias was [once] expounding a Scriptural lesson in the presence of Rab Judah. Coming to the verse: And these are the last words of David, he said to R. Judah. ‘Last words’: this implies that there were former words; which are those former [words]? He [Rab Judah] kept silent, without saying anything. Again said the former: ‘Last words! This implies there were former words; which are those former [words]? — He [then] replied: What, think you that one who does not know an explanation of that text is not an eminent man? He [Zutra] realized that he had taken the matter to heart [and] submitted himself to the [disability of a] ‘reproof’ for one day. Now, however, that we have come upon this question: “‘Last words’, this implies that there were former words’, what were they? — [These:] And David spoke unto the Lord the words of this song in the day that the Lord delivered him out of the hand of all his enemies and out of the hand of Saul.

21 The Holy One, blessed be He, said to David, David do you compose a song on the downfall of Saul? Had you been Saul and he David, I would have annihilated many a David out of regard for him. Hence it is written, ‘Shiggaion of David, which he said unto the Lord, concerning Cush a Benjamite.

23 Was Cush that Benjamite's name? And was not his name Saul? — But, just as a Cushite [Ethiopian] is distinguishable by his skin, so was Saul distinguished by his deeds. In like manner you explain: ‘[And Miriam and Aaron spoke against Moses] because of the Cushite woman that he had take; to wife.

25 Was she a Cushite [woman]? Was not her name Zipporah? But as a Cushite woman is distinguishable by her skin so was also Zipporah distinguished by her deeds. In like manner you explain: Now Ebed-Melek the Cushite . . . heard.

26 Now was his name Cushite? Was not his name Zedekiah? But as the Cushite is distinguishable by his skin, so was Zedekiah distinguished by his deeds. In like manner you explain: Are ye not as the children of the Cushites unto me, O children of Israel, saith the Lord? Now is their name [children of] Cushites? Was not their name [children of] Israel? The truth is that as the Cushite is distinguishable by his skin, so are Israel distinguished by their ways from all other nations.

R. Samuel b. Nahmani citing R. Jonathan. explained: [And these tire the last words of David], The saying of David the son of Jesse and the saying of the man raised on high, [means, it is] the saying of David the son of Jesse who established firmly the yoke [discipline] of repentance. [The spirit of the Lord spoke by the and His word was upon my tongue], The God of Israel said, The Rock of Israel spoke to me: Ruler over man shall be the righteous, even he that ruleth through the [reverent] fear of God. What does this mean? — Said R. Abbahu, It means this: ‘The God of Israel said, to the [David] spake the Rock of Israel; I rule man; who rules Me? [It is] the righteous: for I make a decree and he [may] annul it’.

And these tire the names of the mighty of David: Josheb-basshebeth a Tahchemonite [etc.]

What does this mean? — Said R. Abbahu, It means: And these are the mighty deeds of David: ‘Josheb-basshebeth’ — [which means], sitting at the session; [that is], When David sat at the College Session he was not seated on cushions and coverlets but on the [bare] ground. For all the time that his Master, Ira the Jairite, was alive he taught the Rabbis whilst being himself seated on cushions and coverlets; when his soul found rest David used to teach the Rabbis being himself seated on the ground. Said they [the Rabbis] to him: ‘Sit, sit on the cushions and coverlets’; but he would not accede to their request.

‘Tahchemoni’. Rab explained: The Holy One, blessed be He, said to him [to David], ‘Since you have humbled yourself you shall be like Me [that is], that I make a decree and you [may] annul it’. ‘Chief of the Captains’, [that is] you be chief next to the three Fathers. He is Adino the Ezrite.

[that is] when he was sitting engaged in the [study of] Torah he rendered himself pliant as a worm, but when he went marching out to [wage] war he hardened himself like a lance. ‘On eight hundred slain at one time’, [that is] when he threw a javelin he felled eight hundred slain at one time and moaned for the [shortage of] two hundred, for it is written: How one should chase a thousand. But an echo came forth and said: ‘Save only for the matter of Uriah the Hittite’!

Said R. Tanhuni son of R. Hiyya a man of Kefar Acco as citing R. Jacob b. Aha who reported R. Simlai; and some say, R. Tanhun, said as reporting R. Huna; and again some say, R. Huna alone said that if a disciple ‘separates’ someone in [defence of] his personal dignity his ‘separation’ is an [effective] . For it is taught: ‘One who has been "separated" [as under a ban] by the Master is [deemed] "separated" from the disciple; but one who has been "separated" by the disciple is not [deemed] "separated" from the Master’. [That means], not ‘separated’ from the Master; but in regard to everybody else he is ['separated']. [Now let us see; ‘separated’] for what [offence]? If [it was imposed] for some offence towards Heaven, then there is no wisdom nor understanding nor counsel against the Lord! Therefore [presumably] it is only so [where a disciple had pronounced it] in [defence of] his personal dignity. R. Joseph said that a Collegiate may enforce his own rights in a matter where he is perfectly certain [as to the law]. There was once a certain Collegiate whose reputation was objectionable. Said Rab Judah, How is one to act? To put the shammetha on him [we cannot], as the Rabbis have need of him [as an able teacher]. Not to put the shammetha on him [we cannot afford] as the name of Heaven is being profaned. Said he to Rabban b. Bar Hana, Have you heard alight on that point? He replied: ‘Thus said R. Johanan: What means the text, For the priest's lips should keep knowledge and they should seek the law at his mouth; for he is the messenger of the Lord of Hosts? [It means, that] if the Master is like unto a messenger of the Lord of Hosts, they should seek the law at his mouth; but if [he be not] they should not seek the law at his mouth’. [Thereupon] Rab Judah pronounced the shammetha on him. In the end Rab Judah became indisposed. The Rabbis came to enquire about him and that man came along with them. When Rab Judah beheld him he laughed. Said the man to him: Not enough for him that he put upon that man [me] the shammetha, but he even laughs at me! Replied he [Rab Judah]: I was not laughing at you: but as I am departing to that World [beyond] I am glad to think that even towards such a personage as you I showed no indulgence. Rab Judah's soul came to rest. The man [then] came to the College and said, 'Absolve me'. Said the Rabbis to him, There is no man here of the standing of Rab Judah who could absolve you; but go to R. Judah Nesi'ah that he may absolve you. He went and presented himself to him. Said he to R. Ammi: 'Go forth and look into his case; if it be necessary to absolve him, absolve him'. R. Ammi looked into his case and had a mind to absolve him. Then R. Samuel b. Nahmani got up on his feet and said: 'Why, even a 'separation' imposed by one of the domestics in Rabbi's house was not lightly treated by the Rabbis for three years; how much more so one imposed by our colleague, Rab Judah!' Said R. Zera, From the fact that this venerable scholar should just now have turned up at this College after not having come here for many years, you must take it that it is not desirable to absolve that man. He [R. Judah Nesi'ah] did not absolve him. He went away weeping. A wasp then came and stung him in the privy member and he died. They brought him into 'The Grotto of the Pious', but they admitted him not. They brought him into 'The Grotto of the Judges' and they received him. Why was he admitted there? — Because he had acted according to the dictum of R. Il'ai. For R. Il'ai says, If one sees that his [evil] yezer is gaining sway over him, let him go away where he is not known; let him put on sordid clothes, don a sordid wrap and do the sordid deed that his heart desires rather than profane the name of Heaven openly.

(13) ‘Mar’ is a Babylonian title of rank and is sometimes also borne by Samuel, but mostly by the members of the Exilarch’s family. Samuel was the principal of the Academy at Nehardea and the Chief justice, while Mar ‘Ukba was both a disciple of Samuel and Exilarch, the supreme civil Head of the Jewish community invested with authority by the Persian king. This Mar ‘Ukba is probably the same as Nathan ‘Ukban who succeeded his father ‘Anan or Huna as Exilarch shortly before the rise of the Neo-Persian rule of the Sassanids (c. 226 C.E.). V. W. I Kings XV, 5.

What [was the incident] of the domestic in Rabbi's house? It was one of the maidservants in Rabbi's house that had noticed a man beating his grown-up son and said, Let that fellow be under a shammetha! because he sinned against the words [of Holy Writ]: Put not a stumbling-block before the blind. For it is taught: 'And put not a stumbling-block before the blind', that text applies to one who beats his grown-up son.

Resh Lakish was once guarding an orchard [when] a fellow came and ate [some] figs; he shouted at him, but the fellow heeded him not, [whereupon] he said: 'Let that fellow be under a shammetha!' He replied: 'Rather be that other fellow [Resh Lakish] under a shammetha! Though I have incurred a pecuniary liability towards you, did I incur a "separation"? [Resh Lakish] went to the College [and reported it]; they said to him: 'His "separation" is a [justified] "separation", yours was not a [justified] "separation".' And what is the remedy for it? — 'Go to him that he [himself] may absolve you’. [But] I know him not! Said they to him [to Resh Lakish]: ‘Go to the Nasi that he absolve you;’ for it is taught: ‘[If] they "separate" him and he knows not who he was that "separated" him, let him go to the Nasi and let him absolve him from his "separation".’

Said R. Huna, At [one of the Synods at] Usha they made a regulation that if the Ab Beth din committed an offence he was not to be [formally] ‘separated’, but someone was to tell him, Save your dignity and remain at home. Should he again offend they ‘separate’ him, because [otherwise there would be] a profanation of the Name [of God]. And this is at variance with Resh Lakish; for Resh Lakish said: If a scholar-disciple has committed an offensive deed they do not ‘separate’ him publicly, because it is said: Therefore shalt thou stumble’ in the day and the prophet also shall stumble with thee in the night, [that is to say], Keep it dark, like night.

Mar Zutra, the Pious, if ever a Collegiate incurred the shammetha, pronounced the shammetha first on himself and then pronounced it on the culprit; as he entered his house he first absolved himself and then absolved the other. Said R. Giddal, as citing Rab: ‘A scholar-disciple may Pronounce "separation" on himself and absolve himself’. Said R. Papa, ‘May [good] befall me, for I have never put the shammetha on any Collegiate.’ But then, when a Collegiate did incur the shammetha, how did he act? — As they do [in the West]; for in the West [Palestine] they appoint a tribunal for chastising a Collegiate but do not appoint a tribunal for pronouncing a shammetha.

What is [the etymology of the word] shammetha? — Said Rab, [It is], sham-mitha, ‘death is there’. Samuel said, [It is], shemamah yihye, ‘he shall be a desolation’; and its effects adhere to one like grease to the oven. And this is in disagreement with [what] Resh Lakish said. For Resh Lakish said that just as when it [the herem] enters, it penetrates the two hundred and forty eight joints [on one's body], so on its withdrawal it departs from the two hundred and forty eight joints. When it enters, as it is written; And the city shall be Herem, [a curse] or his Beth din, among whom were prominent R. Ammi and R. Zera.

R. Joseph said, ‘Cast a shammetha on the dog's tail and it will do its work’. For there was a dog that used to eat the Rabbis' shoes and they did not know what it was [that did it], so they pronounced a shammetha on the culprit, and the dog's tail caught fire and got burnt. There was a domineering fellow who bullied a certain Collegiate. The latter came before R. Joseph [for advice]. Said he to him: ‘Go and put the shammetha on him’. ‘I am afraid of him’, he replied. Said he to him, ‘Then go and take [out] a Writ against him.’ — ‘I am all the more afraid to do that!’ Said R. Joseph to him: ‘Take that Writ, put it into a jar, take it to a graveyard and hoot into it a thousand shipur [horn-blasts] on forty days’. He went and did so. The jar burst and the domineering bully died.

What is the [significance of using a] shipur’? — That he'll pay, the penalty.¹ What signifies the tabra² [tooting]? — Said R. Isaac son of R. Judah: [It suggests] ‘the tumbling of high houses’: for it is taught: Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel said that wherever the Sages set their eye against one, [the result was] either death or poverty.³

AND THE NAZIRITE OR LEPER, EMERGING FROM HIS [STATE OF] IMPURITY TO [A STATE OF] PURITY. . . R. Jeremiah enquired of R. Zera whether this [concession]⁴ was allowed [only] when they had not an [earlier] opportunity.⁴ or, maybe, even if they had an [earlier] opportunity? — He replied, We learned it [in a Baraitha]:⁵ All those who were mentioned [in the Mishnah]⁶ as being allowed to crop their hair during the festival [week, are allowed] where they had no [earlier] opportunity, but if they had an [earlier] opportunity [and did not use it] are forbidden.⁷ The Nazirite and the leper [however] are allowed,⁷ even if they had an opportunity [and did not use it]: the reason being that they should not delay bringing their [prescribed] offerings⁸ [on their release from their respective restrictions].

A Tanna taught: A priest and a mourner also⁹ are allowed to crop themselves.⁷ Now, as to this mourner, under what conditions [may he do so]? Shall I assume that the eighth day of his [mourning] fell on the day before the festival? Then he ought to have trimmed himself then, on the day before the festival! Again, if the eighth day of his [mourning] came on a Sabbath which was the day before the festival; [if so] then he should have trimmed his hair on the Friday. as R. Hisda stated, citing Rabina b. Shila, that ‘the rule in practice’ followed Abba Saul's view and that the Sages concurred with Abba Saul,¹¹ [namely] that where the eighth day of his [mourning’] came on a Sabbath which was the day before a festival, [in such a case] he was allowed to trim himself on the Friday!¹² — No, this [statement in the Baraitha] is required for the case where the seventh day of his [mourning] came on a Sabbath which was also the day before the festival. [In that case] the external Tanna takes the view of Abba Saul who says that part of a day may be deemed as an entire day; and [accordingly] the seventh day of his [mourning] is counted both with the preceding and with the following period\(^\text{13}\) and as that happens to be a Sabbath day,\(^\text{14}\) the mourner was prevented [from trimming himself on the festival eve].\(^\text{15}\) [Whereas], our Tanna\(^\text{16}\) takes the view of the Sages who say that part of a day is not deemed as an entire day, and [accordingly] the mourner has not yet completed the seven days of his mourning [before the festival].\(^\text{17}\)

Now as to the priest,\(^\text{18}\) under what conditions [may he]? Shall I assume that [the turn of] his Ward\(^\text{19}\) terminated on the day before the festival?\(^\text{20}\) He should have trimmed himself then on the day before the festival! No, it is necessary to assume that [the turn of] his Ward terminated on the festival [day].\(^\text{21}\) [In that case], our Tanna\(^\text{16}\) then holds in view of what we learned: At three periods of the year, all the Wards have an equal right to [assist in placing] the ‘ordained’ parts\(^\text{22}\) of the festival offerings [on the altar] and sharing the ‘shewbread’\(^\text{23}\) — that we consider him as one whose Ward had virtually not yet completed [its turn].\(^\text{24}\) Whereas the external Tanna holds that although [in a way] he belongs to the other Wards [also], his own Ward had nevertheless [actually] completed [its turn, and therefore he may trim himself].\(^\text{25}\) Our Rabbis taught: All those who were mentioned [in the Mishnah] as being allowed to crop their hair during the festival [week] are likewise allowed to crop their hair during the days of their mourning. But surely it is taught that they are forbidden? — Said R. Hisda as citing R. Shela: When it is taught here that they ‘are allowed [to crop their hair during the days of their mourning]’, it refers only to persons who suffered one bereavement immediately after another. If it refers only [as you say] to persons who suffered one bereavement immediately after another, what is the point in wording it ‘all those who were mentioned [in the Mishnah]’ whereas [under such unfortunate circumstances] it is even applicable to anybody, as it is taught: ‘If a person suffered one bereavement immediately after another and his hair has become oppressively [long], he may ease it with a razor and wash his raiment with water’? — But that has already been explained: R. Hisda said [it means], ease it with a razor but not with scissors: wash his raiment with water but not natron or lye.\(^\text{26}\) [Furthermore] said R. Hisda: This [Baraitha] indicates that [otherwise] a mourner is barred from washing [his clothes].

Our Rabbis taught: ‘Just as it was said that cropping the hair during the festival [week] is not allowed, so is paring the nails during the festival [week] not allowed. This is R. Judah’s opinion; but R. Jose allows it. And just as it was said that a mourner is not allowed to crop his hair within [the period of] his mourning, so is paring the nails not allowed to him within [the period of] his mourning. This is R. Judah’s opinion; but R. Jose allows it that the Halachah follows the opinion of R. Jose [both] in regard to the festival [week] and to mourning. For Samuel said that in [questions appertaining to] mourning, the halachah follows the authority of the more lenient view.

Phineas, Mar Samuel's brother, suffered a bereavement\(^1\) and Samuel called on him to ask him the cause of it.\(^2\) Noticing that his nails were long, he asked him why he had not cut them. He replied: Had this happened to you, would you have been so regardless of it [as to cut them]? This was [inauspicious], ‘like an error which proceedeth from a ruler;\(^3\) and Samuel [later] suffered a bereavement himself. When his brother [Phineas] called on him to ask the cause of it, Samuel took his cut nails and cast them down in front of his brother, saying, ‘Do you not hold that a covenant has been made with the lips?’\(^4\) For R. Johanan said: Whence is derived the notion that the lips are subject to a covenant? From what is said: And Abraham said unto his young men: ‘Abide ye here with the ass, and I and the lad will go yonder; and we will worship and [we will] come back to you’;\(^5\) and the words came true\(^6\) so that they both came back.

Some argued from the above [incident] that [only] the fingernails may [be cut],\(^7\) but not the toe-nails. But R. ‘Anan b. Tahlifa said, ‘I myself had it explained to me by Samuel, that there was no distinction made between the finger-nails and the toe-nails’. R. Hiyya b. Ashi citing Rab said: But with a nail-cutter it is forbidden. Said R. Shaman b. Abba: ‘I was once standing before R. Johanan\(^8\) at the College during the festival week when R. Johanan bit off his nails and threw them away. Learn from this [incident] three points: Learn that it is allowed to take off nails during the festival week; that [doing it with the teeth] was not considered objectionable, and that [nails] may be thrown away’. But this [deduction] is not [correct]? as surely it is taught. ‘Three things were said in reference to nails: One who buries them is righteous;\(^9\) one who burns them is pious\(^10\) and one who throws them away is a villain’! What is the reason? Lest a pregnant woman should step over them and miscarry; [but then], women do not ‘often come to the College. And should you say that sometimes the nails are gathered and thrown away outside, once they have been shifted their spell has been lifted.\(^11\)

Rab Judah. as citing Rab, said: ‘A pair [of scholars] came from Hammathan\(^12\) before Rabbi . . .’; and Mar Zutra taught [the same as a Baraitha]. ‘A pair [of scholars] came from Hammathan before Rabbi, and asked him about [paring] the nails [during mourning]; and he permitted it to them. And if they had asked him about [trimming] the upper lip. he would have permitted it to them likewise’. And Samuel stated that they did ask him also about the upper lip and that he permitted them.

Abitol the hair-dresser said in the name of Rab that [trimming the] upper lip means from corner to corner; [and of the drooping ends too, all that causes inconvenience]. Said R. Ammi, And as regards the upper lip [it also means only] whatever part causes inconvenience. Said R. Nahman b. Isaac, And to me is like the [end of the] upper lip causing inconvenience.

And Abitol the hair-dresser, citing Rab, said also this: Pharaoh the contemporary of Moses, was [a puny fellow] a cubit [in height] with a beard a cubit long and his shock of hair a cubit and a span, justifying what is said: And He setteth up over it [the kingdom of men] the lowest of men. And [furthermore] said Abitol the hair-dresser, as citing Rab, Pharaoh, the contemporary of Moses, was a Magus, because it is said: [Get thee unto Pharaoh in the morning.] lo he goeth out unto the water.

AND THESE [MAY] WASH [THEIR CLOTHES] DURING THE FESTIVAL [WEEK], ONE ARRIVING FROM ABROAD. R. Assi, as citing R. Johanan said that one who has but one tunic is allowed to wash it during the festival week. Thereupon R. Jeremiah put an objection to him: ‘AND THESE [MAY] WASH [THEIR CLOTHES] DURING THE FESTIVAL [WEEK]. ONE ARRIVING FROM ABROAD etc.’ [which enumeration implies that only] those here mentioned may [wash] but one who has but one tunic [may] not? — Said R. Jacob to R. Jeremiah [b. Tahlifa], I will explain that to you: Our Mishnah permits to wash even if he has two garments if they be soiled.

R. Isaac son of R. Jacob b. Giyora sent [a message] in the name of R. Johanan that garments made of flax one may wash during the festival week. Raba raised an objection: HAND-TOWELS, BARBERS’-WRAPS AND BATHTOWELS [MAY BE WASHED]. swarthy... fierce-looking with goat-like eyes, eyebrows arched in semi-circle and joined, handsome beards and long hair’. Amm. Marcell. Chapter XXIII, VI, 75 (Bohn's ed. pp. 343ff expedition of Julian in 363 C.E.).

(19) Adopting J. Perles’ suggested etymology cited in (Ar. Compl. s.v. 430b) as more likely correct,  meaning here not the side whiskers but the other hair, the shock of hair on top of the head.

(20) Dan. IV, 14, in reference to Nebuchadnezzar who turned beast, with hair grown like eagles’ feathers (v. 30). Cf. Kid. 72a (and parallel passage, Meg. 11a) where Persians are compared to a restless, corpulent, shaggy bear, with a corresponding reference to the Book of Daniel.

(22) Ex. VII, 15. It is the reference to the light of morning which is the emphatic part of this quotation. Rab undoubtedly referred to the then national revival of Zoroastrianism on the defeat of Artaban IV and the overthrow of the Parthian, Arsacid dynasty by Ardashir I — (Artaxerxes) and the establishment of the Sassanid dynasty in 226 C.E. Artaban (who is said to have been friendly disposed towards Rab) was captured, held a prisoner and finally put to death in 233. i.e., at the time when Alexander Severus repelled the Persian attacks on the Roman outposts in Northern Mesopotamia. Ardashir ‘was an ardent devotee of the Zoroastrian doctrine and closely connected with the Priesthood and in his royal style assumed the designation Mazdayasman’ (i.e., devotee of Ahura-Mazda) and depicted himself on rock-reliefs as King and Ormuzd both on horseback, i.e., King and god as Pharaoh did of old. Shapur I, his son and successor, was more liberal and friendly to Samuel. Hence the discussion between Rab and Samuel (Shab. 75a) as to what is a magus, a sorcerer (a muttering quack-priest) or a blasphemer, reviler of God? On the historical facts cf. Enc. Brit. II (1911) Art. Peria, VIII, p. 219a-b.

Talmud - Mas. Mo'ed Katan 18b

This [detailed enumeration] implies that these only [one may wash], but not [all sorts of] garments made of flax? — Said Abaye to him, [Not necessarily]; Our Mishnah included even those other kinds [of material]. Said Bar Hedya: I have myself seen at the lake of Tiberias [people] bringing along basins full of flax garments [and washing them] during the festival week. Abaye [however] strongly contested this [testimony]. Who can vouch to us that they did it with the approval of the Sages? Possibly they did so without the approval of the Sages!

MISHNAH AND THE FOLLOWING DOCUMENTS MAY BE INDITED DURING THE FESTIVAL [WEEK]: INSTRUMENTS OF BETROTHAL,² BILLS OF DIVORCE³ AND RECEIPTS;⁴ TESTA MENTS, BEQUESTS⁵ AND PROSBOLS;⁶ VALUATION CERTIFICATES⁷ AND ORDERS FOR ALIMONY;⁸ RECORDS OF HALIZAH⁹ AND OF REPUDIATION [OF MARRIAGE]¹⁰ AND ARBITRATION RECORDS;¹¹ JUDGMENT ORDERS AND DIPLOMATIC¹² CORRESPONDENCE.

GEMARA. [INSTRUMENTS OF BETROTHAL]. Said Samuel, ‘One is allowed to betroth a woman during the festival week, [the reason being] lest another [rival suitor] anticipate him’. Might one suggest that [the wording here] lends support to Samuel’s view: AND THE FOLLOWING MAY BE INDITED DURING THE FESTIVAL [WEEK]: INSTRUMENTS OF BETROTHAL. What is [meant by this]? Is it not actually inditing the formula of Kiddushin? — No, [it means, drawing up] the [preliminary] terms, and as R. Giddal, citing Rab, stated: ‘How much do you give to your son?’ ‘So much and so much.’ ‘How much do you give to your daughter?’ ‘So much and so much’. [If] they then stood up and pronounced the ‘dedication’ [espousal formula] they have acquired their legal rights [to the offers]; these are [among] the matters that are [legally] acquired by word of mouth.⁰⁴ Might one suggest [then] the following as lending support to him [to Samuel]? ‘One may take a wife... during the festival [week], whether a virgin or a widow, but not effect a levirate marriage;\textsuperscript{15} as it is a rejoicing for him [the groom'],\textsuperscript{16} which implies] that betrothing is allowed. — Not [quite so]. He stated [the rule in the form] 'Not merely [this is not allowed but even that]: Not merely [it is forbidden] to betroth,\textsuperscript{17} by which no scriptural obligation is carried out; but even to take [a wife in wedlock] whereby a scriptural obligation is fulfilled,\textsuperscript{18} he is forbidden. Come and hear [a support for this]: For it was learnt in the School of Samuel:\textsuperscript{19} [Grooms] may betroth, but not bring [a bride] home: and they may not make a feast of betrothal nor effect a levirate marriage, as this is a rejoicing for him [the groom’]. Infer this.\textsuperscript{20}

But [yet], could Samuel have said ‘Lest another [rival suitor] anticipate him’? Surely Rab Judah, as citing Samuel, said: ['Forty days before the embryo is formed\textsuperscript{21} an echo issues\textsuperscript{22} forth [on high] announcing, "The daughter of So-and-so is [to be a wife] to Soand-so".'] [Similarly]. ‘Such and such a field\textsuperscript{23} is [to belong] to Soand-so’. — No; what it means is, ‘Lest another [rival suitor] anticipate him’ by means of prayer, as is illustrated by what occurred to Raba, who overheard a certain fellow praying for grace saying: ‘May that girl be destined to be mine!’ Said Raba to the man: ‘Pray not for grace thus; if she be meet for you, you will not lose her, and if not, you have challenged Providence’.\textsuperscript{24} Later he overheard him praying that either he should die before her or she before him. Said Raba to him: ‘[Praying Jack],\textsuperscript{25} did I not tell you not to pray for grace in this matter?’ Thus said Rab in the name of R. Reuben b. Estrobile, from the Torah,\textsuperscript{26} from the Prophets and from the Hagiographa it may be shown that a woman is [destined to] a man by God. From the Torah: Then Laban and Bethuel answered and said, The thing proceedeth from the Lord.\textsuperscript{27} From the Prophets: But his [Samson’s] father and mother knew not that it was of the Lord.\textsuperscript{28} And from the Hagiographa: House and riches are the inheritance of fathers, but a prudent wife is from the Lord.\textsuperscript{29} And Rab said [also this] in the name of R. Reuben b. Estrobile: ‘A person does not incur suspicion unless he has done the thing [suspected]; and if he has not done it wholly he has done it partly; and if he has not done it partly, he has a mind to do it; and if he has not had a mind to do it, he has seen others doing it and enjoyed [the sight of it]’. [As against this], R. Jacob [of Nehar Pekod]\textsuperscript{30} raised an objection [from the following text]: ‘And the children of Israel did impute things that were not right unto the Lord their God.\textsuperscript{31} There they did it [purposely] to provoke [God].

Come [then] and hear [this statement]: And [Moses heard and fell on his face].\textsuperscript{32} What tidings had he heard? — Said R. Samuel b. Nahmani, as reporting R. Jonathan: [He heard that] they suspected him of [adultery with] a married woman, as it is said: And they were jealous\textsuperscript{33} of Moses in the camp and of Aaron the holy one of the Lord.\textsuperscript{34} And, said R. Samuel b. Isaac, this indicates that everyone was jealous of his wife because of Moses. — There [again] it was done out of hatred.\textsuperscript{35}

[Then] come and hear [this statement]: Said R. Jose, May my share be with him whom they suspect of something of which he is innocent. Nay further, R. Papa said, They suspected me myself of something of which I was innocent! — It is not difficult [to explain]. One [speaks of a] rumor that dies away, the other of a rumor that persists. And how long would a persistent rumor be? — Said Abaye. ‘Nanna’ told me, Local gossip lasts a day and a half; and that holds good only if it did not cease in the meantime, but if it had ceased in the meantime, we take no notice of it. If, however, it does cease in the meantime, the rule is [to disregard it] only where it was not [stopped] out of fear, but if it was stopped out of fear, it is not [to be disregarded]; again, the rule is [to disregard it] only where it does not break out again, but where it breaks out again [we do] not [disregard it]; also, the rule is [to disregard it] when he [the maligned] person has no enemies, but if he has enemies, [we say] it is his enemies who have spread the [adverse] rumor.

SCRIPTURAL SECTIONS FOR PHYLACTERIES AND MEZUZOT MAY NOT BE WRITTEN DURING THE FESTIVAL [WEEK]; NOR MAY A SINGLE LETTER BE CORRECTED, EVEN IN THE [ANCIENT] TEMPLE-SCROLL. R. JUDAH SAYS, A PERSON MAY WRITE THE [SCRIPTURAL SECTIONS FOR] THE PHYLACTERIES OR MEZUZOTH FOR HIMSELF

AND MAY SPIN ON HIS THIGH THE BLUE-WOOL FOR HIS FRINGE.¹

GEMARA. Our Rabbis taught: A person [may] write [the scriptural sections for] phylacteries or mezuzoth for his own use [and spin on his thigh the blue threads for his own fringe],² and for others [he may do so] as a favour:³ this is R. Meir's view; R. Judah says, He may artfully dispose of his own and [then] write fresh ones for his own use. R. Jose says, He may write and sell [them] in his usual way enough for his [personal] requirements;⁴ Rab gave a decision to R. Hananel and some say, Rabban b. Bar-Hanah to R. Hananel⁵ — that the halachah is that one [may] write and them in his way to the extent of his requirements.

AND [MAY] SPIN ON His THIGH BLUE-WOOL FOR HIS FRINGE. Our Rabbis taught: A person [may] spin on his thigh the blue [thread] for his fringe, but [may] not do so with a stone [as a spindle-whorl]: that is R. Eliezer's view; but the Sages say [he may] even with a stone. R. Judah says in his [R. Eliezer's] name: [He may] with a stone, but not with a spindle; but the Sages say, [He may] either with stone or with spindle. Said R. Judah as citing Samuel, and similarly R. Hyya b. Abba said as citing R. Johanan: The halachah is that [one may spin the blue-wool for his fringe] whether with a stone [as whorl] or with a spindle;⁶ and it is also the halachah that one [may] write in his usual way and sell sufficient for his requirements.⁷

GEMARA. [THE RESTRICTIONS... FALL AWAY]. Said Rab, [this means only] ‘the restrictions’¹⁶ fall away, but the days [of mourning] do not fall away¹⁷ and so said also R. Huna:¹⁸ The ‘restrictions fall away but the ‘days’ do not fall away; and R. Shesheth¹⁹ said that even the days also fall away.²⁰ What is the meaning of, ‘But the days [of mourning] do not fall away’? [It means] that if he had not cropped his hair on the day before the festival he is forbidden to crop himself after the festival vrzd means generally a restrictive measure. (Cf. Be. 4b, 8b, 36b). Here it refers to the abstention, during the seven days of mourning, from work and bodily comforts — bathing, anointing, footwear and fresh clean clothes, i.e., the maintenance of a neglected disconsolate appearance in honour of the deceased. The public, religious, festive rejoicing suspends, or according to some, cancels the formal observance of sorrow.

I.e., the remaining period of formal mourning down to thirty days lapses on his having duly observed the first seven days plus one day of the remaining period before the festival.

I.e., it neither counts as a blank day, nor does it cancel the rest. The remaining days of mourning continue after the Sabbath.

Cancel the remaining days of mourning.

I.e., only the outer, formal observances of mourning but not the obligation.

I.e., the period of mourning of seven or (down to) thirty days (as the case may be, according to the wording of the Mishnah) is not canceled but only deferred pending the festive time.

Talmud - Mas. Mo’ed Katan 19b

and that is [exactly] what is taught [in a Baraita]: If one buries his dead three days before a festival his restrictions of the seven fall away;¹ if eight days before a festival his restrictions of the thirty fall away;² and he crops [his hair] on the day before the festival.³ If he had not cropped himself on the day before the festival, he is forbidden to crop himself after the festival.³ Abba Saul says, He is permitted to crop himself after the festival; for just as the ‘[observed] obligation⁴ of three’ [days] quashes the restriction of the seven⁵ so does the ‘[observed] obligation of seven’ quash the ‘restrictions of thirty’.⁶ [You Say, ‘The observed obligation of] seven’? But we learned [in our Mishnah] ‘eight’ [days before the festival]! — Abba Saul maintains the view that part of a day is reckoned as an entire day and [here] the seventh day [of mourning] enters into the count both this way and that.⁷ R. Hisda, as citing Rabina son of Shela, said the halachah follows the opinion of Abba Saul;⁸ and the Sages concur with Abba Saul that when his eighth day comes on a Sabbath which is the day before a festival he is permitted to crop himself [even] in the Friday.⁹

Whose opinion is followed in the statement in which R. Amram, citing Rab, said: ‘[As to] the mourner, as soon as the comforters have risen to depart from his house, he is permitted to bathe’? Whose view [is it]? — It is Abba Saul’s [view]. Said Abaye, The halachah follows Abba Saul’s view in regard to the seventh day [of mourning] and the Sages concur with Abba Saul in regard to the thirtieth day [of mourning] that we say, part of the day is regarded as the whole day. Raba said, The halachah follows Abba Saul’s view in regard to the thirtieth day, but in regard to the seventh day the halachah does not follow the view of Abba Saul. And the Nehardeans¹⁰ say the halachah follows Abba Saul’s view in both instances, because Samuel stated that in matters appertaining to mourning the halachah is to follow the view of the more lenient authority.

Whence [in Scripture] do we derive the term of thirty days [of mourning]? — It is obtained by an analogy\textsuperscript{11} between two texts which have in common the term pera’ used [in connection] with mourning\textsuperscript{12} and again used [in connection] with the Nazirite,\textsuperscript{13} [namely]: Here [in the law about mourning] it is written, Let not the hair of your heads grow long [tifra’u];\textsuperscript{12} an there [in the law of the Nazirite] it is written: He shall let the locks of the hair of his head [pera’] grow long.\textsuperscript{13} Just as the period there [for the Nazirite] is thirty days, so also here [for the mourner] it is thirty days. And whence do we derive it there? — Said R. Mattena: An unspecified Nazirite-vow is [binding] for thirty days. What is the reason? The text there reads: He shall be [Yihyeh] holy;\textsuperscript{14} the [consonant] letter value of Yihyeh being [ten + five + ten + five] thirty.

Said R. Huna the son of R. Joshua,\textsuperscript{15} [Authorities] all accept the view that when the third day [of mourning] occurs on the day before the festival the mourner is forbidden to wash [his whole body]\textsuperscript{16} till the evening.\textsuperscript{17} Said R. Nehemiah the son of R. Joseph said, I once found R. Pape, R. Papa and R. Huna the son of R. Joshua sitting together and stating that all are agreed that when the third day occurs on the day before a festival, the mourner is forbidden to bathe till the evening.

Abaye enquired of Rabbah: What if one buried his dead during the festival? Does the festival enter into his counting of the thirty days, or does the festival not enter into his counting of the thirty days?\textsuperscript{18} I am not asking about [counting the festival as part of] the seven days, because the ‘due observance of seven [days of mourning] does not obtain during the festival;\textsuperscript{19} but what I do ask is about the period of thirty days, because the ‘due observance of thirty days does [partly] obtain during the festival;\textsuperscript{20} what [is your view]? — He [Rabbah] replied, The [days of the] festival do not enter into the counting.

[Thereupon] he put to him an objection from [the following]: If one buried his dead two days before the festival, he counts five [supplementary] days after the festival,\textsuperscript{21} and his work is done [for him] by others; his men-servants and maid-servants do [their domestic] work quietly indoors, privily; and the public do not [need to] condole formally\textsuperscript{22} with him as they have already done that Service towards him during the festival. As a general principle on this matter [it may be stated]: ‘Whatever appertains to the mourner [himself],¹ that the festival interrupts,² but whatever appertains to the [obligations of] the public,³ that the festival does not interrupt’. If he buried his dead three days towards the conclusion of the festival,⁴ he counts seven days [of mourning] after the festival. During the first four days [after the festival] the public engage [in condoleing] with him, but in the last three days the public do not [need to] condole with him as they have already done [this service] towards him during the [three days within the] festival; and the festival enters into the counting. Now, does not [this last sentence] refer to the latter part [of the statement]?⁵ — No, [said Rabbah] it refers to the former part [of the statement].⁶ Thereupon he put an objection to him [from the continuation of the Baraita]: The festival enters into the counting of thirty days: how, for instance? If one buried his dead at the beginning of the festival he counts seven days [of mourning] after the festival and his work is done by others; his men-servants and maid-servants do work quietly indoors, and the public do not [need to] engage [in condoling] with him, as they have already done that service towards him during the festival; and the festival enters in the counting!¹⁷ — That is a confutation [of Rabbah].

When Rabin came [from Palestine] he reported R. Johanan to have said, Even if one buried his dead during the festival;⁸ and similarly R. Eleazar gave as his decision to his son R. Pedath, Even if one buried his dead during the festival.

Our Rabbis taught: ‘If one carried out the rule of overturning the couch⁹ for three days before the festival, he need not overturn it [any more] after the festival; these are the words of R. Eleizezer; but the Sages say: [He need not] even if he had [done so] only for one day or even for one hour. Said R. Simeon b. Eleazar, Those were the very words of Beth Shammai and the very words of Beth Hillel: for Beth Shammai say: ‘For three days [before the festival]’, and the Hillelites Say: Even [if] for one day’. R. Huna said: R. Hiyya b. Abba, as citing R. Johanan. stated¹⁰ — sonic say that R. Johanan told R. Hyya b. Abba and R. Huna: [He need not], even if he had [overturned the couch] for one day; even for one hour. Raba stated¹¹ that the halachah is according to our Tanna [of the Mishnah] who said three days.¹²

Rabina once came to Sura-cum-Euphrates.¹³ Said R. Habiba to Rabina: What is the law [on this point]? — He replied: ‘Even [if he had the couch overturned] one day and even for one hour’. R. Hiyya b. Abba, R. Ammi and R. Isaac were [once] seated in the marquee of R. Isaac b. Eleazar¹⁴ when a discussion was begun between them: Whence is it authentically derived that the observance of mourning is for seven days? From the text, And I shall turn your feasts into mourning . . . [and I will make it as the mourning for an only son];¹⁶ just as the ‘Feast’ lasts seven days.¹⁵ so [the period of] mourning is also for seven days. But why not [draw an analogy with] the feast of ‘Azereth,¹⁷ which lasts but one day? — [No], that [analogy] is needed [for another lesson] as explained by Resh Lakish; for Resh Lakish said in the name of R. Judah Nesi’ah:¹⁸ Whence is it derived that on [the receipt of] belated tidings¹⁹ [formal] mourning obtains for one day only? From the text, And I shall turn your feasts into mourning;²⁰ and we find ‘Azereth as an instance where one day’s celebration is designated [a ‘Feast’].
Our Rabbis taught: On receiving near tidings [formal] mourning obtains for seven [days] as well as [up to] thirty [days]; on distant tidings, it obtains for one day only. Which are ‘near’ tidings and which ‘distant’ tidings? ‘Near’ tidings are [recent tidings] within, thirty [days] and ‘distant’ tidings are [belated tidings] after thirty [days]: these are the words of R. Akiba; the Sages, however, say, One and the same [practice obtains in both], on [the receipt of] ‘near’ tidings or of ‘distant’ tidings, [formal mourning] obtains for seven as well as [up to] thirty [days]. Said Rabbah b. Bar Hanah, as citing R. Johanan: Wherever you find a single authority expressing a lenient view and a number expressing a strict view, the halachah is in accordance with the strict view, save in this case: that although R. Akiba is lenient and the Sages are strict, the halachah is in accordance with R. Akiba, as Samuel stated, that in matters obtaining to mourning the halachah follows the lenient authority.

R. Hanina received tidings from Be[th]-Hozai about [the death of] his father; he consulted R. Hisda, [who] told him, ‘On [receipt of] distant tidings [formal mourning] obtains for one day only’. R. Nathan b. Ammi received tidings from Be[th]-Hozai about his mother; he consulted Raba, who told him: The authorities have already stated [that] on [receipt of] distant tidings [formal mourning] obtains for one day only. Thereupon he put to him an objection [from the following]: When does this ruling apply? In the case of the [other] five nearest-of-kin [for whom mourning is] obligatory; but for one's father or mother [mourning is for] seven [days] and [up to] thirty [days] — [Raba] replied: That is the ruling of an individual24 with which we do not concur, as [will be made clear from what] is taught [in the following]: ‘There was the case of the father of R. Zadok who had died at Ginzak, and he was not informed till after three years. He [thereupon] came and asked of Elisha b. Abuyah and the elders that were with him and they told him to observe seven [days] and [up to] thirty, and when R. Ahiyya's son died in the Diaspora, he [too] sat on his account seven and [observed mourning up to] thirty’. But this is not so? For when Rab, R. Hiyya's brother's son — who was also R. Hiyya's sister s son — came up there [to Palestine], he [R. Hiyya] said to his nephew [Rab]: ‘Is father alive’?

(5) ‘If one buried his dead during the festival, three days before towards conclusion . . . ’ As the seven days have been dealt with already, the last sentence must refer to the thirty days, namely, that the festival days enter into the counting; i.e., not as Rabbah replied, negatively.
(6) ‘If one buried his dead two days before the festival’, when two days of the seven were also two days of the thirty, as Abaye himself admitted when he put the question to Rabbah.
(7) Of the thirty days, obviously.

Golah, the ancient place of the ‘Captivity’ when the first Temple fell, Babylon, Nehardea and later, Pumbeditha, were considered the most ancient centres of the Golah.

R. Aha of Kafri married a widow and his eldest son Aybu married her daughter. From these unions Aha had a son R. Hiyya, and Aybu had a son Rab (‘R. Abba the Long’, later the famous principal of Sura). Rab's mother was R. Hiyya's half-sister (from one mother, i.e., R. Ala's second wife); and Rab's father Aybu was R. Hiyya's eldest half-brother (from the same father, namely, R. Aha of Kafri). R. Hiyya was therefore doubly related to his nephew Rab, being his paternal uncle as well as his maternal uncle, cf. Pes. 4a (Rashi).

I.e., is my father Aha alive?

Talmud - Mas. Mo'ed Katan 20b

He replied, ‘Mother’ is alive’. [Again] he asked ‘Is mother alive’? He replied: ‘Father is alive’. R. Hiyya thereupon said to his attendant: ‘Take off my shoes and bring along my things after me to the [public] baths’. Now from this instance we learn three lessons: We learn that a mourner is forbidden to don shoes; that distant tidings [entail formal mourning] but for one day; and that part of the day is [deemed] as all entire day's [mourning]? [In fact], R. Hiyya is one person and R. Ahhiyya [whose son died in the Diaspora] is another person.

Said R. Jose b. Abin: [If] one received near tidings on a festival and by the [time of its] termination it became distant tidings, [the festival-time] enters into the counting and [accordingly] he observes but one day [of formal mourning]. R. Adda of Caesarea recited in the presence of R. Johanan: If one hears near tidings on a Sabbath day and by the termination of the Sabbath it has become distant tidings, he observes but one day [of formal mourning]. Does one [in such a case] rend his garment, or does he not rend his garment? — R. Mani said: He does not [need to] rend his garment; R. Hanina said, He does rend [his garment]. Said R. Mani to R. Hanina: My view that he does not rend [his garment] is consistent with the fact that there is no [observance of] 'seven'. But according to your view that he [should] rend his garment, tell me, is there a rending of [one's garment] without [the observance of] the seven [days of mourning]? But is there not? Surely, Isi, father of R. Zera — or as sonic say, R. Zera's brother, recited in the presence of R. Johanan: If one had no tunic to rend [at the time] and he obtained one during the seven [days], he should rend it then; [if it became available] after the seven days, he does not rend it! [Thereupon] R. Zera chimed in after him: ‘When does this ruling apply? In the case of the [other] five nearest-of-kin [for whom mourning is] obligatory, but in the case of father or mother one always rends one's garment!’ — What you cited [in fact] refers to the deference to be shown to one's father or mother.

Our Rabbis taught: For all [nearest-of-kin] mentioned in the Priest's Section for whom a priest is to defile himself, a mourner is to observe [formal] mourning, namely, these: [For] his wife, father or mother, brother or [single] sister, son or daughter. To these they added: His brother or single sister from the same mother, as well as his married sister, be it from the same mother or the same father. And just as he observes [formal] mourning for these, he likewise observes [formal] mourning for their relatives in the second degree: this is R. Akiba's ruling. R. Simeon b. Eleazar says: [Extended, formal] mourning is not observed except for one's son's child and a father's father, and the Sages say [by way of definition]: Whomever he mourns for he should also mourn with. Is not the Sages’ view [practically] the same as that of the former Tanna? — Not [quite]; there is a [practical] difference between them, whether [we require him to be, that is to say when he is] with him in the [same] house, as Rab said to his son Hiyya, and as R. Huna likewise said to his son Rabbah: ‘In her presence observe mourning; away from her presence do not observe mourning’.

Hence, R. Adda recited in the presence of R. Johanan: If one heard near tidings on a Sabbath day and by the termination of the Sabbath it has become distant tidings, he observes but one day [of formal mourning]. Does one [in such a case] rend his garment, or does he not rend his garment? — R. Mani said: He does not [need to] rend his garment; R. Hanina said, He does rend [his garment]. Said R. Mani to R. Hanina: My view that he does not rend [his garment] is consistent with the fact that there is no [observance of] 'seven'. But according to your view that he [should] rend his garment, tell me, is there a rending of [one's garment] without [the observance of] the seven [days of mourning]? But is there not? Surely, Isi, father of R. Zera — or as sonic say, R. Zera's brother, recited in the presence of R. Johanan: If one had no tunic to rend [at the time] and he obtained one during the seven [days], he should rend it then; [if it became available] after the seven days, he does not rend it! [Thereupon] R. Zera chimed in after him: ‘When does this ruling apply? In the case of the [other] five nearest-of-kin [for whom mourning is] obligatory, but in the case of father or mother one always rends one's garment!’ — What you cited [in fact] refers to the deference to be shown to one's father or mother.

Hence, R. Adda recited in the presence of R. Johanan: If one heard near tidings on a Sabbath day and by the termination of the Sabbath it has become distant tidings, he observes but one day [of formal mourning]. Does one [in such a case] rend his garment, or does he not rend his garment? — R. Mani said: He does not [need to] rend his garment; R. Hanina said, He does rend [his garment]. Said R. Mani to R. Hanina: My view that he does not rend [his garment] is consistent with the fact that there is no [observance of] 'seven'. But according to your view that he [should] rend his garment, tell me, is there a rending of [one's garment] without [the observance of] the seven [days of mourning]? But is there not? Surely, Isi, father of R. Zera — or as sonic say, R. Zera's brother, recited in the presence of R. Johanan: If one had no tunic to rend [at the time] and he obtained one during the seven [days], he should rend it then; [if it became available] after the seven days, he does not rend it! [Thereupon] R. Zera chimed in after him: ‘When does this ruling apply? In the case of the [other] five nearest-of-kin [for whom mourning is] obligatory, but in the case of father or mother one always rends one's garment!’ — What you cited [in fact] refers to the deference to be shown to one's father or mother.

Hence, R. Adda recited in the presence of R. Johanan: If one heard near tidings on a Sabbath day and by the termination of the Sabbath it has become distant tidings, he observes but one day [of formal mourning]. Does one [in such a case] rend his garment, or does he not rend his garment? — R. Mani said: He does not [need to] rend his garment; R. Hanina said, He does rend [his garment]. Said R. Mani to R. Hanina: My view that he does not rend [his garment] is consistent with the fact that there is no [observance of] 'seven'. But according to your view that he [should] rend his garment, tell me, is there a rending of [one's garment] without [the observance of] the seven [days of mourning]? But is there not? Surely, Isi, father of R. Zera — or as sonic say, R. Zera's brother, recited in the presence of R. [Thereupon] R. Zera chimed in after him: ‘When does this ruling apply? In the case of the [other] five nearest-of-kin [for whom mourning is] obligatory, but in the case of father or mother one always rends one's garment!’ — What you cited [in fact] refers to the deference to be shown to one's father or mother.
[When] Mar Ukba's father-in-law's son died, he thought of sitting for him seven [days of mourning] and [continuing to] thirty. R. Huna going to his house found him [in formal mourning]. 'Do you desire', said he, 'to eat of mourners' fare?' They [the Sages] did not say that [one should observe formal mourning] out of deference to his wife only in the case of the death of his father-in-law or his mother-in-law, as it is taught: 'If his father-in-law or mother-in-law died the husband may not compel his [mourning] wife to put on kohl or do her hair [as usual], but he should overturn his [own] couch and observe [formal] mourning with her; and likewise she, when her fatherin-law or mother-in-law dies, may not put on kohl or do her hair [as usual]; but she should overturn her couch and observe [formal] mourning with him'. And another Baraita taught: ‘Although it was stated [that] he may not compel his wife to put on kohl or do her hair [as usual] it is — said they — indisputably correct that she [may] mix his wine for him, make his bed and wash his face, hands and feet'. Now the regulations in the two citations contradict each other. Hence infer from this that the one Baraita refers to the death of a father-in-law or mother-in-law, while the other to the death of other near of kin. This proves it. It is also taught thus [explicitly]: ‘They did not lay down [that one should observe formal mourning] out of deference to his wife, save [at the death of] his father-in-law or his mother-in-law alone’.

Amemar lost his son's son, and he rent [his garment]. Thereupon his son came and he [again] rent [his garment] in his [son's] presence. He then recollected that he had done it while sitting; he rose and relit [his garment again] standing. Said R. Ashi to Amemar: Whence do we derive that the rending [of a garment] is [to be done] standing? From the text: Then Job rose and rent his mantle.

(1) To evade a direct doleful reply, Rab said that his own mother was alive, but said nothing about his grandfather, R. Aha of Kafri.
(2) I.e., my mother alive? I.e., R. Hiyya's mother, Rab's grandmother, R. Aha's wife.
(3) Again to evade the direct and sad answer Rab replied that his own father (i.e., Aybu, R. Hiyya's half-brother) was alive, but nothing about it. Hiyya's mother, Aha's wife. This is according to R. Hananel. Rashi and Tosaft. s.v. offer different interpretations. V. Pes. 4a (Sonc. ed. p. 11.)
(4) Cf. supra p. 93.
(5) Even in the case of a parent one short while and one simple demonstration of respectful, sorrowful mourning, such as doffing the shoes, are enough; as soon after R. Hiyya went to the baths, which is forbidden to a mourner for a recent bereavement. Cf. supra p. 101.
(6) That is, do not confuse Ahiyya of the Baraita with Hiyya, Rab's uncle as being the same person who had acted differently on two occasions, at receiving belated distant news of the loss of a son and again of the loss of parents. They are two different persons.
(7) Var. l.ec. Abba.
(8) Of his own, to rend it at the poignant moment of hearing the sad tidings. Cf. infra, 24a and Tosaft. s.v. .
(9) Brother, sister, wife, son and daughter. see next citation.
(10) [I.e., though there is no observance of seven days he rends his garments not as an obligation but as a special mark of respect for his parents; v. Nimmuke Yosef.]

(12) [Though not of the same father. The text implies only a paternal brother or sister.]
(13) [Although the text speaks only of a single sister (ibid. v. 3).]
(14) I.e., for his grandfather, grandmother or grandchildren; also for brothers and sisters of parents, i.e., uncles and aunts.
(15) I.e., for these only but no others of those included in R Akiba's extended list. Cf. n. 7.
(16) E.g., One mourns (in sympathy) with his father on the death of his father's father; likewise a father mourns (in sympathy) with his son who loses a child.
(17) I.e., R. Simeon b. Eleazar
(18) As implied in the words of the Sages, ‘he should mourn with him’.
(20) When Rabbah's wife was in mourning.
(21) Out of deference to his wife.
Food provided by friends. Cf. infra 24b arid 27aff.

I.e., to insist that she should keep up her personal appearance, instead of looking neglected and dejected when numerous callers come to condole with her; kohl was used for the eye-brows.

Lit., ‘in truth, they said’. V. B.M. 6.

I.e., she may attend to his usual needs. [Washing hands and feet means in warm water which is forbidden to a mourner (Tosaf.).]

In the former it is insisted that the husband must observe formal mourning out of deference to the wife, while in the latter, it implies that the husband need not.

In which case he must mourn with her.

In which case he need not mourn with her.

That the distinction made by R. Huna supra is correct.

I.e., stood up to perform the act of rending.

Job I, 20.

But if that is so, [the text]: And if he stand and say, I like not to take her, [will be interpreted] similarly? But surely it is taught: [And if she lose the shoe from off the foot of a grownup levir], whether he be standing or sitting or stooping, [the ceremony is valid]? — He replied: [It is because] there it is not written, ‘And he stood and said’; whereas here [in our instance] it is written, ‘And Job rose and rent his mantle’. Rami b. Hama said: Whence [is it derived] that the rending [of a garment] is to be done standing? From what is said: And Job rose and rent his mantle. But perhaps what he did was something extra? For should we not say so, [what of the next thing Job did], And he shaved his head, [should we] likewise [have to conform with it]? — Rather it is [to be derived] from here: Then the king arose and rent his garments. But here too, perhaps, what he did was something extra? For should you not say so, [what of the next thing he did], And he lay on the earth, [should we] likewise [have to conform with it]? Whereas it is taught: ‘If a mourner sat on a bed, on a chair or on a stall for urns [and cans], or even goes to the extreme of sleeping on the bare ground, he has not discharged his duty [to the dead]’. And, explained R. Johanan, [It is] because he has not carried out the [custom of] overturning the bed? — He replied: [It means that David lay] as it were on the ground.

Our Rabbis taught: The following things are forbidden to a mourner: He is forbidden to do work, to bathe or anoint himself, to have [marital] intercourse, or don sandals; he is forbidden to read the Pentateuch, Prophets or Hagiographia, or to recite the Mishnah, or Midrash and halachoth or the Talmud or aggadoth. If, however, the public have need of him, he need not abstain. There was an actual case, when a son of R. Jose of Sephoris died, he went into the Beth Hamidrash and expounded there all day long; [also when a daughter of Rabbi died at Beth-Shearim, he went into the Beth Hamidrash and expounded there all day long]. Rabbah b. Bar Hanah had a bereavement and he thought he ought not to go out to [give] his lecture. Said Rab to him, We learned: ‘And if the public have need of him he does not refrain’. He then thought of calling upon his ‘expositor’ [assistant]. When Rab said to him, ‘We learned: ‘Provided only that he does not place [at his side] an expositor [assistant]’. But then how is he to do? — After the manner taught [in the following]: ‘It happen ed, that when a son of R. Judah b. Il'ai died, he went into the Beth Hamidrash and R. Hananiah b. Akabia also went in and sat him down at his side: he then whispered to R. Hananiah b. Akabia and R. Hananiah b. Akabia [whispered] to the Turgeman and the Turgeman spoke aloud to the public’.

Our Rabbis taught: ‘[During] the first three days a mourner is forbidden to put on phylacteries. From the third day onward, the third day included, he is allowed to put on phylacteries and he does not have to] take them off at the entry of fresh personages [visitors]: this is R. Eliezer's opinion.
R. Joshua says, A mourner is forbidden to put on phylacteries during the first two days. From the second day onward, the second day included, he is allowed to put on phylacteries; but at the entry of fresh personages [visitors] he takes them off. Said R. Mattena: What is the reason for R. Eliezer's view? — Because it is written: And the days of weeping in the mourning of Moses were ended. Said R. Ena: What is the reason for R. Joshua's view? — Because it is written: And I will turn your feasts into mourning . . . And I will make it as the mourning for an only son and the end thereof as a bitter day. But as to R. Joshua, surely it is written: And the days of weeping in the mourning for Moses were ended? — He may reply. The case of Moses was different; the mourning for him was more intense. And what of R. Eliezer too, surely it is written, ‘And the day thereof [I will make] as a bitter day’? — The poignancy of the bitterness is but on one day. Said ‘Ulla: The halachah follows R. Eliezer in regard to taking off [the phylacteries] and R. Joshua in regard to putting on [the phylacteries]. They enquired: What of the second day [of mourning], according to ‘Ulla? Does he [at the entrance of fresh personages] have to take them off, or does he not [have to] take them off? — Come and hear: ‘Ulla said: He takes them off and puts them on even a hundred times’. Likewise it is taught: Judah b. Tema Says, He takes them off and puts them on even a hundred times. Raba said, Having put them on he does not take them off. But was it not Raba who said [above], The halachah follows our Tanna [of the Mishnah], who says that the minimum observance of formal mourning is three days?]
— It is different in the case of a religious precept. [like phylacteries].

Our Rabbis taught: A mourner is forbidden, during the first three days [to do] work, even a poor man who receives maintenance from charity; thereafter he does [his work] privately, in his house: and a woman [in mourning] plies the spindle in her house.

Our Rabbis taught: A mourner should not go during the first three days to a place of mourning; thereafter he may go but not take a place among the comforters, but among those who are [to be] comforted.

Our Rabbis taught: A mourner is forbidden during the first three days to give greeting [of peace]; after three and to seven [days], he responds but does not give greeting [of peace]; thereafter he gives greeting [of peace] and responds in his usual manner.

[It is stated above] ‘Forbidden during the first three days to give greeting of peace’. But surely it was taught: It happened, when [two] sons of R. Akiba, [bridegrooms], died, all Israel entered and made a great lament for them, and as the people were about to depart, R. Akiba stood on a large bench and addressed them: Our brethren, the House of Israel, hear ye! Even though these two sons were ‘bridegrooms’, I am consoled on account of the honour you have done [them]. And even though you have come on account of Akiba, there is many an Akiba! But this it is what you said [to yourselves]: The law of God is in his heart, [his footsteps will not falter]. All the more then, two-fold be your reward: Go home unto peace!

— Deference towards the public is a different matter.

Thereupon some contrasted [this latter Baraitha] with the following: One who meets another mourner within a twelvemonth tends him [words of] consolation, but does not enquire about his ‘peace’; after a twelvemonth, he enquires about his ‘peace and does not tender him [words of] consolation, but may refer to his sorrow indirectly. Said R. Meir: If one meets another mourner after a twelvemonth and tenders him [then words of] consolation, to what can he be likened? To the case of a man who had his leg broken and healed when a physician met him and said to him, Come to me and let me break it and set it [again], to convince you that my medicaments are good? — This offers no difficulty: This last citation refers to [the death of] father or mother, while the former refers to [the death of] other near of kin. But in that case too, why not tender him [words of] consolation indirectly? — Yes indeed [he may], and what means: [‘After thirty days he may] not tender him [words of] consolation’ is, [not] in one’s usual manner — but he refers to his sorrow indirectly.

Our Rabbis taught: A mourner who arrives home during the first three days from a place in the near vicinity, counts [his days of mourning] with them. If he came home from a distance, he counts on his own. Thereafter even if he came home from a place in the vicinity he counts on his own. R. Simeon says: Even if he came home on the seventh day from a place in the vicinity, he counts with them.

The Master said: ‘During the first three days from a place in the vicinity, he counts with them’. R. Hyya b. Abba, as citing R. Johanan said that this is done only where the chief person of the household was at home. The following question was then raised:

(1) Deut. VI, 8; XI. 18.
(2) Lit., ‘House of mourning’, i.e., either to a private house or to the cemetery to attend a funeral. Cf. Sem. VI.
(3) Lit., ‘enquire about his “peace’” (welfare). E.g., Gen. XXIX, 6 and cf. supra p. 89, n. 10.
(4) Cf. D. note 7: probably during a plague.
(5) So Sem. III, 6. The expression denotes that they died in the prime of life, under thirty years of age.
(6) The cemetery.
(7) An improvised rostrum.
(8) V. p. 135 n. 8.
(9) The text reads, ‘He is consoled’ by way of euphemism, to avoid an omen for one who reads or recounts this.
(10) By your presence.
(11) I.e., I am not so great a man as to be entitled to it all.
(12) Ps. XXXVII, 31.
(13) Thus R. Akiba tendered ‘peace’ to his audience on the very first day of mourning. Cf. Sem. VIII, where this incident among others is told at length.
(14) Here ends the part that causes difficulty. The attempted reply follows later after the conclusion of the whole quotation.
(15) That is by betrothal within the thirty days of mourning: this is permitted for the sake of little children, left motherless; often it is the deceased wife’s sister. He may thus marry her formally but is not to live with her as man and wife till after the period of mourning is over. Generally a widower should wait till after the three Festivals — Passover, Weeks and Tabernacles have passed, before he marries again. Cf. infra, 23a.
(16) Not to embarrass the second wife.
(17) Lit., ‘with faint lip and heavy head’, so as to avoid giving the impression of being cynical. I This Baraitha thus teaches that within the thirty days one may not greet a mourner, which is in opposition to the ruling of the former Baraitha that the mourner himself is permitted to exchange greetings once the seven days are over.
(18) Within the thirty days.
(19) [I.e., the two Baraithas are not contradictory: whereas the former teaches that the mourner may greet others within the thirty days, the latter forbids others to greet him within, that period.]
(20) And thus the two Baraithas are still contradictory.
(21) I.e., during the first three days.
(22) After three days.
(23) Whereas above it was ruled that after thirty days one may tender greetings.
(24) Rashi: He merely utters a word of comfort without mentioning the name of the deceased.
(25) I.e., in the case of other near-of-kin to which the former Baraitha refers.
(26) With the other members of the family.

Talmud - Mas. Mo'ed Katan 22a

What if the chief person of the household had gone to the place of interment? — Come and hear: For R. Hyya b. Abba as citing R. Johanan. said that even if the chief person of the household went to the place of interment, he [still] counts with them. [You say] ‘He counts with them?’ Why, it is taught [definitely]: 'He counts by himself'! — That is not difficult [to explain]: The former [ruling] obtains where he returned within three [days]; the latter [ruling] obtains where he had not returned within three [days]. Similar it is to what Rab told the sons of Hazzaloni: Those that come [home] within three [days] should count with you; those that do not come [home] within three [days] should count by themselves. Raba told the people of Maha: You who do not follow the bier, should begin counting [the days of mourning] as soon as you turn your faces from the city gates.

‘R. Simeon says, Even if he came home on the seventh day from a place in the vicinity he counts with them’. Said R. Hiyya b. Gamada that R. Jose b. Saul as reporting Rabbi said: That is [done] only where [on his arrival] he found comforters still present. R. ‘Anan then enquired: What if they [the comforters] had just made ready themselves to get up [and leave] but had not yet left? — This stands over [for a solution]. The fellow-collegiate of R. Abba b. Hiyya had it as a tradition from R. Abba — Who was that [fellow-collegiate]? — R. Zera; and some say that it was the fellow-collegiate of R. Zera who had heard it from R. Zera. — And who was that [fellow-collegiate]? — R. Abba son of R. Hiyya b. Abba — who reported R. Johanan [to have stated]: ‘The halachah is to follow R. Simeon b. Gamaliel's view on the point of terefoth and the halachah is to follow R. Simeon on the point of mourning’. The view of R. Simeon on the point of mourning is this one which we have just cited; and the view of R. Simeon b. Gamaliel on terefoth is that which is taught: ‘If intestines had become perforated and mucilage blocks the perforation, it [the animal's flesh] is kasher’. What is ‘mucilage’? — Said R. Kahana: it is the viscous matter inside the intestines which comes away under pressure. Said someone; May I be granted to go up to Palestine and learn the legal dictum from the mouth of the Master himself! When he went up he came upon R. Abba son of R. Hiyya b. Abba. Said he to him: ‘Did you, sir, say that the halachah is to follow R. Simeon b. Gamaliel on the point of terefoth’? — He replied: ‘I said that the halachah is not so’! And what about the point of mourning’, [is the halachah in that case] to follow R. Simeon? — He replied: Opinions are divided on that, as it has been stated: ‘R. Hisda said, [R. Simeon's view is] the halachah, and R. Johanan said likewise; [but] R. Nahman said, [R. Simeon's view is] not the halachah. The [present] halachah however does not follow R. Simeon b. Gamaliel's view in terefoth; but as to the point of mourning, the halachah is like R. Simeon's, because of Samuel's dictum that in matters of mourning, the halachah is to follow the [view of the] lenient authority’.

[Our Rabbis taught]:10 ‘[If] for all [other] dead one expedites [the departure of] the bier,11 he is praiseworthy; but in the case of one's father or mother, he is blameworthy. If it was the day before the Sabbath or a festival,12 or if pouring rain was falling on it, he is praiseworthy, as he expedites [the interment] out of deference to his father or mother. For all [other] dead, if he desires, he minimizes his business13 or if he does not desire,
When delay involves keeping the body till the day after their termination.

I.e., his business affairs (Rashi) before the funeral. Or, according to Han. quoting Palestinian Talmud, he minimizes the expenses of the funeral and lament. Cf. J.M.k. III, 8.

Talmud - Mas. Mo'ed Katan 22b

He does not minimizes it; but for his father or mother he should minimize [his business]. For all [other] dead, if he desires, he bares [his shoulder] and if he does not desire he does not bare it; for his father or mother he must bare [his shoulder]. It happened once with a certain ‘great man of the generation’ whose father had died, that he desired to bare [his shoulder], and [another] ‘great man of the generation’ that was with him desired to bare his too, and on that account he [the mourner] refrained and did not bare [his shoulder].

Said Abaye, The ‘great man of the generation’ referred to was Rabbi, and the [other] ‘great man of the generation’ that was with him was R. Jacob b. Aha [the elder]. Some say that ‘the great man of the generation’ was R. Jacob b. Alia and the [other] great man of the generation’ that was with him was Rabbi. Now it seems correct if Rabbi was the ‘great man of the generation’ that was with him [with the mourner], we understand why [R. Jacob b. Aha] refrained and did not bare [his shoulder and heart]; but according to the [other] report that Rabbi [was the mourner] and that R. Jacob b. Aha was the ‘great man of the generation’ that was with him, why did not he [Rabbi] bare [his shoulder and both hands] as Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel [Rabbi's father] was the Nasi, and everybody should by rights have bared [their shoulders]! — This is difficult [to explain].

‘For all dead one has his hair trimmed after thirty days; for one's father or mother [one lets his hair grow long] until his companions rebuke him. For all dead one enters a house of rejoicing after thirty days; for his father and mother [not] till after twelve months’. Rabbah b. Bar Hanah said: ‘And [one may go] to a joyous entertainment of comrades’. An objection was raised: ‘And [one may not go to a joyous feast] as well as to [an entertainment of] rejoicing and to comrades [for] thirty days’! — This [divergence] presents difficulty.

Amemar taught [his comments] on that [same] Baraitha thus: Said Rabbah b. Bar Hanali, ‘But [to go] to a joyous entertainment of comrades is allowed forthwith’. But then [in another version] it is taught: ‘[One may go] to a joyous [feast] after thirty [days] and to an entertainment of comrades [after] thirty days’? — This [discrepancy] is not difficult [to explain]; the latter [version] refers to a first [invitation to an entertainment of comrades], while the former [version] refers to a return entertainment [of comrades].

‘For all other dead one makes a rent [in his tunic] of a handbreadth [in depth]; for one's father or mother [he rends his clothes] till he bares his heart [chest].’ Said R. Abbahu, What text is there [which teaches this]? Then David took hold on his clothes and rent them, and there is no taking hold [of anything] by less than a hand's breadth.

‘For all other dead one rends only the uppermost [garment] even though he be wearing [then] ten; but for one's father or mother one rends them all’. And [the rending of] one's undershirt is not indispensable, be it in man or woman; R. Simeon b. Eleazar says. ‘A woman rends her undermost garment and turns it [front to] back and then again rends her uppermost garment. For all [other] dead, if one desire he divides the [upper] selvage-border of his [garment], and if he does not desire he does not divide it; for his father or mother he must divide, R. Judah says, Any rending [of a garment] that divides not the selvage-border thereof is mere make-believe. Said R. Abbahu: What is the reason for R. Judah's [statement]? — The text: [And Elisha saw it, and he cried, My father, my father, the chariots of Israel and the horsemen thereof! And he saw him no more] and he took hold of his own clothes and rent them in two pieces. Once it says ‘and he rent them’ do I not know that he rent them in two? But [the addition of ‘in two’ implies] that [at the rent] the garments appeared as if torn into two [separate] pieces.24

‘For all [other] dead, one tacks25 the rent together after seven [days] and [completely] reunites [the edges] after thirty [days]; for one's father or mother one tacks it together after thirty [days], but never reunites [the edges]; a woman tacks it together forthwith, out of the respect due to her. When R. Abin came [from Palestine] he said as citing R. Johanan: ‘For all [other] dead, if one desires, he rends [his garment] with the hand, or if he desires he rends by an instrument; for one's father or mother one rends with the hand’. And R. Hiyya b. Abba said, as citing R. Johanan: ‘For all [other] dead [one rends] inside;26 for one's father or mother one rends outside’.27

R. Hisda observed: And the same rule obtains28 on the [death of a] Nasi. An objection was raised: ‘[Those other dignitaries] were not deemed equal to one's father or mother save in regard to re-uniting [the edges of the rent] alone’. Does not this [inequality] hold also for the Nasi?30 — No, the Nasi alone [is an exception].30 The Nesi'ah31 died. Said R. Hisda to R. Hanan b. Raba:32 Turn the mortar33, upside down, stand on it and show the rending [of garments] to all the people!

For a Hakam [sage] one bares [the hand and shoulder] on the right; for the Ab Beth din, on the left, and for a Nasi on both sides’.

Our Rabbis taught: When a Hakam dies, his Beth Hamidrash is in vacation; when the Ab Beth din dies all the Colleges in his city are in vacation and [the people of the synagogue] enter the synagogue[s] and change their [usual] places: those that [usually] sit in the north sit in the south and those that [usually] sit in the south sit in the north. When a Nasi dies, all the Colleges are in vacation36 and the people of the synagogue enter the synagogue37

(3) For a Hakam (doyen), the (shoulder and) right hand are bared; for the president of the Beth din, the (shoulder and) left hand are bared; for the Nasi both (shoulders and) hands are bared. It happened, when R. Eliezer died, that R. (6) Out of deference to Rabbi who was the Nasi, and therefore for him it was infra dignitatem. This was no disrespect to R. Jacob's father, as this is provided for in the rules: ‘And if they (one's father or mother) seem not important (enough) for (the baring), he (the son) does not bare himself even for his father or mother’. Sem. IX. It should be noted that R. Jacob's father was not a qualified Rabbi, and that if ‘Rabbi’ Judah, the Nasi did out of deference to R. Jacob b. (12) For the expression, cf. Judg. XIV, 10ff, where it is connected with a betrothal or marriage celebration. It is this taken by SBH p. 110. Generally, however, it is taken to denote an ordinary social repast shared with one's intimate friends. The import of Rabbah's observation is rather ambiguous and, accordingly, taken variously: — (a) A comrade's entertainment may not be attended until before the thirty days are over, as there is conviviality, eating and drinking; much less may one go to a joyous celebration, such as a betrothal, or marriage ceremony with music and singing. (b) That a comrade's entertainment which provides enjoyment for one's own boon companions should not be entered upon before thirty days; but at a religious ceremonial celebration, a marriage ceremony, a circumcision etc. one may attend sooner, especially if one does not join in the feasting. V. Tosaf., Asheri par. 41, Nahmanides (Torath ha-Adam) and Ritba.

(13) [This proves that the two phrases are not identical].

(14) At the termination of the seven days.

(15) There are various readings: D.S. reads — רֵשָׁה הָאוֹרִיאָתָה ; SBH: אָוֹרִיאָתָה — ‘to begin with’. Cf Ber. 46a and Ritba:  — a ‘voluntary’ entertainment, which can be fixed for a later date.

(16) I.e., when it is his turn to entertain or to attend and he cannot defer it or absent himself and therefore may hold his entertainment forthwith. So Han.

and seven persons read [the weekly portions of the Torah]¹ and thereafter they come away. R. Joshua b. Korhah says, Not that they go and walk about in the street but they sit [at home] in silence.² Neither a halachic theme³ nor an aggadah should be discussed in the house of mourning. It was related of R. Hananiah b. Gamaliel that he used to speak on halachic and aggadic themes in the house of mourning.

Our Rabbis taught: during the first week a mourner does not go out of the door of his house; the second week he goes out but does not sit in his [usual] place [in the synagogue];⁴ the third week he sits in his [usual] place but does not speak; the fourth week he is like any other person. Says R. Judah: There was no need to say ‘In the first week he does not go out of the door of his house’, as then everybody comes into his house to comfort him; [what it should] rather [say is that] the second [week] he does not go out of the door of his house; the third [week] he goes out but does not sit in his [usual] place [in the synagogue]; the fourth [week] he sits in his place but does not speak; in the fifth [week] he is like any other person. Our Rabbis taught: For [the whole] thirty days [the mourner is debarred from] taking a wife. If his wife died, he is forbidden to take another until three Festivals have gone by. R. Judah says. [Until] the first festival and the second he is forbidden [to marry]; before the third he is allowed. Our Rabbis taught: [During the whole] thirty days [the mourner is debarred from donning] pressed⁹ clothes: it makes no difference whether they be old or new clothes coming out of the press.⁹ Rabbi says, They only forbade new clothes; R. that [some] mourning is to be observed¹ on the Sabbath and the others saying that there is no [observance of] mourning on the Sabbath. Those that said that [some] mourning is observed on the Sabbath based themselves on the wording in the Mishnah, [THE SABBATH] ENTERS [INTO COUNT]; the others who said that mourning is not observed on the Sabbath based their view on the wording [AND] DOES NOT INTERRUPT. For, [said they], should you assume that mourning is to be observed on the Sabbath, why need we have [the reservation] AND DOES NOT INTERRUPT? But surely it states [also], [THE SABBATH] ENTERS [INTO COUNT]! — Because he has to teach in the latter part that [FESTIVALS]. . . DO NOT ENTER INTO COUNT, he teaches also [for the sake of symmetry] in the former part [THE SABBATH] ENTERS [INTO COUNT]. And as to the other side who said that [some] mourning is to be observed on the Sabbath, surely it states AND DOES NOT INTERRUPT? — Because he has to state in the latter part that [FESTIVALs] INTERRUPT [the mourning], he teaches also [for the sake of symmetry] in the former part [THE SABBATH . . . ] DOES NOT INTERRUPT.

Might not one suggest that their disagreement goes back to the [divergent] views of [older] Tannaim [as set out in the following Baraitha]? For it has been taught: ‘One who has his dead laid out before him eats [his meals] in another house [room]; if he have not another house [room], he eats in his friend's house; if he have not a friend's house [available], he makes him a partition [ten handbreadths high]; if he have not the wherewithal to make a partition, he turns away his face as he takes his meals. And he does not recline\(^3\) as he eats [nor does he eat his fill]\(^4\) — he eats not meat nor drinks wine, nor does he say the grace. nor does he invite others [partaking in the meal to join in grace with him]\(^5\) nor do others invite him; and he is exempt from a recital of Shema’\(^7\) from Saying the Tefillah\(^8\) or donning phylacteries, and [exempt] from the performance of any religious duties that are commanded in the Torah. [When do these said restrictions obtain? On weekdays]\(^9\) but on Sabbath\(^10\) he takes meals reclining, eats meat and drinks wine, recites grace, invites others [to join him] and others invite him and it is incumbent on him to recite the Shema’ and to say the Tefillah\(^11\) and to perform all the religious duties commanded in the Torah. Rabban Gamaliel\(^12\) says,\(^13\) Since he re-enters into these several obligations [here mentioned] he enters into the obligation of all [religious duties].’ [And commenting on this] R. Johanan said that the actual difference between them is the question of ‘using the [marital] couch’.\(^14\) Now, is not this the issue between them: One Master\(^15\) takes the view that [some] mourning is to be observed on Sabbath and the other Master\(^16\) that there is to be no mourning on Sabbath? Why [do you think so]? Perhaps there\(^17\) the first Tanna might not have gone so far as to forbid,\(^18\) save only because his dead is still laid out in front of him; but here,\(^19\) he might not [forbid].\(^20\) Again, Rabban Gamaliel there\(^21\) would not have gone so far as to allow,\(^20\) save only because there\(^21\) the incidence of mourning has not yet occurred;\(^22\) whereas here,\(^19\) where the incidence of mourning has already occurred, he might also [forbid].\(^20\)

Talmud - Mas. Mo'ed Katan 24a

Mar Yohani enquired of Samuel, Was there [some] mourning [to be observed] on Sabbath or was there no mourning on the Sabbath? — He replied, There is no mourning [to be observed] on the Sabbath.

Some Rabbis sitting in the presence of R. Papa reported in the name of Samuel that a mourner who used the conjugal couch during the [seven] days of his mourning is guilty of a mortal offence. Said R. Papa to them, What was reported was that it is ‘forbidden’, not ‘a mortal offence’, and in the name of R. Johanan it was reported [and not in the name of Samuel]; and if you heard aught [condemned] in the name of Samuel [as a mortal offence] it was this: ‘Said R. Tahlifa b. Abimi, as reporting Samuel, A mourner who did not let his hair grow long and did not rend his clothes is guilty of a mortal offence. For it was said [to Aaron and his surviving sons]: Let not the hair of your heads go loose neither rend your clothes, that ye die not. . . ,’ which [clearly] implies that any [other] mourner if he has not let the hair [of his head] go loose and has not rent his clothes, is guilty of a mortal offence’.

Rafran, b. Papa said, It is taught in the Ebel Rabbathi: ‘A mourner is forbidden to use the [conjugal] couch during his [seven] days of mourning’; and it happened [once] with one who used his [conjugal] couch during the [seven] days of his mourning that swine hauled away his carcass.

Samuel said, Pahaz, are obligatory; Natar, are optional [on the Sabbath] i.e., the unveiling of the head, turning the rent side [of his garment] from front to back and tilting up the couch [into its normal position] are obligatory [on the mourner, in honour of the Sabbath]; donning sandals, the use of the conjugal bed and washing his hands and feet with warm water at [the approach of the] Sabbath even are optional. But Rab says, The unveiling of his head is also optional. Now, what is the difference in the case of the donning of sandals [on the Sabbath] that Samuel treats it as optional? [presumably] because not everyone usually wears shoes; is it not so likewise with the unveiling of the head, as not everybody generally goes about with head unveiled? — Samuel is consistent in this, as Samuel said, ‘Any rending [of clothes] not done in the flush [of grief] is not a [proper] rending, and any muffling [of the face] not alter the manner of the Ishmaelites, is not a proper muffling [for a mourner].’ R. Nahman demonstrated it [by covering himself up in his mantle] right up to the sides of the beard.

Said R. Jacob, as reporting R. Johanan: This statement was made [above] only in reference to one who has no shoes on his feet, but if he has shoes on his feet [on the Sabbath] his shoes give evidence about him.

‘Any rending [of clothes] not done in the flush [of grief] is not a [proper] rending’. But yet [when] they said to Samuel, ‘Rab's soul has gone to rest’, he rent on account of him thirteen garments [and] said: ‘Gone is the man before whom I trembled’. When they told R. Johanan. ‘The soul of R. Hanina has gone to rest’, he rent on account of him thirteen robes of Milesian wool and said: ‘Gone is the man before whom I trembled’. Rabbis are in a different category, since their discussions are always recalled it is [for us] like ‘the first flush [of grief]’.

Said Rabin b. Adda to Raba: Your disciple R. Amram said that it was taught, ‘A mourner [hearing of a fresh bereavement] at any time during the seven [days] rends his [clothes] in the forepart thereof, and if he has [occasion] to change [the garment]. he changes and rends afresh; on the Sabbath he rends [on hearing the news] in the hinder part [of the garment]. and if he has [occasion] to change it, he changes but tears not [afresh]? — That was taught only where [it was] in honour of one's father or mother, [but not for other near of kin].

Are such rents [to be] sewed up or are they not [to be] sewed up? — On that, [Nahmani] father of R. Oshaia and Bar Kappara held different views, one saying that the rents are [to be] sewed up and the other saying that they are not [to be] sewed up. May it be inferred that it was the father of R. Oshaia that said that these were not [to be] sewed up, as R. Oshaia said that they were not [to be] sewed up; from whom had he heard this if not from his father? — Not [necessarily]: he [R. Oshaia] heard it from his master, [who was] Bar Kappara.

Raba said, A mourner may walk about in his [rent] wrap indoors [on the Sabbath]. Abaye found R. Joseph going in and out of his house, his head covered with a sudarium [on the Sabbath]. Said he to him: Do you not, sir, hold the view that there is to be no [observance of] mourning on the Sabbath? — He replied: Thus said R. Johanan: ‘Intimate [forms of] mourning may be maintained on the Sabbath’.

R. ELIEZER SAYS, SINCE THE SANCTUARY [AT JERUSALEM] WAS LAID IN RUINS [THE FEAST OF] ‘AZERETH IS CONSIDERED AS AN [ORDINARY] SABBATH, etc. Said R. Giddal b. Menashia as citing Samuel, The halachah follows the opinion of Rabban Gamaliel. And some attach this comment of R. Giddal b. Menashia to [the following Baraita]: ‘Any infant up to thirty days old is carried out in arms and buried by one woman and two men, but not by one man and two women.'
Abba Saul says, Even by one man with two women. And they [the people] do not stand in line\(^1\) on the [immature] infant's account, nor do they [need] to recite the [usual] mourners’ benediction,\(^2\) nor tender the [usual] condolence to the mourners. An infant thirty days old is taken forth [to burial] in a case.\(^3\) R. Judah says: Not a case that is borne on the shoulder, but one that is borne in the arms; and the people stand in line\(^1\) on its account, and recite the [additional] mourners’ benediction\(^2\) and tender the [usual] condolence to the mourners. One twelve months old is taken forth [to burial] on a bier; R. Akiba says, If the infant is twelve months old and its limbs are like those of one two years old, or two years old and its limbs are like those of one twelve months old, it is carried out on a bier. R. Simeon b. Eleazar says, For any one that is taken out on a bier the public [should] show their distress;\(^4\) for any one that is not taken out on a bier the public do not [need] to show their distress. R. Eleazar says, If he is known to the public at large, the public should participate in the proceedings; if he be not known to many [of the public] they do not [need] to participate. And what is the rule in respect of making lamentation for them? R. Meir in the name of R. Ishmael says: In the case of the poor lamentation is made for a child of three and in the case of the rich for a child of five.\(^5\) R. Judah speaking in his [R. Ishmael's.] name says: With the poor [they make a lament] for children of five; with the rich for children of six. And [as for] the children of 'elders', they are [treated] in the same way as the children of the poor.\(^6\) Said R. Giddal b. Menashia, as citing Rab,\(^7\) The halachah is as stated by R. Judah in the name of R. Ishmael.

R. ‘Anani b. Sason\(^8\) gave a discourse at the door of the Prince\(^9\) [and said]: ‘One day [of mourning] before ‘Azereth\(^10\) [the Feast of Weeks] with [one day of] ‘Azereth count as fourteen days [out of the thirty].’ R. Ammi heard of this and was indignant saying. Is that his own view? It is what R. Eleazar [b. Pedath] said as citing R. Oshaia! R. Isaac the smith gave a discourse at the marquee\(^11\) of the Exilarch [and said]: ‘One day [of mourning] before ‘Azereth with the [one day of] ‘Azereth, count as fourteen days [out of the thirty].’ R. Shesheth heard of this and was indignant, saying, Is that his own view? It is what R. Eleazar said, as citing R. Oshaia! For R. Eleazar, citing R. Oshaia, said: Whence is derived the ruling that ‘Azereth [the Feast of Weeks] is allowed a supplementary extension to full seven days?\(^12\) From what is said: Three times in a year shall all thy males appear before the Lord thy God in the place He shall choose: on the Feast of Unleavened Bread and on the Feast of Weeks and on the Feast of Tabernacles; and they shall not appear before the Lord thy God empty.\(^13\) Just as the Feast of Unleavened Bread has a supplementary [period] to full seven days [for the celebration offerings],\(^14\) the Feast of Weeks\(^15\) has likewise a supplementary extension [for festive offerings] of full seven days.\(^16\) R. Papa invited\(^17\) the elder R. Awia [to act as expositor] and he expounded [the theme]: ‘One day [of mourning] before New Year and New Year's Day [together] account for fourteen [out of the thirty days]’. Said Rabina, According to this, then, one day [of mourning] before the ‘Feast’ [of Tabernacles] together with the [seven days of the] festival and ‘the Eighth Day’ [of ‘Solemn Assembly’] account [together] for twenty-one [out of the thirty days of mourning]. Rabina turned up at Sura-on the Euphrates\(^18\) when R. Habiba of Sura-on-the Euphrates put the question to him: Did you, sir, say that one day\(^19\) before New Year and New Year's Day [together] account for fifteen [out of the thirty days]? — He replied, I did say that, arguing on [the basis of] Rabban Gamaliel's view.20

MISHNAH. NONE REND [THEIR CLOTHES] NOR BARE [THEIR SHOULDER], NOR PROVIDE A REPAST [FOR THE MOURNERS]21 SAVE THOSE [WHO ARE] NEAR OF KIN TO THE DEAD; NOR DO THEY PROVIDE A REPAST SAVE [SEATED] ON AN UPRIGHT COUCH.22

(16) The same argument applies to the analogy with the Feast of Tabernacles which has a range of eight days; but this argument is logically questioned, as thereby the one-day Feast of Weeks would be entitled to a day more than the seven-day Feast of Mazzoth; besides, it is shown that the eighth day of Tabernacles is, by virtue of its special sacrificial tariff a distinct Feast by itself. Talmud - Mas. Mo'ed Katan 25a

GEMARA. [NONE REND etc.] even though [the dead be] a recognized scholar.1 But then, it is taught [otherwise]: If a scholar dies, all are his near of kin?2 ‘All are his near of kin’, say you? — Rather All are like his near of kin. — All rend their clothes on his account and all bare [their shoulders] on his account and all provide a repast for those that mourn on his account in the broad space? — It is a necessary ruling where the deceased was not a scholar. But then if the deceased was a worthy person, one is [still] in duty bound to rend his clothes, as it is taught: ‘Wherefore do a person’s sons and daughters die in infancy? That one should weep and mourn for a worthy person.’ — [You say]. ‘That one should weep and mourn [for a worthy person]’! What, levy a distress on one [in advance]? — Say rather, ‘Because one has not wept and mourned for a worthy person’. — ‘For whoever weeps and mourns for a worthy person, all his sins are forgiven him, on account of the honour he rendered to him [the deceased]’? — It is necessary where the deceased is not a [particularly] worthy person. But yet if one stands here, at the time of a person breathing his last, one is [also] in duty bound [to rend his clothes], as it is taught: R. Simeon b. Eleazar says, One who stands near the dying, at the time when he breathes his last, he is in duty bound to rend [his clothes]: To what is this like? To a scroll of the Law that is burnt, when one is in duty bound to rend [his clothes]. — It is a necessary ruling where one was not standing there at the time when the dying breathed his last.

When the soul of R. Safra went into repose, the Rabbis did not rend [their clothes] on account of him, since, they said, We have not learnt from him [directly]. Said Abaye, Is it taught: ‘When a Master died’? The teaching is: ‘When a scholar dies [all are his near-of-kin]’. Besides, we repeat daily the halachic interpretations reported [in his name] at the College! The [Rabbis of the College] then took the view that what was done was done. Said Abaye to them, We learned: ‘If a scholar dies, as long as they are engaged in a lament for him they are in duty bound to rend [their clothes]’. They thought then of rending forthwith [their clothes]. Said Abaye to them, [No], it is taught: ‘A scholar is honoured at the lament held [on his account].

When the soul of R. Huna came to repose, they thought of Placing a scroll of the law on his bier. Said it. Hisda to them: Should one do for him now something that he did not countenance in his life-time? For R. Tahlifa said: I myself [once] saw R. Huna when he wanted to sit down on his couch, but there was a scroll of the law lying on it, so he put an inverted jar on the ground and put on it the scroll of the law. Obviously he thought that it was forbidden to sit on a couch when there was a scroll of the law lying thereon. Then the bier could not be got through the doorway and they thought of letting it down from the roof. Said R. Hisda, I have learnt this from himself: ‘The honour of a scholar requires that his bier should pass through the door’. They then thought of transferring him from this bed to another, but said R. Hisda to them, I have learnt thus from himself: ‘The honour of a scholar requires that he should be taken out on the first bier’. For Rab Judah, as citing Rab, said, Whence is derived the lesson that the honour of a scholar requires that he should be borne on his first bier? From what is said: And they set the ark of God on a new cart and brought it out of the house of Abinadab that was on the hill. They then readied the gateway and brought it out.

R. Abba then opened [his funerary address]: ‘Our Master [said he] was worthy that the Shechinah should abide with him, but [the fact of his being in] Babylon prevented it’. Thereupon R. Nahman, son of R. Hisda — some say it was R. Hanan, son of R. Hisda — referred to [the text]: The word of the Lord came expressly unto Ezekiel the priest, the son of Buzi in the land of the Chaldeans by the river Chebar. His father tapped him with his sandal, saying to him: Have I not told you not to worry everybody [with this point]? What is meant by the [double expression] ‘Hayoh [hayah]’? That it had been [had come] before [he came to Babylon].

When they brought him up thither [to Palestine, for burial] people told R. Ammi and R. Assi that R. Huna had come. They said: ‘When we were there [in Babylon] we had not [a chance] of raising our heads because of him; now that we have come here he is come after us’. They then were told that it was his coffin that had arrived. R. Assi and R. Assi went out [to meet him]; R. Ela and R. Hanina did not go out. Some say, R. Ela went out, R. Hanina did not go out. What was the reason of the one who went out? According to what is taught [in the following]: ‘If a coffin is passing [on its way] from place to place they stand in a row\(^3\) on account of the deceased, and say the mourners’ benediction on account of him and also offer condolence to the mourners’. What was the reason of the one who did not go out? — According to what is taught [in the following]: ‘If a coffin is passing [on its way] from place to place, they do not stand in a row on account of it, nor say on his account the mourners’ benediction, nor [offer] condolence to the mourners’. These citations contradict one another! — This is not difficult [to explain]; the former [ruling obtains] where the body is intact; the latter where the body is not intact, and R. Huna’s body was intact. Why did one not go out [to meet it]? Because he had not been fully informed of this. Then they said, Where shall we lay him to rest? [Said some, Let us lay him at the side of R. Hiyya];\(^3\) for R. Huna disseminated Torah in Israel\(^3\) and R. Hiyya had likewise disseminated Torah\(^3\) in Israel. Who will bring him into [the cave of] R. Hiyya? — Said R. Hagga ‘I shall bring him in, because I sustained [revised] my studies [before him]\(^3\) when I was but eighteen years of age, never having experienced the effects of an unchaste dream\(^3\) and he made me his attendant\(^3\) and therefore I know of his [pious] deeds. For one day the strap of his phylacteries was [accidentally] reversed,\(^3\) whereupon he sat fasting forty days’. He then brought him in [to the cave].\(^3\) Judah was laid there at the right of his father [R. Hiyya] and on his left was his [twin brother]\(^4\) Hezekiah. Said Judah to Hezekiah: ‘Rise from your place, for it is not good manners that R. Huna be left standing’. As he [Hezekiah] rose a column of fire rose with him.\(^4\) . R. Hagga, seeing that, was overcome with fear, set up the coffins and came away. And the reason that he came to no harm\(^4\) [from the pillar of fire] was because he set up the coffin of R. Huna.\(^4\)

When the soul of R. Hisda went to its rest they [the Collegiates] thought of placing a scroll of the law on his bier. Said R. Isaac to them: What he had disapproved of being done for his master, shall we now do to himself? They then thought that they should not stitch the rent in their garments, when R. Isaac b. Ammi said to them, It is taught:\(^4\) In the case of a Scholar, [who died] as soon as they have turned away their faces, at the rear of the bier, they [may] stitch together [the rent]’.

When the soul of Rabbah\(^4\) son of R. Huna went to its rest and [that of] R. Hammuna, they took them [both] up thither.\(^4\)

Talmud - Mas. Mo'ed Katan 25b

As they came to a bridge the camels halted. Said a certain Arab to those [who accompanied the cortege], What is that? — They replied that the [deceased] Rabbis were doing honour to one another: one saying [as it were], ‘You, Sir, proceed first’, and the other saying, ‘You, Sir, proceed first’. Said he, [the Arab]: [In my judgment], it is right that [a notable the son of a notable], Rabbah son of R. Huna, should take precedence. The camel bearing Rabbah son of R. Huna then passed along first. The molars and teeth of that Arab fell out. Then a certain child opened [his funerary oration] thus:

‘A scion of ancient stock from Babylon came
With records of prowess in combat and fame;
Twice numerous pelican and bittern from far
Came for the ravage and ruin in Shinar.
When [God] views His world with displeasure,
He seizes [great] souls in exacting measure,
Awaiting their coming as new brides, with delight
And, riding on Araboth in empyrean height,

He welcomes the souls of the pure and right.
When the soul of Rabina went into repose, a certain orator opened [his funerary oration] thus:

‘Ye Palms, sway your heads [and deplore]
A Saint, a noble Palm that is no more
Who days and nights in meditation spent;
For him, day and night, let us lament.’

Said R. Ashi to Bar-Kipok, What would you say on such a day [about me]? He responded thus:

‘If a flame among the Cedars fall
What avails the lichen on the wall?
If Leviathan by hook be hauled to land,
What hope have fishes of a shallow strand?
If fish in rushing stream by hook be caught
What death may in marshy ponds be wrought!’

Said Bar Abin to him: ‘[God] forfend that I should talk of "hook" or "flame" in connection with the righteous’. Then what would you say? — I should say:

‘Weep ye for the mourners
Not for what is lost:
He found him rest;
‘Tis we are let distressed’.

R. Ashi was’ offended with them, and their feet were turned. On that day [of R. Ashi’s demise] they did not come to make a lament for him, and that is what R. Ashi had said: ‘Neither shall Bar-Kipok24 bare [his shoulder] nor shall Bar-Abin24 bare25 [his shoulder, for me]’.

When Raba once came to Dagleth [Tekrit],26 he said to Barabin,27 Get up and say something. He rose and said [the following]:28

When more than a ‘third’29 wadeth in water deep Remember the covenant30 and mercy keep.31 We strayed from Thee as a wayward wife;32 Leave us not: as at Marah33 save our life. R. Honin34 was a son-in-law in the Nasi's family. He had no children but he prayed for mercy and had [his wish granted]. On the day when the child was [born] unto him he himself went to his repose, and the funeral orator on that occasion opened [his lament] thus:

Joy is turned to sorrow and Gladness linked with sadness.

When the time of joy35 came nigh

The father heaved a dying sigh:

At [the birth of] his Gracious-little-son36

The Gracious-sire's life was done.

They gave the child the name of Hanan after his father.

When the soul of R. Pedath37 went into repose, R. Isaac b. Eleazar38 opened [his address] thus: This day is as hard for Israel as the day when the sun set at noon-tide, as it is written: And it shall come to pass in that day . . . that I will cause the sun to go down at noon and I will darken the earth in the clear day. And I will turn your feasts into mourning and all your songs into lamentation. . . as the mourning of an only so,39 And, said R. Johanan, that was the day of King Josiah's death.40

When the soul of R. Johanan went into repose R. Ami observed [on his account] the seven [days of mourning] and the thirty. Said R. Abba son of R. Hiyya b. Abba: What R. Ammi did, he did but on his own initiative;41 for thus said R. Hiyya b. Abba, as citing R. Johanan: ‘Even for his master who had taught him Wisdom42 one sits but one day’. When the soul of R. Zera43 went into repose the orator of that occasion opened [his address] thus:

‘The land of Shinea44 was his home of birth

The land of Glory45 reared her Darling46 to fame;

"Woe is me!" saith Rakath47 in lament,

For she hath lost her choicest ornament.’

When the soul of R. Abbahu went into repose the columns at Caesarea ran with tears48 At [the death of] R. Jose49 the roof gutters at Sepphoris ran with blood. At that of R. Jacob [b. Aha],50 Stars were visible in daytime. At that of R. Assi [all cedars]51 were uprooted; [at the death of R. Samuel b. Isaac]51 all trees were uprooted. At that of R. Hiyya [b. Abba]50 fiery stones came down from the sky; at that of R. Menahem [b. Simai]50 all images were effaced52 and came to be [used] as stone rollers;53 at that of Tanhum son of R. Hiyya [of Kefar Acco]51 all human statues were torn out of their position; at that of [R. Isaac, son of R.]51 Eliashib seventy houses were broken into [by theives] at Tiberias;54 at that of R. Haninuna,55 hail stones came down from the sky; at that of Rabbah and R. Joseph the rocks of the Euphrates kissed each other;56 at that of Abaye and Raba the rocks of the Tigris kissed each other. When the soul of R. Mesharsheya went into repose the palms were laden with thorns.57

CXVI, 15: Precious in the sight of the Lord is the death of His saints, a parable of a king who sent an eparchos (prefect) to a place which he directed well. Having completed his term, the king gave him another eparchia (province). In the place which he was leaving they praised him that he had directed them well, and in the place that he was entering they (also) praised him, that he was going to rule them well. Likewise, when the Holy One, blessed be He, sent a righteous man into the world to direct the age and he directed it well, on his departure from the world, people are distressed about him (leaving): for so long as the righteous man is among them he prevents tribulation from coming into the world while the Ministering Angels rejoice about his coming to abide among them. (21) At their ill-chosen metaphors, such as a flame among the cedars (cf. Judg. IX, 15); hooking the Leviathan (cf. n. 5), or marshy shallows, or ‘what is lost’, implying as it were that all his life's best work, the encouragement of scholarship and the careful redaction of the Talmud, are of no lasting value.

Johanan's similar utterance in a sharp disputation with Resh Lakish who was his junior: ‘We cut off the legs of the younger’. Me'ila 7b and also Bez. 25b. The traditional interpretation takes it literally, that they both became crippled. V. next notes.
(24) Yeb. 103a has רע וסילוקי והו and רע וסילוקי והו
(25) I.e., shall not attend my funeral nor bare their shoulder as is done at the lament of a Principal of an Academy. Cf.
The traditional explanation takes the above observation as referring to their ‘lameness’ in connection with a discussion between R. Ashi and Amemar on the possibility of effecting the rite of halizah, i.e., taking off the shoe, by the levir or brother of a deceased childless husband, if he is a cripple where the malformation of his foot is such as to render it impossible to walk or don or take off a shoe, as required by Scriptural law. Deut. XXV, 5-10. According to this interpretation the translation of the sentence is: ‘Neither Bar-Kipok nor Bar-Abin are fit to submit to the rite of halizah. V. Yeb., Sonc. ed. ‘ p. 709.

(26) Tagrit, Tekrit or Tikrit (cf. Obermeyer p. 142). It could not be here the Tigris, as Mahoza itself lay on the Tigris. Tagrit or Tekrit lies higher up on the Tigris between Mosul and Baghdad and is often mentioned in Syrian literature.

(27) It seems doubtful whether it is the same Bar-Abin as above.

(28) The following poem seems to be part of a וינכתה by which had been composed by Bar-Abin on the occasion of a bad flooding of the Tigris in spring time, April-May, cf. Ta'an. 14a (bottom).

(29) A third of the country is flooded. Perhaps שילושי here refers to Israel, the Jewish quarter in the town. Cf. Isa. XIX, 24 and Shab. 88a.

(32) A faithless wife was tried by water, Num. V, 22. The flooding has made the waters undrinkable and caused many deaths.

Talmud - Mas. Mo'ed Katan 26a

And these are rents that are not [to be] sewed up: One who rends [his clothes] for his father or mother; or his master who taught him Wisdom,¹ for a Nasi, or Ab Beth din;² or on hearing evil tidings or [hearing] God's name blasphemed, or when a scroll of the law has been burnt; or at the [sight of the ruined] cities of Judea, the Holy Temple or Jerusalem. And one rends [first] for the Temple and then enlarges [the rent] for Jerusalem.

‘For his father or mother or for his master who taught him Wisdom’. Whence derive we [these rulings]? — From what is written: And Elisha saw it and he cried: My father. my father, the chariots of Israel and the horsemen thereof.³ ‘My father, my father’, that is, [to rend on the loss of] one's father or mother. ‘The chariots of Israel and the horsemen thereof’, that is [for] a Master who taught one Torah. How exactly does it convey this [meaning]? — As R. Joseph rendered it [in Aramaic]: ‘My master, my master, who was better [protection] to Israel with his prayer than chariots and horsemen’.

And whence that these rents are not [to be] reunited? — From what is written [in the same passage]: And he [Elisha] took hold of his own clothes and rent them in two pieces.³ Once it says ‘and he rent then;’, do I not know that he rent them in two [asunder]? It must be meant to teach that the severed parts ever remain rent [apart] in two.⁴ Said Resh Lakish to R. Johanan: Elijah [however] is alive!⁵ — He replied, Since it is written there ‘And he saw ‘him no more,’ he was as dead to him [to Elisha].

‘For a Nasi or Ab Beth din or on hearing evil tidings’. Whence do we derive [these rulings]? — From what is written: Then David took hold of his clothes and rent them, and likewise all the men that were with him. And they wailed and wept and fasted until even, for Saul and for Jonathan his son and for the people of the Lord and for the house of Israel, because they were fallen by the sword.⁶ Now ‘Saul’, that is the Nasi [Prince]; ‘Jonathan’, that is the Ab Beth din. ‘And for the people of the Lord and for the house of Israel’, that refers to ‘evil tidings’ [that reached them].

Said Rab b. Shabba to R. Kahana: Might not one explain that [they did] not [rend their clothes] until [after hearing] all those misfortunes [that had then happened]?⁷ He replied, The repetition of ‘for’ this ‘and for’ that ‘and for’ separate the items [from one another]. Yet do we [have to] rend [clothes] on hearing evil tidings? For when they informed Samuel that King Shapur had slain twelve thousand Jews at Caesarea-Mazaca,⁸ he did not [then] rend his clothes? — They [the Sages] did not say [it should be done] save where the misfortune involves the larger part of the Community resembling the typical instance.⁹ And is it a fact that King Shapur slew Jews? For [it is reported] that King Shapur said to Samuel,¹⁰ ‘May [ill] befall me if I have ever slain a Jew!’ — For there, it was they [the Jews] that had brought it on themselves, as R. Ammi said, that the noise of the harp-strings¹¹ about Caesarea-Mazaca burst the wall of Laodicea.¹²

'[Rents] on [hearing] God's name blasphemed’.¹³ Whence do we derive this? — From what is written: Then came Eliakim the son of Hilkiah who was over the household and Shebna the scribe and Joah the son; of Asaph the recorder to Hezekiah with their clothes rent and told him the [blasphemous] words of Rabshakeh.¹⁴

Our Rabbis taught: ‘It makes no difference whether one hears it [himself] or hears it from another who had heard it, he is in duty bound to rend [his clothes], but the witnesses are not in duty bound to rend [again on reporting] as they have already rent at the time they heard [the blasphemy]’. [You say], ‘as they have already rent at the time they heard [the blasphemy]’, what matters it, since they do hear it now [again in reporting]? — Do not imagine such a thing. For it is written, And it came to pass, when the King heard it, that he rent his clothes: the King [we are told], rent [his clothes], but they [who reported it] did not rend [again]. And whence [do we know] that these rents are not [to be] mended? — That is learnt from a comparison between the ‘rending’ [here] by King Hezekiah and ‘rending’ [elsewhere].

‘[Rents] when a scroll of the law has been burnt’. What is the source for this? — What is written: And it came to pass when Jehudi had read three or four columns that he cut it with a penknife and cast it into the fire that was in the brazier. What is the point of saying ‘[had read] three or four columns’? — They told [King] Jehoiakim that Jeremiah had written a book of Lamentations, [and] he said to them: What is written there? [They quoted] ‘How doth the city sit solitary’.

— [The King] replied: I am the King. They then cited to him [the second verse]: She weepeth sore in the night. He replied [again]: I am the King. [They then cited the third verse]: Judah is gone into exile because of affliction. [Again he replied]: I am the King. [They continued with verse four]: The ways of Zion do mourn. I am the King [he replied]. [They continued with the fifth verse]: Her adversaries are become the head. He asked: Who said that? — [They continued with that same verse]: For the Lord hath afflicted her for the multitude of her transgressions. Forthwith he [began to] cut out all the names of God mentioned therein and burnt them in the fire; hence it is written [in the report there]: Yet they were not afraid, nor rent their garments, neither the King, nor any of his servants that heard all these words, which implies that the [bystanders] should have rent [their clothes]. Said Abaye to R. Papa: Might it not be suggested that the reason [why they should have rent was] for hearing evil tidings? — He replied: [Hardly, for] were there at that time any evil tidings as yet?

Said R. Helbo, as citing R. Huna: One who witnesses a scroll of the law being torn is in duty bound to make two rents: one on account of the [injury to the] parchment and one for [the injury to] the writing, as may be gathered from what is said: Then the word of the Lord came to Jeremiah after that the King had burned the roll and the words which Baruch wrote at the mouth of Jeremiah. ‘The roll,’ that is, the parchment and ‘and the words’, that is, the writing.

R. Abba and R. Huna b. Hiyya were once sitting together. R. Abba got up to [go and] relieve himself. He took off his head phylactery and put it down on a pillow, when a young ostrich came and wanted to swallow it. Said he [R. Abba]: [If that had been swallowed] I should now have had to make two rents. Said the other: Whence do you derive this? A similar thing happened to me and I came to R. Mattenah [asking for guidance] and he had none to give me. I then came to Rab Judah and he told me: Thus said Samuel: ‘The [Rabbis] taught [that one should rend] only where [a sacred text is torn or burnt] by force majeure and as in the example cited’. ‘Or at the [sight of the ruined] cities of Judea: the Holy Temple or Jerusalem’. Whence do we learn this? — From what is written: And it came to pass the second day after he had slain Gedaliah and no man knew it that there come certain men from Shechem, from Shiloh and from Samaria, even fourscore men, having their beards shaven and their clothes rent and having cut themselves, with meal-offerings and frankincense in their hand to bring them in the house of the Lord. Said R. Helbo. as citing ‘Ulla of Berai who reported R. Eleazar: One who sees the cities of Judah in their [state of] ruin, recites the verse: Thy holy cities are become a wilderness, and rends his garment. [On seeing] Jerusalem in its [state of] ruin, one recites: Our holy and our beautiful house, where our fathers praised Thee, is burned with fire and all our pleasant things are laid waste, and rends his garment.

‘He [first] makes a rent for the Holy Temple and then enlarges [the rent] for Jerusalem’. [In contrast to this] some cited [the following Baraita]: ‘It is all the same whether one hears [that Jerusalem is fallen into ruin] or sees [Jerusalem in ruin he is] in duty bound to rend [his garment]. As soon as he reaches the Scopus he rends; and he rends for the holy Temple separately and for Jerusalem separately’? — This [seeming discrepancy] is not difficult [to explain]. The former ruling obtains where he first [of all] encounters the site of the [ruined] Sanctuary and the latter, where he encounters Jerusalem [ruins] first [and afterwards the Sanctuary].

Our Rabbis taught: ‘And all these [rents] they may tack together, baste or pick up [the frayed edges] or with a ladderstitch, but may not reunite the edges [by a sewn seam]’. Said R. Hisda:

It is said that there were then four hundred thousand inhabitants. Cf. Enc. Brit. (11th ed.) IV, 943a. The date 260 however makes this statement rather difficult, as Samuel died in 252 and Papa bar Nasr of Palmyra (Odenath) destroyed Nehardea 259. The occasion must therefore have been earlier, after the murder of Gordian III at Zaitha in 244 when Philip the Arab (of Hauran) made the best terms he could with Shapur [V. Nor may the Alexandrian\(^1\) mending [be used]. Our Rabbis taught: One who rends [his garment] in a part that had been tacked together, basted, or [the edges] picked up by cross or ladderstitch, has not discharged his duty; if in a part which had been rejoined [in a seam], he has discharged his duty. Said R. Hisda: Also [if he rent] in a part [which had been done up] with the Alexandrian mending.

Our Rabbis taught: One is allowed to turn [a garment] upside down\(^2\) and [then] completely mend the rent. R. Simeon b. Eleazar forbids complete mending of the rent. And just as the vendor [of the garment] is forbidden to reunite the rent [completely] the buyer too is forbidden to reunite it [completely] and accordingly the vendor is bound to inform the buyer of [the nature of the rent].

Our Rabbis taught: The initial rending is [to the extent of] a handbreadth,\(^3\) and any extension thereof\(^4\) is to be to the depth of three fingers: these are the words of R. Meir. R. Judah says: The initial rending is [to the extent of] three fingers and the extension may be as small as he cares.\(^5\) Said 'Ulla, The halachah; follows R. Meir in regard to the [initial] rending and in regard to the extension, the halachah follows R. Judah. It is likewise taught: R. Jose Says. The initial rending is [to the extent of] one handbreadth and the extension may be as little as one cares.\(^5\)

Our Rabbis taught: If one was informed that his father died and he rent [his garment], [then] that his son died and he added thereto, the lower [inner portion] may be reunited; the upper parts is not to be reunited; that his son died and he rent his garment, [then] that his father died and he added thereto, the upper part may be reunited [and] the lower part\(^6\) is not to be reunited. [If one was informed] that his father died, that his mother died, that his brother died, that his sister died,\(^7\) he makes one rent for all. R. Judah b. Bathrya\(^8\) says: For all [near of kin he makes] one rent; for his father and/or mother\(^9\) [he makes] another rent: because a rent made for one's father or mother is not to be added to.\(^10\) What is the reason [for this differentiation]? — Said R. Nahman b. Isaac, it is because there is no extension [of a rent] in their case.\(^11\) Samuel said: The halachah follows the view of R. Judah b. Bathrya. But did Samuel say that? Inasmuch Samuel stated that the halachah in matters of mourning is to follow the view of the [more] lenient authority!\(^12\) — The [observance\(^13\) of] mourning comes under one category and the [act of] rending\(^14\) under another [category].

To what extent does one rend [his garment]? — To [exposing his breast down to] the [region of the] navel; some say, [only] down to the [region of the] heart — Although there is no [authentic] proof on this point, there is some [Scriptural] allusion to it, as it is said: And rend your hearts and not your garments.\(^15\) Having reached to the navel, [on hearing another evil report] he moves away a space of three fingers [from the former rent] and rends [afresh]. If the forepart of his garment is become full [of rents], he turns the garment front to back and then rends [again]; if it become full [of rents] in the upper parts, he turns the garment [upside] down; but one who rends the lower part or on the sides [of the garment] has not discharged his duty, save the High Priest, who rends [his garment] below.

[On the extension rending] R. Mattenah and Mar ‘Ukba held different views and both advanced them in the names of [Abba] Samuel's father and R. Levi [b. Sisi]. One said: ‘Anytime during the seven days. one rends [anew for another bereavement] and after the seven he [merely] adds [to the first rent]’. The other said: ‘Anytime during the thirty. one rends [anew for another bereavement] and after the thirty he [merely] adds thereto’. To these statements R. Zera demurred. Now [said R. Zera], in regard to the one who says: ‘Anytime during the seven days one rends [anew for another bereavement]’,\(^16\) why [rend anew]? Because the rent may not be tacked together;\(^17\) then [in the case of a woman] in view of the Master's statement: ‘A woman [mourner] tacks the rent together forthwith’ [may she not] just as well [add even to the first rent]?\(^{17}\) — [No, because] there\(^{18}\) it is [a concession merely] out of the respect due to a woman.\(^{19}\) Again [said R. Zera], in regard to the one who says: ‘Anytime during the thirty, one rends [anew for another].\(^{16}\) why is that? Because the rent is not to be reunited;\(^{20}\) then [in the case of] a rent made for a father or mother that is never to be reunited, [may he not] just as well [add to the rent]?\(^{21}\) — [No, because] there [also the restriction is merely] out of the deference\(^{22}\) due to one's father and mother.

Our Rabbis taught: One who goes forth before the dead with a garment already rent, robs the dead and the living [relatives of their due]. Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel says: If a man says to his friend, ‘Lend me your cloak and I shall go and visit my father who is ill’, and he went and found him already dead, he rends it and then mends the rent. After returning home he returns the cloak and compensates him for the damage done by the rent; but if he had not informed him [of his intention to visit his sick father], he must not touch it.

Our Rabbis taught: If one who is ill sustains bereavement, they should not inform him thereof, lest he thereby become distracted in mind; nor do they direct to have any garments rent in his presence and they direct the women to keep silent [from lamenting] in his presence. Children may be made to rend their clothes in order to stir up sadness and garments are also rent for a father-in-law or mother-in-law, out of deference to one's wife. R. Papa said: It is taught in the Ebel Rabbathi:\(^{23}\) ‘A mourner should not set an infant on his knee, because the child may amuse him and he may thereby incur censure from his fellow men’.

NOR DO THEY PROVIDE A REPAST SAVE\(^{24}\) [SEATED] ON UPRIGHT COUCHES.\(^{25}\) Our Rabbis taught: ‘One who goes to the house of a mourner, if he be on familiar terms with him, may provide the repast for him [to be taken]\(^{26}\) on overturned couches, but if not, he provides the repast for him [to be taken] on couches in erect position’.\(^{27}\)

Raba suffered a misfortune and Abba b. Martha, who is the same as Abba b. Manyomi, went to the house [to provide the mourner's repast for him]. Raba sat on all upright couch while Abba b. Martha sat on an overturned one. Said Raba: How lacking in [good] sense\(^{28}\) is that Associate of the Rabbis!

Our Rabbis taught: One who goes from place to place [and mourning befell him while being on the road].\(^{29}\)

\(^{(8)}\) J.M.K. III, 7 reads: ‘R. Judah b. Tema says. ‘He makes a rent for this one separately and for that one separately: only that he does not make that for his father and that for his mother as an extension”. But is not this (latter part) to the same effect as the former part? Only, what he means is, that one shall make no extension on a rent made for a father or a mother.

\(^{(9)}\) Note the ambiguity indicated here by ‘and/or’, that is, either (a) a separate rent for father and mother jointly, quite apart from the rent made for the other near-of-kin on that occasion; or (b) a separate rent for each, even if the news of their deaths was communicated to him at the same moment. The former interpretation (with some reservations) is accepted by Ritba. V. infra n. 1.

Our Rabbis taught: When do mourners overturn the beds? From the moment [the corpse] is taken from the house: these are the words of R. Eliezer; R. Joshua Says, From the moment that the rolling slab\(^1\) closes the tomb. It happened [when] Rabban Gamaliel the Elder\(^2\) died, as soon as he was taken out of the door of his house, R. Eliezer said to them,\(^3\) Overturn your beds. And after the ‘rolling slab’ had been placed [to close the tomb] R. Joshua said to them:\(^3\) ‘Overturn your beds’. (27) [Our Mishnah accordingly speaks of one who is not on familiar terms with the mourner. Raabad and others (v. Asheri) explain the Mishnah as referring to festival week, when in no case is the meal provided on overturned couches. As, however, no couches are overturned on festival week, the word ‘SAVE’ is redundant and on this interpretation is to be omitted, v. n. 3.]

(28) As Raba and his visitor were not on intimate terms, it was presumptuous on the part of the visitor to sit low, while Raba out of deference to the visitor sat on the couch in its normal position.

(29) So MS.M. Asheri and other texts.
the beds he has in the house; even though he has ten beds in ten places, he overturns them all. And even if there be five brothers one of whom died, they all overturn [their beds]. If, however, it be a bed specially set apart for vestments, that one need not be overturned. A dargesh[11] [couch] need not be overturned, but should be tilted up; Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel says, [In the case of] a dargesh [it is enough if] he loosens the bolster-frame and lets it drop [down] of its own accord. What is a dargesh? — Said ‘Ulla, It is a Couch of Fortune. Said Rabbah to him: But then [how does that] meaning fit the ruling in reference to a king, for we learned: ‘[And when they provide for him the mourner's repast] all the people recline [at the repast ] on the ground while the king sits on the dargesh’. Is there any reason why he should now be seated on [a special couch] which he had hitherto not been able to sit on? To this question R. Ashi demurred, [saying]: What is this difficulty? It may be just as exceptional as eating and drinking [with the king], because heretofore they [the people] did not provide for him food and drink, whereas now [in his mourning] they do provide for him food and drink! But, if difficulty there be [in the offered explanation] it arises from what is taught: ‘There is no need to overturn a dargesh, but he [merely] tilts it up’. Now if dargesh be a ‘Couch of Fortune’ why is there no need to overturn it, surely it is taught: ‘One who [has to] overturn his bed overturns not his own bed alone but all the beds he has in his house! And what is this difficulty? Why, a dargesh is similar to a bed specially set apart for vestments, as it is taught [there]: ‘If it be a bed specially set apart for vestments, that need not be overturned’. But if difficulty there be [in the explanation] it is this [from what is taught there]: ‘Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel says, [In the case of] a dargesh [it is enough if] he unfastens the inner bolster-frame and lets it drop [down]’. Now if you suppose that dargesh means a ‘Couch of Fortune’, what bolster-frame is there [at all]?

When Rabin came [home from Palestine] he said, One of the Rabbis whose name is R. Tahlifa the Palestinian, who used to frequent the leather-mart, told me: What is a dargesh? It is [said he] a couch covered with a hide. It has also been stated: ‘R. Jeremiah said, In a dargesh the interlacing [of the girths] is on the inside; in a bed [couch] the interlacing [of the girths] is on the outside’. Said R. Jacob b. Aha as reporting R. Joshua b. Levi: The halachah follows the opinion of R. Simeon b. Gamaliel. Also this, R. Jacob b. Ala is to have said as reporting R. Assi that where a couch has projecting lean-backs, it is enough if he merely tilts it up.

Our Rabbis taught: If he slept [during the seven days] on a chair, or on a large bench for water-jugs or [even] on the ground. he has not discharged his duty. Said R. Johanan: [He has not discharged his duty] because he has not conformed to [the practice of] overturning the bed.

Our Rabbis taught: We may sweep or stew [the floors] in a house of mourning and wash dishes, cups, jugs and wine-goblets in a house of mourning; but do not bring perfumes or spices into a house of mourning. But this is not [correct]? For Bar Kappara taught: One should not say a benediction for [enjoying the scent of] perfumery or spices in a house of mourning, which implies that while we do not say a benediction, they may yet be taken into the house? — That presents no difficulty: the former ruling is for the house of mourning, while the latter ruling is for the house of comforters.

Our Rabbis taught: Formerly they were wont to convey [victuals] to the house of mourning, the rich in silver and gold baskets and the poor in osier baskets of peeled willow twigs, and the poor felt shamed: they therefore instituted that all should convey [victuals] in osier baskets of peeled willow twigs out of deference to the poor.

Our Rabbis taught: Formerly, they were wont to serve drinks in a house of mourning, the rich in white glass vessels and the poor in coloured glass, and the poor felt shamed: they instituted therefore that all should serve drinks in coloured glass, out of deference to the poor.

Formerly they were wont to uncover the face of the rich and cover the face of the poor, because their faces turned livid in years of drought and the poor felt shamed: they therefore instituted that everybody's face should be covered, out of deference for the poor.

THEY SET NOT DOWN THE BIER IN THE BROADWAY. Said R. Papa, in the case of a scholar [who died] no regard is paid to the festival [week] and much less so during Hanukkah or Purim, and this ruling obtains only in his presence, but away from his presence no [lament is allowed]. But that is not [correct]? For R. Kahana did make a lament for R. Zebid of Nehardea at Pum-Nahara? — Said R. Papi, it was on the day of [receiving] the tidings [of his death] and that is deemed the same as in his presence.

Said ‘Ulla: [The technical meaning of] a hesped is [lamenting with striking] upon the breast, as it is written: [Tremble ye... strip you... and gird sackcloth upon your loins], striking upon the breast. [The technical meaning of] tippuah is clapping one's hands [in grief], and that of killus is [tapping] with the foot [in mourning].

Our Rabbis taught: One who does the tapping with the foot. should not do so when wearing either sandal or boot, because of the danger.\textsuperscript{16}

Said R. Johanan, As soon as the mourner nods his head,\textsuperscript{17} the comforters are no longer allowed to remain seated by him. R. Johanan said also, All are in duty bound to rise at the Presence of the Nasi,\textsuperscript{18} save a mourner, or one who feels ill. And furthermore, said R. Johanan, To all we may say\textsuperscript{19} ‘be seated’ save to a mourner or one who feels ill.\textsuperscript{20}

Said Rab Judah, as citing Rab: A mourner is forbidden to eat of his own bread on the first day [of mourning],\textsuperscript{21} as the All-Merciful said to Ezekiel: And eat thou not the bread of men.\textsuperscript{22} Rabbah and R. Joseph alternately provided the repast to each other.

This also said Rab Judah as reporting Rab: When a person dies in town, all the townspeople are forbidden from doing work. R. Hammuna once came to Daru-matha;\textsuperscript{23} he heard the sound of the funerary-bugle\textsuperscript{24} [and] seeing some people carrying on their work, he said: Let the people be under the shammetha [ban]! Is there not a person dead in town? They told him that there was an Association\textsuperscript{25} in the town. If so, said he to them, it is allowed you [to work]. And furthermore, Rab Judah said, as citing Rab, Whoever indulges in grief to excess over his dead will weep for another. There was a certain woman that lived in the neighbourhood of R. Huna; she had seven sons one of whom died [and] she wept for him rather excessively. R. Huna sent [word] to her: ‘Act not thus’. She heeded him not [and] he sent to her: If you need my word it is well; but if not, are you anxious to make provision\textsuperscript{26} for yet another? He [the next son] died and they all died. In the end he said to her, Are you fumbling with provision for yourself? And she died.

[Our Rabbis taught]:\textsuperscript{27} ‘Weep ye not for the dead, neither bemoan him’\textsuperscript{28} [that is], ‘Weep not for the dead’ [that is] in excess, ‘neither bemoan him’ — beyond measure. How is that [applied]? — Three days for weeping and seven for lamenting and thirty [to refrain] from cutting the hair and [donning] pressed clothes; hereafter, the Holy One, blessed be He, says, ‘Ye are not more compassionate towards him [the departed] than I’.

Weep sore for him that goeth away.\textsuperscript{28} Said Rab Judah [as reporting Rab],\textsuperscript{29} that means, Weep for him who goes [to his long home] childless.\textsuperscript{30} R. Joshua b. Levi would not go to [visit] a house of mourning save to that of one who had gone childless, for it is written [said he]: Weep sore for him that goeth away,\textsuperscript{31} for he shall return no more nor see his native country.\textsuperscript{28} R. Huna said this [verse refers to] one who committed a sinful act and repeated it again. R. Huna is here adhering to his own view, as he said: ‘As soon as a person has continued a sinful act and has repeated it, it has become unto him permissible’. [You say], ‘Become unto him permissible’? Can you conceive such a thing? — Say rather that it has become unto him as though it were something permissible.

Said R. Levi: A mourner [during] the first three days should look upon himself as if a sword is resting between his shoulders;\textsuperscript{32} from the third to the seventh, as if it stands in the corner facing him; thereafter as if it is moving alongside him in the [broad] market place.

with reference to a woman who died in childbirth,¹ but [that of] other women may be set down [in the broadway]. R. Eleazar says: [The rule applies] even to other women, as it is written: And there Miriam died and was buried there,² which shows that her death was close to her [place of] burial. R. Eleazar also said that Miriam also died by the Divine kiss [like Moses]: We interpret the expression 'there' [used at Miriam's death] in the same sense as that of the expression 'there' used of Moses.³ Wherefore then is it not said about her [that she died] by the mouth of the Lord?³ Because it would be unbecoming to say so.

Said R. Ammi, Wherefore is the account of Miriam's death⁴ placed next to the [laws of the] red heifer?⁵ To inform you that even as the red heifer afforded atonement [by the ritual use of its ashes], so does the death of the righteous afford atonement [for the living they have left behind].

R. Eleazar said, Wherefore is [the account of] Aaron's death closely followed by [the account of the disposal of] the priestly vestments?⁶ [To inform you] that just as the priest's vestments were [means] to effect atonement,⁷ so is the death of the righteous [conducive to procuring] atonement.
Our Rabbis taught: If one die suddenly, this is [reckoned] as being ‘snatched away’; if one is ill one day and dies, that is reckoned as being hustled away; R. Hanania b. Gamaliel says, That is death by a stroke, for it is said: Son of Man, behold I take away from thee the desire of thine eyes with a pestilential stroke, and it is written [thereafter], So I spoke unto the people in the morning and at even my wife died. After two days’ illness, it is a rather precipitous death. After three — it is one of reproof; [after] four — it is one of rebuff [snubbing]; [after] five is the ordinary death of all men. (Said R. Honin: What is the text [for this]? Behold thy days are approached that thou must die. ‘Behold’ [accounts for] one; ‘thy days’ accounts for two [more]; ‘are approached’ [gives us] two [more], which makes five. ‘Behold’ makes one because the word for ‘one’ in Greek is hen.)

If one dies [under] forty years [old] — that is death by kareth; at fifty-two years — that is the death of Samuel of Ramah; at sixty — that is by the hand of Heaven, (Said Mar Zutra: What is the text [for this]? Thou shalt come to thy grave in ripe age, as the [numerical value of the] word for ‘in ripe age’ yields sixty.) ‘At seventy, it is the death of the hoary head; at eighty it is the death of a vigorous [old man], for it is written, The days of our years are three score and ten, or even by reason of strength four score years. Said Rabbah, From fifty to sixty years [of age], that is death by kareth, and the reason why this has not been mentioned was out of deference to [the prophet] Samuel of Ramah. R. Joseph, on his attaining the age of sixty, made a festival day for the Rabbis [of the Academy] saying, ‘I have just passed beyond [the limit of] kareth’. Said Abaye to him: ‘Granted, Sir, that you have passed the [limit of] kareth as to years. but as to the [limit of sickening] days have you escaped that’? He replied: ‘Nevertheless, hold on to the half’. R. Hanna's soul went into repose suddenly and the Rabbis [of the academy] were perturbed thereat when Zoga who hailed from Adiabene taught them: ‘What we learned applies only when one has not attained the "age of strength" [eighty] but if one has attained the "age of strength" [eighty] a sudden death is dying by the kiss’. Raba said: [Length of] life, children and sustenance depend not on merit but [rather on] mazzal. For [take] Rabbah and R. Hisda. Both were saintly Rabbis; one master prayed for rain and it came, the other master prayed for rain and it came. R. Hisda lived to the age of ninety-two, Rabbah only lived to the age of forty. In R. Hisda's house there were held sixty marriage feasts, at Rabbah's house there were sixty [more] bereavements. At R. Hisda's house there was the purest wheaten bread for dogs, and it went to waste; at Rabbah's house there was barley bread for human beings and that not to be had. This too, Raba said: These three requests I made of Heaven; two were granted me and one was not. [I prayed for] the scholarship of R. Hanna and the wealth of R. Hisda which were granted me; but the modest disposition of Rabbah son of R. Hanna, that was not granted me.

R. Se'orim, Raba's brother, while sitting at Raba's bedside saw him [Raba] going into sleep [dying], when he [the invalid] said to his brother: ‘Do tell him, Sir, not to torment me’. R. Se'orim replied: ‘Are you, Sir, not his intimate friend?’ Said Raba: ‘Since [my] mazzal has been delivered [to him], he takes no heed of me’. R. Se'orim then said to the dying: ‘Do, Sir, show yourself to me [in a dream]’. He did show himself and when asked: ‘Did you, Sir, suffer [pain]?’ He replied: ‘As from the prick of the cupping instrument’. Raba, while seated at the bedside of R. Nahman, saw him sinking into slumber [death]. Said he to Raba: ‘Tell him, Sir, not to torment me’. Said Raba: ‘Are you, Sir, not a man esteemed?’ Said [R. Nahman] to him, ‘Who is esteemed, who is regarded, who is distinguished [before the Angel of Death]?’ Said [Raba] to him: ‘Do, Sir, show yourself to me [in a dream]’. He did show himself. Raba asked him: ‘Did you suffer pain, Sir?’ He replied: ‘As [little as] the taking of a hair from the milk; and were the Holy One, blessed be He, to say to me, Go back to that world as you were, I wish it not, for the dread thereof [of death] is great’.

R. Eleazar was eating some terumah [priest's holy food] when he showed himself to him. Said he, Am I not [in the pious act of] eating terumah and is not that designated ‘holy [meat]’? The [fatal] moment [thus] was past! R. Shesheth caught sight of him in the market place. Quoth he: ‘Do you [seize me] in the market place like a beast? Come to [the] house!’ R. Ashi caught sight of him in the market place. Quoth he: ‘Grant me thirty days’ respite and I shall revise my studies, inasmuch as you say [in Heaven above]: "Happy he that cometh hither bringing his learning ready with him".’

He replied: R. Huna b. Nathan is close on your heels and, ‘No sovereignty encroaches upon the sphere of another even to a hair’s breadth’.

As for R. Hisda, he could never overcome him as his mouth was never silent from [repeating] his learning by rote. So he went and settled on the cedar tree of the Schoolhouse. The tree cracked; R. Hisda stopped [and] he overcame him.

As for R. Hiyya, he could not gain access to him. So one day he adopted the guise of a poor man and came and rapped at the gate, saying, ‘Bring me out some bread’. They [others] brought out some bread to him. Said he then to R. Hiyya: ‘Don't you, Sir, treat the poor kindly? Why not, Sir, [also] treat kindly this man [standing outside]?’ He [R. Hiyya] opened the door to him, whereupon, showing him a fiery rod, he made him yield his soul.

Talmud - Mo'ed Katan 28b

MISHNAH. WOMEN MAY RAISE A WAIL DURING THE FESTIVAL [WEEK], BUT NOT CLAP [THEIR HANDS IN GRIEF]; R. ISHMAEL SAYS, THOSE THAT ARE CLOSE TO THE BIER CLAP [THEIR HANDS IN GRIEF]. ON THE DAYS OF NEW MOON, OF HANUKKAH AND OF PURIM³ THEY MAY RAISE A WAIL AND CLAP [THEIR HANDS IN GRIEF]. NEITHER ON THE FORMER² NOR ON THE LATTER OCCASIONS DO THEY CHANT A DIRGE. AFTER [THE DEAD] HAS BEEN IN TERRED THEY NEITHER RAISE A WAIL NOR CAP [THEIR HANDS IN GRIEF]. WHAT IS MEANT BY RAISING A WAIL’ [‘INNUY]?²³ WHEN ALL SING IN UNISON. WHAT IS MEANT BY A DIRGE [KINAH]?⁵ WHEN ONE SPEAKS⁵ AND ALL RESPOND AFTER HER, AS IT IS SAID: AND TEACH YOUR DAUGHTERS WAILING AND ONE ANOTHER [EACH] LAMENTATION [KINAH].⁵ BUT AS TO THE FUTURE [DAYS] TO COME, [THE PROPHET] SAYS: HE WILL DESTROY DEATH FOR EVER AND THE LORD GOD WILL WIPE AWAY TEARS FROM OFF ALL FACES.⁷

GEMARA. What say the women [in lament]? — Said Rab.⁸ ‘Cry woe o'er him that is now departing! Cry woe o' er his wounds⁹ [and smarting]!’ Raba¹⁰ said, The women of Shoken-Zeb¹¹ speak thus:

‘Cry woe o'er him that is departing!

Cry woe o'er his wounds and smarting!’

Raba also said, The women of Shoken-Zeb speak thus:

‘Withdraw the bone from out the pot¹²

And the kettles¹² fill with water [hot]’.

Raba said this also: The women of Shoken-Zeb speak thus:

‘Be muffled,¹³ ye high mountains,

[Clouds] covering your head;
Of high lineage and grand ancestry

Came he that is dead’.

Also this said Raba: The women of Shoken-Zeb speak thus:

‘Borrow [and buy] a Milesian robe

To dress a free-born son;

[Give it free of charge] for Provision left he none’.

And furthermore said Raba: The women of Shoken-Zeb speak thus:

‘Comes hurrying and scurrying Tumbling aboard the ferry

And having to borrow his fare’.

Again this said Raba: The women of Shoken-Zeb speak thus:

‘Our brothers are merchants who

At the custom houses are searched’.

And again said Raba: The women of Shoken-Zeb speak thus:

‘This death or that death [is the end of the quest];

Our bruises are the rate of interest’.

It is taught: R. Meir was wont to say: ‘[It is written], It is better to go to the house of mourning than to go to the house of feasting; for that is the end of all men and the living will lay it to heart. ["And the living will lay it to heart"], what is that? Things about death; if one makes lament, others will lament for him; if one assists at burial, others will bury him; if one bears the bier, others will bear him; if one raises [his voice] others will raise [their voice] for him’. Others read [the last]: ‘And he that raises not [himself with pride], others will raise him, as it is written: Glorify not thyself in the presence of the King and stand not in the place of great men; for better is it that it be said unto thee, Come up hither, than that thou shouldest be put lower in the presence of the prince’.

Our Rabbis taught: When the sons of R. Ishmael died, four Elders went into his house to comfort him. R. Tarfon, R. Jose the Galilean, R. Eleazar b. ‘Azaria and R. Akiba. Said R. Tarfon to them: ‘Know ye, he is a great sage and erudite in homiletic exposition, let none of you break in while another is speaking’. Said R. Akiba: ‘And I be last!’ R. Ishmael opened [the conversation] and said: ‘His sins were many, his sorrowful bereavements came in close succession; he troubled his Masters once and a second time!’ R. Tarfon responded and said: ‘But your brethren, the whole house of Israel bewail the burning which the Lord hath kindled. Is not this universal sorrow more due now than there? Why, if Nadab and Abihu who had performed but one office — as it is written: And the sons of Aaron presented the blood unto him — how much more due to the sons of R. Ishmael? R. Jose the Galilean then responded and said: It is written: And all Israel shall make lamentation for him and bury him. Is not more due now? Why, if Abijah Jeroboam's son who had done but one good thing — as it is written: Because in him there is found some good thing towards the Lord God of Israel, — was mourned in such universal manner, how much more is due to the sons of Ishmael!

What was that ‘good thing’? R. Zeira and R. Hanina b. Papa [gave different explanations]: one saying that he left his charge [post] and went on a festive pilgrimage [to Jerusalem]; the other saying that he removed the military guards that his father had posted on the roads to prevent the Israelites from going on a pilgrimage [to Jerusalem].

R. Eleazar b. ‘Azaria then responded and said: ‘Thou shalt die in peace and with the burning of thy fathers, the former kings that were before thee, so shall they make a burning for thee. Is not more due now? Why, if Zeclekhiah King of Judah who had performed but one office in having had Jeremiah lifted from the mire, was to be mourned thus, how much more is due to the sons of Ishmael’!

R. Akiba then responded and said: ‘In that day there shall be a great mourning in Jerusalem, as the mourning of Hadadrimmon in the valley of Megiddon: [On this] R. Joseph said, Had we not the Aramaic Targum rendering of that text, I would not have known what it said there: ‘In that time the mourning at Jerusalem will be as great as the lament over Ahab son of Omri whom Hadadrimmon son of Tabrimmon had slain and as the lament over Josiah son of Amon whom Pharaoh the Lame [Necho] had slain in the valley of Megiddon. Is not more due now? Why, if Ahab King of Israel who had done but one good thing — as it is written: And the king was stayed up in his chariot against the Arameans [and died at even] — was lamented thus how much more is due to the sons of Ishmael’!

Said Raba to Rabbah b. Mari, It is written about Zedekiah: Thou shalt die in peace; yet it is written [thereafter]: Moreover he [Nebuchadnezzar] put out Zedekiah's eyes — He replied that R.
Johanan had explained it thus, [namely] that Nebuchadnezzar died in Zedekiah's lifetime. Again said Raba to Rabbah b. Mari, it is written: Therefore, behold I will gather thee to thy fathers, and thou shalt be gathered to thy grave in peace; yet it is written [about him elsewhere]: And the archers shot at King Josiah;' [and the King said to his servants, Have me away for I am sore wounded; And [on this last part] R. Judah citing Rab, commented: They riddled his body like a sieve! — This, too he replied, R. Johanan explained that the Temple had not been destroyed [as threatened] in his lifetime.

Said R. Johanan Comforters are not permitted to say a word until the mourner opens [conversation], as it is said: So they sat down with him on the ground. . . and none spake a word unto him; for they saw that his grief was very great. After this opened Job his mouth. Then answered Eliphaz the Temanite.

Said R. Abbahu: Whence [derive we the practice] that the mourner reclines in the foremost place [at the mourners’ repast]? From what is said [by Job]: I chose out their way, and sat chief, and dwelt as a king it, the army, as one comforteth the mourners. As one comforteth the mourners’? Does not that convey [rather] that he was [at the head in] comforting others? — Said R. Nahman b. Isaac: [Not necessarily as] it is written Yenahem, it may be rendered, ‘as when one comforteth mourners’.

Mar Zutra said: The rule might be [derived from here]: And prince be he who is embittered — distraught among those stretched [on couches]. Said R. Hama b. Hanina, Whence [is derived the practice] that a bridegroom reclines in the foremost place [at the marriage feast]? From what is said: I will rejoice in the Lord . . . for He hath clothed me with the garments of salvation . . . as a bridegroom that ministers in his diadem as a priest. Which means that just as a priest [with whom he is compared] is at the head, so is the bridegroom [placed] at the head. And whence have we this ruling about the priest himself? — From what is taught in [a Baraita of] the School of R. Ishmael: And thou shalt sanctify him [the priest] for he offereth the bread of thy God,\textsuperscript{54} which means, [sanctify him] in every matter appertaining to hallowed things, to be first to begin,\textsuperscript{55} first to say grace, first to take a fair portion.

(12) Reading הָפֵר מִבָּקָשׁ instead of יָפֵר מִבָּקָשׁ as in our text (or D.S. יָפֵר מִבָּקָשׁ) which means, ‘Withdraw the bone from the molar tooth’ which gives no sense, as the dying do not suck or gnaw a bone. It has hitherto defied all explanation. It is probably a misreading of יָפֵר מִבָּקָשׁ from  or Latin cacabus a three-legged cooking pot synonymous with cucuma — קָמִים — associated here with יָפֵר מִבָּקָשׁ =  (V. Shab. 41a) meaning: He's dead, he needs no broth; fill now the pots and kettles with hot water to wash the dead instead.

Job. IV, 1.

On the table etiquette of the ancients, both in Palestine and in Babylon, v. Ber. 46b, where both R. Naliman b. Isaac and Mar Zutra mentioned here are among the persons taking part in the discussion on this point.

Job XXIX, 25. Possibly R. Abbahu and Mar Zutra (mentioned next) read into the terms ‘chief’ and ‘king’ the popular, familiar usage of these terms in Latin and Greek, by which they designated the person presiding over the toasts at the end of a feast, the rex convivii, basileus, or symposiarch. The following citation from Sem. XIV, (end), will make it clear: ‘Ten cups (toasts) they drink in the house of mourning; two before the meal, five during the meal and three after the meal (namely) one for the benediction of the mourners, one for comforting the mourners and one (in reference) to acts of loving-kindness (the merits of the deceased; the bearers of the biers and the orators at the funeral; cf. Sot. 14a). Then they added more cups — one (toast) for the "chief of the synagogue", one for the "administrator of the synagogue" and one to (the memory of) Rabban Gamaliel. But when the Beth din saw that some were coming away drunk they issued an inhibition (on the innovation) and made them go back to the old practice’. For considerable divergencies v. Keth. 8b. Cf. Ber. 46b. In J. Ber. III, 1 it is stated that the cup for Rabban Gamaliel had been introduced after his death. Seemingly it was introduced to commemorate his great social reform in directing the simplification of funerals. Cf. supra 27b, p. 177.

Which is the equivalent of the passive ‘as when mourners are being comforted’. For other instances of this use of the third person singular in the passive sense v. Gen. XLVIII, 1-2 (someone told Joseph, one told Jacob). Cf. Gesenius, Hebrew Grammar, 144, 3a. Or, it may be pointed = as when ‘it being comforted’, i.e., when comfort is being tendered to mourners.

Amos VI, 7. The rendering is here adapted to the requirements of the exposition. The prophet there threatens: Therefore now shall they (the callous revellers) go captive at the head of captives and the revelry (יִזְרַם) of them that lay (מהרָה) stretching (on banqueting couches) shall pass away (יָבָא). It is the three words, יִזְרַם מָהֵר הַרְחִיקִים , in the second half of the sentence that are being strained to yield the sense required by Mar Zutra.

(50) יָבָא (and shall pass away) = יָזָר (and prince be).

(51) מָהֵר is divided into מַהְרָה (bitter) and מָהַר (moved, perturbed, distraught). Cf. Rashi on the parallel passage Keth. 69b. The term מָהַר denotes solemn feasting, particularly a funerary repast, as seems clear from Jer. XVI, 5-8. Cf. Ar. Compl., a.v. Also, Kimhi on Jer. l.c. and on Amos, l.c.

Chapter I

Mishnah. All are bound to appear [at the Temple],\(^1\) except a deaf man [Hershel],\(^2\) an imbecile and a minor,\(^3\) a person of unknown sex [Tumtum],\(^4\) a hermaphrodite,\(^5\) women, unfreed slaves,\(^6\) the lame, the blind, the sick, the aged, and one who is unable to go up on foot.\(^7\) Who is [in this respect deemed] a minor?\(^8\) Whosoever is unable\(^9\) to ride on his father's shoulders and go up from Jerusalem to the Temple mount. [This is] the view of Beth Shammai.

But Beth Hillel say: whoever is unable to hold his father's hand and go up from Jerusalem to the Temple mount, for it is said: \(^{10}\) three regalim.\(^{11}\)

Beth Shammai say: the pilgrimage-offering\(^{12}\) must be worth [at least] two pieces of silver\(^{13}\) and the festal offering\(^{14}\) one ma'ah of silver.\(^{15}\) But Beth Hillel say: the pilgrimage-offering must be worth [at least] one ma'ah of silver and the festal sacrifice two pieces of silver.

Gemara. What does [the word] All come to include?\(^{16}\) — It comes to include one who is half a slave and half a freedman.\(^{17}\) But according to Rabina, who says: one who is half a slave and half a freedman is exempt from appearing [at the Temple], what does [the word] All come to include? — It comes to include one who was lame on the first day [of the festival] and became well\(^{18}\) on the second.

This will be right according to the one who says: All of them\(^{19}\) can make good [the sacrifices] for one another;\(^{20}\) but according to the one who says: All of them can make good [the sacrifices] of the first day [only],\(^{21}\) what does All, come to include? — It comes to include a man who is blind in one eye; and it is contrary to the opinion of the following Tanna. For it is taught: Johanan b. Dahabai\(^{22}\) said in the name of R. Judah: a man who is blind in one eye is exempt from appearing [at the Temple]\(^{23}\) as it is said: \(^{24}\) Yir'eh [He will see], Yera'eh [He will be seen].\(^{25}\)

As He comes to see, so he comes to be seen: just as [He comes] to see with both eyes, so also to be seen with both eyes. Alternatively, I could answer: Actually, it is as I said at first;\(^{26}\) and as for your objection [arising] from the statement of Rabina, it is not a [valid] objection: the one [teaching]\(^{27}\) is according to the earlier Mishnah,\(^{28}\) and the other\(^{29}\) is according to the later Mishnah.\(^{30}\) For we have learnt: One who is half a slave and half a freedman serves his master one day and himself the other day: this is the view of Beth Hillel. Said Beth Shammai to them:

\(^{1}\) i.e., at the Temple Court (רמות), on the three Pilgrim Festivals of Passover, Pentecost and Tabernacles; cf. Ex. XXIII, 14, 17; Deut. XVI, 16. The word רצוי (rendered in our text, ‘to appear’) is understood by Rashi, Maimonides, Jastrow, Danby etc. in the sense of נמוך, the personal appearance of the pilgrim in the Temple. But R. Tam (in Tosaf. a. l.) regards it as referring to the burnt-offering (v. Lev. I, 3f) brought by the pilgrim on his visit to the Temple i.e. it stands for낭ת רצוי; cf. end of Mishnah, 4b, 6b et seq.

\(^{2}\) Explained infra 2b as a ‘deaf-mute’.

\(^{3}\) The deaf man, imbecile and minor are exempted from the observance of this and other positive precepts on account of lack of intelligence. The reason for the exemption of others is explained in the Gemara.

\(^{4}\) from מלחמן ‘to fill up stop’: one whose genitals are concealed or undeveloped.

\(^{5}\) Grk. **.

\(^{6}\) Explained infra 4a as ‘half free’; v. p. 2, n. 6.
I.e., from Jerusalem to the Temple Mount.

Ordinarily, a boy up to the age of thirteen years and a day is considered a minor

I.e., is too young; but as soon as he is old enough he must visit the Temple, because, although exempt by the Law of the Torah till he reaches his majority (v. n. 8), the Rabbis imposed on the father the duty of training him in the observance of the precepts.

Ex. XXIII, 14.

The word translated above ‘to appear’ (v. p. 1, n. 1). Here it stands for הָעַלְתָּה רַאוֹיוֹתָה the burnt-offering, which, it was inferred from Ex. XXIII, 15 (end), the pilgrim had to bring on visiting the Temple.

I.e., two ma'ahs, v. n. 4.

whence our tractate derives its name. It was a peace-offering (cf. Lev. III, 15) and was inferred from Lev. XXIII, 41; v. infra 9a.

A sixth of a denar, v. Glos.

The word ‘ALL’ is emphatic; it implies that persons who might be thought exempt are subject to the commandment; hence the question.

E.g., he belonged to two masters, and was freed by one of them.

Lit., ‘became straight’ (in limb).

I.e., the seven individual days of the festival.

I.e., if a man was unfit to bring his sacrifices on the first day of the festival (e.g., if he was exempt on account of lameness) and during the festival he became fit (i.e., regained the use of his leg), it is his duty to make good his sacrificial dues on the day of the festival that he becomes fit.

I.e., if he was unfit on the first day, he is completely exempt, though he becomes fit in the course of the festival.

Probably the name means, ‘Goldsmith’.

Or, according to Tosaf. (v. p. 1, n. 1), ‘exempt from bringing the pilgrimage-offering’; and so wherever the translation has ‘appearing’.

Ex. XXIII, 17.

may be vocalised הָאָבָדָה (Kal, ‘He will see’) or following the Massorah, הָאָבָדָה (Nif'al, ‘He will be seen, appear); cf. Gen. XXII, 14. By combining both readings, it is deduced that the ‘seeing’ and ‘being seen’ must be alike in regard to fulness of vision i.e., in regard to the use of both eyes: just as God comes to see the pilgrim with both eyes (an anthropomorphism for full vision necessitated by the desired parallel in respect to man), so when the pilgrim comes to appear before God, he must be able to see with both eyes. So Rashi: but R. Tam (in Tosaf. a.l.) prefers to make man the subject, and construes thus; הָאָבָדָה הָאָבָדָה just as the pilgrim is seen by God, Who has two eyes (i.e., full vision), so he must see Him (i.e., appear in the Divine presence) with both eyes.

I.e., that the word all comes to include a half-slave.

I.e., the statement that unfreed slaves are exempt from visiting the Temple, which Rabina interprets as inferring such as are half free.

I.e., the Mishnah as it was formulated before the School of Hillel (whose ruling was authoritative against that of the Shammaite School cf. Ber. 36b and Gratz, vol. IV, p. 424, n. 4; Heb. edn. vol. II, p. 172, n. 1) came over to the view of the School of Shammai מִשְׁנָה דֶּרֶךְ שֵׁמֶן (rendered, ‘the earlier Mishnah’) may refer either (a) to a single previous ruling later revised, or (b) to an entire compilation of the Mishnah, in which case it may be rendered, ‘the first Mishnah’; cf. J.E. vol. VIII, P. 610f, and refs.

V. note 4.

I.e., representing the later opinion of the School of Hillel. Though this second opinion contradicts the first, the earlier ruling was not erased from the Mishnah, on the principle that a Mishnah (ruling) which had once been taught was not to be removed from its place; cf. Yeb. 30a et passim.

You have made it right for his master,¹ but you have not made it right for himself² He may not marry a bondwoman, nor may he marry a freewoman. A Should he abstain [from marriage]? But then was not the world created only for propagation? as it is said: ‘He created it not a waste, He formed it to be inhabited’. For the sake of the social order, therefore, his master must be compelled to set him free, and the latter must give him a bond for the half of his value. Thereupon Beth Hillel retracted and gave their ruling in accordance with the view of Beth Shammai.

EXCEPT A DEAF MAN [HERESH], AN IMBECILE AND A MINOR etc. [Our Mishnah] speaks of HERESH similarly as of the IMBECILE and MINOR: just as the IMBECILE and MINOR lack understanding, so HERESH [means] one that lacks understanding. This teaches us in accordance with that which we have learnt: ‘Wherever the Sages speak of HERESH, [it means] one who can neither hear nor speak. This [would imply] that he who can speak but not hear, hear but not speak is obligated. We have [thus] learnt that which our Rabbis taught. One who can speak but not hear is termed HERESH: one who can hear but not speak is termed ‘Illem [dumb]; both of these are deemed sensible in all that relates to them. And whence [is it deduced] that one who can speak but not hear is termed Heresh, and one who can hear but not speak is termed ‘Illem? — For it is written: ‘But I am as Heresh [a deaf man], I hear not,’ and I am as ‘Illem [a dumb man] that openeth not his mouth. Alternatively, I could explain: As people say, His words have been taken away. ‘One that can speak but not hear, hear but not speak is obligated’. But surely it is taught: One that can speak but not hear, hear but not speak is exempt! — Said Rabina, and according to others, Raba: [Our Mishnah] is defective and should read thus: All are bound to appear [at the Temple] and to rejoice, except a Heresh that can speak but not hear, [or] hear but not speak, who is exempt from appearing; but though he is exempt from appearing, he is bound to rejoice. One, however, that can neither hear nor speak, an imbecile and a minor are exempt even from rejoicing, since they are exempt from all the precepts stated in the Torah. Likewise it is also taught: All are bound to appear [at the Temple] and to rejoice, except a Heresh that can speak but not hear, [or] hear but not speak, who is exempt from appearing; but though he is exempt from appearing

(1) I.e., he gets the full benefit of his half-ownership.
(2) R. Meshullam (in Tosaf.) prefers the opposite reading. ‘You have made it right for himself, but you have not made it right at all for his master’; because the latter loses any possible share of the offspring.
(3) Being partly a freedman he may not marry a slave; being partly a slave he may not marry a freewoman; v. Deut. XXIII, 18 and Targum Onkelos a.l.
(5) Isa. XLV, 18.
(6) Lit., ‘for the sake of the establishment (or improvement) of the world’; cf Git. IV, 2, 3, where Danby renders; ‘as a precaution for the general good’.
(7) Ter. I, 2.
(8) I.e., together with the Imbecile and Minor.
(9) Tosaf. quotes and explains exceptions to this rule: cf. Meg. 19b and Hul. 2a.
(10) E.g., he was able to hear when born and learnt to speak, but later became deaf.
(11) I.e., to fulfil the precept of appearing at the Temple.
(12) I.e., our Mishnah supports and thus gives validity to the following Baraitha. (11) This statement agrees, by implication, with our Mishnah, which puts only a deaf-mute in the same category as an imbecile.
(13) Ps. XXXVIII, 14.
(14) I.e., a popular proverb; v. J.E vol X, p. 226f.
(15) I.e., אַלְמָנָה (‘dumb’) is an abbreviation of אַלָּנְמָנוּת הַפְּכַלָּה (‘his words have been taken away’).
(16) I.e., from visiting the Temple; thus the Baraitha contradicts our Mishnah.
(17) V. Deut. XVI, 14. Ritually the rejoicing took the form of a sacrificial meal of peace-offerings; cf. infra 8b and Pes. 109a.
(18) And from bringing the accompanying burnt-offering.
(19) I.e.,the Heresh of our Mishnah. Thus the fully worded Mishnah would refer to two kinds of Heresh: (a) the partial
He is bound to rejoice. One, however, that can neither hear nor speak, an imbecile and a minor are exempt even from rejoicing, since they are exempt from all the precepts stated in the Torah. Why is it that in regard to appearing they are exempt, and in regard to rejoicing they are obligated? With regard to appearing, it is deduced by forming an analogy between the expressions for appearing from [the section] ‘Assemble’, for it is written: Assemble the people, the men and the women and the little ones; and it is [further] written: When all Israel is come to appear. But whence is it deduced for the latter? — For it is written: That they may hear and that they may learn. And it is taught: ‘That they may hear’, [this] excludes one that can speak but not hear; ‘and that they may learn’, [this] excludes one that can hear but not speak. Does this then mean to say that one that cannot talk cannot learn? But behold there were two dumb men in the neighbourhood of Rabbi, sons of the daughter of R. Johanan b. Gudgada, and according to others, sons of the sister of R. Johanan, who, whenever Rabbi entered the College, went in and sat down [before him], and nodded their heads and moved their lips. And Rabbi prayed for them and they were cured, and it was found that they were versed in Halachah, Sifra, Sifre and the whole Talmud! Said Mar Zutra. Read, That they may teach. R. Ashi said: Assuredly it is [to be read]: That they may teach. For if you suppose [that it should be read]: That they may learn, and [argue that] if one cannot talk one cannot learn (and [obviously] if one cannot hear one cannot learn), therefore it must certainly be [read]: That they may teach.

R. Tanhum said: One that is deaf in one ear is exempt from appearing [at the Temple], for it is said: In their ears. But [this expression], ‘in their ears’, is required [to teach that it must be] in the ears of all Israel! — That can be deduced from [the expression]. ‘before all Israel’. But if [it were deduced] from [the expression] ‘before all Israel’, I might say: Even though they did not hear; therefore it is written in the Divine Law: in their ears, they must be able to hear! — That call be deduced from [the expression], in order that they may hear.

R. Tanhum said: One that is lame in one foot is exempt from appearing [at the Temple], as it is said: Regalim [on foot]. But this [word] Regalim is required to exclude people with wooden legs! — That follows from [the word] Pe'amim [steps]. For it is taught: ‘Pe'amim’; ‘Pe'amim’ means only feet; and thus it is said: The foot shall tread it down, even the feet of the poor, and the steps of the needy. And it further says: How beautiful are thy steps in sandals, O prince's daughter.

Raba expounded: What is the meaning of the verse: ‘How beautiful are thy steps in sandals, O prince's daughter’. [It means:] How comely are the feet of Israel when they go up on the festival pilgrimage. ‘Prince's daughter’: [means] daughter of Abraham our father, who is called prince, as it is said: The princes of the peoples are gathered together, the people of the God of Abraham, the God of Abraham, who was the first of the Proselytes.

R. Kahana said: R. Nathan b. Minyomi expounded in the name of R. Tanhum: What is the meaning of the verse: And the pit was empty, there was no water in it? Since it says that the pit was empty, would I not know that there was no water in it? [It must mean] therefore, there was no water in it, but there were in it snakes and scorpions.
Our Rabbis taught: Once R. Johanan b. Beroka and R. Eleazar Hisma went to pay their respects to R. Joshua at Peki'in. Said he to them: What new teaching was there at the College to-day? They replied: We are thy disciples and thy waters do we drink. Said he to them: Even so, it is impossible for a college session to pass without some novel teaching. Whose Sabbath was it? — It was the Sabbath of R. Eleazar b. 'Azariah, [they replied]. And what was the theme of his Haggadic discourse to-day? They answered: The section ‘Assemble’. And what exposition did he give thereon? ‘Assemble the people the men and the women and the little ones’. If the men came to learn, the women came to hear, but wherefore have the little ones to come? In order to grant reward to those that bring them. Said he to them: There was a fair Jewel in your hand, and you sought to deprive me of it.

He further expounded: Thou hast avouched the Lord this day . . . and the Lord has avouched thee this day. The Holy One, blessed be He, said to Israel: You have made me a unique object of your love in the world, and I shall make you a unique object of My love in the world. You have made me a unique object of your love, as it is written: Hear, O Israel, the Lord our God, the Lord is One. And I shall make you a unique object of My love, as it is said:

(1) I.e., וַיְמֹאַר (‘shall appear’) in Ex. XXIII, 17 and וַיֵּלֶךְ (‘to appear’) in Deut. XXXI, 11.
(2) Deut. XXXI, 10-13. The name is derived from the introductory word in the verse that follows.
(3) Deut. XXXI, v. 12.
(4) Ibid. v. 11
(5) I.e., how do we know that a Heresh that can hear or speak is exempt from the precept referred to in Deut. XXXI, 10-13.
(6) Lit., ‘he besought (God’s) mercy on this behalf’.
(8) מַלְכּוּת from מַלָלֶק ‘to go, follow’, means literally ‘going’, ‘walking’ then figuratively: ‘the teaching which one follows, the rule or state by which one is guided, the categorical religious law’, (H. L. Strack, Intro. to the Talmud, p. 67: v. whole section and refs.). The last meaning applies here. Cf. also the refs. to Halachah in R. T. Herford's The Pharisees, esp. Ch. III. V. Glos.
(9) ‘The Book’, also called Torath Kohanim (‘Law of the Priests’) is a halachic Midrash on Leviticus.
(10) מָשָפֵר or more fully, מֶשָפֵר דֵּדְרִיָב (‘the Books of the School of Rab’) is a halachic Midrash on Numbers (commencing with Ch. 5) and on Deut. V. Glos.
(11) מָשָפֵר Lit., ‘six orders’ into which the Mishnah, and consequently the Talmud, which is the commentary on it, is divided. [MS.M. reads, ‘Talmud’].
(12) I.e., מַלְכָּלֶק (Piel) for מַלְכָּלֶק (Kal). Such textual changes are not to be regarded as serious Biblical emendations, but as part of the exegetical method of the Rabbis for the purpose of halachic and Haggadic deduction.
(13) I.e., quite apart from the instance of the two dumb scholars, it can be proved that teach is the right reading.
(14) [MS.M. omits bracketed words which, in fact, are superfluous].
(15) The underlying reason for excluding the deaf is their inability to learn. If now you suppose that the dumb cannot learn, their exclusion can be inferred from the expression, ‘that they may hear’, which excludes the deaf, and similarly the dumb, and the words ‘that they may learn’ are superfluous.
(16) And the inference that a dumb person cannot learn falls away.
(17) Deut. XXXI, 11. The plural indicates that those present must be able to hear with both ears; and by analogy (v. supra p. 5, n. 9) we apply this rule also to the law of Ex. XXIII, 17.
(18) The public reading referred to in the section ‘Assemble’ (v. p. 5, n. 10); cf. Sot. 41a.
(19) I.e., in their hearing.
(20) Deut. ibid.
(21) I.e., were too far away; not that they were deaf.
(22) Lit., ‘The Merciful One wrote’, i.e., God revealed through Scripture. V. Bacher, Exeg. Term. II, 207f.
(23) This expression, therefore, cannot be used for the inference that a person deaf in one ear is exempt.
(24) Ibid. v. 12. Thus ‘in their ears’ is available for R. Tanhum's teaching.
(25) Ex. XXIII, 14. V. supra p. 5, n. 10. The word is probably read here דֶרֶך לֶחֶם (dual): the pilgrim must have use of both feet.

(26) Ex. XXIII, 17. מִלְחָמִים E.V. ‘times’ (cf. supra p. 1, n. 11) is here understood in its root meaning of ‘steps’, i.e., only those having their own legs must visit the Temple.

(27) I.e., natural as opposed to artificial feet.

(28) מִלְחָמִים (steps) being parallel to רַבְּרִים (feet) must mean the same as the latter.

(29) Isa. XXVI, 6.

(30) Cant. VII, 2. The word sandals is additional evidence that מִלְחָמִים refers to natural feet.

(31) Ps. XLVII, 10.

(32) ‘Prince’ (וֹדֵד) means lit., ‘one who offers himself willingly’ i.e., for God's service. Abraham was the first to confess and worship the Lord, and the reference to the ‘princes, the peoples’ is to the proselytes who, like Abraham, offer themselves to the service of God.

(33) The name of R. Tanhum is the link between the preceding and the following exposition.

(34) Gen. XXXVII, 24.

(35) In Tr. Soferim the reading is Eleazar b. Hisma. For the cognomen which is not adjectival (i.e., ‘muzzled’) but locative (prob. a native of Hismeh’) v. J.E. Vol. V, p. 99.

(36) Also Beki’in, modern Fukin, in S. Palestine between Lydda and Jabneh (Jast.). It was customary for pupils to visit their teacher on holy days; cf. R.H. 16b.

(37) I.e., disciples may not speak before their teacher (Rashi); or we cannot possibly have anything to teach you.

(38) R. Gamaliel used to lecture on two (or three) Sabbaths and R. Eleazar b. ‘Azariah on the third (or fourth) v. Ber. 28a.

(39) Haggadah (הלל), a nomen actionis of הדוד (to tell), denotes all scriptural interpretation which is non-halachic (i.e., non-legal) in character (H. L. Strack). V. Glos.

(40) V. supra p. 5, n. 10.

(41) But not to study it fully; cf. J.T., Sot. III, 4. For the status of the woman in Judaism v. J.E. vol. XII, p. 556.

(43) Deut. XXVI, 17-18.

(44) דָּמוּס Jast. ‘the only object of your love’ (from root meaning ‘to fall in love, woo’); Levy, ‘Herrschcr’ (ruler) comparing it, according to Bacher, with Pers. ‘Khedive’; Goldschmidt, ‘Verherrlichung’ (glorification); Rashi, ‘sole or unique object of praise’; Aruch, in the name of R. Hai Gaon, ‘Unique concept’ (יצהור אחור) (H. L. Strack); Maharsha (quoting Rashi to Deut. XXVI, 17) ‘separation. (from root meaning ‘to hew’).

(45) Aruch reads: ‘in this world . . . in the world to come’.

Talmud - Mas. Chagigah 3b

And who is like unto Thy people Israel, a nation one in the earth. And he also took up the text and expounded: The words of the wise are as goads, and as nails well planted are the words of masters of Assemblies, which are given from one Shepherd.

Why are the words of the Torah likened to a goad? To teach you that just as the goad directs the heifer along its furrow in order to bring forth life to the world, so the words of the Torah direct those who study them from the paths of death to the paths of life. But [should you think] that just as the goad is movable so the words of the Torah are movable; therefore the text says: ‘nails’.

But [should you think] that just as the nail diminishes and does not increase, so too the words of the Torah diminish and do not increase; therefore the text says: ‘well planted’; just as a plant grows and increases, so the words of the Torah grow and increase.

‘The masters of assemblies’: these are the disciples of the wise, who sit in manifold assemblies and occupy themselves with the Torah, some pronouncing unclean and others pronouncing clean, some prohibiting and others permitting, some disqualifying and others declaring fit.
Should a man say: How in these circumstances shall I learn Torah? Therefore the text says: ‘All of them are given from one Shepherd’. One God gave them; one leader uttered them from the mouth of the Lord of all creation, blessed be He; for it is written: ‘And God spoke all these words’. Also do thou make thine ear like the hopper and get thee a perceptive heart to understand the words of those who pronounce unclean and the words of those who pronounce clean, the words of those who prohibit and the words of those who permit, the words of those who disqualify and the words of those who declare fit. He [then] spoke to them in the following words: It is not an orphan generation in which R. Eleazar b. ‘Azariah lives. But they could have told him directly — It was on account of a certain occurrence. For it is taught: Once R. Jose b. Durmaskith went to pay his respects to R. Eliezer at Lod. Said the latter to him: What new thing was taught in College today? He replied: They decided by vote that in Ammon and Moab the tithe of the poor should be given in the seventh year. Said [R. Eliezer] to him: Jose, stretch forth thine hands and lose thy sight. He stretched forth his hands and lost his sight. R. Eliezer [then] wept and said: The counsel of the Lord is with them that fear Him, His covenant, to make them know it. He [then] said to him: Go, say to them: Be not concerned about your voting, thus have I received a tradition from Rabban Johanan b. Zakkai, who heard [it] from his teacher, and his teacher from his teacher, that it is a halachah of Moses from Sinai that in Ammon and Moab the tithe of the poor is to be given in the seventh year. What is the reason? — Many cities were conquered by those who came up from Egypt, which were not conquered by those who came up from Babylon; since the first consecration held for the time, but did not hold for the future [permanently], therefore they were left in order that the poor might be sustained upon them in the seventh year. It is taught: When his mind was calmed, he said: May it be granted that Jose's sight be restored. And it was restored.

Our Rabbis taught: Who is [deemed] an imbecile? He that goes out alone at night and he that spends the night in a cemetery, and he that tears his garments. It was taught: R. Huna said: They must all be [done] together. R. Johanan said: Even if [he does only] one of them. What is the case? If he does them in an insane manner, even one is also [proof]. If he does not do them in an insane manner, even all of them [prove] nothing? — Actually [it is a case where] he does them in an insane manner. But if he spent the night in a cemetery, I might say: He did [it] in order that the spirit of impurity might rest upon him. If he went out alone at night, I might say: He was seized by lycanthropy. If he tore his garment, I might say: He was lost in thought. But as soon as he does them all,

(2) I.e., according to Rashi, R. Eleazar b. ‘Azariah; but according to Maharsha and Goldschmidt, R. Joshua.
(3) Eccl. XII, 11.
(4) The ‘words of the wise’ are identified with ‘the words of the Torah’.
(5) I.e., unstable and of impermanent authority.
(6) The nail driven into the wall makes a hole.
(7) To act as witness, or as priest.
(8) I.e., in view of the contradictory opinions held by the scholars.
(9) I.e., the various opinions do not emanate from different ‘Revelations’, but have their origin in the One Torah, given by the One God. Cf. Tanhuma to Num. XIX, 2, section 8; and ref. to Moses and Akiba Men. 29b.
(10) I.e., Moses. The term ‘Shepherd’ is applied in the Bible both to God (e.g., Gen. XLVIII, 15; Ps. LXX, 2) and to Moses (e.g., Isa. LXIII, 11). Maharsha.
(11) Ex. XX, 1
(12) פָּרָכָם פָּרָכָה פָּרָכָה פָּרָכָה According to Jast. from root פָּרָכ (to rub, grind), itself an extension of root פָּרַךְ (to break). According to Levy, from the Greek. The hopper, being funnel-shaped, more enters it than issues from it, i.e., hear all views, and then sift them and accept the true.
(13) I.e., R. Joshua to his two disciples.
(14) I.e., why did they at first evade R. Joshua's request by saying: We are thy disciples etc.?
I.e., woman of Damascus.

Cf. I Chron. VIII, 12; afterwards Lydda and later Diospolis, near Joppa.

According to Rashi, that part of Ammon and Moab which was subjugated by Sihon and Og, and later was captured from them by the Israelites (v. Num. XXI, 21-35, and Hull. 60b). But according to R. Tam (in Tosaf.), it refers to the rest of Ammon and Moab, not conquered by Sihon and Og.

In Transjordania, which did not possess the sanctity of Palestine proper, the land did not have to be fallow in the seventh year (cf. Lev. XXV, 2f). Accordingly, the Rabbis ordained that the tithe of the poor, although given the preceding year, should again be given in the seventh year. V. Deut. XIV, 28-29 and Sifre a.l.; cf. also Lev. XXIII, 22 and Deut. XXIV, 19.

Lit., 'receive thine eyes', a euphemism. He was vexed because R. Jose ascribed an old traditional law to the particular session in his college.

Ps. XXV, 14.

I.e., have no scruples concerning it.

Lit., 'our teacher', the honorific title of several descendants of Hillel, and of R. Johanan b. Zakkai.

I.e., under Joshua: the territory conquered by Israel became holy.

I.e., till the first exile.

But the territory occupied by those who returned from Babylon was consecrated for ever.

I.e., Ammon and Moab were left unconsecrated after the Babylonian captivity.

Lit., 'that Jose's eyes may return to their place'.

Cf. Aboth III, 4.

I.e., a person is not considered legally an imbecile till he performs all the above mentioned acts together. [Var. lec. rightly omit together'].

I.e., he did it with full understanding for the purpose of conjuring up evil spirits for magical purposes (Rash); or to receive communications from them, cf. LXX in Isa. LXV, 4 (A. W. Streane).

he becomes like [an ox] who gored an ox, an ass and a camel, and becomes [thereby] a mu'ad [forewarned gorer]1 in regard to all [animals]. R. Papa said: If R. Huna had heard of that which is taught: Who is [deemed] an imbecile? 'One that destroys all that is given to him'; he would have retracted.2 The question was raised: When he would have retracted, would he have retracted only with regard to the [case of the] man who tore his garment, because it resembles this [case];3 or would he have retracted with regard to all of them?4 — It remains [undecided].

A PERSON OF UNKNOWN SEX [TUMTUM], A HERMAPHRODITE etc.: Our Rabbis taught: [The word] ‘males’5 [by itself] comes to exclude women;6 [the expression], ‘thy males’, comes to exclude the tumtum and hermaphrodite; ‘all thy males’ comes to include minors.

The Master said: [The word] ‘males’ comes to exclude women. But why do I need a verse for this? Consider: it is a positive precept dependent on a fixed time, and women are exempt from every positive precept dependent on a fixed time!7 — It is needed. You might say: We can make a deduction by forming an analogy between the expressions for appearing, from [the section] ‘Assemble’.8 just as there women are obligated. so here women are obligated; it therefore teaches us [that it is not so].

The Master said: [The expression], ‘thy males’, comes to exclude a tumtum and a hermaphrodite. Granted that with regard to the hermaphrodite it is necessary [for Scripture to exclude him]. You might say that since he has a male aspect, he is obligated; it therefore teaches us that he is sui generis.9 But the tumtum is a dubious case;10 is a Biblical text required to exclude a dubious case?11 — Said Abaye: [It is required for the case] where his testicles are outside.12
The Master said: [The expression], ‘all thy males’, comes to include minors. But we have learnt: EXCEPT AN IMBECILE AND A MINOR! — Said Abaye: There is no contradiction. The one case [speaks] of a minor who is old enough to be initiated, the other of a minor who is not old enough to be initiated. But a minor who is old enough to be initiated is obligated only by Rabbinic enactment! — Yes, it is so; and the Biblical text is merely a support. What then is the purpose of the Biblical text? — To intimate the teaching of ‘Others’.

What then is the purpose of the Biblical text? — To intimate the teaching of ‘Others’. Others say: The scraper. the copper-smith and the tanner are exempt from appearing [at the Temple], for it is said: ‘All thy males’: he that is able to go up [on the pilgrimage] with all thy males. These, therefore, are excluded, because they are not fit to go up with all thy males.

WOMEN AND UNFREED SLAVES etc.: Granted as regards women, as we have said, but as regards slaves, whence do we deduce [their exemption]? — Said R. Huna: Scripture says: before the Lord, God. [this means] one that has one Lord; this one, therefore, is excluded because he has another lord. But why do I need a Biblical intimation for this? Consider: every precept which is obligatory on a woman is obligatory on a slave; every precept which is not obligatory on a woman is not obligatory on a slave; for this is deduced by analogy from [the case of] the woman, through the double occurrence of [the expression] unto her. Said Rabina: It is needed only for [the exemption of] one that is half a slave and half a freedman! This can also be proven; for [the Mishnah] speaks of WOMEN AND UNFREED SLAVES. What is meant by unfreed? Should I say that it means entirely unfreed, then it should simply say, ‘Slaves’! Surely, therefore [it must mean] slaves that have not been completely freed. And who are such? Those that are half slaves and half freedmen. Proven.

THE LAME, THE BLIND, THE SICK, THE AGED: Our Rabbis taught: ‘Regalim’ [on foot]. this excludes people with wooden legs. Another interpretation: Regalim: this excludes the lame, the sick, the blind, the aged, and one that cannot go up on foot. ‘And one that cannot go up on foot’: What does this come to include? — Said Raba: It comes to include

(1) Lit., ‘forewarned’; an animal whose owner stands forewarned and consequently liable to full indemnity on account of three successive injuries (V. Ex. XXI, 36).
(2) I.e., he would have considered this action by itself as proof of imbecility.
(3) I.e., the case of the man who destroys whatever is given to him.
(4) I.e., he would have agreed entirely with R. Johanan’s view.
(5) In the phrase ‘all thy males’. Ex. XXIII, 17.
(6) I.e., from obligation to visit the Temple; v. Mishnah, p. 1.
(7) The exemption of women from the performance of these precepts is not due to any inferiority of status, but to delicate consideration for their physical nature; cf. also Kid. 29a and 34af.
(8) V. supra p. 5, n. 10. This law likewise is dependent on a fixed time.
(9) And to be excluded.
(10) Even more dubious than that of the hermaphrodite, because the sexual organs of the former are concealed. Thus the tumtum may be a female and quite exempt from appearing at the Temple.
(11) It would in any case be exempt because obligation could not be proven. For another explanation and reading v. Tosaf. a.l., and Maharsha.
(12) And only the membrum is hidden: being certain of the sex, we might think that he is bound to appear; Scripture therefore prevents this conclusion.
(13) V. Mishnah p. 1, n. 9.
(14) And not by Biblical injunction; therefore the verse cannot refer to this case.
(15) I.e., a confirmation; or perhaps a mnemonic technical aid.
(16) I.e., the word ‘all’; for there are no superfluous expressions in the Bible.
(17) I.e., R. Meir, who is quoted under this term subsequent to the unsuccessful conspiracy by R. Nathan and himself against Rabban Simon b. Gamaliel; v. Hor. 13b.
V. Keth. 77a, where this word (חקפ) is explained as (a) one that collects dog's excrements (used, according to Rashi ibid., for steeping clothes prior to laundering, and according to Rashi here, for preparing cordwain); (b) a tanner on a small scale, in contr. to a tanner on a large scale.

Explained ibid. as (a) a kettle-smith; (b) one that digs copper in the shaft.

On account of the malodour resulting from these occupations.

V. supra p. 13.

Ex. XXIII, 17.

I.e., the slave.

I.e., a human master in addition to his Divine Master.

V. Deut. XXIV, 3 (of the woman), and Lev. XIX, 20 (of the bondwoman).

I.e., the Biblical intimation.

This is in accordance with ‘the earlier Mishnah’ (v. supra p. 3, nn. 6, 8), but according to ‘the later Mishnah’, the master is compelled to free the half slave, who is then bound to appear at the Temple.

V. p. 7, n. 11.

The first interpretation is not quite satisfactory, because the exclusion of people with wooden legs can be deduced from in Ex. XXIII, 17; cf. p. 7. n. 12.

Talmud - Mas. Chagigah 4b

a delicate person.\(^1\) For it is written: When ye come to appear before Me, who hath required this at your hand, to trample\(^2\) My courts?\(^3\)

A Tanna taught: The uncircumcised\(^4\) and the unclean\(^5\) are exempt from [bringing] the pilgrimage-offering.\(^6\) Granted as regards the unclean, for it is written: And thither thou shalt come, and thither ye shall bring.\(^7\) To whomever ‘coming’ applies, ‘bringing’ applies; to whomever ‘coming’ does not apply, ‘bringing’ does not apply. But whence do we derive [the exemption of] the uncircumcised? — This will be according to R. Akiba, who includes the uncircumcised like the unclean. For it is taught: R. Akiba said: [the expression], what man soever,\(^8\) comes to include uncircumcised.\(^9\)

Our Rabbis taught: An unclean person is exempt from [bringing] the pilgrimage-offering, for it is written: ‘And thither thou shalt come; and thither ye shall bring’. To whomever ‘coming’ applies ‘bringing’ applies; to whomever ‘coming’ does not apply ‘bringing’ does not apply. R. Johanan b. Dahabai said in the name of R. Judah: A person who is blind in one eye is exempt from appearing [at the Temple], for it is said: Yir'eh\(^10\) [He shall see], Yera'eh [He shall be seen]; just as He comes to see, so He comes to be seen; as He comes to see with both eyes. so also to be seen with both eyes.

R. Huna, when he came to this verse, Yir'eh, Yera'eh,\(^11\) wept. He said: The slave whom his Master longs to see should become estranged from him! For it is written: When ye come to appear\(^12\) before Me, who hath required this at your hand, to trample My courts?\(^13\)

R. Huna, when he came to the [following] verse, wept: And thou shalt sacrifice peace-offerings, and shalt eat there.\(^14\) The slave at whose table his Master longs to eat should become estranged from him! For it is written: To what purpose is the abundance of your sacrifices unto Me? saith the Lord.\(^15\)

R. Eleazar, when he came to the [following] verse, wept: And his brethren could not answer him, for they were affrighted at his presence.\(^16\) Now if the rebuke of flesh and blood be such, how much more so the rebuke of the Holy One, blessed be He!

R. Eleazar, when he came to the [following] verse, wept: And Samuel said to Saul: Why hast thou disquieted me, to bring\(^14\) me up?\(^17\) Now if Samuel, the righteous, was afraid of the Judgment, how \(^1\) "A delicate person" suggests someone who is unirtunate or has some distinguishing feature.

\(^2\) "To trample My courts" refers to a disrespectful act.

\(^3\) This verse brings into question the nature of the duties and rights involved in the pilgrimage.

\(^4\) "Uncircumcised" refers to those who have not undergone circumcision, a religious ritual in Judaism.

\(^5\) "Unclean" refers to those who are ritually unclean, often due to contact with death or certain substances.

\(^6\) "Pilgrimage-offering" refers to sacrifices made during pilgrimages.

\(^7\) "Coming" and "bringing" are closely related concepts in this context, indicating physical and spiritual presence.

\(^8\) "What man soever" alludes to the inclusivity of the exemption.

\(^9\) "Uncircumcised like the unclean" signifies a similar exemption.

\(^10\) "Yir'eh" and "Yera'eh" are Hebrew phrases that translate to "He shall see" and "He shall be seen" respectively.

\(^11\) The weeping of R. Huna indicates the gravity of the situation.

\(^12\) "Pilgrimage before Me" implies a moral or spiritual duty.

\(^13\) "My courts" refer to the Temple area.

\(^14\) "Peace-offerings" are sacrifices of thanksgiving.

\(^15\) "Abundance of sacrifices" points to the offerings made to the Lord.

\(^16\) "Affrighted" highlights the impact of Samuel's rebuke.

\(^17\) "Bringing me up" suggests a rebuke or correction.
much more so should we be! How do we know this about Samuel? — For it is written: And the woman said unto Saul: I see godlike beings coming up out of the earth. Coming up implies two: one was Samuel, but [who was] the other? Samuel went and brought Moses with him, Saying to him: Perhaps, Heaven forfend; I am summoned to Judgment: arise with me, for there is nothing that thou hast written in the Torah, which I did not fulfil.

R. Ami, when he came to the [following] verse, wept: Let him put his mouth in the dust, perhaps there may be hope. He said: All this, and [only] perhaps!

R. Ami, when he came to the [following] verse, wept: Seek righteousness, seek humility, perhaps ye shall be hid in the day of the Lord's anger. He said: All this, and [only] perhaps!

R. Assi, when he came to the [following] verse, wept: Hate the evil, and love the good, and establish justice in the gate, perhaps the Lord, the God of hosts, will be gracious. All this, and [only] perhaps!

R. Joseph, when he came to the [following] verse, wept: But there is that is swept away without judgment. [He said]: Is there anyone who passes away before one's [allotted] time? — Yes, as in the story [heard] by R. Bibi b. Abaye, who was frequently visited by the Angel of death. [Once] the latter said to his messenger: Go, bring me Miriam, the women's hairdresser! He went and brought him Miriam, the children's nurse. Said he to him: I told thee Miriam, the women's hairdresser. He answered: If so, I will take her back. Said he to him: Since thou hast brought her, let her be added. But how were you able to get her? She was holding a shovel in her hand and was heating and raking the oven. She took it and put it on her foot and burnt herself; thus her luck was impaired and I brought her. Said R. Bibi b. Abaye to him: Have ye permission to act thus? He answered him: Is it not written: ‘There is that is swept away without judgment’? He countered: But behold it is written: One generation passeth away, and another generation cometh!

He replied: I have charge of them till they have completed the generation, and then I hand them over to Dumah! He [then] asked him: But after all, what do you do with her years? He replied: If there be a Rabbinic scholar who overlooks his hurt, I shall give them to him in her stead.

R. Johanan, when he came to the [following] verse, wept: And thou didst incite Me against him, to destroy him without cause. A slave whose Master, when they incite him yields, is there any help for him?

R. Johanan, when he came to the [following] verse, wept: Behold, He putteth no trust in His holy ones. If He does not put His trust in His holy ones, in whom will He put his trust? One day he was going on a journey and saw a man gathering figs; he was leaving those that were ripe and was taking those that were unripe. So he said to him: Are not those better? He replied: I need those for a journey: these will keep, but the others will not keep. Said [R. Johanan] this is the meaning of the verse: Behold He putteth no trust in His holy ones.

But is it so? For behold there was a disciple in the neighbourhood of R. Alexandri, who died in his youth, and [R. Alexandri] said: Had this scholar wished, he could have lived! If now it be [as R. Johanan said] perhaps he was one of those of whom it is said: ‘Behold He putteth no trust in His holy ones’! — That [scholar] was one who had rebelled against his teachers!

R. Johanan, when he came to the [following] verse, wept: And I will come near to you to judgment and I will be a swift witness against the sorcerers, and against the adulterers, and against false swearers, and against those that oppress the hireling in his wages. A slave whose Master brings him near to judge him, and hastens to testify against him, is there any remedy for him?

Rabban Johanan b. Zakkai said: Woe unto us that Scripture weighs against us light like grave offences.

Resh Lakish said: Whoever wrests the judgment of the proselyte is as if he wrests the judgment of the All-High, for it is said: And that turn aside the proselyte from his right: the consonants [can be read]: And that turn Me aside.

when he came to the [following] verse, wept: For God shall bring every work into the judgment concerning every hidden thing. A slave to whom his Master accounts errors as wilful offences, is there any remedy for him? What is the meaning of, concerning every hidden thing? — Rab said: This refers to one who kills a louse in the presence of his neighbour, so that he feels disgust thereto. And Samuel said: This refers to one who spits in the presence of his neighbour so that he feels disgust thereto. What is the meaning of, whether it be—good or whether it be—evil? — The School of R. Jannai said: This refers to one who gives alms to a poor person publicly, like the story of R. Jannai. He [once] saw a man give a zuz to a poor person publicly, so he said to him: It had been better that you had not given him, than now that you have given him publicly and put him to shame. The School of R. Shila said: This refers to one who gives alms to a woman secretly. for he brings her into suspicion. Raba said: This refers to one who is in the habit of sending his wife on the eve of the Sabbath meat that has not been cut up. But Raba [himself] used to send! — The daughter of R. Hisda is different, for he was sure of her that she was an expert.

R. Johanan, when he came to the [following] verse, wept: And it shall come to pass, when many evils and troubles are come upon them. A slave whose Master brings many evils and troubles upon him, is there any remedy for him? What is the meaning of ‘evils and troubles’? — Rab said: Evils which become antagonists to each other, as for instance the [bites of] a wasp and a scorpion. And Samuel said: This refers to one who furnishes money to the poor person [only] in the hour of his extreme distress. Raba said: This is the meaning of the proverb, For [purchasing] provision a zuz is not to be found, for hanging up [in the basket] it can be found.

Then My anger shall be kindled against them in that day, and I will forsake them, and I will hide My face from them. R. Bardela b. Tabyumi said that Rab said: To whomever ‘hiding of the face’ does not apply is not one of them; to whomever [the words] and they shall be devoured does not apply.

(38) According to Rashi, this refers to Eccl. XII, 14 and is an example of an apparently good deed which is really bad; for at an earlier stage the help rendered would have been of far greater and more enduring benefit. But according to Tosaf. this is an explanation of Deut. XXXI, 21 and is an instance of added trouble, illustrated in the following proverb. V. n. 9.
(39) מילא. Rashi renders: ‘food which one brings in a basket’, that is in time of distress; cf. Pes. III b. Tosaf. translates: ‘when one is about to be hanged’, and explains thus: A man is threatened with execution unless he offers a ransom; being poor, a small ransom would be accepted. But now the arrangement of a mortgage is offered him; this serves only to aggravate his misfortune, for the ransom price is raised. A third explanation is given by Maharsha a.l.

is not one of them. Said the Rabbis to Raba: To [our] master ‘the hiding of the face’ does not apply, and [the words] ‘And they shall be devoured’ do not apply! Said he to them: Do ye know then how much I send secretly to the Court of King Shapur?¹ Even so the Rabbis directed their eyes upon him.² Meanwhile the Court of King Shapur sent [men], who plundered him.³ He [then] said: This is it that is taught: Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel said: Wherever the Rabbis direct their eyes there is either death or poverty.

And I will hide My face in that day.⁴ Raba said: Although I hide My face from them, I shall speak to them⁵ in a dream.⁶ R. Joseph: said: His hand is stretched over us, as it is said: And I have covered thee in the shadow of My hand.⁷

R. Joshua b. Hanania was [once] at the court of Caesar.⁸ A certain unbeliever⁹ showed him [by gestures]: A people whose Lord has turned His face from them — He showed him [in reply]: His hand is stretched over us. Said Caesar to R. Joshua: What did he show thee?-A people whose Lord has turned His face from them. And I showed him: His hand is stretched over us.

They [then] said to the heretic:¹⁰ What didst thou show him?A people whose Lord has turned His face from them. And what did he show thee? — I do not know. Said they: A man who does not understand what he is being shown by gesture should hold converse in signs before the king! They led him forth and slew him.
When the soul of R. Joshua b. Hanania was about to go to its rest, the Rabbis said to him: What will become of us at the hands of the unbelievers? He answered them: Counsel is perished from the children, their wisdom is vanished. So soon as counsel is perished from the children, the wisdom of the peoples of the world is vanished. Or I may derive it from here: And he said: Let us take our journey, and let us go, and I will go over against thee.

R. Ila was once walking up the stairs of the house of Rabbi b. Shila, when he heard a child reading the verse: For, lo, He that formeth the mountains, and createth the wind, and declareth unto man what his conversation was. He said: A slave Master declares to him his conversation, is there any remedy for him? — What is the meaning of [the expression] ‘What his conversation was’? — Rab said: Even the superfluous conversation between a man and his wife is declared to a person in the hour of his death. But is it so? Now behold R. Kahana once lay down beneath the bed of Rab, and he heard him converse and jest and perform his needs. [Thereupon] he said: The mouth of Rab is like that of one who has not tasted any food. Said [Rab] to him: Kahana, get out, this is unseemly! — There is no contradiction: In the one case [it is] where he has to procure her favour, in the other, where he has no need to procure her favour.

But if ye will not hear it, My soul shall weep in secret for the pride. R. Samuel b. Inia said in the name of Rab: The Holy One, blessed be He, has a place and its name is ‘Secret’. What is the meaning of [the expression] ‘for the pride’? R. Samuel b. Isaac said: For the glory that has been taken from them and given to the nations of the world. R. Samuel b. Nahmani said: For the glory of the Kingdom of Heaven. But is there any weeping in the presence of the Holy One, blessed be He? For behold R. Papa said: There is no grief in the Presence of the Holy One blessed be He; for it is said: Honour and majesty are before Him; strength and beauty are it His sanctuary! — There is no contradiction; the one case [refers to] the inner chambers, the other case [refers to] the outer chambers. But behold it is written: And in that day did the Lord, the God of Hosts, call to weeping and to lamentation, and to baldness, and to girding with sackcloth! — The destruction of the Temple is different, for even the angels of peace wept [over it]; for it is said: Behold for their altar they cried without; the angels of peace wept bitterly.

And mine eye shall drop tears and tears, and run down with tears, because the Lord's flock is carried away captive. R. Eleazar said: Wherefore these three [expressions of] ‘tears’? One for the first Temple, and one for the second Temple, and one for Israel, who have become exiled from their place. But there are some who say: One for the neglect of [the study of] the Torah. This is all right according to the view that [one] is for Israel, who have become exiled from their place. But there are some who say: One for the neglect of [the study of] the Torah. This is all right according to the view that [one] is for Israel, who have become exiled from their place: this agrees with that which is written: ‘Because the Lord's flock is carried away captive’. But according to the view that it was for the neglect of [the study of] the Torah, how do you explain [the text], ‘Because the Lord's flock is carried away’? — Since Israel have become exiled from their place. you can have no greater neglect of [the study of] the Torah than this.

Our Rabbis taught: Over three the Holy One, blessed be He, weeps every day: over him who is able to occupy himself with [the study of] the Torah and does not; and over him who is unable to occupy himself with [the study of] the Torah and does; and over a leader who domineers over the community.

Rabbi was once holding the Book of Lamentations and reading therein: when he came to the verse, He hath cast down from heaven unto the earth, it fell from his hands. He said: From a roof so high to a pit as deep!

Rabbi and R. Hiyya were once going on a journey. When they came to a certain town, they said: If there is a rabbinical scholar here, we shall go and pay him our respect. They were told: There is a rabbinical scholar here and he is blind. Said R. Hiyya to Rabbi: Stay [here]; thou must not lower thy princely dignity;\textsuperscript{34} I shall go and visit him. But [Rabbi] took hold of him and went with him. When they were taking leave from him,\textsuperscript{35} he said to them: Ye have visited one who is seen but does not see; may ye be granted to visit Him who sees but is not seen. Said [Rabbi to R. Hiyya]: If now [I had hearkened to you] you would have deprived me of this blessing. They [then] said to him: From whom didst thou hear this?\textsuperscript{36} I heard it at a discourse of R. Jacob's. For R. Jacob of Kefar Hitya,\textsuperscript{37} used to visit his teacher every day. When he became old, the latter said to him: Let the master not trouble himself since he is unable. He replied: Is it a small thing that is written concerning the Rabbis? And he shall still live alway. he- shall not see the pit; when he seeth that wise man die.\textsuperscript{38} Now if he who sees wise men at their death shall live, how much more so [he who sees them] in their life.

R. Idi, the father of R. Jacob b. Idi, used to spend three months on his journey and one day at the school;\textsuperscript{39} and the Rabbis called him ‘One day scholar’. So he became dispirited, and applied to himself the verse: I am as one that is a laughing-stock to his neighbour etc.\textsuperscript{40} Said to him R. Johanan: I beg of you. do not bring down punishment upon the Rabbis. R. Johanan then went forth to the College and delivered the [following] exposition: Yet they seek Me day by day, and delight to know My ways.\textsuperscript{41} Do they then seek Him by day, and do not seek Him by might? It comes to tell you. therefore, that whoever studies the Torah even one day in the year, Scripture accounts it to him as though he had studied the whole year through. And similarly in the case of punishment, for it is written: After the number of the days in which you spied out the land.\textsuperscript{42} Did they then sin forty years? Was it not forty days that they sinned? It must come to teach you, therefore, that whoever commits transgression even one day in the year, Scripture accounts it to him as though he had transgressed the whole year through.

Talmud - Mas. Chagigah 6a

Who brought him thus far? — Said Abaye to him: Thus far his mother brought him, since she is bound to rejoice [on the festival]; from here onward, if he is able to go up from Jerusalem to the Temple Mount holding his father's hand, he is obligated, and if not, he is exempt.

Rabbi objected on behalf of Beth Hillel to the view of Beth Shammai: But Hannah went not up; for she said unto her husband: Until the child be weaned, when I will bring him up. Now Samuel was [already] able to ride on his father's shoulders! — Said his father to him: But according to thy own reasoning there is a difficulty: was not Hannah herself bound to rejoice [on the festival]? The explanation, therefore, must be that Hannah saw that Samuel was exceptionally delicate, and she feared that the journey might unduly fatigue Samuel. R. Simeon asked: What [is the law], according to the view of Beth Shammai, respecting a minor who is lame, and according to both views, respecting one who is blind? — What is the case? Shall one say that it is a case of a lame child who will never be able to walk, and of a blind child who will never be able to see? Now [in such cases] a major is exempt, can there be any question about a minor? — No, [the question] is necessary with respect to a lame child who may [eventually] be able to walk and with respect to a blind child who may [eventually] be able to see. What [is the law then]? — Abaye said: Wherever a major is obligated according to the law of the Torah, we also initiate a minor according to Rabbinic law; wherever a major is exempt according to the law of the Torah, a minor is also exempt according to Rabbinic law.

BETH SHAMMAI SAY: THE PILGRIMAGE-OFFERING MUST BE WORTH [AT LEAST]
TWO PIECES OF SILVER etc. Our Rabbis taught: Beth Shammai say: The pilgrimage-offering [must be worth at least] two pieces of silver and the festal-offering one ma'ah of silver, because the pilgrimage-offering is offered up entirely to God, which is not the case with regard to the festal-offering; furthermore, we find that for the Festival of Weeks Scripture has enjoined more burnt-offerings than peace-offerings. But Beth Hillel say: The pilgrimage-offerings [must be at least] one ma'ah of silver and the festal-offering two pieces of silver, because the festal-offering obtained prior to the Revelation, which is not the case with regard to the pilgrimage-offering. Furthermore, we find that in the case of ‘the princes’, Scripture enjoined more peace-offerings than burnt-offerings.

Now why do not Beth Hillel agree with Beth Shammai? — As for your saying that the pilgrimage-offering is more important because it is entirely offered up to God, on the contrary, the festal-offering is more important, because in it there are two meals. And as for your saying that we should learn by analogy from the Feast of Weeks, I contend that we should form an analogy between the offering of an individual and the offering of an individual, but we should not form an analogy between the offering of an individual and an offering of the community. And why do not Beth Shammai agree with Beth Hillel? — As for your saying that the festal-offering is more important because it obtained prior to the Revelation, I contend that the pilgrimage-offering also obtained prior to the Revelation. And as for your saying that we should learn by analogy from ‘the princes’. I contend that we have to form an analogy between something that applies to [future] generations and something [else] that applies to [future] generations; but we should not form an analogy between something that applies to [future] generations and something that does not apply to [future] generations.

Now according to Beth Hillel, why is the festal-offering singled out as obtaining prior to the Revelation? Because it is written: And they sacrificed sacrifices of peace-offerings. Surely the pilgrimage-offerings must also [have been offered up then]; [for] behold, it is written: And they offered burnt-offerings! — Beth Hillel are of the opinion that the burnt-offering which the Israelites offered in the wilderness was the ‘continual burnt-offering’. And Beth Shammai? — They are of the opinion that the burnt-offering that the Israelites offered in the wilderness was a pilgrimage-offering.

Abaye said: Beth Shammai and R. Eleazar and R. Ishmael are all of the opinion that the burnt-offering which the Israelites offered in the wilderness was a pilgrimage-offering. And Beth Hillel and R. Akiba and R. Jose the Galilean are all of the opinion that the burnt-offering which the Israelites offered in the wilderness was the ‘continual burnt-offering’. ‘Beth Shammai’, as we have said [above]. ‘R. Ishmael’, for it is taught: R. Ishmael said: The general directions were given at Sinai.

(1) I.e., from his house to Jerusalem. The fact that he could travel to Jerusalem shows that he is old enough to do without his mother; at that age he is also old enough to be able to go up from Jerusalem to the Temple Mount by holding his father's hand. What point, therefore, is there in defining a minor as one that is unable even with the aid of his father to go up from Jerusalem to the Temple Mount, when the prior journey to Jerusalem shows that he is old enough to do this and therefore no longer a minor?

(2) Thus the assumption that he was old enough to do without his mother is wrong.

(3) I.e., in order to fulfil the commandment to rejoice she must go to Jerusalem (cf. Deut. XIV, 26); but she is not subject to the commandment to appear before the Lord on the Temple Mount.

(4) I Sam. I, 22. According to the Talmud a child is weaned at the end of 24 months.

(5) According to Rashi a child can do that at the end of a year. The Shammaite view, therefore, must be wrong.

(6) The other reading, Abaye, is an anachronism; [unless we read ‘Said Abaye’ omitting ‘to him’.]

(7) She ought therefore to have gone up to the Sanctuary (then at Shiloh) and taken Samuel with her even before he was weaned.

(8) Thus the case of Samuel cannot be regarded as a support for the Hillelite view.

Beth Shammai require a child to go up to the Temple (as part of his initiation or religious training) as soon as he can do so by riding on his father's shoulders. Since the lame child could go up to the Temple Mount in this manner, is he bound to do this? But the question is not applicable to Beth Hillel, because they require the child to be able to walk.

This question is applicable to Beth Hillel, too, because the blind child could go up the Temple Mount by holding his father's hand.

Lit., ‘become straight’.

His initiation would serve no purpose, for even on becoming of age he will be exempt.

I.e., before he becomes of age. The question is: must we train him now because when he grows up he will be fit and therefore bound to ‘appear’, or shall we exempt him on account of his present defects?

Lit., ‘the Most-High’.

Which is partly burnt, and partly eaten by pilgrims and priests.

This is the Talmudic sense of תַּעַלֵּי מֵאָם; but in the Bible it means (a) a general assemblage (e.g. Jer. IX, 1) (b) a sacred assembly (e.g. Isa. I, 13), but especially the last day of Passover (Deut. XVI, 8) or of Tabernacles (Lev. XXIII, 36, Num. XXIX, 35).

V. Lev. XXIII, 18, 19: the festal offering (תְּרוּםָה) belonged to the class of peace-offerings (shalmoth); v. supra n. 2.

V. Ex. XXIV, 5, which is taken to refer to a time prior to the Revelation though it occurs after the Decalogue; cf. Shab. 88a, where the building of the altar and the offering of sacrifices thereon by ‘the young men of the children of Israel’, (taken by the Rabbis to be the firstborn) is said to have taken place on the fifth Sivan, a day before the Revelation.

I.e., the heads of the tribes mentioned at the dedication of the altar in Tabernacles; v. Num. VII, 87,88.

For the altar and for man.

I.e., the pilgrimage and festal-offerings which were private offerings should be compared with the offerings of ‘the princes’, which were also private offerings.

I.e., the offerings prescribed for the Feast of Weeks, which were provided from the Temple treasury.

V. Ex. XXIV, 5.

I.e., the pilgrimage and festal-offerings.

I.e., the public offerings of the Feast of Weeks.

I.e., the prince's offerings.

Ibid.

Ibid. The pilgrimage-offering was a burnt-offering.

V. Num. XXVIII, 2-6: this was a daily public offering from which no inference could be drawn regarding the pilgrimage-offerings.

Because the expression ‘they saw God’ (Ex. XXIV, 11) which, being similar to the expression ‘shall appear’ (Ex. XXIII, 17), is taken to imply that it was offered as a pilgrimage celebration.

I.e., many precepts were left vague at Sinai, which were explained in full detail after the erection of the Tabernacle; cf., for example, Ex. XX, 24 with the detailed instructions concerning the sacrifices in Lev. I-VII.

Talmud - Mas. Chagigah 6b

and the details in the Tent of Meeting. But R. Akiba said: The general directions and the details were given at Sinai and repeated in the Tent of Meeting and enjoined a third time in the Plains of Moab. Now if you suppose that the burnt-offering which the Israelites offered in the wilderness was the [statutory] continual burnt-offering, is it possible for a sacrifice not to require flaying and dissection at first and later to require flaying and dissection?

‘R. Eleazar’, for it was taught: It is it continual burnt-offering, which was offered in Mount Sinai. R. Eleazar said: The manner of its offering was enjoined at Sinai, but it was not actually offered up. R. Akiba said: It was offered up and was never discontinued. But how am I to explain [the verse]: Did you bring unto Me sacrifices and offerings in the wilderness forty years, O house of Israel — The tribe of Levi, who were not guilty of idol worship, offered them up.
‘Beth Hillel’, as we have said [above]. ‘R. Akiba’, also, as we have said [above]. ‘R. Jose the Galilean’, for it is taught: R. Jose the Galilean said: Three precepts are enjoined upon Israel when they make their pilgrimage at a festival: the pilgrimage-offering and the festal-offering and the rejoicing.\(^{12}\) The pilgrimage-offering has something that the other two have not;\(^{13}\) and the festal-offering has something that the other two have not; and the rejoicing has something that the other two have not. The pilgrimage-offering has something that the other two have not, for the pilgrimage-offering is offered entirely to God, which is not the case with the other two. The festal-offering has something that the other two have not, for the festal-offering obtained prior to the Revelation,\(^{14}\) which was not the case with the other two. The rejoicing has something which the other two have not, for the rejoicing applies to both men and women,\(^{15}\) which is not the case with the other two.\(^{16}\)

With reference to R. Ishmael, why do you represent him as agreeing with Beth Shammai:\(^{17}\) [Because you argue]: If it were supposed that the burnt-offering which the Israelites offered in the wilderness was the continual burnt-offering, is it possible for a sacrifice not to require flaying and dissection at first and later to require flaying and dissection? But behold R. Jose the Galilean said [distinctly]\(^{18}\) that the burnt-offering which the Israelites offered in the wilderness was the continual burnt-offering; [and yet he held that] at first it did not require flaying and dissection, and later it did require flaying and dissection. For it is taught: R. Jose the Galilean said: The burnt-offering which the Israelites offered in the wilderness did not require flaying and dissection, because flaying and dissection came into force only from [the erection of] the Tent of Meeting onward!\(^{19}\) — Strike out R. Ishmael from here.\(^{20}\)

R. Hisda asked: How is this verse to be understood: And he sent the young men of the children of Israel, who offered burnt-offerings [namely] lambs, and sacrificed peace-offerings of oxen unto the Lord?\(^{21}\) Or Perhaps both were oxen?\(^{22}\) What difference does it make? Mar Zutra said: In regard to the punctuation.\(^{23}\) R. Abba, the son of Raba, said: In regard to one who says: I vow [to offer] a burnt-offering like the burnt-offering which Israel offered in the wilderness. What [must he offer]? Were they oxen or lambs? — It remains [undecided].

We have learnt elsewhere:\(^{24}\) The following things

---

(2) Though not mentioned in connection with the Revelation but in other parts of the Torah e.g., Leviticus.
(3) Cf. Deut. I, 5f.
(4) Enjoined by God for all time, and not offered by individuals at their own discretion as pilgrimage-offerings.
(5) Since, according to R. Ishmael, the laws of flaying and dissection as details were laid down only at the Tent of Meeting.
(6) The burnt-offerings mentioned in Ex. XXIV, 5, before the Revelation at the Tent of Meeting, were offered up whole, whilst the continual burnt-offering, like all burnt-offerings, required flaying and dissection, v. Lev. I, 6; therefore it must be pilgrimage-offerings that are referred to in Ex. XXIV, which they offered on their own accord and which were consequently not subject to any of the detailed laws governing burnt-offerings (Rashi).
(7) Num. XXVIII, 6.
(8) Thus the burnt-offerings brought by the ‘young men’ (Ex. XXIV, 5) must have been pilgrimage-offerings.
(9) Amos V, 25. This implies, contrary to R. Akiba’s view, that in the wilderness the regular public sacrifices were not offered, because Israel was under divine censure.
(11) I.e., they offered the continual burnt-offerings at their own expense (Rashi).
(12) The spirit of festive joy was expressed by a sacrificial feast; if the offerings brought in fulfillment of vows, as free-will gifts or as tithe, did not suffice for all, additional peace-offerings had to be brought as offerings of rejoicing.
(13) I.e., is superior in a certain respect to the other two.
(14) The peace-offerings which the ‘young men’ also offered at Sinai (Ex. XXIV, 5) though not offered on a festival, are called festal-offerings (הנאות) because they were the fulfilment of Ex. V, 1. As R. Jose holds that the pilgrimage-offerings were not prior to the Revelation, he is in agreement with Beth Hillel.

(15) V. Deut. XIV, 26. The Tosefta reading is: For the offerings of rejoicing can be offered during any of the seven days’. שמחות יש בל תשלמים כל שבתות

(16) Which, being precepts not expressly enjoined upon women, and being dependent on a fixed time (v. p. 13, n. 4) are incumbent on men only.

(17) The question is against Abaye's statement above (p. 28): since the Hillelite view is the more authoritative, Abaye should avoid representing R. Ishmael as agreeing with Beth Shammai.

(18) I.e., it is clearly inferred from the Baraitha just quoted.

(19) Thus the reasoning which sought to make R. Ishmael agree with Beth Shammai is wrong.

(20) I.e., from the list of those who hold the Shammaite view.

(21) Ex. XXIV, 5.

(22) I.e., the burnt-offerings as well as the peace-offering.

(23) פייסים ממלכים. According to Rashi, the Neginoth or cantillation signs are referred to: the first interpretation would require the word נניה to have a disjunctive accent (e.g., ethnahta, as in our texts), and the second would require a conjunctive accent (e.g., Pashta or Rebia’). But actually the Neginoth are of Post-Talmudic origin; v. J.E. Vol. I p. 157, 6, prg. 7. For doubtful verse-division cf. also Yoma 5a-b. V. also Ned., Sonc. ed., p. 113, n. 5.

have no prescribed limit: 1 the [crop of the] corner of a field [to be left for the poor], 2 the first fruits, 3 the visiting of the Temple [Re’ayon], 4 deeds of loving-kindness, 5 and the study of the Torah. R. Johanan said: We were of the opinion that the visiting of the Temple [with an offering] had no maximum limit, but that it had a minimum limit, 6 till R. Oshaya Berabbi 7 came and taught that the visiting of the Temple [with an offering] has no maximum nor minimum limit. 8 But the Sages said: The pilgrimage-offering 9 must be worth [at least] one ma’ah of silver and the festal-offering two pieces of silver.

What is meant by Re'ayon? — R. Johanan says: [It means] appearing 10 in the Temple Court. 11 Resh Lakish says: [It means] appearing with a sacrifice. 12 Concerning the first day 13 of the Festival, all are agreed that the visit must be accompanied by an offering; they differ only with regard to the other days of the festival. [Further] if a man brings [an offering] every time that he comes, all are agreed that we are to accept it from him; they differ only with regard to a man who comes and does not bring [an offering]. R. Johanan is of the opinion that [Re'ayon means] appearing at the Temple Court; he need not therefore bring [an offering] whenever he comes. Resh Lakish says: [Re'ayon means] appearing with an offering; thus he must bring [an offering] whenever he comes.

Resh Lakish put an objection to R. Johanan. [It is written]: None shall appear before Me empty! 14 — He replied to him: [This refers] to the first day of the Festival. 15

He [again] put an objection to him: ‘None shall appear before Me empty’: [this means one must bring] animal sacrifices. 16 You say, animal sacrifices, but perhaps [it means] birds or meal-offerings? [Nay], you may deduce it by analogy. A festal-offering is prescribed for man 17 and a pilgrimage-offering is prescribed for God: 18 just as the festal-offering prescribed for man is an animal sacrifice, 19 so the pilgrimage-offering prescribed for God is an animal sacrifice. And what is meant by animal sacrifices? Burnt-offerings. You say burnt-offerings, but perhaps [it means] peace-offerings? [Nay], you may deduce it by analogy: a festal-offering is prescribed for man and a pilgrimage-offering is prescribed for God: just as the festal-offering which is prescribed for man is one that is fitting 20 for him, so the pilgrimage-offering which is prescribed for God must be one that is fitting 21 for Him. And so it is right, that your table should not be full and the table of the Master empty! 22 — He replied: [This refers] to the first day of the Festival.
[Again] he put an objection to him: R. Jose son of R. Judah said: Three times in the year were the Israelites commanded to go on pilgrimage: on the Feast of Unleavened Bread, on the Feast of Weeks and on the Feast of Booths; and they must not appear in divisions, for it is said: All thy males; and they must not appear empty-handed for it is said: None shall appear before Me empty! — He replied: [This refers] to the first day of the festival.

R. Johanan put an objection to Resh Lakish: [It is written]: Yir'eh [He will see]. Yera'eh [He will be seen]; just as I [come] free, so you [come] free! — All, therefore, must agree that if a person comes and does not bring [an offering] that he may enter [the Temple Court] and present himself and go out. They differ only with regard to a person who comes and brings [an offering]. R. Johanan, who says [Re'ayon means] appearing in the Temple Court, [holds] that there is no limit to ‘appearing’, but that there is a limit to the offerings. And Resh Lakish says: [Re'ayon means] appearing with an offering; thus there is no limit to the offerings either. R. Johanan put an objection to him: [It is written]: Let thy foot be seldom in thy Friend's house — There it refers to sin-offerings. There is no contradiction: the one case refers to sin-offerings and trespass-offerings; the other case refers to burnt-offerings and peace-offerings. It has also been taught thus: 'Let thy foot be seldom in thy Friend's house': the verse speaks of sin-offerings and trespass-offerings. You say of sin-offerings and trespass-offerings, but perhaps it is of nought but burnt-offerings and peace-offerings? When it says: 'I will come to Thy house with burnt-offerings, I will perform unto Thee my vows', behold burnt-offerings and peace-offerings are mentioned; how now shall I explain [the verse]: ‘Let thy foot be seldom in thy Friend's house’? The verse speaks of sin-offerings and trespass-offerings.

‘And they must not appear in divisions etc.’ R. Joseph thought to explain it [thus]: If a man has ten sons, they should not make the pilgrimage five one day and five the next day.32

(1) i.e., fixed by Scripture.
(2) V. Lev. XIX, 9 and XXIII, 22; the Rabbis fixed the minimum at a sixtieth of the field.
(3) Deut. XXVI, 1-11.
(4) תִּנְצַר, תִּנְצָר or תִּנְצָר lit., appearing’ sc. at the Temple Court; secondarily, it means the sacrifice brought on the occasion of the Temple visit; cf. end of page, and p. 1, n. 1.
(5) It includes all deeds of kindness; but for almsgiving the Rabbis prescribed a limit, v. Keth. 50a.
(6) prescribed by Scripture i.e., the ma'ah or two ma'ahs mentioned in the Mishnah.
(7) בֵּית. According to Rashi, ‘great in his generation, i.e., eminent; according to Levy and Jastrow, ‘belonging to a school of an eminent teacher’ (contra. of בֵּית); a title of scholars, most frequently applied to disciples of R. Judah ha-Nasi and his contemporaries, but also to some of his predecessors and sometimes to the first Amoraim; v. Naz., Sonc. ed., p. 64, n. 1.
(8) V. p. 31. n. 7.
(9) Heb. תְּרֵיסָר v. n. 5, and p. 31, n. 10.
(10) The different form of the word implies a different meaning from תְּרֵיסָר; the latter in this context would mean ‘the (cost of the) pilgrimage burnt-offering’; the former signifies ‘appearing’ in the Temple.
(11) I.e., there is no limit to the number of visits, but only one sacrifice need be brought.
(12) I.e., however many visits are made to the Temple Court a sacrifice must be brought every time.
(13) Lit., ‘the essential part’.
(14) Ex. XXIII, 15. Thus the visitor to the Temple must always bring an offering.
(15) But on all subsequent visits no offering need be brought.
(16) עָטַה signifies sacrifices slaughtered with a knife, i.e., עֶשֶׁר (‘beasts’) in contradistinction to עָטַת (‘birds’), for which עָטָה (‘pinching the neck with finger nail’) is prescribed.
(17) עַלְּמָיו Grk.  a private man (as opposed to a priest, officer etc.), a commoner; ignoble, ignorant (Jast.). Here it means the pilgrim (as opposed to God), for whom the festal-offering was intended to provide the festive meal.
(18) Lit., ‘the Most High’. The words ‘before Me’ (in Ex. XXIII, 15) imply that the pilgrimage-offering was prescribed primarily as a sacrifice to God in contradistinction to the festal-offering which was to provide food for the worshipper.

(19) Cf. Ex. XXIII, 18 where נְדֵרָה ‘the fat of any festal-offering’) implies that it was an animal, for birds have no בּוֹז, fat to be burnt on the altar.

(20) I.e., it provides him with meat for his feast.

(21) I.e., a burnt-offering.

(22) Thus an offering should be brought on each visit to the Temple, which refutes R. Johanan.

(23) Lit., ‘by halves’. Explained infra p. 34.

(24) Ex. XXIII, 17.

(25) This apparently supports Resh Lakish.

(26) V. p. 3, n. 3.

(27) I.e., without sacrifices.

(28) This new view of the controversy shows that the previous arguments between R. Johanan and Resh Lakish were not actually advanced by the Rabbis named but by later scholars, v. Tosaf. Bek. 4b, s.v. נַחֲלָה.

(29) Prov. XXV, 17. I.e., one should not bring too many sacrifices to the House of God. There is possibly a play here on the word נֵרָה which means ‘foot’ and also ‘pilgrimage-festival’. For the term ‘Friend’ understood of God, cf. the terms of endearment in Cant. which the Rabbis interpreted as expressing the loving relationship between Israel and God.

(30) I.e., the verse means: Avoid the necessity of bringing sin-offerings.

(31) Ps. LXVI, 13. Thus it is good to bring sacrifices.

(32) Taking יִטְנַשְׁבּוּ literally. i.e., ‘by halves’.

Talmud - Mas. Chagigah 7b

Said Abaye to him: This is obvious; which of them would you make transgressors and which of them would you make zealous?1 What then is the purpose of the verse?2 To intimate the teaching of ‘Others’.3 For it is taught: ‘Others’ Say: The scraper, the copper-smith and the tanner are exempt from appearing [at the Temple]; for it is said, ‘All thy males’: he who is able to go on the pilgrimage with ‘all thy males’; these [then] are excluded, because they are unable to go up with all thy males.4

GEMARA. Accordingly, it is during the mid-festival only that burnt-offerings are brought from [animals bought with] unconsecrated money, but on the festival [they may be brought] also from [animals bought with Second] Tithe money. [But] why? It is obligatory, and everything that is obligatory must be brought from [animals bought with] unconsecrated money! And if you say: It comes to teach us this, [to wit,] that burnt-offerings can be brought during the mid-festival but not on the festival;18 then this will be according to Beth Shammai!19 For we have learnt: Beth Shammai say. One may bring peace-offerings [on the festival]20 without laying the hands21 upon them; but not burnt-offerings.22 But Beth Hillel say, One may bring peace-offerings and burnt-offerings [on the festival] and lay the hands upon them!23 — [Our Mishnah] is defective, and it should read thus: Burnt-offerings, vow-offerings and freewill-offerings are brought during the mid-festival, but they may not be brought on the festival.24 But the pilgrimage burnt-offering is brought even on the festival; it must be brought only from animals bought with unconsecrated money; but the peace-offerings of rejoicing can be brought also from animals bought with Second Tithe money. And regarding the festal-offering of the first festival day of Passover, Beth Shammai say: ”It must be brought from animals bought with unconsecrated money; and Beth Hillel say: ”It can be brought” also from animals bought with Second Tithe money. It has also been taught thus: Burnt-offerings, vow-offerings and freewill-offerings are brought during the mid-festival but not on the festival. But the pilgrimage burnt-offering is brought even on the festival; and when it is brought, it is brought only from animals bought with unconsecrated money; but the peace-offerings of rejoicing can be brought also from animals bought with Second Tithe money. And regarding the festal-offering of the first festival day of Passover, Beth Shammai say: ”It must be brought” from animals bought with unconsecrated money; but Beth Hillel say: ”It can be brought” also from animals bought with Second Tithe money. Why is the festal-offering of the first festival day of Passover different?

— It comes to teach us this: Only the festival-offering of the fifteenth [of Nisan must be brought from animals bought with unconsecrated money] but not the festal-offering of the fourteenth [of Nisan].

(1) All the ten are bound to visit the Temple on the first day; if, now, five at a time went up, the first group would be doing their duty scrupulously and the second five would be remiss.

(2) ’All thy males,’ teaching that they must not appear in divisions.

(3) V. p. 14, n. 5.

(4) ’They must not appear in divisions’ means, therefore, that all the Israelites must form one group; if the scraper etc. were to go on the pilgrimage they would have to form, because of their malodour, a separate group, which is forbidden.

(5) מועדים lit., ‘appointed time,’ i.e., the intermediate days of Passover and Sukkoth as opposed to ימי חסן, festival days (called in the Bible ימי קדושה, מקר老旧小区 יהודיה, y. o. c.). In the Bible מועדים includes both festival and intermediate days, cf. e.g. Lev. XXIII, 4.

(6) As opposed to animals bought with Second Tithe money (v. infra, n. 8). All obligatory offerings had to be brought from unconsecrated animals (cf. Men. 82a and infra p. 36).

(7) Brought to provide sufficient meat for the pilgrim and his family so that they might keep the festival with rejoicing (cf. Deut. XIV, 26).

(8) Cf. Deut. XIV, 22f. The tithe was separated in the first, second, fourth and fifth year of the seven year cycle, after terumah (’heave-offering’) had been given to the Priest and First Tithe to the Levite. It was to be consumed in Jerusalem or the money with which it was redeemed spent there (v. Danby, P. 73, n. 6).

(9) As opposed to priests.

(10) I.e., of ’rejoicing’ on the festival by offering peace-offerings wherewith to provide themselves with meat for the feast. Thus it is unnecessary to bring special sacrifices for this purpose, if the vow-offerings etc. provide sufficient for the family’s needs.

(13) Brought by pilgrims and of which only the priests may eat; v. Num. XVIII, 9f.

(14) V. ibid. 17-19.

(15) V. Lev. VII, 29f.

(16) They were sin-offerings.

(17) V. Lev. II, 1. The bird and meal-offerings would not provide a feast suited to the occasion of rejoicing.

(18) I.e., it is forbidden to offer the pilgrimage burnt-offerings on the festival (when all manner of work is prohibited), even though it is an obligatory offering of the festival, because there is time to bring the offering the next day.

(19) Whose opinion is invalid against that of Beth Hillel.

(20) Because they supply the pilgrim with his feast.

(21) Cf. Lev. III, 2 and infra 16a. The act of laying on of the hands, which causes the pilgrim to support himself on the animal, is forbidden by the Rabbis on Festival and Sabbath on account of shebuth (’abstention, rest’, v. Glos.) i.e., it is an action out of keeping with the restful character of the holy day. though it is not actually included in one of the thirty-nine categories of labour (v. Mishnah Shab. VII, 2) and cf. Mishnah Bez. V, 2.

(22) Exceptions were the continual burnt-offerings and the additional offerings, which were permitted to be offered because they had an appointed time (cf. Num. XXVIII, 2 חֶלְלוֹת הָעָנָא); otherwise, Beth Shammai explained ‘unto you’ in Ex. XII, 16 to mean: for yourselves offer sacrifices but not entirely for God.

(23) Since it is permitted to bring them, the laying on of the hands is also permitted. V. Bez. 19b.

(24) Even according to Beth Hillel.

(25) Though it could be brought during the mid-festival, Lev. XXIII, 4 (‘and ye shall keep it a feast’) is taken by Beth Hillel to imply that it should be offered on the first day of the festival.

(26) [Wilna Gaon emends ‘when they are brought’ referring to all the mentioned offerings].

(27) V. p. 36, n. 1, and infra p. 39.

(28) Explained infra.

(29) As distinct from the festal-offering of the fourteenth of Nisan; v. next note.

(30) I.e., why is it specifically mentioned?

(31) If the paschal lamb did not suffice for the company a festal-offering could be sacrificed in addition (cf. Sifre to Deut. XVI, 2 and Pes. 69b). This festival-offering was not obligatory, hence even Beth Shammai would agree that it could be brought from the Second Tithe.

Talmud - Mas. Chagigah 8a

Thus he holds that the festal-offering of the fourteenth [of Nisan] is not enjoined by the Torah.

The Master said [above]: ‘Beth Hillel say: [The festal-offering of the first day of the festival can be brought also] from [animals bought with Second] Tithe money’. Why? It is obligatory, and everything that is obligatory must be brought only from [animals bought with] unconsecrated money! — ‘Ulla said: When he supplements [the unconsecrated by that of the Second Tithe].

Hezekiah said: One animal may be supplemented by another animal, but money may not be supplemented by money. And R. Johanan said: Money may be supplemented by money, but one animal may not be supplemented by another animal. There is a teaching agreeing with Hezekiah and there is a teaching agreeing with R. Johanan. There is a teaching agreeing with R. Johanan: [it is written]: After the tribute; this teaches that a man must bring his obligatory offering from [animals bought with] unconsecrated money. And whence [do we know] that if he desires to mix he may mix? The text teaches: According as the Lord, thy God, shall bless thee. There is a teaching agreeing with Hezekiah: [The expression] ‘after the tribute’ teaches that a man may bring his obligatory offering from [animals bought with] unconsecrated money. Beth Shammai say: The first [festival] day from [animals bought with] unconsecrated money. thenceforward from [animals bought with Second] Tithe money. Beth Hillel say: The first meal from [animals bought with] unconsecrated money. thenceforward from [animals bought with Second] Tithe money. And the remaining days of Passover, a man may fulfil his obligation with the tithe of cattle. — R. Ashi said: Lest he come to separate tithe on the festival; and it is impossible to separate tithe on the festival on account of the [marking with] red paint. What evidence is there that the [word] ‘tribute’ indicates that which is unconsecrated? — Because it is written: And the King Ahasuerus laid tribute upon the land.

ISRAELITES MAY FULFIL THEIR OBLIGATION WITH VOW-OFFERINGS AND FREEWILL-OFFERINGS. Our Rabbis taught: [It is written], And thou shalt rejoice in thy feast. This includes all kinds of rejoicings as [festival] rejoicing. Hence the Sages said: Israelites may fulfil their obligation with vow-offerings, freewill-offerings and tithe of cattle; and the priests with sin-offering and guilt-offering, and with firstlings, and with the breast and the shoulder; one might think also with bird-offerings and meal-offerings, [therefore] Scripture teaches: ‘And thou shalt rejoice in thy feast’.

(1) Cf. p. 36.

(2) If he has a large company and the festival-offering from his unconsecrated means אֲשֶׁר (הָאֶשֶׁר) will not suffice, he is permitted to add thereto from the Second Tithe: according to Hezekiah, it means that he may purchase other festival-offerings with Second Tithe money; according to R. Johanan, he may add Second Tithe money in order to purchase a larger animal. The former deems it better that one should satisfy one's obligation to bring the festival-offering from unconsecrated means by bringing therefrom a complete offering i.e., the first, though by itself inadequate for the company; the latter prefers that every morsel of the festival-offering should contain a percentage purchased with unconsecrated money (Rashi). Tosaf. explains that R. Johanan objects to ‘dividing one's obligation’ by spreading it over two animals.

(3) Deut. XVI, 10.

(4) The expression ‘mix’ supports R. Johanan, because it is applicable to money and not to animals.

(5) Ibid. I.e., with both unconsecrated and consecrated means.

(6) Because it is obligatory then.

(7) Though still termed festival-offerings, they are really peace-offerings of rejoicing.

(8) I.e., the first festal-offering.

(9) Even on the same day.

(10) ‘To rejoice’.

(11) And also of course with offerings bought with Second Tithe money.

(12) I.e., satisfy his obligation after the first meal with tithe cattle, just as he may buy an offering with Second Tithe money.

(13) Every tenth animal was designated as tithe by being marked with red paint (Bek. IX, 7); on a holy day painting, being regarded as work, is prohibited.

(14) Esth. X, 1. The word used here מִלָּה and מְלָה in Deut. XVI, 10 are from the same root.

(15) Deut. XVI, 14, which refers to Sukkoth, but by analogy is applicable to each of the three pilgrim festivals.

(16) I.e., the precept to rejoice can be fulfilled only by having meat at the feast (cf. Pes. 119a), but the flesh of any kind of sacrifice will do.

Talmud - Mas. Chagigah 8b

only with those [offerings] from which the festal-offering can be brought; these, then, are excluded. Since the festal-offering cannot be brought from them. R. Ashi said: It is to be deduced from [the expression]. ‘And thou shalt rejoice’; these, then, are excluded because there is no [festive] joy in them. But what does R. Ashi do with [the expression]. ‘in thy feast’. — To intimate what R. Daniel b. Kattina learnt. For R. Daniel b. Kattina said that Rab said: Whence [is it derived] that marriages may not take place during the mid-festival? Because it is said: ‘And thou shalt rejoice in thy feast’, but not in thy wife.

MISHNAH. HE THAT HAS MANY TO EAT [WITH HIM] AND FEW POSSESSIONS; OFFERS MANY PEACE-OFFERINGS AND FEW BURNT-OFFERINGS. [HE THAT HAS] MANY POSSESSIONS AND FEW TO EAT [WITH HIM] BRINGS MANY BURNT-OFFERINGS AND FEW PEACE-OFFERINGS. [HE THAT HAS] FEW OF EITHER, FOR HIM IS PRESCRIBED. ONE MA'AH OF SILVER, TWO PIECES OF SILVER. HE THAT HAS MANY OF BOTH, OF HIM IT IS SAID: EVERY MAN SHALL GIVE AS HE IS ABLE, ACCORDING TO THE BLESSING OF THE LORD THY GOD, WHICH HE HATH GIVEN THEE.

GEMARA. Whence shall he bring many peace-offerings? Behold He has not! — Said R. Hisda: He may supplement [unconsecrated money with Second Tithe money] and bring a large bull. Said R. Shesheth to him: Behold they said: One may supplement beast with beast! What did he mean? Should one say he meant this: Behold they said: One may supplement beast with beast, but not money with money; then he should say to him: One may not supplement money with money! He must, therefore, have meant this: Behold they said: One may also supplement beast with beast! According to whom will this be? It will be neither according to Hezekiah nor according to R. Johanan. And should you say: It is only the Amoraim who differ [about it], but the Baraithas do not differ; but behold it says: The first meal must come from unconsecrated money! — The first meal means that the amount of the value of a first meal\textsuperscript{20} must be from unconsecrated money.\textsuperscript{21}

‘Ulla said that Resh Lakish said: If a man set aside ten beasts for his festal-offering [and] he offered up five on the first day of the festival, he may offer up the other five on the second day of the festival;\textsuperscript{22} R. Johanan said: Since he has interrupted [the offer- above) and not leave R. Hisda to infer what is prohibited from a statement of what is permitted. ings], he cannot offer any more. R. Abba said: But they do not differ: the one speaks of an instance where he did not declare his intention, and the other speaks of an instance where he did declare his intention.\textsuperscript{23} What is the case of the one who had not declared his intention?\textsuperscript{24} — Should one say that there is no time left in the day to offer them, then the reason for his not offering them was because there is no time left in the day!\textsuperscript{25} [Should one say], therefore, that he had no [more] people to eat with him\textsuperscript{25} — No, it refers to a case where there was time left in the day [to offer] and he had people to eat with; seeing that he did not offer them on the first day [of the festival] it proves that he left them over [intentionally].\textsuperscript{26} And so it stands to reason;\textsuperscript{27} for when Rabin came [from Palestine] he said that R. Johanan said: If a man set aside ten beasts for his festal-offering, [and] he offered five the first day of the festival, he may offer the other five on the second day of the festival. [Now the two statements of R. Johanan] contradict one another! Surely, therefore, you must learn from this that in the one case he does not declare his intention and in the other he does declare his intention. Proven.

It is also reported:\textsuperscript{28} R. Shaman b. Abba said that R. Johanan said:

\textsuperscript{(1)} V. p. 33, n. 3. Cf. also infra 10b.
\textsuperscript{(2)} I.e., since Scripture has no redundant expressions, what teaching does he derive from it.

The root יָבְנֹת means to slaughter; cf. Latin pecunia from pecus (Goldschmidt). Cf. also chattels from cattle. Jastrow offers a different explanation.

\textsuperscript{(14)} As neither of them permits the supplementing of both money with money and beast with beast.
\textsuperscript{(15)} Lit., ‘speakers’: the Talmudic scholars who were active from the time of the conclusion of the Mishnah (C. 220 C.E.) to the end of the fifth century, and compiled almost the whole of the Gemara; v. Glos. s.v. Amora. Here Hezekiah and R. Johanan are referred to.
\textsuperscript{(16)} I.e., regarding the permissibility of supplementing money with money and adding beast to beast.
\textsuperscript{(17)} Lit., ‘extraneous (teachings)’: the generic term for Tannaitic teachings not included in the Mishnah, v. Glos.
\textsuperscript{(18)} The Baraithas quoted above (pp. 38, 39) in support of Hezekiah and R. Johanan respectively do not contradict each other regarding the permissibility of adding money to money, only regarding the adding of beast to beast, which the first Baraitha prohibits and the second permits. Thus R. Shesheth will agree with the second Baraitha which permits the adding of beast to beast as well as money to money.
\textsuperscript{(19)} This presumably means that the whole of the flesh of the first meal must come from unconsecrated money, which in turn shows that the Baraitha refers to the supplementing of beast with beast and not of money with money.
\textsuperscript{(20)} [I.e.,the amount required to constitute generally a first festal meal and not, as assumed, the whole of the first meal. The text is in slight disorder].
\textsuperscript{(21)} Thus the Baraitha may refer both to animals and money.
\textsuperscript{(22)} Rashi explains: One must not suppose that by offering the remaining beasts on the second day (i.e., the first day of the mid-festival) he is transgressing the commandment to keep one day as a feast i.e., to offer his festal offerings on the first day (deduced infra p. 44 from Lev. XXIII, 41, ‘and ye shall keep it (only) a feast’), for the second day he is merely ‘compensating’ for the dues of the first. But according to R. Hananel (quoted in Tosaf.

(23) I.e., he said explicitly I set all of them aside for the first day; if then he offers some on the second day, they are merely ‘compensation’ for the first day.

(24) That you rule that he cannot offer them any more.

(25) But his intention was to offer them on the first day.

(26) In order to provide a feast for the second day.

(27) I.e., that R. Johanan would grant that if he declared his intention to offer them all on the first day, he may offer the remaining beasts on the second.

(28) This is an Amoraic (v. p. 41, n. 3) corroboration to the effect that where it is evident that the pilgrim did not intend in the first instance to hold over some of the offerings for the second day, R. Johanan would agree with Resh Lakish.

Talmud - Mas. Chagigah 9a

They taught this1 only [of a case] when it had not ended, but if it had ended, he may offer the rest [on the second day]. What does ‘ended’ mean? Shall one say [it means]: he had ended2 his sacrifices? What [in that case] should he offer? It must mean, therefore, that the day had not ended3 but if the day had ended4 he may offer the rest [on the second day].

GEMARA. Whence do we know this?8 — R. Johanan in the name of R. Ishmael said: [The expression] ‘Azereth [‘solemn assembly’] is used of the seventh day of Passover,9 and [the expression] ‘Azereth is used of the eighth day of the Feast [of Tabernacles].10 Just as there it it11 intimates that one can make good [thereon the festal-offering due on the first day] so here12 it intimates that one can make good [thereon the festal-offering of the first day]. And it is free [for interpretation];13 for were it not free one might object: whereas [this14 applies] to the seventh day of Passover which is not differentiated from the preceding [days], can you say this of the eighth day of the Feast [of Tabernacles] which is differentiated from the preceding [days].15 But it is not so;16 it is quite free [for interpretation]. Consider, what does ‘Azereth mean? [Evidently it means], restrained [‘Azur]17 in respect of doing work. But behold it is written: Thou shalt do no work;18 wherefore, then, has the Divine Law written ‘Azereth?’19 You must infer therefrom [that it is] in order to leave it free [for interpretation]. But the Tanna20 [of the following Baraita] deduces it from here. For it is taught: And ye shall keep it a feast unto the Lord seven days.21 One might think that he must go on bringing festal-offerings the whole of the seven days. Scripture, therefore, says, ‘it’: on it [only] are you to offer festal-offerings, but you are not to offer festal-offerings on all the seven days. If so, why does it say, ‘seven’? To intimate that one may make good [the festal-offering during the seven days of the festival]. And whence [do we learn] that if he did not bring the festal-offering on the first festival day of the Feast [of Tabernacles] that he can go on bringing it during the course of the whole Festival, even on the last festival day? Scripture says: Ye shall keep it in the seventh month. If, now, [it is to be kept] in the seventh month, one might think that one can go on bringing the festal-offering throughout the whole month, therefore Scripture says, ‘it’: on ‘it’ [only] are you to offer festal-offerings, but you are not to offer festal-offerings outside it.

And what is the nature of this ‘making good’? — R. Johanan says: They make up for the first day; and R. Oshaiah says: They make up for one another. What is the [practical] point at issue between them? — R. Zera said: [The case of] a man who was lame on the first day [of the festival] and became well on the second day is the point of issue between them. R. Johanan says: They make up for the first day; since on the first day he was not qualified [to bring the festal-offering], he is not qualified on the second. And R. Oshaiah says: They make up for one another; although he was not qualified on the first day he is qualified on the second. But could R. Johanan have said this? For behold Hezekiah said: If [a Nazirite] became defiled during the day [of the eighth] he has to bring [a sacrifice], but during the night [preceding the eighth] he does not have to bring [a sacrifice]. But R. Johanan said: Also [if he was defiled] during the night, he must bring [a sacrifice]! — Said R. Jeremiah: The case of uncleanness is different, because it can be made good [as is the case with the sacrifice] on the Second Passover. R. Papa demurred to this: It is right according to the view that the Second Passover

(1) I.e., the Baraitha quoted infra pp. 44-45 which deduces from Lev. XXIII, 41 that the festal-offering is to be offered on the first day only.

(3) And he refrained from offering the remaining beasts.
(4) And he had no opportunity of offering all his sacrifices.
(5) Which is regarded as a separate festival, nevertheless one can make good thereon the festal-offering due on the first day of Tabernacles.

(21) Lev. XXIII, 41.
(22) Ibid. I.e., you can bring the festal-offering on every festival day in the month.
(23) The second ‘it’ of the verse.
(24) I.e., the days of the festival following the first.
(25) I.e., the first day of the festival is the specific day for the festival-offering. If a man was liable to bring it on the first day but did not, he may make it good on a subsequent day of the festival; but if he was exempt on the first day, he is no longer bound to bring the offering.

(26) I.e., each day makes up for the preceding in the sense that it puts a new liability on the pilgrim; thus on whichever day of the festival he becomes qualified, he is bound to bring his offerings.

(27) And therefore exempt; v. p. 1.

(28) If a Nazirite (v. Num. VI, 2f) becomes defiled, he must wait seven days, and bring a sacrifice on the eighth, before he again begins to observe the days of his Naziritehood. One sacrifice will suffice for several defilements if the lapse between any two is less than eight days. But if he became defiled on the eighth day, he must bring a sacrifice for the previous defilement, since it was already due, and also for the subsequent defilement, since it occurred in a new period of eight days. If, however, the second defilement occurred on the night preceding the eighth, a second sacrifice has not to be brought, since the first cannot be offered till the morning, (for sacrifices are offered only during the day), the obligation to bring a sacrifice cannot be said to have yet fallen due and consequently the question of making good does not in his view arise. Cf. Ker. II, 3.

(29) Because he has already been purified by ritual immersion (יִמְחַזֵּק) on the seventh day, and the sun of that day has set (יַרְדוֹתָם). Now this statement seems to show that R. Johanan holds that though one is not qualified to bring a sacrifice (e.g., the Nazirite on the night preceding the eighth day), one may make up for it later.

(30) I.e., a sacrifice which cannot be offered on account of uncleanness is exceptional.

(31) Which is offered to make good the nonobservance of the First Passover sacrifice owing to a disqualification of uncleanness. V. Num. 10f. Thus those who are unfit to bring the paschal lamb on the First Passover may bring it on the Second, and similarly in other cases of uncleanness; but in all other cases of disqualification, R. Johanan would hold that an offering which could not be brought on one day cannot be made good.

makes up for the First;1 but what is to be said according to the view that the Second [Passover] is a separate festival?2 — Therefore, said R. Papa, R. Johanan must be of the opinion that the night [before the day on which the sacrifice is due] is not regarded as belonging to the preceding period.3 But how could R. Johanan have said this?4 For behold R. Johanan said: If [a zab]5 had one emission in the night and two in the [following] day, he must bring [a second offering];6 but [if he had] two in the night and one in the day, he has not to bring [a second offering].7 Now if you imagine that R. Johanan is of the opinion that the night [before the day on which the sacrifice is due] is not regarded as belonging to the preceding period, then even [if he had] two [emissions] at night and one in the day he must bring [a second offering]! — R. Johanan said this only according to the view that the night [before] is regarded as belonging to the preceding period.8 But according to this view it is surely obvious!9 — It is required for the case where there are two [emissions] in the day and one the [preceding] night. You might have thought [the decision] to be according to the objection of R. Shisha son of R. Idi, it therefore teaches us that it is according to R. Joseph.10

IF THE FESTIVAL PASSED AND HE DID NOT BRING THE FESTIVAL OFFERING, HE IS NOT BOUND TO MAKE IT GOOD. OF SUCH A PERSON IT IS SAID: HE THAT IS CROOKED CANNOT BE MADE STRAIGHT AND THAT WHICH IS WANTING CANNOT BE RESTORED. Bar He-He said to Hillel: [Instead of] the [expression] ‘to be reckoned’ it ought to be ‘to be filled’!11 It must refer, therefore, to one whose fellows reckoned him12 for [the performance of] a religious act, but he would not be reckoned with them. It has also been taught thus: ‘He that is crooked cannot be made straight’: this refers to one who neglected to read the morning Shema’ or the evening Shema’,13 or he neglected the morning prayer14 or the evening prayer. And that which is wanting cannot be reckoned; this refers to one whose fellows resolved16 on [the performance of] a religious act and he would not be reckoned with them.

Bar He-He said to Hillel: Then shall ye again discern between the righteous and the wicked, between him that serveth God and him that serveth Him not.17 ‘The righteous’ is the same as ‘he that serveth God’; ‘the wicked’ is the same as ‘he that serveth Him not’! — He answered him: He that serveth Him and he that serveth Him not both refer to such as are perfectly righteous; but he that repeated his chapter a hundred times is not to be compared with him who repeated it a hundred and one times.18 Said [Bar He-He] to him: And because of once he is called ‘he that serveth Him not’? — He answered: Yes, go and learn from the mule-drivers market; ten parasangs for one zuz,19 eleven parasangs for two zuz.

Elijah20 said to Bar He-He, and others say, to R. Eleazar: What is the meaning of the verse: Behold I have refined thee but not as silver; I have tried thee in the furnace of affliction?21 It teaches that the Holy One, blessed be He, went through all the good qualities in order to give [them] to Israel, and He found only poverty.22 Samuel said, and others say. R. Joseph: This accords with the popular saying: Poverty befits Israel like a red trapping a white horse.23 R. SIMEON B. MENASYA SAID: WHO IS IT ‘THAT IS CROOKED’ WHO ‘CANNOT BE MADE STRAIGHT’? HE THAT HAS CONNECTION WITH A FORBIDDEN RELATION AND BEGETS BY HER BASTARD ISSUE etc. Only if he begets, but not if he does not beget. But behold it is taught: R. Simeon b. Menasya said: If a man steal, he can return the theft and [so] become straight; but he that has connection with a married woman and makes her prohibited unto her husband is banished from the world and passes away.24 (R. Simeon b. Yohai said: One does not say: Examine the camel, examine the pig,25 Only examine the lamb.26 And who is this? A disciple of the wise who has forsaken the Torah. R. Judah b. Lakish said: Any disciple of the wise who has forsaken the Torah, of him Scripture says: As a bird that wandereth from her nest, so is a man that wandereth from his place.27 And it further says: What unrighteousness have your fathers found in me, that they are gone far from me?)28 — There is no contradiction: the one case refers to his unmarried sister,29 the other refers to a married woman.30 Or I might say: Both are cases of married women; but there is no contradiction: in the one case

(1) V. Pes. 93a.
(2) This excludes the explanation that a sacrifice, not offered in time owing to uncleanness, can be made good later.
(3) [Lit., ‘is not (deemed as) wanting time’. I.e., the fact that one cannot bring an offering on the night preceding the day on which it is due, is not regarded as a disqualifying factor, and consequently in the case of a Nazirite the night preceding the eighth day completes the eight days’ period, so that the sacrifice may be said to fall due thereon, though he is actually prevented from offering it because it is still night. For this reason the sacrifice which was not offered at night can be made good on the following morning, and should he in the meantime suffer a second defilement, he has to bring a second sacrifice, whereas in the case of the festival-offering where he was lame on the first day, there was no obligation whatsoever resting on him to bring a sacrifice and consequently this cannot be made good].
(4) I.e., that the night preceding the day on which a sacrifice is due is not regarded as belonging to the preceding period.
(5) בָּט, one who suffers from gonorrhoea (v. Lev. XV). After the first emission he is considered a מָנָח, (unclean in the degree of zab), and has to count seven clean days, wash his garments, have ritual immersion and wait for sunset; after the third, he has, in addition, to bring sacrifices on the eighth day (cf. Ned. 43b). This zab had counted seven days and was to bring his offerings on the morrow, and in the meantime he saw further discharges.
(6) Because the first emission is counted with the two of the morning.
(7) Because the two nocturnal emissions make him unclean within the period of the first defilement, i.e., before the eighth day.
(8) But his own view is the reverse.
(9) As his own opinion the statement would have point in as much as it tells us his personal view; otherwise the teaching is an obvious corollary of the principle that the night before belongs to the preceding period.

The other dicta are quoted merely because they form part of the Baraitha (Tosef.).

it was against her will,¹ in the other it was with her consent. Or you may say: in both cases it was against her will but there is no contradiction: the one case concerns a priest's wife² and the other an Israelite's wife.

Neither was there any peace to him that went out or came in,³ Rab said: As soon as man goes forth from Halachic⁴ to Scripture study he no longer has peace.⁵ And Samuel said: It means one who leaves Talmud for Mishnah.⁶ And R. Johanan said: Even [if he goes] from Talmud to Talmud.⁷

GEMARA. It is taught: R. Eliezer said: They¹⁴ have something to rest on, for it is said: When one shall clearly utter [a vow], when one shall clearly utter [a vow]:¹⁵ one [intimates] an utterance to bind, and the other an utterance to dissolve. R. Joshua said: They have something to rest on, for it is said: Wherefore I swore in My wrath.¹⁶ [It means,] I swore in My wrath,¹⁷ but I retracted.¹⁸ R. Isaac said: They have something to rest on, for it is said: Whosoever is of a willing heart.¹⁹ Hanania, son of the brother of R. Joshua, said: They have something to rest on, for it is said: I have sworn, and I have confirmed it, to observe Thy righteous ordinances.²⁰ Rab Judah said that Samuel said: Had I been there I should have said to them: My [Scriptural proof] is better than yours, for it is said: He shall not break his word.²¹ ‘He’ may not break it, but others may dissolve it for him. Raba said: To all these [proofs] objection can be made except to that of Samuel, against which no objection can be raised. For against R. Eliezer [it may be objected]: Perhaps [the verse is to be explained] according to R. Judah, who said it in the name of R. Tarfon. For it is taught: R. Judah said in the name of R. Tarfon: Indeed, neither of them becomes a Nazirite, because Naziriteship can be assumed only by clear utterance. \(^{22}\) Against R. Joshua [it may be objected]: Perhaps this is the meaning of the verse: I swore in My wrath and did not retract’. Against R. Isaac [it may be objected]: Perhaps [the verse comes to] exclude the view of Samuel. For Samuel said: Though he determined in his heart, \(^{23}\) he must still utter it with his lips. \(^{24}\) And [the verse] \(^{25}\) teaches us that even though he did not utter it with his lips [it is binding]. Against Hanania, the son of the brother of R. Joshua [it may be objected]: Perhaps [the verse is to be explained] according to R. Giddal who said it in the name of Rab. For R. Giddal said that Rab said: Whence [is it to be deduced] that one may take an oath to fulfil a precept? \(^{26}\) For it is said: ‘I have sworn, and I have confirmed it, to observe Thy righteous ordinances’. \(^{27}\) But against Samuel's proof no objection can be raised. Raba, and some say, R. Nahman b. Isaac, said: This is the meaning of the popular saying: Better one grain of pungent pepper than a basketful of pumpkins. \(^{28}\)

THE LAWS CONCERNING THE SABBATH. But they are written [in Scripture] \(^{29}\) — No, it is necessary [to state this] for the teaching of R. Abba. For R. Abba said: He who digs a hole on the Sabbath and requires it only for the sake of its earth is not liable for it. \(^{30}\) According to which authority [will this be]? According to R. Simeon, who said: one is not liable for work [performed on the Sabbath] which is not required for itself. \(^{31}\) — You may even say that it is according to R. Judah: \(^{32}\) there \(^{33}\) one is improving. \(^{34}\) here \(^{35}\) one is spoiling. \(^{36}\) But why does it say: AS MOUNTAINS HANGING BY A HAIR? \(^{37}\)

\(^{(16)}\) Ps. XCV, R.

\(^{(17)}\) I.e., hastily, but in calmer mood I regretted the oath and retracted. The verse refers to God, of course; but the inference is drawn from the anthropomorphism for ill-considered human vows.

\(^{(18)}\) The ‘change of mind’ attributed here to God with regard to the generation of the wilderness must be explained by reference to Sanh. 110b where the view is expressed that they have a share in the world to come, i.e., they were not permitted to enter Canaan, their earthly possession, but it was granted them to enter their Heavenly heritage.

\(^{(19)}\) Ex. XXXV, 5. But if the heart be no longer willing it is possible for the vow to be dissolved (cf. discussion in Shab. 26b).
Ps. CXIX, 106. But where instead of confirmation there is retraction, the person may be released from his vow.

Num. XXX, 3.

If the assumption of the state of Nazir (v. Num. VI) was made the forfeit of a wager between two, R. Tarfon holds that neither loser nor winner is a Nazir, because Naziriteship must be explicitly vowed and cannot be assumed conditionally. This he deduces from one of the two verses cited by R. Eliezer (cf. Nazir 32b Mishnah and 34a top).

To swear a certain oath.

Otherwise it is no oath and he is not liable.

Cited by R. Isaac.

I.e., it is meritorious to do this that he may fulfil the precept with greater zeal.

V. Ned. 7b.

I.e., a sharp mind is better than mere learning.

Why then does the Mishnah say that there is little Scriptural basis for them?

But if he required the hole itself, he would be guilty of building on the Sabbath, v. Shab. 73b.

E.g., a hole dug for the sake of its earth. R. Simeon stated this principle in connection with carrying out the dead on the Sabbath (v. Shab. 93a).

Who holds that one may not carry a corpse out on the Sabbath for burial (v. ibid.).

I.e., in the case of the corpse.

I.e., burying the corpse and achieving something desired.

I.e., in the case of the digging of a hole.

The hole does not improve the ground nor is it desired for itself.

Implying that some kind of support is afforded by the Torah.

Talmud - Mas. Chagigah 10b

— Because the Torah prohibited [on the Sabbath] purposely work,¹ yet purposely work is not mentioned in Scripture.² [LAWS CONCERNING] FESTAL-OFFERINGS. But they are written [in Scripture]³ — No, it is necessary in the light of what R. Papa said to Abaye: Whence [do we know] that [the verse]: And ye shall keep it a feast to the Lord⁴ signifies sacrifice? Perhaps the Divine Law means: Celebrate a Festival!⁵ — If so, when it is written, That they may hold a feast unto Me in the wilderness,⁶ would that also mean: Celebrate a festival! And should you say that it indeed means that, surely it is written: And Moses said: 'Thou must also give into our hand beasts of killing and burnt-offerings!'⁷ — Perhaps the Divine Law means this: Eat ye and drink and celebrate a festival before Me⁸ — Do not think of this; for it is written: Neither shall the fat of My feast remain all night until the morning.⁹ If now you suppose that it means a festival¹⁰ [only], has a festival fat? — But perhaps the Divine Law means this: the fat that is offered during the course of the festival should not remain overnight!¹¹ — If so, then [it would imply] that only during the festival the fat may not remain overnight, but throughout the year¹² it may remain overnight; [but behold] it is written: All night unto the morning!¹³ — [But] perhaps from this [verse alone] one would know it merely as a positive precept, therefore Scripture wrote the other [verse to enjoin it] as a prohibition!¹⁴ — [To enjoin it] as a prohibition there is another verse: Neither shall any of the flesh, which thou sacrifcest the first day at even, remain all night until the morning¹⁵ — [But] perhaps [this was required] in order to impose upon him two prohibitions and one positive precept! — Rather, it can be deduced from [the word] ‘wilderness’ which occurs in two passages. Here it is written: That they may hold a feast unto Me in the wilderness.¹⁶ And elsewhere it is written: Did ye bring unto Me sacrifices and offerings in the wilderness?¹⁷ Just as in the latter verse [it means] sacrifices, so in the former [it means] sacrifices. Why then does it say: AS MOUNTAINS HANGING BY A HAIR?¹⁸ — [Because] no inference may be drawn concerning statements of the Torah from statements of the Prophets.¹⁹

ACTS OF SACRILEGE. But they are written [in Scripture]! Rami b. Hama said: It is required only for that which we have learnt. If the agent did his errand [committing thereby an act of sacrilege],²⁰ the householder²¹ is guilty of sacrilege;²² if he did not do his errand, the agent is guilty of sacrilege. But why should he be guilty if he did his errand? Shall one man sin and another become liable! That is why [the Mishnah says]: AS MOUNTAINS HANGING BY A HAIR. Raba said: But what is the objection? Perhaps sacrilege is different, since we compare it with terumah through the analogous expressions for ‘sin’ [which occur in connection with both laws]: just as there the agent of a person is like himself, so here the agent of a person is like himself. Rather, said Raba, it must be required for the [following] teaching; If the householder remembered, but the agent did not remember, the agent is guilty of sacrilege. What has the poor agent done? That is why [the Mishnah says]: AS MOUNTAINS HANGING BY A HAIR. R. Ashi said: What is the objection? Perhaps it is like [every other] case where one spent [in error] sacred money for secular purposes! Rather, said R. Ashi, it must be required for that which we have learnt. If a man took away a stone or a beam from Temple property, he is not guilty of sacrilege; but if he gave it to his fellow, he himself is guilty, but his fellow is not guilty. See now, he has taken it, what difference does it make whether he or his fellow [keeps it]! Therefore it says: LIKE MOUNTAINS HANGING BY A HAIR. But what is the objection? Perhaps it is [to be explained] according to Samuel. For Samuel said: Here

---

(1) Lit., ‘work of thought’ (cf, Ex. XXXV, 35 where it is rendered in E.V. ‘skillful workmanship’) i.e., work that achieves the purpose primarily intended; v. supra n. 9. The various kinds of work prohibited on the Sabbath are deduced from the different kinds of work involved in the Tabernacle; cf. Shab. 73a (Mishnah) Rashi a.l.

(2) It is only deduced from the juxtaposition of the section concerning the Sabbath and the section concerning the construction of the Tabernacle in Ex. XXXV.

(3) Ex. XII, 14; Lev. XXIII, 41.

(4) Ibid.

(5) I.e., without sacrifices. Tosaf. a.l. suggests: Celebrate it with dances, taking the rt. הדר to mean to dance’; cf. Ps. CVII, 27.

(6) Ex. V, 1.

(7) Ibid. X, 25.

(8) The ‘beasts for killing’ (Heb. סבה, E.V. ‘sacrifices’) would thus not refer to sacrifices (i.e., ‘peace-offerings) but to animals killed for meat only.

(9) But should be burnt on the altar before dawn. Ibid. XXIII, 18.

(10) Heb. הדר, which can mean both festival and festal-offering; cf. הדר, the Rabbinic word for festal-offering, which is derived from the same root.

(11) But it does not follow that there is an obligation to bring a festal-offering.

(12) I.e., in the case of other sacrifices offered at non-festival times.

(13) Lev. VI, 2, which refers to all occasions, not just to festivals: it teaches us that the limbs and fat of sacrifices slaughtered during the day may be burnt on the altar all night but not thereafter.

(14) The neglect of an ordinary positive precept is not indictable; but the transgression of a prohibition entails the bringing of a sin-offering, if the offence was committed unwittingly, or the punishment of stripes (maximum thirty-nine), if the transgression was wittingly committed, unless a severer penalty is ordained by Scripture. Exceptions not involving stripes are (a) ‘a prohibitive precept transformed into a mandatory law’ i.e., when the transgression must be repaired by a succeeding act; (b) a prohibition the transgression of which involves no action. Hence, the prohibition here referred to does not involve stripes.

(15) Deut. XVI, 4.

(16) Ex. V, 1.

(17) Amos V, 25.

(18) For deduction by analogy is considered support for a law.

(19) Heb. פסח, Lit., ‘tradition’, a designation for post-Pentateuchal books of the Bible, which are deemed of lesser authority than the Pentateuch or Torah. V. Bacher, Exeg. Term. I, 166, II, 185.

(20) E.g., sacred money was mixed with secular money, and not knowing of this, he asked the agent to buy a garment for him with the money.

(21) I.e., the one who instructed the agent.

(22) I.e., he has to refund the value of the sacred property plus a fifth and bring a trespass-offering.
I.e., the householder.

It is a Talmudic principle that no one is considered an agent or messenger for the committal of sin, i.e., the transgressor is liable whether he commits the sin on his own behalf or for another.

A portion of the produce, between a fortieth and a sixtieth, given to the priest. V. Glos.

Lev. V, 15 (trespass), and Num. XVIII, 32 (terumah).

I.e., in the case of terumah.

Deduced from the words, ‘Ye also’, in Num. XVIII, 28.

Before the agent committed sacrilege by spending the money for secular use.

He did not know that he was misappropriating sacred money; why then should he be held responsible?

Though a person committed sacrilege in error he is held responsible; so too here in the case of the agent.

By this act he takes it out of the possession of the Temple.

Derived from Lev. V, 16.

Talmud - Mas. Chagigah 11a

it refers to the treasurer [of the Sanctuary] to whom the building stones had been entrusted, so that wherever it is, it is in his possession! Rather [it can be explained] from the latter part [of the Mishnah]. If he built it into his house, he is not guilty of sacrilege until he dwells under it to the value of a perutah. See now, he has effected a change therein, what difference does it make whether he dwells [under it] or does not dwell [under it]! Therefore it says: Like MOUNTAINS HANGING BY A HAIR. But what is the objection? Perhaps it is [to be explained] according to Rab. For Rab said: It refers to a case where he placed it over a roof-aperture, [in which case] if he dwells in [the house] he is [guilty of sacrilege]. If he does not dwell in [the house] he is not [guilty]! — Therefore, it must be after all as Raba said: and as for your objection that the same applies to any person who spent [in error] sacred money for secular purposes, [one may answer]: There he knew full well that he had sacred money, he should therefore have taken care; but here, how could he know? Therefore [the Mishnah says]: AS MOUNTAINS HANGING BY A HAIR.

SCANT SCRIPTURAL BASIS BUT MANY LAWS. A Tanna taught: [The laws concerning defilement through] leprosy-signs and tent-covering have scant Scriptural basis and many laws. [You say] leprosy-signs have scant Scriptural basis? [On the contrary] leprosy-signs have considerable Scriptural basis! — R. Papa said: It means as follows: Leprosy-signs have considerable Scriptural basis and few laws, [defilement through] tent-covering has scant Scriptural basis and many laws. But what practical difference does it make? — If you are in doubt about anything concerning leprosy-signs search the Bible, but if you are in doubt about anything concerning [defilement through] tent-covering search the Mishnah.

CIVIL CASES. But they are written [in Scripture]! — It is necessary only for the teaching of Rabbi. For it is taught: Rabbi said: Life for life [means] monetary compensation. You say [it means] monetary compensation; but perhaps [it means] actual life? — ‘Giving’ is mentioned below, and ‘giving’ is mentioned above: just as in the latter case [it means] monetary compensation, so in the former case [it means] monetary compensation.

TEMPLE SERVICES. But they are written [in Scripture]! — It refers only to the carrying of the blood [to the altar]. For it is taught: And they shall present; this [means] the receiving of the blood. Now the Divine Law used for it an expression of ‘carrying’, as it is written: And the priest shall present the whole and make it smoke upon the altar, and the Master said: This [means] the carrying of the pieces [of the offering] to the altar ramp. This is to tell us that the ‘carrying’ [of the blood] is not to be excluded from the category of ‘receiving’ [of the blood].

[LAWS OF] LEVITICAL CLEANNESS. But they are written [in Scripture]! — It refers only to the measure of a ritual bath, which is not stated in Scripture. For it is taught: And he shall bathe in water,\textsuperscript{23} [this means] in water of a ritual bath;\textsuperscript{24} all his flesh: [this means in] water which covers all his body. And how much is this? A cubit\textsuperscript{25} by a cubit to the height of three cubits; and the Sages fixed the measure of the ritual bath water at forty se'ahs.\textsuperscript{26}

[LAWS CONCERNING LEVITICAL] UNCLEANNESS. But they are written [in Scripture]! — It refers only to [defilement caused by touching a part of a dead] creeping creature, which is the size of a lentil; this is not stated in Scripture. For it is taught: In them:\textsuperscript{27} I might think [it means] all of them,\textsuperscript{28} therefore Scripture teaches: ‘Of them’;\textsuperscript{29} I might then think [it means] even a part of them;\textsuperscript{30} therefore Scripture says: ‘in them’. How is this to be explained? [It means that he is not defiled] till he touches a part of one which is as the whole of one. The Sages fixed the measure at the size of a lentil, for a snail\textsuperscript{31} is at first the size of a lentil. R. Jose b. R. Judah said: [It must be] the size of the tail of a lizard.\textsuperscript{32}

FORBIDDEN RELATIONS. But they are written [in Scripture]!

\begin{enumerate}
\item Thus he does not commit sacrilege till he gives it (i.e., the stone or beam) into the possession of his fellow.
\item A small coin. V. Glos.
\item E.g., by chiselling the beam or stone and fixing it into the house: through this alteration it becomes his own property.
\item He has already misappropriated sacred property.
\item (cf. Hos. XIII, 3; II Kings VII, 2), an aperture in the roof leading to the ground floor (answering to the Greek hypaithron, Roman compluvium), contrad. from \textit{hukkat} a garret-window in the wall projecting above the flat roof (Jast.); cf. also Levy s.v. By placing the beam over the aperture he in no way alters it and can always restore it, and is thus not guilty of sacrilege till he dwells in the house and enjoys the use of it.
\item I.e., in the case quoted in the objection.
\item I.e., in the case of the agent.
\item For though the agent could hardly avoid the sacrilege, he is deemed to have committed sacrilege in error and is held responsible.
\item V. Lev. XIII-XIV.
\item V. Num. XIX, 14, from which it is inferred that men and utensils under the same ‘tent’ (i.e., overshadowed by the same covering) as a corpse suffer corpse-defilement.
\item I.e., oral tradition.
\item I.e., why then does the Mishnah say that they merely have something to rest on?
\item Ex. XXI, 23.
\item I.e., in our own case.
\item Ex. XXI, 22 (the preceding verse).
\item Lev. I, 5.
\item It is inferred from the fact that this clause comes immediately after the injunction to slaughter the animal; therefore it is taken to refer to the ‘receiving’ of the blood, for the blood cannot be ‘carried’ till it is ‘received’.
\item E.V. ‘offer’, though it is the same verb as in verse 5.
\item Lev. I, 13.
\item It cannot mean the burning of the pieces, for that is distinctly mentioned afterwards.
\item I.e., the inclined plane leading to the altar. Cf. Mid. III, 3.
\item I.e., though it is a part of the offering-service that can be omitted (e.g., if the animal is slaughtered close to the altar, so that the blood can be sprinkled forthwith), nevertheless if it is not omitted, it is an essential part of the service and is subject to all its conditions.
\item Lev. XV, 16. This is evidently the verse intended. The words \textit{his flesh}, which really belong to Lev. XIV, 9 must be deleted.
\item Lit., ‘gathering’ of water, which must contain water directly from a river or a spring, or rain water led directly to it; but \textit{ihcuta ohn} (lit., ‘drawn water i.e., water from a receptacle) if added to the ritual bath above a certain measure, invalidates it.
\item A measure equal to the distance from the elbow to the tip of the middle finger (cf. Kel. XVII, 9.10).
\item Measure of capacity, equal to six kabs; v. Pes. 109a.
\end{enumerate}
(27) Lev. XI, 31; E. V. ‘(whosoever doth touch) them’.

(28) I.e., he becomes unclean when he touches the whole of the unclean animal.

(29) Ibid. v. 32.

(30) I.e., however small.

(31) רָכַל (cf. ibid. 30). Rashi renders, ‘snail’; Jast., ‘lizard (chameleon)’; Levy, ‘Bindschleiche’ (slowworm, blindworm), or ‘Eidechse’ (lizard); Goldschmidt, ‘Schnecke’ (snail), ‘skink’ or ‘Blindschleiche’; B.D.B., a kind of lizard. From Hul. 122a it seems to be a vertebrate. Danby translates it there ‘land crocodile’.

(32) מַסֵפֶּה (cf. ibid.) Jast. regards the first מ as part of the word, except in Mishnah, Tosefta and Sifra, where it is the definite article attached to מַסֵפֶּה. The tail of the מַסֵפֶּה writhes after being cut off, thus showing independent life; hence it meets the requirements of the verse by being a part of an unclean animal and yet an entire life by itself, and is suitable as a measure for defilement. It is bigger than a lentil.

Talmud - Mas. Chagigah 11b

— This refers only to his daughter by a woman whom he had forced; this case is not written [in Scripture]. For Raba said: R. Isaac b. Abdini told me, It is to be deduced by analogy from [the words] ‘they’, ‘they’,¹ and from [the words] ‘lewdness’, ‘lewdness’.²

IT IS THEY THAT ARE THE ESSENTIALS OF THE TORAH, These are and those are not¹³ — Say, therefore, these and those are essentials of the Torah.

CHAPTER XI

MISHNAH THE [SUBJECT OF] FORBIDDEN RELATIONS⁴ MAY NOT BE EXPOUNDED IN THE PRESENCE OF THREE,⁵ NOR THE WORK OF CREATION⁶ IN THE PRESENCE OF TWO, NOR [THE WORK OF] THE CHARIOT⁷ IN THE PRESENCE OF ONE, UNLESS HE IS A SAGE AND UNDERSTANDS OF HIS OWN KNOWLEDGE. WHOSOEVER SPECULATES UPON FOUR THINGS, A PITY⁸ FOR HIM! HE IS AS THOUGH HE HAD NOT COME INTO THE WORLD, [TO WIT], WHAT IS ABOVE,⁹ WHAT IS BENEATH,¹⁰ WHAT BEFORE, WHAT AFTER.¹¹ AND WHOSOEVER TAKES NO THOUGHT FOR THE HONOUR OF HIS MAKER,¹² IT WERE A MERCY¹³ IF HE HAD NOT COME INTO THE WORLD.

GEMARA. You say at first: NOR [THE WORK OF] THE CHARIOT IN THE PRESENCE OF ONE,¹⁴ and then you say: UNLESS HE IS A SAGE AND UNDERSTANDS OF HIS OWN KNOWLEDGE! — This is the meaning: the forbidden relations may not be expounded to three,¹⁵ nor the work of creation to two, nor [the work of] the chariot to one, unless he is a Sage and understands of his own knowledge.¹⁶

THE FORBIDDEN RELATIONS MAY NOT BE EXPOUNDED IN THE PRESENCE OF THREE. What is the reason? Shall one say, because it is written: Whosoever to any that is near of kin to him?¹⁷ ‘Whosoever’¹⁸ [implies] two, ‘near of kin to him’ [implies] one; and the Divine Law said: Ye shall not approach to uncover their nakedness.¹⁹ But then since it is written: Whosoever curseth his God,²⁰ Whosoever giveth of his seed unto Molech,²¹ are these [passages] also [to be interpreted] thus! — These, therefore, must be required to make Gentiles subject to the prohibition concerning blasphemy²² and idolatry like the Israelites; then this [verse]²³ is also required to make Gentiles subject to the prohibition concerning the forbidden relations like the Israelites!²⁴ It must be inferred, therefore, from the verse: Therefore shall ye keep My charge.²⁵ ‘Ye shall keep’ [implies] two,²⁶ ‘My charge’ [implies] one; and the Divine Law said: That ye do not any of these abominable customs.²⁷ But then since it is written: Ye shall keep the Sabbath therefore,²⁸ And ye shall observe the feast of unleavened bread;²⁹ And ye shall keep the charge of the holy things,³⁰ are these [passages] also [to be interpreted] thus! — Therefore, said R. Ashi, THE FORBIDDEN RELATIONS MAY NOT BE EXPOUNDED IN THE PRESENCE OF THREE must mean: the secrets\textsuperscript{31} of the forbidden relations may not be expounded to three.\textsuperscript{32} What is the reason? It is a logical conclusion:\textsuperscript{33} when two sit before their master, one engages in discussion with his master and the other inclines his ear to the instruction; but [when there are] three, one engages in discussion with his master, and the other two engage in discussion with one another and do not know what their master is saying, and may come to permit that which is prohibited in the matter of the forbidden relations. If so, [the rule should apply to] the whole Torah also!\textsuperscript{34} The [subject of] forbidden relations is different, for the master said:\textsuperscript{35} Robbery and the forbidden relations, a man's soul covets and lusts for them. If so, [the rule should apply to] robbery also! [In the case of] the forbidden relations, whether [the opportunity] be before him or not before him, a man's inclination is strong; [in the case of] robbery, if [the opportunity] is before him, his inclination is strong, but if it is not before him, his inclination is not strong.

NOR THE WORK OF CREATION IN THE PRESENCE OF TWO. Whence [do we infer] this? — For the Rabbis taught: For ask thou now of the days past;\textsuperscript{36} one may inquire,\textsuperscript{37} but two may not inquire. One might have thought that one may inquire concerning the pre-creation period, therefore Scripture teaches: Since the day that God created man upon the earth.\textsuperscript{38} One might have thought that one may [also] not inquire concerning the six days of creation,\textsuperscript{39} therefore Scripture teaches: The days past\textsuperscript{40} which were before thee.\textsuperscript{41} One might have thought one may [also] inquire concerning what is above and what is below, what before and what after, therefore the text teaches: And from one end of heaven unto the other.\textsuperscript{42} [Concerning the things that are] from one end of heaven unto the other thou mayest inquire, but thou mayest not inquire what is above, what is below, what before, what after.

\textsuperscript{(1)} The word יבהש ('they') occurs in Lev. XVIII, 17 in connection with a legitimate daughter, and ibid. v. 10 in connection with the grand-daughter of an illegitimate wife (v. Yeb. 97a). By analogy, we infer that an illegitimate daughter is also a forbidden relation.

\textsuperscript{(2)} Having established an analogy between the legitimate and illegitimate daughter (v. n. 7), we go farther and say the word חמל ('lewdness'). which implies the penalty of burning (v. ibid. XX, 14) for connection with one's legitimate daughter, applies also to connection with one's illegitimate daughter; v. Yeb., Sonc. ed., p. 4, nn. 8-12.

\textsuperscript{(4)} V. p. 50, n. 8.

\textsuperscript{(5)} I.e., it is forbidden to expound this subject in the presence of more than two.

\textsuperscript{(6)} V. Gen. I, 1-3; J.E. vol. IV, pp. 280f.s. ‘Cosmogony’, and vol. VIII, p. 235. The term מינייתו בראשית (Work of Creation) does not include the whole Talmudic cosmogony, only its esoteric aspects. The cosmogonic details mentioned infra in the Gemara (pp. 63f), such as the ten elements, the ten agencies etc., do not form part of the secret doctrine of Mr'ash Beresh'ith, for the Mishnah expressly forbids the teaching of the creation mysteries in public. The views recorded in the Talmud regarding the work of creation seem to belong chiefly to the realm of Aggadah. As regards their origin, they cannot with certainty be connected with the theosophic and cosmogonic doctrines of the Apocrypha and Pseudepigrapha, nor with Gnosticism; nor on the other hand can the mysticism of the Geonic period (e.g., as preserved in Sefer Yezirah with reference to the heavenly halls, angelology etc.) be regarded as a direct continuation of the Talmudic doctrines.

\textsuperscript{(7)} V. Ezek. I, 4f, X, and Isa. VI; cf. Meg. IV, 10; and v. J.E. vol. VIII, p. 498. The mysteries of Creation and the Chariot were favourite themes with the mystics; for further information v. J.E. vol. III, p. 456f, s. ‘Cabala’.

\textsuperscript{(8)} Heb. ירה or ירה, but Mishnah ed., MS. M. and var. lec. in Aruch have ירה ('he is looked upon as though'). Jastrow, who takes ירה to mean ‘relief, mercy, pity’, renders as in text; Rashi translates: ‘it were better for him’, taking the root meaning to be ‘mercy’; Levy translates: ‘it were more advantageous for him’; Goldschmidt and Danby: ‘it were better’.\textsuperscript{(9)}

\textsuperscript{(9)} Sc., the sky stretching over the heads of the ‘living creatures of the Chariot (Rashi).

\textsuperscript{(10)} Sc., the ‘living creatures’.

\textsuperscript{(11)} I.e., beyond the sky eastward and westward (Rashi). This makes the reference spatial, and this explanation is supported by the use of the termsinfra (p. 62); but from the Gemara 16a and the Tosef. it is clear that the terms have also a temporal significance. i.e., what happened before Creation and what will happen hereafter (Tosaf. a.l.).
This means, apparently, that a person is not permitted to study the mysteries of the Chariot even by himself, although the fact that he can study without the aid of a teacher shows that he is a Sage and understands of his own knowledge.

I.e., the number refers to the pupils and does not include the teacher.

I.e., is able to speculate by himself. Such a disciple will not require to ask his teacher questions, for these mysteries may not be explained explicitly. D.S. omits the ‘and’; cf. p. 77.

Talmud - Mas. Chagigah 12a

But now that this\(^1\) is inferred from [the expression] ‘From one end of heaven unto the other’,\(^2\) wherefore do I need [the expression], ‘Since the day that God created man upon the earth’? — To intimate that which R. Eleazar taught. For R. Eleazar said: The first man [extended]\(^3\) from the earth to the firmament, as it is said: Since the day that God created man upon the earth;\(^4\) but as soon as he sinned,\(^5\) the Holy One, blessed be He, placed His hand upon him and diminished him,\(^6\) for it is said: Thou hast fashioned me\(^7\) after and before,\(^8\) and laid Thine hand upon me.\(^9\)

Rab Judah said that Rab said: The first man [extended]\(^10\) from one end of the world to the other,\(^11\) for it is said: ‘Since the day that God created man upon the earth, and from one end of heaven to the other'; as soon as he sinned, the Holy One, blessed be He, placed His hand upon him and diminished him, for it is said: ‘And laid Thine hand upon me’. If so, the verses contradict one another! — They both have the same dimensions.

Rab Judah further said that Rab said: Ten things were created the first day, and they are as follows: heaven and earth, Tohu [chaos], Bohu [desolation], light and darkness, wind and water, the measure of day and the measure of night. Heaven and earth, for it is written: In the beginning God created heaven and earth. Tohu and Bohu, for it is written: And the earth was Tohu and Bohu. Light and darkness: darkness, for it is written: And darkness was upon the face of the deep; light, for it is written: And God said, Let there be light. Wind and water, for it is written: And the wind of God hovered over the face of the waters. The measure of day and the measure of night, for it is written: And there was evening and there was morning, one day. It is taught: Tohu is a green line that encompasses the whole world, out of which darkness proceeds, for it is said: He made darkness His hiding-place round about Him. Bohu, this means the slimy stones that are sunk in the deep, out of which the waters proceed, for it is said: And He shall stretch over it the line of confusion [Tohu] and the plummet of emptiness [Bohu].

But was the light created on the first day? For, behold, it is written: And God set them in the firmament of the heaven, and it is further written: And there was evening and there was morning a fourth day — This is [to be explained] according to R. Eleazar. For R. Eleazar said: The light which the Holy One, blessed be He, created on the first day, one could see thereby from one end of the world to the other; but as soon as the Holy One, blessed be He, beheld the generation of the Flood and the generation of the Dispersion and saw that their actions were corrupt, He arose and hid it from them, for it is said: But from the wicked their light is withholden. And for whom did He reserve it? For the righteous in the time to come, for it is said: And God saw the light, that it was good; and ‘good’ means only the righteous, for it is said: Say ye of the righteous that he is good. As soon as He saw the light that He had reserved for the righteous, He rejoiced, for it is said: He rejoiceth at the light of the righteous. Now Tannaim differ on the point: The light which the Holy One, blessed be He, created on the first day one could see and look thereby from one end of the world to the other; this is the view of R. Jacob. But the Sages say: It is identical with the luminaries, for they were created on the first day, but they were not hung up [in the firmament] till the fourth day.

R. Zulrab. Tobiah said that Rab said: by ten things was the world created: By wisdom and by understanding, and by reason, and by strength, and by rebuke, and by might, by righteousness and by judgment, by lovingkindness and by compassion. By wisdom and understanding, for it is written: The Lord by wisdom founded the earth; and by understanding established the heavens. By reason, for it is written: By His reason the depths were broken up. By strength and might, for it is written: Who by His strength setteth fast the mountains, Who is girded about with might. By rebuke, for it is written: The pillars of heaven were trembling, but they became astonished at His rebuke. By righteousness and judgment, for it is written: Righteousness and judgment are the foundation of Thy throne. By lovingkindness and compassion, for it is written: Remember, O Lord, Thy compassions and Thy mercies; for they have been from of old. Rab Judah further said: At the time that the Holy One, blessed be He, created the world, it went on expanding like two clues of warp, until the Holy One, blessed be He, rebuked it and brought it to a standstill, for it is said: ‘The pillars of heaven were trembling, but they became astonished at His rebuke’. And that, too, is what Resh Lakish said: What is the meaning of the verse, I am God Almighty? [It means], I am He that said to the world: Enough! Resh Lakish said: When the Holy One, blessed be He, created the sea, it went on expanding, until the Holy One, blessed be He, rebuked it and caused it to dry up, for it is said: He rebuketh the sea and maketh it dry, and drieth up all the rivers.
Our Rabbis taught: Beth Shammai say: Heaven was created first and afterwards the earth was created, for it is said: In the beginning God created the heaven and the earth. Beth Hillel say: Earth was created first and afterwards heaven, for it is said: In the day that the Lord God made earth and heaven.

Beth Hillel said to Beth Shammai: According to your view, a man builds the upper storey [first] and afterwards builds the house! For it is said: It is he that buildeth His upper chambers in the heaven, and hath founded His vault upon the earth. Said Beth Shammai to Beth Hillel: According to your view, a man makes the footstool [first], and afterwards he makes the throne! For it is said: Thus saith the Lord, The Heaven is My throne and the earth is My footstool. But the Sages say: Both were created at the same time. For it is said: Yea, Mine hand hath laid the foundation of the earth, and My right hand hath spread out the heavens: When I call unto them they stand up together. But the others? What is the meaning of ‘together’? — [It means] that they cannot be loosened from one another. However, the verses contradict one another! — Resh Lakish answered: When they were created, He created heaven [first], and afterwards He created the earth; but when He stretched them forth He stretched forth the earth [first], and afterwards He stretched forth heaven.

What does ‘heaven’ [Shamayim] mean? R. Jose b. Hanina said: It means, ‘There is water’. In a Baraita it is taught: [It means], ‘fire and water’; this teaches that the Holy One, blessed be He, brought them and mixed them one with the other and made from them the firmament.

R. Ishmael questioned R. Akiba when they were going on a journey together, saying to him: Thou who hast waited twenty-two years upon Nahum of Gimzo, who used to explain the [particle] Eth throughout the Torah, [tell me] what exposition did he give of [Eth] the heaven and [Eth] the earth? Said [R. Akiba] to him: If it had said, ‘heaven and earth’, I could have said that Heaven and Earth were names of the Holy One, blessed be He. But now that it says: ‘[Eth] the heaven and [Eth] the earth’, heaven means the actual heaven, and earth means the actual earth.

C. Taylor in ‘Sayings of the Jewish Fathers’, p. 107, n. 40, points out that ‘the three views’ (of the Schools of Shammai and Hillel, and of the Sages) may be taken as texts for three philosophies, viz., idealism, evolutionism and dualism (quoted by Streane).

Ibid. XLVIII, 13. From the word ‘together’ the inference is drawn that heaven and earth are coeval.

I.e., what reply have the Schools of Shammai and Hillel to the argument of the Sages?

Thus ‘together’ refers to their physical structure and not to their time of origin.

I.e., לָשׁ הַיָּדוֹנִי is explained as a compound of לָשׁ ('there') and יָדוֹנִי ('water').

I.e., לָשׁ הַיָּדוֹנִי is explained as a compound of יָדוֹנִי ('fire') and יָדוֹנִי ('water'), the נ of יָדוֹנִי being omitted.

Lit., ‘mixed by beating’.

I.e., has been his disciple. Cf. Ber. 47b: ‘Even if one has studied the Bible, and the Mishnah, but has failed to wait upon scholars, he is considered an ‘Am ha-arez (ignoramus); The ministration (of the disciples to the doctors) of the Law is greater than the direct teaching thereof’.

In Judea (v. G. A. Smith’s ‘The historical Geography of the Holy Land’, p. 202, n. 1). Heb. וַיֵּאָסֵף, always in two words, and explained (Ta’an. 21a, J. Shek. V, 15) as a sobriquet given to the scholar on account of his motto וַיֵּאָסֵף (‘This, too, will be for the best’), with which he explained his trust in the goodness of Providence even in the most trying circumstances (v. Ta’an 21a). He interpreted the whole Torah according to the rule of הָדֹקֶס (‘amplification and limitation’, v. Shebu. 26a).

Heb. הָדֹקֶס, which is either (a) the sign of the defined object as in Gen. I, 1, or (b) the preposition meaning with. Nahum of Gimzo explained every instance of the accusative particle as indicating the inclusion in the object of something besides that which is explicitly mentioned. For the sole exception (Deut. X, 20), v. Pes. 22b, where ‘Nehemiah the Imsoni’ is an error for ‘Nahum the Gimsoni (v. Graetz in MGWJ., 1870, p. 527). The interpretation of הָדֹקֶס given here is grammatical rather than Midrashic or homiletical. For the הָדֹקֶס explanation of הָדֹקֶס in this verse, which includes the sun and moon etc., v. Gen. Rab. I, 14.

Gen. I, 1.

This is the reading of Bah and Maharsha: cur. edd. omit the words, ‘and the earth’.

And the subject of הָדֹקֶס (‘He created’).

Talmud - Mas. Chagigah 12b

But why do we have ‘[Eth] the earth’? — To put heaven before earth.

‘And the earth was unformed and void’. Consider: [Scripture] began at first with heaven, why then does it proceed to relate [first] the work of the earth? — The School of R. Ishmael taught: It is like a human king who said to his servants: Come early to my door. He rose early and found women and men. Whom does he praise? The ones who are not accustomed to rise early but yet did rise early.

It is taught: R. Jose says: Alas for people that they see but know not what they see, they stand but know not on what they stand. What does the earth rest on? On the pillars, for it is said: Who shaketh the earth out of her place, and the pillars thereof tremble. The pillars upon the waters, for it is said: The waters upon the mountains, for it is said: For, lo, He that formeth the mountains, and createth the wind. And underneath are the everlasting arms. But the Sages say: [The world] rests on twelve pillars, for it is said: He set the borders to the peoples according to the number [of the tribes] of the children of Israel. And some say seven pillars, for it is said: She hath hewn out her seven piliars. R. Eleazar b. Shammau’ says: [It rests] on one pillar, and its name is ‘Righteous’, for it is said: But ‘Righteous’ is the foundation of the world.

R. Judah said: There are two firmaments, for it is said: Behold, unto the Lord thy God belongeth heaven, and the heaven of heavens. Resh Lakish said: [There are] seven, namely, Wilon, Rakia’, Shehakim, Zebul, Ma’on, Makon, ‘Araboth. Wilon serves no purpose except that it enters in the morning and goes forth in the evening and renews every day the work of creation, for it is said: And God set them in the firmament [Rakia’] of the heaven. Shehakim is that in which millstones stand and grind manna for the righteous for it is said: And He commanded the skies [Shehakim] above, and opened the doors of heaven; and He caused manna to rain upon them for food etc. Zebul is that in which [the heavenly] Jerusalem and the Temple and the Altar are built, and Michael, the great Prince, stands and offers up thereon an offering, for it is said: I have surely built Thee a house of habitation [Zebul], a place for Thee to dwell in for ever. And whence do we derive that it is called heaven? For it is written: Look down from heaven, and see, even from Thy holy and glorious habitation. Ma’on is that in which there are companies of Ministering Angels, who utter [divine] song by night, and are silent by day for the sake of Israel’s glory, for it is said: By day the Lord doth command His lovingkindness, and in the night His song is with me.

Resh Lakish said: Whoever occupies himself with [the study of] the Torah by night, the Holy One, blessed be He, draws over him a chord of lovingkindness by day, for it is said: ‘By day the Lord doth command His lovingkindness’? Because ‘by night His song’ is with me. And there are some who say: Resh Lakish said: Whoever occupies himself with the study of the Torah in this world, which is like the night, the Holy One, blessed be He, draws over him a chord of lovingkindness in the world to come, which is like the day, for it is said: ‘By day the Lord doth command His lovingkindness, for by night His song is with me’.

R. Levi said: Whoever leaves off the study of the Torah and occupies himself with idle talk, he is made to eat coals of broom, for it is said: They pluck salt-wort through idle talk, and the roots of the broom are their food.

And whence do we derive that it is called heaven? — For it is said: Look forth from Thy holy habitation [ma’on], from heaven. Makon is that in which there are the stores of snow and stores of hail, and the loft of harmful dews and the loft of raindrops, the chamber of the whirlwind and storm, and the cave of vapour, and their doors are of fire, for it is said: The Lord will open unto thee His good treasure, but are these to be found in the firmament? Surely, they are to be found on the earth, for it is written: Praise the Lord from the earth, ye sea-monsters, and all deeps; fire and hail, snow and vapour, stormy wind, fulfilling his word! — Rab Judah said in the name of Rab: David entreated concerning them, and caused them to come down to the earth. He said before Him: Lord of the universe, Thou art not a God that hath pleasure in wickedness; let not evil sojourn with Thee; righteous art Thou, O Lord, let not evil sojourn in Thy abode. And whence do we derive that it is called heaven? For it is written: Then hear Thou in heaven, Thy dwelling place. ‘Araboth is that in which there are Right and Judgment and Righteousness, the treasures of life and the treasures of peace and the treasures of blessing, the souls of the righteous and the spirits and the souls which are yet to be born, and dew wherewith the Holy One, blessed be He, will hereafter revive the dead. Right and Judgment, for it is written: Right and judgment are the foundations of Thy throne. Righteousness, for it is written: And He put on righteousness as a coat of mail. The treasures of life, for it is written: For with Thee is the fountain of life. And the treasures of peace, for it is written: And called it, ‘The Lord is peace’. And the treasures of blessing, for it is written: he shall receive a blessing from the Lord. The souls of the righteous, for it is written: Yet the soul of my lord shall be bound up in the bundle of life with the Lord thy God. The spirits and the souls which are yet to be born, for it is written: For the spirit that enwrappeth itself is from Me, and the souls which I have made. And the dew wherewith the Holy One, blessed be He, will hereafter revive the dead, for it is written: A bounteous rain didst Thou pour down, O God; when Thine inheritance was weary, Thou didst confirm it.\(^6\) There [too] are the Ofanim\(^6\) and the Seraphim,\(^7\) and the Holy Living Creatures,\(^7\) and the Ministering Angels,\(^7\) and the King, the Living God, high and exalted, dwells over them in ‘Araboth, for it is said: Extol Him that rideth upon Araboth\(^7\) whose name is the Lord.\(^7\) And whence do we derive that it\(^7\) is called heaven? From the word ‘riding’, which occurs in two Biblical passages. Here it is written: ‘Extol Him that rideth upon Araboth’. And elsewhere it is written: Who rideth upon the heaven as thy help.\(^7\) And darkness and cloud and thick darkness surround Him, for it is said: He made darkness His hiding-place, His pavilion round about Him, darkness of waters, thick clouds of skies.\(^7\) But is there any darkness before Heaven?\(^7\) For behold it is written: He revealeth the deep and secret things; He knoweth, what is in the darkness, and the light dwelleth with Him.\(^7\) — There is no contradiction: the one [verse]\(^8\)

(1) I.e., the first Eth in the verse has been explained; but what is the purpose of the second?
(2) I.e., to show that the creation of the heaven preceded that of the earth. Had this second Eth been omitted, I might have thought that heaven and earth were created at the same time.
(3) Gen. I, 2.
(4) I.e., its development from a state of dark chaos to light and ordered life.
(5) Lit., ‘a king of flesh and blood’.
(6) Rashi explains the application of the parable thus: Since heaven was summoned to appear first, the earth was in the position of one not accustomed to rise early; furthermore, all the work of the earth is slow, whilst the work of heaven is swift. Nevertheless, the earth appeared equally early with heaven, for they were created at the same time (according to the view of the Sages, v. p. 66), therefore Scripture begins to relate the work of the earth first. But Maharsha explains that the earth obeyed God’s will first and came into being before heaven (according to the view of Beth Hillel, ibid.) just as the women in the parable actually came before the men.
(7) Job IX, 6.
(8) Ps. CXXXVI, 6.
(9) Ibid. CIV, 6.
(10) Amos IV, 13. The mention of the mountains and the wind in the same verse shows that the former were dependent or suspended upon the latter.
(11) So Rashi. E.V., ‘Stormy wind, fulfilling His word. Ps. CXLVIII, 8.
(12) Sc. all creation.
(13) Deut. XXXIII, 27.
(14) The pillars here refer to those mentioned by R. Jose (v. supra), who, however, did not give their number.
(15) Deut. XXXII, 8.
(16) Prov. IX, 1.
(17) Ibid. X, 25. E.V., ‘But the righteous is an everlasting foundation’. Maharsha compares this discussion of the number of the pillars with the discussion of the number of the precepts in Mak., Sonc. ed., pp. 169f.
(20) I.e., ‘Expanse, firmament’.
(23) I.e., ‘Dwelling, habitation’.
(24) I.e., ‘Fixed or established place, foundation, residence’.
(25) V. Ps, LXVIII, 5. Levy: Perhaps from רָוֵעַ, ‘to be dark’ (cf. evening) and syn. with רָוֵעַ הָעִיר: (thick darkness, heavy cloud, in which God dwells; cf. Ex. XX, 18).
(26) According to Rashi, Wilon (‘Curtain’) draws in every morning, and thus causes the light of day to become visible; in the evening it draws out and hides the daylight. This process constitutes the renewal of the work of creation. But Tosaf. explains that Wilon produces the light of day, and when it withdraws at night darkness prevails.
(27) Thus there is a curtain-like heaven.
(28) Isa. XL, 22.
I.e., the heavenly luminaries.

There is probably a play here on the meaning of הָשָׁכָּמ (the root of shehakim), which means ‘to rub away, pulverize, grind’ (cf. Ex. XXX, 36 and Job, XIV, 19).

Ps. LXXVIII, 23, 24.

Cf. Ta'an. 5a: ‘The Holy One blessed be He, said: I shall not enter the Jerusalem which is above, until I enter the Jerusalem which is below’.

Ps. LXXVIII, 23, 24.

Michael is Israel's Guardian Angel; cf. Dan. XII, 1 and Yoma 77a. Num. Rab. s. 2, Hul. 40a.

Isa. LXIII, 15.

Job. XXX, 4.

I.e., Ma'on: the explanation of the seven heavens is here resumed.

Deut. XXVI, 15.

According to Rashi, this heaven contains stores of punishments, the snow etc. being employed not for the world's benefit, but for retribution, Tosaf., however, holds that the contents of Ma'on are used for good as well as evil, and compares Ta'an. 3b and Isa. LV, 10.

For these stores cf. Job XXXVIII, 22f also Isa. XXIX, 6.

Rashi: to smite down the produce.

Omitted by R. Elijah of Wilna,

Deut. XXVIII, 12; implying also the existence of a bad store, i.e., of punishments; but the "Ein Jacob’ reads here Jer. L, 25.

Ps. CXLVIII, 7, 8.

I.e., Makon.

Ps. CXLVIII, 7, 8.

Note how the Talmudic explanation of the verse transforms the negative description of God into a positive one, and changes (‘with Thee’ into ‘in thy abode’ to prevent any misconception about God's perfection.

I.e., Makon.

1 Kings VIII, 39.

Heb. דָּשָׁן, which implies righteous actions and is often used in the sense of charity.

Rashi explains that either ‘spirits’ and ‘souls’ are synonymous, or else ‘spirit’ means the soul that has bodily form (ectoplasm?).

E.V. ‘Righteousness’.

Ps. LXXIX, 15.

Isa. LIX, 17.

Ps.XXXVI, 10.

Judg. VI, 24. Rashi renders: He (the Lord) called it (peace) unto Him.

Ps. XXIV, 5.

Ps. XXXVI, 10.

The verse refers to the Revelation at Sinai, when, according to the Midrash, the souls of the children of Israel momentarily left their bodies, but God with His bounteous rain or dew of resurrection revived them.

(69) Lit., ‘Wheels’, i.e., wheel-like angels; v. Ezek. I, 15f.

(74) Ps. LXVIII, 5.

(75) I.e., Araboth.

(76) Deut. XXXIII, 26.

(77) Ps. XVIII, 12.

(78) I.e., God.

refers to the inner chambers,\(^1\) the other to the outer chambers. And R. Aha b. Jacob said: There is still another Heaven above the heads of the living creatures, for it is written: And over the heads of the living creatures there was a likeness of a firmament, like the colour of the terrible ice, stretched forth over their heads above.\(^2\) Thus far you have permission to speak, thenceforward you have not permission to speak, for so it is written in the Book of Ben Sira:\(^3\) Seek not things that are too hard for thee,\(^4\) and search not things that are hidden from thee. The things that have been permitted\(^5\) thee, think thereupon; thou hast no business with\(^6\) the things that are secret.\(^7\)

It is taught: R. Johanan b. Zakkai said: What answer did the Bath Kol\(^8\) give to that wicked one,\(^9\) when he said: I will ascend above the heights of the clouds; I will be like the Most High?\(^10\) A Bath Kol went forth and said to him: O wicked man, son of a wicked man, grandson\(^11\) of Nimrod, the wicked, who stirred the whole world to rebellion against Me\(^12\) by his rule. How many are the years of man? Seventy, for it is said: The days of our years are threescore years and ten, or even by reason of strength fourscore years.\(^13\) But the distance from the earth to the firmament is a journey of five hundred years, and the thickness of the firmament is a journey of five hundred years, and likewise [the distance] between one firmament and the other.\(^14\) Above them\(^15\) are the holy living creatures: the feet\(^16\) of the living creatures are equal to all of them [together];\(^17\) the ankles of the living creatures are equal to all of them; the legs of the living creatures are equal to all of them; the knees\(^18\) of the living creatures are equal to all of them; the thighs of the living creatures are equal to all of them; the bodies of the living creatures are equal to all of them; the necks of the living creatures are equal to all of them; the heads of the living creatures are equal to all of them; the horns of the living creatures are equal to all of them. Above them is the throne of glory; the feet of the throne of glory are equal to all of them; the throne of glory is equal to all of them. The King, the Living and Eternal God, High and Exalted, dwelleth above them. Yet thou didst say, I will ascend above the heights of the clouds, I will be like the Most High! Nay\(^19\) , thou shalt be brought down to the nether-world, to the uttermost parts of the pit.\(^20\)

NOR [THE WORK OF] THE CHARIOT IN THE PRESENCE OF ONE. R. Hiyya taught: But the headings of chapters\(^21\) may be transmitted to him. R. Zera said: The headings of chapters may be transmitted only to the head of a court\(^22\) and to one whose heart is anxious within him.\(^23\) Others say: Only if his heart is anxious within him.\(^24\) R. Amimi said: The mysteries of the Torah may be transmitted only to one who possesses five attributes, [namely], The captain of fifty, and the man of rank, and the counsellor, and the cunning charmer, and the skillful enchanter.\(^25\) R. Ammi further said: The teachings of the Torah are not to be transmitted to an idolater,\(^26\) for it is said: He hath not dealt so with any nation; and as for His ordinances, they have not known them.\(^27\)
R. Johanan said to R. Eleazar: Come, I will instruct you in the ‘Work of the Chariot’.

He replied: I am not old enough.

When he was old enough, R. Johanan died.

R. Assi [then] said to him: Come, I will instruct you in the ‘Work of the Chariot’. He replied: Had I been worthy, I should have been instructed by R. Johanan, your master.

R. Joseph was studying the ‘Work of the Chariot’; the elders of Pumbeditha were studying the ‘Work of Creation’. The latter said to the former: Let the master teach us the ‘Work of the Chariot’. He replied: Teach me the ‘Work of Creation’. After they had taught him, they said to him: Let the master instruct us in the ‘Work of the Chariot’. He replied: We have learnt concerning it: Honey and milk are under thy tongue. The things which are the mystery [Kibshono] of the world should be under thy clothing.

R. Abbahu said: [It is inferred] from this verse: The lambs [Ke-basim] will be for thy clothing. The things which are the mystery [Kibshono] of the world should be under thy clothing.

An objection was raised: How far does [the portion of] the ‘Work of the Chariot’ extend? Rabbi said: As far as the second And I saw. R. Isaac said: As far as Hashmal — As far as ‘I saw’ may be taught; thenceforward, [only] the heads of chapters may be transmitted. Some, however, say: As far as ‘I saw’, the heads of chapters may be transmitted; thenceforward, if he is a Sage able to speculate by himself, Yes; if not, No. But may one expound [the mysteries of] Hashmal? For behold there was once a child who expounded [the mysteries of] Hashmal, and a fire went forth and consumed him! — [The case of] the child is different, for he had not reached the [fitting] age. Rab Judah said: That man be remembered for blessing, namely, Hananiah b. Hezekiah: but for him, the Book of Ezekiel would have been withdrawn; for its words contradict the words of the Torah. What did he do? Three hundred garab of oil were brought up to him, and he sat in an upper chamber and expounded it.

The Rabbis taught: There was once a child who was reading at his teacher's house the Book of Ezekiel, and he apprehended what Hashmal was, whereupon a fire went forth from Hashmal and consumed him. So they sought to suppress the Book of Ezekiel, but Hananiah b. Hezekiah said to them: If he was a Sage, all are Sages! What does [the word] Hashmal mean?—Rab Judah said:

(1) Cf. supra p. 23, n. 5.
(2) Ezek. I, 22.
(3) Cf. Ecclesiasticus III, 21, 22. The author, whose full name seems to have been Jesus b. Simeon b. Eleazar b. Sira, is the only writer of the Old Testament or Apocrypha who signed his work (v. ibid. L, 27). His date falls in the first third of the second century B.C.E. He wrote in Hebrew, the Greek translation being made by his grandson, of whom it is known that he went to Egypt in 132; the greater part of the Hebrew original has been recovered from the Cairo Genizah. According to Tosef. Yad. II, 13, the writings of Ben Sira do not defile the hands, i.e., are uncanonical, and so rank the works of ‘Minim’ or heretics. Eccl. Rab. XII, 11 forbids one to have Ben Sira's book in the house. R. Akiba (J. Sanh. 28a) includes the readers of uncanonical writings such as those of Ben Sira among those who have no share in the world to come; v. further the discussion in Sanh., Sonc. ed., p. 680f and nn. a.l. on R. Akiba's prohibition. The exclusion of Ecclesiasticus from the canon and the prohibitions with which it was surrounded were probably due to its epicurean and Sadducean tendencies. Notwithstanding, the book remained popular with Jews, and is frequently quoted in early Jewish literature as well as in the Talmud and Midrash. V. J.E. vol. XI, pp. 388f.
(4) E.V. ‘that are above thy strength’.
(5) E.V. ‘commanded’.
(6) E.V. ‘no need of’.
(7) For a variant version of this quotation v. Gen. Rab. VIII, which contains two additional clauses.
(8) Lit., ‘daughter of a voice’. According to Lampronti, Levy, Kohut (Aruch Completum) and Jast., it means an echo; but L. Blau holds (J.E. vol. II, pp. 588f) that it means ‘sound’, ‘resonance’. For its secular use, v. Ex. Rab. XXIX, end; bit in our passage and Rabbinic literature passim, it refers to a heavenly or divine voice.
(9) I.e., Nebuchadnezzar, who, in R. Johanan b. Zakkai's time, possibly suggested Titus.

(10) Isa. XIV, 14.

(11) As Tosaf. a.l. points out, this statement is not to be taken literally; Nebuchadnezzar is to be regarded as a spiritual descendant of Nimrod because of the similarity of their deeds (the latter persecuted Abraham — cf. Targ. pseudo-Jonathan to Gen. XIV, I; Gen. R. XLII, 5; Cant. R. VIII, 8 — and the former led into captivity Abraham's descendants) and of their place of origin (Babylon).

(12) Lit., 'against himself', an obvious emendation, dictated by a pious desire to avoid blasphemy, of 'against Me' i.e., God. In 'Er. 53a the text has been 'corrected' as here; but in Pes. 94b, Gen. R. s. 26 etc., the original reading is preserved.

(13) Ps. XC, 10.

(14) V. p. 69.

(15) I.e., the seven heavens; v. n. 5.

(16) I.e., the thickness of the hooves.

(17) I.e., 15 (7 heavens and 8 interspaces) X 500 years. But in J. Ber. 13a the figure is given as 515, the numerical sum of 'אך', 'upright'; cf. Ezek. I, 7 (Tosaf.).

(18) Properly, the knee and its surrounding parts; cf. Hul. 76a.

(19) E.V. ‘Yet’ etc.

(20) Isa. XIV, 14f.

(21) Probably, the leading words of each section or subject (cf. Rashi a.l. and Jast. s. קור). Levy explains it as 'the interpretations of single verses’. V. infra p. 77.

(22) Ab Beth din, lit., 'Father of a Beth din' (house of judgment). The Beth din consisted of three (according to another view, five) members for monetary cases, and of twenty-three for capital cases; whilst the Beth din ha-Gadol ('High Court'), or Great Sanhedrin, was comprised of seventy elders and the Nasi, who acted as president. The Ab Beth din of the Sanhedrin was the vice-president and most important of the seventy members (cf. Sanh. I, 1-4, Sonc. ed. pp. 1-4; and J.E. vol. iii, pp. 114f).

(23) I.e., he is reverential and not given to levity.

(24) I.e., one must have both qualifications viz., be the head of a court and reverential.

(25) Isa. III, 3. For the explanation of these qualifications v. p. 85.

(26) This, and not Cuthean (substituted on account of the censorship), is undoubtedly the correct reading. Dicta of this kind were directed against heathens, and were inspired by the fear lest the knowledge of the Torah be unscrupulously used against Jews. Cf. the story of the Roman commissioners referred to in B.K., Sonc. ed., p. 215; also R. Johanan's statement in Sanh., Sonc. ed., p. 400 and Num. Rab. s. 13.

(27) Ps. CXLVII, 20.

(28) The ‘Work of the Chariot’ and the ‘Work of Creation’ mentioned in the next passage, were Baraithas (Rashi), which apparently, took the relevant passages of Genesis and Ezekiel as the basis of their expositions.

(29) Cf. p. 85, where the ‘captain of fifty’, mentioned supra as one of the qualifications of the man to whom the mysteries of the Torah may be transmitted, is explained as one who is fifty years of age.

(30) Lit., 'R. Johanan's soul was at rest’ (cf. Isa. LVII, 2).

(31) Lit., 'mouth of Beditha' (a canal of the Euphrates). It was the seat of a great Jewish academy.

(32) Cant. IV, 11.

(33) I.e., the mysteries of the Chariot may not be taught, cf. our Mishnah (p. 59). The Rabbis considered the whole of Canticles as a figurative expression of the mystical relationship between God and Israel; thus the verse quoted, which the Bridegroom says to the Bride, is really the injunction of God to Israel.

(34) I.e., the prohibition to teach the ‘Chariot’ mysteries.

(35) Prov. XXVII, 26.

(36) I.e., in thy bosom, a secret. The reading in MS.M. brings the Midrashic deduction out more clearly: Read not kebasim("lambs") but kebushim ("hidden things")things which are the mystery(kibshono) of the world must be kept under one's clothing’.

(37) I.e., the elders of Pumbeditha.

(38) Ezek. II, 1.

(39) I.e., if you have learnt thus far, you have learnt much, for this passage included the very verses(Ezek. I,27,28) the teaching of which the Rabbis prohibited.
The text contains a mix of biblical references and interpretations, particularly focusing on Ezekiel 1 and 2, with various exegetical considerations and references to other biblical passages and Talmudic texts. It discusses the implications of the term Hashmal and its historical and linguistic context, as well as its relevance in the context of rabbinic interpretation.

The Talmudic reference cited is from Mas. Chagigah 13b, which includes a dialogue on the description of the living creatures and the appearance of the Chariot of God. The translation and analysis of the biblical context, especially Ezekiel 1, are intertwined with the rabbinic commentary, providing insights into the historical and interpretative perspectives of the time.

In summary, the text offers a detailed exploration of the biblical and rabbinic narrative, particularly focusing on the concept of Hashmal and its implications within the broader context of Ezekiel's vision and subsequent rabbinic interpretation.
Raba said: All that Ezekiel saw Isaiah saw.\textsuperscript{16} What does Ezekiel resemble? A villager who saw the king.\textsuperscript{17} And what does Isaiah resemble? A townsman who saw the king.\textsuperscript{18}

Resh Lakish said: What is the meaning of the verse: I will sing unto the Lord, for He is highly exalted?\textsuperscript{19} [It means] a song to him who is exalted over the exalted ones.\textsuperscript{20} For a Master said: The king of the wild animals is the lion; the king of the cattle is the ox; the king of the birds is the eagle; and man is exalted over them; and the Holy One, blessed be He, is exalted over all of them, and over the whole world.

One verse says: As for the likeness of their faces, they had the face of a man; and they four had the face of a lion on the right side,' and they four had the face of an ox on the left side etc.\textsuperscript{21} And [elsewhere] it is written: And everyone had four faces; the first face was the face of the cherub, and the second face was the face of a man, and the third the face of a lion, and the fourth the face of an eagle;\textsuperscript{22} but the ox is not mentioned! — Resh Lakish said: Ezekiel entreated concerning it and changed it into a cherub. He said before Him:\textsuperscript{23} Lord of the universe, shall an accuser become an advocate!\textsuperscript{24} What is the meaning of cherub? — R. Abbahu said: Like a child [Rabia];\textsuperscript{25} for so in Babylonia a child is called Rabia. R. Papa said to Abaye: But according to this, [what is the meaning of] the verse, ‘The first face was the face of the cherub, and the second face was the face of a man, and the third the face of a lion, and the fourth the face of an eagle’: are not the face of the cherub and the face of a man the same! — [The one is] a big face, and [the other is] a small face.\textsuperscript{27}

One verse says: Each one had six wings,\textsuperscript{26} and another verse says: And every one had four faces, and every one of them had four wings\textsuperscript{29} — There is no contradiction: the one\textsuperscript{30} refers to the time when the Temple was no longer standing;\textsuperscript{31} [when] as it were,\textsuperscript{32} the wings of the living creatures were diminished. Which of them were taken away? — R. Hananel said that Rab said: Those with which they utter song. [For] here\textsuperscript{33} it is written: And with twain he did fly. And one called unto another and said;\textsuperscript{34} and [elsewhere] it is written: Wilt thou set thine eyes upon it? It is gone.\textsuperscript{35} But our Rabbis said: Those with which they cover their feet, for it is said: And their feet were straight feet,\textsuperscript{36} and if [these wings] had not been taken away, whence could he have known!\textsuperscript{37} — Perhaps, [the feet] were exposed and he saw them. For if you do not say so, [then from the words], As for the likeness of their faces, they had the face of man,\textsuperscript{38} [one might infer] likewise that [the wings covering them] were taken away! They\textsuperscript{39} must therefore have been exposed, and he saw them; similarly here, they\textsuperscript{40} were exposed, and he saw them. But how can they be compared? Granted that it is customary to expose one's face before one's master, but it is not customary to expose one's feet before one's master!

One verse says: Thousand thousands ministered unto Him, and ten thousand times ten thousand stood before Him;\textsuperscript{41} and another verse says: Is there any number of His armies?\textsuperscript{42} — There is no contradiction: the one\textsuperscript{43} refers to a time when the Temple was standing, and the other refers to a time when the Temple was no longer standing; [when] as it were, the heavenly household\textsuperscript{44} was diminished.

It is taught: Rabbi said in the name of Abba Jose b. Dosai: ‘Thousand thousands ministered unto ‘Him’, — this is the number of one troop; but of His troops there is no number. But Jeremiah b. Aba said: ‘Thousand thousand ministered unto Him’ — at the fiery stream,\textsuperscript{45} for it is said: A fiery stream issued and came forth from before Him; thousand thousands ministered unto Him and ten thousand times ten thousand stood before Him.\textsuperscript{41} Whence does it come forth? — From the sweat of the ‘living creatures’, And whither does it pour forth? R. Zutra b. Tobiah said that Rab said: Upon the head of the wicked in Gehinnom,\textsuperscript{46} for it is said: Behold, a storm of the Lord is gone forth in fury,\textsuperscript{47} yea, a whirling storm; it shall whirl upon the head of the wicked.\textsuperscript{48} But R. Aha b. Jacob said: Upon those who pressed forward,\textsuperscript{49} for it is said: Who pressed forward\textsuperscript{50} before their time, whose foundation was poured out as a stream. It is taught: R. Simeon the Pious said: These are the nine hundred and seventy four generations who pressed themselves forward to be created

(1) I.e., Hashmal is an abbreviation of דשה, ‘silent, speaking’.
(2) I.e., Ezek. 1, 14.
(4) i.e., a brick-kiln.
(5) I.e., perforated earthen pieces used in smelting gold. בד (E.V. ‘flash of lightning’) is here explained in its Aramaic sense of ‘a fragment, piece of pottery’.
(6) Ibid. v. 4.
(7) I.e., the stormy wind coming out of the north.
(8) Cf. for the thought Git. 56b=Sanh. 104b, (Sonc. ed., p. 710), ‘Whoever distresses Israel becomes a chief’.
(9) Ezek. I, 15.
(10) Perhaps from Grk.  == cobrother. Sandalfon is described as brother of Metatron; v. J.E. vol. XI, pp. 39-40; cf. also Longfellow’s poem ‘Sandalphon’.
(11) I.e., offers up the prayers of the righteous.
(12) Ezek. III, 12.
(13) I.e., the vagueness of the expression ‘from His place’ indicates that God's place is unknown even to His angels.
(14) I.e., Sandalfon,
(15) [MS.M. ‘in its place : i.e., the prayer is effective.]
(16) V. Isa. VI, 1 ff: Despite the differences between the descriptions given by Isaiah and Ezekiel, they both saw identical visions of God's glory.
(17) According to Rashi, the point is that the rustic — to whom the sight of the king is a novelty — is naturally inclined to give his impressions at length. But Tosaf. explains that the villager has to give a detailed description of the royal splendour in order to convince his hearers that he actually saw the king. Likewise Ezekiel, to whom was granted the rare distinction, of prophecy outside Palestine, had to prove by a detailed account that he actually beheld the Divine Glory though he dwelt by the river Chebar.
(18) The townsman — to whom the king is a familiar sight is not inclined to indulge in any lengthy description (Rashi); nor does he have to go into details in order to convince his hearers of the truth of his statement (Tosaf.).
(19) Ex. XV, 1.
(20) This is an explanation of the words of the text, רוחי מוקדם (E.V. ‘highly exalted’), which mean lit., ‘to be exalted he is exalted’.
(21) Ezek. I, 10.
(22) Ezek. X, 14.
(23) I.e., Ezekiel before God.
(24) The ox would be a reminder of Israel's sin in connection with the golden calf.
(26) The word חרב (`Cerub’) is explained as composed of כ (‘like’) and וב = רבי (`a growing boy’). For modern suggestions regarding the root-meaning of the word v. B.D.B. s.v.
(27) I.e., the face of a man and the face of a boy.
(28) Isa. VI, 2.
(29) Ezek. I, 6. It is assumed that the ‘Seraphim’ of Isaiah and the ‘living creatures’ of Ezekiel had originally the same number of wings.
(30) I.e., Isa. VI, 2.
(31) I.e., the time for the destruction of the Temple had come. Ezekiel prophesied the event, and lived to learn of the fulfilment of his prophecy, as well as to foretell the rebuilding of the Sanctuary.
(32) Lit., ‘as though it were possible’, refers to an allegorical or anthropomorphous expression with reference to the Lord (Jast.), or, as here, to the celestial creatures.
(33) Ibid. vv. 2, 3.
(34) The juxtaposition of the two verses shows that with the wings with which they flew they also uttered God's praise.
(35) Lit., ‘cause to fly’; cf. also rest of verse, Prov. XXIII, 5. The occurrence of the word fly in the two passages shows that it is the wings with which the heavenly beings fly (i.e., utter their song to God) that are gone. This verse in Proverbs is understood by the Rabbis to refer to the neglect of the study of the Torah (cf. Rashi a. l., and Ber. 5a, Meg. 18a): the meaning would seem to be that when the Torah is neglected the divine song of the angels is silenced.

(37) I.e., that their feet were straight.
(38) Ibid. I, 10.
(39) I.e., their faces.
(40) I.e., their feet.

(50) E.V. ‘who were snatched away’.
(51) Job XXII, 16. The word ‘stream’ is the link between this verse and Dan. VII, 10.
(52) According to the Rabbinic interpretation of Ps. CV, 8, the Divine Plan originally envisaged the creation of a thousand generations prior to the giving of the Torah, but foreseeing their wickedness, God held back nine hundred and seventy-four generations, and gave the Torah at the end of twenty-six generations from Adam (cf. Gen. V, XI, Ex. VI, 16-20, and Seder ‘Olam Ch. 1). The translation here follows the text of MS. M. 2 (v. D.S. a.I. n. 20) viz. אלוקיאמ (p’el) עידעגואות (pu’al) אלוקיאמ שקופטש (cur. edd.: אלוקיאמ שקופטש קסמהו). Talmud - Mas. Chagigah 14a before the world was created, but were not created: the Holy One, blessed be He, arose and planted them\(^1\) in every generation, and it is they who are the insolent\(^2\) of each generation. But R. Nahman b. Isaac said: The words, Asher Kummetu,\(^3\) indicate blessing: these are the scholars who wrinkle themselves\(^4\) over the words of the Torah in this world, [wherefore] the Holy One, blessed be He, shall reveal a secret to them in the world to come, for it is said: ‘To whom a secret\(^5\) is poured out as a stream’. Samuel said to R. Hiyya b. Rab: O son of a great man,\(^6\) come, I will tell thee something from those excellent things which thy father has said. Every day ministering angels are created from the fiery stream, and utter song, and cease to be,\(^7\) for it is said: They are new every morning: great is Thy faithfulness.\(^8\) Now he differs from R. Samuel b. Nahmani, for R. Samuel b. Nahmani said that R. Jonathan said: From every utterance that goes forth from the mouth of the Holy One, blessed be He, an angel is created,\(^9\) for it is said: By the word of the Lord were the heavens made; and all the host of them by the breath of His mouth.\(^10\)

One verse says: His raiment was as white as snow, and the hair of his head like pure wool;\(^11\) and [elsewhere] it is written: His locks are curled and black as a raven!\(^12\) — There is no contradiction: one verse\(^13\) [refers to God] in session,\(^14\) and the other in war.\(^15\) For a Master said: In session none is more fitting than an old man, and in war none is more fitting than a young man.

One passage says: His throne was fiery flames,\(^16\) and another Passage says: Till thrones were places, and One that was ancient of days did sit!\(^17\) — There is no contradiction: one [throne] for Him, and one for David; this is the view of R. Akiba. Said R. Jose the Galilean to him: Akiba, how long wilt thou treat the Divine Presence as profane?!\(^18\) Rather, [it must mean], one for justice and one for grace.\(^19\) Did he accept [this explanation from him, or did he not accept it? — Come and hear:
One for justice and one for grace; this is the view of R. Akiba. Said R. Eleazar b. ‘Azariah to him: Akiba, what hast thou to do with Aggadah? Cease thy talk, and turn to [the laws concerning defilement through] leprosy-signs and tent-covering! Rather, [it must mean] one for a throne and one for a stool; the throne to sit upon, the stool for a footrest, for it is said: The heaven is My throne, and the earth is My foot-rest.

When R. Dimi came, he said: Eighteen curses did Isaiah pronounce upon Israel, yet he was not pacified until he pronounced upon them this verse: The child shall behave insolently against the aged, and the base against the honourable. Which are the eighteen curses? — It is written: For behold, the Lord, the Lord of hosts, doth take away from Jerusalem and from Judah stay and staff every stay of bread, and every stay of water, the mighty man, and the man of war; the judge and the prophet, and the diviner, and the elder; the captain of fifty; and the man of rank, and the counsellor, and the wise charmer, and the skillful enchanter. And I will give children to be their princes, and babes shall rule over them. ‘Stay’ — this means the masters of the Bible. ‘Staff’ — this means the masters of the Mishnah, like R. Judah b. Tema and his colleagues. R. Papa and our Rabbis dispute therein: one says that there were six hundred orders of the Mishnah, and the other that there were seven hundred orders of the Mishnah. ‘Every stay of bread’ — this means the masters of Talmud, for it is said: Come, eat of My bread, and drink of the wine which I have mingled. ‘And every stay of water’ — this means the masters of Aggadah, who draw the heart of man like water by means of the Aggadah. ‘The mighty man’ — this means the masters of traditions. ‘And the man of war’ — this means one who knows how to dispute in the warfare of the Torah. ‘The judge’ — this means a judge who passes judgment in strictest accord with truth — ‘The prophet’ — according to the literal meaning of the word. ‘The diviner’ — this means the King, for it is said: A divine sentence is in the lips of the King. ‘The elder’ — this means one who is worthy to sit in session. ‘The captain of fifty’: do not read ‘the captain of fifty’ but ‘the captain of the Pentateuch’; it means one who knows how to argue in the five books of the Torah. Another explanation: ‘the captain of fifty’ — as R. Abbahu taught. For R. Abbahu said. From here we learn that a Methurgeman may not be appointed over a congregation, who is less than fifty years of age. ‘And a man of rank’ — this means one for whose sake favour is shown to his [entire] generation, like R. Hanina b. Dosa, for instance, on high, or below, like R. Abbahu at the court of Caesar. ‘The counsellor’ — [this means] one who knows how to determine the intercalation of years and the fixation of months. ‘And the wise [man]’ — this means a disciple who makes his teachers wise. ‘Charmer’ — at the moment that he begins a Torah discourse, all become dumb. ‘And the skillful’ — this means one who understands one thing from another. ‘Enchanter’ — this means one who is worthy to have imparted to him the words of the Torah, which was given in a whisper. ‘And I will give children to be their princes’: what is the meaning of [the words], ‘I will give children to be their princes’? R. Eleazar said: It means persons who are empty of good deeds. ‘And babes shall rule over them’. R. Aha b. Jacob said: [It means] foxes sons of foxes. ‘But he was not pacified until he said to them: The child shall behave insolently against the aged’: those persons who are empty of good deeds shall behave insolently against such as are filled with good deeds, as a pomegranate [with seeds]. ‘And the base against the honourable’: those to whom weighty [precepts] appear as light ones will come and behave insolently against those to whom light [precepts] appear as weighty ones.

R. Kattina said: Even at the time of Jerusalem's downfall honest men did not cease from among them, for it is said: For a man shall take hold of his brother of the house of his father: ‘Thou hast a mantle, be thou our ruler’. Matters on account of which men hide themselves as in a garment thou hast ‘under thy hand’. And this ruin: what is the meaning of [the expression] ‘and this ruin’? — Matters which people do not grasp unless they stumble over them are under thy hand’. In that day shall he take [an oath], saying: I am not a healer, for in my house is neither bread nor a mantle; ye shall not make me ruler of a people. — Shall he take, ‘Take’ expresses an oath, for it is said: Thou shalt not take the name of the Lord thy God [in vain]. I am not a healer:’ I was not of... those who are bound to the Schoolhouse. For in my house is neither bread nor a mantle, — for I possess no knowledge of Bible or Mishnah or Gemara, But perhaps that case is different; for had he said to them, I have knowledge, they would have said to him, Tell us then! — He could have answered that he had learnt but had forgotten; why then does it say: ‘I am not a healer’? [It must mean], I am not a healer at all. But is it so? Behold Raba said: Jerusalem was not destroyed until honest men ceased therefrom, for it is said: Run ye to and fro through the streets of Jerusalem, and see now, and know, and seek in the broad places thereof, if ye can find a man, if there be any that doeth justly, that seeketh truth; and I will pardon him. There is no contradiction:

(1) I.e., distributed them over the later generations; cf. Yoma 38b, ‘The Holy One, blessed be He, saw that the righteous were few, so He arose and planted them in every generation’. Another reading has ‘banished them’, but the meaning remains unchanged (v. Tosaf. a.I.).

(2) Cf. Aboth V, 20, (Sone. ed., p. 73f).

(3) Rendered above, ‘who pressed forward’.

(4) So Jast.: from the root meaning ‘to compress, curl’; hence it can be under-stood in the sense of ‘to wrinkle (the brow)’ as well as ‘to press forward’ (as above). Levy and Goldschmidt render by ‘sich zusammendrangen’ (press themselves together, limit themselves).

(5) דַּעַת, ‘their foundation’ is here taken to mean the same as דַּעַת, ‘their secret

(6) Lit., ‘son of a lion’.

(7) Cf. the lines in Longfellow’s Sandalphon (quoted by Streane): ‘The Angels of Wind and of Fire Chant only one hymn, and expire With the song’s irresistible stress’.

(8) Lam. III, 23. I.e., great is Thy praise on account of them (Rashi).

(9) But not from the fiery stream, as Rab holds.

(10) Ps. XXXIII, 6.

(14) I.e., sitting in judgment; cf. ibid. v. 10.

(15) Canticles is interpreted by the Rabbis as referring in greater part to the Exodus (note that the book is read in the synagogue during Passover) when God appeared as a warrior (cf. Ex. XV, 3).

(17) Ibid., beginning of the verse. The plural implies two thrones, whereas the first passage speaks of only one.

(18) By asserting that David occupies a place next to God.

(19) Lit., ‘righteousness’, but used here, apparently, in the sense of ‘lovingkindness, grace’.

(20) For Haggadah v. Glos. s. Aaggadah. R. Eleazar b. ‘Azariah regards even this explanation as dangerous, because it implies a duality of character on the part of God, and militates against the fundamental Jewish concept of God’s perfect unity.

(21) The two verbs in the English are represented by one in the Hebrew viz. יַעַבֵּד which is really a combination of יַעָבֵד יַעַבֵּד, ‘cease and go (elsewhere)’.

(22) V. p. 56, nn. 5 and 6. R. Akiba’s intellectual gifts were best suited to Halachah, not Haggadah. The laws relating to defilement by leprosy and tent-covering form two of the most difcult tractates of the Halachah.

(23) E. V. foot-stool’, Isa. LXVI, 1.

(24) I.e., from Palestine to Babylonia.

(25) Lit., ‘his mind was not cooled’.

(26) Ibid. III, 5.

(27) Ibid. vv. 1-4.

(28) The Bible being Israel’s stay’. In this vein the Gemara explains the rest of the quotation.

(29) I.e., in the days of R Judah b. Tema and his colleagues.

(30) The Mishnah is now divided into six orders, V. J.E. vol, VIII, p, 615.

(31) This included the discussions ‘if the Amoraim added to the Mishnah. The decisions of the experts in Talmud could be relied upon, but those who gave decisions on the basis of the Mishnah only were called ‘destroyers of the world’ (Sot. 22a); cf. supra p. 50. Thus, the masters of the Talmud were, so to speak, as essential to Israel as bread itself.
Prov. IX, 5.
Lit., ‘things heard’ i.e., oral reports of a halachic character — legal decisions — which were carefully handed down by teacher to disciple. These tradents of legal traditions were veritable living ‘books of reference’.

Lit., ‘to take up and give’. The expression is primarily a commercial term, denoting ‘buying and selling’ or any financial transaction. Here it is used in the transferred sense of being able to deal with the argumentation essential to the study of the Torah. A distinction is here drawn between the keen-minded debater (‘the man of war’) and the expert in traditions (‘the mighty man’): the latter is remarkable chiefly for his learning, the former is distinguished for his reasoning power and mental acumen.

Ibid. XVI, 10.
Lit., as counsellor.

‘fifty’, is explained as הומיסים ‘fifths, i.e.,the five books of the Pentateuch. V. Kid. 33a.
Lit., ‘interpreter’, i.e.,the translator into Aramaic (or Greek) of the Biblical portion read at services, V. J.E. VIII, p. 521.

Cf. Ta'an. 24b-25a: ‘Every day a Bath Kol goes forth and says: The whole world is fed for the sake of Hanina, my son; Yet is Hanina, my son, satisfied with a kab of carobs from Sabbath eve to Sabbath eve’. Cf. also Ber. V, 5.

I.e., in heaven.

I.e., on earth.

I.e., the proconsular government. V. Sanh. 14a and Keth. 17a.

The Jewish year consists ordinarily of twelve lunar months (v. n. 5). In order to prevent the festivals from falling in the wrong seasons, it was necessary periodically to adjust the lunar calendar to the solar year: this was achieved by introducing an intercalary month (Adar II) between Adar and Nisan. V., further, Sanh. 2a (Sonc. ed., p. 1) and 10a (p. 42f); also J.E. vol. III, p. 498f.

I.e., determination of the beginning of a month by the first appearance of the new moon. As the moon revolves round the earth in approx. twenty-nine and a half days, the Jewish months consists, alternately, of twenty-nine or thirty days.

The expression ‘wise (E. V. cunning”) charmer’ is clearly intended in the verse to refer to one person; but the Gemara interprets ‘wise’ and ‘charmer’ as a composite phrase referring to two distinct types.

Used here not in its restricted meaning of the Pentateuch, but in its wider connotation of Jewish teaching based on Scripture; cf. Aboth I, 1 (Sonc. ed., p. 1, n., 1).

Here, as above (v. n. 6), Isaiah's description of one type of person is made to refer to two types.

I.e., is able himself to draw conclusions on the basis of the knowledge imparted to him.

On account of Satan (Aruch). But Jast. prefers the reading of MS.M.(cf. Rashi l.c.) which he renders: ‘that is he to whom are handed over the secrets of the Law which are communicated in a low voice’. Cf. p. 75 and nn. 4 and 5.

The word מונעים ‘children’) in the verse is explained as meaning מונעים ‘empty’; literally, the latter means, shaken out, emptied’.

Lit., ‘commandments’, precepts (of the Torah)’, hence religious or meritorious deeds.

Var. lec.: but Bah reads R. Papa b. J.

The word תינוניאים ‘babes’) in the verse is explained as a derivative of אינונא ‘fox’), with the meaning, ‘double foxes i.e., second generation of foxes.

V. p. 84, n. 6.

This is an explanation of the word יבר (aged) in the verse, which must necessarily have the opposite meaning of יבר (‘child’ i.e., one empty of good deeds). Note also that zaken is explained elsewhere as one who is both learned (v. Sifra Kedoshim Par. 3’ Ch. VII, and Kid. 32b) and practised in the Torah and its precepts (v. Ber. 39a). Cf. also p. 109 (The Elder).

The word ניקנ ‘base’) in the verse is here explained as a derivative of ניקנ (‘light’).

There is a play here on the word ניקנ (‘honourable’), the root of which also means, ‘heavy, weighty’.

Isa. III, 6.

I.e., feel ashamed in their ignorance of them — namely the teachings of the Torah — should be detected.

Lit., ‘and this stumbling’; ibid,

I.e., which they learn only through their mistakes.

E.V. ‘swear’.
E.V. will not be'.

Ibid. 7.

Ex, XX, 7. The bracketed words are omitted in cur. edd. but not in the "Ein Jacob'.

The Heb. verb in the verse, which, being in the imperfect form should ordinarily denote the future or at least the present tense, is here understood as having a past meaning, viz., ‘I used not to be’.

Lit., ‘of those who bind (themselves) in the Schoolhouse’.

I.e., the case referred to in Isaiah is no proof of real honesty, because (according to the argument which follows) falsehood could easily have been detected.

I.e., I have never studied. This voluntary admission proves his honesty.

Heb. הָיָֽהּ which is only a slight variant of הִיָּֽהוּ ‘honesty’.

Talmud - Mas. Chagigah 14b

the one [verse] refers to religious matters,¹ the other to business. In regard to religious matters, there were [honest men left]; in regard to business, there were no [honest men left].

Our Rabbis taught: Once R. Johanan b. Zakkai was riding on an ass when going on a journey, and R. Eleazar b. ‘Arak was driving the ass from behind. [R. Eleazar] said to him: Master, teach me a chapter of the ‘Work of the Chariot’.² He answered: Have I not taught you³ thus: ‘Nor [the work of] the chariot in the presence of one, unless he is a Sage and understands of his own knowledge’? [R. Eleazar] them said to him: Master, permit me to say before thee something which thou hast taught me.⁴ He answered, Say on! Forthwith R. Johanan b. Zakkai dismounted from the ass, and wrapped himself up,⁵ and sat upon a stone beneath an olive tree. Said [R. Eleazar] to him: Master, wherefor didst thou dismount from the ass? He answered: Is it proper that whilst thou art expounding the ‘Work of the Chariot’, and the Divine Presence is with us, and the ministering angels accompany us, I should ride on the ass! Forthwith, R. Eleazar b. ‘Arak began his exposition of the ‘work of the Chariot’, and fire⁶ came down from heaven and encompassed⁷ all the trees in the field; [thereupon] they all began to utter [divine] song. What was the song they uttered? — Praise the Lord from the earth, ye sea-monsters, and all deeps . . . fruitful trees and all cedars . . . Hallelujah.⁸ An angel⁹ [then] answered¹⁰ from the fire and said: This is the very ‘Work of the Chariot’. [Thereupon] R. Johanan b. Zakkai rose and kissed him on his head and said: Blessed be the Lord God of Israel, Who hath given a son to Abraham our father, who knoweth to speculate upon, and to investigate, and to expound the ‘Work of the Chariot’ — There are some who preach well but do not act well, others act well but do not preach well, but thou dost preach well and act well. Happy art thou, O Abraham our father, that R. Eleazar b. ‘Arak hath come forth from thy loins. Now when these things were told R. Joshua, he and R. Jose the priest¹¹ were going on a journey. They said: Let us also¹² expound the ‘Work of the Chariot’; so R. Joshua began an exposition. Now that day was the summer solstice;¹³ nevertheless the heavens became overcast with clouds and a kind of rainbow¹⁴ appeared in the cloud, and the ministering angels assembled and came to listen like people who assemble and come to watch the entertainments¹⁵ of a bridegroom and bride. [Thereupon] R. Jose the priest went and related what happened before R. Johanan b. Zakkai; and [the latter] said: Happy are ye, and happy is she that bore you;¹⁶ happy are my eyes that have seen thus. Moreover, in my dream, I and ye were reclining¹⁷ on Mount Sinai, when a Bath Kol¹⁸ was sent to us,¹⁹ [saying]: Ascend hither, ascend hither! [Here are] great banqueting chambers, and fine dining couches prepared for you; you and your disciples and your disciples’ disciples are designated for the third class.²⁰ But is this so?²¹ For behold it is taught: R. Jose b. R. Judah said: There were three discourses:²² R. Joshua discoursed before R. Johanan b. Zakkai, R. Akiba discoursed before R. Joshua, Hanania b. Hakainai discoursed before R. Akiba; — whereas R. Eleazar b. ‘Arak he does not count! — One who discoursed [himself], and others discoursed before him, he counts; one who discoursed [himself], but others did not discourse before him, he does not count. But behold there is Hanania b. Hakainai before whom others did not discourse, yet he counts himself! — He at least discoursed before one who discoursed [before others].²³
Our Rabbis taught: Four men entered the ‘Garden’, namely, Ben ‘Azzai and Ben Zoma, Aher, and R. Akiba. R. Akiba said to them: When ye arrive at the stones of pure marble, say not, water, water! For it is said: He that speaketh falsehood shall not be established before mine eyes. Ben ‘Azzai cast a look and died. Of him Scripture says: Precious in the sight of the Lord is the death of His saints. Ben Zoma looked and became demented. Of him Scripture says: Hast thou found honey? Eat so much as is sufficient for thee, lest thou be filled therewith, and vomit it. Aher mutilated the shoots. R. Akiba departed unhurt.

Ben Zoma was asked: Is it permitted to castrate a dog? He replied: Neither shall ye do this in your land, — [this means], to none that is in your land shall ye do thus. Ben Zoma was [further] asked: May a high priest marry a maiden who has become pregnant? Do we [in such a case] take into consideration Samuel's statement, for Samuel said,

(3) Plural, i.e. R. Eleazar and his fellow-students.
(4) The fact that R. Johanan b. Zakai had in the past taught the ‘Chariot’ mysteries to R. Eleazar is difficult to reconcile with the former's present refusal to teach his disciple. It seems best to omit, with the J.T., the word rendered ‘which thou hast taught me’. For two suggested explanations, if this word is retained, v. Maharsha a.I.
(5) I.e., put round him his tallith. The latter was a four-cornered garment (similar to the Roman pallium) adorned with fringes (in accordance with Num. XV, 38f), which was worn in Talmudic times by scholars, distinguished persons, and those who led in prayers. Its use at prayers is still preserved, and has given rise to its popular designation of ‘prayer-shawl’. By wrapping himself in his tallith, R. Johanan b. Zakai showed his sense of the holiness of the occasion. V. further J.E., vol. XI, pp 67f and Elbogen, Der Jud, Gottesdienst pp. 499f.

(15) Heb. בלעשנים. Levy deriving the word from the Greek ‘smiling’, especially ‘friendly smiling’, translates it, ‘Belustigungen’, which agrees with Rashi’s explanation and the variant reading of the Jerusalem Talmud viz., ‘rejoicing’. Jast. gives the word a Hebrew origin (v.s.v.) and explains it to mean, music, sweet melodies; he renders our passage — ‘the musical entertainments at a wedding.

(20) Of the seven classes (v. Midr. Till. to Ps. XI, 7) admitted (after death) into God's presence.
(21) I.e., that R. Eleazar b. ‘Arak discoursed on the ‘Chariot’ mysteries before his master.
(22) I.e., only in three instances did disciples discourse on the ‘Work of the Chariot’ before their teachers.
(23) Hanina b. Hakainai has to be mentioned on account of R. Akiba, to show that the latter not only disclosed himself but also another disclosed before him; but R. Eleazar b. ‘Arak did not discourse before a teacher who in his turn disclosed before others, nor did any one discourse before him, hence he is not counted.
(24) Paradise, Heb. גן עדן (cf. Cant. IV, 13, Eccl. II, 5, Neh. II, 8), ‘enclosure, preserve, garden, park’ (v. B. D. B. s.v.). L. Blau (Alitjudisches Zauberwesen, pp. 115f) seeks to prove that this account of the entry of the four Rabbis into Paradise is to be understood literally (v. also J.E. vol. V, p. 683). This view is shared, among others, by J. Levy and L.
Ginzberg (v. J.E. vol. V, pp. 138f). On the other hand, M. Jast. (Dictionary) and Goldschmidt consider ‘Pardes’ a figurative expression for the mystical realm of theosophy. Rashi explains that the four scholars ascended to heaven, and Tosaf. adds that it only appeared to them that they did so. Similarly, R. Hai Gaon, who discusses the whole Baraita in a responsum (quoted by Ha-Kotheb in ‘Ein Jacob), and R. Hananel explain that the entry of the Rabbis into the ‘Garden’ was only a vision. Both these authorities refer to the comment on the passage contained in the mystical works ‘Hekaloth Rabbathi’ and ‘Hekaloth Zutarthi’ (v. J.E. vol. VI, pp. 332-3). V. further J.E. vol. IX, pp. 515f.

(34) I.e., apostatized. Scholars differ greatly regarding the nature of Aher's defection: he has been variously described as a Persian, Gnostic or Philonian dualist; as a Christian; as a Sadducee; and as a ‘victim of the inquisitor Akiba’, in J.E., V. 183 and bibliography.
(35) Castrated animals may not be offered as sacrifices (v. n. 12); therefore castration is forbidden in the case of animals of the type that can be offered up. But a dog may not only not be offered itself, but even its price or equivalent may not be used for offerings (v. Tem. 30a-b). Hence the question whether the prohibition of castration applies even to a dog. Cf. also Shab. 111a.
(36) Lev. XXII, 24. The beginning of the verse reads: ‘That which hath its stones bruised . . . or cut, ye shalt not offer unto the Lord’.
(37) I.e., even an animal like the dog, which cannot be offered as a sacrifice, may not be mutilated.
(38) The high priest may marry a virgin only (v. Lev. XXI, 13). The question here is: If the girl claims that despite her pregnant condition she is still a virgin, may the high priest marry her? Or if he married her without knowing of her pregnancy and actually found her to have the signs of virginity, but subsequently learnt that she was pregnant before marriage, may she remain his wife?

Talmud - Mas. Chagigah 15a

I can have repeated sexual connections without [causing] bleeding;¹ or is perhaps the case of Samuel rare?² He replied: the case of Samuel is rare, but we do consider [the possibility] that she may have conceived in a bath.³ But behold Samuel said: A spermatic emission that does not shoot forth like an arrow cannot fructify! — In the first instance, it had also shot forth like an arrow.

Our Rabbis taught: Once R. Joshua b. Hanania was standing on a step on the Temple Mount, and Ben Zoma saw him and did not stand up before him.⁴ So [R. Joshua] said to him: Whence and whither, Ben Zoma?⁵ He replied: I was gazing between the upper and the lower waters,⁶ and there is only a bare three fingers’ [breadth] between them, for it is said: And the spirit of God hovered over the face of the waters⁷ — like a dove which hovers over her young without touching [them].⁸ Thereupon R. Joshua said to his disciples: Ben Zoma is still outside.⁹ See now, when was it that ‘the spirit of God hovered over the face of the water? On the first day [of Creation]; but the division took place on the second day, for it is written: And let it divide the waters from the waters!’ And how big [is the interval]? R. Aha b. Jacob said, As a hair's breadth; and the Rabbis said: As [between] the boards of a landing bridge. Mar Zutra, or according to others R. Assi, said: As [between] two cloaks spread one over the other; and others say, as [between] two cups tilted one over the other.¹⁰

Aher mutilated the shoots.¹¹ Of him Scripture says: Suffer not thy mouth to bring thy flesh into What does it refer to? — He saw that permission was granted to Metatron to sit and write down the merits of Israel. Said he: It is taught as a tradition that on high there is no sitting and no emulation, and no back, and no weariness. Perhaps, — God forfend! — there are two divinities! [Thereupon] they led Metatron forth, and punished him with sixty fiery lashes, saying to him: Why didst thou not rise before him when thou didst see him? Permission was then given to him to strike out the merits of Aher. A Bath Kol went forth and said: Return, ye backsliding children — except Aher. [Thereupon] he said: Since I have been driven forth from yonder world, let me go forth and enjoy this world. So Aher went forth into evil courses. Perhaps, — God forfend! — there are two divinities! [Thereupon] they led Metatron forth, and punished him with sixty fiery lashes, saying to him: Why didst thou not rise before him when thou didst see him? Permission was then given to him to strike out the merits of Aher. A Bath Kol went forth and said: Return, ye backsliding children — except Aher. [Thereupon] he said: Since I have been driven forth from yonder world, let me go forth and enjoy this world. So Aher went forth into evil courses.

After his apostasy, Aher asked R. Meir [a question], saying to him: What is the meaning of the verse: God hath made even the one as well as the other? He replied: It means that for everything that God created He created [also] its counterpart. He created mountains, and created hills; He created seas, and created rivers. Said [Aher] to him: R. Akiba, thy master, did not explain it thus, but [as follows]: He created righteous, and created wicked; He created the Garden of Eden, and created Gehinnom. Everyone has two portions, one in the Garden of Eden and one in Gehinnom. The righteous man, being meritorious, takes his own portions and his fellow's portion in the Garden of Eden. The wicked man, being guilty, takes his own portion and his fellow's portion in Gehinnom. R. Mesharsheya said: What is the Biblical proof for this? In the case of the righteous, it is written: Therefore in their land they shall possess double. In the case of the wicked it is written: And destroy them with double destruction.

Our Rabbis taught: Once Aher was riding on a horse on the Sabbath, and R. Meir was walking behind him to learn Torah at his mouth. Said [Aher] to him: Meir, turn back, for I have already measured by the paces of my horse that thus far extends the Sabbath limit. He replied: Thou, too, go back! [Aher] answered: Have I not already told thee that I have already heard from behind the Veil: ‘Return ye backsliding children’ — except Aher. [R. Meir] prevailed upon him and took him to a schoolhouse. [Aher] said to a child: Recite for me thy verse! [The child] answered: There is no peace, saith the Lord, unto the wicked. He then took him to another schoolhouse, and [Aher] said: Recite for me thy verse! He answered: For though thou wash thee with nitre, and take thee much soap, yet thine iniquity is marked before Me, saith the Lord God. He took him to yet another schoolhouse, and [Aher] said:

(15) I.e., in heaven.

(16) MS.M. (v. Rabb. D.S. a.l.) reads: ‘no standing and no sitting’ i.e., no effort and no rest. This reading, in reverse order, was known to Maim. (Comm. on Mishnah Sanhedrin, ch. 10); but Rashi deletes the words ‘no standing’.

(17) I.e., the angels have faces in all directions (Rashi), Jast. explains i.e., everything is in sight. Maim. (loc. cit.) renders: ‘no division’.

(22) According to our passage, Aher was guilty of the heresy of dualism. L. Ginzberg (J.E. vol. V, pp. 138-139) denies all historic worth to the story given here, which, on account of its reference to Metatron — which he declares to be a specifically Babylonian idea — and its lack of connection with the introductory words, he declares to be of late origin. Ginzberg prefers the parallel account in J. Hag. II, 1, where it is related that when Elisha saw a scholar he slew him, that he enticed the young from studying the Torah, and that he informed against the Jews when they sought to perform the work they were ordered to do on the Sabbath in a manner not to break the Law. These events undoubtedly refer to the period of the Hadrianic persecutions. In the J.T. two reasons are mentioned for his apostasy: according to some, he saw one man break the precept of Deut. XXII, 7, without coming to harm, and another observe it and get killed; according to others, he saw the tongue of the great scholar R. Judah Nahtum in the mouth of a dog. The J.T. also gives a different version of the verses discussed by Elisha with R. Meir, and of what R. Meir said on his master's death (v. J.E. vol. VIII, p. 434).

(27) ‘Aher’ is thus explained to mean another person’. Ginzberg (op. cit.) takes the view that it is a euphemism for a vile thing (cf. סְפָרָנָה). V. p. 91, n. 3.

to a child: Recite for me thy verse! He answered: And thou, that art spoiled, what doest thou, that thou clothest thyself with scarlet, that thou deckest thee with ornaments of gold, that thou enlargest thine eyes with paint? In vain dost thou make thyself fair etc.¹ He took him to yet another schoolhouse until he took him to thirteen schools: all of them quoted in similar vein. When he said to the last one, Recite for me thy verse, he answered: But unto the wicked God saith: ‘What hast thou to do to declare My statutes etc.?² That child was a stutterer, so it sounded as though he answered: ‘But to Elisha³ God saith’. Some say that [Aher] had a knife with him, and he cut him up and sent him to the thirteen schools: and some say that he said: Had I a knife in my hand I would have cut him up.

When Aher died,⁴ they said:⁵ Let him not be judged, nor let him enter the world to come. Let him not be judged, because he engaged in the study of the Torah; nor let him enter the world to come, because he sinned. R. Meir said: It were better that he should be judged and that he should enter the world to come. When I die I shall cause⁶ smoke to rise from his grave.⁷ When R. Meir died, smoke rose up from Aher's grave. R. Johanan said: [What] a mighty deed to burn his master! There was one amongst us, and we cannot save him;⁸ if I were to take him by the hand, who would snatch him from me! [But] said he.⁹ When I die, I shall extinguish the smoke from his grave.¹⁰ When R. Johanan died, the smoke ceased from Aher's grave. The public mourner¹¹ began [his oration] concerning him¹² thus: Even the janitor¹³ could not stand before thee, O master!

Aher's daughter [once] came before Rabbi and said to him: O master, support me! He asked her: ‘Whose daughter art thou?’ She replied: I am Aher's daughter. Said he: Are any of his children left in the world? Behold it is written: He shall have neither son nor son's son among his people, nor any remaining in his dwellings.¹⁴ She answered: Remember his Torah¹⁵ and not his deeds. Forthwith, a fire came down and enveloped Rabbi's bench.¹⁶ [Thereupon] Rabbi wept and said: If it be so on account of those who dishonour her,¹⁷ how much more so on account of those who honour her!

But how did R. Meir learn Torah at the mouth of Aher? Behold Rabbah b. Bar Hana said that R. Johanan said: What is the meaning of the verse, For the priest's lips should keep knowledge, and they should seek the Law at his mouth; for he is the messenger of the Lord of hosts?¹⁸ [This means that] if the teacher is like an angel of the Lord of hosts, they should seek the Law at his mouth, but if not, they should not seek the Law at his mouth! — Resh Lakish answered: R. Meir found a verse and expounded it [as follows]: Incline thine ear, and hear the words of the wise, and apply thy heart unto my knowledge.¹⁹ It does not say, ‘unto their knowledge’, but ‘unto my knowledge’.²⁰ R. Hanina said, [he decided it] from here: Hearken, O daughter, and consider, and incline thine ear; forget also thine own people, and thy father's house etc. The verses contradict one another! There is no contradiction: in the one case Scripture refers to an adult, in the other to a child. When R. Dimi came [to Babylon] he said: In the West, they say: R. Meir ate the date and threw the kernel away.

Raba expounded: What is the meaning of the verse: I went down to the garden of nuts, to look at the green plants of the valley etc. Why are the scholars likened to the nut? To tell you that just as [in the case of] the nut, though it be spoiled with mud and filth, yet are its contents not contemned, so [in the case of] a scholar, although he may have sinned, yet is his Torah not contemned.

Rabbah b. Shila [once] met Elijah. He said to him: What is the Holy One, blessed be He, doing? He answered: He utters traditions in the name of all the Rabbis, but in the name of R. Meir he does not utter. Rabbah asked him, Why? — Because he learnt traditions at the mouth of Aher. Said [Rabbah] to him: But why? R. Meir found a pomegranate; he ate [the fruit] within it, and the peel he threw away! He answered: Now he says: Meir my son says: When a man suffers, to what expression does the Shechinah give utterance? 'My head is heavy, my arm is heavy'. If the Holy One, blessed be He, is thus grieved over the blood of the wicked, how much more so over the blood of the righteous that is shed. Samuel found Rab Judah leaning on the door-bolt weeping. So he said to him: O, keen scholar, wherefore dost thou weep? He replied: Is it a small thing that is written concerning the Rabbis? Where is he that counted, where is he that weighed? Where is he that counted the towers? — for they counted all the letters in the Torah. ‘Where is he that weighed?’ — for they weighed the light and the heavy in the Torah. ‘Where is he that counted the towers?’ — for they taught three hundred halachoth concerning a ‘tower which flies in the air’. And R. Ammi said: Three hundred questions did Doeg and Ahitophel raise concerning a ‘tower which flies in the air’. Yet we have learnt: Three kings and four commoners have no share in the world to come. What then shall become of us? Said [Samuel] to him: O, keen scholar, there was impurity in their hearts. — But what of Aher? — Greek song did not cease from his mouth.

Nimos the weaver asked R. Meir: Does all wool that goes down into the dyeing kettle come up properly dyed? He replied: All that was clean on its mother comes up properly dyed, all that was not clean on its mother does not come up properly dyed.

R. Akiba went up unhurt and went down unhurt; and of him Scripture says: Draw me, we will run after thee. And R. Akiba too the ministering angels sought to thrust away; [but] the Holy One, blessed be He, said to them: Let this elder be, for he is worthy to avail himself of My glory.

Prov. XXII, 17.

Since the heart may not be applied to their knowledge, it shows that the acts of the wise men referred to must be wicked. Nevertheless, their words may be listened to. Thus R. Meir could learn from Aher, provided he did not imitate the latter's deeds.

I.e., fixed traditional laws, V. Glos.

An obscure expression for which Rashi both here and Sanh. 106b (Sonc. ed., p. 727) offers several interpretations, The most likely explanations relate the ‘flying tower’ to the laws of defilement. It could then mean: (a) A portable turret-shaped conveyance, in which an Israelite entered heathen land, which is regarded as levitically unclean; v. Tosef. Oh. and Rashi to Sanh. l.c. ‘Flying’ will thus mean ‘moving’ i.e., being carried. (b) An open chest or cupboard containing a levitically unclean object, which stands in an open space; v. Oh. IV, If. In this case, it is best to read ‘open’, or, as in the Mishnah ‘standing’. The following are less plausible explanations: — (a) The upper stroke of the letter lamed, i.e., they taught three hundred traditions concerning so insignificant a matter. (b) The tower of Babel. (c) A tower suspended in mid-air by magic. Cf. Sanh. 68a (Sonc. ed., p. 462), concerning the planting of cucumbers by magic.

Lit., ‘clay’, i.e., heathen sensuality (Jast.). Aliter: ‘gnawing worm’; ‘jealousy’, i.e., evil thoughts (Levy). Whatever the exact rendering, the meaning is: They were wickedly inclined from the beginning, hence their knowledge of the Torah could not protect them.

I.e., why did not his study of the Torah save him?

Rashi reads: ‘from his house’. Why Greek song should have been the cause of Aher's corruption is not clear. Rashi says that he transgressed the prohibition against music after the destruction of the Temple (v. Git. 7a; cf. Isa. XXIV, 9). Maharsha rightly objects that this does not explain the word Greek: the Gemara could have simply stated that song did not cease from his mouth. He suggests, therefore, that the Greek songs were tainted by heresy. Perhaps the simplest explanation is that Aher's devotion to Greek literature eventually led him to accept ideas which were contrary to Jewish teaching.

(45) I.e., before his apostasy.

(47) מִנִּים, Lat. gerdino. Cf. R. Isaac the Smith, R. Johanan the Sandalmaker etc. Being a weaver, the allegory employed by Nimos is appropriate. But Jast. holds that מִנִּים equals (by transposition) מִנְדָּר and means ‘of Gadara’. He also regards מְנַבִּים as a shortened form of מְנַבִּים (cf. Gen. Rab. s. 65), who, he thinks, is to be identified with the cynic philosopher Oenomaus.

(48) Rashi explains: does the study of the Torah serve to protect all students from sin? Jast.: i.e., does every student of mystic philosophy escape death or scepticism? (So too Aruch). Note Oenomaus was a cynic.

(49) I.e., when the sheep was sheared, i.e., all who begin the study of the Torah when they are free from sin; or (following Jast. and Aruch), all who engage in mystic speculation in perfect purity, like R. Akiba. Cf. Ab. III, 9 (Sone. ed., p. 32).

Talmud - Mas. Chagigah 16a

— By what Biblical exposition was he able to learn this?1 Rabbah b. Bar Hanah said that R. Johanan said: And He came from the myriads holy2 — He is the Sign3 among His myriad. And R. Abbahu said: He is preeminent above ten thousand4 — He is the Example5 among His myriad. And Resh Lakish said: The Lord of hosts is His names6 — He is the Lord among His host. — And R. Hiyya b. Abbahu said that R. Johanan said: But the Lord was not in the wind; and after the wind an earthquake; but the Lord was not in the earthquake; and after the earthquake a fire; but the Lord was ‘not in the fire; and after the fire a still small voice.’7 And behold, the Lord passed by.8

Our Rabbis taught: Six things are said concerning demons:9 in regard to three, they are like the ministering angels; and in regard to three, like human beings. ‘In regard to three they are like the ministering angels’: they have wings like the ministering angels; and they fly from one end of the world to the other like the ministering angels; and they know what will happen like the ministering angels. [You say], ‘They know’ — you cannot mean that!10 — Rather, they hear from behind the Veil11 like the ministering angels. ‘And in regard to three, they are like human beings’: they eat and drink like human beings; they propagate like human beings; and they die like human beings. Six things are said of human beings: in regard to three, they are like the ministering angels, and in regard to three, they are like beasts. ‘In regard to three, they are like the ministering angels’: they have understanding like the ministering angels; and they walk erect like the ministering angels; and they can talk in the holy tongue12 like the ministering angels. ‘In regard to three, they are like beasts’: they eat and drink like beasts; and they propagate like beasts, and they relieve themselves like beasts.

WHOSOEVER SPECULATES UPON FOUR THINGS, IT WERE A MERCY IF13 HE HAD NOT COME INTO THE WORLD etc. Granted as regards what is above, what is beneath,14 what [will be] after,15 that is well. But as regards what was before — what happened, happened!16 — Both R. Johanan and Resh Lakish say: It is like a human king who said to his servants: Build for me a great palace upon the dunghill.17 They went and built it for him. It is not the king’s wish [thenceforth] to have the name of the dunghill mentioned.

WHOSOEVER TAKES NO THOUGHT FOR THE HONOUR OF HIS MAKER, IT WERE A MERCY IF HE HAD NOT COME INTO THE WORLD. What does this mean? R. Abba said: It refers to one who looks at the rainbow. R. Joseph said: It refers to one who commits transgression in secret. ‘One who looks at a rainbow’, for it is written: As the appearance of the bow that is in the cloud in the day, so was the appearance of the brightness round about. This was the appearance of the likeness of the glory of the Lord.18 R. Joseph said: ‘It refers to one who commits a transgression in secret’, in accordance with R. Isaac's teaching. For R. Isaac said: When anyone commits a transgression in secret, it is as though he thrust aside the feet of the Divine Presence, for it is said: Thus saith the Lord: The heaven is My throne, and the earth is My footstool. But is this so? For behold R. Elai the elder said: If a man sees that his [evil] inclination is prevailing upon him, let him go to a place where he is not known, and put on black garments, and wrap himself up in black garments, and let him do what his heart desires; but let him not profane the Name of Heaven publicly! — There is no contradiction. The one case speaks of one who is able to overcome his [evil] inclination; the other case of one who is not able to overcome his [evil] inclination.

R. Judah b. R. Nahmani, the speaker of Resh Lakish expounded: Anyone who looks at three things, his eyes become dim; at the rainbow, and at the Prince, and at the priests. At the rainbow, because it is written: As the appearance of the bow that is in the cloud in the day of rain . . . This was the appearance of the likeness of the glory of the Lord. At the Prince, for it is written: And thou shalt put of thy honour upon him. One who looks at the priests — at the time when the Temple existed, when they stood upon their platform and blessed Israel with the Distinguished Name [of God]. R. Judah son of R. Nahmani, the speaker of Resh Lakish expounded: What is the meaning of the verse: Trust ye not in a friend, put ye not confidence in a familiar friend. If the evil inclination say to thee: Sin and the Holy One, blessed be He, will pardon, believe it not, for it is said: ‘Trust ye not in a friend’, and ‘friend’ [Rea'] means none other than one's evil inclination, for it is said: For the inclination of man's heart is evil [Ra']. And ‘familiar friend’ means none other than the Holy One, blessed be He, for it is said: Thou art the familiar friend of my youth. Perhaps thou wilt say: Who testifies against me? The stones of a man's home and the beams of his house testify against him, for it is said: For the stone shall cry out of the wall, and the beam out of the timber shall answer it. But the Sages say: A man's soul testifies against him, for it is said: Keep the doors of thy mouth from her that lieth in thy bosom. What is it that lies in a man's bosom? You must say, it is the soul. R. Zerika said: Two ministering angels that accompany him testify against him, for it is said: For He will give His angels charge over thee, to keep thee in all thy ways.

MISHNAH. JOSE B. JO'EZER says that [on a festival-day] the laying on of hands [on the head of a sacrifice] may not be performed; JOSEPH B. JOHANAN says that it may be performed. JOSHUA B. PERAHIA says that it may not be performed; NITTAI THE ARBELITE says that it may be performed. JUDAH B. TARBAI says that it may not be performed; SIMEON A. SHETAH says that it may be performed. SHMAIHEM DID NOT DIFFER. MENAHEM WENT FORTH; SHAMMAI ENTERED. HILLEL AND MENAHEM did not differ. MENAHEM WENT FORTH; HILLEL says that it may be performed.

(22) I.e., should his passion remain unmastered, let him at least commit the sin in secret. But R. Hananel deprecates the thought that the Talmud permits sin even in such circumstances and interprets our passage thus: certainly the effect of exile and dark garments will be to conquer the man’s evil inclination, so that he will then be able to do what his heart truly desires, i.e., serve God.

Tosaf, (a.l.) points out that outside the Temple too, e.g., in the provinces, it was forbidden to look at the priests during the pronunciation of the sacerdotal blessing, the reason according to the J.T. being to prevent the distraction of the people’s attention.

(41) The same restrictions regarding work applied to Festival-days as to the Sabbath, except in respect of work essential to the preparation of food, which was permitted on the Festivals (v. Bez. V, 2). Now the ‘laying on of the hands’ had to be performed with all one’s strength, so that the weight of the person was supported by the animal; and this was considered an infringement of the Sabbath rule not ‘to make use’ of an animal. The point of the controversy, therefore, is this: Had the laying on of the hands to be done immediately prior to the slaughter, and consequently could be regarded as essential to the preparation of food, i.e., the sacrificial meal; or could this be done on the preceding day, so that the profanation of the holyday by this act became unnecessary, although the slaughtering took place on the Festival day? V. Bez. II, 4 and Bertinoro a.l.

(42) In the J. Hag. II, 2 we are told: At first there was no controversy in Israel except over the laying on of the hands alone. But Shammai and Hillel arose and made them four (in Bab. Shab. 14b, only three points of dispute are mentioned; cf. Tosaf. to our passage). When the disciples of the School of Hillel increased, and they did not study sufficiently under their masters (lit., ‘did not sufficiently minister to their masters’), the controversies in Israel increased, and they became divided into two companies, the one declaring unclean, the other declaring clean. And (the Torah) will not again return to its (uncontroversial) place until the son of David (i.e., the Messiah) will come. Talmud - Mas. Chagigah 16b

THE FORMER [OF EACH] PAIR WERE PRINCES¹ AND THE LATTER WERE HEADS OF THE COURT.²

GEMARA. Our Rabbis taught: The three of the former pairs³ who said that the laying on of the hands may not be performed, and the two of the latter pairs who said that it may be performed, were Princes, and the others were Heads of the Court — this is the view of R. Meir. But the Sages say: Judah b. Tabbai was Head of the Court, and Simeon b. Shetah was Prince. Who taught the following teaching of our Rabbis? R.⁴ Judah b. Tabbai said: May I see consolation,⁵ if I did not have a Zomem⁶ -witness put to death as a demonstration⁷ against the Sadducees⁸ who said that Zomemim-witnesses were not to be put to death unless [through their false evidence] the accused had [already] been put to death. Said Simeon b. Shetah to him: May I see consolation, if thou didst not shed innocent blood. For the Sages said: Zomemim-witnesses are not put to death until both of them have been proved Zomemim; and they are not flogged⁹ until both of them have been proved Zomemim; and they are not ordered to pay money [as damages]¹⁰ until both of them have been proved Zomemim. Forthwith Judah b. Tabbai undertook never to give a decision except in the presence of Simeon b. Shetah.¹¹ All his days Judah b. Tabbai prostrated himself on the grave of the executed man, and his voice used to be heard. The people believed that it was the voice of the executed man; [but] he said to them: ‘It is my voice. Ye shall know this [by the fact that] on the morrow [when] I die my voice will not be heard’.¹² R. Aha the son of Raba said to R. Ashi: But perhaps he¹³ appeased him, or [the deceased] summoned him to judgment!¹⁴ — According to whom will this¹⁵ be? Granted, if you say [it is according to] R. Meir, who said that Simeon b. Shetah was Head of the Court [and] Judah b. Tabbai was Prince, that is why he decided points of law in the presence of Simeon b. Shetah; but if you say [it is according to] the Rabbis, who say that Judah b. Tabbai was Head of the Court [and] Simeon b. Shetah was Prince, how may the Head of the Court decide points of law in the presence of the Prince?¹⁶ — No,’he undertook’ is to be understood with reference to association. [He said]: I will not even join [with other judges to give a decision, unless Simeon b. Shetah is present].¹⁷ MENAHEM WENT FORTH AND SHAMMAI ENTERED etc. Whither did he go forth? Abaye said: He went forth into evil courses.¹⁸ Raba said: He went forth to the King's service. Thus it is also taught: Menahem went forth to the King's service, and there went forth with him eighty pairs of disciples dressed in silk.
R. Shimon b. Abba said that R. Johanan said: Never let [the principal] of Shebuth [Rest] be unimportant in thy eyes. For the laying on of the hands [on a Festival-day] is [prohibited] only on account of Shebuth, yet the great men of the age differed thereon. But is this not already quite clear! — It is required on account of a precept [the fulfilment of which is prohibited] as Shebuth. But is not that too quite clear! — [It is required] to contradict the view that they differ regarding the laying on of the hands itself: thus he teaches us that it is in regard to Shebuth that they differ.

Rami b. Hama said: You can deduce from this that the laying on of hands must be done with all one's strength; for if you suppose that one's whole strength is not required, what [work] does one do by laying on the hands? An objection was raised: [It is written]: Speak unto the sons of Israel . . . and he shall lay his hands. The sons of Israel lay on the hands but the daughters of Israel do not lay on the hands. R. Jose and R. Simeon say: The daughters of Israel lay on the hands optionally. R. Jose said: Abba Eleazar told me: Once we had a calf which was a peace-sacrifice, and we brought it to the Women's Court, and women laid the hands on it — not that the laying on of the hands has to be done by women, but in order to gratify the women. Now if you suppose that we require the laying on of the hands to be done with all one's strength, would we, for the sake of gratifying the women, permit work to be done with holy sacrifices! Is it to be inferred, therefore, that we do not require all one's strength? — Actually, I can answer you that we do require [it to be] with all one's strength, [but the women] were told to hold their hands lightly. If so, [what need was there to say], 'not that the laying on of the hands has to be done by women'? He could [more simply] have pointed out that it was no laying on of the hands at all! R. Ammi said: His argument runs: Firstly and secondly. Firstly, it was no laying on of the hands at all, and secondly, it was [done] in order to gratify the women.

R. Papa said: One may conclude from this that it is forbidden [on a holy day to make use of] the sides [of an animal]. For if you suppose that it is permitted [to make use of] the sides, let the hands be laid on the side. It must be concluded, therefore, that it is forbidden to make use of the sides.

Levy, however, trans: 'May I not behold the eternal salvation (ewige Heil) etc.'; and Rashi (Mak. 5b, the alternative explanation), interprets thus: He swore by the life of his children; might he receive condolences on their passing (if etc.).

I.e., Judah b. Tabbai.

R. Aha's point is that the cessation of the voice on Judah b. Tabbai's death is no proof that it was his. For the phenomenon might be explained in this way: whilst Judah was alive, the wrongfully executed man cried out his protest from the grave; but when Judah b. Tabbai died he ceased to call either because he had been appeased by him, or because he had now been able to summon him before the Heavenly Tribunal.

So Rashi; but Tosaf. explains that he undertook never to join in voting against R. Simeon b. Shetah's opinion. According to either interpretation, the purpose of the answer is to show that Judah b. Tabbai could have been the Head of the Court, for his vow did not imply that he ever gave or proposed to give a decision in the presence of his superior, the Nasi.

I.e., the Baraitha about Judah b. Tabbai.

Cf. the principle invoked against the youthful Samuel in Ber. 31b (Whoever decides a point of law in the presence of his teacher deserves death). Cf. also J. Hag. II, 2 ed. 77d, where historical evidence is cited in favour of the view that Judah b. Tammai was Prince, and also in support of the opposite opinion (Tosaf.).

So Rashi; but Tosaf. explains that he undertook never to join in voting against R. Simeon b. Shetah's opinion. According to either interpretation, the purpose of the answer is to show that Judah b. Tabbai could have been the Head of the Court, for his vow did not imply that he ever gave or proposed to give a decision in the presence of his superior, the Nasi.

I.e., the Baraitha about Judah b. Tabbai.
Talmud - Mas. Chagigah 17a

R. Ashi said: You may even say that it is permitted [to use] the sides,¹ but all that is connected with the back² is as the back.³

GEMARA. R. Eleazar said that R. Oshaia said: Whence is it to be deduced that [the offerings of] the Feast of Weeks can be made good throughout seven days? It is said: On the Feast of Unleavened Bread, and on the Feast of Weeks, and on the Feast of Tabernacles;¹⁸ thus [Scripture] compares the Feast of Weeks with the Feast of Unleavened Bread: just as [the offerings of] the Feast of Unleavened Bread can be made good throughout seven days,¹⁹ so too [the offerings of] the Feast of Weeks can be made good throughout seven days. But let me say that [Scripture] compares [the Feast of Weeks] to the Feast of Tabernacles; just as [the offerings of] the Feast of Tabernacles can be made good throughout eight days, so too [the offerings of] the Feast of Weeks can be made good throughout eight days! — The eighth day is a festival by itself.²⁰ [But] is not²¹ the statement that the eighth is a festival true only in regard to²² the Balloting [by the watches],²³ [the recital of the benediction of] the Season,²⁴ [the name of] the Festival,²⁵ [the prescribed number of] Sacrifices,²⁶ the [Temple] Song,²⁷ and the Blessing,²⁸ but regarding the making good [of the offerings] it makes good for the first [day of Tabernacles].²⁹ For we have learnt: He who did not bring his festal offering on the first festival day of the Feast, may bring it during the whole of the Festival even on the last festival day!³⁰ If you take hold of much, you do not hold it; but if you take hold of a little, you hold it.³¹ For what legal instruction, then, did the Divine Law write [again here] the Feast of Tabernacles?³² — To compare it with the Feast of Unleavened Bread: just as the Feast of Unleavened Bread requires [the pilgrim] to stay the night [in Jerusalem], So too, the Feast of Tabernacles requires [the pilgrim] to stay the night.³³ And whence do we deduce it in the case of the former?

² I.e., is parallel with the back, like the head.
³ Which may not be made use of on holy days.
⁴ I.e., festal-offerings and offerings of rejoicings (v. pp. 2, n. 3 and 30. n. 1 and Pes. 119a).
⁷ I.e., the pilgrimage burnt-offerings; v. p. 2, n. 1. By emphasizing the expression ‘unto you’ in Ex. XII, 16, it was deduced that only food for human needs could be prepared on the Festival, but not altar-food. Since burnt-offerings were wholly consumed on the altar and no part reserved for human consumption (as in the case of the sacrifices), they could not, according to the Shammaite view, be brought by individuals. The statutory public burnt-offerings, however, were permitted.

(8) For the reason v. Bez. 19a. The Hillelites agreed, however, that vow and freewill-offerings could not be offered up.

(9) Heb. תוראַ תוג תיר, lit., ‘(sacred) assembly’; v. p. 27, n. 3.

(10) Lit., ‘eve of Sabbath’.

(11) I.e., of the pilgrimage burnt-offerings, which, according to Beth Shammai, could not be offered up on the Festival day and a fortiori on the Sabbath; hence the offering was postponed till Sunday, for the Pentecost sacrifices could be offered throughout seven days in the same way as the Passover and Sukkoth offerings (v. pp. 11lf and cf.pp.43f).

(12) But on the Festival day. Var. iec., ‘it has no day for slaughter’ (omitting the words, ‘after the Sabbath’); v. p. 113, n. 6.

(13) No private offering, except the Passover sacrifice, could override the Sabbath.

(14) According to Rashi, this refers to his private festival garments worn by him at home and in the street; when people would see the High Priest in his ordinary clothes, they would realize that the day was not, as the Sadducees maintained (v.infra, n. 5) a holy day. But Tosaf. argues that the reference is to the High Priest's eight sacerdotal vestments, which he wore on Festivals when he would officiate at the Temple service (v. Yoma VII, 5) and adduces the J.T. in support of this view.

(16) Both mourning and fasting are prohibited on a festival-day.

(17) I.e., the Sadducees, who understood the word ‘Sabbath’ in Lev. XXIII, 11, 15 literally, and hence maintained that Pentecost must always fall on a Sunday, for it is written: ‘And ye shall count unto you from the morrow after the Sabbath . . . even unto the morrow after the seventh week shall ye number fifty days’ (Lev. XXIII, 15-16). But the Pharisees explained the word ‘Sabbath’ to mean ‘day of rest’, i.e., ‘holy day’ (cf. Lev. XXIII, 32, 39; Ibn Ezra to v. 11 (ibid.) and Men. 65a), and referred it to the first festival day of Passover. This same controversy formed part of the dispute between the Rabbanites and the Karaites some eight hundred years later.

(18) Deut. XVI, 16.

(19) Cf. pp. 43f.

(20) I.e., it does not form part of the Feast of Sukkoth.

(21) Lit., ‘say’.

(22) The following six points of difference are expressed in the original by the abbreviation בּוֹזֵרָה קַשׁ תַּרְעָה, formed out of the initials of the Hebrew words; v. fol. nn.

(23) הָלָיוֹנָה: the ballot or allotment in regard to the Temple services decided by a show of fingers on the part of the priests present; cf. Yoma II, 1f. Throughout the seven days of Sukkoth, the public sacrifices were offered up by the priest-watches according to rota; but on the eighth day the offerings were allotted by ballot. (V. Suk. 55b).

(24) מִשָּׁתַיון (cf. Excl. III, 1): the blessing at the end of the benediction recited on the entrance of a festival, which refers to the return of the festival season, viz., ‘Blessed art Thou, O Lord our God, King of the Universe, Who hast kept us alive, sustained us, and enabled us to reach this season’. The recital of this blessing on the eighth day of Sukkoth distinguishes it as an independent festival from the other days of Tabernacles. On the last day of Passover, on the other hand, it is not said, because the seventh day is regarded as an integral part of the Feast of unleavened Bread. V. also n. 6.

(25) לְבֵרָה: ‘pilgrimage-festival’. Three explanations of the meaning of the term have been suggested (v. Tosaf. a.I.). Rashi: It is a distinct festival in as much as it enjoys a special name, viz., Shemini ‘Azereth and not Sukkoth. R. Tam: It is a separate festival in the sense that it requires the pilgrim to spend the night following its termination in Jerusalem (Suk. 47a). R. Hananel: It is a separate festival in regard to the thirty days of semi-mourning for the dead. If the period of mourning began on the eve of Sukkoth, it is able to annul seven days out of the thirty in addition to the fourteen cancelled by the end of the first seven days of Tabernacles (cf. M.K. 24a).

(26) נַחֲלֵי תּוֹרָה: V. Num. XXIX, 12-38.

(27) יָרָה: Tosaf. (s. v. נַחֲלֵי תּוֹרָה) suggests that Ps. XII (note the caption) was said (cf. Sof. XIX and J.T.); and whereas the Psalms allocated for the different weekdays of Tabernacles were not completed each day but spread over two days (v. Suk. 55a), on the eighth day the psalm was completed.

(28) בּוֹזֵרָה: according to Rashi, the people blessed the king on the eighth day, as it is written I Kings VIII, 66; according to R. Tam (l.c.) this refers to the special mention of Shemini ‘Azereth in the Grace after meals and in the ‘Amidah (v. Glos.); cf. Suk. 47a.
I.e., Shemini ‘Azereth is a continuation of Sukkoth, and if the private offerings due on the first could not be brought till the eighth day, they may still be offered up then.

V. p. 43. Since in regard to making good the offerings the eighth day is an essential part of Sukkoth, then the question (p. 111). Why not compare Pentecost with Sukkoth instead of Passover, still stands.

A popular proverb meaning that one can make sure of a little, but not of much, i.e., when one is confronted, as in our case, with two possibilities, one greater than the other, the smaller should be chosen for safety, for it is bound to be right in so far as it is included in the greater: thus we cannot go wrong by comparing Pentecost with the seven days of Passover, but we may err in comparing it with the eight of Tabernacles. For the proverb cf. ‘every one who adds, lessens’ (Talmud) and the French, ‘qui trop embrasse mal etreint’.

If it is not to teach us about Pentecost, it seems superfluous, for it has already been mentioned elsewhere; and it is a rule that nothing in the Torah is redundant.

Talmud - Mas. Chagigah 17b

— It is written: And thou shalt turn in the morning, and go into thy tents.¹

We have learnt: IF THE FEAST OF WEEKS FALL ON A FRIDAY, BETH SHAMMAI SAY: THE DAY FOR SLAUGHTER IS AFTER THE SABBATH. AND BETH HILLEL SAY: IT HAS NO DAY FOR SLAUGHTER. Surely [this means that it has no day for slaughter at all]¹² — No, [it means] that it does not require a [special] day for slaughter.³ But what then does it teach us, that we can offer up [the sacrifice] on its proper day?⁴ Behold they already dispute thereon once; for we have learnt: Beth Shammasi say: Peace-offerings may be brought [on the Festival-day] and the hands not laid thereon; but not burnt-offerings. And Beth Hillel say: Both peace-offerings and burnt-offerings may be brought, and the hands laid thereon!⁵ — [Both statements are] required. For if [the Mishnah] had taught us [only that they differ] in the [latter] case,⁶ [I might have thought] in that case [only] Beth Shammasi hold this view, because it is possible [to bring the offerings] on the following day: but in the [former] case,⁷ I might have thought that they agreed with Beth Hillel.⁸ And if [the Mishnah] had taught us [only that they differ] in the [former] case, [I might have thought] in this case [only] Beth Hillel hold this view, because it is not possible [to bring the offering] on the following day; but in the [latter] case, I might have thought that they agree with Beth Shammasi.⁹ [Therefore both statements are] required.

Come and hear: He who does not bring his festal-offering during the seven days of Passover, or the eight days of Tabernacles, or on the first¹⁰ festival-day of the Feast of Weeks, can no longer bring his offering. This must surely mean on the festival-day [proper] of the Feast of Weeks!¹¹ — No, [it means] on the day for the slaughter.¹² If so, let us conclude therefrom that there is [only] one day for slaughter!¹³ — Read, ‘on the days for slaughter’¹⁴

Come and hear: Rabbah b. Samuel learnt: Count the days,¹⁵ and sanctify the New Moon Day;¹⁶ Count the days,¹⁷ and sanctity the Feast of Weeks.¹⁸ Just as the New Moon Festival belongs to its class [of days] by which it is determined,¹⁹ so the Feast of Weeks belongs to its class²⁰ by which it is determined. Surely [then the Feast of Weeks] is compared with the New Moon Festival because just as [the offerings of] the New Moon Festival [are to brought] on one day, so too [the offerings of] the Feast of Weeks [are to be brought] on one day!²¹ — Raba answered: How can you think so? Do we then count for the Feast of Weeks [only] the days and not the weeks? Behold Abaye said: It is a precept to count the days,²² for it is written: Ye shall number fifty days;²³ and it is a precept to count the weeks,²⁴ for it is written: Seven weeks shalt thou number unto thee.²⁵ Furthermore, it is written: The Feast of Weeks.²⁶

The School of R. Eleazar b. Jacob taught.²⁷ Scripture says: And ye shall make proclamation,²⁸ and And when ye reap.²⁹ Which is the Feast on which you proclaim and reap? You must say: It is the Feast of Weeks.

[Now] when? Should one say on the Festival-day [itself], is reaping then permitted on the Festival-day? It must refer, therefore, to [the period after the Feast] when the offerings can still be made good.

Now although the statement of R. Eleazar in the name of R. Oshaia has been quoted, [the teaching] of R. Eliezer b. Jacob is also required. For if we had [only] the statement of R. Eleazar in the name of R. Oshaia, I might say: Just as [in the period] during which the offering can be made good in the case of the Feast of Unleavened Bread, it is forbidden to do work, so too [in the period] during which the offering can be made good in the case of the Feast of Weeks, it is forbidden to do work; therefore we are told the teaching of R. Eliezer b. Jacob. And if we had [only] the teaching of R. Eliezer b. Jacob

(1) Deut. XVI, 7. But the preceding night must be spent in Jerusalem.
(2) I.e., if the sacrifice was not offered up on the festival-day, it cannot be made good later. This contradicts R. Oshaia's statement, p. 111.
(3) Since the offering can be brought on the festival-day; but actually the offering can be made good throughout seven days, as R. Oshaia taught.
(4) I.e., on the festival itself, that is, according to Beth Hillel.
(5) In view of this statement of the point at issue between Beth Shammai and Beth Hillel at the beginning of the Mishnah, why does the Mishnah teach us later that they differ in regard to Pentecost which fell on a Friday, if the point of dispute, according to the interpretation just given, is exactly the same?
(6) I.e., where a Festival does not fall on a Friday.
(7) I.e., where Pentecost falls on a Friday.
(8) Because, since the sacrifice could not be offered up the following day, which was the Sabbath, and consequently would have to be left over till the Sunday, there was the danger that the pilgrim might neglect to bring it altogether.
(9) Because it was possible to bring the offering the following day, and negligence, therefore, need not be feared.
(10) [Omitted in MS.M.]
(11) Thus the offerings of Pentecost cannot be made good after the festival, which refutes R. Oshaia.
(12) The festival sacrifices, therefore, can be made good on the day for slaughter; thus the objection against R. Oshaia's statement falls away.
(13) Whereas R. Oshaia argued that the Pentecost sacrifices could be made good throughout seven days.
(14) The plural could include seven days.
(15) The Torah nowhere actually enjoins the counting of the days of each month: the expression is an instance of Midrashic licence. The Hebrew months, being lunar, vary in length from twenty-nine to thirty days (v. J.E. s. Calendar).
(16) By the offering of 'additional sacrifices' (v. Num. XXVIII, 11-15).
(17) I.e., fifty, v. infra, n. 8.
(18) By offering the festival sacrifices.
(19) Lit., 'belongs to its numbered ones, i.e., it is determined by numbering units of days, on one of which it falls.
(20) I.e., the period during which the festival sacrifices can be brought is equal to the class or unit by which it is determined. If the latter is a week, the sacrificial-period is a week; if it is a day, the offering-period is also a day; cf.R.H., Sonc.ed., p. 14, nn. 10 and 11.
(21) This would contradict the view that the Pentecost sacrifices can be made good the whole week.
(22) In order that we may sanctify the Feast of Weeks on the fiftieth day (Tosaf.).
(23) Lev. XXIII, 16.
(24) To teach us that the period in which the festival sacrifices may be made good is a full week.
(26) Ibid. v. 10.
(27) I.e., derived the post-festal sacrificial period of the Feast of Weeks in the following way.
(28) Lev. XXIII, 21. I.e., proclaim a holy convocation or festival.
(29) Ibid, v. 22.
(30) To which the Biblical passage refers.
(31) Which supports R. Oshaia.

Talmud - Mas. Chagigah 18a

, I would not know how many [days]; therefore we are told the statement of R. Eleazar In the name of R. Oshaia.

Resh Lakish said: [It is written]: And the Feast of Harvest. Which is the Feast on which you feast and harvest? You must say: It is the Feast of Weeks. [Now] when? Should one say on the festival-day [itself]? Is reaping then permitted on the festival-day? It must refer, therefore, to [the period after the Feast] when the offerings can still be made good. Said R. Johanan [to him]: Now accordingly, [since it is written], the Feast of Ingathering [one can likewise argue thus]: ‘Which is the Feast on which there is ingathering? You must say: It is the Feast of Tabernacles. When? Should one say on the festival-day [itself]. is work then permitted on a festival-day! It must refer, therefore, to the mid-festival days’. But is [work] then permitted on the mid-festival days? It must mean, therefore, the Feast that comes at the season of ingathering. Similarly here [it means] the Feast that comes at the season of reaping.

It follows therefore that both are of the opinion that on the mid-festival days it is forbidden to do work. Whence is this derived? — For our Rabbis taught: The Feast of Unleavened Bread shalt thou keep; seven days. This teaches concerning the mid-festival days that work thereon is forbidden: this is the view of R. Josiah. R. Jonathan says: This is unnecessary. [It can be proved by] an argument a minore ad majus. If on the first and seventh days, which have no sanctity before or after them, work is forbidden, how much more so is it right that work should be forbidden on the mid-festival days, which have sanctity before and after them. — But the six working days disprove [this argument] for they have sanctity before them and after them, and yet work thereon is permitted! — [No], whereas [this applies] to the six working days which have no additional sacrifice, can you say [the same] of the mid-festival days which have an additional sacrifice? — But the New Moon Day disproves this [argument]; for it has additional sacrifices, and yet work thereon is permitted! — [No], whereas [this applies] to the New Moon Day which is not called a ‘holy convocation’, can you say [the same] of the mid-festival days which are called ‘holy convocation’? Since it is called ‘holy convocation’ it is only right that work thereon should be forbidden.

Another [Baraitha] taught: Ye shall do no matter of servile work — this teaches that it is forbidden to do work on mid-festival days: this is the view of R. Jose the Galilean. R. Akiba says: This is unnecessary. It is said: These are the appointed seasons of the Lord, etc. Whereof does the verse speak? If of the first day, behold it has already been said: Solemn rest. If of the seventh day, behold, it has already been said: Solemn rest. The verse, therefore, must speak only of the mid-festival days, to teach thee that it is forbidden to do work thereon.

Another [Baraitha] taught: Six days thou shalt eat unleavened bread; and on the seventh day shall be restraint unto to the Lord. Just as the seventh day is under restraint [in respect of work], so the six days are under restraint [in respect of work] — If [you should think that] just as the seventh day is under restraint in respect of all manner of work, so the six days are under restraint in respect of all manner of work; therefore Scripture teaches: ‘And on the seventh day shall be restraint [of work]’ — only the seventh day is under restraint in respect of all manner of work, but the six days are not under restraint in respect of all manner of work. Thus Scripture left it to the Sages to tell you on which day [work] is forbidden, and on which day it is permitted, which manner of work is forbidden, and which is permitted.
AND MOURNING AND FASTING ARE PERMITTED, IN ORDER NOT TO CONFIRM THE VIEW OF THOSE WHO SAY THAT THE FESTIVAL OF WEEKS [INVARIBLY] FOLLOWS THE SABBATH: But behold it is taught: 28 It happened that Alexa 29 died at Lod, and all Israel assembled to mourn for him, but R. Tarfon did not permit them, because it was the festival-day of the Feast of Weeks. [Now] can you possibly suppose that it was [actually] the festival day? How could they come on the festival-day? You must say, therefore, because it was the day for slaughter — There is no contradiction: in the one case 30 the festival-day [of the Feast of Weeks] fell after the Sabbath; 32 in the other case, 33 the festival-day fell on the Sabbath. 34

(1) Sc. are allowed for making good the offerings of the Feast of Weeks.
(2) Ex. XXIII, 16.
(3) Ibid. and XXXIV, 22.
(4) Lit., ‘the profane part of the festival’, i.e., the six half-festive days between the first day of Tabernacles, which is a festival-day proper, and the Eighth Day of Solemn Assembly, which is likewise a festival-day. The same term applies also to the five intermediate days of Passover. This period would correspond to that after the Feast of Weeks when the offerings can still be made good.
(5) And not, as Resh Lakish would have it, a festival time at which feasting and reaping are combined.
(6) Since Resh Lakish does not object to R. Johanan's statement regarding the prohibition of work on the mid-festival days, it follows that he must agree.
(7) Ex. XXIII, 15.
(8) ‘Keep’ is taken invariably to imply prohibition of work. By connecting the words ‘seven days’ with the verb ‘keep’, the prohibition is extended to the mid-festival days.
(9) I.e., the verse is not needed for the proof.
(10) I.e., holy days.
(11) Lit., ‘six days of the beginning of (creation)’; cf Ex. XX, 9-11.
(12) Lit., ‘prove’ sc. the contrary.
(13) I.e., the Sabbath.
(14) V. Num. XXVIII, 19-24, and XXIX, 13-16.
(15) V. Lev. XXIII, and Num. XXVIII and XXIX. ‘Holy’ implies the prohibition of work.
(16) Lev. XXIII, 7.
(17) This teaching is deduced by connecting the end of v. 7 with the words ‘seven days’ in the following verse.
(18) Ibid. v. 4 and 37.
(20) V. next note. The reading should be emended to the ‘eighth day’ (v. R. Hananel a.I.), for nowhere is the term ‘solemn rest’ applied to the seventh day of a festival.
(21) Ibid.
(22) E.V. ‘a solemn assembly’!
(23) Deut. XVI, 8.
(24) For the verse concludes: ‘Thou shalt do no work therein’.
(25) I.e., since the verse indicates only that the prohibition of work does not apply uniformly to all the days of the festival, it must be the intention of Scripture to let the Sages decide how the prohibition did apply.
(26) I. e., which day is a festival day proper, and which only a mid-festival day. For the fixings of the calendar, V. J.E. vol. III, pp. 498f.
(27) I.e., on mid-festival days: work which could not be postponed without incurring irretrievable loss was permitted.
(28) This is the correct reading viz., נקחנהתיי (‘it is taught’ by the Tannaim), not נקחנהתיי (‘it is stated’ by the Amoraim).
(29) Abbreviated form of the name Alexander. (12) Lydda in South Palestine (Roman name, Diospolis).
(30) Thus R. Tarfon forbade mourning on the slaughtering day, which contradicts the Mishnah.
(31) I.e., the case of Alexa.
(32) I.e., in the middle of the week, so that the slaughtering day was not on a Sunday. Mourning, therefore, was prohibited in accordance with regular Jewish law.
(33) I.e., that of the Mishnah.
Consequently the slaughtering day was on a Sunday, and, therefore, as a demonstration against the erroneous view of the Sadducees, the ordinary rule prohibiting mourning on the slaughtering day was waived.

Talmud - Mas. Chagigah 18b

MISHNAH. THE HANDS HAVE TO BE RINSED¹ FOR [EATING] UNCONSECRATED [FOOD],² AND [SECOND] TITHE,³ AND FOR TERUMAH [HEAVE-OFFERING];⁴ BUT FOR HALLOWED THINGS⁵ [THE HANDS] HAVE TO BE IMMERSED.⁶ IN REGARD TO THE [WATER OF] PURIFICATION,⁷ IF ONE'S HANDS BECAME DEFILED, ONE'S [WHOLE] BODY IS DEEMED DEFILED.⁸ IF ONE BATHED⁹ FOR UNCONSECRATED [FOOD], AND INTENDED TO BE RENDERED FIT SOLELY¹⁰ FOR UNCONSECRATED [FOOD], ONE IS PROHIBITED FROM [PARTAKING OF SECOND] TITHE.¹¹ IF ONE BATHED FOR [SECOND] TITHE, AND INTENDED TO BE RENDERED FIT SOLELY FOR [SECOND] TITHE, ONE IS PROHIBITED FROM [PARTAKING OF] TERUMAH. IF ONE BATHED FOR TERUMAH, AND INTENDED TO BE RENDERED FIT SOLELY FOR TERUMAH, ONE IS PROHIBITED FROM [PARTAKING OF] HALLOWED THINGS. IF ONE BATHED FOR HALLOWED THINGS, AND INTENDED TO BE RENDERED FIT SOLELY FOR HALLOWED THINGS ONE IS PROHIBITED FROM [TOUCHING THE WATERS OF] PURIFICATION. IF ONE BATHED FOR SOMETHING POSSESSING A STRICHER [DEGREE OF SANCTITY], ONE IS PERMITTED [TO HAVE CONTACT WITH] SOMETHING POSSESSING A LIGHTER [DEGREE OF SANCTITY]. IF ONE BATHED BUT WITHOUT SPECIAL INTENTION,¹² IT IS AS THOUGH ONE HAD NOT BATHED. THE GARMENTS OF AN AM HA-AREZ¹³ POSSESS MIDRAS¹⁴ -UNCLEANNESS FOR PHARISEES;¹⁵ THE GARMENTS OF PHARISEES POSSESS MIDRAS-UNCLEANNESS FOR THOSE WHO EAT TERUMAH; THE GARMENTS OF THOSE WHO EAT TERUMAH POSSESS MIDRAS-UNCLEANNESS FOR [THOSE WHO EAT] HALLOWED THINGS; THE GARMENTS OF [THOSE

it yet does not render the person fit to eat food possessing any degree of sanctity. Similarly, in the cases that follow, intention for one degree of sanctity does not enable one to partake of food having a higher degree of sanctity. WHO EAT] HALLOWED THINGS POSSESS MIDRAS — UNCLEANNESS FOR [THOSE WHO OCCUPY THEMSELVES WITH THE WATERS OF] PURIFICATION. JOSE B. JO'EZER¹⁶ WAS THE MOST PIOUS IN THE PRIESTHOOD, YET HIS APRON WAS [CONSIDERED TO POSSESS] MIDRAS-UNCLEANNESS FOR [THOSE WHO ATE] HALLOWED THINGS. JOHANAN B. GUDGADA USED ALL HIS LIFE TO EAT [UNCONSECRATED FOOD] IN ACCORDANCE WITH THE PURITY REQUIRED FOR HALLOWED THINGS, YET HIS APRON WAS [CONSIDERED TO POSSESS] MIDRAS-UNCLEANNESS FOR [THOSE WHO OCCUPIED THEMSELVES WITH THE WATER OF] PURIFICATION.

GEMARA. Do unconsecrated food and [Second] Tithe then require rinsing of the hands? Now we can show this to conflict with [the following Mishnah]: For terumah and first fruits¹⁷ one may incur the penalty of death,¹⁸ or [a fine of] an [added] fifth,¹⁹ and they are prohibited to non-priests²⁰ and they are the property of the priest,²¹ and are neutralized in one hundred and one [parts],²² and require rinsing of the hands,²³ and sunset;²⁴ these [rules] apply to terumah and first fruits but not to [Second] Tithe.²⁵ How much less then to unconsecrated food. Thus there is a contradiction in regard to [Second] Tithe and a contradiction also in regard to unconsecrated food! Granted that in regard to [Second] Tithe [it can be shown that] there is no contradiction: the one [Mishnah]²⁶ is according to R. Meir and the other is according to the Rabbis. For we have learnt: Whosoever requires immersion by enactment of the Scribes²⁷ defiles hallowed things²⁸ and invalidates terumah,²⁹ but is permitted³⁰ [to eat] unconsecrated food and [Second] Tithe — this is the view of R. Meir; but the Sages prohibit in the case of [Second] Tithe. In regard to unconsecrated food, however, there is a contradiction! — There is no contradiction: the one case³¹ refers to eating [unconsecrated food] and the other to touching [it]. To this R. Shimi b. Ashi demurred: The Rabbis differ from R. Meir only in regard to the eating of [Second] Tithe, but in regard to the touching of [Second] Tithe and the eating of unconsecrated food they do not differ! — Both [Mishnahs], therefore, must refer to eating; but there is no contradiction: the one refers to the eating of bread, the other refers to the eating of fruit. For R. Nahman said: Whosoever rinses his hands for fruit belongs to the haughty of spirit.

Our Rabbis taught: He who raises his hands, if he did so with intention his hands are clean; but if he did so without intention, his hands are unclean. Similarly one who bathes his hands, if he did so with intention, his hands are clean, but if he did so without intention his hands are unclean. — But behold it is taught: Whether he did it with intention or without intention, his hands are clean! — R. Nahman answered: There is no contradiction: the one refers to unconsecrated food,
E.g., if one se'ah of terumah fell into one hundred se'ahs of unconsecrated produce making one hundred and one in all, any one se'ah may be taken out and given to a priest and the rest is permitted to a non-priest. But if there are not at least one hundred se'ahs of terumah the whole produce becomes prohibited to non-priests.

The hands are considered, by Rabbinic enactment, to suffer levitical impurity in the second degree, and therefore, unless washed, can invalidate terumah by defiling it with impurity in the third degree.

Here the Mishnah ends, excluding explicitly from the above rules, which include the rinsing of the hands, Second Tithe and also by obvious implication — as the Gemara goes on to point out — ordinary food.

I.e., although ritually clean from the point of view of the Biblical law. This category includes those who eat or drink what is unclean; vessels that have touched unclean liquids; and the hands: these are all unclean in the second degree. V. Zab. V, 12 and Shab. 14b.

Being impure in the second degree he is able to impart impurity to hallowed things in the third degree: in turn the hallowed things are capable of disqualifying in the fourth degree.

The terumah becomes itself disqualified but cannot disqualify anything else.

This positive expression (as opposed to the negative formula ‘but does not disqualify’) implies permission to eat as well as touch,

I.e., our Mishnah, which requires rinsing of the hands for ordinary food.

V. supra, n. 6; similarly the phrase, ‘but the Sages prohibit’, refers only to eating Second Tithe but not to touching it. But regarding unconsecrated food there is no dispute: even the Sages agree that it may be eaten without rinsing of the hands. The original question, therefore, remains: the Mishnahs contradict one another!

Our own Mishnah, which requires rinsing of the hands for unconsecrated food.

The second Mishnah quoted, which excepts Second Tithe (and consequently unconsecrated food) from rinsing of the hands and the other regulations applying to terumah and first fruits.

I.e., is affectedly or ostentatiously scrupulous.

Cf. our Mishnah p. 120, n. 1.

I.e., in a ritual bath containing at least forty se'ahs of water: this represents a higher degree of purification.

I.e., the second Baraitha, which does not require intention.

the other to [Second] Tithe. — And whence do you infer that unconsecrated food does not require intention? — For we have learnt: If a wave was sundered [from the sea] and contained forty se'ahs and it fell upon a person or upon vessels [that were unclean], they become clean. Thus a person is likened to vessels: just as vessels have no intention so too [the Mishnah] speaks of a person who had no intention. But why so? Perhaps we are dealing with a case where one was sitting and waiting for the wave to become sundered, and so vessels are likened to a person; just as a person is capable of intention, so too in the case of the vessels one had intention with regard to them! And should you say: If it is a case of one who sits and waits [for the wave to be sundered], what need is there to teach it? — I will answer: You might have thought it should be prohibited, as a preventive measure, [to bathe in a detached wave] lest one come to battle in a torrent of rainwater, or that we ought to prohibit, as a preventive measure, [immersion in] the ends of the wave because one may not immerse in the air.

Rather [is it to be inferred] from that which we have learnt: If produce fell into a channel of water, and one whose hands were unclean put out [his hands] and took it, his hands became clean and [the law], if [water] be put on, does not apply to the produce; but if [he did so] in order that his hands should be rinsed, his hands become clean, but [the law], ‘If [water] be put on’, applies to the produce.
Rabbah put an objection to R. Nahman: IF ONE BATHED FOR UNCONSECRATED [FOOD], AND INTENDED TO BE RENDERED FIT SOLELY FOR UNCONSECRATED [FOOD], ONE IS PROHIBITED FROM [PARTAKING OF SECOND] TITHE.16 [Thus] if one intended to be rendered fit [therefor], One may [eat unconsecrated food], but if one did not intend to be rendered fit [therefor], one may not [eat unconsecrated food]!17 — This is the meaning: Even though one had intention for unconsecrated, one is still prohibited from [partaking of Second] Tithe.18

He put [another] objection to him: IF ONE BATHED, BUT WITHOUT SPECIAL INTENTION, IT IS AS THOUGH ONE HAD NOT BATHED. Surely it means that he is as though he had not bathed at all!19 — No, [it means that] he is as though he had not bathed for [Second] Tithe, but did bathe for unconsecrated food. He20 thought [at first] that he21 was merely putting him off,22 [but] he went forth, examined [the matter] and found that it is taught: If one bathed, but without special intention, one is prohibited [from partaking of Second] Tithe, but one is permitted [to partake of] unconsecrated [food].

R. Eleazar said: If a man bathed and came up,23 he may intend to be rendered fit for whatever he pleases. An objection was raised: If he still has one foot in the water, and he had intended to be rendered fit for something of lesser [sanctity], he may extend to be rendered fit for something of higher [sanctity]; but once he has come up he can no longer have intention. Surely [it means that] he can no longer have any intention at all!24 — No, [it means that] if he still [has one foot in the water] even though he intended to render himself fit [for a lesser degree of sanctity], he may still intend to render himself [fit for a higher degree of sanctity];25 but once he has come up, if he had no intention to be rendered fit [for anything at all], he may now intend to be rendered fit, but if he had intention to be rendered fit [for any particular degree of sanctity] he may no longer intend to be rendered fit [for any higher degree of sanctity].26 — Who is the author of the teaching: ‘If he still has one foot in the water etc.’?27 R. Pedath said: It is according to R. Judah. For we have learnt: If an immersion pool was measured and found to contain exactly forty se’ahs [of water], and two persons went down and immersed themselves therein one after the other, the first person is clean, but the second is unclean.28 R. Judah said: If the feet of the first person were [still] touching the water [when the second person immersed himself] the second person is also clean.29 R. Nahman said that Rabbi b. Abbuha said: The dispute concerns [only] the Rabbinical degrees [of purity],30 but in a case of purification from [real] uncleanness,31 all would agree that the second person remains unclean. This then is in agreement with the view of R. Pedath.32 Another version is: R. Nahman said that Rabbi b. Abbuha said: The dispute concerns purification from [real] uncleanness, but in regard to the Rabbinical degrees [of purity], all would agree that the second person too becomes clean. Thus he differs from the view of R. Pedath.33

‘Ulla said: I asked R. Johanan: According to R. Judah, is it permissible to immerse needles and hooks in the [wet] head of the first [bather]?34 Does R. Judah accept [only] the principle of connecting downward,35 but not of connecting upward;36 or, perhaps, R. Judah accepts the principle of connecting upward as well? — He replied: Ye have learnt it; If a wady has three depressions, one at the top, one at the bottom and one in the middle, the one at the top and the one at the bottom containing twenty se'ahs each and the middle one forty se'ahs, and a torrent of rainwater passes between them,37 R. Judah says: Meir used to say: One may immerse in the top one.38

(1) On immersion.
(2) The minimum quantity required for ritual immersion. For se'ah, v. Glos.
(3) On being immersed.
(4) I.e., since the immersion was intentional, the case is ritually quite normal and requires no specific mention.
(5) Rashi gives two reasons for the unsuitability of a torrent of rainwater, containing forty se'ahs, for ritual immersion; (a) since the water flows down a steep incline, the forty se'ahs cannot be regarded as being in one place or connected (v. Toh. VIII, 9), and consequently the bather does not immerse himself in forty se'ahs of water at one and the same time;
(b) rain-water can be used for immersion only in the form of a stagnant pool but not when it forms a flowing current (v. Supra to Lev. XI, 36).

(6) Lit., ‘heads’ i.e., the lower part of the wave as it reaches the ground.

(7) Lit., ‘arches, bows’ i.e., caps of a wave, billow-crests, surf.

(8) Though the ends of the wave have touched the ground, the crest of the wave is regarded as still being suspended in the air, and consequently may not be used for immersion, for no immersion may take place in the air.

(9) That no intention is required for unconsecrated food.

(10) Though the person's intention was solely to take out the produce and not to purify the hands. Thus it is seen that unconsecrated food does not require intention.

(11) Lev. XI, 38.

(12) I.e., the produce does not become, through contact with the water, susceptible to defilement in accordance with law referred to in the verse. Only when the owner is pleased with the wetting of the produce does it become susceptible to defilement (v. Kid. 59b), which is not the case here. The Mishnah text (Maksh. IV, 7) reads ‘are clean’ for ‘the law, "If water be put on", does not apply to the produce’.

(13) The Mishnah text reads: ‘he purposed, intended’ for ‘in order that’.

(14) Since he took the produce out of the water with the purpose of cleansing his hands, it is clear that he is pleased with the wetting of the produce, for he benefits by it; consequently, the produce becomes susceptible henceforward to defilement.

(15) Var. lec. Raba.

(16) The Hebrew here is identical with the Mishnayoth version, which differs very slightly from our own Mishnah reading.

(17) This shows, apparently, that intention is required even for unconsecrated food.

(18) But actually unconsecrated food does not require intention.

(19) I.e., he is not rendered fit even for unconsecrated food.

(20) I.e., Rabbah.

(21) I.e., R. Nahman.

(22) I.e., with casuistical arguments, which, in point of fact, were untrue.

(23) I.e., left the water completely. Some texts known to Tosaf. actually added the words, ‘and is still wet’; but in any case it has to be understood in this sense.

(24) I.e., no new intention of his is of any effect.

(25) I.e., he may now decide for which degree of sanctity he wishes the immersion to serve.

(26) For with the completion of immersion the first intention becomes effective.

(27) V. p. 125 (end).

(28) Inevitably some water clings to the body of the first bather; consequently the second bather immerses himself in less than the prescribed minimum of forty se'ahs of water.

(29) On the principle that the water connects downward’ (v. p. 127. n. 2), i.e., since the feet of the first bather are still in the immersion pool, the water on his body is regarded as forming part of the water in the pool, thus helping to restore the required volume of forty se'ahs.

(30) I.e., between R. Judah and the Rabbis.

(31) E.g., the specific degrees of purity discussed in our Mishnah.

(32) I.e., defilement according to the law of the Torah.

(33) Who explains the Baraitha, ‘If he still has one foot etc.’ to be according to R. Judah and not the Rabbis: thus he holds that the Rabbis reject the principle of ‘connecting downward’ even in regard to the Rabbinical degrees of purity, for the whole question of intention in regard to any specific degree of purity is based on Rabbinic enactment.

(34) For according to R. Nahman, the Baraitha ‘If he still has one foot etc.’, represents the view of the Rabbis as well as of R. Judah, for he holds that in regard to the Rabbinical degrees of purity, the Rabbis agree with R. Judah in accepting the principle of ‘connecting downward’.

(35) Whilst he is still in the water.

(36) Lit., ‘stretch, bring down’.

(37) I.e., does R. Judah accept the principle of connecting only in the downward direction, as in the case of the two bathers above, where the water on the body of the first bather is regarded as connected with the water in the pool; but not in the upward direction, so that the water in the pool should be considered as connected with the water on the bather's head, and thus enable needles etc. to be purified in the water clinging to the bather's head.

(38) Thus connecting them.

(39) And, of course, in the bottom one; for those who hold the principle of ‘connecting upward’, certainly accept the principle of ‘connecting downward’. Since R. Judah quoted R. Meir's view without contradicting it, the presumption is that he concurs in it. This explanation follows Rashi's text and interpretation. For a different reading and explanation v. Tosaf. s. י"ב

Talmud - Mas. Chagigah 19b

— But it is taught: R. Judah said: Meir used to say: One may immerse in the top one, but I say: [One may immerse only] in the bottom one, but not in the top one! He replied: If it is [expressly] taught, it is taught. 2

IF ONE BATHED FOR UNCONSECRATED [FOOD] AND INTENDED TO BE RENDERED FIT SOLELY FOR UNCONSECRATED [FOOD] etc. According to whom will our Mishnah be? — [Presumably] it is according to the Rabbis, who distinguish between unconsecrated [food] and [Second] Tithe. 3 — But [then] how will you understand the second part [of the Mishnah]? THE GARMENTS OF AN ‘AM HA-AREZ POSSESS MIDRAS-UNCLEANNESS FOR PHARISEES; THE GARMENTS OF PHARISEES POSSESS MIDRAS-UNCLEANNESS FOR THOSE WHO EAT TERUMAH; this will be according to R. Meir, who said that unconsecrated [food] and [Second] Tithe are [in this respect] the same. Thus the first part [of the Mishnah] will be according to the Rabbis and the second part according to R. Meir! — Indeed, the first part [of the Mishnah] is according to the Rabbis and the second part according to R. Meir. R. Ahab. Adda teaches [also] in the second part [of the Mishnah] five degrees and attributes it all to the Rabbis. R. Mari said: It follows that unconsecrated [food] which was prepared according to the purity of hallowed things is like hallowed things. Whence [is this to be inferred]? —

(1) I.e., R. Johanan.
(2) I.e., I am prepared to retract.
(3) V. p. 122 (‘For we have learnt: Whosoever requires... Tithe’).
(4) But not Second Tithe, which shows that it belongs to the same category as unconsecrated food.
(5) I.e., he adds those who eat Second Tithe, as representing a separate degree of purity, in between the Pharisees and those who eat terumah.
(6) A person who is accustomed to eat hallowed things would make it a rule to eat even unconsecrated food according to the purity required by hallowed things, so that his household should be well-trained in the vigilance necessary for the higher degree of purity.

Talmud - Mas. Chagigah 20a

From the fact that [the Mishnah] does not teach it as a [special] degree [of purity]. 1 — But perhaps the reason why [the Mishnah] does not teach it as a [special] degree of purity is because if it is like terumah, behold [the Mishnah] deals with terumah; and if it is like unconsecrated [food], behold [the Mishnah] deals with unconsecrated [food]! For it is taught: 3 Unconsecrated [food] which was prepared according to the purity of hallowed things is like unconsecrated [food]. R. Eleazar son of R. Zadok says: It is like terumah. — Rather [is it to be inferred] from the second part [of the Mishnah]. JOSE B. JO'EZER WAS THE MOST PIOUS IN THE PRIESTHOOD, YET HIS APRON WAS [CONSIDERED TO POSSESS] MIDRAS-UNCLEANNESS [FOR THOSE WHO ATE] HALLOWED THINGS. JOHANAN B. GUDGADA USED ALL HIS LIFE TO EAT [UNCONSECRATED FOOD] IN ACCORDANCE WITH THE PURITY REQUIRED FOR Hallowed THINGS, YET HIS APRON WAS [CONSIDERED TO POSSESS] MIDRAS-UNCLEANNESS FOR [THOSE WHO OCCUPIED THEMSELVES WITH THE WATER OF] PURIFICATION. [Only] for [those who occupied themselves with the water of] purification, but not for hallowed things; thus [the Mishnah] holds that unconsecrated [food] which was prepared according to the purity of hallowed things is like hallowed things.

R. Jonathan b. Eleazar said: If a man's wrap ⁴ fell from off him, and he said to his fellow, ⁵ ‘Give it to me’, and he gave it to him, it is unclean. ⁶ R. Jonathan b. Amram said: If by mistake a man put his Sabbath garments on instead of his weekday garments, they become unclean. ⁷ R. Eleazar b. Zadok said: Once two scholarly ⁸ women took one another's garments by mistake in the bathhouse, and the matter came before R. Akiba, and he declared them unclean. To this R. Oshaia demurred: If so, if a man stretched forth his hand to the basket with the intention of taking wheat bread and there came up in his hand barley bread, has it also become unclean? And should you say ‘It is so’; then behold it is taught: If one guards a jug on the assumption that it is [a jug] of wine, and it is found to be [a jug] of oil, it is clean so as not to defile! — But according to your reasoning, how do you understand the concluding clause [of the Baraitha]: But it may not be consumed? Why? — Said R. Jeremiah: It refers to a case where [the keeper] says: I guarded it against anything that might defile it, ⁹ but not against anything that might invalidate it. ¹⁰ But can anything be half-guarded? — Indeed; for it is taught: If a man stretched forth his hand into the basket with the intention of taking wheat bread and there came up in his hand barley bread, has it also become unclean? — Rabina said: It refers to a case where [the keeper] says: I guarded it [the shovel] against anything that might defile it, but not against anything that might invalidate it. ¹³ In any case, there is a contradiction! ¹⁴ And furthermore, Rabbah b. Abbuha raised an objection: Once a woman came before R. Ishmael and said to him: Master, I have woven this garment in purity, ¹⁵ but it was not in my mind to guard it in purity. ¹⁶ But as a result of the cross-examination to which R. Ishmael subjected her, she said to him: Master, a menstruous woman pulled the cord ¹⁸ with me. Said R. Ishmael: How great are the words of the Sages, who used to say: If one had the intention to guard a thing, it is clean; if one did not have the intention to guard it, it is unclean. There was another story of a woman who came before R. Ishmael. She said to him: Master, I wove this cloth in purity, but it was not in my mind to guard it. But as a result of the cross-examination to which R. Ishmael subjected her, she said to him: Master, a thread broke ¹⁹ and I tied it with my mouth. ²⁰ Said R. Ishmael: How great are the words of the Sages who used to say: If it is in one's mind to guard a thing it is clean; if it is not in one's mind to guard it, it is unclean. ²¹

Granted in regard to [the teaching of] R. Eleazar b. Zadok, [it can be explained that] each one [of the women] says [to herself]: ‘My companion is the wife of an ‘am ha-arez’; and [consequently] she takes her mind off it. In regard to [the teaching of] R. Jonathan b. Amram too [it can be explained that] since a man takes special care of Sabbath garments, ²¹ [it is as though] he took his mind off them. But in regard to [the teaching of] R. Jonathan b. Eleazar [it can be objected] that he could [still] guard it in the hand of his companion! — R. Johanan answered: It is a presumable certainty that one does not guard what is in the hand of his companion. — Indeed no?

(1) Viz. that the garments of Pharisees who eat unconsecrated food in ordinary purity possess midras-uncleanness for those who eat unconsecrated food according to the purity required by hallowed things. The omission of this category proves, according to R. Mari, that it belongs to the same degree of purity as hallowed things themselves, which are already mentioned in the Mishnah.

(2) I.e., the fact that unconsecrated food prepared according to the purity of hallowed things is not mentioned in the Mishnah as a separate degree of purity does not necessarily prove that it is like hallowed things. On the contrary, it may belong to one of the other degrees of purity specified in the Mishnah, such as ordinary unconsecrated food or terumah.

(3) I.e., we actually find Tannaim disputing as to whether it is like ordinary food or like terumah; but no one takes the view that it is like hallowed things.

(4) So Jast.; Levy, ‘Helle’; Goldschmidt, ‘Kopftuch’. Cf. ספרן (‘headband’) in I Kings XX, 38, 41, which belongs to the same root as our wordスーパーカラ, with interchange of א and י.
(5) I.e., one as observant of the laws of purity as himself (R. Hananel).

(6) Even though the person, who picked it up was clean, for we cannot assume that he took it upon himself to guard it from impurity whilst he handled it, since the owner did not inquire whether he was clean or not; nor can we say that the owner guarded it against defilement whilst it was not in his possession (v. R. Johanan's answer p. 131).

(7) This apparently teaches the principle that if a man guards something on the assumption that it is one thing and finds it to be another, it is unclean.

(8) ‘associates i.e., knowing and observing the Laws of purity. V. p. 120, n. 4.

(9) I.e., so that in turn it could make other things unclean.

(10) I.e., from being used, but would not make it capable of imparting impurity. This shows that although the keeper may be mistaken regarding the identity of the object guarded, his guarding nevertheless remains effective for the purpose intended, which, in this case, was that the oil should not be defiled.

(11) Although a vessel can defile food.

(12) Figs (Rashi).

(13) From being used at the outset in connection with clean foodstuffs. The shovel, being ‘a utensil’, can only be invalidated by unclean liquids (Tosaf). Rashi suggests, alternatively, that ‘it’ may refer to the food adhering to the shovel. — This Baraitha thus shows that a thing can be guarded ‘by half’.

(14) I.e., the statement in the Baraitha that the oil remains clean supports R. Oshaia and contradicts the view that a mistake in regard to the identity of an object serves to make it unclean.

(15) I.e., I know, as a matter of fact, that from the moment three fingers by three of cloth — the minimum area susceptible to defilement — were woven it was not made unclean.

(16) I.e., I did not actually intend to guard it against defilement.

(17) So that uncleanness may have been communicated through her shaking the web.

(18) Before she commenced to weave: the rules of uncleanness did not yet apply then.

(19) She had not yet purified herself by immersion from the impurity of her menstrual condition, so that her saliva possessed uncleanness in the first degree (אֲבַר רֶשֶׁם). Thus although to begin with the moistened thread could not affect the purity of the cloth (hence she paid no attention to it), nevertheless if the thread remained wet when the web was three fingers by three it would defile the cloth, although the woman had since purified herself by immersion. So Rashi; for another explanation v. Tosaf. s. v. יָד מִי.

(20) From all this, It is clear that the deciding factor in keeping an object clean is the intention to guard it against uncleanness; but it is not necessary to know the identity of the object guarded.

(21) Whereas he thought them to be his week-day clothes.

Talmud - Mas. Chagigah 20b

But behold it is taught: If a man's ass-drivers and workmen were laden with [levitically] clean goods, even if he withdrew from them more than a mil his clean goods remain clean. But if he said to them: Go ye, and I shall come after you, then as soon as they are hidden from his sight, his clean goods become unclean. — In what respect is the first case different from the second? R. Isaac Nappaha said: In the first case he purifies his ass-drivers and workmen for this purpose. — If so, [it applies to] the second case too! — An ‘am ha-arez does not mind another's touching. — If so, [it applies to] the first case too! — It is a case where [the master] can come upon them [suddenly] by a roundabout path. — If so [it applies to] the second case too! — Since he said to them, ‘Go ye, and I shall come after you’, their minds are at ease.

(1) Who belonged to the category of `am ha-arez.
(2) I.e., unbeknown, to them. A mil=two thousand cubits (Jast.).
(3) E.g., wine in earthenware jars.
(4) Because the men touch only the exterior of the vessels, which, being earthenware, are not defiled within by the contact of a defiling object on the outside (cf. Hul. 25a). The fear of their master who could arrive at any moment would deter the men from attempting to touch the contents of the vessels. This proves that, contrary to R. Johanan's statement, a man can guard what is in another's hand.
(5) Rashi prefers to delete this sentence. If it is retained, he interprets it as a continuation of the argument against R.
Johanan, thus: — If you contend that a man cannot guard what is in another person's hand, then why is the first case decided differently from the second? Tosaf., however, explains it as a rejoinder in defence of R. Johanan's teaching:
Granted that the first case of the Baraita seems to contradict R. Johanan, but how can the second case be explained otherwise than as a support? One must answer, therefore, with R. Isaac Nappaha, that the first case too does not really contradict R. Johanan, because the men were specially purified for the purpose.
(6) I.e., the smith.
(7) Consequently the goods remain clean; for even if the men touch the goods they cannot defile then,. But if the men had not been specially purified, R. Johanan's principle that one cannot guard what is in another's hand would hold good.
(8) I.e., though the workmen, being clean, cannot defile the goods, they might allow them to be defiled by other people touching them.
(9) I.e., the fear that he might come upon them by surprise would deter them from permitting a stranger to touch the goods.
(10) That he will not surprise them, and thus whatever they do will not be observed by their master.
(11) I.e., sacrificial flesh, mealofferings and drink-offerings.
(12) In the eleven cases (according to Raba), or ten (according to R. Ela), that follow. For further differences, v. the Mishnah pp. 119-121. The latter are not included in our Mishnah because (according to Tosaf. s.v. ד"ה) they do not involve the risk of an eventual violation of the law of purity (נפוג רבד).\textsuperscript{19}
(13) I.e., any articles susceptible to defilement. According to Rashi (a.l.), both the exterior and interior vessels are unclean; according to Tosaf. (22a, s.v. מ"ן) only the interior vessels re unclean.
(15) I.e., if these parts can be used separately they are regarded, in the case of terumah, as distinct utensils, so that if one of them becomes defiled the others remain unaffected. This rule applies, as the Gemara explains, only in the case of Rabbincal degrees of uncleanness, v. Kel. XXV, 6f
(16) In the case of hallowed things, if one part becomes defiled, the whole vessel is rendered unclean.
(17) E.g., if he wears the shoe of a gonorrhoeist. V. p. 120, n. 3.
(18) I.e., if the terumah is in an earthenware vessel, which he touches only from without. Cf. p. 132, nn. 1 and 2.
(19) V. p. 120, where the same statement is found.
(20) In respect of the law of יַרְדֵּנָם (‘Interposition, all intervening object’). Cf. ‘Er. 4a.
(21) Because they resemble an intervening object.
(22) Here the moisture is deemed to resemble an intervening object.
(23) i.e., from the moment that they reached the stage when they could be termed vessels, and consequently became susceptible to defilement, they were carefully guarded from uncleanness.
(24) If an unclean person touched one portion of hallowed food in a vessel, all the other pieces, although not in contact with it, are rendered equally unclean by the unifying effect of the vessel.
(25) In the case of terumah, the portion to touched by the unclean person contracts uncleanness at the first remove (v. infra n. 7); if another portion touches it, the second contracts uncleanness at the second remove, and any portion touching the latter suffers uncleanness at the third remove; the rest remain clean.
(26) But cannot, In turn, render anything else invalid.

Talmud - Mas. Chagigah 21a

A MOURNER [PRIOR TO THE BURIAL OF THE DECEASED],¹ AND ONE WHO NEEDS TO BRING HIS ATONEMENT SACRIFICE [IN ORDER TO COMPLETE HIS PURIFICATION]² REQUIRE IMMERSION FOR HALLOWED THINGS,³ BUT NOT FOR TERUMAH.⁴ GEMARA.

Why not in the case of hallowed things?⁵ R. Ela said: Because the weight of the [inner] vessel forms an interposition.⁶ — But since the latter clause [of the Mishnah] is based on [the rule of] interposition,⁷ For it is taught in the latter clause: THE RULE [FOR THE IMMERSION OF GARMENTS] FOR [THOSE WHO WOULD EAT OF] TERUMAH IS NOT LIKE THE RULE FOR [THOSE WHO WOULD EAT OF] HALLOWED THINGS: FOR IN THE CASE OF HALLOWED THINGS, HE MUST [FIRST] UNTIE [ANY KNOTS IN THE UNCLEAN GARMENT], DRY IT [IF IT IS WET, THEN] IMMERSE IT, AND AFTERWARDS RETIE IT; BUT IN THE CASE OF TERUMAH, IT MAY [FIRST] BE TIED AND AFTERWARDS IMMERSED! — Both the former clause and the latter clause are based on [the rule of] interposition, and they are both required. For if [the Mishnah] taught us the former clause [only], I might have thought that the reason why it is not [permitted to immerse vessels within vessels] for hallowed things is because of the weight of the vessel [which interposes], but in the latter clause where there is no weight of a vessel [to interpose], I might have thought that it would not be deemed an interposition even for hallowed things; and if [the Mishnah] taught us the latter clause, I might have thought that the reason why it is not [permitted] in the case of hallowed things is because ¹ Heb. יַרְדֵּנָם, opposed to קְטָנָה, a mourner during the week following the burial. It is assumed here that the mourner had not become defiled by the corpse.

² E.g., a gonorrhoeist who, after duly immersing himself on the seventh day of his uncleanness, has awaited sunset on that day, and now has only to bring his sacrifice on the morrow in order to complete his purification.
³ In the latter case after bringing the prescribed sacrifices.
Which may be eaten not only without immersion, but even before the sacrifices marking the completion of purification have been brought.

The question refers to the beginning of the Mishnah, i.e., why may not vessels within vessels be immersed for hallowed things just as for terumah?

The weight of the inner vessel prevents the water from reaching every part of the vessels, thus invalidating the immersion both of the outer and inner vessels. V. infra p. 139.

If the purpose of the two clauses is identical viz., to teach us that in the case of hallowed things even that which resembles interposition invalidates, but in the case of terumah only proper interposition, then the Mishnah should have contained one of the two clauses, not both.

Talmud - Mas. Chagigah 21b

a knot becomes tightened\(^1\) in water, but in [the case of] the former clause, where the water causes the vessel to float, it would not be deemed an interposition; therefore [both clauses] are required.\(^2\) R. Ela [in explaining the former clause to be based on the rule of interposition] is consistent in his view. For R. Ela said that R. Hanina b. Papa said: Ten distinctions [of hallowed things over terumah] are taught here.\(^3\) The former five apply both to hallowed things and to unconsecrated [food] prepared according to the purity of hallowed things: the latter [five] apply to hallowed things, but not to unconsecrated [food] prepared according to the purity of hallowed things. What is the reason? — The former five, which involve the risk of eventual violation of the law of Impurity according to the Torah,\(^4\) the Rabbis enacted both in regard to hallowed things and in regard to unconsecrated [food] prepared according to the purity of hallowed things. The latter [five], which do not involve the risk of the eventual violation of the law of purity according to the Torah, the Rabbis enacted in regard to hallowed things, but not in regard to unconsecrated [food] prepared according to the purity of hallowed things. Raba said: Since the latter clause is based on [the rule of] interposition, the former clause cannot be based on [the rule of] interposition; and as to the former clause, the reason is this: It is a Precautionary enactment so that one might not immerse needles and hooks in a vessel the mouth of which is not the size of the spout of a skin-bottle.\(^5\) As we have learnt: The union of immersion pools [requires a connecting stream]\(^6\) the size of the spout of a skin-bottle in breadth.

---

\(^1\) Thus approximating to interposition.

\(^2\) Actually the latter clause is required because it also contains the rule: ‘He must dry it (if it is wet)’. But this is not taken into account in our argument either because, (a) even if it were based on the principle of interposition it was held to follow from the first clause, or (b) it may be based not on the principle of interposition but on the fact that the original moisture could re-defile the garment and so render the Immersion useless.

\(^3\) Since eleven points of difference are actually mentioned in the Mishnah, two, according to It. Ela, must be clue to the same reason and hence are counted as one.

\(^4\) I.e., as opposed to Rabbinic degrees of purity. For an explanation of how this violation of the Torah law of purity can come about v. Rashi s.v. נזרע ; for a discussion of the latter five distinctions v. Tosaf. s.v. יבריו הכה.

\(^5\) In which case the immersion would be invalid, because the water in the vessel would not be regarded as connected with the water in the immersion pool, for the minimum size of the connecting stream (as explained in the following Mishnah) must be equivalent to the area of the tube of a skin-bottle.

\(^6\) I.e., two adjoining pools can be combined to make up the prescribed quantity of forty se'ahs of water if there is an aperture in between allowing a stream (of the size mentioned) to flow between them.

and in area, [namely, One in which] two fingers can make a complete revolution. Thus he [Raba] agrees with R. Nahman who said that Rabbah b. Abbuha said: Eleven distinctions are taught here: the former six apply both to hallowed things and to unconsecrated [food] which was prepared according to the purity of hallowed things; the latter [five] apply to the hallowed things, but not to unconsecrated [food] prepared according to the purity of hallowed things. What is [the practical difference] between [the explanations of] Raba and R. Ela? There is [a practical difference] between them [in the case of] a basket or a net\textsuperscript{1} which was filled with vessels and immersed. According to the view that [the former clause] is based on [the rule of] interposition, it applies [here too]; according to the view that [the former clause] is a Precautionary enactment lest one immerse needles and hooks in a vessel the mouth of which is not the size of the spout of a skin-bottle, [it does not apply here, because] there is no basket or net the mouth of which is not the size of a skin-bottle. Now Raba is consistent in his view. For Raba said: If one filled a basket or net with vessels and immersed them, they become clean;\textsuperscript{2} but if an immersion-pool be divided by a basket or net, then whoever immerses himself therein, his immersion is not effective,\textsuperscript{3} for the earth is wholly perforated,\textsuperscript{4} nevertheless we require that there should be forty se'ahs [of undrawn water] in one place. Now this applies only to a clean vessel,\textsuperscript{5} but [in the case of] an unclean vessel,\textsuperscript{6} since the immersion is effective for the entire vessel itself,\textsuperscript{7} it is effective also for the vessels which are in it. For we have learnt:\textsuperscript{8} If one filled vessels with vessels and immersed them, these [interior vessels also] become clean.\textsuperscript{9} But if he did not immerse [the outer vessel], then the water [in it] mingled [with the water of the immersion-pool] does not count as mingled unless [the water in the outer vessel and immersion-pool] are mingled [by a stream] the size of the spout of a skin-bottle.\textsuperscript{10} What is the meaning of ‘But if he did not immerse [the outer vessel] etc.’? — This is the meaning: But if he did not require to immerse [the outer vessel], then the water [in it] mingled [with the water of the immersion-pool] does not count as mingled unless [the water in the outer vessel and immersion-pool] are mingled [by a stream] the size of the spout of a skin-bottle. Now the point of difference between Raba and R. Ela\textsuperscript{12} is the subject of dispute between Tannaim. For it is taught: If a basket or net was filled with vessels and immersed, they become clear both for hallowed things and for terumah. Abba Saul says: For terumah, but not for hallowed things. If so, it should apply to terumah too!\textsuperscript{13} — For whom do we state this rule?\textsuperscript{14} For Associates.\textsuperscript{15} Associates know [the rules of immersion] very well. If so, it should apply to hallowed things too!\textsuperscript{16} — An ‘am ha-arez may see it and go and immerse [likewise]. In the case of terumah too an ‘am ha-arez may see it, and go and immerse [likewise]!\textsuperscript{17} — We do not accept it from him.\textsuperscript{18} Let us not accept hallowed things either from him! — He would bear animosity.\textsuperscript{19} In the case of terumah too he will bear animosity! — [In the case of terumah], he does not mind, for he can go and give it to his fellow, a priest, who is an ‘am ha-arez. And who is the Tanna who takes account of animosity? — It is R. Jose. For it is taught: R. Jose said: Wherefore are all trusted throughout the year in regard to the cleanness of the wine and oil [they bring for Temple Else]?\textsuperscript{20} It is in order that every one may not go and give and build a high place\textsuperscript{21} for himself, and burn a red heifer\textsuperscript{22} for himself. R. Papa said: According to whom is it that we accept nowadays the testimony of an ‘am ha-arez? According to whom? According to R. Jose.\textsuperscript{23} But should we not apprehend [the contingency] of borrowing [by an Associate]?\textsuperscript{24} For we have learnt: An earthenware vessel protects everything [therein from contracting uncleanness from a corpse that is under the same roof];\textsuperscript{26} so Beth hillel. Beth Shammai say: It protects only foodstuffs and liquids and [other] earthenware vessels.\textsuperscript{27} Said Beth Hillel to Beth Shammai: Wherefore? Beth Shammai answered: Because it is unclean on account of the ‘am ha arez,\textsuperscript{28} and an unclean vessel cannot interpose. Said Beth Hillel to them: But have ye not declared the foodstuffs and liquids therein clean? Beth Shammai answered: When we declared the foodstuffs and liquids therein clean, \textsuperscript{1} A wicker or network in the wine or oil Press (Jast.), used for straining; cf. A.Z. 56b.

\textsuperscript{2} Even for hallowed things.
\textsuperscript{3} For the requisite forty se'ahs of water are to be found in neither division, and though, through the meshes of the network, the water flows from one part of the pool to the other, this is not considered a proper connection for the reason that follows.
\textsuperscript{4} I.e., water flows through the hollows of the earth, and water appearing at any particular spot is bound to be connected underground to some big stream elsewhere, yet this connection is not valid, for we require (as the Gemara goes on to say) forty se'ahs of water in one place.
\textsuperscript{5} I.e., the rule that the immersion of an article in a vessel with all aperture less than the size of the mouth of a skin-bottle is invalid applies only if the outer vessel is clean, and consequently does not itself require immersion.
Which itself requires immersion.

Even if the vessel's mouth is less than the prescribed size, its interior is nevertheless purified by the water of the immersion-pool, for we argue that in the same manner as it became defiled so it is also purified.

Heb. יִתְחַלָל יֵשָׁע i.e., we have learnt in a Mishnah viz., Mi! VI, 2. But the Mishnah text differs somewhat from the quotation here, reading as follows: ‘If a bucket filled with vessels was in immersed, they (also) become clean; but if he did not immerse (the bucket), the water (in it) does not count as mingled unless etc.’. These var. lec. made R. Samson b. Abraham of Sens (in his commentary to Mik.) conclude that our quotation was not the actual Mishnah from Mik., but a Baraitha corresponding to it. Other var. lec. are ‘and immersed it’ for ‘and immersed them’, and ‘in the mingled water’ for ‘the mingled water’. Both R. Asher b. Jehiel and R. Abraham of Sens had the second reading, the latter referring the phrase specifically to the examples of ‘mingled waters’ enumerated in Mik. V, 6, the former explaining it more generally of all instances of reservoirs united by a connecting stream. The reacting ‘the water (in it) does not count as mingled’ is undoubtedly the smoothest.

I.e., irrespective of the size of the outer vessel's mouth. This immersion is valid for terumah only (v. the Mishnah p. 133).

I.e., unless the outer vessel's mouth is that size.

I.e., because it was leitically clean.

I.e., Raba explains the first clause of the Mishnah to be based on the rule that the unification of immersion-pools requires a connecting stream at least the size of a skin-bottle spout in thickness, and consequently articles immersed in a basket or net, the mouth of which is invariably large, can be used even for hallowed things in accordance with the first view in the Baraitha. R. Ela explains the same clause with reference to the rule of interposition, and consequently articles immersed in a basket or net, just as those immersed in any other receptacle, may be used only for terumah in accordance with Abba Saul.

Concerning the immersion of vessels within vessels, according to either explanation, should apply to terumah as well as hallowed things.

V. p. 120, n. 2. The ‘am ha-arez would not even wish to know the laws of immersion, let alone observe them.

I.e., if the Mishnah applies only to Associates, who observe all the laws meticulously, why are they not permitted to immerse vessels within vessels for hallowed things?

And as he cannot be trusted to observe properly the rules of immersion, the hallowed contents of the vessels would become defiled!

Terumah is accepted from an ‘am ha-arez only at the seasons of wine-presses and olive-vats (v.infra 24b, and Toh.IX, 4), when all purify their vessels Properly under associate supervision (according to Rashi). or when all are regarded for the time as Associates (according to Tosaf. s.v. נַעֲשֶׂה, cf. infra 26a).

For were they not Jews?

Wine for libations, oil for the preparation of meal-offerings.

When these were prohibited: v. J.E. vol. VI, pp. 387-389 (particularly the last section, p. 389, s. ‘Rabbinic attitude’).

V. Num. XIX, 2ff; cf. also R. Judah's statement (quoted in Tosaf. a.l. s. נַעֲשֶׂה, as R. Jose's) in Tosef. Hagigah III, that all are to be trusted to look after the ashes of the red heifer.

But not the other Rabbis; v. Pes. 42b.

I.e., should we not prohibit the immersion of vessels within vessels for terumah even by Associates, lest the ‘am ha-arez see it and do likewise (but without observing all the prescribed laws). and an Associate go and borrow the vessels from him?

I.e., that it is permitted to borrow vessels from an ‘am ha-arez.

I.e., if its lid is fixed on; or if the corpse is in a room below and the earthen vessel covers the hatchway between the lower room and the upper room, it protects everything in the upper chamber. Cf. Num. XIX, 15, and Oh. V, 3.

Kel. X, 1.

Being the vessel of an ‘am ha-arez, it is unclean to begin with, before ever it is placed over the hatching or articles are put in it.

Talmud - Mas. Chagigah 22b
we declared them clean [only] for [the ‘am ha-arez]. himself;¹ but should we [therefore] declare [also] the vessel clean, which would make it clean for thee as well as for him?² It is taught: R. Joshua said: I am ashamed of your words, O Beth Shammai! Is it possible that if a woman [in the upper chamber] kneads [dough] in a trough,³ the woman and the trough become unclean for seven days, but the dough remains clean; that if there is [in the upper room] a flask⁴ full of liquid, the flask contracts seven-day uncleanness, but the liquid remains clean!⁵ [Thereupon] one of the disciples of Beth Shammai joined him [in debate] and said to him: I will tell thee the reason of Beth Shammai. He replied, Tell then! So he said to him: Does all unclean vessel bar [the penetration of uncleanness] or not? He replied: It does not bar it. — Are the vessels of an ‘am ha-arez clean or unclean? He replied: Unclean. — And if thou sayest to him [that they are] unclean, will he pay any heed to thee? Nay, more, if thou sayest to him [that they are] unclean, he will reply: Mine are clean and thine are unclean.⁶ Now this is the reason of Beth Shammai. Forthwith, R. Joshua went and prostrated himself upon the graves of Beth Shammai. He said: I crave your pardon,⁷ bones of Beth Shammai. If your unexplained teachings are so [excellent], how much more so the explained teachings. It is said that all his days his teeth were black by reason of his fasts. Now it says, ‘For thee as well as for him’,⁸ accordingly we may borrow from them! — When we borrow [vessels] from them, we immerse them.⁹ If so, Beth Hillel could have replied to Beth Shammai: When we borrow [vessels] from them, we immerse them! — That which is rendered unclean by a corpse requires sprinkling on the third and seventh day,¹⁰ and people do not lend a vessel for seven days. — But are they not trusted in regard to immersion?¹¹ For behold it is taught: The ‘am ha-arez is trusted in regard to the purification by immersion of that which is rendered unclean by a corpse! Abaye answered: There is no contradiction: the one [teaching] refers to his body,¹² the other to his vessels. Raba answered: Both refer to his vessels; but there is no contradiction: the one refers to a case where he says: I have never immersed one vessel in another;¹³ the other refers to a case where he says: I have immersed [one vessel in another], but I have not immersed in a vessel the mouth of which is not the size of the spout of a skin-bottle. For it is taught: An ‘am ha-arez is believed if he says: The produce has not been rendered susceptible [to uncleanness],¹⁴ but he is not believed if he says: The produce has been rendered susceptible [to uncleanness], but it has not been made unclean.¹⁵ — But is he trusted in regard to his body? For behold it is taught: If an Associate comes to receive sprinkling,¹⁶ they at once sprinkle upon him; but if an ‘am ha-arez comes to receive sprinkling, they do not sprinkle upon him until he observes before us the third and seventh day! — Abaye answered: As a result of the stringency you impose upon him at the beginning,¹⁷ you make it easier for him, at the end.¹⁸ THE OUTSIDE AND THE INSIDE. What is meant by THE OUTSIDE AND THE INSIDE? — As we have learnt: If the outside of a vessel was rendered Unclean¹⁹ by [unclean] liquid,²⁰ [only] its outside becomes unclean; but the inside, rim, hanger²¹ and handles,²² remain clean. But if the inside became unclean,²³ the whole is unclean. AND HANDLE. What is meant by the HANDLE? Rab Judah said that Samuel said: The part by which one hands it; and thus it says: And they handed her parched corn.²⁶ R. Assi said that R. Johanan said: The part where the fastidious hold it. R. Bebai recited before R. Nahman: There is no differentiation [in the case of uncleanness] between the outside and the inside of any vessel,²⁸ be it [for] the hallowed things of the Sanctuary,²⁹ be it [for] the hallowed things of the provinces.³⁰ Said [the latter] to him: What is meant by ‘the hallowed things of the provinces’? Terumah. But we have learnt: THE OUTSIDE AND INSIDE AND HANDLE [ARE REGARDED AS SEPARATE] FOR TERUMAH! Perhaps you mean unconsecrated food prepared according to the purity of hallowed things. [Indeed], you have recalled something to my mind. For Rabbah b. Abbuhala³¹ said: Eleven distinctions are taught here [in our Mishnah]: the former six apply both to hallowed things and to unconsecrated [food] which was prepared according to the purity of hallowed things; the latter [five] apply to hallowed things, but not to unconsecrated [food] prepared according to the purity of hallowed things. HE THAT CARRIES ANYTHING POSSESSING MIDRAS-UNCLEANNESS MAY CARRY [AT THE SAME TIME] TERUMAH, BUT NOT HALLOWED THINGS. Why not hallowed things? — Because of a certain occurrence. For Rab Judah said that Samuel said: Once someone was conveying a jar of consecrated wine from one place to another.
The foodstuffs and liquids of an ‘am ha-arez are unclean; hence Associates would eschew them in any case.

I.e., all Associate may borrow the vessel of an ‘am ha-arez. The Mishnah text differs from our own in several details. The most important var. lec. is: ‘But when thou declarest the vessel clean, thou declarest it so for thyself as well as for him.’ The Mishnah then concludes: ‘Beth Hillel retracted and gave their ruling according to Beth Shammai

And the hatchway leading from it to the lower room in which the corpse is lying was covered by an earthen vessel.

Heb. אָלָלִית (the usual and correct form) of the Mishnah and MS.M.; larger than a בַּאָר (cup) and smaller than a בַּקֵּשָׁ (jug) — cf. Bez. 15b. Here, it would be made of metal or wood.

In accordance with your view that an earthenware vessel affords no protection to anything apart from foodstuffs, liquids and earthenwares. Cf. Oh. V, 4.

Because of the insufficiency of the ‘am ha-arez in regard to things which cannot be purified, e.g., foodstuffs and earthenware vessels (the latter have to be broken), therefore Beth Shammai declared them clean i.e., for the ‘am ha-arez, only; but vessels (like the trough and the flask) which can be purified by immersion are declared unclean, for the ‘am ha-arez will in such instance, where there is a remedy pay heed to Rabbinic injunction, and purify the vessels: so Rashi. But Tosaf. (s.v. לַכְתִּיב), holding the view that the ‘am ha-arez never conforms to Rabbinic ruling, explains the passage in the following lines: An Associate may never use food or drinks belonging to an ‘am ha-arez, for the latter does not observe the laws of purity; hence there is no need, in our case, to declare them impure, for they do not affect Associates. But immersible vessels may be borrowed from an ‘am ha-arez, for they can be purified by immersion; hence, In our case, they have to be declared unclean so that Associates should not use them without first purifying them.

Lit., ‘I humble myself to you’.

V. p. 141, and cf. n. 2.

Lest the ‘am ha-arez immersed them in a vessel, without observing the prescribed rules.

V. Num. XIX, 18ff.

For Associates we are told have to immerse any vessels borrowed from an ‘am ha-arez.

For which he is trusted.

In this case he is believed.

I.e., by being wetted; v. p. 124, nn. 6-9.

This shows that he could not be relied on in a matter which required scrupulous care, and similarly in regard to the regulation relating to the size of the mouth of the immersing vessel.

Declaring that he has duly waited the first three days. Sprinkling takes place on the third and seventh day after defilement by a corpse.

By not believing that he waited three days.

I.e., he is trusted in regard to the immersion following the sprinklings; for this he carries out with due care, as he is anxious to complete his purification.

Only in the case of vessels made of wood or metal can the outside be defiled: earthen vessels are rendered unclean only from the inside (v. Lev. XI, 33).

According to the laws of the Torah only ‘a father of uncleanness’ (v. p. 134, n. 7) can defile vessels; but the Rabbis enacted that all unclean liquids should defile vessels on account of fluid issuing from a gonorrhoeist, which is a ‘father of uncleanness’ (v. Nid. 7a). In order, however, to prevent terumah or hallowed things from being burnt in consequence of contact with vessels defiled by liquids, a distinction was made to mark the Rabbinic (as opposed to Torah) character of the defilement viz. that if the outside of a vessel became thus defiled, the inside etc. should remain clean (v. Bek. 38a).

Lit., ‘ear’ i.e., ear-shaped handle.

Lit., ‘its hands’ = ‘place of holding’ in our Mishnah, v. p. 133, n. 4. The different parts of the vessel enumerated here have a distinct use; hence they are treated as separate utensils, and remain clean, if the outside only of the vessel be defiled.

Even according to Rabbinic law only.

I.e., holds it and reaches it to another.

E.V. ‘reached’.

Ruth II, 14.

I.e., the handle. Heb. (in edd.) אָלָלִית, prob. denominative from אָלָלִיָּה, ‘finger’ (cf. Aramaic אָלָלִית ) i.e., grip with fingers (v. Levy s.v.). J.T. has בַּעַיִית הַכְּבָּלִית in the Mishnah instead of our בַּעַיִית הַכְּבָּלִית; undoubtedly, R. Johanan, the editor of the Pal. Talmud, was explaining the J.T., rather than the Babylonian reading.
According to Rashi, מַסְבִּילֵי מַסְבִּילֵי אֲוַבָּעָי: i.e., dip the food: he explains that a cavity was made in the bottom (under the rim?) of the vessel where mustard or vinegar was placed, and the food dipped there. The MS. M. reading is ihkhcyn; the J.T. III, 1 has, ‘By which the cleanly take hold of it’; Aruch: ‘ . . . drink’; v. D.S. a.I.

(28) Lit., ‘all vessels have no outside’, i.e., if the outside became defiled, the whole vessel is rendered unclean.

(29) I.e., sacrifices.

(30) I.e., sacred gifts, like terumah, which can be eaten in any part of Palestine.

(31) R. Nahman's teacher.

Talmud - Mas. Chagigah 23a

, when the thong of his sandal1 broke, and he took it and placed it on the mouth of the jar, and It fell into the hollow2 of the jar, which was thus rendered unclean. At that time they enjoined: He that carries anything possessing midras-uncleanness may carry [at the same time] terumah, but not hallowed things. — If so, [it should be forbidden to carry] terumah too! — This is according to R. Hananiah b. Akabia who said: They Prohibited it only on the Jordan and in a ship and according to [the circumstances of] the occurrence.3 What is this? — It is taught: A man shall not take water of purification or ashes of purification,4 and convey them over the Jordan in a ship, nor stand on one side [of a river] and throw them to the other side, nor float them over the water, nor ride upon all animal or his fellow, unless his feet touch the ground,5 but one may unhesitatingly convey them over a bridge, be it across the Jordan or any other river. R. Hananiah b. Akabia says: They prohibited it only on the Jordan and in a ship and according to [the circumstances of] the occurrence. What was the occurrence? — Rab Judah said that Rab said: Once someone was conveying water of purification on the Jordan in a ship, and a [piece of a] corpse the size of an olive was found stuck in the bottom of the ship.6 At that time they enjoined: A man shall not take water of purification and ashes of purification and convey them over the Jordan in a ship. A question was raised: [It happened with] all unclean sandal; what of a clean sandal?7 [It happened with] all open jar, what of a closed jar?8 How is it if a man transgressed and carried [them thus]? — R. Ela said: If he transgressed and carried [them thus], they are unclean. R. Zera said: If he transgressed and carried [them thus] they are clean. VESSELS THAT HAVE BEEN FINISHED IN PURITY etc. Who finished them? Should one say that an Associate finished them, then why do they require immersion? If, on the other hand, an ‘am ha-arez, finished them, can they be called ‘finished in purity’? — Rabbah b. Shilah said that R. Mattenah said that Samuel said: Actually, [one can say] that an Associate finished them, yet [the vessel requires immersion] lest the spittle of an ‘am ha-arez9 [fell upon it].10 — When could it have fallen [upon it]? Should one say, before he finished it, then it is not yet a vessel!11 If, on the other hand, after he had finished it, then he would surely take good care of them! — Actually, [one can say] that it fell upon it before he finished it, but perhaps at the time when he finished it, it was still moist.12 [It states:] It requires [only] immersion, but not sunset;13 our Mishnah, therefore, is not according to R. Eliezer. For we have learnt: If a [reed] pipe14 was cut15 for [putting therein ashes of] purification, R. Eliezer says: It must be immersed forthwith; R. Joshua says: It must [first] be rendered unclean, and then immersed.16 Now we raised the point: Who could have cut it? Should one say that an Associate cut it, then why is immersion required?17 If, on the other hand, an ‘am ha-arez cut it, how can R. Joshua, in such a case, say: It must [first] be rendered unclean, and then immersed? Behold, it is already unclean! Now Rabbah b. Shila said that R. Mattenah said that Samuel said: Actually, [you can say] that it fell upon it, yet [immersion is required] lest the spittle of an ‘am ha-arez [fell upon it]. — [Again] when could it have fallen [upon it]? Should one say before he cut it, then it is not yet a vessel! If, on the other hand, after he had cut it, he would surely take good care of it! Actually, [you can say that it fell on the vessel] before he cut it, but perhaps at the time that he cut it, it was still moist. Granted [then] according to R. Joshua, a distinction is thus made, [as a demonstration] against the Sadducees.18 For we have learnt: They used to render the priest that was to burn the [red] heifer unclean,19 as a demonstration against the view of the Sadducees,20 who used to say:21 It must be performed [only] by those on whom the sun had set.22 But according to R. Eliezer, granted if you say that in an other cases we do require sunset,23 a distinction is thus made [as a demonstration] against the Sadducees, but if you say that in other cases [too] we do not require sunset, what distinction is there, [as a demonstration] against the Sadducees? — Rab answered:

(2) Lit., ‘air’.
(3) I.e., R. Hananiah, taught that a Rabbinic decree consequent upon a certain incident was always restricted to the actual circumstances of the incident. In our case, the occurrence was in connection with hallowed things; therefore the Rabbinic prohibition affects only hallowed things.
(4) V. Num. XIX.
(5) Since a person travelling in a ship does not touch the ground with his feet, the Rabbis enacted that anyone carrying water or ashes of purification may not journey with his feet lifted off the ground.
(6) The moment the piece of corpse was overshadowed by a person or object, it caused all under the same covering or overshadowing to become unclean for seven days: v. Num. XIX, 14 and Oh. II, 1.
(7) I.e., does the prohibition referred to in our Mishnah extend also to a person wearing a clean sandal?
(8) Into which nothing could fall.
(9) Who, we are afraid, may be suffering from gonorrhoea, in ‘which case any fluid coming from him is a ‘father of uncleanness;’ cf. p. 143, n.6.
(10) Unobserved by the Associate.
(11) And cannot, therefore, be defiled.
(12) In Nid. VII, I, we learn that spittle etc. convey uncleanness when wet, but not when dry.
(13) Otherwise it would be specifically mentioned. Cf p. 121, n. 9.
(15) I.e., from the ground, so that it was still clean.
(16) R. Eliezer and R. Joshua agree that being a vessel, and therefore subject to defilement, the reed pipe has to be immersed and then used for the ashes of the red heifer before sunset, the underlying motive being to demonstrate against the Sadducees, who held that any thing or person to be employed in connection with the red heifer must, if unclean, first be completely purified, i.e., must wait for sunset after immersion; whereas the Rabbis held that immersion without sunset was sufficient; and although the Sadducean view in this case was stricter than the Pharisaic, the Rabbis nevertheless demonstrated against the Sadducees in order to uphold the authority of the Oral Law, which the latter repudiated. The only difference between R. Eliezer and R. Joshua is as to whether the vessel should first be defiled (and thus rendered unclean according to the Law of the Torah, which the Sadducees also recognized), or immersed forthwith (being regarded as unclean by Rabbinic enactment only). Cf. the defilement of the priest referred to on p. 147, and another demonstration against the Sadducees mentioned on p. 111.
(17) Seeing that the reed pipe is actually clean, the fact that we require its immersion without the awaiting of sunset cannot be regarded as a demonstration against the Sadducees, who postulate sunset only for the unclean; the immersion, therefore, would be pointless.
(18) For Once the reed pipe is defiled, the Sadducees require sunset In addition to Immersion.
(19) Either (according to Tosaf. who quotes the Tosef. in support) by his fellow priests laying their hands on him (for compared with him all were unclean; v. p. 121), or (according to Rashi and Maimonides) he was defiled by means of a (dead) reptile or an equivalent source of uncleanness.
(20) Lit., ‘to bring forth (the false opinion) from the heart of the Sadducees’. The Mishnah, Par. III, 7’ from which this passage is quoted, has simply, ‘because of the Sadducees’.
(21) The Mishnah text has, ‘that they should not say’, and our reading as a var. lec.
(22) V. p. 146, n. 8.
(23) I.e., that an vessels finished in purity (in circumstances as described by Rabbah b. Shila) require sunset In addition to immersion before being used for hallowed things, and that only for the ashes of the red heifer is immersion alone sufficient.
(24) We must conclude, therefore, as suggested above, that our Mishnah is not according to R. Eliezer.

Talmud - Mas. Chagigah 23b
They rendered it as though defiled by a [dead] reptile. — If so, it should not render a person unclean; why then is it taught: He who cuts it and immerses it requires immersion? — [You must say], therefore, They rendered it as though defiled by a corpse. If so, it should require sprinkling on the third and seventh day; why then is it taught: He who cuts it and immerses it requires immersion? [implying only] immersion, but not sprinkling on the third and seventh day! — [You must say], therefore, They rendered it as though defiled by a corpse.

But surely it is taught: They never introduced any innovation in connection with the [red heifer! — Abaye answered: [It means] that they never said that a spade, [for instance]. should be rendered unclean as a seat [on which a gonorrhoeist sat]. As it is taught: And he that sitteth on any thing: I might [have thought] that if [the gonorrhoeist] inverted a se'ah [measure] and sat upon it, [or] a Tarkab [measure] and sat upon it, it should become unclean, therefore the text teaches us: And he that sitteth on any thing whereon, [he that hath the issue] Sat ... shall become unclean; [meaning] that which is appointed for sitting, but that is excluded In regard to which we can say, Stand up that we may do our work. A VESSEL UNITES ALL ITS CONTENTS [FOR DEFILEMENT] IN THE CASE OF HALLOWED THINGS, BUT NOT IN THE CASE OF TERUMAH. Whence is this deduced? R. Hanin said: Scripture says: One golden pan of ten shekels, full of incense: thus, the verse made an the contents of the pan one. R. Kahana raised an objection: [We have learnt], R. Akiba added with regard to] the fine flour and the incense, the frankincense and the coals, that if one who had taken an immersion that day [but had not yet awaited sunset] touched a part thereof, he renders the whole in valid. Now this is [an enactment] of the Rabbis! Whence [is this proven]? — Since it teaches in the first clause: R. Simeon b. Bathiyra testified concerning the ashes of purification that if an unclean person touched a part thereof, he rendered the whole unclean; and then it teaches: R. Akiba added: — Resh Lakish answered in the name of Bar Kappara

(1) I.e., you can still say our Mishnah is according to R. Eliezer, even if he holds the view that in other cases too we do not require sunset for vessels finished in purity, for here the vessel is made to assume the uncleanness of an object defiled by a (dead) reptile (in respect of communicating defilement), which object in all other cases requires sunset. Thus a distinction is made, which clearly rejects the Sadducean view.

(2) I.e., as though in its seventh day after the sprinkling: it would still require immersion and could defile a person.

(3) Whereas the actual defilement of the priest (v. p. 147) does not involve any change in the laws of levitical purity. the attribution of corpse-defilement to the reed cut in purity represents a complete Innovation.

(4) A gonorrhoeist defiles an object on which he sits, making it a ‘father of uncleanness’ provided (as the following Baraitha explains) it is an object appointed for sitting. Now the Rabbis never enacted a new law in connection with the red heifer, whereby an object on susceptible to a given type of uncleanness should become susceptible to it, e.g., that a spade should become defiled as the seat of a gonorrhoeist: in this sense they introduced no innovations. But they did not refrain from attributing to a vessel the kind of uncleanness to which it was susceptible, even though it had not actually been defiled. Thus the reed pipe, though clean, could be regarded as though defiled by a corpse, since it could be subject to corpse-defilement.

(5) Lev. XV, 6.

(6) Grk. , terkab (for another derivation v. Jastrow s.v.) == three kabs or a half se'ah, a dry measure.

(7) Heb. להמצית ('and shall be unclean').

(8) This is deduced apparently from the word בושה ('sat'), which, being vocalized as the imperfect instead of the perfect (בושה), can imply repeated action i.e., that it did not just happen on this one occasion that someone sat on it, but that it was customary to use it as a seat (v. Rashi here and to Lev. XV, 4). B. Epstein in Torah Temimah (ibid. N. 20) explains the deduction to be drawn from the word בושה (E.V. ‘thing but really ‘vessel, article’) i.e., an article appointed for sitting.

(9) I.e., it excludes any article which has its own specific use and was not intended as a seat.

(10) Num. VII, 14 et passim.

(12) Used for a meal-offering; cf. Lev. II, 1ff.
Carried by the High Priest into the Holy of Holies for the purpose of producing the cloud of incense (cf. Lev. XVI, 12); this rule of defilement did not apply to the coals gathered every day by ordinary priests. It should be noted that though frankincense and coal are ordinarily not susceptible to uncleanness, they are rendered so in this case on account of their sanctity.

Which would I have completed his purification; thus, he is still partially unclean and renders invalid (though he does not defile) Terumah and hallowed things.

Because the vessel unites an its contents. The point in R. Akiba's addition is either (a) that a vessel is able to unite its contents even for invalidation and not for defilement only (Bertinoro); or (b) that even flat vessels, not hollowed like a receptacle, can unite their contents (Maim. following our Gemara; v. p. 150).

Whereas R. Hanin derived the rule from the Torah.

R. Simeon b. Bathrya's testimony is definitely of Rabbinic origin, for from the verse quoted above one could only deduce that the rule applied to offerings on the altar, but not to the ashes of the red heifer. Since R. Akiba's statement is an addition to a Rabbinic rule, it follows that it must itself be a Rabbinic enactment.

Talmud - Mas. Chagigah 24a

It\(^1\) refers only to the remains of the meal-offering,\(^2\) for according to the Torah that which requires the vessel,\(^3\) the vessel unites, that which does not require the vessel,\(^4\) the vessel does not unite; and the Rabbis came and decreed that even though it does not require the vessel, the vessel should unite it. Granted with regard to the fine flour, but how are the incense and the frankincense to be explained?\(^5\) — R. Nehman answered that Rabbah b. Abbuha said: For instance, if he heaped them upon a leather spread: according to the Torah, that which has an inside\(^6\) can unite [its contents], that which has no inside, cannot unite [them]; and the Rabbis came and enacted that even that which has no inside should unite [its contents]. Now R. Hanin's teaching win conflict with that of R. Hiyya b. Abba, for R. Hiyya b. Abba said that R. Johanan said: This Mishnah\(^7\) was taught as a ressent of R. Akiba's testimony.\(^8\) HALLOWED THINGS BECOME INVALID [BY UNCLEANNESS] AT THE FOURTH REMOVE. It is taught: R. Jose said: Whence [is it deduced] that hallowed things become invalid [by uncleanness even] at the fourth remove? Now it is [to be deduced by] conclusion ad majus: if one who [only] needs to bring his atonement sacrifice [in order to complete his purification] is, whilst being permitted [to partake] of terumah, [nevertheless] disqualified for hallowed things,\(^9\) how much more so should uncleanness at the third remove, which renders terumah invalid,\(^10\) produce in the case of hallowed things uncleanness at the fourth remove.\(^11\) Thus, we learn uncleanness at the third remove in respect of hallowed things from the Torah, and uncleanness at the fourth remove by means of an a fortiori argument. Whence [do we deduce] from the Torah uncleanness at the third remove in respect of hallowed things? It is written: And the flesh that toucheth a thing unclean thing shall not be eaten;\(^12\) we are surely dealing [here with a case] where it may have touched something suffering from uncleanness [even] at the second remove,\(^13\) yet the Divine Law says it ‘shall not be eaten ‘Uncleanness at the fourth remove by means of? an a fortiori argument’; as we have said [above]. IN THE CASE OF TERUMAH, IF [ONE HAND OF A MAN] BECAME etc. R. Shezbi said: They taught [this only] of a case where [the hands] are connected,\(^14\) but not where they are not connect ed.\(^15\) Abaye put an objection to him: [It is taught]: A dry [unclean] hand renders the other unclean so as to render hallowed things unclean,\(^16\) but not terumah this is the view of Rabbi. R. Jose son of R. Judah says: so as to render invalid,\(^17\) but not unclean. Now granted, if you say that [it refers also to] a case where [the hands] are not connected, [then the fact that the hand is] ‘dry’ is in that case remarkable; but if you say that [it refers only to] a case where [the hands] are connected, but not where they are not connected, what is there remarkable about [the hand being] ‘dry’?\(^18\) It is also\(^19\) taught: Resh Lakish said: They taught [this only] of his [own hand], but not of the hand of his fellow.\(^20\)

\(^1\) I.e., R. Akiba's testimony.

\(^2\) I.e., the rule to which R. Akiba testified is certainly of Rabbinic origin; but this does not conflict with the view of R. Hanin who derives our Mishnah teaching from the Bible, for R. Akiba refers only to the remains of the meal eaten by the Priests (v. Lev. II, 3 et passim) to which the Biblical law (as the Gemara goes on to explain) does not apply.

(3) For the service in connection therewith, e.g., the incense; v. Num. VII, 14 quoted on p. 149.

(4) E.g., the remains of the meal-offering which are eaten by the priests.

(5) Since they require the vessel, the vessel unites them according to the law of the Torah: why then are they included in R. Akiba’s testimony, which refers only to Rabbinical enactments?

(6) I.e., is hallowed like a receptacle.

(7) I.e., our Mishnah.

(8) I.e., it is of Rabbinic, not of Torah origin.

(9) V. p. 135, n. 4.

(10) V. Yeb. 74b (Sons. ed., pp. 502-3).

(11) V. Sot. 29a (Sons. ed., p. 143).

(12) Thus rendering the hallowed things invalid. For this method of argument cf. B.K. 24bff (Sons. ed., p. 125ff). The principle of דביו לומאה של ותנוי (‘It is quite sufficient that the law in respect of the thing inferred should be equivalent to that from which it is derived’) discussed ibid., does not apply here, for otherwise the ‘a fortiori’ argument becomes valueless, for we know from Scripture that uncleanness at the third remove invalidates hallowed things; and those, too, who hold the principle of ‘Dayyo’ even where the purpose of the ‘a fortiori’ argument is defeated, would nevertheless not apply it here, since we are dealing only with Rabbinical not Torah degrees of impurity.

(13) With reference to the flesh of peace-offerings; Lev. VII, 19.

(14) So that the hallowed flesh (of the peace-offering) is made to suffer uncleanness at the third remove. The Gemara assumes here that the term ‘unclean thing,’ can include something suffering from second-grade uncleanness, because we find that an object possessing uncleanness at the second remove is termed ‘unclean’ by Scripture; v. Lev. XI, 33, where the vessel possesses uncleanness at the first remove and its contents, therefore, uncleanness at the second remove.

(15) I.e., the rule in the Mishnah that one hand defiles the other for hallowed things applies only (according to Rashi) to a case where the unclean hand is actually touching the clean hand at the time when the latter is in contact with hallowed things, the reason for this Rabbinic enactment being the fear lest the unclean hand touch the hallowed things. But Tosaf. (s.v. חטוי בוחר.) explains the case to be one where the clean hand is touching the unclean hand whilst the latter is in contact with a defiling object (e.g., a sacred Scroll), and we are afraid that the clean hand may also touch the defiling object.

(16) I.e., (according to Rash), if, after the unclean hand had been removed from the clean, the latter to touched hallowed things, these would remain clean, for one hand cannot convey to the other uncleanness even at the third remove so as to render, in turn, hallowed things invalid.

(17) I.e., at the third remove: third-grade uncleanness can, in turn, produce in hallowed things fourth grade uncleanness. Unwashed hands are generally regarded as possessing uncleanness at the second remove.

(18) I.e., the second hand can convey at the third remove to hallowed things a fourth-grade uncleanness, which disqualifies them but does not enable them to defile.

(19) If the case is one in which the hands are not connected, then the fact that the clean hand, through having been previously in contact with the dry unclean hand, is able to defile hallowed things constitutes a new point of Rabbinic law, viz., that one hand possessing uncleanness at the second remove can convey to the other hand, without the help of moisture, uncleanness of the same grade; were the unclean hand wet this would not, of course, be remarkable, for since second-grade uncleanness renders liquids, by Rabbinic enactment, unclean at the first remove, the moisture on the unclean hand would in turn convey to the other hand uncleanness at the second remove. But if the Mishnah refers only to a case where the hands are connected, the fact that the hand is dry is pointless. for the defilement of the hallowed things would in that instance performe have to be accounted for as a preventive prohibition lest the unclean hand touch the hallowed things (v. p. 151, n. 6). and in that case it would make no difference whether the unclean hand were wet or dry, for since it possesses second-grade uncleanness, it can defile hallowed things with uncleanness at the third remove.

(20) [MS.M. omits ‘also’ which in fact is difficult to explain.]

(21) I.e., if he touched with his unclean hand another person's hand, the latter's hand is not defiled.

Talmud - Mas. Chagigah 24b

But R. Johanan said: Be it his [own] hand or the hand of his fellow; [and] with that hand he can [defile the other hand] so as to render [hallowed things] invalid but not unclean. 3 Whence [is this deduced]? — From the fact that [the Mishnah] teaches in the second clause that the one hand defiles the other for hallowed things but not for terumah. Why am I told this again? Behold it has already been taught in the first clause! You must surely infer from this that it comes to include the hand of his fellow. And Resh Lakish, too, retracted; for R. Jonah said that R. Ammi said that Resh Lakish said: Be it his own hand or the hand of his fellow, with that hand [he can defile the other] so as to render [hallowed things] invalid but not unclean. Now [whether the second hand] renders [hallowed things] invalid but not unclean is [disputed by] Tannaim. For we have learnt: Whatsoever renders terumah invalid defiles the hands with uncleanness at the second remove, and one hand renders the other unclean: this is the view of R. Joshua. But the Sages say: the hands possess uncleanness at the second remove, and that which possesses uncleanness at the second remove cannot convey uncleanness at the second remove to anything else. Surely, [the meaning is], it cannot convey uncleanness at the second remove, but it can convey uncleanness at the third remove! — Perhaps, it does not convey uncleanness either at the second or the third remove! — Rather [is it disputed by] the following Tannaim. For it is taught: A dry [unclean] hand renders the other unclean so as to render unclean in the case of hallowed things, but not in the case of terumah: this is the view of Rabbi. R. Jose son of R. Judah says: That hand [can defile another] so as to render [hallowed things] invalid but not unclean. DRY FOODSTUFFS MAY BE EATEN WITH UNWASHED HANDS etc. It is taught: R. Hanina b. Antigonos said: Is there [a distinction in favour of] dryness in regard to hallowed things? Does not then the honour in which hallowed things are held render them fit [for uncleanness]? It refers only to a case where his companion inserted [the consecrated food] into his mouth, or he himself picked it up with a spindle or whorl, and he wanted to eat unconsecrated horseradish or onion with it, then in the case of hallowed things the Rabbis prohibited it, in the case of terumah the Rabbis did not prohibit it. A MOURNER [PRIOR TO THE BURIAL OF THE DECEASED] AND ONE WHO NEEDS TO BRING HIS ATONEMENT SACRIFICE [IN ORDER TO COMPLETE HIS PURIFICATION] etc. What is the reason? — Since up till now they were prohibited [from partaking of hallowed things], the Rabbis required them to take an immersion. MISHNAH. GREATER STRINGENCY APPLIES TO TERUMAH [THAN TO HALLOWED THINGS], FOR IN JUDEA THEY ARE TRUSTED IN REGARD TO THE PURITY OF [HALLOWED] WINE AND OIL THROUGHOUT THE YEAR; AND ONLY AT THE SEASON OF THE WINE-PRESSES AND OLIVE-VATS IN REGARD TO TERUMAH. IF [THE SEASON OF] THE WINE-PRESSES AND OLIVE-VATS WAS PASSED, AND ONE BROUGHT TO HIM A JAR OF WINE OF TERUMAH, THE LATTER MAY NOT ACCEPT IT FROM HIM. HOWEVER, [THE ‘AM HA-AREZ] MAY LEAVE IT FOR THE COMING [SEASON] OF THE WINE-PRESS. BUT IF HE SAID TO HIM, ‘I HAVE SET APART THEREIN A QUARTER LOG AS A HALLOWED THING’, HE IS TRUSTED [IN REGARD TO THE PURITY OF THE WHOLE]. IN REGARD TO JUGS OF WINE AND JUGS OF OIL

(1) I.e., the first hand.
(2) [So Rash. Tosaf. (s.v. יין fol. 24a) on the basis of another reading refers it to the hand of his fellow: ‘Be it his own hand or the hand of his fellow (that hand can defile) so as to render invalid etc.’]
(3) Resh Lakish on the other hand, holds, it appears, that the hallowed things are rendered unclean; cf. his retraction ‘Infra (v. Tosaf. ibid.).
(4) I.e., that In the case of hallowed things he must immerse both hands.
(6) I.e., one hand cannot convey the same grade of uncleanness to the other; this shows that R. Joshua holds the opposite view. The text in the Mishnah, apart from minor differences, omits the words ‘the hands possess uncleanness at the second remove’.
(7) Thus enabling it to invalidate terumah.
(8) I.e., the Sages may hold that since, as they observe, the hand possesses second-grade uncleanness, it cannot defile the other hand at an, so that, unlike our own mishnah, they would not accept any distinction in this respect between terumah and hallowed things. In other words, possibly the Tannaim do not differ as to whether the second hand invalidates or defiles hallowed things, but as to whether the second hand does or does not become defiled at all; on the view however that it does, an may agree with R. Joshua that it is rendered unclean at the second remove.

(9) This distinction obtains only in the case of unconsecrated food, which does not become susceptible to uncleanness till it has been once wetted (cf. p. 124, nn. 6f). R. Hanina b. Antigonus assumes that the Mishnah refers to consecrated foods and that their ‘dryness’ means that they have not yet been fitted for uncleanness.

(10) Lit., ‘love’.

(11) Following is the Tosefta reading, which differs in several respects from our passage: ‘R. H b. A. said: Is there (a distinction in favour of) dry things in regard to hallowed things? (It must refer to a case), therefore, where he picks up the cake with a spindle or a chip of wood and he eats with it an (unconsecrated) olive or onion; (it is permitted) in the case of terumah but not in the case of hallowed things’. The version of the Tosefta quoted by Tosaf. (s.v. נְשָׁדַד ) corresponds more nearly to our own, but likewise omits the sentence, ‘Does not then the honour in which hallowed things are held render them fit for (uncleanness)?’, and makes the answer appear to be part of R. H. b. A.’s statement instead of a reply by others to his question.

(12) Whose hands were leviticany clean.

(13) Because the eater's hands were not clean.

(14) Jast.: reed, especially reed used as spindle (v. Ar. s.v.); also as fork.

(15) Heb. מְצַל מִפְּנֵי ; Levy reads, מְצַל מִפְּנֵי from Grk.  מְצַל מִפְּנֵי (shuttle). The spindle and whorl, being small flat pieces of wood, do not come within the category of ‘Kelim’ (vessels or articles), and consequently are not susceptible to defilement.

(16) For the hands, which possess second-grade uncleanness, do not defile dry unconsecrated foods, since the latter are not susceptible to uncleanness at the third remove (V. p. 155, n. 2).

(17) Lest his hands touch the consecrated food in his mouth, or defile it indirectly by rendering the saliva unclean.

(18) Though unclean hands can invalidate terumah, the Rabbis relied on the eaters of terumah taking due care, and imposed no prohibition in this case. According to the Gemara's explanation, therefore, the Mishnah does not refer to consecrated but to unconsecrated food; and ‘dry’ does not mean that the food had not become susceptible to uncleanness, but simply that it was dry at the moment for were it wet, then the hands would convey to the liquid uncleanness at the first remove (cf. P. 152, n. 4), which would render the unconsecrated food unclean at the second remove, and the latter in turn would disqualify the terumah by conveying to it uncleanness at the third remove (so Rashi here). Another view (refuted by Rashi here, although accepted by him apparently in his note to the Mishnah) takes ‘dry’ to mean that the unconsecrated food had not yet been fitted for uncleanness.

(19) And also of Second time, but lot of terumah, v. Yeb. 68b (Sonc. ed., p. 458).

(20) V. infra p. 156.

(21) The 'amme ha-arez.

(22) If an ‘am ha-arez set aside wine and oil for Temple use (for libations and meal-offerings respectively) during the seasons of the winepresses and olive-vats, he may be trusted in regard to their purity throughout the year (for another explanation v. Tosaf. s.v. נְשָׁדַד). For though an ‘am ha-arez, could not be trusted in respect to terumah, he could be relied up on strictly to observe the laws of purity in respect to hallowed things.

(23) When everyone can be trusted to purify his vessels: cf. Toh. IX, .

(24) V. n. 5; lit., ‘they’.

(25) I.e., an Associate priest.

(26) And then give it to the priest.

(27) I.e., the ‘am ha-arez owner to the priest.

(28) A log = six eggs.

(29) I.e., he had put a quarter log of wine in a vessel to be used as a drink-offering.

(30) For since he is trusted in regard to the hallowed things, i.e., the drink-offering, he is also trusted in regard to the terumah.

Talmud - Mas. Chagigah 25a

THAT ARE MIXED UP,¹ THEY ARE TRUSTED DURING THE SEASON OF THE WINE-PRESSES AND THE OLIVE-VATS AND PRIOR TO [THE SEASON OF] THE WINE-PRESSES SEVENTY DAYS.² GEMARA. In Judea but not In Galilee: what is the reason? Resh Lakish said: Because a strip of [land inhabited by] Cutheans³ separates them.⁴ — Let it be brought then in a box, chest or turret! — This is according to Rabbi, who said: A tent in motion is not to be considered a tent. For it is taught: One who enters Gentile territory in a box, chest or turret, Rabbi declares to be unclean, and R. Jose b. Judah to be clean. — But let it be brought in an earthenware vessel fitted with a close-bound covering!

R. Eliezer said: They teach: Hallowed things are not protected by a close-bound covering. — But it is taught: The water of purification is not protected by a close-bound covering. Surely this implies that hallowed things are protected! — No, it implies that water which is not yet sanctified is protected by a close-bound covering. — But ‘Ulla said: The Associates prepare [their hallowed things] in purity in Galilee! — They let them remain; and when Elijah comes he will purify them. AND ONLY AT THE SEASON OF THE WINE-PRESSES AND OLIVE VATS IN REGARD TO TERUMAH. Now we shall point to a contradiction. He who finished [gathering] his olives, let him leave one basket [for terumah] and give it to a poor priest! — R. Nahman said: There is no contradiction: the one [Mishnah] refers to early-ripening [olives], and the other refers to later ripening [olives]. Said R. Adda b. Ahava to him: Which are caned late-ripening? Like those of your fathers. R. Joseph said: They taught this of Galilee. Abaye put an objection to him: Transjordania and Galilee are like Judea: they are trusted there. In regard to the wine during the season, and in regard to the oil during the oil-season; but not in regard to the wine during the oil-season, and not in regard to the oil during the wine-season? — The best [explanation], therefore, is that which was given at first. IF [THE SEASON OF] THE WINE-PRESSES AND OLIVE-VATS WAS PASSED, AND ONE BROUGHT TO HIM A JAR OF WINE OF TERUMAH, THE LATTER MAY NOT ACCEPT IT FROM HIM. HOWEVER, [THE ‘AM HA-AREZ.] MAY LEAVE IT FOR THE COMING [SEASON] OF THE WINE-PRESS. R. Shesheth was asked: If [the priest] transgressed and accepted It, may he leave it for the next [season of the] winepress?—He answered them: Ye have learnt it:

(1) Explained in Gemara (p. 161) to mean that unconsecrated wine terumah and drink-offering are mixed together, though, as a rule, the expression is a technical term for the admixture of secular produce with terumah in proportions sufficient to make the whole prohibited to non-priests. In (‘mixed up’) is f. pl. part. pu'al, from (pi'el), denom. of דולמל תימדולמה = ‘(sacred) fruit’, from יררי דמליל = ‘flow, weep’; cf. Ex. XXII, 28.

(2) When it is customary to begin purifying the vessels for the wine. Though normally the ‘am ha-areas is not trusted in regard to his jugs even during the vat-season, in this case he is trusted, because he is believed in regard to the drink-offering therein; v. p. 161, n. 1.

(4) The Sages declared heathen territory to be unclean, for fear of defilement by an undiscovered grave; v. Shab. 14b-15a. Thus even Associates could not bring sacred things (e.g., libations) from Galilee to the Temple, which was in Judah.

(5) I.e., a kind of chest or case. These receptacles, it is held, could protect their contents against defilement.

(6) I.e., such a receptacle. technically termed a tent, does not protect its contents from defilement.

(7) V. Naz. 55a (Sonc. ed., p. 204 notes).

(8) V. Nun., XIX, 15.

(9) Read with MS.M.: R. Eleazur.

(10) Heb. השילוח, an unusual expression for a Baraitha teaching, for which the most common formula is שילוחו (it is taught).

(11) Lit., ‘delivered’, . sc. from defilement.

(12) I.e., the ashes of the red heifer had not yet been put in.

(13) And may afterwards be used with the ashes for sprinkling.

(14) I.e., their wine and oil for Temple use (Rashi).

(15) Which, Implies that there is a way of transporting them in purity to the Temple.

(16) Rashi reads, ‘Maybe Elijah will come’. For the concept of Elijah as the solver of an religious controversies and legal disputes v. Men. 45b; Ab. R. N. xxxiv; Num. 1 lab. III, near the end. For the general Rabbinic concept of Elijah v. J.E. pp. 122-127.

(17) I.e., reveal a path by which the hallowed things can be brought, which does not lead through heathen territory. [The Associates, accordingly, who lived during the Temple times and who were anxious to express their devotion, to it, would prepare their wine and oil in purity in the expectation that Elijah might come and direct them, through a clean path enabling them to bring these to the Temple. Rashi, Nid. 6b, refers this to the period after the Destruction of the Temple, when the Associates would follow this practice in the expectation that the Temple might be rebuilt in their days.]

(18) I.e., an ‘am ha-arez.

(19) Var. lec., ‘and left’.

(20) Heb. לְעָנָיִים כְּבָדִים (this reading is supported by Maimonides) i.e., the ‘am ha-arez, must give the olives to the priest before they become susceptible to uncleanness, so that the priest may prepare the olive-oil himself in purity. A poor priest is mentioned, because a rich one would not accept such terumah, as he would not wash to bother himself with the pressing of a small quantity of olives. But ‘Aruk and Tosaf and so apparently Rashi (v. Tosaf.) read, לְעָנָיִים כְּבָדִים , ‘in the presence of the priest’, i.e., so that the priest may be sure that the olives have not been rendered susceptible to uncleanness. According to either reading this Mishnah shows that the ‘am ha-arez is not to be trusted even during the season, and thus contradicts our own Mishnah.

(21) I.e., our own.

(22) Which are gathered at the normal season: consequently the ‘am ha-arez is trusted.

(23) Since these are gathered after the normal season, the ‘am ha-arez is no longer trusted in regard to terumah.

(24) The second Mishnah (Toh. IX, 4), according to which the ‘am ha-arez not to be trusted at all, refers to Galilee, whereas our own Mishnah according to which the ‘am ha-arez is to be trusted during the proper season, expressly refers to Judah. Tosaf. a.l. explains that the Galileans were rich and produced so much olive oil that their season continued much later.

(25) Lit., ‘the white (explanation)’.

(26) I.e., R. Nahman’s.

Talmud - Mas. Chagigah 25b

If an Associate and an ‘am ha-arez inherited [jointly] from their father, who was an ‘am ha-arez, [the Associate] may say to the other: ‘Take thou the wheat that is in one place, and I [shall take] the wheat that is in the other place; or take thou the wine that is in the one place, and I [shall take] the wine that is in the other’. But he may not say to him: ‘Take thou the liquid [produce] and I [shall take] the dry;’ [or] take thou the wheat and I [shall take] the barley’,2 And it is taught with regard to this: That Associate burns the liquid [produce]3 and leaves the dry. Why now? Let him leave it for the coming [season of the] wine-press! — [It refers] to something which has no pressing [season].4 — Let him leave it then for the [next] Festival5 — [It refers] to something which cannot be kept till the Festival. BUT IF HE SAID TO HIM, I HAVE SET APART THEREIN A QUARTER LOG AS A HALLOWED THING’, HE IS TRUSTED [IN REGARD TO THE PURITY OF THE WHOLE].

We have learnt there: Beth Shammai and Beth Hillel agree that for the purpose of preparing the Passover sacrifice one may investigate [a field containing a ploughed grave],6 but not for the purpose of eating terumah.7 What is meant by ‘investigate’? — Rab Judah said that Samuel said: A man blows [on the ground]8 of a Beth ha-Peras9 [grave area] and proceeds. But R. Hiyya b. Abbah in the name of ‘Ulla said: A Beth ha-eras which has been trodden is clean.10 In the case of those who go to prepare the Passover sacrifice, [the Sages] did not maintain their enactment11 where kareth [extinction]12 was involved; in the case of those who go to eat terumah, they maintained their enactment where death [at the hands of Heaven] was involved.13 A question was asked: If one investigated [a Beth Peras] for his Passover sacrifice, may he [also] eat his terumah? Rabbah b. ‘Una said: If one investigated [a Beth Peras] for his Passover sacrifice, he may not [also] eat his terumah. Said an old [scholar] to him: Do not dispute with ‘Ulla, for we have learnt according to his view: BUT IF HE SAID TO HIM, ‘I HAVE SET APART THEREIN A QUARTER-LOG AS A HALLOWED THING’, HE IS TRUSTED [IN REGARD TO THE PURITY OF THE WHOLE].

Thus, since he is trusted in regard to hallowed things, he is trusted also in regard to terumah.14 Likewise In our case, since he is credited [to be clean] in regard to the Passover sacrifice, he is credited [to be clean] also in regard to terumah. IN. REGARD TO JUGS OF WINE AND JUGS OF OIL etc. A Tannna taught: They are not trusted either in regard to the casks or in regard to the terumah. Casks of what? If they are casks of hallowed things, then since they are trusted in regard to the hallowed things, they are to be trusted also in regard to the casks! If, on the other hand, they are casks of terumah, this is obvious? For if they are not trusted in regard to terumah, are they to be trusted in regard to the casks! it must refer, therefore, to empty [casks] of hallowed things at any time of the year, or to full [casks] of terumah at the time of the vats. We have learnt: IN REGARD TO JUGS OF WINE AND JUGS OF OIL THAT ARE MIXED UP: surely [it means] mixed up with, terumah! — The School of R. Hiyya said: [It means] mixed up with hallowed things. — But does ‘mixing up’ obtain in the case of hallowed things? The School of R. Ila'i said: It is a case where he prepares his untithed produce in purity in order to take therefrom drink-offerings. PRIOR TO [THE SEASON OF] THE WINE-PRESSES SEVENTY DAYS. Abaye said: From this is to be deduced that it is obligatory on the aris [tenant] to see to the provision of the jugs seventy days before the pressing-season.

MISHNAH. FROM MODI'IM INWARDS [THE POTTERS] ARE TRUSTED IN REGARD TO EARTHENWARE VESSELS; FROM MODI'IM OUTWARDS THEY ARE NOT TRUSTED. FOR INSTANCE: IF THE POTTER WHO SELLS THE POTS ENTERED INWARDS OF MODI'IM, THEN THE SAME POTTER IN REGARD TO THE SAME POTS AND IN REGARD TO THE SAME BUYERS IS TRUSTED. BUT IF HE WENT OUT [FROM MODI'IM OUTWARDS] HE IS NOT TRUSTED.

GEMARA. A Tanna taught: Modi'im [itself] is sometimes [considered] as inwards, sometimes as outwards. For instance: If the potter is going Out and the Associate is coming in, it is [considered] as inwards. If both are coming in

(1) The former being susceptible to uncleanness, but not the latter.
(2) In regard to each kind of produce, the Associate may chose for himself the produce that has not been rendered susceptible to uncleanness, or which he knows still to be clean. But he is not entitled to exchange one kind of produce for another! the heritage, and by so doing he would transgress Lev. XIX, 14, ('nor put a stumbling-block before the blind'). The principle (as Rashi explains) on which this Mishnah is based is that of בֵּית הָעֵד (retrospective selection or designation; v. last. s.v.), which applies to different parts of the same produce, but not to different kinds of produce, because on the father's death a share in each kind of produce comprising the heritage falls in each heir.
(3) I.e., if he is a priest and inherits oil which is terumah, he may use it for kindling his lamp.
(4) I.e., no special manufacturing season, e.g., beer or meat. According to this explanation, ‘burn’ means ‘destroy’.
(5) When the produce of the ‘am ha-arez, is considered clean: v. pp. 165-6.
(6) I.e., if a man who is going to prepare his Passover sacrifice must traverse a field containing a ploughed grave, he may walk through the field provided he investigates his path so as to avoid defilement by contact with splintered bones; for bones from the size of a barley grain (unless they comprise a quarter-kab of the larger bones or the greater number of the bones, when they defile in accordance with the law of tent-covering”; v. p., 56, n. 6 and Oh. II, 1) defile only when touched or carried.
(7) Investigation cannot be relied upon; v. p. 160, n. 5.
(8) In order to blow away from his path any bone-splinters large enough to de-file by contact (v. supra, n. 6): the bigger bones he would see and avoid.
(9) פֹּרֶם = ‘half’ sc. furrow (cf Tosef. Neg. VII, 10, where Peras = ‘half a loaf’. בֵּית תַּפְרָם (the area of, i.e., a square, Peras) is a technical term for a field, the area of fifty square cubits (a square half-furrow) rendered unclean on account of crushed bones carried over it from a ploughed grave; v. M.K. 5b and D.S. a.l. note; Oh. XVII, 1 where ten cubits represents the size of the full furrow; and Nid. 57a. The above explanation of Beth Peras follows Jastrow's view (v. Dict. s. פֹּרֶם) and adopts the reading Mal'akh מַלְאָךְ מַעֲנֵיָה פֹּרֶם (= ‘half a furrow’) instead of the usual reading מַלְאָךְ מַעֲנֵיָה פֶּרֶם (‘a full furrow’) in M.K. 5b. I Rashi (to Nid. 57a) explains Peras from rt. meaning ‘to break’ i.e., an area of crushed bones; Maim. (to Oh. XVII) from rt. meaning ‘to extend’ i.e., area of extension; v. also Levy s.v.
(10) It should be investigated then by seeing whether it has been trodden or not.
(11) The uncleanness of a Beth Peras is a Rabbinic law.
(12) מֵעַרְרָה נְבָה (Niph. infin.), ‘to be cut off’; cf. the recurrent Pentateuchal formula, ‘that soul shall be cut off’ from among his people’. It is a term for divine punishment (opp. to מרה capital punishment) incurred for thirty-six kinds of transgression (v. Ker. I, 1), including neglect to offer the Passover sacrifice at the proper time; v. Num. IX, 13. The nature of the punishment is variously explained: (a) childlessness (Rashi to Shab. 25a, s. מרה); (b) premature death (M. K. 28a); (c) extinction of soul (Sanh. 64b). Maim. (Teshubah Ch. VIII) holds that kureth means that the soul perishes completely; but this view is controverted by Nahmanides (Comm. to Pentateuch end of Mo)}.

(13) E.g., for wittingly eating terumah when he was unclean. Kureit is the severer penalty; nevertheless the Rabbis waived their enactment regarding a Beth Peras in the case of the Passover sacrifice, because it has a fixed time. But in the case of terumah, for the eating of which there is no fixed time, the priest must either avoid the Beth Peras by taking a longer route, or else if he traverses it, he must purify himself in accordance with the law of corpse-defilement, before partaking of the terumah (cf. our passage in Pes. 92b with Rashi and Tosaft. a.l.).

(14) For it would be unseemly that part of the wine should be offered as a libation, whilst another part, intended as terumah, should be considered unclean.

(15) Once the hallowed contents have been emptied out, the ‘am ha-arez cannot be relied upon in regard to the purity of his vessels. —

(16) In regard to hallowed things, there is no distinction between the vat-seasons and the rest of the year.

(17) Though the ‘am ha-areas was trusted at the appropriate pressing-season in regard to the terumah, in order that the Associate priests might not be deprived of the greater part of their dues, he was not trusted in regard to the vessels (cf. p. 163, ‘And do not wonder, etc.’). Thus the priest could not accept the terumah in the original vessels, but had to empty it into his own.

(18) And yet he is trusted, the Mishnah tells us, in regard to the vessels! V. p. 156, n. 6.

(19) ‘Mixing up’ necessarily obtains in the case of terumah, because an untithed produce contains a part which must event many be set apart as terumah; but not so hallowed things, which have not perforce to be separated from the untithed produce. V. next note.

(20) Heb. tebel i.e., produces in that stage in which the separation of levitical and priestly shares respectively is required before one may partake of them; eatables forbidden pending the separation of sacred gifts. tebel, however, is not subject to tithes until it is brought home (Jast. s.v. 풃).

(21) I.e., unconsecrated produce, hallowed produce, and terumah are all mixed together; and since he is trusted in regard to the hallowed produce, he is also trusted in regard to both the terumah and the vessels on the principle explained on p. 161, n. 1.

(22) A sub-farmer who tills the owner's ground for a given share in the produce.

(23) In Mishnah edd., Modi'im; also occurs as Moda'im and Modi'i'im. V. I Macc. II,1. Described in pes. 93f (q.v.) as fifteen mil — each of two thousand cubits or three thousand five hundred feet — from Jerusalem. Perhaps it is to be identified with the modern Amdiyeh, seventeen miles north-west of Jerusalem.

(24) I.e., towards Jerusalem.

(25) I.e., potters, who are ‘amme ha-arez are trusted within this radius from Jerusalem in regard to small, essential earthenware vessels like pots and cups, because no furnaces, whether for pottery or lime, were permitted in Jerusalem on account of the smoke.

(26) Note the var. lec. in the Gemara quotation (v. p. 163, n. 4).

(27) I.e., who brought the vessels inwards of Modi'im; but should be transfer them to another potter (who is an ‘am ha-areas) they may not be purchased.

(28) I.e., which the potter himself bought; but he is not trusted in regard to vessels he may have acquired from a local potter.

(29) I.e., only if the Associate buyers themselves saw the potter bring the vessels in, may they buy them from him.

(30) I.e.,if the potter enters Modi'im from inwards and the Associate from out-wards.

(31) As the potter is leaving the inward area, the Associate is permitted to buy from him, in order that he should not be left without vessels.

or both are going Out [it is considered] as outwards.1 Abaye said: We have also learnt [accordingly]: IF THE POTTER WHO SOLD THE POTS ENTERED INWARDS OF MODI'IM.2 Thus, it is only because it is inwards of Modi'im [that he is trusted], but in Modi'im itself he is not trusted. Consider now the latter part [of the Mishnah]: IF HE WENT OUT, HE IS NOT TRUSTED. THUS, IN MODI'IM ITSELF HE IS TO BE TRUSTED! It is clearly, then, to be deduced from this, that, in the one case, the potter is going out and the Associate is coming in; In the other case, both are going out or both are coming in. Proven. A Tanna taught: They are trusted [only] in regard to small earthenware vessels for hallowed things. Resh Lakish said: only if they can be taken in one hand. But R. Johanan said: Even if they cannot be taken in one hand. Resh Lakish said: They taught this Only of empty [vessels], but not of full ones. But R. Johanan said: Even of full ones, and even if his head-covering is in it. Raba said: But R. Johanan admits that the liquid itself is unclean. And do not wonder at the [anomaly] for in the case of a jar full of liquid, the jar is unclean for seven days, but the liquid is clean. MISHNAH. IF TAX-COLLECTORS ENTERED A HOUSE, AND SIMILARLY IF THIEVES RESTORED [STOLEN] VESSELS THEY ARE BELIEVED IF THEY SAY: WE HAVE NOT TOUCHED [ANYTHING]. AND IN JERUSALEM THEY ARE TRUSTED IN REGARD TO HALLOWED THINGS, AND DURING A FESTIVAL ALSO IN REGARD TO TERUMAH.

GEMARA. Now we shall point to a contradiction: If tax collectors entered a house, the whole house is rendered unclean! — There is no contradiction: In the one case, a Gentile was with them; in the other case, there was no Gentile with them. For we have learnt: If a Gentile is with them, they are believed if they say, ‘We have not entered [at all]’; but they are not believed if they say, ‘We entered but we did not touch [anything]’. — What difference does it make if a Gentile be with them? R. Johanan and R. Eleazar [explain it]: one says, They are afraid of the Gentile; the other says, They are afraid of the Government. What is the practical difference between them? — There is [a practical difference] between them when the Gentile is not of high standing. AND SIMILARLY IF THIEVES RESTORED [STOLEN] VESSELS. Now we shall point to a contradiction: If thieves entered a house, It is not rendered unclean, except for the place where the feet of the thieves have trodden! — R. Phinehas said in the name of Rab: [The Mishnah speaks of a case] when they have repented. It is moreover to be deduced, for [the Mishnah] teaches: [If the thieves] restore the vessels. Proven. AND IN JERUSALEM, THEY ARE TRUSTED IN REGARD TO HALLOWED THINGS. A Tanna taught: They are trusted in regard to large earthenware vessels for hallowed things. Why an this? — Because no furnaces were erected in Jerusalem. AND DURING A FESTIVAL ALSO IN REGARD TO TERUMAH. Whence is this deduced? — R. Joshua b. Levi said: Scripture Says: So all the men of Israel were gathered against the city, associated as one man: thus the verse made them an Associates. MISHNAH. IF [AN ASSOCIATE] OPENED HIS JAR [OF WINE] OR BROKE INTO HIS DOUGH [TO SELL THEM] ON ACCOUNT OF THE FESTIVAL, R. JUDAH SAYS, HE MAY FINISH [SELLING THEM AFTER THE FESTIVAL]; BUT THE SAGES SAY, HE MAY NOT FINISH. GEMARA. R. Ammi and R. Isaac Nappaha sat in the anteroom of R. Isaac Nappaha. One began and said: May he leave it for another Festival? — Said the other to him: The hands of an touch it, and you say, Leave it for another Festival! Said the former: Did not, till now, the bands of an touch it? — [The other] replied to him: What a comparison! It is alright up to now, because the Divine Law purified the uncleanness of the ‘am ha-arez a during the Festival, but now it is unclean [retrospectively]. Shall we say that Tannaim differ thereon? For one [Baraitha] taught: He may leave it for another Festival; and another [Baraitha] taught: He may not leave it for another Festival. Surely, Tannaim differ thereon! — No; the one [Baraitha], which teaches that he may leave it, is according to R. Judah; the other which teaches that he may not leave it, is according to the Rabbis. But can you possibly think so! Behold, R. Judah said: He may finish [selling them]; — Rather, [the Baraitha] which teaches that he may not leave it is according to R. Judah, and the one that teaches that he may leave it is according to the Rabbis; and ‘he may not leave it’ means that there is no need for him to leave it.

Similarly, at Festivals when all the men of Israel were gathered’, they were to be regarded as Associates.

Although the goods are touched by ’amme ha-ares, they remain clean throughout the Festival (cf. p. 164, n. 6).

The order of the disputants is reversed in Rashi.

Otherwise the vendors will be discouraged from sending their goods, and the pilgrims will not have sufficient food; v. Bez. 11b.

I.e., he may not send the goods, because they are considered unclean retrospectively (v. infra n. 8 and cf. next Mishnah).

I.e., ‘smith’.

Lit., ‘curtain’; ‘curtained enclosure’.

The question refers to the view of the Sages in the Mishnah, i.e., may the goods be kept till the following Festival, when again are regarded as clean?

I.e., during the Festival so many amme ha-arez touched it, and yet it is considered clean throughout the festive period.

An Associate may never sell unclean goods; and although throughout the Festival the goods were held to be clean, immediately after the Festival the concession ceases, and the goods become retrospectively unclean, because they were touched by ’amme ha-arez.

I.e., on the question raised above as to whether the wine etc. may be left for another Festival.

After the Festival and need not leave them over for the next Festival.

Rashi reverses the order of the disputants; cf. p. 165, n. 12.

Lit., ‘removed’, sc. the utensils, which, having been touched during the Festival by ’amme ha-arez, now become retrospectively unclean.

Every priest had to make preparations for the Sabbath, in his own home.

But waited till after the Sabbath.

Talmud - Mas. Chagigah 26b

GEMARA. A Tanna taught: ‘Take heed lest ye touch the Table or the Candlestick’. — Why does not our Tanna mention the Candlestick? — In connection with the Table, there is written [the word] ‘Tamid’ [perpetual]; in connection with the Candlestick, there is not written [the word] ‘Tamid’. And the other [Tanna]? — Since it is written: And the Candlestick over against the Table, it is as though [the word] ‘Tamid’ were written in connection there-with. And the other [Tanna]? -That [verse] comes merely to fix its place. But I can, [on the contrary,] deduce it from the fact that [the Table] is a wooden utensil made for resting [things on it], and any wooden utensil made for resting [things on it] is not subject to uncleanness! — What is the reason? — We require it to be like a sack: Just as a sack is movable both full and empty, so everything that is movable both full and empty [is susceptible to uncleanness]. This, too, is movable both full and empty. As Resh Lakish [said]: for Resh Lakish said: What is the meaning of the verse, Upon the clean, table? The inference is that it is susceptible to uncleanness. But why? It is a wooden utensil made for resting...
[things on it], and cannot, therefore, contract uncleanness! It teaches, therefore, that they used to lift it and show thereon to the Festival pilgrims the showbread, and to say to them: Behold the love in which you are held by the Omnipresent; it is taken away as [fresh as] it is set down. For R. Joshua b. Levi said: A great miracle was performed in regard to the showbread: As [fresh as] it was set down, so was it taken away. For it is said: To put hot bread it the day when it was taken away. But I can deduce this from the fact that it is overlaid! For behold we have learnt: If a table or a side-table was damaged, or was overlaid with marble, but room was left for setting cups thereon, it remains susceptible to uncleanness. R. Judah said: There must be room [also] for setting portions [of food thereon]. And should you say, acacia wood is valuable and is not nullified by the plating, this would be quite right according to Resh Lakish, who said: They taught this only of utensils of common wood, which come from overseas, but utensils of polished wood are not nullified. But what can one say according to R. Johanan, who said: Even vessels of polished wood become nullified by the plating? And should you say: The one [Mishnah] refers to a fixed covering, the other to a covering that is not fixed, behold Resh Lakish asked R. Johanan: Does it apply only to a fixed covering, or [also] to a covering that is not fixed? Only to overlaid rims, or [also] if the rims are not overlaid? And he answered him: It makes no difference whether the covering is fixed or the covering is not fixed; whether the rims are overlaid or the rims are not overlaid! Rather, [must you say], the Table is different.

(1) I.e., the table of the showbread, which could not be removed for immersion since the showbread was to he on it continually, v. Gemara. Some texts add: ‘And the Candlestick’; but v. p. 168.

(2) On account of the uncleanness contracted during the Festival.

(3) V. Ex. XXX, 1ff.

(4) V. Ex. XXVII, 1ff. and I Kings VIII, 64.

(5) Utensils of earth are not susceptible to uncleanness; v. pp. 170-171 and cf. Sheb. X, 7; Uk, III, 10.

(7) V. Ex. XXV, 30 (‘always’).

(8) Actually, the word ‘Tamid’ is used of the Temple lamp (cf. Ex. XXVII, 20, ‘to cause a lamp to burn continually’); but, as Rashi points out, it has not the same meaning when applied to the Candlestick as when applied to the Table. In the case of the latter, ‘perpetual’ means ‘day and night’, for the showbread remained on the Table from Sabbath to Sabbath. In the case of the former, it merely means ‘every night’, as the expression from evening unto morning’ (ibid. XXVII, 21) indicates (v. Men. 89a); thus, the Candlestick could be removed during the day. For a similar use of the word ‘Tamid’ cf. Ex. XXIX, 38 and Lev. VI, 13. For the difficulty raised by the statement in Tam. 30b that the western lamp of the Candlestick burned an day, v. Tosaf. a.l. (s.v. מְלֹא מִלְיוֹן).

(9) I.e., why does the Tanna of the Baraita include the Candlestick?

(10) Ex. XXVI, 35.

(11) I.e., the meaning of the verse is — so long as the Table is there so long must the Candlestick be over against it.

(12) I.e., why does the Tanna of our Mishnah exclude the Candlestick?

(13) I.e., the insusceptibility of the Table to uncleanness.

(14) So Jast. and Levy; But Rashi explains: a wooden utensil intended to rest in one place; and Goldschmidt translates: ‘Ein ruhendes Holzger_t’.

(15) I.e., in order to be susceptible to uncleanness, we require a wooden utensil to be like a sack, for they are mentioned together in one verse (Lev. XI, 32) in respect of defilement.

(16) This would exclude wooden vessels not intended to be moved at all or such as cannot be moved when fun because of their liability to break i.e., a vessel containing forty se_ahs of liquid or two kors of dry goods.

(17) Lev. XXIV, 6.

(18) I Sam. XXI, 7. I.e., it was still ‘hot breath in the day when it was taken away’.

(19) I.e., that the Table was susceptible to uncleanness even though intended for resting things on it (or to rest in one place).

(20) With gold; since metal utensils are not likened to a sack, they are susceptible to defilement even if they are not intended to be moved.

(21) מְלֹא מִלְיוֹן (delphica, sub. mensa) a three-legged table used as a toilet table or a water, contrad. from מִלְיוֹן (eating
If it is so damaged as to be useless for its original purpose, it becomes insusceptible to uncleanness.

Stone vessels are not susceptible to uncleanness.

I.e., part of the table was left undamaged or uncovered with marble.

Because it is still useful for its original purpose.

Otherwise, it does not serve the purpose of a table, and consequently becomes insusceptible to uncleanness. For a fuller explanation of the principles involved, v. Jtrah, rtp, to the Mishnah, Kel. XXII, 1. According to either view, however, it is evident that an object's insusceptibility to uncleanness is dependent on the covering: if the marble can render a table unsusceptible to defilement, then a fortiori, the gold plating renders the Sanctuary Table susceptible to defilement.

Of which the Table was made: v. Ex. XXV, 23.

That the covering is an-important and nullifies the wood.

Probably coral-wood (so Jast.). Levy ‘Kostbare Holzart’ (s.v. spanan).

Lit., ‘standing’, i.e., fixed e.g., with nails.

The covering of the Temple Table (of which our Mishnah speaks) was not fixed.

I.e., the Mishnah of the table and side-table, which teaches that the susceptibility of the table to uncleanness depends on the covering.

Talmud - Mas. Chagigah 27a

for the Divine Law cans it Wood.¹ For it is written: The altar, three cubits high, and the length thereof two cubits, was of food, and so the corners; the length thereof and the walls thereof, were also of wood; and he said unto me: ‘This is the table that is before the Lord’.² — [The verse] begins with the altar and ends with the table! R. Johanan and Resh Lakish both explain: At the time when the Temple stood, the altar used to make atonement for a person; now a person's table makes atonement for him.³ ALL THE VESSELS IN THE TEMPLE HAD SECOND SETS ETC. THE ALTAR OF BRONZE¹³ for it is written: An altar of earth thou shalt make unto Me.⁶ ‘THE ALTAR OF GOLD’, for it is written: The candlestick and the altars;⁷ thus, the altars are likened one to another. BUT THE SAGES SAY: BECAUSE THEY WERE OVERLAID [WITH METAL]. On the contrary, since they were overlaid, they were susceptible to uncleanness!¹⁸ — Read: ‘But the Sages declared them Unclean because they were overlaid’. Or, alternatively, I can explain: The Rabbis say it to R. Eliezer: What have you in mind?⁹ The fact that they were overlaid?¹⁰ But their Plating was quite nullified in regard to them.¹¹ R. Abbahu said that R. Eleazar said: The fire of Gehinnom¹² has no power over the Scholars. It is an ad majus conclusion [to be drawn] from the salamander.¹³ If now [in the case of] the salamander, which is [only] an offspring of fire, he who anoints himself with its blood is not affected by fire, how much more so the Scholars, whose whole body is fire, for it is written: Is not My word like as fire? saith the Lord.¹⁴ Resh Lakish said. The fire of Gehinnom has no power over the transgressors of Israel. It is an ad majus conclusion [to be drawn] from the altar of gold. If the altar of gold, on which there is only a denar thickness of gold,¹⁵ is not affected through so many years by the fire, how much less so the transgressors of Israel, who are full of good deeds¹⁶ as a pomegranate [is of seeds]; for it is written, Thy temples are like a pomegranate split open.¹⁷ Read not ‘thy temples’ [rakkathek] but ‘thy worthless ones’ [rekanim shebak].¹⁸

¹ Even when overlaid. Hence, it has to be regarded as a wooden utensil made for resting things on it, and, but for the fact that it used to be lifted to exhibit the showbread on it, would not be susceptible to uncleanness.
² Ezek. XLI, 22.
³ Through the hospitality shown to poor guests. Cf. R. Johanan's statements about ‘a mouthful of food’ at the end of San. 103b (Sonc. ed., p. 705).
⁴ Sc. is accounted as the ground.
⁵ Understood here to refer to the altar of bronze; but v. Tosaf s.v. spanan.
For were they not overlaid with metal, they would belong to the category of wooden utensils made for resting things on them which are insusceptible to uncleanness (v. p. 168).

I.e., what is your reason for declaring the altars to be insusceptible to uncleanness solely on the ground that Scripture terms them earth, but not because they are utensils made for resting things on them?

And are consequently to be regarded as metal vessels, which are susceptible to uncleanness.

Because Scripture terms them ‘wood’ (Ezek. XLI, 22; cf. p. 170).

A fabulous animal generated in fire which, according to the Midrash, must burn incessantly for seven days and nights; but Rashi here postulates seven years, and the Aruch (s.v.) seventy years. For a fun account of the legend, v. J. E. vol. X, pp. 646-7.

Lit., ‘thy empty ones’. The thought is the reverse of Eccl. VII, 20; there is none in Israel that sinneth, and yet doeth not good, for even the transgressors, devoid of merit as they may seem, still have innumerable good deeds to their credit.
CHAPTER I

MISHNAH. FIFTEEN [CATEGORIES OF] WOMEN EXEMPT THEIR RIVALS\(^1\) AND THE RIVALS OF THEIR RIVALS\(^2\) AND SO ON, AD INFINITUM,\(^3\) FROM THE HALIZAH\(^4\) AND FROM THE LEVIRATE MARRIAGE;\(^5\) AND THESE ARE THEY: HIS DAUGHTER,\(^6\) THE DAUGHTER OF HIS DAUGHTER\(^7\) AND THE DAUGHTER OF HIS SON;\(^7\) THE DAUGHTER OF HIS WIFE,\(^8\) THE DAUGHTER OF HER SON AND THE DAUGHTER OF HER DAUGHTER; HIS MOTHER-IN-LAW,\(^9\) HIS MOTHER-IN-LAW'S MOTHER,\(^10\) AND HIS FATHER-IN-LAW'S MOTHER,\(^10\) HIS MATERNAL SISTER,\(^11\) HIS MOTHER'S SISTER,\(^11\) HIS WIFE'S SISTER AND HIS MATERNAL BROTHER'S WIFE;\(^12\)

---

(1) Heb., zarah, זרה, ‘rival’. Where a husband has more than one wife, each woman is a zarah in relation to the other. The term is derived from הזרות, which signifies oppression, hence ‘rival’, ‘adversary’, as in I Sam. I, 6 (cf. Kimhi a.l.). or ‘to tie up’, ‘to bind’, hence ‘associate’, ‘co-wife’.

(2) The co-wives of a rival through a second marriage.

(3) numerus, lit., ‘to the end of the world’.

(4) בגדא, rt. בגדא, ‘to take off’ or ‘to loosen’, the ceremony of drawing off the shoe of the brother of her husband who died without issue. According to Biblical law (v. Deut. XXV, 5-9) the brother-in-law must either marry the widow (v. following note) or be subjected to halizah.

(5) ובנה, rt. ובנה, ‘to marry the levir’. Any woman coming under the fifteen categories enumerated below is not only herself exempt from halizah and yibbum but exempts also her own rivals as well as the rivals of her rivals, ad infinitum, as explained anon.

(6) Who had been married to his brother who subsequently died childless. Since he is forbidden to marry his daughter he is thereby also forbidden to marry any of her rivals, the widows of his deceased childless brother. ‘HIS DAUGHTER’ includes even one born to him as a result of outrage, v. infra.

(7) Cf. previous note. All the fifteen categories enumerated are among the near relatives whom a man is forbidden to marry in accordance with the explicit and implicit prohibitions in Lev. XVIII, 6ff.

(8) From a former husband.

(9) Who, after the death of her husband, had married his brother who subsequently died childless.

(10) The prohibition to marry in this case is derived in Sanhedrin 75a from Lev. XVIII, 17.

(11) Who was married to his paternal brother. The laws of the levirate marriage and halizah are applicable to a paternal, but not to a maternal brother.

(12) Who, after the death of her husband, had married his paternal brother.

THE WIFE OF HIS BROTHER WHO WAS NOT HIS CONTEMPORARY,\(^1\) AND HIS DAUGHTER-IN-LAW.\(^2\) ALL THESE EXEMPT THEIR RIVALS AND THE RIVALS OF THEIR RIVALS, AND SO ON, AD INFINITUM, FROM THE HALIZAH AND FROM THE LEVIRATE MARRIAGE. IF, HOWEVER, ANY AMONG THESE\(^3\) DIED,\(^4\) OR MADE A DECLARATION OF REFUSAL,\(^5\) OR WERE DIVORCED, OR WERE FOUND INCAPABLE OF PROCREATION, THEIR RIVALS ARE PERMITTED;\(^6\) THOUGH, OF COURSE, ONE CANNOT SAY OF A MAN'S MOTHER-IN-LAW, OF THE MOTHER OF HIS MOTHER-IN-LAW AND OF THE MOTHER OF HIS FATHER-IN-LAW THAT THEY WERE FOUND INCAPABLE OF PROCREATION OR THAT THEY MADE A DECLARATION OF REFUSAL.\(^7\)

HOW IS THE EXEMPTION OF THEIR RIVALS [BY THE WOMEN MENTIONED], TO BE UNDERSTOOD? IF A MAN'S DAUGHTER OR ANY OTHER OF THESE FORBIDDEN RELATIVES WAS MARRIED TO HIS BROTHER WHO HAD ALSO ANOTHER WIFE [AT THE TIME] WHEN HE DIED, THEN AS HIS DAUGHTER IS EXEMPT SO IS HER RIVAL EXEMPT. IF HIS DAUGHTER'S RIVAL WENT AND MARRIED A SECOND BROTHER OF HIS, WHO ALSO HAD YET ANOTHER WIFE WHEN HE DIED, THEN AS THE RIVAL OF HIS DAUGHTER IS EXEMPT SO IS ALSO HIS DAUGHTER'S RIVAL'S RIVAL EXEMPT, EVEN IF THERE WERE A HUNDRED [BROTHERS].

HOW [IS ONE TO UNDERSTAND THE STATEMENT THAT] IF THEY HAD DIED, THEIR RIVALS ARE PERMITTED? IF A MAN'S DAUGHTER OR ANY OTHER OF THESE FORBIDDEN RELATIVES WAS MARRIED TO HIS BROTHER WHO HAD ALSO ANOTHER WIFE, THEN, IF HIS DAUGHTER DIED OR WAS DIVORCED, AND HIS BROTHER DIED SUBSEQUENTLY, HER RIVAL IS PERMITTED.

THE RIVAL OF ANY ONE WHO IS ENTITLED TO MAKE A DECLARATION OF REFUSAL BUT DID NOT EXERCISE HER RIGHT, MUST PERFORM HALIZAH [IF HER HUSBAND DIED CHILDLESS], AND MAY NOT CONTRACT LEVIRATE MARRIAGE.

GEMARA. Consider: All these are deduced from the [exemption of] a wife's sister. Why then was not HIS WIFE'S SISTER mentioned first? And if it be replied that the Tanna enumerated [the forbidden relatives] in the order of the degrees of their respective severity, and that it [our Mishnah] represents the view of R. Simeon who regards burning as the severest, [it may be retorted that], if that is the case, HIS MOTHER-IN-LAW should have been mentioned first, since [Scripture] enunciated the principle of burning in the case of a mother-in-law. And, furthermore, HIS DAUGHTER-IN-LAW should have come immediately after HIS MOTHER-IN-LAW, since, next to burning, stoning is the severest penalty! — But [this in fact is the proper reply]: Since [the prohibition of intercourse with] ‘HIS DAUGHTER’ has been arrived at by exposition it is given preference.

(1) Lit., ‘in his world’, i.e., who died before he was born. Such a brother's widow and her rivals etc. are exempt. If, for instance, C was born after his brother A had died childless, so that his widow, N married (in accordance with the laws of the levirate marriage) a contemporary brother of his, B, who had another wife, or wives, and B also died childless, all B's widows are exempt from halizah and yibbum as far as C is concerned on account of N who is forbidden to him.
(2) Who married his brother after the death of his son. The marriage of a daughter-in-law is forbidden for ever, even after the death of one's son.
(3) Lit., ‘(in the case of) all of them’.
(4) Prior to the death of her husband who subsequently died childless.
(5) Such a declaration, mi’un mi’un, may be made against her husband (without any further necessity for a divorce) by a wife, while she is a minor, or as soon as she becomes of age, prior to cohabitation, in cases where she was betrothed either (a) as an orphan, by her mother or brothers or (b) even in the lifetime of her father (v. infra 109a) if she was once divorced (after her father had contracted for her a betrothal) and was betrothed again while still a minor.
(6) I.e., levirate marriage may be contracted, or halizah must be performed.
(7) For, having given birth they must be of age.
(8) Whenever one of the surviving brothers is not related to either of the widows, but another brother is, it is his duty to perform the levirate marriage or to submit to halizah.
(9) Everyone of whom had also another wife or wives and the rival's rival married them in turn, ad infinitum.

(11) A minor (V. supra, p. 2, n. 6).

(15) Lit., ‘let him teach’.
(16) In the list.
(17) Lit., ‘took’.

(19) The death penalty incurred for sexual intercourse with one of the first eight categories enumerated in our Mishnah. V. Sanh. 75a.
(20) Of the four death penalties. V. Sanh. 49b.
(21) Lit., ‘if so’.
(22) Lev. XX, 14.
(23) The penalty for intercourse with one's daughter-in-law. V. Sanh. 53a.
(24) I.e., born as a result of outrage. V. supra p. 1, n. 6.
(25) V. infra.
(26) Lit., ‘beloved to him’.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 3a

[The law, surely,] concerning all the others also was arrived at by exposition — Granted that in respect of [exemption from] the levirate marriage [the law in relation to them] was arrived at by exposition, the principle of prohibition [of sexual intercourse] with them has been explicitly enunciated in Scripture, [while as regards] his daughter the very principle underlying the prohibition [of intercourse with her] has been arrived at by exposition; for Raba stated: R. Isaac b. Abdimi told me, ‘Hennah is derived from hennah and zimmah’.

Now that it has been stated that preference is given to whatever is arrived at by exposition, the Tanna should have placed his wife's sister last! — As he was dealing with a prohibition due to sisterhood he mentioned also his wife's sister. Then let him relegate the entire passage to the end! — But [this is really the explanation]: The Tanna follows the order of the respective degrees of kinship. He, therefore, mentions [first] his daughter, the daughter of his daughter and the daughter of his son because they are his own next of kin; and since he enumerated three generations of his relatives in descending order he enumerated also three generations of her relatives in descending order. Having enumerated three generations of her relatives in descending order he proceeded to enumerate also three generations of her relatives in ascending order. He then mentions his sister and his mother's sister who are his blood relatives; and while dealing with prohibitions due to brotherhood he also mentions his wife's sister. And it would indeed have been proper that his daughter-in-law should be placed before the wife of his brother who was not his contemporary, since it is not on account of kinship that the latter is forbidden, but as he was dealing with a prohibition due to brotherhood he mentioned also the wife of his brother who was not his contemporary and then mentioned his daughter-in-law.

What argument can be advanced for using the expression exempt and not that of ‘prohibit’? — If ‘prohibit’ had been used it might have been assumed that the levirate marriage only was forbidden but that halizah must nevertheless be performed, hence it was taught that halizah also need not be performed. Let it then be stated, ‘She is forbidden to perform halizah’! — No harm, surely, is thereby done. But why indeed should not [the expression of prohibition be applicable to halizah]? If you were to say that halizah is permissible, [one might say that] levirate marriage is also permitted! — As a rival is forbidden only where the commandment of the levirate marriage is applicable but is permitted where the commandment is not applicable, it was therefore necessary to use the expression, exempt.

What justification is there for stating, FROM THE HALIZAH AND FROM THE LEVIRATE MARRIAGE when it would have been sufficient to state FROM THE LEVIRATE MARRIAGE only? — If FROM THE LEVIRATE MARRIAGE only had been stated it might have been assumed that she must perform halizah though she is exempt from the levirate marriage, hence it was taught that whoever is subject to the obligation of levirate marriage is also subject to halizah and whosoever is not subject to the obligation of the levirate marriage is not subject to halizah.
Let it [first] be stated FROM THE LEVIRATE MARRIAGE [and then] FROM THE HALIZAH, or else only FROM THE HALIZAH? — This Mishnah represents the view of Abba Saul who maintains that the commandment of halizah takes precedence over that of levirate marriage.

What [was intended] to be excluded [by the] numeral at the beginning and what [again was intended] to be excluded [by the] numeral at the end?

(1) In respect to their exemption from the levirate marriage.
(2) By deduction from the law of a wife's sister.
(3) V. n. 2.
(4) Others, ‘Rab’, who was a disciple of R. Isaac b. Abdimi, v. Tosaf. s.v. דַּעְמֵי קָרָא a.l.
(5) דְּבָרִים (‘they’ or ‘theirs’) in Lev. XVIII, 10 which deals according to Talmudic interpretation with the daughter of his son, or of his daughter that was born from an outraged woman, but not with the daughter herself.
(6) Ibid. v. 17 which places a daughter on the same footing as a son's and a daughter's daughter. By this analogy the inference is arrived at that intercourse even with a daughter from an outraged woman is forbidden.
(7) דְּבָרִים (‘lewdness’ or ‘wickedness’), ibid. where the penalty of burning is not mentioned.
(8) Ibid. XX, 14 where the penalty of burning with fire is explicitly stated. Thus it is shown that the very foundation of the prohibition of sexual intercourse with a daughter from an outraged woman, as well as the death penalty of burning which the crime involves, are entirely dependent on inferences arrived at by exposition, v. Sanh. 51a.
(9) Lit., ‘let him teach’.
(10) In the list in our Mishnah; since, as will be shewn infra, the exemption from levirate marriage in respect of all the others is derived by exposition from ‘his wife’s sister’.
(12) Which deals with the prohibitions through sisterhood.
(13) Of the list.
(14) His wife's.
(15) Lit., ‘his own’.
(16) While a daughter-in-law is not consanguineous.
(17) A daughter-in-law should, consequently, receive priority.
(18) In our Mishnah.
(19) Which might imply that the levirate marriage in these cases is not obligatory but optional.
(20) v. supra p. 4, n. 13.
(21) Since, in fact, no marriage with a deceased brother's widow is permitted whenever the obligation of the levirate marriage does not exist.
(22) V. Glos.
(23) Since a prohibition could not very well apply to halizah which is a harmless act, the expression of ‘prohibit’ in respect of halizah would have been interpreted as a ‘prohibition to be married to anyone before halizah had been performed’.
(24) By the use of the expression, ‘exempt’.
(25) In our Mishnah.
(26) And, consequently, the expression ‘prohibit’ which is preferable to that of ‘exempt’ (v. supra notes 6 and 8) could well be used for the levirate marriage.
(27) Lit., ‘what does he do’, i.e., there is no reason why halizah should be forbidden. Hence the expression of ‘prohibit’ could not properly be used.
(28) The expression of ‘prohibit’ in relation to halizah could, consequently, properly have been used. Why then was ‘exempt’ preferred to ‘prohibit’?
(29) Of one's daughter, for instance.
(30) If his daughter, e.g., had married one who was not his near of kin, her rival, on the death of her husband, is not forbidden to marry the father; v. infra 13a.
(31) ‘Prohibit’ might have implied that a daughter, e.g., always causes her rival to be prohibited to her father whether the precept of the levirate marriage is applicable or not.

(32) Lit., ‘let him teach’.

(33) It is obvious that if one is exempt from the levirate marriage there could be no question of being subject to halizah which is only the result of a refusal to contract the prescribed marriage.

(34) In order that the law of the levirate marriage be not entirely abrogated.

(35) By the use of the expression, exempt’.

(36) Lit., ‘goes up’ sc. to the gate, i.e., the court (cf. Deut. XXV, 7.)

(37) In our Mishnah.

(38) The marriage surely is of greater importance than the halizah, the latter being only an alternative of the former. V. Deut. XXV. 7.

(39) The exemption from the marriage being then self-evident.

(40) Infra 39b, 109a. And if only FROM THE HALIZAH had been stated, there would be no basis for this inference.

(41) Of our Mishnah, ‘FIFTEEN’.

(42) Of the list; ‘ALL THESE’, implying the ‘FIFTEEN’ mentioned. If nothing were to be excluded, there would be no need for the addition of a cardinal at the beginning, or of a reference to it at the end of a list which presumably enumerated all possible cases.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 3b

— [They were intended] to exclude the respective rulings of Rab and R. Assi, 1 What, [however, do the numerals] exclude according to Rab and R. Assi? — If they share each other's views, one numeral would serve to exclude the rival of one who made a declaration of refusal, 2 and the other to exclude the rival of a wife whom [her husband] remarried after having divorced her. 3 If they do not share the views of each other, [each would regard] one [numeral as serving] to exclude the ruling of his colleague; 4 and the other numeral, as serving to exclude either the rival of one who made a declaration of refusal 2 or the rival of a wife whom [her husband] remarried after having divorced her. 3

According to Rab and R. Assi these 5 should have been enumerated in our Mishnah! — [This could not be done] because the law of the rival's rival 6 is not applicable [to these cases]. 7

Whence is this law 8 derived? 9 — [From] what our Rabbis taught: And thou shalt not take a woman to her sister, to be a rival to her, to uncover her nakedness, ‘aleha [beside her] in her lifetime, 10 what need was there for the expression ‘‘aleha’’? 11 Because it was stated, Her husband's brother shall go in ‘‘aleha [unto her], 12 it might have been imagined 13 that Scripture 14 speaks even of any of all the forbidden relatives enumerated in the Torah. Hence it was stated, ‘‘aleha’’ 15 and elsewhere 12 it was also stated ‘‘aleha’’. 16 Just as elsewhere it is in the case of a precept 17 so here also it is in the case of a precept; 17 and yet did not the All Merciful say, Thou shalt not take. 18 We are thus in a position to know the law concerning herself; 19 whence do we derive the law concerning her rival? — From the Scriptural expression, To be a rival to her. 10 We have so far deduced the law concerning her rival only. Whence do we arrive at the law concerning her rival's rival? — From the fact that Scripture uses the expression li-zeror 20 and not that of la-zor. 21 Thus we have deduced the law concerning a wife's sister, whence is the law concerning the other forbidden relatives to be inferred? — It can be answered: As a wife's sister is singled out in that she is a forbidden relative, the penalty for presumptuous intercourse with her is kareth 22 and for unwitting intercourse a sin-offering, and she is forbidden to the levir, so also any woman who is a forbidden relative, and the penalty for presumptuous intercourse with whom is kareth 22 and for unwitting intercourse a sin-offering, is forbidden to the levir. Now we know the law concerning themselves only; 23 whence is the law concerning their rivals deduced? — It may be answered: As a wife's sister is singled out in that she is a forbidden relative, kareth is incurred by presumptuous intercourse with her and a sin-offering for unwitting intercourse, and she is forbidden to the levir, and her rival is forbidden, so also in the case of any woman who is a forbidden relative, and for presumptuous intercourse with whom is incurred the penalty of kareth and for unwitting intercourse a sin-offering, and who is forbidden to the levir, her rival is forbidden. Hence have the Sages said: FIFTEEN [CATEGORIES OF] WOMEN EXEMPT THEIR RIVALS AND THEIR RIVALS’ RIVALS, AND SO ON, AD INFINITUM, FROM THE HALIZAH AND FROM THE LEVIRATE MARRIAGE. One might assume that the six more rigidly forbidden relatives are also included in the ruling, so that their rivals also are forbidden, hence it must be stated: As a wife's sister is singled out in that she is a forbidden relative, kareth is incurred for presumptuous intercourse with her and a sin-offering for unwitting intercourse, she may be married to the other brothers, but is forbidden to the levir, and her rival is forbidden, so also in the case of any woman who is a forbidden relative, for presumptuous intercourse with whom is incurred the penalty of kareth and for unwitting intercourse a sin-offering, who may marry one of the other brothers, but is forbidden to the levir, her rival also is forbidden; excluded, however, are the six more rigidly forbidden relatives. Since they may not be married to the other brothers, their rivals are permitted; for [the law of] ‘rival’ is applicable only [to widows] of a brother.

Thus we have deduced the prohibition. Whence, however, is the penalty inferred? — Scripture said, For whosoever shall do any of these abominations etc. [shall be cut off from among their people.]

The reason, then, is because the All Merciful has written, ‘‘aleha’, otherwise it would have been said that levirate marriage may be contracted with the wife's sister; what is the reason? Is it because we assume that a positive precept supersedes a negative precept? Surely, it is possible that the rule that a positive precept supersedes a negative precept applies only where the latter is a mere prohibition; does it, however, supersede a prohibition involving the penalty of kareth? Furthermore, whence is it derived that it may supersede even a mere prohibition?

(1) Infra 11a and 12a.
(2) A minor who was one of the wives of a deceased childless brother, on declaring her refusal to marry the levir, exempts thereby her rivals from the levirate marriage but not from halizah.
(3) If one of the widows of a deceased brother was divorced once, and then remarried to him after she had married another man, she causes the exemption of her rivals from the levirate marriage, v. infra 11b. The halizah, however, must be performed.
(4) According to Rab that of R. Assi, and vice versa.
(5) The subjects of their respective rulings, i.e., the sotah (v. Glos.) and the barren wife, who, they maintain, infra 11a, 11b, exempt their rivals both from the levirate marriage and from halizah.
(6) V. our Mishnah.
(7) Since neither a sotah nor a barren woman may marry any one of the brothers.
(8) Of our Mishnah, that forbidden relatives as well as their rivals and rivals’ rivals, ad infinitum, are exempt from the levirate marriage and from halizah.
(9) Lit., ‘whence these words’.
(10) Lev. XVIII, 18.
(11) Which does not add any point to the law enunciated.
(12) Deut. XXV, 5.
(13) Lit., ‘I hear’.
(14) Since it drew no distinction between a brother's wife who was a forbidden relative and one that was not forbidden.
(15) I.e., ‘beside her’.
(16) I.e., ‘unto her’. In both cases the respective terms ‘beside her’ and ‘unto her’ are expressed by the same Heb. word.
(17) That of levirate marriage.
(18) Two sisters, Lev. XVIII, 18. The verse in Lev. thus means that the prohibition of marrying the wife's sister is in force even where she is his dead brother's widow, in regard to whom the precept, ‘her husband's brother shall go in unto her’, might apply.
Lit., ‘there is not to me but she’, sc. the forbidden relative herself.

(20) לְ增资 ‘to be a rival’.

(21) לְ增资 ‘to oppress’, the longer form li-zeror implies many rivals, i.e., rivals of the rivals. The last question and answer are deleted by R. Tam and Nahmanides. Cf. הִשְׂרָהוֹת הָעֵד הָאזְרָה

(22) V. Glos.

(23) The forbidden relatives.

(24) Enumerated infra 13a.

(25) Relating to the other forbidden relatives.

(26) If they and their rivals were married to a stranger.

(27) To marry the man whom the forbidden relatives themselves are not allowed to marry.

(28) Lit., ‘say’.

(29) I.e., the rival's exemption from the levirate marriage and halizah.

(30) Where one of the widows is a forbidden relative of one of the surviving brothers and no forbidden relative of the deceased. As the relative is forbidden to marry the brother, her rival also is forbidden to him as ‘his brother's wife’. Where the relative, however, is married to a stranger, her rival is permitted to those to whom the relative herself is forbidden.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 4a

— Because it is written, Thou shalt not wear a mingled stuff. Thou shalt make thee twisted cords, and R. Eleazar said, ‘Whence is the rule of proximity [of texts] derived from the Torah? As it is said, They are established for ever and ever, they are done in truth and uprightness.’ Furthermore, R. Shesheth stated in the name of R. Eleazar who stated it in the name of R. Eleazar b. Azariah: Whence is it proved that a sister-in-law, who falls to the lot of a levir who is afflicted with boils, is not muzzled? From the Biblical text, Thou shalt not muzzle the ox when he treadeth out the corn, and in close proximity to it is written If brethren dwell together. Furthermore R. Joseph said: Even he who does not base interpretations on the proximity [of Biblical texts] anywhere else does base them [on the texts] in Deuteronomy, for R. Judah who does not elsewhere base any interpretations [on textual proximity], bases such interpretations on the Deuteronomic text. And whence is it proved that elsewhere he does not advance such interpretation? — From what has been taught: Ben ‘Azzai said, It was stated, Thou shall not suffer a sorceress to live, and it is also stated, Whosoever lieth with a beast shall surely be put to death; one subject was placed in close proximity to the other, and to tell you that as the necromancer and the charmer are subject to the death penalty of stoning, so also is a sorceress also subject to the penalty of stoning.

And whence is it proved that in Deuteronomy he does advance such interpretation? — From what we learned: A man may marry a woman who has been outraged or seduced by his father or his son. R. Judah prohibits in the case of a woman outraged or seduced by one's father. And in connection with this, R. Giddal said in the name of Rab: What is R. Judah's reason? Because it is written, A man shall not take his father's wife, and shall not uncover his father's skirt, the ‘skirt’ which his father saw he shall not uncover. And whence is it inferred that this is written with reference to an outraged woman? — From the preceding section of the text where it is written, Then the man that lay with her shall give unto the damsel's father fifty shekels of silver near which it is stated, A man shall not take etc. And the Rabbis? — If one text had occurred in close proximity to the other the exposition would have been justified; now, however, that it does not occur in close proximity [it must be concluded that] the context speaks of a woman who is awaiting the decision of the levir and that, in marrying such a woman, a son transgresses two negative precepts.

And what is the reason why [R. Judah] derives laws [from the proximity of texts] in Deuteronomy? — If you wish I might say: Because [there the deduction] is obvious; and if you prefer I might say: Because [there the text] is superfluous. ‘If you prefer I might say: Because [there the deduction] is obvious’ , for, otherwise, the All Merciful should have written the prohibition in the section of forbidden relatives. ‘And if you prefer I might say: Because [there the text] is superfluous’, for otherwise the All Merciful should have written, A man shall not take his father's wife.

And shall not uncover his father's skirt?

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 4b

Hence it must be concluded that the text was meant to provide a superfluous text.

Similarly in the case of zizith, if you wish I might reply: Because [there the deduction] is obvious. And if you prefer I might reply: Because [there the text] is superfluous.

But [surely] both these texts are required? For if the All Merciful had only written, Neither shall there come upon thee it might have been assumed that all kinds of ‘putting on’ were forbidden by the All Merciful, even that of clothes dealers, hence the All Merciful, has written, Thou shalt not wear a mingled stuff, [shewing that the ‘putting on’ must be] of the same nature as that of wearing for personal comfort. And if the All Merciful had only written, Thou shalt not wear it might have been assumed that only wear [is forbidden] because the pleasure derived therefrom is great, but not mere ‘putting on’, hence the All Merciful has written, Neither shall there come upon thee! — If so, the All Merciful should have written, ‘Thou shalt not wear a mingled stuff’ what need was there for adding, ‘Wool and linen’? For observe: It is written, Neither shall there come upon thee a garment of two kinds of stuff mingled together, and in connection with this a Tanna of the School of R. Ishmael taught: Whereas garments generally were mentioned in the Torah, and in one particular case Scripture specified wool and linen, all must consequently be understood as having been made of wool and linen, what need, then, was there for the All Merciful's specific mention of wool and linen? Consequently it must be concluded that its object was to provide a superfluous text.

But the text is still required [for another purpose]! For it might have been assumed [that the limitation applies] only to ‘putting on’, where the benefit is not great, but that in respect of wear, the benefit from which is great, any two kinds were forbidden by the All Merciful, hence has the All Merciful written, ‘wool and linen’! — If so, Scripture should have omitted it altogether and [the law would have been] deduced [by analogy between] ‘mingled stuff’ and ‘mingled stuff’ [the latter of which occurs in connection with the law] of ‘putting on’.

As to the Tanna of the School of R. Ishmael, is the reason [why ‘mingled stuff’ is permitted in zizith] because the All Merciful has written ‘wool and linen’, but if He had not done so, would it have been assumed that the All Merciful had forbidden two kinds of stuff in the zizith? But, surely, it is written, And they shall make them fringes in the corners of their garments and a Tanna of the School of R. Ishmael taught: Wherever ‘garment’ [is written] such as is made of wool or flax [is meant], and yet the All Merciful said that in them ‘purple’ shall be inserted, and purple, surely, is wool. And whence is it deduced that purple is wool? Since linen is flax, purple must be wool.
[The text] was necessary; for it might have been assumed [that the interpretation is] according to Raba. For Raba pointed out a contradiction: It is written, the corner,36 [which implies that the fringes must be of the same] kind of [material as that of the] corner,37 but then it is also written, wool and linen.38 How then [are these texts to be reconciled?] Wool and linen discharge [the obligation to provide fringes] both for a garment of the same, as well as of a different kind of material, while other kinds [of material]39 discharge [the obligation for a garment made] of the same kind [of material] but not for one made of a different kind [of material].40

But the Tanna of the School of R. Ishmael,41 surely, does not hold the same view as Raba!42 — [The text]43 is still necessary; for it might have been assumed that Raba's line of argument44 should be followed: ‘The corner’ [implies that the fringes must be made of the same] kind of [material as the] corner, and that what the All Merciful meant was this: ‘Make wool fringes for wool garments and linen ones for linen; only when you make wool fringes for wool garments you must dye them’; but no wool fringes may be made for linen or linen fringes for wool, hence the All Merciful has written ‘wool and linen’ [to indicate] that even wool fringes [may be] made for linen garments or linen fringes for woollen garments.45

In the description of the materials of the High Priests’ garments (Ex. XXXIX, 1ff).

As the garments were either of wool or flax, and linen (flax) was specified in the case of one, all the others must have been wool. Now since it has been shewn that purple is wool, it obviously follows that woollen zizith or fringes are permissible in a garment of flax. What was the need, then, for a specific text to prove the permissibility of mingling wool and flax in zizith?

Num. XV, 38.

I.e., if the material of the corner is wool the fringes must be wool; if of flax the fringes must be of flax.

Cf. Deut. XXII, 11f: Mingled stuff, wool and linen thou shalt make the twisted cords, which shews that the fringes may be made either of wool or of flax whatever the material of the corner might be.

Silk for instance.

So also according to the Tanna of R. Ishmael's school, (as will be explained in the Gemara anon) if Scripture had not specified ‘wool and linen’ it might have been assumed that in a woollen garment the fringes must be made of wool while in a garment of flax they must be made of flax, hence wool and linen were specified to shew on the basis of semukim that mingled stuffs also are allowed in zizith.

At the moment it is assumed that the suggestion is that he is in agreement with Raba’s argument in all respects.

For, according to him, since ‘garment’ denotes only such as is made of wool and linen, garments made of other materials require no fringes (zizith). What need, then, was there for the expression of wool and linen to differentiate these from other materials?

Wool and linen.

Though not his view, applying his method of reasoning only in regard to a garment made of wool or linen.

I.e., that mingled stuffs are permissible in the performance of the precept of zizith.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 5a

This is satisfactory according to the view of the Tanna of the School of R. Ishmael; as to the Rabbis, however, how do they arrive at the deduction? — They derive it from his head; for it was taught: [Scripture stated], ‘His head’, what need was there for it? — Whereas it has been stated, Ye shall not round the corners of your head, one might infer that [this law applies to] a leper also, hence it was explicitly stated, his head; and this Tanna is of the opinion that rounding all the head is also regarded as ‘rounding’. This [conclusion, however] may be refuted: The reason why the prohibition of ‘rounding’ [may be superseded is] because it is not applicable to everybody! But [the inference] is derived from his beard; as it was taught: ‘His beard’, what need was there for stating it? — Whereas it was said, Neither shall they shave off the corners of their beard, one might infer that this prohibition applies also to a leprous priest, hence it was explicitly stated, ‘his beard’. And since there is no object in applying it to a prohibition which is not incumbent upon everybody, let it be applied to a prohibition which is incumbent upon all. But this is still required [for its own context]! For since it might have been assumed that as priests are different from [other people], Scripture having imposed upon them additional commandments, and so even a prohibition which does not apply to everybody is not superseded in their case; [therefore] it was necessary to teach us that it does supersede. In truth the inference comes from ‘his head’ [in the manner deduced by] the following Tanna. For It was taught: His head: what need was there for mentioning it? Whereas Scripture had stated, There shall no razor come upon his head, one might infer that the same prohibition is applicable to a leprous nazirite also, hence it was explicitly stated, ‘his head’. This, however, may be refuted: The reason why a [leprous] nazirite [may shave his head] is because he is also in a position to obtain absolution. For, were not this the reason, what then of the accepted rule, that no positive precept may supersede a negative and positive precept combined; why not deduce the contrary from the law of the [leprous] nazirite? Consequently, [it must be conceded that] the reason why no deduction may be made [from the law of the nazirite is] because it may be refuted [on the grounds] that in his case absolution is possible; so here also the refutation may be advanced, ‘Since in his case absolution is possible’? — The deduction, in fact, is made.
(1) The deduction from semukim that a positive precept supersedes a negative one.
(2) Since on the lines of his interpretation the text, ‘wool and linen’ is superfluous and consequently free for the deduction mentioned.
(3) Who do not interpret ‘garment’ as denoting such as is of wool and flax.
(4) The text, ‘wool and linen’, being required for the completion of the plain meaning of the text, there remains no superfluous expression for the deduction. V. supra n. 2.
(5) Lev. XIV, 9, dealing with the purification of the leper.
(6) It was previously stated, and shave off all his hair (Lev. XIV, 8) which obviously includes that of the head.
(7) Lev. XIX. 27.
(8) The prohibition to round the corners of the head.
(9) Indicating that, despite the general prohibition, it is the leper's duty to round his head.
(10) Though the text speaks of rounding the corners. Such a rounding then, though generally forbidden, is in the case of a leper, permitted, because Scripture explicitly stated ‘shave all the hair of his head’ (Lev. XIV, 9). Thus it has been proved that the positive precept of the shaving of the leper supersedes the prohibition of rounding off one's head. Similarly, in the case of the levirate marriage, it might have been assumed that the positive precept of marrying the deceased brother's widow supersedes the prohibition of marrying a wife's sister; hence the necessity for a special text (v. supra 3b end and p. 10, n. 7) to prove that it does not.
(11) Lit., ‘what as to the negative (command)’.
(12) Lit., ‘equal in all’; women being exempt. (V. Kid. 35b). The prohibition of the marriage of a wife's sister, however, is applicable to the man and to the woman, the brother-in-law as well as the sister-in-law.
(13) Which also occurs in the regulations for the purification of the leper. (V. Lev. XIV, 9).
(14) Seeing that it was previously mentioned (Lev. XIV, 8) that the leper must ‘shave off all his hair’, which obviously includes that of his beard.
(15) Lev. XXI, 5.
(16) The prohibition of shaving the corners of one's head having been addressed to the priests. V. Lev. XXI, 1ff.
(17) Indicating that in the case of a leprous priest the precept of shaving supersedes the prohibition of ‘shaving’.
(18) That such a prohibition is superseded by a positive precept having been deduced supra from ‘his head’.
(19) Thus it has been proved that a positive precept supersedes any prohibition even if the latter is generally applicable. Marriage between a levir and his deceased brother's widow who is his wife's sister might, consequently, have been assumed to be permitted had not an explicit text pointed to its prohibition.
(20) The text, ‘his beard’.
(21) How, then, can the same text which is required for the purpose mentioned also be used for a general deduction.
(22) Lit., ‘(manner) of that’.
(23) Lev. XIV, 9.
(24) Cf. supra, p. 16, n. 7.
(25) Num. VI, 5 dealing with the laws of the nazirite.
(27) Thus it is proved that a positive precept supersedes a prohibition. Cf. supra, note 7.
(28) The deduction from the nazirite.
(29) Heb. she'elah הֶעֱלָה ‘request’, i.e., the nazirite may request a qualified person to disallow his vow and thus avoid the prohibition of shaving.
(30) Lit., ‘if you will not say so’.
(31) Lit., ‘that which is established for us’.
(32) Lit., ‘let it be deducted’.
(33) The shaving of a nazirite's head is forbidden (a) by the precept that he must grow his hair long and (b) by the prohibition of allowing a razor to come upon his head.
(34) Whence, then, is it proved that a positive precept supersedes a prohibition?

from the first cited text: Since Scripture could have used the expression, Thou shalt make thee fringes, what need was there for that of ‘twisted cords’? Consequently it must have been intended for the purpose of allowing that text to be used for the deduction. But this is required for the determination of the number of threads, thus: 'Twisted cord' implies two threads, and so one twisted cord is to be made of [the four] and from the middle of it separate threads are to hang down! — If so, Scripture should have stated, Thou shalt not wear a mingled stuff wool and linen: what need was there to add 'together'? Consequently it must have been intended for the purpose of allowing a free text for the deduction. But this text too is required for the deduction that two stitches form a combination and that one stitch does not! — If so, the All Merciful should have written, Thou shalt not wear wool and linen together; what need was there for inserting 'mingled stuff'? Hence it must be concluded that the purpose was to allow a free text for deduction. But is not this text still required for the deduction that 'mingled stuff' is not forbidden unless it was hackled, spun and twisted? — But [the fact is that] all this is deduced from the expression of 'mingled stuff'.

So far it has been shewn that a positive precept supersedes a mere prohibition, where, however, do we find that it supersedes also a prohibition involving kareth and that in consequence the explicit expression aleha should be required to forbid it. And if it be replied that this might be deduced from circumcision, [it may be retorted]: Circumcision stands in a different category, for concerning it thirteen covenants were made! From the paschal lamb the paschal lamb also stands in a different category since it too involves kareth! From the daily offering the daily offering also stands in a different category since it is also a regular offering! [Now though] it cannot be derived from one it might be derived from two. From which shall it be derived? [If the reply is]: Let it be derived from circumcision and the paschal lamb, [it may be retorted]: These also involve kareth. From the paschal lamb and the daily offering? — Both are also intended for the Most High. From circumcision and the daily offering? — Both were also in force before the giving of the law, this being according to the view of him who holds that the burnt-offering which Israel offered in the wilderness was the daily burnt-offering. Nor [can the derivation be made] from all of them, since they were all in force before the giving of the law.

But [this is the reason for] the need of a special text. It might have been assumed that this should be derived from the precept of honouring one's father and mother; for it was taught: Since one might have assumed that the honouring of one's father and mother should supersede the Sabbath, it was explicitly stated, Ye shall fear every man his mother and his father, and ye shall keep My Sabbaths; it is the duty of all of you to honour Me. Now is not the case in point one where the parent said to him, 'Slaughter for me', or 'Cook for me'; and the reason [why the parent must not be obeyed is] because the All Merciful has written, 'Ye shall keep my Sabbaths', but had that not been so it would have superseded?

(1) 'Mingled stuff' in the case of zizith. (V. Deut. XXII, 11, 12 and supra p. 15, n. 3).
(2) Lit., 'if so', i.e., if according to the Rabbis the expression, 'wool and linen', is required for its own context and that text, therefore, is not available for deduction.
(3) The expression used in Num. XV, 38 in the section dealing with the precept of the fringes.
(6) In the fringes.
(7) The twisted cord cannot be made of less than two threads.
(8) The plural, i.e., twice two.
(9) To harmonize this text (Deut. XXII, 12) which implies twisted cords, with that of Num. XV, 38, and that they put with the fringe of each corner a thread of blue, which implies only twisted threads.
(10) The four threads are inserted into the corner of the garment and, having been folded to form a fringe of eight threads, they are joined (by winding one of the threads round the others) into one twisted cord which extends over a section of length and is then separated again into eight separate threads.
(11) Men. 39b. Now, since the expression, ‘twisted cords’, is required for the determination of the number of the threads, how could the Rabbis deduce from it the law of “mingled stuff” in the fringes?

(29) The expression ‘covenant’ (in various grammatical forms) occurs thirteen times in Gen. XVII, the section dealing with the precept of circumcision, v. Ned. 31b.
(30) Hence it may also supersede the Sabbath. It supplies, however, no proof that a positive precept which is not so stringent (such as the marriage with the levir) also supersedes a prohibition involving kareth.

But [the reason\(^{19}\) is because] it might have been assumed that this\(^{20}\) should be derived from the precept of the building of the Sanctuary. For it was taught: Since it might have been assumed that the building of the Sanctuary should supersede the Sabbath, it was explicitly stated, Ye shall keep My Sabbaths, and reverence My Sanctuary;\(^{21}\) it is the duty of all of you to honour Me. Now is not the case in point one of [a father's order to his son to] build or to demolish,\(^{22}\) and yet the reason [why it does not supersede the Sabbath is] because the All Merciful has written, ‘Ye shall keep My Sabbaths’,\(^{23}\) but had that not been written it would have superseded?\(^{24}\) — No; the case in point is one of ass driving.\(^{25}\)

And [you say] that it\(^{26}\) does not supersede a prohibition even in such a case?\(^{27}\) But what of the generally accepted rule that a positive precept supersedes a prohibition? Should we not infer from this case that it does not supersede! And if it be replied that the prohibitions of the Sabbath are different\(^{28}\) because they are of a more stringent nature,\(^{29}\) surely the following Tanna [it may be pointed out] speaks of prohibitions generally\(^{30}\) yet no one advances any refutation.\(^{31}\) For it was taught: Since it might have been assumed that if his father had said to him,\(^{32}\) ‘Defile yourself’,\(^{33}\) or if he said to him, ‘Do not restore,’\(^{34}\) he must obey him, hence it was explicitly stated, Ye shall fear every man his mother, and his father etc.,\(^{35}\) it is the duty of all of you to honour Me!\(^{36}\) — The true reason\(^{37}\) is because this objection may be advanced: Those\(^{38}\) are in a different category\(^{39}\) since they are also essentials in the execution of the precept.\(^{40}\) [But the law relating to] essentials in the execution of a precept could be derived from the previously cited text!\(^{41}\) — That is so indeed. What need, then, was there for the text, Ye shall keep My Sabbaths, and reverence My Sanctuary?\(^{23}\) — It is required for the following deduction.\(^{42}\) As it might have been imagined that a man should reverence the Sanctuary, it was explicitly stated in the Scriptures, Ye shall keep My Sabbaths, and reverence My Sanctuary;\(^{23}\) the expression of ‘keeping’ was used in relation to the Sabbath and [in the same verse] that of ‘reverence’ in relation to the Sanctuary [in order that the following comparison may be made]: As in the case of ‘keeping’ used in relation to the Sabbath

(1) Lit., ‘negative precept’.
(2) I.e., where a father ordered his son to desecrate the Sabbath by driving an ass; a prohibition which, unlike slaughtering or cooking, does not involve the penalty of kareth. V. Shab. 154a.
(3) Lit., ‘and even thus’, se. even the mere prohibition of ass driving.
(4) A mere prohibition not involving the penalty of kareth.
(5) Even a mere prohibition which does not involve the penalty of kareth.
(6) From other prohibitions.
(7) Since the infringement of any one of the laws of the Sabbath is regarded as the sin of idolatry (v. ‘Er. 69b), even a mere prohibition which does not involve kareth, cannot be superseded by a positive precept.
(8) Lit., ‘stands in the world’, i.e., he compares with the prohibitions of the Sabbath others which have no connection with it.
(9) That the prohibitions of the Sabbath being more stringent than others should not be compared with them.
(10) His son who was a priest.
(11) For the dead, which is forbidden to a priest. V. Lev. XXI, 1ff.
(12) A lost animal. V. Deut. XXII, 1.
(13) Lev. XIX, 3.
(14) Thus it has been shewn that prohibitions generally may be compared with those of the Sabbath. The suggestion, therefore, that the parents’ order supra concerned the performance of the act of ass driving is untenable. If, consequently, the order must have consisted of a request to perform an act involving the penalty of kareth, that case well supplies a satisfactory answer to the question (supra 5b) as to what need was there for the text, ‘‘aleha’, in Lev. XVIII, 18.
(15) Why no satisfactory reply to the question, what need is there for the text ‘‘aleha’, may be obtained from the precept of honouring one's parents.
(16) A father's orders to his son to slaughter or to cook on the Sabbath.
(17) From such a precept as the levirate marriage.
(18) Lit., ‘it is a preparation of the precept’. The precept of honouring a father cannot possibly be performed by the son unless he actually executes the act of slaughtering or of cooking, which he has been ordered by his father to do, so that the fulfilment of the positive precept (honouring one's parents) is entirely dependent on its superseding the prohibition (that, e.g., of cooking). Hence it was necessary to have an explicit text to indicate that, even in such a case, a positive precept does not supersede a prohibition. In the case of the levirate marriage, however, the infringement of the prohibition is not absolutely essential to the fulfilment of the precept, since, instead of the marriage, halizah may be arranged, and the question remains, what need is there of the verse ‘‘aleha’.
(19) Why the text, ‘‘aleha’ (Lev. XVIII, 18) was needed to indicate that wherever the deceased childless brother's widow was the living brother's forbidden relative no levirate marriage must take place.
(20) That a positive precept supersedes a prohibition involving kareth and consequently that the levirate marriage may take place even in such a case (v. previous note).
(21) Lev. XIX, 30.
(22) Actions which are among the principal classes of labour that are forbidden on the Sabbath under the penalty of kareth.
(23) Lev. XIX, 30.
(24) Thus it follows that a positive precept does supersede a prohibition even though the latter involves kareth.
(25) Which does not involve kareth.
(26) A positive precept.
(27) Which does not involve kareth.
(28) From other prohibitions.
(31) Cf. supra p. 21, n. 15.
(32) His son who was a priest.
(33) Cf. supra p. 21, n. 17.
(34) Cf. supra p. 21, n. 18.
(35) Lev.XIX, 3.
(36) Cf. supra p. 22, n. 2.
(37) Cf. supra p. 22, n. 3.
(38) Cf.supra p. 22, n. 4.
(39) Cf.supra p. 22, n. 5.
(40) Cf. supra p. 22, n. 6.
(41) Lit., ‘from there’, from Lev. XIX, 3, and this superfluous text serves to extend the principle of a positive precept superseding a negative precept involving kareth to a case such as levirate marriage. Hence the need of the text ‘‘aleha’.
(42) Lit., ‘for as it was taught’.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 6b

one does not reverence the Sabbath but Him who ordered the observance of the Sabbath, so in the case of ‘reverence’ used in relation to the Sanctuary, one is not to reverence the Sanctuary but Him who gave the commandment concerning the Sanctuary. And what is regarded as the ‘reverence of the Sanctuary’? — A man shall not enter the Temple mount with his stick, shoes or money bag or with dust upon his feet, nor may he use it for making a short cut; and spitting [is there forbidden] by inference a minori ad majus. This, however, might apply only to the time when the Sanctuary was in existence; whence is it deduced that the same holds good of the time when the Sanctuary no longer exists? It was expressly stated in Scripture, Ye shall keep My Sabbaths, and reverence My Sanctuary; as the ‘keeping’ that was used in relation to the Sabbath holds good forever, so also the ‘reverence’ used in relation to the Sanctuary must hold good forever.

Really [the reason is because] it might have been assumed that this should be derived from the prohibition of kindling a fire [on the Sabbath]. For a Tanna of the School of R. Ishmael taught:
Wherefore was it stated, Ye shall kindle no fire throughout your habitations? ‘Wherefore ‘was it stated’! Surely if one is to follow R. Jose, it was to intimate that [kindling a fire on the Sabbath is] a prohibition only; and, if one is to follow R. Nathan, it was to intimate that even a single transgression involves one in the prescribed penalties; for it was taught: ‘The prohibition of kindling a fire [on the Sabbath] was mentioned separately in order to [indicate that its transgression is] a prohibition only; so R. Jose, while R. Nathan maintains that the intention was to intimate that even a single transgression involves the offender in the prescribed penalties; And Raba explained that the Tanna found difficult the expression of habitations, [arguing thus]: What need was there for Scripture to state ‘habitations’? [Is not this obvious?] For consider: The observance of the Sanctuary is a personal obligation, and any personal obligation is valid both in the Land [of Israel] and outside the land; what need, then, was there for the All Merciful to write it in connection with the Sabbath? This was explained by a disciple in the name of R. Ishmael: Whereas it was stated in the Scriptures, And if a man have committed a sin worthy of death, and he be put to death, one might infer [that the death penalty may be executed] both on week-days and on the Sabbath and, as regards the application of the text, Everyone that profaneth it shall surely be put to death, [this might be said to refer] to the several kinds of labour other than the execution of a judicial death sentence; or again it might be inferred that it refers even to a judicial execution of a death sentence and, as regards the application of He shall surely be put to death [this might be said to refer] to week-days but not to the Sabbath; or again it might be though to apply also to the Sabbath; hence it was expressly stated, Ye shall kindle no fire throughout your habitations, and further on it is stated,
And these things shall be for a statute of judgment unto you throughout your generations in all your habitations; as the expression of ‘habitations’ mentioned below refers to the Beth din, so the expression ‘habitations’ mentioned here refers also to the Beth din, and concerning this the All Merciful said, ‘Ye shall kindle no fire’. Now, are we not to assume this statement to be in agreement with the view of R. Nathan who holds that the object was to intimate that even a single transgression involves the offender in the prescribed penalties, and the reason is because the All Merciful has written, Ye shall kindle no fire, but had that not been the case it would have superseded the [Sabbath]. — No; this may be according to R. Jose.

Granted, however, [that it is according to the view of] R. Jose, might it not be suggested that R.
Jose said that ‘kindling a fire [on the Sabbath] is mentioned separately in order to indicate that it is a mere prohibition’ [in the case only of] ordinary burning; the burning by the Beth din, however, is surely a case of boiling the metal bar concerning which R. Shesheth said that there is no difference between the boiling of a metal bar and the boiling of dyes? — R. Shimi b. Ashi replied: This Tanna requires Scriptural texts] not because elsewhere he holds that a positive precept supersedes a prohibition, but because this might have been obtained by inference a minori ad majus; and it is this that he meant to say: ‘As regards the application of the text, Every one that profaneth it shall surely be put to death, it might have been said to apply to the several kinds of labour other than that of the execution of a judicial death sentence, but that a judicial death sentence does supersede the Sabbath, by inference a minori ad majus:

(11) The prohibition of kindling a fire, surely, is included in the general prohibition of labour on Sabbath.

(12) I.e., only a negative commandment the transgression of which does not, like the other Sabbath offences, involve the penalties of stoning or kareth. The former, if the offender was warned beforehand of the consequence of his offence, the latter, where no such warning had been given.

(13) Lit., ‘to divide’, i.e., one of the thirty-nine kinds of labour that are forbidden on the Sabbath was singly specified in order to indicate that to incur the prescribed penalties it is not necessary to commit all the thirty-nine transgressions (as the one general, all-embracing prohibition of about might have seemed to imply). The mention of one prohibition (kindling of fire) separately breaks up, so to speak, (divides), all the others into single units, indicating that, as in its own case, so in that of all the others first mentioned together with it, every single transgression involves the penalty of stoning, kareth, or a sin-offering.

(29) I.e., execute no death penalty of burning on the Sabbath. The death penalty of ‘burning’ was executed by pouring molten lead through the condemned man’s mouth into his body, thus burning his internal organs.

(30) Lit., ‘what, (is it) not?’

(31) Of death or kareth. V. supra p. 25, n. 1.

(32) Why the death penalty of burning — a kind of work — which according to R. Nathan would involve kareth must not be executed on the Sabbath.

(33) Though the penalties involved include that of kareth. Thus it follows that a positive precept may supersede even such a prohibition. So also in the case of the levirate marriage it might have been assumed that the precept of marrying one’s deceased childless brother’s widow supersedes the prohibition of marrying a consanguineous relative despite the fact that such a transgression involves elsewhere the penalty of kareth; hence it was necessary for Scripture to add, ‘aleha’ (Lev. XVIII, 18), to indicate that even a levirate marriage is in such a case forbidden. (V. supra 3b and 5b).

principal kinds of labour which are forbidden on the Sabbath (v. Shab. 73a) and involve the penalty of kareth. Cf. supra p. 26, n. 8.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 7a

If the Temple service which is of high importance and supersedes the Sabbath¹ is itself superseded by [a death sentence for] murder, as it is said, Thou shalt take him from Mine altar, that he may die,² how much more reasonable is it that the Sabbath which is superseded by the Temple service should be superseded by [a death sentence for] murder’. How, then, could it be said, ‘Or it might rather [etc.]’?³ — He means this: The burial of a meth mizwah⁴ might prove [the contrary], since it supersedes the Temple service⁵ and does not nevertheless supersede the Sabbath.⁶ Then⁷ he argued: It might be inferred a minori ad majus that the burial of a meth mizwah should supersede the Sabbath, [thus]: If the Temple service which supersedes the Sabbath is superseded by the burial of a meth mizwah, by deduction from Or for his sister,⁸ how much more should the Sabbath which is superseded by the Temple service be superseded by the burial of a meth mizwah; hence it was explicitly stated, Ye shall kindle no fire.⁹ [etc].¹⁰

According to our previous assumption, however, that a positive precept supersedes a prohibition, what is meant by, ‘Or it might rather [etc.]’?¹¹ — It is this that was meant: ‘As regards the application of the text, Every one that profaneth it¹² shall surely be put to death,¹³ it might have been said to apply to the several kinds of labour other than the execution of a judicial death sentence, but that a judicial death sentence does supersedes the Sabbath, for a positive precept¹⁴ supersedes the prohibition. Then¹⁵ he argued: It might be suggested that a positive precept supersedes a prohibition in the case of a mere prohibition only; has it, however, been heard to supersede a prohibition which involves kareth? Then he concluded: ‘Even where¹⁶ a positive precept supersedes a prohibition, is not the prohibition of a more serious nature than the precept?¹⁷ And yet the positive precept comes and supersedes the prohibited; on what grounds, then, should a distinction be made between a minor and a major prohibition?¹⁸ Hence it was explicitly stated, Ye shall kindle no fire.⁹ [etc].¹⁹

But¹³ this is the reason why a specific text] was needed.²¹ It might have been assumed that this [case of a brother's wife should be regarded as a subject which was included in a general proposition²² and was subsequently singled out in order to predicate another law,²³ the predication of which is not intended to apply to itself alone but to the whole of the general proposition. For it was taught: ‘A subject which was included in a general proposition and was subsequently singled out, etc. How [is this to be understood]? But the soul that eateth of the flesh of the sacrifice of peace-offerings [that pertain unto the Lord], having his uncleanness upon him;²⁴ were not peace-offerings included among the other holy things?²⁵ Why, then, were they subsequently singled out? In order that [the others] may be compared to them, and in order to tell you that as peace-offerings are distinguished by being consecrated objects of the altar so must also all other things²⁶ be consecrated objects of the altar, the objects consecrated for Temple repair only being excluded.’²⁷ Similarly here it might have been argued:²⁸ Since a brother's wife was included among all the other forbidden relatives, why was she singled out? In order that [the others] may be compared to her, and in order to tell you that as a brother's wife is permitted²⁹ so also are all the other forbidden relatives permitted.³₀

Are these, however, similar? There³¹ both the general proposition³² and the particular specification³³ relate to a prohibition, but here³³ the general proposition relates to a prohibition while the particular specification relates to something which is permitted.³⁴ This, surely, is rather to be compared to an object that was included in a general proposition and was subsequently singled out in order to be made the subject of a fresh statement, which you cannot restore to the restrictions of the general proposition unless Scripture specifically restores it; for it was taught: Anything which was included in a general proposition and was subsequently excluded in order to be made the subject of a fresh statement, cannot be restored to the restrictions of the general proposition unless Scripture has explicitly restored it.\textsuperscript{35} How\textsuperscript{36} [may this principle be illustrated]? And he shall kill the he-lamb in the place where they kill the sin-offering and the burnt-offering in the place of the Sanctuary; for as the sin-offering is the priest's so is the guilt-offering.\textsuperscript{37} Now since there was no need to state, ‘As the sin-offering so is the guilt-offering.’\textsuperscript{38} why did Scripture explicitly state. As the sin-offering so the guilt-offering? Because seeing that the guilt-offering of the leper was singled out in order to impart a new law concerning the thumb of the right hand and the great toe of the right foot,\textsuperscript{40} it might have been assumed that it required no application of blood to, and no burning of the prescribed portions of the sacrifice upon the altar;

\textsuperscript{(19)} V. supra note 3.
\textsuperscript{(20)} Now that it is concluded that the need of the Scriptural text prohibiting the execution of a death sentence on Sabbath is because otherwise the permisibility thereof might have been argued a minori, and not on the ground of the principle that a positive command supersedes a prohibition, there is no proof available for the assumption that a positive precept supersedes a prohibition which involves kareth, and thus the original question again arises: What need was there for the specific text of Lev. XVIII, 18, ‘aleha’ (supra p. 8), to indicate the obvious? (i.e., that the positive precept of the levirate marriage does not supersede the prohibition of marrying a consanguineous relative).

Lev. XXII, 3.
Levirate marriage and forbidden relatives.
How, then, could the two be compared?
Now, as the case of a brother's wife has not been restored to the general proposition, what need was there for the specific text of Lev. XVIII, 18?
This is the continuation of the quotation.
Lev. XIV, 13, dealing with the leper's guilt-offering.
Since the place of killing was indicated at the beginning of the verse while the other regulations concerning this sacrifice are found in the laws of the guilt-offering in Lev. VII, 1ff.
From the laws relating to other guilt-offerings.
V. Lev. XIV, 14.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 7b

hence it was explicitly stated, ‘As the sin-offering so is the guilt-offering’: As the sin-offering requires application of the blood to, and burning of the prescribed portions upon the altar, so does the guilt-offering also require application of the blood to, and burning of the prescribed portions upon the altar. Had Scripture not restored it, however, it would have been assumed that it was singled out only in respect of what was explicitly specified but not in any other respect; I would assume, only a brother's wife who was explicitly mentioned [can be said] to be permitted but not any of the other forbidden relatives!

But it might have been assumed that the law of a wife's sister should be deduced from what has been found in the case of a brother's wife; as a levir may marry his brother's wife so he may also marry his wife's sister.

Are, however, the two cases similar? In the one case there is only one prohibition; in the other there are two prohibitions! — It might have been assumed that since she was permitted [in one respect] it was also permitted [in the case of the other]. And whence is it derived that we assume that 'since something was permitted [in one respect] it was also permitted [in the other]'? — From what was taught: In the case of a leper whose eighth day [of purification] fell on the Passover eve, and who, having observed a discharge of semen on that day, had taken a ritual bath, the Sages said: Although no other tebulyom may enter [the Temple mount], this one may enter, for it is better that the positive precept, the non-observance of which involves kareth, shall supersede a positive precept the infringement of which involves no kareth. And in connection with this R. Johanan said: According to the Torah, not even [the infringement of] a positive precept is involved, for it is said, And Jehoshaphat stood in the congregation of Judah . . . before the new court. What is meant by the new court? Rabbi replied: That they enacted therein new laws, ordaining that a tebulyom must not enter the camp of the Levites. And ‘Ulla said: ‘What is the reason?’ Since he was given permission in respect of his leprosy, permission was also given to him in respect of his discharge of the semen. But is this case similar to that of ‘Ulla?

(1) Of a leper.
(2) Zeb. 49a.
(3) The leper's guilt-offering and brought it into line with other guilt-offerings.
(4) Lit., ‘to what it went out, it went out; and to what it did not go out, it did not go out’.
(5) The case of the levirate marriage.
(6) Lit., ‘that was permitted is permitted’.
(7) The question consequently arises again: What need was there for ‘‘aleha’ in Lev. XVIII, 18. (Cf. supra p. 30, n. s).
(8) The reason why a superfluous text (v. previous note) was needed.
(9) For this reading v. Bah.
(10) Hence it was necessary to have the superfluous text, ‘‘aleha’’ (v. supra n. 4) to shew that the law was not so.
(11) Brother's wife and wife's sister.
(12) Lit., ‘there’, a brother's wife.
(13) Lit., ‘here’, a wife's sister.
(14) The prohibitions to marry (a) a brother's wife and (b) a wife's sister. How then could the one be deduced from the other?
(15) A brother's wife who is also one's wife's sister and whose husband died childless.
(16) By the positive precept of the levirate marriage.
(17) That of marrying a brother's wife.
(18) The prohibition of marrying one's wife's sister. Hence etc. V. supra note 7.
(19) On which he completes the days of his purification and brings the prescribed sacrifices, presenting himself (whither as a leper he was till that day forbidden to enter) on the Temple mount at the entrance to the Nikanor gate of the Sanctuary, from where he extends his thumb and great toe into the Sanctuary (whither he is not yet allowed to enter) for the priest to apply to them some of the sacrificial blood, v. Nazir, Sonc. ed. p. 165ff.
(20) When the paschal lamb is sacrificed to be eaten in the evening.
(21) Such a discharge ordinarily disqualifies a man from entering the Temple mount.
(22) כְּהַלָּבֹות one who has had his ritual bath and is awaiting nightfall for the completion of his purification.
(23) Before nightfall.
(24) The leper in the circumstances mentioned.
(25) That of the paschal lamb.
(26) That a leper like certain other unclean persons must be sent out from the Levitical camp in which the Temple mount is included.
(27) If he were not allowed to enter the Temple mount his purification from leprosy could not have been completed (cf. supra p. 31, n. 16) and he would in consequence have been prevented from participating in the paschal lamb. By allowing him to enter he is enabled to complete his purification, while nightfall would also terminate the uncleanness due to the discharge, and thus he is in a position to participate in the evening in the paschal lamb which during the day is prepared for him by a deputy.
(28) In allowing the leper in the conditions mentioned to enter the Temple court.
(29) II Chron. XX, 5, referring to a day when Israel completed a period of purification.
(30) This is the reading also in Zeb. 32b. Cur. edd. enclose in parentheses ‘R. Johanan’.
(31) V. Glos.
(32) Which proves that the prohibition for a tebul yom to enter the Levitical camp was not of Pentateuchal origin, having been first enacted in the days of Jehoshaphat.
(33) Why was a leper in the circumstances mentioned permitted to extend his hands into the Sanctuary whither an unclean person, according to ‘Ulla, may not project even part of his body?
(34) To project his hands into the Sanctuary.
(35) Despite the prohibition for an unclean person, though the days of his purification have been duly observed, to enter the Sanctuary even partially, prior to the offering of the prescribed sacrifices.
(36) Thus it is proved that since something was permitted in one respect the permission remains in force even when another prohibition may be involved in another respect. The same argument might have also applied to a wife's sister or widow of a deceased brother. Hence the need of the text, ‘‘aleha’’.
(37) A brother's wife who is also one's wife's sister.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 8a

[The comparison] might well be justified where the deceased brother married [first]1 and the surviving brother married [his brother's wife's sister] afterwards,2 for, in this case, since the prohibition of brother's wife was removed,3 that of wife's sister4 is also removed; but where the surviving brother had married [first] and the deceased brother had married subsequently, the prohibition of wife's sister was Surely in force first!5 Furthermore, even where the deceased had married [first], [the comparison] would be justified in the case where the deceased had married and died, and the surviving brother had married afterwards so that [the widow] was eligible in the interval; where, however, the deceased had married, and before he died his wife's sister was married by his surviving brother, [his widow] was never for a moment eligible for his brother! Does not 'Ulla admit that if the leper observed semen on the night preceding the eighth day of his purification he must not project his hand into the Sanctuary on account of his thumb because at the time he was eligible to bring the sacrifice [of the cleansed leper] he was not free from uncleanness?

But [this is really the explanation]: If ‘aleha’ was at all needed, [it was for such a case as] where the deceased brother had married [first] and died, and the surviving brother married [the widow's sister] subsequently.

If you prefer I can say [that the reason is because] it might have been deduced by means of R. Jonah's analogy. For R. Jonah — others say, R. Huna son of R. Joshua — said: ‘Scripture stated: For whosoever shall do any of these abominations shall be cut off; all forbidden relatives were compared to a brother's wife; [so in this case also it might have been said], as a brother's wife is permitted so also are all other forbidden relatives permitted; hence the All Merciful has written, ‘‘aleha’.

Said R. Aha of Dift to Rabina: Consider! All forbidden relatives might be compared to a brother's wife and might equally be compared to a wife's sister. Compare them rather to a brother's wife! — If you wish I might say: When a comparison may be made for increasing as well as for decreasing restrictions, that for increasing restrictions must be preferred. If you prefer, however, I might say: In the former cases there are two prohibitions in the one as well as in the other, and a double prohibition may justly be inferred from a double prohibition; in the latter case, however, only one prohibition is involved, and a double prohibition may not be inferred from a single one.

Raba said: [That] a forbidden relative herself [may not contract the levirate marriage] requires no Scriptural text to prove it, since no positive precept can supersede a prohibition which involves kareth; if a Scriptural text was at all needed it was for the purpose of forbidding a rival.

And in the case of a forbidden relative is no Scriptural text required [to prohibit her levirate marriage]? Surely it was taught, ‘Thus we are in a position to know the law concerning herself’! — On account of her rival. Was it not taught, however, ‘Now we know the law concerning themselves’? — On account of their rivals.

Come and hear: Rabbi said: [Instead of] and take, [Scripture stated], and take her, [and instead of] and perform the duty of a husband's brother [Scripture stated], and perform the duty of a husband's brother unto her, in order to prohibit [the levirate marriage of] forbidden relatives and their rivals; — Read, ‘To forbid [the levirate marriage of] the rivals of the forbidden relatives’. But two texts, surely, were mentioned; was not one for the forbidden relative and the other for her rival? — No; both were for the rival, but one indicates prohibition of a rival where the precept is applicable, and the other indicates permission to marry the rival where the precept is not applicable. What is the reason? — [Because instead of] ‘And perform the duty of a husband's brother’ [Scripture stated] And perform the duty of a husband's brother UNTO HER, [which indicates that] only where levirate marriage is applicable is a rival forbidden but where levirate marriage is not applicable a rival is permitted. R. Ashi said: [This may] also be inferred from our Mishnah where it was stated, FIFTEEN [CATEGORIES OF] WOMEN EXEMPT THEIR RIVALS, but it was not stated, ‘are exempt and exempt [their rivals]’. This proves it.

In what respect does the case of a forbidden relative differ that it should require no text? Obviously because no positive precept may supersede a prohibition which involves kareth. But then the case of a rival also should require no text,\textsuperscript{41} since no positive precept may supersede a prohibition which involves kareth!\textsuperscript{42} — Said R. Aha b. Bebai Mar to Rabina, Thus it has been stated in the name of Raba: In the case of a rival also no Scriptural text\textsuperscript{41} was needed; if a text was needed at all

\begin{enumerate}
\item His wife thus becoming a forbidden relative to his brother as ‘brother’s wife’.
\item Thus adding to the one prohibition (v. previous note) the other of ‘wife’s sister’.
\item By the precept of the levirate marriage, owing to the childlessness of the deceased.
\item Since it was added subsequently.
\item And could not consequently be removed by the removal of a prohibition which took effect subsequent to it.
\item Between the death of her husband and the marriage of her sister by his surviving brother. This case would be analogous to that of the leper who was eligible to bring his sacrifices on the eighth day of his purification during the interval between the beginning of the day and the hour on that day he contracted a new uncleanness by his discharge.
\item The night is reckoned as the beginning of the day following it.
\item V. supra p. 31, n. 16.
\item The eighth day of his purification.
\item Owing to the discharge of the semen which occurred in the night. As a sacrifice must be brought in the day time only, there was not a single moment during which he was eligible to bring the sacrifices as being clean in all respects.
The prohibition consequently remains in force. So also in the case of a wife’s sister as regards the levirate marriage. The question, therefore, arises again, what need was there for the superfluous text of Lev. XVIII, 18. V. supra p. 30, n. 2.
\item So that there was an interval during which he was permitted to marry the widow. V. p. 33. n. 11.
\item Why the superfluous ‘aleha’ in Lev. XVIII, 18 was required.
\item The law that forbidden relatives may be married in the case of a levirate marriage.
\item Lev. XVIII, 29.
\item Having been grouped together in this text.
\item In the case of a levirate marriage.
\item Lev. XVIII, 18; to intimate that they are not permitted.
\item Dibtha, below the Tigris, S.W. of Babylon.
\item That were enumerated in our Mishnah.
\item And levirate marriage with all of them would thus be permitted.
\item With whom the levirate marriage is forbidden by the text ‘aleha’ (v. supra).
\item Lit., ‘here’, (a) in that of a wife’s sister and (b) all the other forbidden relatives (other than a brother’s wife).
\item Lit., ‘and here two prohibitions’, (a) forbidden relatives and (b) brother’s wife.
\item Lit., ‘but here,’ a brother’s wife who is not a consanguineous relative.
\item That of a brother’s wife.
\item So Bah.
\item I.e., the forbidden relative, supra 3b.
\item Whose case had to be proved, it was necessary to begin with this introduction.
\item I.e., the forbidden relatives.
\item Cf. supra n. 3.
\item Deut. XXV, 5.
\item By the use of ‘her’ and ‘unto her’ which implies ‘but no other’.
\item Which shews that a Scriptural text is required, even in the case of forbidden relatives themselves, to prove that levirate marriage is prohibited.
\item Lit., ‘he took.’
\item Of the levirate marriage.
\item As, for instance, in the case of a rival of a forbidden relative who married a stranger, v. infra 13a.
\item To be married by the man to whom the relative herself is forbidden.
\item Raba’s statement that the prohibition to contract levirate marriage with a forbidden relative is so obvious that no
Scriptural text is required to prove it.
\item Which shews that the exemption of the forbidden relatives themselves from the levirate marriage (i.e., the prohibition ever to marry them) was taken in our Mishnah for granted.
it was for the purpose of permitting a rival where the precept\(^1\) is not applicable. What is the reason?\(^2\)
— Scripture stated, ‘‘aleha’’,\(^3\) to indicate that only in the case of ‘unto her’\(^4\) is she\(^5\) forbidden,\(^6\) where the other, however, may not, she is permitted.

Said Rami b. Hama to Raba: Might it not be suggested\(^7\) that the forbidden relative\(^8\) herself is permitted\(^9\) where the precept\(^10\) is not applicable? — Is not [such an argument contrary to the principle of inference] a minori ad majus? Being forbidden where the precept\(^10\) is applicable, would she be permitted where the precept is not applicable? — [‘The case of a] rival’, the first replied, ‘could prove it, since she is forbidden\(^9\) where the precept\(^10\) is applicable, and is permitted\(^9\) where the precept\(^10\) is not applicable’. ‘It is for your sake,’ the other replied, ‘that Scripture states, In her life-time,\(^11\) so long as she\(^12\) lives.’\(^13\) But is not the expression,\(^14\) In her life-time,\(^11\) required for the exclusion [of the prohibition of marriage] after her\(^12\) death?\(^15\) — This is deduced from the text, And a woman to her sister.\(^11\) If [the deduction were only] from the text. ‘And a woman to her sister’,\(^11\) it might have been said that if she\(^16\) was divorced the sister would be permitted, hence it was expressly stated, ‘In her life-time.’\(^11\) So long as she\(^16\) is alive, even though she has been divorced, [her sister must] not [be married]!\(^17\) — But, said R. Huna b. Tahliya in the name of Raba, two Scriptural texts are available; it is written, Thou shalt not take a woman to her sister, to be a rival to her\(^18\) [implying two],\(^19\) and it is also written, To uncover her nakedness,\(^20\) which implies that only one is forbidden; how then [are the two texts to be reconciled]? Where the precept\(^21\) is applicable both are forbidden;\(^22\) where the precept\(^21\) is not applicable she\(^23\) is forbidden but her rival is permitted. Might not the deduction be reversed: Where the precept\(^21\) is applicable she\(^23\) is forbidden but her rival is permitted, but where the precept is not applicable both are forbidden!\(^22\) — If so, ‘‘aleha’ should not have been stated.\(^24\)

Said R. Ashi to R. Kahana: Whence is it derived that the expression ‘‘aleha’’ indicates prohibition? Is it not possible that it implies permission, and that it is this that the All Merciful meant to imply: Thou shalt not take a woman to her sister, to be a rival to her,\(^25\) neither herself nor her rival where ‘unto her’\(^26\) is not applicable,\(^27\) but where ‘unto her’\(^26\) is applicable\(^28\) both are permitted!\(^29\) — If so, how could the ‘‘uncovering of the nakedness’ of one\(^30\) be possible? If in the case where the precept\(^31\) is applicable, both are permitted;\(^32\) and if where the precept is not applicable both are forbidden!\(^33\)

[Reverting to] the [above] text, Rabbi said: Instead of And take, Scripture stated, ‘And take her’ and instead of ‘And perform the duty of a husband's brother’, Scripture stated, ‘And perform the duty of a husband's brother unto her’, in order to prohibit [the levirate marriage of] forbidden relatives and their rivals. Are, then, rivals mentioned here at all? And, furthermore, the law of rivals has been derived from the expression To be her rival!\(^34\) — The expression To be her rival is employed by Rabbi for R. Simeon's deduction.\(^35\) Where,\(^36\) however, is the rival mentioned?\(^37\) — What he meant is this: If so,\(^38\) Scripture should have stated, And take; why then did it state, ‘And he shall take her’?\(^39\) To indicate that wherever there are two to be taken,\(^40\) he\(^41\) having the choice of marrying whichever he prefers\(^42\) both are permitted,\(^43\) but if not,\(^44\) both are forbidden; And perform the duty of a husband's brother unto her,\(^45\) indicates that where levirate marriage is applicable there is the rival forbidden, where, however, levirate marriage is not applicable the rival is permitted.

As to the Rabbis,\(^46\) to what do they apply the verse ‘And he shall take her’? — They require it for the deduction of R. Jose b. Hanina. For R. Jose b. Hanina said: ‘And he shall take her’\(^45\) teaches that he may divorce her with a letter of divorce and that he may remarry her. And he shall perform the duty of a husband's brother unto her, even against her will. — The law of R. Jose b. Hanina is deduced from To a wife, and that the marriage may take place against her will is deduced from Her husband's brother shall go in unto her.

What does Rabbi do with [the expression], 'aleha'? — He requires it [for another deduction], as we learnt: The Beth din are under no obligation unless [they ruled] concerning a prohibition the punishment for which is kareth, if the transgression was wilful, and a sin-offering if the transgression was unwitting; and so it is with the anointed High priest.

(1) Of the levirate marriage.
(2) I.e., how is the permissibility deduced?
(3) Lev. XVIII, 18.
(4) Lit., 'in the place of וְזַרְוִי צְרֵעָה' with reference to the verse 'Her husband's brother shall go in unto her' (v. supra p. 8, n. 9) i.e., where the command of levirate marriage would otherwise apply.
(5) The rival.
(6) To be married, cf. supra p. 35, n. 12.
(7) On the lines of the argument just advanced.
(8) I.e., the wife's sister.
(9) To be married.
(10) Of the levirate marriage.
(11) Lev. XVIII, 18.
(12) One's wife.
(13) Her sister must not be married. (Other forbidden relatives, as has been shewn supra, are deduced from one's wife's sister).
(14) Lit., 'that'.
(15) I.e., that the prohibition of a wife's sister which on the present assumption is limited to cases where the precept of levirate marriage is applicable, applies only during the lifetime of one's wife.
(16) The wife.
(17) But it can still be maintained that where no levirate marriage is applicable, there is no prohibition of marrying the wife's sister.
(18) Lev. XVIII, 18.
(19) I.e., that both the wife's sister and her rival are forbidden to be married. (This, as will be shewn infra, is deduced from the expression li-zeror.)
(20) Lev. XVIII, 18, emphasis on her (sing.).
(21) Of the levirate marriage.
(22) To be married.
(23) The forbidden relative herself.
(24) Since even without this additional phrase the two contradictory texts would have been naturally reconciled by applying the former (prohibition of both) to a case where the precept of the levirate marriage is inapplicable, and the latter (permission of the rival) to a case where it is applicable. The addition of the phrase must consequently have been intended to impart a new law, viz. that a rival is forbidden, like the forbidden relative herself, where the precept of the levirate marriage is applicable.
(25) Lev. XVIII, 18.
(26) V. supra p. 8, n. 9.
(27) I.e., where the law of the levirate marriage does not apply.
(28) Where levirate marriage does apply.
(29) The concluding part of the verse וְזַרְוִי צְרֵעָה meaning where he has to go 'unto her', the sister of his wife who is the widow of his brother, he may do so even in her (his wife's) life-time.
(30) V. Lev. XVIII, 18, implying, as explained supra, the prohibition of one only.
(31) Of the levirate marriage.
(32) So that there are two, not only one.
(33) And there is none.
(34) Heb. li-zeror (Lev. XVIII, 18), supra 3b. How then could it be said to be derived from a different text?
(35) V. infra 28b.
(36) V. Emden a.l. Cur. edd. read ‘here’.
(37) In Deut. XXV, 5, the text cited by Rabbi. Clearly, it was not mentioned at all; how then could Rabbi derive from the text a law concerning a subject of which no mention was made?
(38) That the text refers to the forbidden relative only and not to a rival.
(39) Deut. XXV, 5.
(40) Lit., ‘takings’, i.e., when the deceased childless brother is survived by two widows, and the levir has to decide which of them to marry.
(41) The levir.
(42) I.e., when neither of the two is a forbidden relative.
(43) The emphasis on ‘her’ in And take her implies that there is a choice between two, and the phrase ‘and take her’ is taken to imply that the levir is in a position to choose whichever he pleases, since either of them must be capable of having the phrase ‘and take her applied to her.
(44) If one cannot be married by him on account of her being his forbidden relative.
(45) Deut. XXV, 5.
(46) Who made the deduction from li-zeror.
(47) The levir.
(48) After he married her; and she requires no halizah.
(49) Though the precept of the levirate marriage has been fulfilled and she might have been assumed to be forbidden to him as a brother’s wife. The text is interpreted as follows: And he takes her to him to wife, as soon as he has taken her, she is regarded henceforth in all respects as his wife, i.e., as if she had never been forbidden to him as a brother’s wife.
(50) Emphasis on ‘unto her’ (v. Tosaf).
(51) Whence does he derive the law deduced by R. Jose b. Hanina?
(52) Who are guilty of an erroneous ruling.
(53) To bring the sacrifice prescribed in Lev. IV, 13ff.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 9a

Nor [are they liable] in respect of idolatry unless [they ruled] concerning a matter the punishment for which is kareth, if it was committed wilfully and a sin-offering if committed unwittingly; and we also learnt: [For the unwitting transgression of any] commandment in the Torah the penalty for which, if committed wilfully, is kareth and, if committed unwittingly a sin-offering, the private individual brings a sin-offering of a lamb or a she-goat; the ruler brings a goat; and the anointed High Priest and the Beth din bring a bullock. In the case of idolatry the individual and the ruler and the anointed High Priest bring a she-goat while the Beth din bring a bullock and a goat, the bullock for a burnt-offering and the goat for a sin-offering. Whence is this deduced? From the following. For our Rabbis taught: When the sin wherein they have sinned is known: Rabbi said, here we read ‘aleha and further on we also read ‘aleha; as further on the prohibition involves the penalty of kareth if the transgression was wilful and that of a sin-offering if it was unwitting, so here also, [the ruling must be concerning] a prohibition which involves the penalty of kareth if the transgression was wilful and that of a sin-offering if it was unwitting.

Proof has thus been adduced for the case of the congregation; whence for that of the anointed High Priest? — It is written in relation to the High Priest, So as to bring guilt upon the people; this shews that the anointed High Priest is like the congregation. And for an individual and a ruler? — The inference is made by a comparison of Things with Things. ‘Nor [are they liable] in respect of idolatry unless [their ruling] concerned a matter the punishment for which is kareth if it was committed wilfully, and a sin-offering if committed unwittingly’. As regards the congregation in the matter of idolatry, deduction is made by comparison between From the eyes and From the eyes. [The law of] a private individual, a ruler and an anointed High Priest [is deduced] from, And if one soul which implies that there is no distinction between a private individual, a ruler and an anointed High Priest, while the waw connects them with the previous subject, and consequently the latter may be deduced from the former.

Whence, however, do the Rabbis arrive at this inference? — They deduce it from the Biblical interpretation which R. Joshua b. Levi taught to his son: Ye shall have one law for him that doeth aught in error. But the soul that doeth aught with a high hand etc., all the Torah is compared to the prohibition of idolatry, as in regard to idolatry [obligation is incurred only where] the offence involves the punishment of kareth when it was committed wilfully and a sin-offering when committed unwittingly, so also in the case of any other transgression [it must be such] as involves kareth when committed wilfully and a sin-offering when committed unwittingly.

Proof has thus been found for the case of a private individual, a ruler and an anointed High Priest both in regard to idolatry and the rest of the commandments; whence, however, [is it proved that the same law applies also] to the congregation in the case of idolatry? — Scripture said, And if one soul, and the former may be deduced from the latter. Whence, however, [is it deduced that the same law applies to] the congregation in the case of the other commandments? — Deduction is made by comparison between ‘From the eyes’ and ‘From the eyes’.

And what does Rabbi do with the text of One law? — He applies it to the following. Whereas we find that Scripture made distinction between individuals and a group, individuals being punished by stoning and their money, therefore, being spared, while a group are punished by the sword and their money is consequently destroyed, one might also assume that a distinction should be made in respect of their sacrifices; hence it was explicitly stated, Ye shall have one law.

R. Hilkiah of Hagronia demurred: Is the reason because the All Merciful has written, Ye shall have one law, so that had it not so been written it might have been thought that a distinction should be made [in respect of their sacrifices]? What, however, could they bring! Should they bring a bullock? The congregation, surely, brings a bullock for the transgression of any one of all the other commandments. [Should they bring] a lamb? An individual, surely, brings a lamb if he transgressed any of the other commandments! A he-goat? A ruler brings one in the case of transgression of any of the other commandments! A bullock for a burnt-offering and a goat for a sin-offering? Such, surely, are brought by the congregation in the case of idolatry! Should they, then, bring a she-goat? This, surely, is also the sin-offering of a private individual! — [The text] was required, because it might have been suggested that whereas the congregation, in the case of an erroneous ruling, brings a bullock for a burnt-offering and a he-goat for a sin-offering, these should also bring the same sacrifices, but] in the reverse order, or [it might have been assumed to be] necessary but that there was no remedy; hence it was necessary to teach us.

Said Levi to Rabbi: What ground is there for stating FIFTEEN? Sixteen should have been stated! — The other replied: It seems to me that this man has no brains in his head. ‘Do you mean’, he continued, ‘a man's mother who had been outraged by his father?’ The case of a man's mother who has been outraged by his father is a matter in dispute between R. Judah and the Rabbis, and the author of our Mishnah does not deal with any controversial matter’. But does he not? Surely, the prohibition due to a Rabbinical ordinance and the prohibition due to the levir's sanctity, concerning which R. Akiba and the Rabbis are in dispute, are mentioned! — We mean, in our chapter. But, surely it was taught, Beth Shammai permit rivals to the other brothers and Beth Hillel prohibit them! — The view of Beth Shammai where it is in contradiction to that of Beth Hillel is of no consequence.

Is there not the case of the wife of a man's brother who was not his contemporary.
Hor. 8a.

So in Hor. 9a. Cur. ed. ‘congregation’.

Lev. IV, 14.

Concerning an erroneous ruling of the Beth din.

Lev. loc. cit. (‘wherein’).

Concerning marrying two sisters.

Ibid. XVIII, 18, E.V., ‘Beside the other’.

Concerning an erroneous ruling of the Beth din.

Thus it has been shewn that Rabbi requires the text Beside the other for another deduction.

Lev. IV, 3.

Heb. mizwoth מצוות ‘commandments’.

Lev. IV, 22 and IV, 13.

That the transgression must be one which involves kareth if done wilfully, and a sin-offering if done unwittingly.

Num. XV, 24, dealing with idolatry.

Lev. IV, 13, referring to an erroneous ruling.

V. note 12.

Num. XV, 27.

‘And’, in we’im (ויהי, and if).

The congregation.

Individual, ruler and High Priest.

The congregation, concerning whom deduction has previously been made from the law relating to an erroneous ruling.

Who, unlike Rabbi, require the expression ‘aleha (beside her) for deduction in connection with the laws of incest and rival wives, supra 3b.

That obligation is incurred only where the prohibition involves kareth where it was transgressed wilfully and a sin-offering when transgressed unwittingly.

Num. XV, 29, 30.

The text, according to Rabbinical exposition, refers to idolatry and in relation to it the expression Law (Torah) is used.

E.g., offering of a sacrifice.

V. Num. XV, 30. Where wilful transgression involves kareth, unwitting transgression is atoned for by a sin-offering.

By deduction from soul (nefesh, Num. XV, 27) which includes all ranks of individuals.

Num. XV, 27, referring, as has just been pointed out, to individuals of all ranks.

Congregation.

Individuals.

Num. XV, 29.

Lit., ‘requires it for as it was taught’.

Lit., ‘many’, i.e., the inhabitants of a city condemned for idolatry (Deut. XIII, 13ff).

A suburb of Nehardea.

Why the sin-offerings of a group and of individuals are the same in the case of idolatry (v. previous note).

I.e., a majority of all the tribes of Israel.

What distinction, then, would there be between the sin-offerings of a ‘condemned city’ and those of the ‘congregation’? (V. previous note). If a distinction is to be made between the sacrifices of a ‘condemned city’ and those of individuals, how much more should such a distinction be made between the former and those of the ‘congregation’!

Cf. n. 7, supra.

Now, since no distinction in the sacrifice could possibly be made, what need was there for the text of Num. XV, 29?

V. previous note.

The men of a ‘condemned city’.

A bullock for a sin-offering and a he-goat for a burnt-offering.

For the men of a ‘condemned city’ to bring a special sin-offering.
If the sin was committed unwittingly since an offering peculiar to themselves is an impossibility.

That the sacrifices are the same (cf. supra p. 42, n. 5) as deduced from Num. XV, 27. For further notes v. Hor., Sonc. ed. pp. 53ff.

In our Mishnah, supra 2a.

I.e., that the Mishnah should have included as a sixteenth forbidden relative, a man’s mother who was not the lawful wife of his father, and who, having been subsequently married by his paternal brother who died childless, is now subject to the levirate marriage or halizah of her own son, the brother of her second husband.

Whether she may be married to his paternal brother, supra 4a.

A prohibition not included in the Biblical laws of incest, but ordained by the Rabbis. A prohibition due to sanctity in the case, e.g., of a widow whose levir is a High Priest. (For this and an alternative explanation v. infra 20a).

Infra loc. cit.

In our very chapter, infra 13a.

Which shows that even laws which are in dispute are recorded in the chapter.

Lit., ‘is not a teaching’; the view of Beth Hillel is accepted as law, and can consequently be included in our chapter.

Lit., ‘in his world’, i.e., who was born after the death of his childless brother.

Concerning which R. Simeon and the Rabbis are in dispute,¹ and which is nevertheless mentioned?—R. Simeon does not dispute the case where the birth² was first, and the levirate marriage³ later.⁴ Did not R. Oshaia, however, say¹ that R. Simeon disputed the first case also?⁵—Surely. R. Oshaia’s view was refuted.

Did not, however, Rab Judah state in the name of Rab, and R. Hiyya also taught: In the case of all these⁶ it may happen that she who is forbidden to one brother may be permitted to the other¹ while she who is forbidden to the other brother may be permitted to the one, and that her sister who is her sister-in-law may be subject either to halizah or to the levirate marriage.⁷ And Rab Judah interpreted [it⁸ as referring to those]⁹ from one’s MOTHER-IN-LAW onwards but not to the first six categories. What is the reason? Because in the case of a daughter this¹⁰ is possible only [with one born] from a woman who had been outraged but not [with one born] from a legal marriage,¹¹ [and the author of our Mishnah] deals only with cases of legal matrimony and not with those of outraged women.¹² And Abaye interpreted it¹³ [as referring] also to a daughter from a woman who had been outraged, because, since [the application of Rab’s statement] is quite possible in her case, it matters not whether she was born from a woman who was legally married or from one that had been outraged; but not to the wife of a brother who was not his contemporary. What is the reason? Because [the application of Rab’s statement in this case] is possible only according to the view of R. Simeon and not according to that of the Rabbis, [the author of our Mishnah] does not deal with any matter which is in dispute. And R. Safra interprets it¹³ as referring also to the wife of a brother who was not his contemporary, and [in his opinion] it¹⁵ is possible in the case of six brothers in accordance with the view of R. Simeon.¹⁴

(2) Of a third brother. (V. infra n. 4).
(3) Between the second brother and the widow of the first brother who died without issue (V. following note).
(4) In such a case, R. Simeon agrees that the third brother must not marry the widow, because at the time when he was born the widow was forbidden to him as ‘the wife of his brother who was not his contemporary’. R. Simeon’s disagreement with the Rabbis is limited to the case where the first brother, A, died childless and his widow was married to the second brother, B, prior to the birth of the third brother, C. If subsequently B died also childless, R. Simeon, contrary to the opinion of the Rabbis, allows the levirate marriage between the widow and C, because when C was born the widow was already the wife of B, and C’s levirate marriage now is not due to A whose widow was a married woman when he was born, but to B whose contemporary he is.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 10a

And your mnemonic is, 'Died, born, and performed the levirate marriage; died, born, and performed the levirate marriage'!—Rabbi² does not accept these rules.³

R. Adda Karhina stated before R. Kahana in the name of Raba: Rabbi, in fact, does accept these rules,⁴ but it was this that he meant to say to [Levi]:⁵ [The application of the statement⁴ to] a woman outraged by one's father is possible only in one [of its parts]; it is impossible, however, to apply it in [both its parts], for if Jacob outraged his two sisters,⁶ it is possible [to apply that part of the statement relating to] 'her sister who is her sister-in-law',⁷ but not that of 'she who is forbidden to one brother may be permitted to the other',⁸ and if be outraged two strangers,⁹ it is possible [to apply the statement], 'she who is forbidden to one brother may be permitted to the other'¹⁰ but not that of 'her sister who is her sister-in-law'.¹¹

R. Ashi said: Rabbi, in fact, does not accept these rules¹² and [our Mishnah] does deal with matters in dispute, and as to the meaning¹³ of 'It seems to me that this man has no brains in his head' which he¹⁴ addressed to him,¹⁵ what he meant was this: 'Why did you not carefully consider our Mishnah? For our Mishnah represents the view of R. Judah who forbids the marriage of a woman that was outraged by one's father,¹⁶ as it was taught: Six forbidden relatives come under greater restrictions,¹⁷ since they are to be married to strangers only,¹⁸ and their rivals are permitted.¹⁹ [These are:] his mother, his father's wife and his father's sister [etc.].²⁰ Now, what is meant by "his mother"? If it be assumed to mean one who was legally married to his father, such a woman surely is "his father's wife".²¹ Must it not consequently mean one who was outraged by his father? And yet it was stated, "since they are to be married to strangers only", implying "to strangers only but not to the brothers". Now, who has been heard to hold such an opinion? Surely it was R. Judah who forbids marriage with a woman who was outraged by one's father.²² Hence²³ it was not included in our Mishnah.²⁴

Said Rabina to R. Ashi: [Such a levirate relationship]²⁵ is possible even according to R. Judah if and when one had married²⁶ illegally!²⁷ — The author of the Mishnah is not concerned with an 'if'.²⁸ Said R. Ashi to R. Kahana: This²⁹ is also possible without the 'if',³⁰ where Jacob³¹ outraged his daughter-in-law, begat from her a son, and then Reuben³² died without issue, and she thus came into levirate relationship with her son;³³ and since she is forbidden to him,³⁴ her rival also is likewise forbidden!³⁵ — The other replied: [The author of our Mishnah] deals only with lawful brotherhood but not with brotherhood which is due to a forbidden act.

Levi nevertheless³⁶ inserted it³⁷ in his Mishnah. For Levi taught: One's mother sometimes exempts her rival³⁸ and sometimes she does not exempt her. If his mother, for instance,³⁹ was lawfully married to his father, and then she was married⁴⁰ to his paternal brother⁴¹ who subsequently died, such a mother does not exempt her rival.⁴²
(1) Now, since in the case of ‘the wife of a brother who was not his contemporary’ the application of Rab's statement is only possible according to the view of R. Simeon but not according to that of the Rabbis, and since the statement is based on our Mishnah, it is obvious that our Mishnah deals also with a case which is in dispute.

(3) Of Rab and R. Hiyya. Our Mishnah consequently deals only with that case in which R. Simeon and the Rabbis are in agreement. (V. supra 9b top).

(4) Of Rab and R. Hiyya, supra 9b.

(5) Whom he addressed supra 9a.

(6) And after one of them had given birth to a child, C, and the other to one, D, the first was married by A and the second by B, two of Jacob's sons from another wife.

(7) For should A and B die childless their wives who are sisters as well as sisters-in-law come under the law of the levirate marriage in relation to C and D the brothers of A and B.

(8) Both being forbidden to C as well as to D. The mother of C is forbidden to C as mother and to D as mother's sister, and the mother of D is similarly forbidden to D and C.

(9) Cf.n.8.

(10) Since the women are strangers and the restrictions mentioned in note 10 do not apply.

(11) The women being sisters-in-law only but not sisters. Thus it has been shewn that the statement could not be applied in its entirety to the case of an outraged woman. Hence it was excluded from the enumeration in our Mishnah.

(12) Of Rab and Hiyya.

(13) Lit., ‘and what’.

(14) Rabbi.

(16) Hence it is impossible for a mother, whether legally married or outraged, ever to come into levirate relationship with her son. (Cf. supra p. 45, n. 8.)

(17) Than those relating to the fifteen enumerated in our Mishnah.

(18) No paternal brother of the person concerned may ever marry them.

(19) To marry the brother of their deceased husband who had been married to their rival (one of the six relatives) illegally (Maimonides). If the marriage was with a stranger the permissibility of marriage is obvious since the laws of rivals apply only to a brother's widow.

(20) Infra 13a.

(21) Who was specifically mentioned.

(22) So that it is impossible for one ever to be subject to levirate marriage with his brother's wife whose legitimate or illegitimate son he is.

(23) Since R. Judah holds such an opinion and the Mishnah represents his view.

(24) Lit., ‘he did not teach it’.

(26) The woman his father had outraged and who is also the mother of his brother.

(27) Infra 78a. In such a case it is surely possible for a mother to come into the levirate relationship with her son.

(28) Lit., ‘when if he does not teach’, i.e., he is not concerned with a levirate relationship that may arise out of a possible and unlikely breach of the law.

(30) I.e., even if the deceased brothers did not transgress the law.

(31) The father of the deceased.

(32) Her husband, Jacob's son.

(33) Lit., ‘and she fell before her son’, who is the paternal brother of her deceased husband, Reuben.

(34) As his mother.

(35) Why then was not this case included in our Mishnah?

(36) Despite Rabbi's abusive reply, supra 9a.

(38) From halizah and the levirate marriage.
If his mother, however, was a woman that had been outraged by his father and was then married to his paternal brother who subsequently died, such a mother does exempt her rival.\(^1\) And though the Sages taught in our Mishnah FIFTEEN we must add a case like this as a sixteenth.

Resh Lakish said to R. Johanan: According to Levi who maintains that an ‘if’\(^2\) is also included,\(^3\) let our Mishnah also include\(^4\) the case of a levir who gave halizah to his sister-in-law\(^5\) and later betrothed\(^6\) her and died without issue, for since [the widow of such a one] is forbidden,\(^7\) her rival also is forbidden!\(^8\) — The other replied: Because in this case the law of the rival of the rival\(^9\) cannot be applied.\(^10\) But could he\(^11\) not have answered\(^12\) him\(^13\) [that the brothers] are only subject to the penalties of a negative precept,\(^14\) and that those who are subject to the penalties of a negative precept are\(^15\) under the obligations of halizah and the levirate marriage?\(^16\) — He\(^17\) answered him\(^18\) in accordance with the view he\(^18\) holds. ‘According to my view,’ he\(^19\) argued, [the brothers] are only subject to the penalties of a negative precept,\(^20\) and those who are subject to the penalties of a negative precept are\(^21\) under the obligations of halizah and the levirate marriage,\(^22\) but even according to your view that they are subject to the penalty of kareth [the case could not have been included in our Mishnah] because the law of the rival's rival cannot be applied’.\(^23\)

It has been stated: Where [a levir] had performed the ceremonial of halizah with his sister-in-law, and then betrothed her, Resh Lakish holds that he is not subject to the penalty of kareth for the haluzah,\(^24\) but the other brothers are subject to kareth for the haluzah.\(^25\) In the case of the rival,\(^26\) both he\(^27\) and the other brothers are subject to kareth for a rival.\(^28\) R. Johanan, however, holds that neither he\(^27\) nor the other brothers are subject to kareth either for the haluzah or for her rival.\(^29\) What is the reason of Resh Lakish? — Scripture stated, That doth not build,\(^30\) since he has not built he must never again build.\(^31\) He himself is thus placed under the prohibition of building no more,\(^32\) but his brothers remain in the same position in which they were before.\(^33\) Furthermore, the prohibition to build no more applies only to herself,\(^34\) her rival, however, remains under the same prohibition as before.\(^33\) And R. Johanan?\(^35\) — Is it inconceivable\(^36\) that at first halizah should be allowed to be performed by any one of the brothers\(^37\) and with either of the widows of the deceased brother\(^38\) and that now one or other of these persons should\(^39\) be involved in kareth!\(^40\) But [in point of fact] he\(^41\) merely acts as agent for the brothers while she\(^42\) acts as agent for her rival.\(^43\)

R. Johanan pointed out to Resh Lakish the following objection: ‘If a levir who submitted to halizah from his sister-in-law, later betrothed her and died,\(^44\) [the widow] requires halizah from the surviving brothers’. Now, according to me who maintains that [the surviving brothers]\(^45\) are subject to the penalties of a negative precept only, one can well understand why she requires halizah from the other brothers.\(^46\) According to you, however, why should she require halizah?\(^47\) — Explain, then, on the lines of your reasoning, the final clause, ‘If one of the brothers\(^48\) actually\(^49\) betrothed her, she has no claim upon him’\(^150\) R. Shesheth replied: The final clause represents the opinion of R. Akiba who holds that a betrothal with those who are subject thereby to the penalties of a negative precept is of no validity.\(^51\) Should it not then have been stated, ‘according to the view of R. Akiba she\(^52\) has no claim upon him’!\(^53\)

\(^{1}\) Since her marriage with the deceased brother was not unlawful, her rival (any other wife of her husband) is subject to the same laws as any other rival in the case of the fifteen relatives of our Mishnah.

\(^{2}\) Cf. p. 47, n. 4, supra.
By R. Judah who, as has been shewn supra, is the author of our Mishnah. Though he prohibits the marriage of a woman that was outraged by one's father, he nevertheless, according to Levi's recital, included the case in our Mishnah.

Lit., ‘teach’.

Whom he is in consequence forbidden to marry.

Since the marriage in such a case is forbidden under a negative precept the transgression of which does not involve the penalty of kareth, the betrothal is legally valid.

To the brothers of the levir who gave the halizah: this prohibition, according to Resh Lakish infra involving the penalty of kareth.

To the brothers. Why then was not this case also added to the fifteen?

Her rival (as well as herself), being forbidden to all the other brothers (as brother's wife or as the haluzah of one of the brothers), can never have any of the wives of the brothers as her rival. In the case of the forbidden relatives in our Mishnah, they are forbidden to one of the brothers only, hence they or their rivals are not otherwise precluded from marrying one of the other brothers.

R. Johanan.

Lit., ‘and he should say’.

Resh Lakish.

If they married the haluzah, their deceased brother's widow, with whom halizah had been performed by one of them. According to R. Johanan, infra, contrary to the view of Resh Lakish, no penalty of kareth is involved in such a marriage, whether the transgressor be the brother who performed the halizah or any of the other brothers.

Unlike those subject to the penalty of kareth who are exempt from halizah and from the levirate marriage.

I.e., though the marriage with them is forbidden by a negative precept, they remain nevertheless under the obligations of the levirate relationship and must, therefore, undergo the ceremonial of halizah. Why, then, did not R. Johanan give Resh Lakish this reply which would well account for the omission from our Mishnah of the case he mentioned?

R. Johanan.

Resh Lakish.

R. Johanan.

V. p. 48, n. 13.

Cf. previous note.

Cf. supra p. 48, n. 9.

V. Glos. I.e., for having intercourse with her. Consequently the betrothal is valid.

Consequently should any of the other brothers betroth the haluzah, the betrothal is invalid.

Of a haluzah (v. previous note). A rival is exempt from halizah and the levirate marriage by the action of the haluzah.

The levir who participated in the halizah.

V. infra 53a.

Infra 40b and l.c.

Deut. XXV, 9.

The imperfect נַעַל may be rendered as a present as well as a future.

I.e., under a negative precept only which involves no kareth.

I.e., under the prohibition to marry a brother's wife, which involves the penalty of kareth.

The haluzah.

What reason does he advance for his opinions?

Lit., ‘is there (such) a thing’?

Lit., ‘if he prefers, this one participates in the halizah and if he prefers etc.’

Lit., ‘and if he prefers he performs the halizah with that one and if he prefers etc’.

In case of a betrothal.

Though the others are not.

The brother who participated in the halizah.

The widow who performed the halizah ceremonial.
Hence all the brothers as well as all the rivals are in this respect in exactly the same position. As the brother and the widow who between them carried out the halizah ceremonial are in a case of subsequent marriage exempt from kareth and are subject only to the penalties of a negative precept, so also are all the others on whose behalf they acted.

Without issue.

In subsequently marrying the haluzah.

Since the negative precept which bars them from the levirate marriage does not supersede halizah.

Marriage with them would involve the penalty of kareth, and whenever such a penalty is involved the parties are not subject to the laws of halizah!

Other than the one who participated in the halizah.

Lit., ‘stood’.

I.e., the betrothal is invalid, she receives no kethubah, and no divorce is needed. This obviously proves that the penalty for such an ensuing marriage is kareth, as Resh Lakish maintains; for had it been, as R. Johanan asserts, that of a negative precept only, the betrothal should have been valid.

Keth. 29b, Kid. 64a, 68a, Sot. 18b, infra 52b, 69a.

So Bah, a.l. Cur. edd., ‘he’.

Since it is the general opinion that such a betrothal is valid.

— This is rather a difficulty.

R. Ashi holds the same opinion as Resh Lakish and explains it in accordance with the ruling of R. Simeon. Rabina holds the same opinion as R. Johanan and explains it in accordance with the ruling of the Rabbis.

‘R. Ashi holds the same opinion as Resh Lakish and explains it in accordance with the ruling of R. Simeon’, thus: If [a levir] who submitted to halizah from his sister-in-law had subsequently betrothed her, she requires halizah from the brothers. Who are these brothers? Those born [subsequently]. According to whose view? According to that of R. Simeon. If one of the previously born brothers, however, betrothed her, she has no claim upon him. According to whose view? According to that of Resh Lakish.

‘Rabina holds the same opinion as R. Johanan and explains it in accordance with the ruling of the Rabbis’, thus: If [a levir] who submitted to halizah from his sister-in-law had subsequently betrothed her, she requires halizah from the brothers. Who are these brothers? Those born [prior to the halizah]. According to whom? According to R. Johanan. If one of the subsequently born brothers, however, betrothed her, she has no claim upon him. According to whose view? According to that of the Rabbis.

It has been stated: In the case where [the levir] had intercourse with his sister-in-law and one of the other brothers had intercourse with her rival, there is a difference of opinion between R. Aha and Rabina. One said: [It involves a transgression subject] to kareth and the other said: [The transgression] of a positive precept. He who said, ‘[A transgression subject] to kareth’ follows Resh Lakish, and he who said, ‘[The transgression] of a positive precept’ follows R. Johanan.

Rab Judah said in the name of Rab: The rival of a sotah is forbidden. What is the reason? — Because uncleanness is ascribed to her as to the cases of incest. R. Hisda raised an objection: R. Simeon said, the intercourse or halizah of the brother of the first husband exempts her rival! — Rab can answer you, ‘I speak of a sotah that is Biblically forbidden, and you talk of a sotah that is only Rabbinically forbidden’.

But as to him who raised this objection, what did he imagine? — He thought that Rabbinical provisions were given the same force as Biblical laws.
R. Ashi raised an objection: If she entered with the man into a private place and remained with him for a period sufficient for the consummation of defilement, she is forbidden to her house, and if he died she must undergo the ceremony of halizah.

(1) That any brother, other than the one who submitted to the halizah, who married the widow after she had performed the halizah is subject to the penalty of kareth (v. supra 10b).

(2) The first clause of the statement cited in the discussion between R. Johanan and Resh Lakish, according to which halizah is required.

(3) Who maintains that a brother born after the levirate marriage of his elder brother is not subject, in relation to the deceased brother, to the restriction of a ‘brother who was not his contemporary’. The first clause then, which requires halizah, may consequently refer to brothers born after both the halizah and the betrothal had taken place. The widow of the levir not being forbidden to them on account of her first deceased husband, is subject to halizah on account of the second. (The final clause which clearly agrees with the view of Resh Lakish requires of course no explanation).

(4) Who maintains that the brother who performed the halizah as well as all the other brothers are forbidden to marry the widow subsequent to the halizah, not under the penalty of kareth but under that of a negative precept. Hence the ruling in the first clause that halizah is required.

(5) The final clause. (Cf. n. 2 supra).

(6) Who hold that even a brother born after the levirate marriage (v. n. 3 supra) is subject to the restrictions of ‘a brother who was not his contemporary’. The final clause may accordingly refer to such brothers to whom the widow is forbidden for this reason (not on account of the halizah that had been performed) and the marriage or betrothal with whom is consequently invalid. (The first clause obviously is in agreement with R. Johanan).

(7) In the case where the levir who betrothed her also died without issue.

(8) After the halizah and the betrothal. Having been born after the halizah they have never been subject to the levirate relationship on account of the first deceased brother and the halizah of the levir had, therefore, imposed no restrictions upon them in relation to the widow.

(9) Hence it is the duty of one of these brothers to submit to halizah which is incumbent upon them as brothers of the levir who also died without issue.

(10) Prior to the performance of the halizah.

(11) Since according to Resh Lakish the performance of the halizah by one of the brothers had caused the prohibition of the widow upon all other contemporary brothers under the penalty of kareth, such a betrothal is invalid.

(12) V. supra p. 51, n. 4.

(13) After the performance of the halizah.

(14) V. supra p. 51, n. 6.

(15) The widow of his deceased childless brother.

(16) For the other brother.

(17) The precept is to perform one levirate marriage but not more than one, a transgression to which no penalty is attached.

(18) In whose view (supra 10b) the levir who marries, or participates in halizah with the widow, does not act as the agent of the other brothers. Hence, despite the fact that in the levir's own case the prohibition to marry the rival is regarded as having the force of a positive precept, in that of the other brothers the original prohibition to marry a brother's wife remains in force and marriage with her involves, therefore, the penalty of kareth.

(19) Who regards the levir as the agent of the brothers (supra 10b). Hence they are subject to the same prohibition. As in the levir's own case so in that of the other brothers the levirate obligations supersede the prohibition of marrying a brother's wife, and with it the original penalty of kareth.

(20) רֹאֲשָׁה, a married woman suspected of adultery, who is subject to the ordeal prescribed in Num. V, 12ff. V. Glos.

(21) To the levir; in the case where there are witnesses that the sotah had committed the crime and her husband subsequently died childless. The rival and certainly the sotah herself are in such a case exempt from both the levirate marriage and the halizah.

(22) So Bah. Cur. edd. omit.

(24) Defile ye not yourselves. Lev. XVIII, 24. As the rival in the latter case is forbidden, so is she in the former.

(25) The following refers to a case where a woman married a second husband on the basis of a report by one witness that her first husband had died in a foreign country. If later it was discovered that her first husband was alive, she must be divorced by both. If both died childless prior to the divorce she requires halizah from a brother of each but may not, according to the Rabbis, marry either of them.

(26) Disagreeing with the Rabbis in one point.

(27) Her second marriage having been entered into through an innocent error, no penalty is incurred by her as far as her relationship with the levir from the first marriage is concerned. Hence, in the opinion of R. Simeon, either marriage or halizah is permitted, v. infra 87a.

(28) From this it follows that the rival of a married woman who had intercourse with another husband is permitted to the levir both according to R. Simeon and according to the Rabbis (the latter having only disputed the case of the married woman herself). Why, then, did Rab state that the rival of a sotah is forbidden?

(29) A woman that was faithless to her husband. (Num. V, 12ff).

(30) The woman who married a second husband under an honest misapprehension. Biblically she is permitted to live again with her husband since her second marriage was entered into on the basis of a report by a witness, on the strength of which she was by Biblical law fully permitted to contract the marriage.

(31) He must surely have known that the one was Biblical and the other only Rabbinical! (cf. Gr. ) ‘to speak’, ‘enquire’, ‘argue’.

(32) Lit., ‘all that the Rabbis provided, like that of the Torah they provided’.

(33) A woman suspected by her husband who warned her not to seclude herself with a certain man.

(34) I.e., to her husband.

(35) V. Glos.; in the case where the husband is a priest.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 11b

though she may not marry the levir! — Rab can answer you. ‘I speak of a definite sotah, and you speak of a doubtful one’. But why should a definite sotah be different? Obviously because in relation to her the expression of ‘uncleanness’ is used; is not, however, the expression of ‘uncleanness’ also used in relation to a doubtful sotah! For it was taught: R. Jose b. Kipper said in the name of R. Eleazar, The remarriage by a husband of his divorced wife is forbidden after marriage and permitted after betrothal, because it is stated in the Scriptures. After that she is defiled. The Sages, however, say, the one as well as the other is forbidden, and the expression ‘After that she is defiled’ implies the inclusion of a sotah who secluded herself with a man — The underlying meaning of ‘secluded herself’ is ‘sexual intercourse’. Why then did he say ‘secluded herself’? — In order to employ a euphemism. But in relation to sexual intercourse, [surely,] uncleanness was actually mentioned in the Scriptures. She being defiled secretly! — To subject the offence to a negative precept. And R. Jose b. Kipper? — He does not hold the view that a negative precept is applicable to a sotah, even in the case where she had actually committed adultery. What is the reason? — [Because in reference to the remarriage of a divorced wife] Scripture uses the expression of becoming as well as that of matrimony.

Rab Judah inquired of R. Shesheth: What is the law in regard to the rival of a woman whom her former husband remarried after her second marriage and died? According to the view of R. Jose b. Kipper the question does not arise. For R. Jose b. Kipper having stated that ‘uncleanness’ is mentioned in the case of him who remarried his divorced wife, it follows that her rival is subject to the very same restrictions. And if [objection be raised] from the Scriptural text, She is an abomination, it may be replied that the implication is] that she is an abomination and not her children, her rival, however, being an abomination. The question, however, arises on the view of the Rabbis: Does the Scriptural text, despite the fact that the Rabbis had applied the expression ‘uncleanness’ to the sotah, also bear its ordinary meaning, or since it was once torn away [from its ordinary meaning] it must in all respects so remain? Others say: According to the Rabbis no question arises, for since the text has once been torn away [from its ordinary meaning] it must in all respects so remain. The question, however, arises according to the view of R. Jose b. Kipper: What is the law? [Is it assumed that] although R. Jose b. Kipper stated that the expression of ‘uncleanness’ refers to the remarriage of a divorced wife, the All Merciful has written ‘She is an abomination’ to indicate that ‘she’ is an abomination but not her rival, or is the implication, perhaps, that ‘she’ is an abomination, but her children are not; a rival, however, being an abomination. — The other replied: You have learnt it, ‘If one of them was a permitted wife and the other a forbidden one; if he submit to halizah he must submit to that of the forbidden one; and if he marries he marries the permitted one.’ Now what is meant by ‘permitted’ and ‘forbidden’? If it be suggested that ‘permitted’ means permitted for all the world, and ‘forbidden’ means forbidden for all the world, what practical difference, in view of the fact that she is in either case suitable for him, could this make to him? Consequently ‘permitted’ must mean permitted to him, and ‘forbidden’, forbidden to him; and this may happen where he remarried his divorced wife; and yet it was taught, ‘and if he marries he marries the permitted one’! — No; ‘permitted’ may still mean permitted to all the world and ‘forbidden’, forbidden for all the world; and as to your question, ‘what practical difference, in view of the fact that she is in either case suitable for him, could this make’, one must take into account the moral lesson of R. Joseph. For R. Joseph stated: Here Rabbi taught that a man shall not pour the water out of his cistern so long as others may require it.

Come and hear: ‘Where a man remarried his divorced wife after she had been married, she and her rival are to perform the halizah.’ Is it possible to say ‘she and her rival’? Consequently it must mean, ‘Either she or her rival.’ Did you not, however, have recourse to an interpretation? [You might as well] interpret thus: She is to perform halizah, while her rival may either perform halizah or be married by the levir.

R. Hyya b. Abba said: R. Johanan inquired as to what is the law in regard to a rival of a divorced woman whom her former husband remarried after her second marriage. Said R. Ammi to him: Enquire rather regarding herself! — Concerning herself I have no question since her case may be inferred a minori ad majus: If she is forbidden to him to whom she was originally permitted, how much more so to the man to whom she was originally forbidden! The question, however, remains concerning her rival: Is the inference a minori ad majus strong enough to exclude a rival or not?

R. Nahman b. Isaac taught as follows: R. Hyya b. Abba said, R. Johanan enquired as to what is the law in regard to a divorced woman whom her husband remarried after her second marriage. Said R. Ammi to him: Enquire rather regarding her rival! — Concerning her rival I have no question, for an inference a minori ad majus is not strong enough to exclude a rival; the question, however, remains concerning herself. Is the inference a minori ad majus strong enough [to be acted upon] where a precept is involved or not?

(1) If the sotah herself must go through the ceremony of halizah, much more so her rival; how then could Rab state that the rival of a sotah (and much more so the sotah herself, v. supra p. 53, n. 1) is exempt from halizah?
(2) Num. V, 13.
(3) With a second husband who subsequently died or divorced her.
(4) Where no marriage with the second man took place, and he died.
(5) Deut. XXIV, 4, referring, in the opinion of R. Eleazar, to a divorced woman who had married a second husband.
(6) Married or betrothed.
(7) This is deduced by the Sages from And goeth and becometh another man's wife (Deut. XXIV, 2) which, they maintain, implies betrothal as well as marriage.
(8) Lit., ‘but what do I establish’.
(9) That the husband must not take her back. This clearly shews that the expression of ‘uncleanness’ was also used concerning a doubtful sotah.
(10) Lit., ‘he took a nice (or superior) expression’.
(11) Num. V, 13; what need, then, was there for the implication of the text of Deut. XXIV, 4?
(12) Of remarrying a sotah.
Lit., ‘to cause to stand concerning it in a negative (prohibition)’; the negative can only be derived from Deut. XXIV, 4: May not take her again to be his wife.

Who applies the entire text to the remarriage of a divorced wife, whence does he derive the law concerning the sotah?

Lit., ‘it is written concerning it’.

Deut. XXIV, 2, And she departeth out of his house, and goeth and becometh (הנתה) another man's wife.

Ibid., Or if the latter husband (שנ会展中心) die, implying that the divorced woman's connection with the second man must be that of ‘husband and wife’, i.e., lawful matrimony. In the case of the sotah the intercourse was unlawful and cannot come, therefore, under the prohibition of Deut. XXIV, 4.

Is the rival subject to the levirate marriage and halizah?

Deut. XXIV, 4, dealing with a woman remarried after divorce. The text She is an abomination. לילדה כן might be taken to imply that the designation, and consequently the restrictions, refer to the woman only (= she) and not to her rival.

I.e., the exclusion of לילדה may refer not to her rival but to her children who, unlike their mother who is regarded as an ‘abomination’, may marry into priestly families.

Describing the woman (or the act of remarrying the first husband after divorce and second marriage) as ‘uncleanness’.

I.e., its bearing on the woman remarried (v. previous note), with whose case the text in its ordinary meaning is concerned, and consequently on her rival also.

The expression of uncleanness.

Lit., ‘that it was uprooted it was uprooted’, i.e., since it was removed from its context and applied to the sotah, it can never be re-applied to its original case. Hence a rival would not come under the same restrictions as the sotah herself.

To whom, consequently, the restrictions would not apply.

And consequently subject to the same restrictions as the woman herself.

Two widows of a brother who died without issue.

The levir.

Infra 44a, and thereby liberates also the other widow, her rival.

I.e., even to priests.

In case she was once, e.g., a divorced woman and is thus forbidden to marry a priest.

He being an ordinary Israelite.

Lit., ‘and what is it’.

The deceased brother.

In which case the woman who was remarried is forbidden to the levir as she was forbidden to his deceased brother who had married her unlawfully, while her rival, having been lawfully married, is permitted to the levir.

Which clearly shews that the rival of a woman remarried by her former husband is subject to the levirate marriage.

Lit., ‘because of’.

In the Mishnah cited where it is stated that halizah is to be performed with the forbidden one.

A man should not destroy anything which may be of use to others though it is of no use to him. In the case under discussion, the levir submits to halizah from the forbidden one and thus liberates the permitted one to marry even a priest to whom she would have been forbidden had the halizah been performed by her.

To a second husband who divorced her or died.

Halizah surely is performed by one of the widows only!

Which supplies an answer to the enquiry addressed by Rab Judah to R. Shesheth.

‘He and her rival’ was interpreted as ‘Either etc.’

In respect of the levirate marriage.

The remarried woman.

Her first husband.

Before she married her second husband.

The levir.

As brother's wife.

From the levirate marriage.

V. previous paragraph.
— The other replied,¹ You have learned it: If one of them was a permitted wife and the other a forbidden one; if she submits to halizah he must submit to that of the forbidden one; and if he marries, he marries the permitted one. Now, what is meant by ‘permitted’ and ‘forbidden’? If it be suggested that ‘permitted’ means permitted to all the world and ‘forbidden’ means forbidden to all the world, what practical difference, in view of the fact that she is in either case suitable for him, could this make to him? Consequently ‘permitted’ must mean permitted to him, and ‘forbidden’, forbidden to him; and this may happen where he remarries his divorced wife; and yet it was taught. ‘If he marries he marries the permitted one’!² — No; ‘permitted’ may still mean permitted to all the world, and ‘forbidden’, forbidden to all the world; and as to your question. ‘What practical difference, in view of the fact that she is in either case suitable for him, could this make’? One must take into account the moral lesson of R. Joseph. For R. Joseph said: Here, Rabbi taught that a man shall not pour the water out of his cistern so long as others may require it.³

Come and hear: ‘Where a man remarried his divorced wife after she had been married, she and her rival are to perform halizah.’ Is it possible to say ‘she and her rival’? Consequently it must mean, ‘either she or her rival.’⁴ Did you not, however, have recourse to an interpretation? [You might as well] interpret thus: She is to perform halizah, while her rival may either perform halizah or be married by the levir.

R. Levi b. Memel said in the name of Mar ‘Ukba in the name of Samuel: The rival of a mema'eneth⁵ is forbidden. To whom [is she forbidden]? If it be suggested, to the brothers,⁶ [it may be retorted ed], now that she herself⁷ is permitted,⁸ for Samuel said, ‘If she refused one brother she is permitted to marry the other’,⁹ is there any question that her rival is permitted!¹⁰ Hence [it means] to himself.¹¹ Wherein, however, does the mema'eneth¹² differ¹³ that she is in consequence permitted to the other brothers? Obviously, in that she had taken no action in relation to them;¹⁴ but her rival also had taken no action in relation to them!¹⁵ — It is an enactment made to prevent marriage with the rival of one's daughter¹⁶ who was a mema'eneth.¹⁷

Is, however, the rival of one's daughter who is a mema'eneth forbidden? Surely we learned, IF, HOWEVER, ANY AMONG THESE DIED, OR MADE A DECLARATION OF REFUSAL, OR WERE DIVORCED¹⁸ [etc.] THEIR RIVALS ARE PERMITTED. Now, against whom was the declaration of refusal made? If it be suggested that she refused the husband, then this case is identical with that of a divorced woman.¹⁹ Consequently it must refer to refusal of the levir!²⁰ — No; it may, in fact, refer to the refusal of a husband, but there are two kinds of divorce.²¹

Wherein, however, does the refusal of a husband differ?²² Obviously in that she thereby annuls the original marriage; but when she refused the levir she has also annulled the original marriage! — [It differs] in respect of what Rami b. Ezekiel had learnt. For Rami b. Ezekiel learnt: If she²³ declared her refusal against the husband she is permitted to marry his father;²⁴ if against the levir, she is forbidden to his father.²⁵ From this it clearly follows that from the moment she becomes subject to the levirate marriage²⁶ she is looked upon as his²⁷ daughter-in-law; similarly here also²⁸ she is looked upon as the rival of his daughter from the moment she²⁹ becomes subject to the levirate marriage.

Said R. Assi: The rival of a woman incapable of procreation is forbidden;³⁰ for it is said in the Scriptures, And it shall be that the firstborn that she beareth,³¹ which excludes a woman incapable of procreation, since she does not bear.³² R. Shesheth raised an objection: In the case where three brothers were married to three women who were strangers to one another, and one of them having died, the second brother addressed to her a ma'amart and died, behold these must perform the halizah but may not marry the levir; for it is said, And one of them die [etc.] her husband's brother shall go in unto her, only she who is tied to one levir but not she who is tied to two levirs; and concerning this it was taught: R. Joseph said, 'This is the rival of a paternal brother's wife whose prohibition is due to her double subjection to the levirate marriage, a case the like of which we do not find throughout the Torah'. Now, what does the expression ‘This is’ exclude? Does it not exclude the rival of a woman incapable of procreation, who is permitted? — No; it excludes the rival of a woman incapable of procreation who is forbidden. What, then, is meant by the expression, ‘This is’? — It is that in this case, where the subjection to the levirate marriage has caused the prohibition, her rival requires halizah; in the case, however, of a woman incapable of procreation even halizah is not required. What is the reason? — The prohibition of the one is Pentateuchal; that of the other only Rabbinical.

We learnt; IF, HOWEVER, ANY AMONG THESE DIED, OR MADE A DECLARATION OF REFUSAL, OR WERE DIVORCED, OR WERE FOUND INCAPABLE OF PROCREATION, THEIR RIVALS ARE PERMITTED — This is no difficulty; the one is a case where he knew her defect while the other is a case where he did not know of it. The inference from our Mishnah also proves this; for it was stated WERE FOUND and not ‘were’. This proves it.

(51) Our Mishnah.
(52) The husband now deceased.
(53) At the time he married her. Since her defect was unknown to him the marriage which had taken place under a misapprehension is invalid. The woman, therefore, is not his lawful wife, and her rival cannot be regarded as a legal rival. Hence the statement in our Mishnah that such a rival is permitted.
(54) Implying discovery after the event, i.e., after the marriage.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 12b

The law is that the rival of a woman incapable of procreation is permitted, even though he knew her defect, and even the rival of one's own daughter who was incapable of procreation is permitted. But what about the expression WERE FOUND in our Mishnah? — Read, ‘were’.

When Rabin came he stated in the name of R. Johanan: The rival of a mema'eneth, the rival of a woman incapable of procreation, as well as the rival of a divorced woman who had been remarried to her former husband, are all permitted.

R. Bebai recited before R. Nahman: Three categories of women may use an absorbent in their marital intercourse: A minor, a pregnant woman and a nursing woman. The minor, because she might become pregnant, and as a result might die. A pregnant woman, because she might cause her foetus to degenerate into a sandal. A nursing woman, because [otherwise] she might have to wean her child prematurely and this would result in his death. And what is the age of such a minor? From the age of eleven years and one day until the age of twelve years and one day. One who is under, or over this age must carry on her marital intercourse in the usual manner. This is the opinion of R. Meir. The Sages, however, say: The one as well as the other carries on her marital intercourse in the usual manner, and mercy will be vouchsafed from heaven, for it is said in the Scriptures. The Lord preserveth the simple.

Since it has been stated, ‘because she might become pregnant and as a result might die’ it may be implied that it is possible for a minor to be pregnant and not die. But, if so, one could imagine a case where a mother-in-law should be in a position to make a declaration of refusal, whereas we learned, ONE CANNOT SAY OF A MAN'S MOTHER-IN-LAW, THE MOTHER OF HIS MOTHER-IN-LAW AND THE MOTHER OF HIS FATHER-IN-LAW THAT THEY WERE FOUND INCAPABLE OF PROCREATION OR THAT THEY MADE A DECLARATION OF REFUSAL! — Read, ‘because she might become pregnant and die’; for Rabbah b. Liwai said: She is subject to an age limitation. Prior to that period she does not conceive at all; during that period she dies and her embryo dies; after that period both she and her embryo survive. But is it really so? Surely, Rabbah b. Samuel recited: One cannot say of a man's mother-in-law, the mother of his mother-in-law and the mother of his father-in-law that they were found incapable of procreation or that they made a declaration of refusal, since they have already given birth to children — But [the reading], in fact, is, ‘because she might become pregnant and as a result might die’. But, [then, the previously mentioned] difficulty remains! — R. Safra replied: Children are like marks of puberty. Others Say: Children are more conclusive proof than the marks of puberty. What practical difference is there between the two statements? — [It is this: That] even he who follows R. Judah who stated, ‘[a girl may exercise the right of refusal] until the black predominates’ admits in the case of children.

(2) And nevertheless consented to the marriage, which is consequently valid, and the woman is his lawful wife.
(3) The rival of a forbidden relative is forbidden only where the latter would have been subject to the precept of the levirate marriage if she had been no relative. In the case of a wife incapable of procreation, however, since she is not subject to the levirate marriage even where she is no relative at all, her rival even where she (the wife) is a forbidden relative, is regarded as the rival of one in relation to whom the precept of levirate marriage is not applicable at all. (23) I.e., while conception is a matter of doubt, death is a certainty whenever conception happened to take place.

(24) A minor.

(25) The age of eleven years and one day to the age of twelve and one day.

(26) Rabbah does not state, ‘since they already grew up’ but ‘gave birth’, which proves that even a minor (not yet grown up) is capable of bearing living children.

(27) From here it appears that a minor can bear children while from our Mishnah it follows that she cannot.

(28) As soon, therefore, as she gave birth to a child the minor is assumed to have passed out of the age of minority into that of puberty. Hence it is impossible for a mother, whatever her age, ever to make a declaration of refusal to which a minor only is entitled.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 13a

R. Zebid, however, stated: No children are possible prior to the appearance of the marks of puberty.\(^1\) Then let an examination be held!\(^2\) — There is the possibility that they might have fallen off.\(^3\) This reply is perfectly satisfactory according to him who holds that such a possibility is taken into consideration;\(^4\) what, however, can be said according to him who holds that no such contingency need be considered? — Even according to him who holds that no such contingency need be considered, the possibility must be taken into consideration in this case on account of the pains of birth.\(^5\)

HOW IS THE EXEMPTION OF THEIR RIVALS [BY THE WOMEN MENTIONED] TO BE UNDERSTOOD? Etc. Whence is this law\(^6\) deduced? — Rab Judah replied: [From] Scripture which stated, li-zeror,\(^7\) [implying that] the Torah included many rivals.\(^8\) R. Ashi replied. ‘It\(^9\) is arrived at by reasoning: Why is a rival forbidden? Surely because she takes the place of the forbidden relative; the rival's rival also takes the place of the forbidden relative’.

HOW [IS ONE TO UNDERSTAND THE STATEMENT THAT] IF THEY HAD DIED etc. Even if he\(^10\) married\(^11\) first and then divorced?\(^12\) This, then, would be contradictory [to the following Mishnah]: ‘[The case of] three brothers two of whom were married to two sisters and the third was married to a stranger, and one of the husbands of the sisters divorced his wife while the one who married the stranger died, and he who had divorced his wife then married the widow\(^13\) and died, is one concerning which it has been said, that if they died or were divorced, their rivals are permitted’.\(^14\) The reason, then,\(^15\) is because the divorce\(^16\) took place first and the marriage\(^17\) was subsequent to it, but had the marriage\(^17\) taken place first and the divorce\(^16\) after it, [the rival would] not [have been permitted]\(^18\) — R. Jeremiah replied: Break it up:\(^19\) He who taught the one did not teach the other. The one Tanna\(^20\) is of the opinion that it is the death\(^21\) which subjects the widow to the levirate marriage\(^22\) while the other\(^23\) holds the opinion that it is the original marriage that subjects her to the levirate marriage.\(^24\) Raba said: [Both statements] may, in fact, represent the views of [one Tanna.] it\(^25\) being a case of ‘this; and there is no need to state that’.

WHOSOEVER IS ENTITLED TO MAKE A DECLARATION OF REFUSAL [etc.]. Then let her\(^26\) declare her refusal now\(^26\) and thus enable [her rival] to be married to the levir\(^29\) May it then\(^30\) be suggested that this supports R. Oshaiah? For R. Oshaiah said: She\(^31\) may annul [the levir's] ma'amor\(^32\) by her declaration of refusal\(^33\) but may not sever by such a declaration the levirate bond!\(^34\) — No,\(^35\) the case of the rival of a forbidden relative is different;\(^36\) for Rami b. Ezekiel learnt: If a minor made a declaration of refusal against her husband she is permitted to marry his father. If, however, she made her declaration of refusal against the levir she is forbidden to marry his father. From this it clearly follows that from the moment she becomes subject to the levirate marriage she is looked upon as his daughter-in-law; similarly here also she is looked upon as the rival of his daughter from the moment she becomes subject to the levirate marriage. MISHNAH. [IN THE CASE OF THE FOLLOWING] SIX RELATIVES, MARRIAGE WITH WHOM IS MORE RESTRICTED THAN WITH THESE, IN THAT THEY MAY ONLY BE MARRIED TO STRANGERS, MARRIAGE WITH THEIR RIVALS IS PERMITTED: HIS MOTHER, HIS FATHER'S WIFE, HIS FATHER'S SISTER, HIS PATERNAL SISTER, HIS FATHER'S BROTHER'S WIFE AND HIS PATERNAL BROTHER'S WIFE.

BETH SHAMMAI PERMIT THE RIVALS TO THE SURVIVING BROTHERS, AND BETH HILLEL PROHIBIT THEM.

(1) Should an apparent minor, whatever her age, ever give birth to a child it must be taken for granted that the marks of puberty had already appeared, and the age of minority had passed.
(2) Why should the existence of the marks be left to conjecture when an examination would definitely determine the facts?
(3) And the examination would prove nothing.
(4) This is a question in dispute in Nid. 46a.
(5) Which may have caused the falling off of the hair.
(6) Lit., 'these words'. That a rival's rival is also exempt.
(7) Lev. XVIII, 18, to be a rival. V. supra 3b.
(8) For explanation, v. p. 12, n. 8.
(9) The exemption of a rival's rival.
(10) The brother now deceased.
(11) The rival.
(12) His first wife, the forbidden relative. In such a case, is the rival, though the two were rivals prior to the divorce, permitted to the levir wherever the forbidden relative was dead or divorced at the time their husband died and the question of the levirate marriage arose?
(13) Lit., 'her',
(14) Infra 30a.
(15) Why the rival in this case is permitted.
(16) Of one of the sisters.
(17) Of the widow.
(18) How, then, could this be reconciled with our Mishnah from which it has been inferred that 'even if he married first and then divorced' the rival is permitted?
(19) שבר, Heb. ‘break’, ‘divide’.
(20) Of our Mishnah.
(21) Of the husband.
(22) And if at that time the women were no longer rivals it matters little whether marriage or divorce (cf. supra nn. 5 and 4) took place first.
(23) The Tanna of the Mishnah cited from 30a infra.
(24) Consequently, if the marriage of the second took place after the divorce of the first, levirate marriage is permitted since the two have never been real rivals. If, however, the marriage preceded the divorce, even if only by a fraction of time, the two have become rivals, and the rival of a forbidden relative is forbidden for ever, even after the rivalry had ceased.
(25) The statements and arrangement of our Mishnah and that cited from 30a infra
(26) אלבט עזריך, one of the systems adopted in arranging legal statements. Our Mishnah permits ‘this’, the case of the rival whose marriage preceded the divorce of the forbidden relative, and consequently ‘there is no need to state that’, the case (infra 30a) of a rival whose marriage followed the divorce of the forbidden relative. (Cf. supra n. 12).
(27) The forbidden relative who is still a minor.
And thus annul the original marriage. Since as a result of the annulment of the marriage the other would no more be the rival of a forbidden relative. As such a declaration is not allowed. A minor. V. Glos. Since the actual marriage had not yet taken place. She has only to perform the halizah; but there is no need for a divorce which would have been required had she been of age (v. infra 50b). I.e., she has no power to annul the original marriage in order to be exempt thereby from halizah also. Similarly here (v. note 4) the declaration of the minor has no force to annul the original marriage and thus (v. supra note 3) to enable her rival to marry the levir. The inference from our Mishnah provides no support for R. Oshaia. The prohibition of a minor's declaration in this case is not Biblical, but a Rabbinical enactment made in order to prevent laxity in the law of rivals of forbidden relatives (cf. infra n. 17). The refusal having completely annulled the marriage, the minor and her former father-in-law are now mere strangers. I.e., after the death of her husband, when she became subject to the levirate marriage of his brother. Her former father-in-law who is also the father of the levir whom she refused. The levir's father's. The case of a rival of one's daughter. Had the original marriage been allowed to be annulled by the daughter's present declaration, and had her rival in consequence been permitted to marry the minor's father, any rival of one's daughter might similarly be allowed and thus an important restriction against incest would be broken down. (V. supra n. 10 and cf. text and notes, supra 12a). The fifteen enumerated in the previous Mishnah, supra 2af. But never to one's paternal brothers. Though they themselves ate forbidden. Their husbands having been strangers, the law prohibiting the marriage of rivals, which is only applicable in connection with the levirate marriage, does not apply. Should one's brother unlawfully marry one of these six relatives his marriage would be regarded as null and void and the law relating to the rivals would still be inapplicable. (Cf. Maimonides, Commentary on the Mishnah a.l.). Who is also forbidden to his paternal brother as 'his father's wife'. Who obviously stands in the same relationship to his paternal brother. In respect of the levirate marriage.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 13b

GEMARA. R. Simeon b. Pazzi said: What is Beth Shammai's reason? — Because it is written, The outside wife of the dead shall not be married unto one not of his kin; 'outside' implies that there is also an internal, and the All Merciful said, She shall not marry [unto one not of his kin].
And Beth Hillel? — They require the text for the exposition which Rab Judah reported in the name of Rab. For Rab Judah stated in the name of Rab: Whence is it deduced that betrothal [by a stranger] is of no validity in the case of a sister-in-law? For it is said in the Scriptures, The wife of the dead shall not be married outside unto one not of his kin; there shall be no validity in any marriage of a stranger with her. And Beth Shammai? — Is it written 'la-huz'? Surely 'huzah' was written. And Beth Hillel? — Since the expression used was huzah it is just the same as if la-huz had been written; as it was taught: R. Nehemiah said, 'In the case of every word which requires a 'lamed' at the beginning Scripture has placed a 'he' at the end; and at the School of R. Ishmael the following examples were given: Elim, Elimah; Mahanayim, Mahanayimah; Mizrayim, Mizraimah; Dibelathaimah; Yerushalaimah; midbarah.

Whence do Beth Shammai derive the deduction made by Rab Judah in the name of Rab? — It is derived from Unto one not of his kin. Then let Beth Hillel also derive it from 'Unto one not of his kin'! — This is so indeed. What need, then, was there for 'huzah'? — To include one who was only betrothed. And the others? — They derive it from the use of ha-huzah where huzah could have been used. A deduction from huzah ha-huzah does not appeal to them.

Raba said: Beth Shammai's reason is that one prohibition cannot take effect on another prohibition. This explanation is satisfactory in the case where the deceased had married first and the surviving brother married afterwards, since the prohibition of marrying a wife's sister could not come and take effect on the prohibition of marrying a brother's wife, where, however, the surviving brother had married first and the deceased married later, the prohibition of 'wife's sister' was, surely, first! — Since the prohibition of a 'brother's wife' cannot take effect on the prohibition of 'wife's sister', [any of the other widows] is the rival of a forbidden relative to whom the precept of the levirate marriage is inapplicable, and is consequently permitted.

IF THEY HAD PERFORMED THE HALIZAH, BETH SHAMMAI DECLARE THEM INELIGIBLE etc. Is not this obvious? — [It had to be stated] in order to exclude [the instruction] of R. Johanan b. Nuri who said: Come and let us issue an ordinance that the rivals perform the halizah but do not marry the levir. Hence it was taught that Beth Hillel declare them eligible.

IT THEY WERE MARRIED TO THE LEVIRS etc. BETH HILLEL DECLARE THEM INELIGIBLE. What need again was there for this? — Because it was taught, IF THEY PERFORM THE HALIZAH it was also taught, IF THEY WERE MARRIED TO THE LEVIRS.

We learned elsewhere: The Scroll of Esther is read on the eleventh, the twelfth, the thirteenth, the fourteenth or the fifteenth [of Adar]. but not earlier or later. Said Resh Lakish to R. Johanan: Apply here the text of Lo tithgodedu, you shall not form separate sects! (Is not Lo tithgodedu required for its own context, the All Merciful having said, ‘You shall not inflict upon yourselves any bruise for the dead’? — If so, Scripture should have said, Lo tithgodedu, why did it say ‘Lo tithgodedu’? Hence it must be inferred that its object was this. Might it not then be suggested that the entire text refers to this only? — If so, Scripture should have said, Lo thagodu, why did it say ‘Lo tithgodedu’? Hence the two deductions. — The former answered: Have you not yet learned, ‘Wherever it is customary to do manual labour on the Passover Eve until midday it may be done; wherever it is customary not to do any work it may not be done’? The first said to him: I am speaking to you of a prohibition, for R. Shamen b. Abba said in the name of R. Johanan: ‘Scripture having said, To confirm these days of Purim in their appointed times, the Sages have ordained for them different times, and you speak to me of a custom!’ But is there no prohibition there? Surely we learned, ‘Beth Shammai prohibit work during the night!’ and Beth Hillel permit it! — The other said to him: In that case, anyone seeing [a man abstaining from work] would suppose him to be out of work. But do not BETH SHAMMAI PERMIT THE RIVALS TO THE OTHER BROTHERS AND BETH HILLEL FORBID THEM!
The rivals.
(2) With the brothers.
(3) In the opinion of Beth Shammai the halizah is legal and any woman who performed legal halizah is, like one divorced, forbidden to marry a priest.
(4) In their opinion the halizah was unnecessary and may, therefore, be treated as if it had never taken place.
(5) When their husbands die.
(6) Because having married persons to whom they are forbidden they are regarded as harlots who are ineligible ever to marry a priest.
(7) Lit., ‘do clean things, these upon these’.
(8) For permitting the rivals to marry the other brothers.
(9) Huzah is rendered, ‘the one who is the outside one’, the word being regarded as an adjective fem. with the relative. E.V., ‘abroad’.
(10) Deut. XXV, 5.
(11) I.e., the one who is not otherwise related to the levir.
(12) Related to the levir.
(13) But only unto her husband's brother (Deut. XXV, 5), which shews that a rival is permitted to the other brothers.
(14) Who prohibit the rival to the brothers, how do they explain this text?
(15) Before halizah had been performed.
(16) Lit., ‘she shall not be’, הַתָּעָבְרָה (rt. דָּעַבְרָה).
(17) Cf. E.V. for הַזְּדוּכָה, supra note 3.
(18) Deut. XXV, 5.
(19) Lit., ‘a stranger shall have no being (יִנֵּהַדְוֹ of the root יְנֵהַד) in her’.
(20) הִזְהַר, lit., ‘to the outside’.
(21)isode, v. supra note 3.
(22) resil.
(23) To indicate direction.
(24) The he being the he local.
(25) Lit., ‘he recited’ or ‘taught’.
(26) ‘To אֶרֶץ אָרְחָל appears as אֶרֶץ אָרְחָל (Ex. XV, 27) instead of אֶרֶץ אָרְחָל.
(27) ‘To מַלְכִּים appears as מַלְכִּים (II Sam. XVII, 24) instead of מַלְכִּים.
(28) ‘To מְצַר, מְצַר, Gen. XII, 10.
(29) ‘To דֶּדֶּדֶּדֶּדֶּדֶּד (Num. XXXIII, 47).
(30) ‘To יִרְשֵׁשֵׁשֵׁשֵׁשֵׁשֵׁש (Jerusalem) יִרְשֵׁשֵׁשֵׁשֵׁש (Ezek. VIII, 3).
(31) ‘To מְדַבְּרָר (wilderness or place-name) מְדַבְּרָר (I Chron. V, 9).
(32) Deut. XXV, 5.
(33) To the deceased brother. Such a widow also is subject to the levirate marriage as if she had been actually married. ‘Huzah’ implies (cf. supra p. 68, n. 3) ‘outside’, i.e., one who is not within the marriage bond.
(34) The addition of the ‘he’ in הַזְּדוּכָה where הַזְּדוּכָה would have conveyed the same meaning implies the inclusion of the betrothed. (V. n. 6.)
(35) V. p. 68, n. 2, supra.
(36) That, e.g., of marrying a brother's wife.
(37) That of marrying a forbidden relative (e.g., a daughter). Since the latter prohibition takes no effect in such a case, the forbidden relative whom the levirate bond does not consequently affect may be regarded as non-existent, so far as her levirate obligations are concerned. Her rivals, therefore, come under the category of complete strangers and are consequently permitted to the brothers.
(38) A sister of his brother's wife.
(39) Which arose later.
(40) As legally the widow is only ‘his brother's wife’ but not ‘his wife's sister’, her rivals may justly be regarded as strangers who are permitted.
(41) And his wife's sister has in consequence become forbidden to him.
(42) When the prohibition of a brother's wife arose.
And consequently had taken effect; why then are her rivals permitted? This objection is based on the assumption that Raba, in stating the prohibition of marrying a forbidden relative cannot take effect owing to the prohibition of 'brother's wife', was referring only to such prohibitions as are due to a marriage contract, e.g., a wife's sister.

Lit., 'in the place'.

V. supra p. 69, n. 10.

What need then was there for stating it.

Of forbidden relatives.

And being subject to halizah, even though on account of a Rabbinical ordinance only, it might have been assumed that they are ineligible for marriage with a priest. (Cf. supra p. 67, n. 9.)

Indicating that the rivals in such a case are not even Rabbinically subject to the halizah.

Of the reason given supra. V. previous note.

Halizah and marriage usually being the only alternatives.

'scroll', always signifies in Rabbinical literature the Scroll of Esther, unless the context explicitly or implicitly points to any other scroll.

According to whether the readers live in a village, a town, or a town that had been walled in the days of Joshua, and according to the day of the week on which the feast of Purim occurs.

Than the eleventh.

Than the fifteenth. Meg. 2a.

(Deut. XIV, 1), rendered by E.V. Ye shall not cut yourselves, is here taken as a form of the root הָצַּר, 'to bind', implying the formation of separate groups, sects, factions.

Why, then, was the Scroll allowed to be read on different days by different classes of people?

Cf. supra n. 13 for the rendering of E.V.

Which would have implied the prohibition of cutting or bruising the body. (V. p. 70, n. 13.)

The longer form, the Hithpael.

Lit., 'for this it came', to imply both 'cutting the body for the dead', and 'the formation of sects'.

The formation of sects.

Which would have been understood to refer to the undesirable formation of sects.

It has thus been shewn that the formation of sects is undesirable; why then was it allowed to form separate groups to read the Scroll of Esther on different dates?

Or 'You should have replied' (Rashi).

Which shews that, despite the undesirability of forming separate groups, different customs are allowed.

Esth. IX, 31, emphasis on 'appointed times', בָּלָם עַשְׂרֵהֶם.

I.e., a group who were ordained to read the Scroll on a particular date must not read it on any other date.

Manual labour on the Passover Eve is universally permitted, and its prohibition in certain places is not a matter of law but merely a question of custom.

In the case of work on the Passover Eve. (Both the day and the night preceding the Passover are designated יָרָאָב פָּסָחָא Passover Eve).

Preceding the first Passover night.

Which shews, since some would be acting in accordance with the ruling of Beth Shammai while others would follow Beth Hillel, that even in the case of a prohibition the formation of sects is allowed.

Lit., 'there', where some people do no work though permitted.

The question of sects does not arise in such a case.

A dispute which creates faction, some following the ruling of the one authority and others that of the other.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 14a

— Do you imagine that Beth Shammai acted in accordance with their views? Beth Shammai did not act in accordance with their views.

R. Johanan, however, said: They certainly acted [in accordance with their views]. Herein they differ on the same point as do Rab and Samuel. For Rab maintains that Beth Shammai did not act in accordance with their views, while Samuel maintains that they certainly did act [in accordance with
When?² If it be suggested, prior to the decision of the heavenly voice,³ then what reason has he who maintains that they did not act [in accordance with their own view]? If, however, after the decision of the heavenly voice, what reason has he who maintains that they did act [in accordance with their views]? — If you wish I could say, prior to the decision of the heavenly voice; and if you prefer I could say, after the heavenly voice. 'If you wish I could say, prior to the heavenly voice', when, for instance, Beth Hillel were in the majority: One maintains⁴ that they did not act [according to their view] for the obvious reason that Beth Hillel were in the majority; while the other maintains⁵ that they did act [according to their view, because] a majority is to be followed only where both sides are equally matched;⁷ in this case, however, Beth Shammai were keener of intellect. 'And if you prefer I could say, after the heavenly voice'; one maintains that they did not act [according to their view] for the obvious reason that the heavenly voice had already gone forth;⁸ while the other who maintains that they did act [according to their view] is [of the same opinion as] R. Joshua who declared that no regard need be paid to a heavenly voice.⁹

Now as to the other who 'maintains that they did act [according to their views]'¹⁰ — should not the warning, 'Lo tithgodedu, you shall not form separate sects'¹¹ be applied? — Abaye replied: The warning against opposing sects is only applicable to such a case as that of two courts of law in the same town, one of whom rules in accordance with the views of Beth Shammai while the other rules in accordance with the views of Beth Hillel. In the case, however, of two courts of law in two different towns [the difference in practice] does not matter. Said Raba to him: Surely the case of Beth Shammai and Beth Hillel is like that of two courts of law in the same town! The fact, however, is, said Raba, that the warning against opposing sects is only applicable to such a case as that of one court of law in the same town, half of which rule in accordance with the views of Beth Shammai while the other half rule in accordance with the views of Beth Hillel. In the case, however, of two courts of law in the same town [the difference in practice] does not matter.

Come and hear: In the place of R. Eliezer, wood was cut on the Sabbath wherewith to produce charcoal on which to forge the iron.¹² In the place of R. Jose the Galilean the flesh of fowl was eaten with milk.¹³ In the place of R. Eliezer only¹⁴ but not in the place of R. Akiba; for we learnt: R. Akiba laid it down as a general rule that any labour which may be performed on the Sabbath Eve¹⁵ does not supersede the Sabbath!¹⁶ — What an objection is this! The case, surely, is different [when the varied practices are respectively confined to] different localities. What then did he who raised this question imagine?¹⁷ — It might have been assumed that owing to the great restrictions of the Sabbath [different localities are regarded] as one place, hence it was necessary to teach us [that the law was not so].

Come and hear: R. Abbahu, whenever he happened to be in the place of R. Joshua b. Levi, carried¹⁸ a candle,¹⁹ but when he happened to be in the place of R. Johanan²⁰ he did not carry a candle!²¹ — What question is this! Has it not been said that the case is different [when the varied practices are respectively confined to] varied localities? — This is the question:²² How could R. Abbahu act in one place in one way and in another place in another way?²³ — R. Abbahu is of the same opinion as R. Joshua b. Levi,²⁴ but when he happened to be in R. Johanan's place he did not move a candle out of respect for R. Johanan. But his attendant,²⁵ surely was also there!²⁶ — He gave his attendant the necessary instructions.

Come and hear: THOUGH THESE FORBADE WHAT THE OTHERS PERMITTED . . . BETH SHAMMAI, NEVERTHELESS, DID NOT REFRAIN FROM MARRYING WOMEN FROM THE FAMILIES OF BETH HILLEL, NOR DID BETH HILLEL [REFRAIN FROM MARRYING WOMEN] FROM THE FAMILIES OF BETH SHAMMAI. Now, if it be said that they²⁷ did not act [in accordance with their own view] one can well understand why THEY DID NOT REFRAIN [from intermarrying with one another].²⁸ If, however, it be said that they²⁷ did act [in accordance with their own view], why did they not refrain? That Beth Shammai did not refrain from marrying women from the families of Beth Hillel may well be justified because such are the children of persons guilty only of the infringement of a negative precept; but why did not Beth Hillel refrain from marrying women from the families of Beth Shammai? Such, surely, being children of persons who are guilty of an offence involving kareth, are bastards! And if it be suggested that Beth Hillel are of the opinion that the descendant of those who are guilty of an offence involving kareth is not a bastard, surely, [it may be retorted], R. Eleazar said: Although Beth Shammai and Beth Hillel are in disagreement on the questions of rivals, they concede that a bastard is only he who is descended from a marriage which is forbidden as incest and punishable with kareth! Does not this then conclusively prove that they did not act [in accordance with their own view]? — No; they acted, indeed, [in accordance with their own view], but they informed them [of the existence of any such cases] and they kept away.

This may also be proved by logical inference; for in the final clause it was stated. [SIMILARLY IN RESPECT OF] ALL [THE QUESTIONS OF RITUAL] CLEANNESS AND UNCLEANNESS, WHICH THESE DECLARED CLEAN WHERE THE OTHERS DECLARED UNCLEAN, NEITHER OF THEM ABSTAINED FROM USING THE UTENSILS OF THE OTHERS FOR THE PREPARATION OF FOOD THAT WAS RITUALLY CLEAN.

(1) R. Johanan and R. Lakish.
(2) I.e., to what period does the dispute just mentioned refer?
(3) הָבֹּל (v. Glos. s.v. Bath Kol), which decided that the law in practice was always to be in accordance with the rulings of Beth Hillel (v. ‘Er. 13a).
(4) Lit., ‘according to him who said’.
(5) Beth Shammai.
(6) Lit., ‘and he who said’.
(7) In qualifications and attainments.
(8) And decided the issue in favour of Beth Hillel.
(9) B.M. 59b, Ber. 52a, ‘Er. 7a, Pes. 114a.
(10) Even after the heavenly voice.
(12) The knife required for the performance of circumcision. The circumcision of a child, his health permitting, must take place on the eighth day of his birth (v. Gen. XVII, 12) even though it happened to fall on a Sabbath when manual labour is prohibited. And since the precept itself supersedes the Sabbath, all its requisites such as the wood and coals (for the preparation of warm water) and the knife may also be performed on the Sabbath.
(13) Though it is forbidden to eat meat, or any dishes made of meat, together with milk or any preparation of milk. R. Jose exempts the flesh of fowl from the general prohibition of the consumption of meat and milk. Shab. 130a, Hul. 116a.
(14) Lit., ‘yes’; only there was the preparation of the requisites of circumcision permitted on the Sabbath.
(15) Such as the cutting of wood, the production of coals and the forging of the knife.
(16) Now, in view of the undesirability of creating different sects, why were all these varied practices allowed?
(17) It should have been obvious to him that different localities may differ in their custom. (Cf. supra p. 53, n. 11.)
(18) Lit., ‘moved’.
(19) On the Sabbath. A candle, though it was burning when Sabbath set in may, according to R. Joshua who follows R. Simeon in permitting mukzeh (v. next note), be moved on the Sabbath after the flame has gone out.
(20) R. Johanan, following R. Judah, forbids the carrying or moving of a candle that had been burning when the Sabbath set in though it had subsequently gone out. As it was burning at the commencement of the Sabbath it was at that time fit for no other use and is regarded, therefore, as mukzeh, i.e., ‘something set aside’, that is not to be used for any other purpose. Anything that was mukzeh when the Sabbath began remains so until it ends.
(21) Is not the practice of carrying a candle in one place and not carrying it in another as undesirable as the formation of opposing sects?
(22) Lit., ‘we say thus’.
(23) Lit., ‘how did he do here thus’ (bis).
(24) V. supra note 3.
(25) Who well knew that his master was of the same opinion as R. Joshua b. Levi. The שאלות was in many cases both an attendant on the master and also one of his learned disciples.

(26) And might move such a candle on the Sabbath even in R. Johanan's place.

(27) Beth Shammai.

(28) Since, in practice, both schools followed the same principles.

(29) The descendants from the marriages with strangers contracted by the rivals who, in accordance with the ruling of Beth Hillel, performed no halizah.

(30) Even Beth Shammai who require the rivals to perform the halizah regard such marriages as the infringement of a prohibition only (‘The wife of the dead shall not be married abroad’, Deut. XXV, 5), which does not involve kareth. The children of such marriages are consequently not deemed to be bastards.

(31) Descendants from marriages between rivals and brothers-in-law. Such marriages, which are permitted by Beth Shammai, are regarded by Beth Hillel as undue under the prohibition of marrying one's brother's wife, which involves the penalty of kareth.

(32) How, then, did they intermarry with families containing such members?

(33) A bastard being the descendant only of such marriages as are subject to one of the capital punishments that are carried out under the jurisdiction of a court.

(34) Beth Hillel.

(35) That Beth Shammai duly informed Beth Hillel of any families contracting marriages which according to the ruling of the latter were forbidden.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 14b

Now, if it be agreed that the required information was supplied¹ one well understands why they² did not abstain.³ If, however, it be assumed that no such information was supplied, one can still understand why Beth Shammai did not abstain from using the utensils of Beth Hillel, since that which was regarded by Beth Hillel as ritually unclean was deemed by Beth Shammai to be ritually clean; but why did not Beth Hillel abstain from using the utensils of Beth Shammai when that which was deemed clean by Beth Shammai was regarded as unclean by Beth Hillel? Must it not, then, be concluded that they supplied them with the required information! Our point is thus proved.

In what respect is the one⁴ more conclusive proof⁵ than the other?⁶ — It might have been thought that the case of a rival⁷ receives due publicity,⁸ hence it was necessary [for the inference from the final clause] to be cited.

[Reverting to] the previous text, ‘R. Eleazar said: Although Beth Shammai and Beth Hillel are in disagreement on the question of rivals they concede that a bastard is only he who is descended from a marriage forbidden as incest and punishable by kareth’. Who concedes? If it be said, Beth Shammai to Beth Hillel;⁹ this, surely, is obvious, since the children of those who are guilty of the infringement of a negative precept¹⁰ are deemed legitimate.¹¹ Must it not consequently be the case that Beth Hillel conceded to Beth Shammai;¹² but this very case is subject to the penalty of kareth! — The fact is that Beth Shammai conceded to Beth Hillel; and the purpose was to exclude the opinion of R. Akiba, who maintains that a descendant from persons guilty of the infringement of a negative precept is deemed a bastard.¹³ Hence it was taught¹⁴ that a descendant from persons guilty of the infringement of a negative precept is not deemed a bastard.

Come and hear: Although Beth Shammai and Beth Hillel are in disagreement on the questions of rivals, sisters,¹⁵ an old bill of divorce,¹⁶ a doubtfully married woman,¹⁷ a woman whom her husband had divorced¹⁸ and who stayed with him over the night in an inn,¹⁹ money, valuables, a perutah and the value of a perutah,²⁰ Beth Shammai did not, nevertheless, abstain from marrying women of the families of Beth Hillel, nor did Beth Hillel refrain from marrying those of Beth Shammai. This is to teach you that they shewed love and friendship towards one another, thus putting into practice the Scriptural text, Love ye truth and peace.²¹ R. Simeon said: They abstained [from marrying] in cases of certainty but did not abstain in doubtful cases. Now, if you agree that they acted [in accordance with their own views] one can well understand why they abstained. If, however, you assume that they did not so act, why did they abstain? — And how do you understand this? Even if it be granted that they did act [in accordance with their own views], one can only understand why Beth Hillel abstained from intermarrying with Beth Shammai, because the latter, in the opinion of Beth Hillel, were guilty of offences involving kareth and their descendants were consequently bastards; as to Beth Shammai, however, why did they abstain from intermarrying with Beth Hillel, when they were [even in the opinion of Beth Shammai] only guilty of the infringement of a negative precept and [their descendants] were consequently legitimate? — As R. Nahman said elsewhere that the statement was required only for the case of the rival herself, so here also the Statement is required for the case of the rival herself.

Why is a doubtful case different from a case of a certainty? Obviously because it is forbidden. Is not a doubtful case also forbidden? — Do not read, ‘from a doubtful case’, but ‘from a case unknown’, since when they received the information they kept away. And what does he teach us thereby? That they shewed love and friendship to one another? But this is exactly the same as the first clause! — He teaches us this: That the entire Mishnah represents the views of R. Simeon.

Come and hear: R. Johanan b. Nuri said: ‘How is this law to be promulgated in Israel? Were we to act in accordance with the ruling of Beth Shammai, the child would, in accordance with the ruling of Beth Hillel, be a bastard. And were we to act in accordance with the ruling of Beth Hillel, the child, according to the ruling of Beth Shammai, would be tainted; come, then, and let us issue an ordinance that the rivals

(1) By Beth Shammai.
(2) Beth Hillel, who were the more rigorous in matters of ritual cleanness.
(3) From using the utensils of Beth Shammai. The fact that any vessel was not clean according to Beth Hillel would have been, they knew, duly communicated to them.
(4) The inference from the final clause of our Mishnah relating to ritual cleanness and uncleanness.
(5) That the required information was supplied.
(6) The first clause dealing with the marriages of rivals.
(7) Who married one of the brothers.
(8) And no special report on such a case is needed.
(9) Where a rival married a stranger without previously performing the halizah (v. our Mishnah).
(10) V. supra p. 75, n. 4.
(11) And the question of legitimacy does not at all arise in the dispute.
(12) In respect of a rival who married one of the brothers.
(13) Infra 49a.
(14) In our Mishnah.
(15) Who married their brothers; infra 26a.
(16) Git. 79b.
(17) I.e., where the validity of her marriage is in doubt. V. infra 107a.
(18) Lit., ‘and about him who divorced his wife’.
(19) Git. 81a.
(20) The last four deal with the question of what constitutes legal betrothal. Kid. 2a and 11a.
(21) Zech. VIII, 19.
(22) Tosef. Yeb. I.
(23) Beth Shammai.
(24) Whom Beth Shammai abstained from marrying before she performed the halizah.
(25) So long, therefore, as no report had been received the unknown case was assumed to belong to the pure families.
(26) Why then should there be a repetition of the same thing?
(27) Relating to the marriages of rivals.
(28) Who permit the rivals to marry the brothers.
(29) Having been born from a forbidden marriage (that of a brother's wife) which involves kareth.
(30) Permitting rivals to marry strangers without previous halizah.
(31) Though not actually a bastard, he would, were he a kohen, be disqualified from the priesthood.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 15a

perform the halizah¹ but do not marry any of the brothers’.² They had hardly time to conclude the matter before confusion set in. Said R. Simeon b. Gamaliel to them, ‘What now could we do with previous rivals’?³ Now, if you assume that they⁴ acted [in accordance with their own rulings] one can understand why he said, ‘What shall we do’.⁵ If, however, you assume that they did not so act, what is the meaning of ‘What shall we do’?⁶ — R. Nahman b. Isaac replied: This⁷ was required only in the case of the rival herself;⁸ and this is the meaning of the objection ‘what shall we do’: ‘How shall we, according to Beth Shammai, proceed with those rivals [who married⁹ in accordance with the rulings] of Beth Hillel? Should they be asked to perform the halizah, they would become despised by their husbands; and should you say, "Let them be despised", [it could be retorted]. Her ways are ways of pleasantness and all her paths are peace’.¹⁰

Come and hear: R. Tarfon¹¹ said: Would that the rival of [my] daughter¹² were to fall to my lot¹³ so that I could marry her!¹⁴ — Read, ‘that I could make her marry [another]’.¹⁵ But he said, ‘Would’!¹⁶ — It¹⁷ implies objection to the ordinance¹⁸ of R. Johanan b.Nuri.¹⁹

Come and hear: It happened that R. Gamaliel's daughter was married to his brother Abba who died without issue, and that R. Gamaliel married her rival²⁰ — But how do you understand this? Was R. Gamaliel²¹ one of the disciples of Beth Shammai²² But [this is the explanation]: R. Gamaliel's daughter was different because she was incapable of procreation.²³ Since, however, it was stated in the final clause, ‘Others say that R. Gamaliel's daughter was incapable of procreation’ it may be inferred that the first Tanna is of the opinion that she was not incapable of procreation! — The difference between them²⁴ is the question whether he²⁵ knew her²⁶ defect²⁷ or not.²⁸ And if you wish I might say that the difference between them²⁹ is the case where he²⁵ married [the rival] first and subsequently divorced [his wife].²⁹ And if you wish I might say that the difference between them²⁹ is whether a stipulation³⁰ in the case of matrimonial intercourse is valid.³¹

R. Mesharsheya raised an objection: It once happened that R. Akiba gathered the fruit of an ethrog³² on the first of Shebat³³ and subjected it to two tithes,³⁴ one³⁵ in accordance with the ruling of Beth Shammai³⁶ and the other³⁷ in accordance with the ruling of Beth Hillel.³⁸ This proves that they³⁹ did act [in accordance with their rulings!] — R. Akiba was uncertain of his tradition, not knowing whether Beth Hillel said the first of Shebat⁴⁰ or the fifteenth of Shebat.⁴¹

Mar Zutra raised an objection: It once happened that Shammai the Elder's daughter-in-law was confined with child⁴² and he⁴³ broke an opening through the concrete of the ceiling and covered it above the bed with the proper festival roofing⁴³ for the sake of the child.⁴⁴ Does not this prove that they⁴⁵ did act [in accordance with their rulings]?⁴⁶ In that case, any onlooker might assume that it was done in order to increase the ventilation.⁴⁷

Mar Zutra raised an objection: It once happened with Jehu's Trough in Jerusalem, which was connected by means of a hole with a ritual bathing pool,⁴⁸ and in which⁴⁹ all ritual cleansing in Jerusalem was performed, that Beth Shammai sent and had the hole widened; for Beth Shammai maintain that the greater part [of the intervening wall] must be broken through.⁵⁰ But we have also learned that the combination of bathing pools⁵¹ may be effected by a connecting tube of the size of the mouth-piece of a leather bottle in diameter and circumference, viz., a tube in which two fingers may conveniently be turned round.⁵² Does not this prove that they⁵³ did act [in accordance with their rulings]?

(1) So that any stranger might be permitted to marry them, even according to Beth Shammai.
(2) And thus prevent their children from being branded bastards according to Beth Hillel. (V. supra note 6).
(3) Tosef. Yeb. I; the rivals who, relying on Beth Shammai, married brothers-in-law, prior to the ordinance, whose children would, were the ordinance of R. Johanan b. Nuri to be accepted, become bastard.
(4) Beth Shammai.
(5) Since some may have married brothers-in-law. V. supra n. 1.
(6) No such marriage could possibly have taken place.
(7) R. Simeon b. Gamaliel's precaution.
(8) Who may have married a stranger without previous halizah, in accordance with the ruling of Beth Hillel. It has no reference at all to the children, who would not be regarded bastards even according to Beth Shammai.
(9) Strangers, previously performing the halizah.
(10) Prov. III, 17. The ways of the law must lead to no unpleasantness for the innocent.
(11) A disciple of Beth Shammai.
(12) Who was married to a brother of his.
(13) As levir.
(14) Which shews that Beth Shammai acted in accordance with their ruling that the rival of a forbidden relative is permitted to the brothers.
(15) Which is, of course, permitted according to Beth Hillel. The Heb. הַנַּשְׂפֵּה ‘I will marry her’ (verb. neut. Kal) may be easily mistaken for הנשב ‘I will cause her to marry another’ (verb. act. Hif.).
(16) Which implies a desire to shew something novel. Marrying a stranger, in accordance with the ruling of Beth Hillel, is the usual practice.
(17) The expression ‘would’.
(18) Lit., ‘to bring out’, ‘to exclude (the view)’.
(19) Who desired to institute for rivals halizah to enable them to marry strangers, though prohibiting their marriage with the brothers.
(20) Thus acting in accordance with the ruling of Beth Shammai. (V. p. 79, n. 12.)
(21) A descendant of the house of Hillel.
(22) Obviously not. How, then, could it be assumed that he acted in accordance with a ruling of Beth Shammai?
(23) And the rival of such a woman is permitted to the brothers. V. Mishnah supra 2b.
(24) The ‘Others’ and the first Tanna.
(26) R. Gamaliel's daughter's.
(27) At the time of their marriage.
(28) V. supra 12a. According to the first Tanna, the rival of R. Gamaliel's daughter was permitted only because her husband was unaware of her defect, and their marriage consequently took place under a misconception. Such a marriage being invalid, R. Gamaliel's daughter was not a legal wife, and her rival consequently was a mere stranger to her father. According to the ‘Others’, who use the expression ‘was incapable’ and not ‘was discovered to be incapable’, the rival was permitted to R. Gamaliel irrespective of whether his daughter's defect had or had not been known, to her husband.
(29) V. supra 13a. Such as was the case with R. Gamaliel's daughter. The first Tanna is of the opinion that the rival was permitted to R. Gamaliel because at the time his brother died she was no more his daughter's rival. The ‘Others’, however, maintain that so long as the two were rivals for any length of time (in this case, between the time of the marriage with the rival and the divorce of R. Gamaliel's daughter) they remain legally as rivals for all time, and the only reason why R. Gamaliel was allowed to marry the rival of his daughter was because his daughter had the defect of being incapable of procreation, and the rival of such a woman is permitted to the brothers. V. supra 2b.
(30) That the woman, e.g., suffers from no illness or that she is not afflicted with any infirmity.
(31) Such a stipulation was made by the husband in the case of R. Gamaliel's daughter. The first Tanna is of the opinion that the stipulation is valid, and since an infirmity was subsequently discovered, the marriage is null and void and the rival as a mere stranger is consequently permitted. The ‘Others’, however, regard a stipulation in connection with marital intercourse as invalid. R. Gamaliel's marriage with the rival was consequently permitted only because his daughter was incapable of procreation.
The eleventh month in the Hebrew calendar, the first day of which is regarded by Beth Shammai as the New Year for trees. The period of the gathering was about the end of the second year of the septennial cycle and the beginning of the third.

V. supra n. 10.

Who was a male and, in the opinion of Beth Shammai, a male child, though still dependent on his mother, is like any male adult subject to the obligation of dwelling in a booth during the festival. Suk. 28a.

Since according to Beth Hillel the child, being dependent upon his mother, is exempt from the obligation.

The action, therefore, did not in any way demonstrate a disregard for the ruling of Beth Hillel.

‘א:) ‘a gathering together’, applied to a bath or pool containing forty se’ah of water, which is the prescribed minimum for a ritual bath.

The trough, though containing less than the required minimum, was rendered ritually fit through fusion with the larger pool by means of the connecting hole.

Mik. IV, 5.

Which renders the smaller one, containing less than the prescribed minimum, ritually fit.

Lit., ‘like the tube of a leather bottle in its thickness and hollow space’.

Hag. 21b, Mik. VI, 7; lit., ‘as two fingers returning to their place’.

Beth Shammai.

Since the original tube, according to Beth Hillel, was quite sufficient, and they had nevertheless ordered its extension.

The onlooker might assume that the extension was made in order to increase the volume of the water.\(^1\)

Come and hear: R. Eleazar b. Zadok said: When I was learning Torah with R. Johanan the Horonite\(^2\) I noticed that in the years of dearth he used to eat dry bread with salt. I went home and related it to my father, who said to me, ‘Take some olives to him’. When I brought these to him and he observed that they were moist\(^3\) he said to me, ‘I eat no olives’.\(^4\) I again went out and communicated the matter to my father, who said to me, ‘Go tell him that the jar was broached\(^5\) only the lees had blocked up the breach’;\(^6\) and we learned: A jar containing pickled olives, Beth Shammai said, need not be broached;\(^7\) but Beth Hillel say: It must be broached.\(^8\) They admit, however, that where it had been broached and the lees had blocked up the holes, it is clean.\(^9\) And though he\(^10\) was a disciple of Shammai, he always conformed in practice\(^11\) to the rulings of Beth Hillel. Now, if it be conceded that they\(^12\) did act in accordance with their own rulings, one can well understand why his action was worthy of note;\(^13\) if, however, it were to be contended that they did not so act, in what respect was his conduct noteworthy?\(^14\)
Come and hear: R. Joshua was asked, ‘What is the law in relation to the rival of one’s daughter’? He answered them, ‘It is a question in dispute between Beth Shammai and Beth Hillel’. — ‘But [he was asked] in accordance with whose ruling is the established law’? ‘Why should you,’ he said to them, ‘put my head between two great mountains, between two great groups of disputants, aye, between Beth Shammai and Beth Hillel? I fear they might crush my head! I may testify to you, however, concerning two great families who flourished in Jerusalem, namely, the family of Beth Zebo’im of Ben ‘Akmai and the family of Ben Kuppai of Ben Mekoshesh, that they were descendants of rivals and yet some of them were High Priests who ministered upon the altar’. Now, if it be conceded that they acted [in accordance with their own rulings] it is quite intelligible why he said, ‘I fear’. If, however, it be suggested that they did not so act, why did he say, ‘I fear’? But even if it be granted that they did act [according to their rulings], what [cause had he for saying.] ‘I fear’? Surely R. Joshua said that a bastard was only he who was a descendant of one of those who are subject to capital punishments which are within the jurisdiction of the Beth din! — Granted that he was not a bastard, he is nevertheless tainted; as may be deduced by inference a minori ad majus from the case of the widow: If the son of a widow who is not forbidden to all is nevertheless tainted, [how much more so the son of a rival] who is forbidden to all. They asked him concerning rivals and he answered them about the sons of the rivals! — They really asked him two questions: ‘What is the law concerning the rivals? And if some ground could be found in their case in favour of the ruling of Beth Hillel, what is the law according to Beth Shammai in regard to the sons of the rivals, [who married] in accordance with the ruling of Beth Hillel’? What practical difference is there? — That a solution may be found, according to Beth Hillel, for the question of the child of a man who remarried his divorced wife. Do we apply the inference a minori ad majus, arguing thus: ‘If the son of a widow who was married to a High Priest, who is not forbidden to all, is nevertheless tainted, how much more so the son of her who is forbidden to all’; or is it possible to refute the argument, thus: ‘The case of the widow is different because she herself is profaned’? And he said to them, ‘With reference to the rivals I am afraid;’

(4) He hesitated to eat them owing to the possibility (Rashi) or the certainty (Tosaf. a.l. s.v. testimony) that the earthen jar in which they were kept had been touched by an ‘am ha-arez and, being moist, received the uncleanness imparted to them by the jar which, by Rabbinical enactment, had become unclean by the touch of the ‘am ha-arez.
(5) Keeping olives in a broached container is clear evidence that the owner had no desire to retain the sap that exudes from the olives; and only liquids which are desired by the owner render the fruit susceptible to Levitical uncleanness.
(6) And thus the undesired ‘moisture remained on the olives. As such moisture does not render the fruit susceptible to uncleanness (v. previous note) the olives may safely be eaten even by the scrupulous.
(7) Because in their opinion the moisture that exudes from the olives is regarded as a fruit juice which does not render food susceptible to Levitical uncleanness.
(8) The moisture is regarded by them as actual oil which does render food susceptible to uncleanness. Broaching is consequently necessary in order to indicate thereby that the owner had no desire to preserve the liquid.
(9) I.e., the liquid, having clearly been shewn to be unwanted, does not render the olives susceptible to Levitical uncleanness. ‘Ed. IV, 6.

(17) Beth Shammai.

(18) As the rivals, acting on the ruling of Beth Shammai, might have married the brothers, their children who, according to Beth Hillel, would thus be descendants of marriages forbidden under the penalty of kareth, would be deemed to be bastards. These would certainly resent R. Joshua's declaration in favour of Beth Hillel, and his life would thus be in danger.

(19) No one could possibly resent his decision since no one would be adversely affected by it. Cf. supra p. 83, n. 10, final clause.

as to the sons of the rivals¹ I may testify to you’.²

Come and hear: In the days of R. Dosa b. Harkinas the rival of a daughter was permitted to marry the brothers.³ From this it may be inferred that [Beth Shammai] acted [in accordance with their own rulings].⁴ This proves the point.

[To turn to] the main text. In the days of R. Dosa b. Harkinas, the rival of a daughter was permitted to marry the brothers. This ruling was very disturbing to the Sages, because he⁵ was a great scholar⁶ and his eyes were dim so that he was unable to come to the house of study.⁷ When a discussion took place as to who should go and communicate with him, R. Joshua said to them, ‘I will go’. ‘And who after him?’ — ‘R. Eleazar b. Azariah.’ ‘And who after him?’ — ‘R. Akiba’. They went and stood at the entrance of his house. His maid entered and told him, ‘Master, the Sages of Israel are come to you’. ‘Let them enter’, he said to her; and they entered. Taking hold of R. Joshua he made him sit upon a golden couch. The latter said to him, ‘Master, will you ask your other disciple to sit down?’ ‘Who is he?’ [the Master] enquired. — ‘R. Eleazar b. Azariah’. ‘Has our friend Azariah a son?’ [the Master] exclaimed, and applied to him this Scriptural text, I have been young and now I am old; yet have I not seen the righteous forsaken, nor his seed begging bread;8 and so took hold of him also and made him sit upon a golden couch. ‘Master’, said he,9 ‘will you ask your next disciple also to sit down?’ ‘And who is he?’ [the Master] asked. — ‘Akiba the son of Joseph’.
‘You are,’ [the Master] exclaimed, ‘Akiba son of Joseph whose name is known from one end of the world to the other! Sit down, my son, sit down. May men like you multiply in Israel’. Thereupon they began to address to him all sorts of questions on legal practice10 until they reached that of the daughter's rival. ‘What is the halachah’, they asked him, ‘in the case of a daughter's rival?’ ‘This,’ he answered them, ‘is a question in dispute between Beth Shammai and Beth Hillel.’ ‘In accordance with whose ruling is the halachah?’ — ‘The halachah,’ he replied, is in accordance with the ruling of Beth Hillel’. ‘But, indeed,’ they said to him, ‘it was stated in your name that the halachah is in accordance with the ruling of Beth Shammai!’ He said to them: ‘Did you hear, "Dosa”11 or "the son of Harkinas?”’12 — ‘By the life of our Master.’ they replied. ‘We heard no son's name mentioned.’13
‘I have,’ he said to them, ‘a younger brother who is a dare-devil14 and his name is Jonathan and he is one of the disciples of Shammai.15 Take care that he does not overwhelm you on questions of established practice, because he has three hundred answers to prove that the daughter's rival is permitted. But I call heaven and earth to witness that upon this mortar sat the prophet Haggai and delivered the following three rulings: That a daughter's rival is forbidden, that in the lands of Ammon and Moab the tithe of the poor is to be given in the Seventh Year,18 and that proselytes may be accepted from the Cordyeniens and the Tarmodites.’19

A Tanna taught: When they came20 they entered through one door; when they went out they issued through three different doors.21 He came upon R. Akiba, submitted his objections to him and silenced him.22 ‘Are you’, he called out, ‘Akiba whose name rings from one end of the world to the other? You are blessed indeed to have won fame while you have not yet attained the rank of oxherds.’ ‘Not even,’ replied R. Akiba, ‘that of shepherds.’

‘In the lands of Ammon and Moab the tithe of the poor is given in the Seventh Year,’ because a Master said: Those who came up from Egypt23 had conquered many cities which those who came up from Babylon24 did not conquer, and the first sanctification25 was intended for that time only but not for the future.25 Hence they were allowed [cultivation]26 in order that the poor27 might find their support there in the Seventh Year.28

‘And that proselytes may be accepted from the Cordyeniens and the Tarmodites’. But [the law, surely,] is not so! For Rami b. Ezekiel learnt: No proselyte may be accepted from the Cordyeniens.
— R. Ashi replied: The statement was Kartueniens,29 as people, in fact, speak of ‘disqualified Kartueniens’.

Others say: Rami b. Ezekiel learnt, ‘No proselytes are to be accepted from the Kartueniens’. Are not Kartueniens the same as Cordyeniens? — R. Ashi replied: No; Kartueniens are a class by themselves, and Cordyeniens are a class by themselves, as people, in fact, speak of ‘disqualified
Kartueniens’.30

Both R. Johanan and Sabya maintain that no proselytes may be accepted from the Tarmodites. Did
R. Johanan, however, say such a thing? Surely we learned: All blood stains [on women's garments] that come from Rekem31 are levitically clean,32 and R. Judah declares them unclean because [the people there] were proselytes though misguided;33 [those that come] from the heathens34 are levitically clean.35 And the difficult point was raised

(1) Whether they are tainted or not.
V. supra 15b, which shews that they were not tainted, since they were permitted to occupy the highest office in the priesthood.

(3) Of the father of that daughter.

(4) Since the permission to marry was issued by a brother of R. Dosa (v. infra) who was a member of Beth Shammai.

(5) R. Dosa, who was thought to be the author of the ruling.

(6) And they did not venture to act against his decision without first consulting him.

(7) And was thus unaware that the general opinion at the College was against the ruling.

(8) Ps. XXXVII, 25.

(9) R. Joshua.

(10) Lit., ‘surrounded him with halachoth’.

(11) I.e., that Dosa permitted the rival.

(12) Without the mention of the name of the son.

(13) Lit., ‘not specifically’, ‘undefined’.

(14) בכור שטן lit., ‘the first-born of Satan’, first in obstinate dispute (Jast.); Satansjunge similar to Teufelskerl (Golds.); keen and obstinate (Rashi). Some suggest בכור שונן ‘keen — witted youth’. R. Dosa appears to have been playing upon the rhyme of ah katan, bekor satan, and Jonathan.

(15) And it must have been Jonathan who dared to issue a ruling in accordance with the views of his school against those of Beth Hillel.

(16) מדרון or mortar-shaped seat.

(17) [That does not mean that he was a contemporary of Haggai the prophet, but that he had an incontrovertible tradition on the matter, Me’iri.]

(18) Of the septennial cycle. The countries of Ammon and Moab, though conquered by Moses and included in the boundary of the Land of Israel, were in the days of the Second Temple excluded. The laws of the Seventh or Sabbatical year, which apply to the Land of Israel, were consequently inapplicable to the lands of Ammon and Moab. Any Jews living in those countries, it was ordained by the Rabbis, were to be allowed to cultivate their fields in this year, but besides the ‘first tithe’ which is due in all other years, they were to give the tithe of the poor also.

(19) Despite the opinion of some Rabbis that they were to be regarded as bastards. Cordyene or Kardu was in Babylon; Tarmod or Tadmor, (Palmyra) lay in an oasis of the desert of Syria. [According to Obermeyer (p. 133) the question as to the legitimacy of the offering of the Kardu was on account of the possible intermarriage of the non-Jewish inhabitants with the Jewish converts, won over to Christianity by the Christian missions from Edessa in the first century.]

(20) To interview R. Dosa.

(21) Either in order not to attract Jonathan's attention, or, on the contrary, in the hope that one of them at least might meet him.

(22) Lit., ‘and made him stand’.

(23) In the days of Joshua.

(24) In the days of Ezra.

(25) Hag. 3b.

(26) In the Sabbatical year.

(27) Of the Land of Israel where no cultivation was permitted and where consequently no poor-tithe was given in that year.

(28) By obtaining employment in the fields or by receiving the tithes and the other gifts of the poor.

(29) Mountainers of Media. The Gr.  natives of Karta are mentioned by Polybius and Strabo.

(30) The Cordyenians, however, are not tainted.

(32) Only the menstrual blood of the daughters of Israel is levitically unclean; and no pure Israelites lived at Rekem.

(33) Though they no longer observed the religious laws of Judaism they were once proselytes and as such their menstrual blood is levitically unclean as is the case with that of Israelites.

(34) I.e., from localities where no Israelites live.

(35) Nid. 56b, Bek. 38b.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 16b
that having stated categorically,¹ ‘[those that came] from the heathens’ [he must also imply.] ‘even those from Tarmod!'² And R. Johanan replied: This proves that proselytes may be accepted from Tarmod.³ And if it be replied [that R. Johanan only said], ‘This’,⁴ but he himself does not hold this view,⁵ surely R. Johanan said, ‘The halachah is in accordance with an anonymous Mishnah’⁶ — It is a question in dispute between Amoraim as to what was actually the view of R. Johanan.

Why are no [proselytes to be accepted] from Tarmod? — R. Johanan and Sabya give different reasons. One says, ‘On account of the slaves of Solomon,’⁷ and the other says, ‘On account of the daughters of Jerusalem.’⁸

According to him who says. ‘On account of the slaves of Solomon,’ the reason is quite intelligible, because he may hold the opinion that the child of a heathen or a slave who had intercourse with a daughter in Israel is a bastard. According to him, however, who said, ‘On account of the daughters of Jerusalem’, what is the reason? — R. Joseph and the Rabbis dispute the point, and both of them in the name of Rabbah b. Bar Hana. One maintains that [the number was] twelve thousand [foot]men and six thousand archers, and the other maintains that there were twelve thousand men and, of these, six hundred archers. At the time when the heathens entered the Temple, everyone made for the gold and the silver, but they made for the daughters of Jerusalem; as it is said in the Scriptures. They have ravished the women in Zion, the maidens in the cities of Judah.⁹

R. Samuel b. Nahmani said in the name of R. Jonathan: The following verse was uttered by the Genius of the Universe:¹⁰ I have been young and now I am old¹¹ For who else could have said it! If the Holy One, blessed be He, be suggested, is there any old age in his case? Then David must have said it? But was he so old? Consequently it must be concluded that the Genius of the Universe had said it.

R. Samuel b. Nahmani further said in the name of R. Jonathan: What is [the meaning of] the Scriptural text,¹² The adversary hath spread out his hand upon all her treasures?¹³ — This [refers to] Ammon and Moab. At the time when the heathens entered the Temple all made for gold and silver, but they turned to the Scroll of the Law, saying, ‘That in which it is written, An Ammonite or a Moabite shall not enter into the assembly of the Lord,¹⁴ shall be burned with fire.’

The Lord hath commanded concerning Jacob that they that are round about him should be his adversaries.¹⁵ Rab said: As, for instance, Huma, towards Pum Nahara.¹⁶

Rab Judah said in the name of R. Assi: If at the present time a heathen betroths [a daughter in Israel], note must be taken of such betrothal since it may be that he is of the ten tribes.¹⁷ But, surely, anything separated [from a heterogeneous group] is regarded as having been separated from the majority!¹⁸ — [R. Assi’s statement refers] to places where they have settled;¹⁹ for R. Abba b. Kahana said: And he put them in Halah and in Habor, on the river of Gozan, and the cities of the Medes;²⁰ Halah is Halwan,²¹ and Habor

¹ Lit., ‘he decides and teaches’.
² But can that be so in view of the doubtful character of the admixture of Jewish stock of its inhabitants?
³ Nid. 56b. i.e., they are not regarded as an admixture of Jewish stock and tainted from birth and disqualified. How then could it be said supra that R. Johanan maintains that proselytes may not be accepted from the Tarmodites?
⁴ ‘This proves etc.’ supra.
⁵ I.e., he disagrees with the Mishnah.
⁶ Which, as has been shewn, implies that proselytes may be accepted from Tarmod.
⁷ Who married Jewish women.
⁸ This is explained immediately.

(17) Whom Shalmaneser had carried away into captivity (II Kings XVIII, 11) where they intermarried with the heathens. Children born from such marriages are bastards, and R. Assi holds that a bastard's betrothal is valid.

(18) I.e., if it is not known to which group or class a person or object that comes from a mixed multitude belongs, it is always assumed that the unit came from the majority. Now, since the ten tribes represent only a minority of the heathens, it should be assumed that the betrothal was not made by one of the ten tribes but by a heathen.

(19) And formed a majority of the inhabitants (Tosaf. s.v. בִּנְיָמֵין a.l.). Rashi: A group which is in a settled condition, (kabu'a, v. Keth. 15a and Glos.), though it is a minority, is deemed to represent a half of the whole multitude.

is Hadayab, the river Gozan is Ginzak, and the cities of the Medes are Hamdan and its neighbouring towns; others say, Nihar and its neighbouring towns. Which are its neighbouring towns? — Samuel replied: Karak, Moshki, Hidki and Dumkia. R. Johanan said: All these [were enumerated] in order to declare them as being unfit. When, however, I mentioned the matter in the presence of Samuel he said to me: Thy son implies that he who is descended from an Israelitish woman may be called thy son, but thy son who is descended from a heathen woman is not called thy son but her son. But, surely, there were also daughters, and Rabina had said, ‘From this it may be inferred that thy daughter’s son born from [a union with] a heathen is called thy son’! — There is a tradition that the women of that generation were sterilized.

Others read: When I mentioned the matter in the presence of Samuel he said to me, ‘They did not move from there until they had declared them to be perfect heathens; as it is said in the Scriptures, They have dealt treacherously against the Lord, for they have begotten strange children.’

R. Joseph sat behind R. Kahana while R. Kahana sat before Rab Judah, and while sitting he made the following statement: ‘Israel will make a festival when Tarmod will have been destroyed’. But, surely, it was destroyed! — That was Tammod.

R. Ashi said: Tarmod and Tammod are identical, but the city was rebuilt; when it was destroyed on one side it was settled on the other side, and when the other side was destroyed it was settled on the first side.

R. Hammuna sat before ‘Ulla and was engaged in discussing a traditional law when the latter remarked, ‘What a man! And how much more important would he have been had not Harpania been his [native] town!’ As the other was embarrassed, he said to him, ‘Where do you pay poll tax’? — ‘To Pum Nahara’, the other replied. ‘If so’, ‘Ulla said, ‘You belong to Pum Nahara’. What is the meaning of Harpania? — R. Zera replied: A mountain whither everybody turns. In a Baraitha it was taught: Whosoever did not know his family and his tribe made his way thither. Raba said: And it was deeper than the nether-world for in the Scripture it is said, I shall ransom them from the power of the nether-world; I shall redeem them from death, but for the unfitness of these there is no remedy at all; the unfit of Harpania on account of the unfit of Meshan, and the unfit of Meshan on account of the unfit of Tarmod, and the unfit of Tarmod on account of the slaves of Solomon. Thus it is that people say, ‘The small kab and the big kab roll down to the nether-world, from the netherworld to Tarmod, from Tarmod to Meshan, and from Meshan to Harpania.

And thus found his deceased brother's widow subject to the marriage with his elder brother and forbidden to himself as ‘the wife of his brother who was not his contemporary’.

Of the two elder brothers who was already a married man.
The widow of the first deceased brother who is now also the widow of the second brother.

From levirate marriage with the third brother.

Her rival, the widow of the second brother, who in ordinary circumstances would have been subject to levirate marriage with the third brother since he was a contemporary of her husband.

The second brother.

I.e., said to her in the presence of witnesses, ‘Be thou betrothed unto me’.

Prior to the consummation of the marriage.

V. note 7.

With the third brother. Since her husband's union with his deceased brother's widow was not consummated he never was her legal husband, and as she is consequently not her rival she cannot be exempt from the halizah.

Because the ma'amhar that the husband of the second addressed to the first widow has partially attached that woman to him, and the second has, in consequence, become the partial rival of a forbidden relative and is, therefore, Rabbinically forbidden to enter into the levirate marriage.

In describing the widow of the first deceased brother.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 17b

FIRST commits no error’, since ‘first’ may signify1 ‘first to be subject [to the levirate marriage]’; and ‘he who uses the expression SECOND also commits no error’, since ‘second’ may signify ‘second to marry’;2 Does not our Mishnah, however, include also3 the case of one who contracted the levirate marriage first and subsequently married his other wife?4 What, then, is meant by ‘second’? Second in respect of her marriages.5

Where [in the Scriptures] is [the prohibition of marrying] ‘the wife of his brother who was not his contemporary’ written? — Rab Judah replied in the name of Rab: Scripture states, If brethren dwell together,6 i.e., dwell in the world at the same time; the wife of one's brother who was not his contemporary is consequently excluded; ‘together’ implies who are together in respect of inheritance,7 a maternal brother is, therefore, excluded.

Rabbah said: [That legal] brothers [are only those who are descended] from the same father is deduced by a comparison of this ‘brotherhood’8 with the ‘brotherhood’ of the sons of Jacob;9 as there [the brotherhood was derived] from the father10 and not from the mother,11 so here also [the brotherhood spoken of is that] from the father and not from the mother.12

Let him rather deduce this ‘brotherhood’8 from the ‘brotherhood’ of forbidden relatives!13 — Brethren9 may be deduced from brethren,9 but not brethren8 from thy brother.14 What practical difference is there [between the two expression]? Surely the School of R. Ishmael taught: And the priest shall return,15 and the priest shall come,16 ‘returning’ and ‘coming’ are the same thing!17 — Such an analogy is drawn only18 where there is no other identical word; when, however, there occurs another word which is identical, the analogy is made only with that which is identical.

Let him, then, deduce this ‘brotherhood’19 from the ‘brotherhood’ in the case of Lot, since it is written in the Scriptures. For we are brethren!20 -It stands to reason that the deduction should be made from the sons of Jacob, because the [analogous expression] is available for the purpose;21 for it could have been written, Thy servants are twelve sons of one man22 and yet ‘brethren’ also was written. Hence it must be inferred that the word was made available for the deduction.23

It was necessary for Scripture to write brethren,24 and it was also necessary to write together.24 For had the All Merciful written ‘brethren’ only, it might have been suggested that this ‘brotherhood’ should be deduced from the ‘brotherhood’ in the case of Lot. And were you to reply that [the analogous word]25, is not available for deduction,21 your statement would be negatived,26 [the analogous word] being indeed available; for whereas he could have written ‘friends’ and yet wrote ‘brethren’, the inference must be that the object was to render it available for analogous deduction; hence the All Merciful has written ‘together’, implying only those who are together in respect of inheritance.\(^{27}\) If, [on the other hand,] the All Merciful had only written ‘together’, it might have been said to refer to such as have the same father and mother; [hence both expressions were] required.

But how could you have arrived at such an opinion?\(^{28}\) The All Merciful has, surely, made the levirate marriage dependent on inheritance,\(^{29}\) and inheritance\(^{30}\) is derived from the father and not from the mother!\(^{32}\) It\(^{33}\) was necessary. For it might have been assumed that whereas this\(^{34}\) is an anomaly,\(^{35}\) a forbidden relative\(^{36}\) having been permitted, the brotherhood must, therefore, be both paternal and maternal; [hence it was] necessary [to teach us that the law was not so].

R. Huna said in the name of Rab: If a woman awaiting the decision of the levir\(^{37}\) died, [the levir] is permitted to marry her mother. This obviously shews that he\(^{38}\) is of the opinion that no levirate bond exists\(^{39}\) let him then say, the halachah is in accordance with the view of him who said no levirate bond exists\(^{41}\) — If he had said so, it might have been suggested that this applied only to the case of two\(^{42}\) but that in the case of one\(^{43}\) a levirate bond does exist. Then let him say, ‘The halachah is in accordance with him who said no levirate bond exists even in the case of one levir’!\(^{44}\) — If he had said so it might have been assumed even where she\(^{45}\) is alive;\(^{46}\) hence he taught us that only after death and not when she is still alive, because it is forbidden to abolish the commandment of levirate marriages.

We learned, ‘If his deceased brother’s wife died he may marry her sister’,\(^{47}\) which implies that her sister only may be married but not her mother! — The same law applies even to her mother; only because he taught in the earlier clause ‘if his wife died he is permitted to marry her sister’ in which case only her sister is meant and not her mother, since the latter is Biblically prohibited, he also taught in the latter clause ‘he is permitted to marry her sister’.\(^{48}\)

Rab Judah, however, said: If a woman awaiting the decision of the levi\(^{49}\) died, the levir is still forbidden to marry her mother. This\(^{50}\) obviously implies that he\(^{51}\) is of the opinion that a levirate bond exists,\(^{52}\) let him then say, the halachah is in accordance with the view of him who said a levirate bond exists\(^{53}\) -If he had said so it might have been suggested that this applied only to the case of one,\(^{54}\) but in the case of two\(^{55}\) no levirate bond exists. But the dispute,\(^{56}\) surely, centered round the question of two!\(^{57}\) — But [this is really the reply]: If he\(^{51}\) had said so\(^{58}\)

it might have been assumed [that this holds good only] while she is alive but that after death the bond is broken,

May it be suggested that the following supports his view: ‘If his deceased brother's wife died, the levir is permitted to marry her sister’, which implies her sister only but not her mother?

R. Huna b. Hiyya raised an objection: IF HE ADDRESSED THE MA'AMAR TO HER AND DIED, THE SECOND MUST PERFORM HALIZAH BUT MAY NOT ENTER INTO THE LEVIRATE MARRIAGE. The reason then is because he addressed to her the ma’amar, but had he not addressed a ma’amar to her, the second also would have been permitted to enter into the levirate marriage with him. Now, if it be maintained that the levirate bond does exist, the second, owing to this bond, would be the rival of the ‘wife of his brother who was not his contemporary’! Rabbah replied: The same law, that the second must perform the halizah with, but may not be married to the levir, applies even to the case where no ma’amar was addressed to her and the ma’amar was mentioned only in order to exclude the view of Beth Shammai. Since they maintain that the ma’amar affects a perfect contract, he teaches us [that it was not so].

Abaye pointed out the following objection to him: In the case of two [contemporary] brothers one of whom died without Issue, and the second determined to address a ma’amar to his deceased brother's wife but before he managed to address a ma’amar to her a third brother was born and he himself died, the first is exempt as ‘the wife of his brother who was not his contemporary’ while the second either performs the halizah or enters into the levirate marriage. Now, if it be maintained that a levirate bond does exist, the second, owing to this bond, would be the rival of ‘the wife of his brother who was not his contemporary’! Whose view is this? It is that of R. Meir, who holds that no levirate bond exists.

Does R. Meir, however, maintain that no levirate bond exists? Surely we have learned: In the case of four brothers two of whom were married to two sisters, if those who were married to the sisters died, behold their widows perform the halizah but may not be taken in levirate marriage [by either of the levirs]. Now, if R. Meir is of the opinion that no levirate bond exists, these would come from two different houses and one brother could marry the one while the other could marry the other! — The fact is that [R. Meir maintains that] no levirate bond exists; [but the levirate marriage is nevertheless forbidden] because he is of the opinion that it is forbidden to annul the precept of levirate marriages, it being possible that while one of the brothers married [one of the widowed sisters] the other brother would die, and thus the precept of levirate marriages would be annulled.

If, however, no levirate bond exists, let [also the precept of the levirate marriage] be annulled! For R. Gamaliel who holds that no levirate bond exists also [maintains that] the precept of the levirate marriage may be annulled; as we learned; R. Gamaliel said, ‘If she made a declaration of refusal well and good; if she did not make a declaration of refusal let [the elder sister] wait until [the minor] grows up and this one is then exempt as his wife's sister’. The other said to him: Are you pointing out a contradiction between the opinion of R. Meir and that of R. Gamaliel? No [replied Abaye]; we mean to say this: Does R. Meir provide even against a doubtful annulment\(^{35}\) and R. Gamaliel does not provide even against a certainty!\(^{36}\) — It is quite possible that he who does not provide\(^{37}\) makes no provision even against a certain annulment, while he who does provide\(^{37}\) makes provision even against a doubtful annulment.\(^{38}\)

Said Abaye to R. Joseph: Rab Judah's statement\(^{39}\) is Samuel's;\(^{40}\) for we learnt:

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 18b

If the brother of the levir had betrothed the sister of the widow who was awaiting the levir's decision,¹ he is told, so it has been stated in the name of R. Judah b. Bathya, ‘Wait² until your brother has taken action’;³ and Samuel said, ‘The halachah is in accordance with the ruling of R. Judah b. Bathya’.⁴ The other⁵ asked him: ‘What [objection could there be] if the statement⁶ be attributed to Rab?⁷ Is it the contradiction between the two statements of Rab?⁸ Surely it is possible that these Amoraim⁹ are in dispute as to what was the opinion of Rab!’ — Since this ruling was stated with certainty in the name of Samuel, while as to Rab's view [on the matter] Amoraim differ, we do not ignore¹⁰ the statement attributing it with certainty to Samuel in favour of the one¹¹ which involves Amoraim In a dispute as to the opinion of Rab.

Said R. Kahana: I reported the statement¹² in the presence of R. Zebid of Nehardea, when he said: You teach it thus;¹³ our version is explicit:¹⁴ ‘Rab Judah stated in the name of Samuel, "If a woman awaiting the decision of the levir died, [the levir] is forbidden to marry her mother", from which it naturally follows that he is of the opinion that a levirate bond exists’.¹⁵ Samuel is here consistent; for Samuel said, ‘The halachah is in accordance with the view of R. Judah b. Bathya’.

Said [both statements¹⁶ are] necessary. For had he only stated, ‘A levirate bond exists’, it might have been assumed to refer to the case of one levir only¹⁷ but not to that of two,¹⁸ hence we are taught¹⁹ [that the Same law applies also to two]. And if it had only been stated, ‘The halachah is in accordance with the opinion of R. Judah b. Bathya’, it might have been assumed [that the levirate bond is in force] while the widow²⁰ is alive but that after her death the bond is dissolved, hence we are taught²¹ that the levirate bond Is not dissolved automatically.²²

GEMARA. R. Oshaia said: R. Simeon disputed the first case also²⁴ Whence is this inferred? From the existence Of a Super. fluous Mishnah. For in accordance with whose view was it necessary to teach the clause of the first [Mishnah]? If it be suggested, [according to that] of the Rabbis, [it may be retorted]: If when the levirate marriage had taken place first and the birth³⁴ occurred afterwards, in which case he,³⁵ found her,³⁶ permitted,³⁷ the Rabbis nevertheless forbade her,³⁸ is there any need [for them to specify prohibition in the case where] the birth³⁴ occurred first and the marriage took place afterwards! Consequently it must have been required [in connection with the view] of R. Simeon; and the first [Mishnah] was taught in order to point out to you how far R. Simeon is prepared to go while the last Mishnah was taught in order to show you how far the Rabbis are prepared to go. It would, indeed, have been logical for R. Simeon to express his dissent in the first case, but he waited for the Rabbis to conclude their statement and then he expressed his dissent with their entire statement.

How, in view of what has been said, is it possible according to R. Simeon to find a case of ‘a wife of his brother who was not his contemporary’? — In the case of one brother who died and a second brother was subsequently born, or also in the case of two brothers where the second has neither taken the widow in the levirate marriage nor died.

One can well understand [R. Simeon's reason] where the levirate marriage took place first and the birth afterwards, for in this case he found her permitted; where, however, the birth occurred first and the levirate marriage took place afterwards, what [reason could be advanced]? He holds the opinion that a levirate bond exists and that such a bond is like actual marriage.

R. Joseph demurred: If R. Simeon is in doubt as to whether in the case of a ‘levirate bond’ and a ‘ma'amor’ combined the widow should or should not be regarded as married, need there be any [doubt in the case of] a ‘levirate bond’ alone? Whence is this known? — We have learned: In the case where three brothers were married to three women who were strangers [to one another] and, one of the brothers having died, the second brother addressed to her, a ma'amor and died, behold these must perform halizah with, but may not marry the [surviving] levir; for it is said in the Scriptures, And one of then die [etc.], her husband's brother shall go in unto her, only she who is tied to one levir, but not she who is tied to two levirs. R. Simeon said: He may take in levirate marriage whichever of them he pleases and submits to the halizah of the other. He must not take both widows in levirate marriage since it is possible that a levirate bond exists and thus the two sisters-in-law would be coming from one house.¹ Nor must he take one in levirate marriage and thereby exempt the other, for it is possible that the levirate bond is not as binding as actual marriage, and the two sisters-in-law would thus be coming from two houses.² From this it clearly follows that he³ is in doubt.⁴ And should you reply that Biblically one of the widows may indeed be taken in levirate marriage and the other is thereby exempt, but that this procedure had Rabbinitically been forbidden as a preventive measure against the possibility of the assumption that where two sisters-in-law came from two houses⁵ one may be taken in levirate marriage and the other is thereby exempt without any further ceremonial,⁶ surely [it may be pointed out] R. Simeon's reason is because of his doubt as to the validity of the levir's ma'amor⁷ For it was taught: R. Simeon said to the Sages, 'If the ma'amor of the second brother is valid he⁸ is marrying the wife of the second; and if the ma'amor of the second is invalid he is marrying the wife of the first!' — Said Abaye to him:⁹ Do you not make any distinction between the levirate bond with one levir and the levirate bond with two levirs? It is quite possible that R. Simeon said the levirate bond is like actual marriage in the case of one levir only¹⁰ but not in that of two levirs.¹¹

Does R. Simeon, however, recognize such a distinction?¹² Surely it was taught: R. Simeon has laid down a general rule that wherever the birth¹³ preceded the marriage¹⁴ the widow is neither to perform halizah nor to be taken in levirate marriage. If the marriage¹⁴ preceded the birth¹³ she may either perform the halizah or be taken in levirate marriage. Does not this apply to one levir?¹⁵ And yet it is stated 'she is neither to perform halizah nor to be taken in levirate marriage'¹¹⁶ — No; it applies to two levirs.¹⁷ But in the case of one levir,¹⁷ may she in such circumstances also¹⁸ either perform halizah or contract levirate marriage? If so, instead of stating, ‘If the marriage preceded the birth she may either perform halizah or be taken in levirate marriage’ the distinction should have been drawn in this very case itself,¹⁹ thus: ‘This applies only to the case of two brothers-in-law but with one brother-in-law she may either perform halizah or be taken in levirate marriage’¹ — The entire passage dealt with two brothers-in-law.²⁰

What, then, is meant by the general rule?²¹ And a further objection²² was raised by R. Oshaia: If there were three brothers and two of them were married to two sisters, or to a woman and her daughter, or to a woman and her daughter's daughters or to a woman and her son's daughter, behold these²³ must²⁴ perform the halizah²⁵ but may not be taken in levirate marriage.²⁶ R. Simeon, however, exempts them.²⁷ Now, if it be assumed that R. Simeon is of the opinion that the ‘levirate bond’ has the same force as actual marriage, let [the third brother] take the first widow²⁸ in levirate marriage and let the other²⁹ be thereby exempt.³⁰ R. Amram replied: The meaning of ‘exempt’³¹ is that he exempts the second widow,³² But has it not been taught: R. Simeon exempts them both?³³ Raba replied: The second of the one pair and the second of the other pair.³⁴ Raba, however, was mistaken [in the interpretation] of the four pairs.\textsuperscript{35} For, in the first instance, we have twice the word ‘or’,\textsuperscript{36} and, furthermore, [if Raba's interpretation were the correct one]\textsuperscript{37} it should [have read], ‘R. Simeon exempts the four’.\textsuperscript{38} Furthermore, it was taught: R. Simeon exempts both\textsuperscript{39} from the halizah and from the levirate marriage, for it is said in the Scriptures, And thou shalt not take a woman to her sister, to he a rival to her,\textsuperscript{40} when they become rivals to one another\textsuperscript{41} you may not marry even one of them!\textsuperscript{42} But, said R. Ashi: If they\textsuperscript{43} had become subject [to the levir] one after the other, the law would indeed have been so.\textsuperscript{44} Here,\textsuperscript{45} however, we are dealing with the case where both become subject to him at the same time; and R. Simeon shares the view of R. Jose the Galilean who stated, ‘It is possible to ascertain simultaneous occurrence’.\textsuperscript{46}

R. Papa\textsuperscript{47} said: R. Simeon differs\textsuperscript{48} only where the levirate marriage\textsuperscript{49} took place first, and the birth\textsuperscript{50} afterwards; he does not differ, however, when the birth\textsuperscript{50} occurred first, and the marriage\textsuperscript{49} took place afterwards; and both these cases\textsuperscript{51} are required on account of the Rabbis,\textsuperscript{52} and\textsuperscript{53} [a stronger case is given after a weaker] ‘not only this\textsuperscript{54} but also that’.\textsuperscript{55}

It was taught in agreement with R. Papa\textsuperscript{56} and in contradiction to R. Oshaia: If one of two contemporary brothers died without Issue, and the second intended to address a ma ‘amar to his deceased brother's wife but before he was able to do so a third brother was born and he himself died, the first widow is exempt\textsuperscript{57} as ‘the wife of the brother who was not his contemporary’, and the second\textsuperscript{58} may either perform the halizah or be taken in levirate marriage. If, however, he\textsuperscript{59} addressed a ma'amaron to the widow and subsequently a third brother was born, or if a third brother was born first and he\textsuperscript{59} addressed the ma'amaron to the widow subsequently, and died, the first widow is exempt\textsuperscript{57} as ‘the wife of his brother who was not his contemporary’ while the second\textsuperscript{58} must perform the halizah,\textsuperscript{60} though she may not be taken in levirate marriage.

(1) One as actual, the other as virtual wife of the same husband, the second brother. The Torah required the levir ‘to build up his brother's house’ (Deut. XXV, 9) from which it is inferred that it is his duty to build up only a house but not houses, i.e., to marry his brother's one wife but not his two wives.

(2) Both of whom are subject to the levirate marriage, and one of whom cannot exempt the other.

(3) R. Simeon.

(4) As to whether a levirate bond exists. Cf. supra p. 105, n. 9.

(5) Where two brothers died simultaneously; when the one widow is as much tied to him as the other.

(6) Lit., ‘with nothing’.

(7) Lit., ‘saying and not saying’ or ‘ma'amaron and not ma'amaron’.

(8) The third brother.

(9) R. Joseph.

(10) As in our Mishnah where the first brother was survived by one brother only. The subsequent birth of a third brother does not affect the levirate any more than it can affect an actual marriage.

(11) Of which the cited Baraitha speaks. There, when the first brother died he was survived by two brothers.

(12) Between one levir and two.

(13) Of a third brother.

(14) Of the second brother with the widow of the first.

(15) Who survived the first deceased brother after whose death the third brother was born.

(16) Which proves that even in the case of one levir R. Simeon does not recognize the existence of a levirate bond.

(17) Cf. supra note 4.

(18) Where the birth of the third preceded the marriage of the second.

(19) Where birth preceded marriage.

(20) The Tanna preferred to draw a distinction between two sets of circumstances both of which relate to the brothers-in-law rather than to draw a distinction between one brother-in-law and two brothers-in-law in the same set of circumstances.

(21) According to which neither halizah nor levirate marriage is allowed whenever the birth preceded the marriage. Both, according to what has just been said, are permissible in the case of one levir.
Against the statement that R. Simeon regards the levirate bond as actual marriage.

The women enumerated.

If their husbands, the two brothers, died without issue.

With the third surviving brother.

By that brother; since both are equally related to him by the same ‘levirate bond’ and each is forbidden to him as the consanguineous relative of the woman connected with him by such bond.

Infra 28b; even from the halizah.

I.e., the widow whose husband had died first, and who, through the ‘levirate bond’, is regarded as the levir's virtual wife even before he married her.

Her consanguineous relative, the widow of the second deceased brother.

As a forbidden relative; being consanguineous with his virtual wife.

In R. Simeon's statement.

Whose husband died last. The first, however, is to be taken in levirate marriage.

Infra 28b, Rid. 50b.

‘Both’ used by R. Simeon refers to the second of each pair. Raba assumed that the two brothers had married two sisters and also a mother and her daughter. One of the first is taken in levirate marriage and the others are thereby exempt either as ‘forbidden relatives’ or ‘rivals’.

Enumerated in the cited Mishnah, assuming as he did that it meant marriage by the two brothers of more than one pair (v. previous note).

‘Or’ occurs after the enumeration of each pair.

Viz., that R. Simeon's exemption refers to the second of each pair.

Since four pairs were enumerated.

Widows of the first brother.

Lev. XVIII, 18.

As in the case cited, where each of the two brothers was married to one of each pair, and when the first brother died all his widows became subject to levirate marriage with the second brother and thus become rivals.

Even the first widow. Consequently R. Simeon's exemption applies to all, which shews that he recognizes no distinction on the question of the levirate bond between one levir and two levirs!

The widows.

That the ‘levirate bond’ in the case of one levir being recognized even by R. Simeon as being as forcible as actual marriage. the levir (the third brother) marries the first while the other is exempt, though her husband (the second brother) died before he actually married the first.

In the Mishnah cited by R. Oshaia in objection against the view attributing to R. Simeon a distinction between one levir and two levirs.

I.e., to ascertain that two things occur exactly at one and the same moment, Bek. 17a. Hence it may happen that both brothers die simultaneously and both widows simultaneously become subject to the third brother and consequently, on the view of R. Simeon, both exempt from halizah and levirate marriage.

Disagreeing with R. Oshaia, supra 18b.

From the Rabbis of our Mishnah.

With the second brother.

Of the third brother.

‘Marriage before birth’ in our Mishnah and ‘birth before marriage’ in the previous one.

To shew that they exempt not only in the one case but also in the other. Cf. infra notes 11-12

As to the objection raised (supra 18b): Since they exempt in the second case, what need was there to mention the first which could have been inferred from it a minori ad majus?

The case in the first Mishnah, the birth of the third brother before the marriage of the second, where the birth occurred while the widow was still under a prohibition to marry him.

The case in the second Mishnah, where the birth of the third brother occurred when the widow was already permitted to him.

That when the birth of the third brother occurred prior to the marriage of the second with the widow of the first, R. Simeon agrees with the Rabbis.

From marriage and halizah with the third brother.
(58) The widow of the second brother.
(59) The second brother.
(60) The ma'amor addressed to the first widow not having 'the same force as actual marriage to render the second brother's wife her rival to be exempt from halizah as well as from the levirate marriage with the third brother.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 19b

R. Simeon said: Intercourse or halizah with the one of them\(^1\) exempts her rival.\(^2\) If, however, he\(^3\) participated in halizah with her to whom [the second brother had] addressed the ma'amor, her rival is not exempt.\(^4\) If he\(^1\) married her\(^5\) and died, and a [third] brother was subsequently born, or if a [third] brother was born, and subsequently he married her\(^5\) and died, both [widows] are exempt from the halizah and the levirate marriage. If he married her\(^5\) and [after that a third] brother was born and then he himself died, both widows are exempt from the halizah and the levirate marriage; this is the opinion of R. Meir. R. Simeon, however, said: Since, when he\(^6\) came [into the world] he found her\(^7\) permitted to him,\(^8\) and she was never forbidden to him even for one moment, he\(^6\) may take in levirate marriage whichever of them he desires or he may participate in the halizah with whichever of them he desires. Now, in accordance with whose view was the case in the latter clause\(^9\) taught?\(^10\) If it be suggested that it was taught in accordance with the view of R. Meir,\(^11\) it might be observed that, as R. Meir draws no distinction between marriage that was followed by birth and birth that was followed by marriage, all these cases should have been combined in one statement!\(^12\) Consequently it must have been in accordance with the view of R. Simeon who thus differs\(^13\) only in the case where the levirate marriage was followed by birth\(^14\) but does not differ\(^13\) where birth was followed by levirate marriage.\(^15\) Our point is thus proved.

The Master said, ‘[If] the second intended to address a ma'amor to his deceased brother's wife but before he was able to do so, a third brother was born while he himself died, the first widow is exempt as "the wife of the brother who was not his contemporary and the second may either perform halizah or be taken in levirate marriage’. What is meant by 'he intended' and what by 'he was not able'? If he did it, it is an accomplished fact;\(^16\) and if he did not do it, it is not an accomplished fact!\(^16\) -In fact [this is the meaning:] ‘He intended’ with her consent and ‘he was not able’ with her consent but against her wish.\(^17\)

This,\(^18\) however, is not in agreement with the view of Rabbi. For it was taught: If a man addressed a ma'amor to his deceased brother's wife against her consent, Rabbi regards this as legal [betrothal].\(^19\) But the Sages say, This is not a legal [betrothal]. What is Rabbi's reason?-He deduces [this form of betrothal] from the intercourse with the wife of a deceased brother; as the Intercourse with the wife of a deceased brother may be effected against her will\(^20\) so may the betrothal of the wife of a deceased brother be effected against her will. And the Rabbis?-They deduce it from the usual form of betrothal;\(^21\) as the usual betrothal can be effected with the woman's consent only so may the betrothal of a yebamah\(^22\) be effected with her consent only. On what principle do they differ? — One Master\(^23\) is of the opinion that matters relating to a yebamah should be inferred from matters relating to a yebamah and the Masters\(^24\) are of the opinion that matters of betrothal should be inferred from matters of betrothal.\(^25\)

‘If, however, he addressed a ma'amor to the widow, and subsequently a third brother was born, or if a third brother was born first and he\(^26\) addressed the ma'amor to the widow subsequently and died, the first widow is exempt as "the wife of his brother who was not his contemporary" while the second must perform the halizah, though she may not be taken in levirate marriage. R. Simeon said: Intercourse or halizah with the one of them exempts her rival’.\(^27\) What is R. Simeon referring to?\(^28\) If it should be suggested, ‘To the case where the third brother was born first and he\(^26\) addressed the ma'amor subsequently's surely it has been stated, that where birth preceded marriage R. Simeon does not differ from the Rabbis!\(^29\) — But [the reference is] to the case where the ma'amor was addressed first and the third brother was born subsequently. Hence, ‘if he participated in halizah with her to whom [the second brother had] addressed the ma'amor, her rival is not exempt’, because the [subjection of the] rival is a certainty while [the subjection of her] to whom the ma'amor had been addressed is doubtful, and no doubt may over-ride a certainty.

R. Manasseh b. Zebid sat in the presence of R. Huna, and in the course of the session he said: What is R. Simeon’s reason? — ‘What is R. Simeon's reason’! [Surely it is] as it has been stated: The reason is ‘because when he was born he found her permitted to him, and she was never forbidden him even for one moment’! But [the question rather is] what is the reason of the Rabbis? — Scripture said, ‘I take her to him to wife, and perform the duty of a husband's brother unto her’, the former levirate attachment still remains with her. But then what of the following where we learned, ‘If he married her she is regarded as his wife in every respect’ and [in connection with this] R. Jose b. Hanina said, ‘This teaches

(1) I.e., the second widow.
(2) As will be explained infra this applies to the case where the ma'amor was addressed to the first widow and the third brother was born subsequently, R. Simeon being of the opinion that it is uncertain whether the ma'amor has the same force as actual marriage or not. The rival is in either case exempt: If the ma'amor was binding, then even the first widow is according to R. Simeon permitted to the third brother, since it is a case of ‘marriage prior to birth’, and the halizah with the second consequently exempts the first as her rival, both having been married to the same husband; and if the ma'amor was not binding, the first widow is forbidden to the third brother as the widow of ‘the brother who was not his contemporary’ while the second is not her rival and may be taken in levirate marriage or perform the halizah.
(3) The third brother.
(4) Since it is possible that the ma'amor is not binding and she is in consequence forbidden to him as ‘the wife of his brother who was not his contemporary’ and her halizah has no validity.
(5) The first widow.
(6) The third brother.
(7) The first widow.
(8) Having been born after her marriage with the second brother had entirely severed her connection with the first brother.
(9) Marriage between the second brother and the first widow, followed by the birth of the third brother, which again was followed by the death of the second.
(10) I.e., in accordance with whose view was it necessary to have the case of marriage prior to birth separated from that of marriage after birth?
(11) To indicate that even in such a case he forbids marriage.
(12) Lit., ‘let him mix them and teach them’; the third case, ‘if he married her and (after that a third) brother was born and then he himself died’ should not have been separated from the previous two cases, since according to R. Meir it matters little whether marriage of the second brother with the first widow preceded or followed the birth of the third brother.
(13) From the Rabbis.
(14) As R. Papa stated. V. supra note 7.
(15) Contrary to the opinion of R. Oshaia.
(16) And the intention is of no consequence.
(17) The object of the statement being that the ma'amor has not even partially the force of marriage if it was made against the woman's will. The second widow may, therefore, be taken in levirate marriage.
(18) That the ma'amor addressed to the wife of a deceased brother (Yebamah. v. Glos.) is invalid unless she consented to the betrothal.
(19) Lit., ‘he acquired’.
(20) V supra 8b.
(21) The betrothal of a stranger.
(22) The wife of a deceased brother.
(23) Rabbi.
(24) The Sages.
(25) Rid. 440.
(26) The second brother.
(27) Supra 19a-b, q.v. for notes.
(28) In differing from the Rabbis. Lit., ‘on what does he stand’.
(29) But agrees that the first widow in relation to the third brother is to be regarded as ‘the wife of his brother who was not his contemporary’. Now, since it is possible that the ma’amär is as valid as actual marriage, how could R. Simeon have permitted the rival of a forbidden relative? Furthermore, the expression ‘she exempts her rival’ would be unsuitable, since her rival has all the time been exempt as the ‘wife of the brother who was not his contemporary’.
(30) Lit., ‘what is the reason’.
(31) To the third brother.
(32) If the ma’amär was valid both widows are subject to the third brother, since it is a case of marriage before birth; if the ma’amär is invalid, the second is still subjected to the levir since, no marriage having taken place, she is not the rival of a forbidden relative.
(33) It being possible that the ma’amär is not valid, and the first widow thus remains forbidden to the third brother as ‘the wife of his brother who was not his contemporary’. Halizah with her is, therefore, of no validity and cannot exempt the second widow.
(34) Lit., ‘puts out’.
(35) For permitting levirate marriage with the third brother in the case where the second brother had married the first widow prior to the birth of the third brother.
(36) Supra, q.v. for notes.
(37) Why do they forbid the levirate marriage between the first widow and the third brother, where the only relationship between them is through the second brother, the relationship through the first brother having ceased with the levirate marriage of the widow by the second brother prior to the birth of the third?
(38) Deut. XXV, 5.
(39) ‘taking her to wife’, אִקָּחֵהָ מָה שָׁבָרֵד, does not remove from her the designation of ‘brother’s wife’ מָה שָׁבָרֵד.
(40) Lit., ‘but that’.
(41) A brother-in-law.
(42) The widow of his deceased childless brother.
(43) Infra 38a. Keth. 80b.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 20a

that he may divorce her with a letter of divorce and that he may remarry her’,¹ let it there also be said, ‘And perform the duty of a husband’s brother unto her,’² the former levirate attachment still remains with her and, consequently, she should require halizah [also]! — There the case is different; since Scripture stated, ‘And take her to him to wife’,³ as soon as he married her she becomes his wife in every respect. If so, [the same deduction should be applied] here also! — Surely the All Merciful has written, ‘And perform the duty of a husband's brother unto her’² And why the differentiation?⁴ — It stands to reason that permission⁵ should be applied to that which is [also otherwise] permitted,⁵ and that prohibition⁶ should be applied to that which is [also otherwise] prohibited.⁷

According to R. Simeon, however, who stated, ‘Because when he was born he found her permitted, and she was never forbidden to him even for one moment’,⁸ a brother, if this reason is tenable,⁹ should be allowed to take in levirate marriage his maternal sister whom his paternal brother had married prior to his birth, dying subsequently, since, when he was born, he found her permitted.¹⁰ — Whither did the ‘prohibition of sister’ vanish?¹¹ — Here, also, whither did the prohibition of ‘the wife of the brother who was not his contemporary’ vanish! — The one¹² is a prohibition which can never be lifted; the other¹³ is a prohibition which may be lifted.¹⁴
Mishnah. A general rule has been laid down in respect of the deceased brother's wife: wherever she is prohibited as a forbidden relative, she may neither perform the halizah nor be taken in levirate marriage. If she is prohibited by virtue of a commandment or by virtue of holiness, she must perform the halizah and may not be taken in levirate marriage. If her sister is also her sister-in-law, she may perform the halizah or may be taken in levirate marriage.

Prohibited by virtue of a commandment' [refers to] the secondary degrees in relationship forbidden by the ruling of the scribes. ‘Prohibited by virtue of holiness’ [refers to the following forbidden categories]: a widow to a high priest; a divorced woman, or one that had performed halizah to a common priest; a female bastard or a nethinah to an Israelite; and a daughter of an Israelite to a nathin or a bastard.

Gemara. What was the general rule meant to include? — Rafram b. papa replied: To include the rival of a woman who was incapable of procreation, in agreement with the view of R. Assi.

Some there are who say: ‘Whenever her prohibition is that of a forbidden relative then only is her rival forbidden; when, however, her prohibition is not that of a forbidden relative, her rival is not forbidden’. What was this meant to exclude? — Rafram replied: To exclude the rival of one incapable of procreation, contrary to the view of R. Assi.

If her sister is also her sister-in-law [etc.]. Whose sister? If the sister of her who is forbidden by virtue of an ordinance of the scribes be suggested, fit may be objected; since, pentateuchally, she is subject to the levir, he would come in marital contact with the sister of her who is connected with him by the levirate bond! — It means the sister of her who is prohibited to him as a forbidden relative.

Prohibited by virtue of a commandment', [refers to] the secondary degrees. Why are these designated, prohibited by virtue of a commandment’? - Abaye replied: Because it is a commandment to obey the rulings of the sages.

Prohibited by virtue of holiness’... a widow to a high priest; a divorced woman, or one who had performed the halizah, to a common priest. Why are these designated ‘prohibited by virtue of holiness’? - Because it is written in the Scriptures, They shall be holy unto their God.

It was taught: R. Judah reverses the order: prohibited by virtue of a commandment [refers to the following prohibited categories:] a widow to a high priest; a divorced woman or one that had performed halizah, to a common priest. And why are these designated, prohibited by virtue of a commandment? — Because it is written in the Scriptures, These are the commandments. Prohibited by virtue of holiness [refers to] the secondary degrees of relationship forbidden by the rulings of the scribes. And why are these designated, prohibited by virtue of holiness? - Abaye replied: Because whosoever acts in accordance with the rulings of the Rabbis is called a holy man. Said Raba to him: Then he who does not act in accordance with the rulings of the Rabbis is not called a holy man; nor is he called a wicked man either? — No, said Raba: ‘Sanctify yourself by that which is permitted to you’.

A widow to a high priest. An unqualified ruling is laid down making no distinction between a nissu'in widow and an erusin widow. Now, one can well understand the reason the case of a nissu'in widow [since marriage with her is forbidden by] a positive and a negative precept, and no positive precept may override both a negative and a positive precept. In the case, however, of an erusin widow [marriage with whom is forbidden by] a negative precept only, let the positive precept override the negative one? — R. Giddal replied in the name of Rab: Scripture stated, Then his brother's wife shall go up to the 'gate, where there was no need to state his brother's wife; why then was 'his brother's wife' specified? [To indicate that] there is a case of another brother's wife who goes up for halizah but does not go up for levirate marriage. And who is she? One of those prohibited by a negative precept.

Might it not be said [to include also] such as are subject to the penalty of kareth? Scripture said, If the man like not to take, if he likes, however, he may take her in levirate marriage, [hence it is to be inferred that] whosoever may go up to enter into levirate marriage may also go up to perform halizah and whosoever may not go up to enter into levirate marriage may not go up to perform halizah either. If so, the same should apply also to those forbidden by a negative Precept! — But, surely, the All Merciful has included them [by the expression] 'His brother's wife'. What ground is there for such differentiation?

— This stands to reason, since betrothal of those forbidden by a negative precept is valid while the betrothal of those subject to kareth is not valid.

Raba raised an objection: In the case of one forbidden by virtue of a commandment or by virtue of holiness, with whom the Levir bad intercourse or participated in halizah, her rival is thereby exempt. Now, if one is to assume that those forbidden by a negative precept are Pentateuchally subject to halizah but not to the levirate marriage, why should her rival be exempt when he had intercourse with her? He raised the objection and he also supplied the answer: This is to be understood respectively; ‘he had intercourse with her’ refers to one prohibited by virtue of a commandment, ‘participated in halizah with her’ refers to the one forbidden by virtue of holiness.

Raba raised an objection: He who is wounded in the stones or has his privy member cut off, a man-made saris, and an old man, may either participate in halizah, or contract levirate marriage. How? If these died and were survived by brothers and by wives, and those brothers arose and addressed a ma'amor to the widows, or gave them letters of divorce, or participated with them in halizah, their actions are legally valid; if they had intercourse with them, the widows become their lawful wives. If the brothers died and they arose and addressed a ma'amor to their wives, or gave them divorce, or participated with them in halizah, their actions are valid, and if they had intercourse with them, the widows become their lawful wives but they may not retain them, because it is said in the Scriptures — He that is wounded in the stones or hath his privy member cut off shall not enter [into the assembly of the Lord]. Now, if it could be assumed that those forbidden by a negative precept are Pentateuchally subject to halizah and not to levirate marriage, why should the widows become their lawful wives if they had intercourse with them? But, said Raba, [say rather that] an erusin widow is forbidden by both a positive and a negative precept, for it is written in the Scriptures, They shall be holy unto their God. What, however, can be said in respect of a bastard or a nethinah? — It is written, And sanctify yourselves. If so, all the [negative precepts of the] Torah should be regarded as positive and negative since it is written in the Scriptures, And sanctify yourselves! But, said Raba, [the fact is that] an erusin widow is forbidden as a preventive measure against the marriage of a nissu'in widow. What, however, can be replied in respect of a bastard and a nethinah? — [The prohibition in] the case where a precept is applicable is a preventive measure against [a marriage] where no precept is applicable. If so, let one's paternal brother's wife not be allowed levirate marriage as a preventive measure against marriage with the wife of his maternal brother! — ‘We All Merciful made levirate marriage dependent on inheritance and the relationship is, therefore, well known. A woman, then, who has no children should not be taken in levirate marriage as a preventive measure against the marriage of a woman who has children! — The All Merciful made levirate marriage dependent on [the absence of] children, [and the fact would be] well known. The wife of one's contemporary brother should not be taken in levirate marriage as a preventive measure against marriage with the wife of one's brother who was not one's contemporary! — The All Merciful has made it dependent on dwelling together and the fact is well known. All women should not be taken in levirate marriage as a preventive measure against the marriage of a woman incapable of procreation! — This is unusual. A bastard and a nethinah also are unusual! — But, said Raba, [this is the reason]: The first act of intercourse is forbidden as a preventive measure against a second act of intercourse.

It has been taught likewise: If they had intercourse [with any of the forbidden women] they acquire [her as wife] by the first act of intercourse, but may not keep her for a second act of intercourse.

Subsequently Raba, others say R. Ashi, said: The statement I made is valueless, for Resh Lakish said, ‘Wherever you come upon a combination of a positive and a negative precept and you are able to act in conformity with both, well and good; but if not, the positive precept must override the negative’. Similarly here it is possible to perform halizah, whereby one is enabled to keep the positive as well as the negative precept.

An objection was raised: If they had intercourse [with any of the forbidden women] they acquire [her as wife]! — This is indeed a refutation.

It was stated: Concerning an act of intercourse between a High Priest and a widow [there is a difference of opinion between] R. Johanan and R. Eleazar. One maintains that it does not exempt her rival, and the other maintains that it does exempt her rival.)

(1) The inclusion of the one who is prohibited by a negative precept and the exclusion of those who are subject to kareth.
(2) Lit., ‘he taught to sides’.
(3) As defined in our Mishnah. I.e., a woman forbidden by Rabbinic ordinance but who is Pentateuchally permitted and subject to levirate marriage. Intercourse with her consequently exempts her rival.
(4) With whom marriage is forbidden, and her halizah only exempts her rival.
(5) Lit., ‘eunuch of man’, opp. to natural castration due to a disease etc. V. notes on the Mishnah, infra 79b.
(6) I.e., in what circumstances is the law mentioned applicable.
(7) Lit., ‘what they have done is done’; a divorce is required in respect of the ma’amar; no marriage may take place after the divorce, though no ma'amor preceded it, and the halizah is valid.

(8) Lit., ‘they acquired’.

(10) I.e., those that are maimed. The old man is excluded. V. infra.
(12) Who are crushed or maimed in their privy parts and who are, therefore, forbidden by a negative precept to marry an Israelite’s daughter.
(13) This proves that those forbidden by negative precept are subject to levirate marriage no less than to halizah, and thus the question remains, why should an erusin widow be forbidden in levirate marriage to a High Priest?
(14) To a High Priest.
(15) Lev. XXI, 6. This text adds a positive precept to the negative one of ibid. 14, and for this reason an erusin widow is forbidden in levirate marriage to a High Priest.
(16) Marriage with whom is forbidden by a negative precept only and yet may not be superseded by the positive precept of the levirate.
(17) Lev.XI, 44cf. p. 119,n. II.
(18) That Lev. XI, 44 provides a text from which a positive precept may be deduced and added to the negative one.
(19) Raba’s answer thus being rebutted, there remains the question, why should an erusin widow be forbidden in levirate marriage to a High Priest.
(20) To a High Priest.
(21) Not because those forbidden by a negative precept may not contract levirate marriage. Pentateuchally, in fact, they may; and this is the reason why marital intercourse with such consummates marriage, as stated supra.
(22) Why are these forbidden levirate marriage?
(23) Such as the precept of the levirate marriage.
(24) Supra 17b, infra 240.
(25) Everybody knows whether the brother is paternal or only maternal.
(26) That there are children, or that there are not. as the case may be.
(27) Levirate marriage.
(28) I.e., that the brothers must be contemporaries. V. supra.
(29) That the levir was, or was not ‘dwelling together with the deceased’.
(30) That a woman should be incapable of procreation.
(31) And there is no need to provide against rare cases.
(32) And yet they were forbidden as a preventive measure.
(33) In the levirate marriage, Pentateuchally permisssible even in the case of one forbidden by a negative precept, the positive precept overriding the negative.
(34) In the case of an erusin widow.
(35) When only the prohibition under the negative precept remains, the positive precept of the levirate marriage having been fulfilled with the first act of intercourse.
(36) Those who are forbidden marriage by a negative precept.

(40) Lit., ‘if’.
(41) Shab. 133a, Naz. 41a, Men. 56a.
(42) The case of the erusin widow of a brother of a High Priest who died after betrothal and before marriage.
(43) Which shews that Pentateuchally the positive precept of levirate marriage does supersede the prohibition of marrying a widow. Had that not been the case, the levir's Pentateuchal illegitimate intercourse could not have constituted a legal bond of marriage.
(44) Whose deceased husband, the High Priest's brother, died without issue.
(45) From the levirate marriage or halizah.
(46) As well as herself, who would, as a result, require a divorce but no halizah.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 21a
In the case of a nissu'in widow they both agree that it does not exempt, since no positive precept may override a combination of a positive and a negative precept. They differ, however, in the case of an erusin widow. He who maintains that it exempts [does so because] a positive precept supersedes a negative one; and he who maintains that it does not exempt holds that the positive precept here does not supersede the negative one since [in this case] halizah is possible.

An objection was raised: If they had intercourse [with any of the forbidden women] they acquire - This is indeed a refutation. May this be assumed to provide a refutation of the view of Resh Lakish also? Resh Lakish can answer you: I said it only in the case where the precept is fulfilled; here, however, halizah as a substitute for the levirate marriage is not a fulfilment of the precept.

Raba said: Where in the Torah may an allusion be found to [the prohibition of] relations in the second degree? It is said, For all these abominations have the men of the land done; the expression, these, implies grave abominations, from which it may be inferred that there are milder ones. And what are these? The cases of incest of the second degree. What proof is there that ‘these’ is an expression of gravity? — Because it is written in the Scriptures, And the mighty of the land he took away. May it be assumed that this view differs from that of R. Levi? For R. Levi said: The punishments for [false] measures are more rigorous than those for [marrying] forbidden relatives; for in the latter case the word used is El, but in the former Eleh. — El implies rigour, but Eleh implies greater rigour than El. Is not Eleh written also In connection with forbidden relatives? -That [Eleh has been written] to exclude [the sin of false] measures from the penalty of kareth. In what respect, then, are they more rigorous? — In the case of the former, repentance is possible; in that of the latter repentance is impossible.

Rab Judah said: It may be derived from the following: Yea he pondered, and sought out, and set in order many proverbs, in relation to which ‘Ulla said in the name of R. Eleazar, ‘Before Solomon appeared, the Torah was like a basket without handles; when Solomon came he affixed handles to it.

R. Oshaia said: It may be derived from the following: Avoid it, pass not by it; turn from it, and pass on.

Said R. Ashi: R. Oshaia's interpretation may be represented by the simile of a man who guards an orchard. If he guards it from without, all of it is protected. If, however, he guards it from within, only that, section in front of him is protected but that which is behind him is not protected. This statement of R. Ashi, however, is mere fiction. There, the section in front of him, at least, is protected; while here were it not for the prohibition of incest of the second degree, one would have encroached upon the very domain of incest.

R. Kahana said, it may be derived from here: Therefore shall ye keep My charge, provide a charge to my charge.

Said Abaye to R. Joseph: This, surely, is Pentateuchal — It is Pentateuchal’ but the Rabbis have expounded it. All the Torah, surely- was expounded by the Rabbis But [the fact is that the prohibition is] Rabbinical, while the Scriptural text is [adduced as] a mere prop.

Our Rabbis taught: Who are the forbidden relatives in the second degree? — His mother's mother, his father's mother, his father's father's wife, his mother's fathers wife, the wife of his father's maternal brother, the wife of his mother's paternal brother, the daughter-in-law of his son daughter-in-law his daughter. A man is permitted to marry the wife of his father-in-law and the wife of his step-son but is forbidden to marry the daughter of his step-son. His step-son is permitted to marry his wife and his daughter. The wife of his step-son may say to him, ‘I am permitted to you though daughter is forbidden to you’.

Is not the daughter of his step-son forbidden, it being written in the Scriptures, Her son’s daughter or her daughters daughter? — As he wished to state in the latter clause, ‘The wife of his step-son may say to him, “I am permitted to you though my daughter is forbidden to you”, and though my daughter is forbidden to you Pentateuchally the Rabbis did not forbid me as a preventive measure’, he stated in the previous clause also ‘the daughter of his step-son’. If so, could not the wife of his father-In-law also say, ‘I am permitted to you and my daughter is forbidden to you’, since she is his wife’s sister? -The prohibition of the one is permanent; that of the other is not.

Rab said: Four [categories of] women [forbidden in the second degree] are subject to a limitation. Of these Rab knew three: The wife of a mother’s paternal brother, the wife of a father’s maternal brother, and one's daughter-in-law. Ze’iri, however, adds also the wife of his mother's father. Said R. Nahman b. Isaac: Your mnemonic sign is, ‘Above that of Rab’. Why does not Rab include it? — Because she might be mistaken for the wife of one's father's father. And Ze’iri? -Thither one usually goes, but hither one does not usually go.

Is not the prohibition of one's daughter-in-law

(58) One's mother's family.

(59) No mistake, therefore, could occur between a mother's father and a father's father. Hence no preventive measure is necessary.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 21b

Pentateuchal, it being written in the Scriptures, Thou shalt not uncover the nakedness of thy daughter-in-law? — Read, ‘the daughter-in-law of his son’. But is there any limitation for the daughter-in-law of one's son? Surely it was taught: His daughter-in-law is a forbidden relative, and the daughter-in-law of his son is a forbidden relative of the second degree; and the same principle is to be applied to one's son and son's son to the end of all generations! — But read, ‘the daughter-in-law of his daughter’ for R. Hisda said: I heard from a great man—And who is he? R. Ammi— [the following statement]: ‘The daughter-in-law was forbidden only on account of the daughter-in-law’; and when the soothsayers told me, ‘You will be a teacher’, I thought, ‘If I would be a great man I would explain it on my own; and should I be a Scripture teacher of little children I would ask the Rabbis who come to the school house.’ Now I am in a position to explain it on my own: The daughter-in-law of one's daughter was forbidden only on account of the daughter-in-law of one's son.

Said Abaye to Raba: I can explain it to you: Take as an example a daughter-in-law of the house of Bar Zithai. R. Papa said: As for example a daughter-in-law in the house of R. Papa b. Abba. R. Ashi said: As for example a daughter-in-law of the house of Mari b. Isak.

An inquiry was made: What is the law in respect of the wife of a mother's maternal brother? Did the Rabbis forbid as a preventive measure only the wife of a father's maternal brother and the wife of a mother's maternal brother because in these cases there is a paternal strain, but where there is no paternal strain the Rabbis did not pass any preventive measure, or is there no difference? R. Safra replied: She herself is forbidden as a preventive measure; shall we come and superimpose a preventive measure upon a preventive measure! Said Raba: Are not others forbidden as a preventive measure against a preventive measure? His mother, e.g., is a forbidden relative, his mother's mother is a forbidden relative of the second degree, and yet was his mother's mother forbidden as a preventive measure against his mother's mother? And what is the reason? Because they are both called ‘grandmother’. His father's wife is a forbidden relative, his father's father's wife is a forbidden relative of the second degree, and yet was his father's mother forbidden as a preventive measure against his father's father's wife? And what is the reason? Because they are both called ‘grandfather’. The wife of his father's paternal brother is a forbidden relative, the wife of his father's maternal brother is a forbidden relative of the second degree, and yet was the wife of his mother's paternal brother forbidden as a preventive against the wife of his father's maternal brother? And what is the reason? Because they are both called uncle! What, then, is the law? Come and hear: When R. Judah b. Shila came he stated that in the West the rule was laid down that whenever a female is a forbidden relative the wife of the male is forbidden in the second degree as a preventive measure; and Raba remarked: ‘Is this a general rule? Surely one's mother-in-law is a forbidden relative and yet is one's father-in-law's wife permitted, the daughter of his mother-in-law is a forbidden relative and yet is the wife of the son of his mother-in-law permitted, his step-daughter is a forbidden relative and yet is the wife of his step-son permitted; what, then, does R. Judah b. Shila's reported rule include? Does it not then include the case of the wife of a mother's maternal brother, since ‘wherever a female as a forbidden relative the wife of the male is forbidden in the second degree as a preventive measure’!

What is the difference between those and this? — In this case she becomes related to him by one act of betrothal; in those cases they do not become related to him until two acts of betrothal have taken place.

R. Mesharsheya of Tusaneys sent to R. Papi: Will our Master instruct us as to what is the law concerning the wife of the father's father's [paternal] brother, and a father's father's sister? Seeing that the degree below is incest, has a preventive measure been issued in respect also of the degree above, or perhaps [not]. since the relationship has branched off? Come and hear: Who are the forbidden relatives of the second degree [etc.]; and these were not enumerated among them! — Some might have been mentioned and others omitted. What other omissions were made such as to justify this omission also? — The forbidden relatives of the second degree, of the School of R.
Amemar permitted the wife of one's father's father's brother and one's father's father's sister. Said R. Hillel to R. Ashi:41 ‘I saw the [list of] forbidden relatives of the second degree of Mar the son of Rabana42 and sixteen were written down as forbidden cases. Would they not be the eight of the Baraita,43 the six of the School of R. Hiyya,44 and these two,45 in all sixteen?-But according to your view there should be seventeen, since there is also the case of the wife of a mother's maternal brother, who in accordance with our decision is forbidden!’ — ‘This is no difficulty.

"Has Mar the son of Rabana signed them?" [you would have argued]. Now then that they have been written down as forbidden, [you might also argue]. "Mar the son of Rabana has not signed them".

It was taught at the School of R. Hiyya: The third generation of his son of his daughter of his wife [is forbidden as incest of the] second degree; the fourth generation through his father-in-law or his mother-in-law [is forbidden as incest of the] second degree.

Said Rabina to R. Ashi: Why is the wife included in the ascending line and not included in the descending line? — In the case of the ascending line, where the prohibition is due to his wife, she is included; in the descending line, where the prohibition is not due to his wife, she is not included. But, surely, there is the case of the son of his wife and the daughter of his wife whose prohibition is due to his wife who is, nevertheless, not included! — As he enumerated three generations in the descending line on his side and did not include her, he also enumerated three generations in the descending line on her side and did not include her.

Said R. Ashi to R. Kahana: Are the second degrees of incest of the School of R. Hiyya subject to the limitation or not? Come and hear what Rab said: ‘Four [categories of forbidden] women are subject to a limitation’, but no more. But is it not possible that Rab was only referring to that Baraita!

Come and hear: ‘The third’ and ‘the fourth’, which implies the third and fourth generations only but no further. But is it not possible [that this meant] from the third generation onwards and from the fourth generation onwards!

Raba said to R. Nahman, ‘Has the Master seen the young scholar who came from the West and stated: The question was raised in the West whether the second degrees of incest were forbidden as a preventive measure among proselytes or not?’ — The other replied: Seeing that even in respect of actual incest but for the fear that they might be said to have exchanged a [religion of] stricter for [one of] more easy-going sanctity, the Rabbis would not have imposed upon them any preventive measures, is there any question [that they should have done so in respect of] the second degrees?

Said R. Nahman: As the subject of proselytes has come up, let us say something about them: Maternal brothers may not tender evidence; if, however, they did, their evidence is valid. Paternal brothers may tender evidence without challenge.

Amemar said: Even maternal brothers may tender evidence without challenge. And why is this case different from incest? — Matters of incest lie in everybody's hands; evidence is entrusted to Beth din, and [they know that] one who has become a proselyte is like a child newly born.
MISHNAH. IF ONE HAS ANY KIND OF BROTHER, [THAT BROTHER] IMPOSES UPON HIS BROTHER’S WIFE THE OBLIGATION OF THE LEVIRATE MARRIAGE AND IS DEEMED TO BE HIS BROTHER IN EVERY RESPECT. FROM THIS IS EXCLUDED A BROTHER BORN FROM A SLAVE OR A HEATHEN.

IF ONE HAS ANY KIND OF SON, [THAT SON] EXEMPTS HIS FATHER’S WIFE FROM THE LEVIRATE MARRIAGE, IS LIABLE TO PUNISHMENT FOR STRIKING OR CURSING [HIS FATHER], AND IS DEEMED TO BE HIS SON IN EVERY RESPECT. FROM THIS IS EXCLUDED THE SON OF A SLAVE OR A HEATHEN.

GEMARA. What does the expression ANY KIND include? Rab Judah said: It includes a bastard. Is not this obvious? Surely, he is his brother! — It might have been assumed that ‘brotherhood’ here should be deduced from ‘brotherhood’ in the case of the sons of Jacob; as there they were all legitimate and untainted, so here also [the brothers must be] legitimate and untainted; hence we were taught [that it is not so]. [Might we still suggest that it is so?] — Since he has at any rate the power to confer exemption from the levirate marriage!

(1) Amemar’s cases, both of whom are related to one through one’s father (paternal grandfather’s brother’s wife, and paternal grandfather’s sister) and both are one degree above that of actual incest.
(2) While according to Amemar and R. Ashi (v. supra p. 128, n. 20) these are permitted! [The text is difficult. Read with MS.M.: But after all I saw (the list) and sixteen were written down as forbidden.]
(3) I.e., his son’s son’s daughter, his son’s daughter being forbidden as actual incest, v. Lev. XVIII, 10.
(4) His daughter’s son’s daughter; his daughter’s daughter coming under the prohibition of actual incest. Cf. n. 7.
(5) Cf. note 7, mutatis mutandis.
(6) Cf. note 8, mutatis mutandis.
(7) From his wife.
(8) His father-in-law’s mother’s mother who is the fourth generation from his wife. (A father-in-law’s mother comes under the prohibition of actual incest).
(9) His mother-in-law’s mother’s mother. Cf. previous note.
(10) V. previous three notes.
(11) Regarding, for instance, his son’s son’s daughter as of the third generation and not of the fourth, as would have been the case had his wife (his son’s mother) been included.
(12) Since, as has been explained supra 40, Lev. XVIII, 10 refers to a son born from a woman whom he had outraged.
(13) The third generation of his son or daughter born from a woman he had outraged.
(14) The third generation of the son or daughter of his wife.
(15) V. supra P. 125, n. 6.
(16) Supra 21a.
(17) Which enumerated (supra 1.c.) eight cases only of the second degrees of incest, but none of those of the School of R. Hiyya.
(18) I.e., the School of R. Hiyya supra included in the second degree only the third generation in the descending, and the fourth generation in the ascending line.
(19) Are forbidden in the second degree of incest; but those of the nearer generations are forbidden as actual incest.
(20) Palestine.
(21) Biblically, the proselyte is regarded as a newborn child and all his previous family ties are severed. It is only Rabbinically that he was subjected to the laws of incest.
(22) Lit., ‘to our hand’.
(23) Since the family relationship in their case is a certainty, and a relative is ineligible as a witness.
(24) As, Biblically, the proselyte is deemed to be a newborn child without any relatives. V. supra p. 130, n. 10.
(25) Lit., ‘as from the start’, since in: their case no brotherly relationship is recognized, the heathens having been known to indulge in promiscuous Intercourse.
(26) Which is applicable to a proselyte also. If he married, for instance, his maternal sister he must divorce her (infra 98a).
(27) Marriages are not, as a rule, arranged with the aid of the Beth din, and, should a proselyte be permitted to live with his sister, some people might infer that such a marriage was permitted to an Israelite also. Hence the prohibition.

(28) The Beth din who know this law would not allow a brother of an Israelite to give evidence though this would be allowed to a brother of a proselyte.

(29) This is explained in the Gemara. Lit., ‘from any place’.

(30) Such children assume their mother's status of inferiority, and are not regarded as one's paternal brothers.

(31) Cf. n. 9.

(32) Brethren in the context of the levirate relationship, Deut. XXV, 5.

(33) Gen. XLII, 13, twelve brethren.

(34) A bastard.

(35) A woman whose husband died without leaving any issue from their union may. nevertheless, be exempt from the requirements of the levirate marriage if that husband had a bastard son.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 22b

he also has the power to impose the obligation of the levirate marriage.¹

AND IS DEEMED TO BE HIS BROTHER IN EVERY RESPECT. In respect of what, in actual practice?-That he is to be his heir and that he² may defile himself for him. Is not this obvious, he being his brother! — Whereas it is written, Except for his kin, that is near unto him,³ and a Master had said that ‘his kin’ refers to his wife, while [on the other hand] it is written, A husband among his people shall not defile himself, to profane himself,⁴ [which verses taken together mean],⁵ some kind of husband may defile himself and some kind of husband may not, and how [is this to be understood]? He may defile himself for his lawful wife but may not defile himself for his unlawful wife; and so here it have been assumed that he may defile himself for a legitimate brother but may not defile himself for an illegitimate brother; hence it was taught [that it is hot so]. Might we still suggest that it is so? In that case she is liable at any moment to be sent away,⁶ but here he is his brother.

FROM THIS IS EXCLUDED A BROTHER BORN FROM A SLAVE OR A HEATHEN. What is the reason? Scripture stated, The wife and her children shall be the master's.⁷

IF ONE HAS ANY KIND OF SON, [THAT SON] EXEMPTS etc. What does ANY KIND include?-Rab Judah said: It includes a bastard. What is the reason? — Because Scripture stated, And have no [en lo] child⁸ which implies ‘hold an inquiry⁹ concerning him.’¹⁰

AND IS LIABLE TO PUNISHMENT FOR STRIKING [HIM]. But why? One should apply here the Scriptural text, Nor curse a ruler of thy people.¹¹ only when he practises the deeds of thy people!¹² — As R. Phinehas in the name of R. Papa said [elsewhere] ‘When he repented’, so here also it is a case where he repented. Is such a persona however, capable of penitence? Surely we learnt: Simeon b. Menasya said, That which is crooked cannot be made straight.¹³ refers to him who had intercourse with a forbidden relative and begot from her a bastard! — Now, at any rate. he is practising ‘the deeds of thy people’.¹⁴

Our Rabbis taught: He who has intercourse with his sister who is also the daughter of his father's wife¹⁵ is guilty¹⁶ on account of both his sister and his father's wife's daughter. R. Jose son of R. Judah said: He is only guilty on account of his sister but not of the daughter of his father's wife.

What is the Rabbis’ reason? Observe, they would say, it is written, The nakedness of thy sister, the daughter of thy father, or the daughter of thy mother,¹⁷ what need was there for The nakedness of thy father's wife's daughter, begotten of thy father, she is thy sister?¹⁸ In order to intimate that he is guilty on account of both his sister and his father's wife's daughter. And R. Jose son of R. Judah? — Scripture stated, She is thy sister,¹⁹ you can hold him guilty on account of his sister, but you cannot hold him guilty for his father's wife's daughter. And to what do the Rabbis apply the expression, 'She is thy sister'?—They require it [for the deduction] that a man is guilty on account of his sister who is the daughter of his father and the daughter of his mother, thus indicating that no prohibition may be deduced by logical argument. And R. Jose son of R. Judah?—If so, the All Merciful should have written 'thy sister', what need was there for 'she is'? To indicate that you may hold him guilty on account of 'thy sister' but you cannot hold him guilty on account of 'his father's wife's daughter'. And the Rabbis? Although 'thy sister' was written, It was also necessary to write 'she is'; in order that no one should suggest that elsewhere a prohibition may be deduced by logical argument and that the All Merciful has written here, 'thy sister' because Scripture takes the trouble to write down any law that may be deduced a minori ad majus; hence did the All Merciful write 'she is'.

And R. Jose son of R. Judah?—If so, the All Merciful should have written [the expression], 'She is thy sister' in the other verse.

And to what does R. Jose son of R. Judah apply the phrase Thy father's wife's daughter?—He requires it for [the deduction]: Only she with whom your father can enter into marital relationship, but a sister born from a slave or a heathen is excluded, since your father cannot enter with her into marital relationship.

Might it not be said to exclude a sister born from one whom his father had outraged? — You cannot say this owing to Raba's statement. For Raba pointed out a contradiction: It is written In Scripture, The nakedness of thy son's daughter, or of thy daughter's daughter, even their nakedness thou shalt not uncover; thus it follows that her son's daughter and her daughter's daughter are permitted; but [below] it is written, Thou shalt not uncover the nakedness of a woman and her daughter; [thou shalt not take] her son's daughter or her daughter's daughter. How then [are these to be reconciled]? The one refers to a case of outrage, the other to that of lawful marriage.

(1) Upon the wife of any son of his father. However, since he is debarred from marrying her, he frees her by halizah, v. supra 20a.
(2) Even if he is a priest. Cf. Lev. XXI, 1ff.
(3) Ibid. v. 2.
(4) Ibid. v. 4. The Talmudic rendering of the verse differs slightly from E.V. which render husband הנהב as 'chief',
(5) In order to remove the apparent contradiction.
(6) The husband is not allowed to live with her. Hence she cannot be regarded as his wife.
(7) Ex. XXI, 4, referring to a slave. The case of the heathen is explained infra.
(8) Deut. XXV, 5. הנהב הנהב.
(9) הנהב 'examine', 'search', 'investigate'. The Aleph (א) of הנהב is interchangeable with the 'Ayin (א) of הנהב.
(10) I.e., inquire whether he has been survived by ANY KIND OF SON. Cf. B.B. 115a, Sonc. ed., p. 474 nn. 6ff.
(11) Ex. XXII. 27.
(12) This father, however, who is guilty of incest did not practise the deeds of his people! Why then should his son be punished for his action against such a man?
(14) Though he cannot clear his past he may turn over a new leaf.
(15) I.e., the offspring of a lawful marriage.
(16) V. infra p. 201, n.16. and Mak. 13a.
(17) Lev. XVIII, 9, referring to the offspring of an intercourse, whether as a result of marriage or outrage.
(18) Ibid. v. II. This, surely, is only are petition of one of the cases dealt with in v.9.
(19) Lev. XVIII, 11.
(20) Who was not his father's lawful wife; in the case, for instance, when he and his sister were born from one whom their father had outraged. This case could not be deduced from Lev. XVIII, 9, since the sister born as a result of outrage, spoken of there, is one who is the daughter of the father or of the mother, while the expression Thy father's wife's daughter refers to one born from a lawful marriage.
(21) Such, e.g., as intercourse with a sister born from the same woman whom their father had outraged.

(22) If a sister who is the daughter of only one of his parents is forbidden, how much more so a sister who is the daughter of both his parents. V. Mak., Sonc. ed. pp. 18 and 26.

(23) How does he meet the argument of the Rabbis?

(24) Lit., ‘and if you would say what need was there for “thy sister” what the All Merciful has written’.

(25) Only she is, i.e., only in this case, where Scripture had explicitly stated it, is the prohibition in force; but elsewhere, where Scripture has not explicitly stated the prohibition, the inference a minori ad majus cannot bring a prohibition into force.

(26) In Lev. XVIII, 9’ which speaks of a sister born from a woman his father had outraged. Since, however, it was inserted in v.11 which speaks of a sister born from a marriage it must have been meant to imply. as R. Jose said supra, that one ‘is only guilty of incest with his sister but not with that of the daughter of his father's wife’.

(27) Lev. XVIII, II.

(28) The betrothal of either of whom is not considered valid.

(29) V. Kid. 68a.

(30) Lev. Xviii, 10.

(31) One's wife's.

(32) Lev. XVIII, 17.

(33) Lit., ‘here’; Lev. XVIII. 10.

(34) In which case a man may not marry the daughter of his own son or the daughter of his own daughter, and may marry the daughter of the son or the daughter of the daughter whom the outraged woman had from another husband; since he himself is not her lawful husband. As in the case of one's own son and one's own daughter, though the offspring of a woman he outraged, they are legally regarded as son and daughter. so is the sisterhood and brotherhood of such children regarded as legal.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 23a

Might it not be suggested that it excludes those who are subject to the penalties of negative precepts? — R. Papa replied: The betrothal of those forbidden under negative precept is valid, for it is written in the Scriptures, If a man have two wives, the one beloved and the other hated; can it be said that the Omnipresent loves the one or hates the other? But ‘beloved’ means beloved in her marriage; ‘hated’ means hated in her marriage; and yet the All Merciful has said if . Might it be taken to exclude those who are liable to kareth? — Raba replied: Scripture said, The nakedness of thy sister, the daughter of thy father, or the daughter of thy mother, whether born at home, or born abroad, whether your father is told, ‘You may keep her’ or whether your father is told, ‘Let her go’, the All Merciful said, ‘She is thy sister’. — Scripture stated, The father's wife's daughter, only she with whom your father can enter into marital relationship, but a sister from a slave or a heathen is excluded. And what ground is there for this? — It is logical to include those subject to kareth since generally their betrothal is valid. On the contrary! A slave and a heathen should have been included since on embracing the Jewish faith, betrothal with himself is also valid! — When any of these adopts the Jewish faith she becomes a different person.

Whence do the Rabbis deduce the exclusion of a slave and a heathen? — They deduce it from The wife and her children shall be her master's. And R. Jose son of R. Judah? - One text refers to a slave and the other to a heathen. And both are required; for had we been informed [concerning the exclusion of the] slave, it might have been thought [that this was so in her case] because she has no recognized ancestry, but not in that of a heathen who has recognized ancestry. And had we been informed [of the exclusion of the] heathen, it might have been assumed [that this was so In her case] because she stands under no obligation In relationship to the observance of commandments, but not in that of a slave who is [in some respects] attached to the observance of the commandments. Hence both were required.

With reference to the Rabbis, we have discovered [the reason for the exclusion of a] slave; whence do they derive [the exclusion of the] heathen? And should you suggest that we might derive it by inference from the slave, those were surely needed! R. Johanan replied in the name of R. Simeon b. Yohai: Scripture stated, For he will turn away thy son from following Me; thy son born from an Israelitish woman is called thy son but ‘thy son who was born from a heathen is not called thy son’ but her son.' Said Rabina: From this it follows that the ‘son of your daughter’ who derives from a heathen is called ‘thy son’. Does this imply that Rabina is of the opinion that if a heathen or a slave had intercourse with a daughter of Israel the child is considered fit? Though he is admittedly no bastard neither is he considered fit; he is rather regarded as a tainted Israelite.

But does not that text occur in connection with the seven nations? — For he will turn away includes all who turn away. This is satisfactory if we follow R. Simeon who expounds his own reasons for Scriptural precepts; whence, however, do the Rabbis derive it according to their view? — Who is the Tanna who disputes the opinion of R. Jose son of R. Judah? It is R. Simeon.

(1) If his father, e.g., had married a bastard, who is forbidden by a negative Precept. the daughter from such a union should not be regarded as his legitimate sister.
(2) Aruch reads, ‘Raba’.
(3) Hence the sisterhood must also be deemed legal.
(4) Deut. XXI, 15.
(5) Lit., ‘is there a loved one before the Omnipresent’.
(6) I.e., the husband's love or hatred could not obviously influence a divine law; why then should his love or hatred be mentioned at all?
(7) I.e., permitted to marry him.
(8) I.e., forbidden to marry.
(9) לְהַיְנוּ (rt. לְיוֹנָה ‘to be’). i.e., the betrothal is Sc. remains valid.
(10) I.e., a daughter from such a marriage which is legally invalid should not be deemed one's legal sister.
(11) Lev. XVIII, 9.
(12) Whether he is permitted to live with her (אֵלָה at home) or not (אֶלֶה abroad).
(13) Lev. XVIII, 11.
(14) Since betrothal or marriage with either is invalid.
(15) Lit., ‘and what do you see’, to apply the excluding text to a slave and a heathen. and the including one to those subject to kareth. Why not reverse the application?
(16) Lit., ‘to the world’, to those who are not forbidden relatives.
(17) The betrothal of a slave or a heathen, however, is always invalid.
(18) And is no longer regarded as a heathen or slave.
(19) Ex. XXI, 4.
(20) A heathen is under no obligation to observe the precepts of the Torah.
(21) A slave must observe certain commandments. V. Hag. 40.
(22) The texts speaking of the slave and the heathen, supra.
(23) In connection with their own context. They are not available for any deduction.
(24) Deut. VII, 4. The pronoun he in this clause must, according to Talmudic exposition, refer to the antecedent son in v. 3’ thy daughter thou shalt not give unto his son, and not to son in the clause, nor his daughter shalt thou take unto thy son. Had the reference been to the latter the reading in v. 4 would have been, for SHE (i.e., the heathen woman) will turn away thy son. He’ must consequently refer to the heathen husband of the Israelitish woman who would turn away the son of his Israelitish wife, the (grand)son of her father. The son of his son born from the heathen. however, is obviously not called his (grand)son since, ‘For he will turn etc.’ does not apply to him.
(25) עָבְרָה בַּי הַיְם thy son or grandson.
(26) I.e., he is a heathen like his mother.
(27) Cf. supra n. 5.
(28) V. kid., Sonc. ed. p. 345 nn. 5.6.
(29) This is a question in dispute, infra 450. [Cf. parallel passage in Kid. 68b where the reading is, the child is a mamzer, a reading to which Tosaf. (s.v. רְבִ'עַר) gives preference.]
(30) Lit., ‘called’.
(32) Deut. VII, 4, from which deduction has just been made.
(33) Enumerated in Deut. VII, 1. How, then, could the same text be applied to other nations?
(34) Even where Scripture assigns no reason.
(35) V. B.M. 115a; the explicit reason, For he will turn etc. given here is consequently superfluous and may be used for the deduction mentioned.
(36) Who do not assign reasons for Biblical precepts, unless Scripture itself supplies them.
(37) The text, For he will turn etc. being required as a reason for the precepts enunciated in that context itself.
(38) Designated supra as ‘the Rabbis’.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 23b

MISHNAH. IF A MAN BETROTHED ONE OF TWO SISTERS AND DOES NOT KNOW WHICH OF THEM HE HAS

BETROTHED, HE MUST GIVE A LETTER OF DIVORCE TO THE ONE AS WELL AS TO THE OTHER.¹ IF HE DIED,² LEAVING A BROTHER,³ THE LATTER MUST PARTICIPATE IN THE HALIZAH WITH BOTH OF THEM.⁴ IF HE HAD TWO BROTHERS,⁵ ONE IS TO PARTICIPATE IN THE HALIZAH⁶ AND THE OTHER MAY CONTRACT THE LEVIRATE MARRIAGE.⁷ IF THEY ANTICIPATED [THE BETH DIN] AND MARRIED THEM⁷ THEY ARE NOT TO BE [PARTED FROM] THEM.⁸

GEMARA. Is it to be inferred from here that even betrothal which cannot culminate in connubial intercourse is also valid? — Here we are dealing with the case where they were known but were later confused. This may also be proved by deduction, since it was stated, AND HE DOES NOT KNOW and it was not stated ‘and it was not known’. This proves it.

What, then, does our Mishnah teach us? — The second clause was necessary. IF HE DIED AND LEFT A BROTHER, THE LATTER MUST PARTICIPATE IN THE HALIZAH WITH BOTH OF THEM. IF HE HAD TWO BROTHERS, ONE IS TO PARTICIPATE IN THE HALIZAH AND THE OTHER MAY CONTRACT THE LEVIRATE MARRIAGE, only halizah must be first and the levirate marriage afterwards, but not the levirate marriage first, since, thereby, he might infringe [the interdict against] the sister of her who is connected with him by the levirate bond.

IF TWO MEN BETROTHED TWO SISTERS etc. Does this imply that a betrothal which cannot culminate in connubial intercourse is also valid? — Here also it is a case where they were known but were subsequently confused. This may also be proved by deduction, since it was stated, AND THE ONE DOES NOT KNOW, and it is not stated ‘and it is not known’. This proves it.

What, then, does our Mishnah teach us? — It was necessary to have the latter clause. IF THEY DIED ... AND ONE LEFT ONE BROTHER AND THE OTHER LEFT TWO, THE ONE BROTHER MUST PARTICIPATE IN THE HALIZAH WITH THE TWO WIDOWS AND, [As REGARDS] THE TWO, ONE PARTICIPATES IN THE HALIZAH AND THE OTHER MAY CONTRACT THE LEVIRATE MARRIAGE. Is not this obvious, being in the same case as the first clause? -It might have been assumed that [levirate marriage should be forbidden in the case of] two brothers as a preventive measure against the case of one, hence we were taught [that it was not so], and also that halizah must be first and the levirate marriage afterwards, but the levirate marriage must not take place first, for thereby, one might infringe [the interdict against] a yebamah's marriage to a stranger.

IF ONE LEFT TWO BROTHERS AND THE OTHER ALSO LEFT TWO etc. What need was there again for this statement? It is, surely, the same! It might have been assumed that [the marriage should be forbidden] as a preventive measure against marrying without previous (halizah, hence we were taught [that no such measure Was enacted]. Wherein does this case differ from the following in which we learned: In the case of four brothers two of whom were married to two sisters, and those who were married to the sisters died, behold their widows may only perform the halizah but may not be taken in levirate marriage [by either of the levirs]? -What a comparison!

---

(1) He is forbidden to live with either since each might be ‘his wife's sister’.
(2) Without issue.
(3) Who survived him.
(4) Since it is not known which is his sister-in-law. He may not marry the one and submit to halizah from the other, because the sister of a haluzah (v. Glos.) is Rabbinically forbidden. Even prior to the halizah with the one he may not marry the other; for if she is not his sister-in-law she is still forbidden to him as the sister of his zekukah (v. Glos.)
(5) With one of the widows.
(6) With the other, subsequent to the halizah of the first. This procedure is safe in either ease; if the second widow is really his sister-in-law he is legally entitled to marry her. But even if she is not, she is no longer forbidden as the sister of the first who was his zekukah since the halizah has severed the bond.
(7) Each brother married one of the sisters.
(8) Since each of them is entitled to marry one of the widows either as his yebamah (v. Glos.) or as a stranger. The question of the forbidden marriage of the sister of a zekukah does not arise, since both are now married, and the marriage of the zekukah to the one brother has severed her levirate bond with the other.
(9) Neither may marry any of the widows since either might happen to be the sister of his zekukah.
Of the deceased.

For the reasons explained supra p. 138, n. 9.

And thus, in case she is the actual yebamah, severs the levirate bond between her and the brothers. Her sister may then be married by the other brother in any case: If she is the sister-in-law he may rightly marry her; and if not, she is no longer forbidden as the sister of a zekukah in view of the fact that the halizah of the other had severed that bond.

V. previous note.

Each brother married one of the sisters.

V. p. 138. n. 13.

This Procedure enables both widows to marry, because in the case of each it may be said: If she is his yebamah, he may marry her since his brother did not participate in the halizah with her but with her sister who was a Perfect stranger to him, and the halizah with her is of no legal value. If, on the other hand, she is not his yebamah, he may certainly marry her as a stranger. The question of the ‘sister of a zekukah’ does not arise, since that bond has in any case been severed by the halizah in which his brother had participated with her sister.

Brothers of one of the deceased.

With both widows.

One brother with the one widow and the other with the other widow; because whichever widow any one of them would desire to marry might be the sister of his .zekukah.

With one ‘of the widows.

With the other sister. For the reason cf. supra p. 139, n. 4.

The second two brothers.

After halizah was performed with the first.

Each one of them one of the sisters.

Cf. supra p. 138. n. 13.

It is now assumed that even at the time of the betrothal it was not known which of the sisters was betrothed; when, for instance, the man said ‘I betroth one of you’ and both appointed an agent to receive on their behalf the token of betrothah. In such a case the man may have no connubial intercourse with either of the women since each might be his wife's sister.

Since our Mishnah requires him to give a letter of divorce to each. Why then did this question remain a matter in dispute between Abaye and Raba in Kid. 51a?

At the time of the betrothal, as to which was, and which was not the betrothed one. Hence it was a betrothal which could culminate in connubial intercourse.

I.e, now.

Which would have implied that the identity of the betrothed was never known.

If the betrothal was valid and the man does not know now whom he betrothed it is self-evident that both women must be divorced!

And because of the second the first also had to be stated.

His zekukah. V. supra . 138, n. 11,

Cf.supra p. 140, n.11.

V.p. 140. n.12.

I.e., now,

V.p. 140, n. 15.

And because of the second the first also had to be stated.

This indicates that halizah must take place first.

Where it was stated that if there were two brothers one submits to halizah first while the other may subsequently contract the levirate marriage. (10) Lit., ‘a yebamah for the street’. A yebamah who is subject to the levirate marriage may not be married by a stranger before the levir has submitted to halizah. For further notes on the whole passage v. Kid., Sonc. ed. pp. 26off.

As the one already made earlier in our Mishnah: ONE PARTICIPATES IN THE HALIZAH AND THE OTHER MAY CONTRACT THE LEVIRATE MARRIAGE. There it is a case of two brothers and here also of two groups of two, one of each participating in halizah and the other contracting levirate marriage.

And each of the two brothers so marrying would infringe the prohibition against marriage of a doubtful yebamah and the sister of a zekukah.

(44) This could not have been inferred from the previous clause where only one marriage takes place. The fact that at least one of the sisters may not be married and must perform halizah only, would sufficiently indicate that in the case of the other also halizah by one brother must precede the marriage by the other. Where, however, as here, both sisters are married it might well have been considered likely that the law requiring previous halizah might be overlooked.

(45) ‘Ed. V, 5, infra 26a. [According to Rashi (he question is from the concluding part of that Mishnah which reads, ‘If they had forestalled (the Beth din) and married them, they must put them away’, whereas in our Mishnah it is ruled that they are not to be parted. Aliter: In our Mishnah levirate marriage may take place after halizah had been performed, whereas in the other Mishnah no levirate marriage is allowed at all for fear it is contracted before halizah. v. Tosaf. ha-Rosh.]

(46) Lit., ‘thus now’.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 24a

There,\(^1\) if one is to follow the view of him who said that a levirate bond does exist,\(^2\) a levirate bond exists;\(^3\) and if one is to follow him who said\(^4\) that it is forbidden to annul the precept of levirate marriage,\(^5\) well, it is forbidden to annul the precept of levirate marriage. Here, however, it is possible to assume that every one will happen to get his own.\(^6\)

IF BOTH ANTICIPATED [THE BETH DIN] AND MARRIED THEY ARE NOT TO BE PARTED FROM THEM etc. Shila recited:

Even if both were priests.\(^7\) What is the reason?\(^8\) — Because a haluzah is only Rabbinically forbidden,\(^9\) and in the case of a doubtful haluzah\(^10\) the Rabbis enacted no preventive measures.\(^11\) But is a haluzah only Rabbinically forbidden? Surely it was taught: From Put away\(^12\) one might only infer the prohibition concerning a divorced woman; whence that of a haluzah? Hence it was explicitly stated, And a woman!\(^13\) The prohibition is really Rabbinical, and the Scriptural text is a mere prop.\(^14\) allowed to marry one of the widows he would not be able either to contract levirate marriage or to participate in halizah with the other widow (she being forbidden to him as ‘his wife's sister’), should the other brother happen to die before he married that widow; and thus the entire precept of levirate marriage would in such a case be annulled. GEMARA. Our Rabbis learned: And it shall be, that the firstborn\(^15\) implies\(^16\) that the commandment of the levirate marriage devolves upon the [surviving elder brother];\(^17\) that she beareth\(^15\) excludes a woman who is incapable of procreation, since she cannot bear children: shall succeed in the name of his brother,\(^15\) in respect of inheritance.\(^18\) You say, ‘in respect of inheritance’;\(^19\) perhaps it does not [mean that]. but, ‘in respect of the name’.\(^20\) [If the deceased, for Instance, was called] Joseph [the child] shall be called Joseph; If Johanan he shall be called Johanan! — Here it is stated, shall succeed in the name of his brother\(^15\) and elsewhere it is stated, They shall be called after the name of their brethren in their inheritance,\(^21\) as the ‘name’ that was mentioned there [has reference to] inheritance, so the ‘name’ which was mentioned here [has also reference] to inheritance. That his name be not blotted out\(^15\) excludes a eunuch\(^22\) whose name is blotted out.

MISHNAH. THE COMMANDMENT OF THE LEVIRATE MARRIAGE DEVOLVES UPON THE [SURVIVING ELDER BROTHER]. IF A YOUNGER BROTHER, HOWEVER, FORESTALLED HIM, HE IS ENTITLED TO ENJOY THE PRIVILEGE.

Said Raba: Although throughout the Torah no text\(^23\) loses its ordinary meaning, here the :gezerah shawah\(^24\) has come and entirely deprived the text of its ordinary meaning.\(^25\)

But apart from the gezerah shawah, would it have been thought that ‘name’ actually signifies ‘a name’? To whom, then, does the All Merciful address the instruction? If to the levir, the wording should have been, ‘shall succeed in the name of thy brother’; if to the Beth din, the wording should have been, ‘shall succeed in the name of his father’s brother’ — It is possible that the All Merciful thus addressed the Beth din: Tell the levir, ‘He shall succeed to the name of his brother’; but the gezerah shawah has come and deprived the text entirely [of its ordinary meaning].

Now that it has been stated that Scripture speaks of the elder brother only, why not assume that the firstborn must perform the duty of the levirate marriage and that any ordinary brother may not contract a levirate marriage at all? — If so, what need was there for the All Merciful to have excluded the ‘wife of his brother who was not his contemporary’?

R. Aha objected: Might it not be suggested that the exclusion had reference to a mother's firstborn son? You could not possibly have assumed that, since the All Merciful has made levirate marriage dependent on inheritance, and the right of inheritance derives from the father and not from the mother. But might It not be suggested that where there is a firstborn the commandment of the levirate marriage shall be observed; where, however, there is no firstborn the commandment of the levirate marriage shall not be observed? Scripture stated, And one of them died; does not this include also the case where the firstborn died, and so the All Merciful has said that the younger shall perform the duty of the levirate marriage?

But perhaps [the text speaks of a case] where the younger died, and the All Merciful says that the firstborn shall perform the duty of the levirate marriage? - Surely, the All Merciful has excluded the wife of his brother who was not his contemporary!

May it be suggested that where there is no firstborn the younger brother, if he forestalled [the Beth din], is entitled to the privilege, but that where there is a firstborn the younger brother, even if he forestalled him, is not entitled to the privilege? — Scrip. stated, If brethren dwell together, the dwelling of one brother was compared to that of the other. May it be suggested that where there is a firstborn one turns to the eldest but where there is no firstborn one does not turn to the eldest? Why, then, did Abaye the Elder teach that the commandment to perform the duty of the levirate marriage is incumbent Upon the elder brother; if he refuses, the younger brother is approached; if he also refuses, the elder is approached again? — [Scripture has designated him] as the firstborn; as with the firstborn the cause is his birthright, so with the elder brother the cause is his Seniority. Might it be said that when the firstborn performs the duty of the levirate marriage he also takes the inheritance but when an ordinary brother performs the duty of the levirate marriage, he does not take the inheritance? Scripture stated, Shall succeed in the name of his brother and behold he has succeeded!

But since the All Merciful called him the firstborn;

(1) Where both sisters are bound by the levirate tie.
(2) Between the levir and his deceased brother's widow from the moment death took place.
(3) Consequently both widows are forbidden in levirate marriage, each being in relation to the other a sister of one's zekukah. But such prohibition is never removed even when one of them subsequently performed the halizah with one of the brothers and has thus severed her levirate bond, for once a yebamah is prohibited to her deceased husband's brother for a single moment, she is in the same category as a widow of a brother who died with issue.
(4) The reason why none of the surviving brothers may marry one of the two widows.
(5) Were one brother to be
(6) Now, if the widow whom one of them bad married was really his yebamah, the other must be a total stranger to him and to the other brother; and since this might be said in the case of each pair of brothers where the marriage had already taken place. They are not, in the face of such a possibility. to be parted (Rashi). [According to the alternative interpretation (supra p. 142, n. 4.) in face of such a possibility the Rabbis saw no reason for enacting the preventive measure forbidding levirate marriage after halizah had been performed.]

(7) Who are forbidden to marry a haluzah.

(8) One of them, surely, must inevitably have married a haluzah since, In case she is not his yebamah, she is the betrothed of the stranger with whose brother (v. our Mishnah) she had performed halizah’

(9) To marry a Priest.

(10) As here where each brother can claim that the one he married was his yebamah.

(11) The prohibition consequently does not apply. Hence they may continue to live with the widows they had married.

(12) Lev. XXI, 7, speaking of priests.

(13) Ibid., which proves that the prohibition is Pentateuchal.

(15) Deut. XXV, 6.

(16) Lit., ‘from here (it is deduced)’.

(17) The text of Deut. XXV, 6, being connected with v. 5 preceding it, thus: Her husband's brother shall ... take her to him to wife (v. 5) and he shall be the firstborn (ibid. v. 6). דְּבַר הַקָּרְבֵּנַּה הָאָבוֹתָיָה הָֽאוֹת לֹא יִהְיוּ כִּבְרֶאֶה הָאָֽבְּרָאָה may be rendered either, and it shall be (as E.V.) or and he (i.e., the levir) shall be as the Talmud here renders it.

(18) Only the brother who marries the widow, and no other brother, is entitled to the inheritance of the deceased.

(19) Taking the ‘brother’ who marries the widow as the subject of ‘shall succeed’. (Cf. supra n. 3)

(20) The subject of ‘shall succeed’ being ‘the child’ that will be born from the levirate union.

(21) Gen. XLVIII, 6.

(22) Since he is incapable of procreation. his wife is exempt alike from yibbum and halizah.

(23) Though it had been given a Midrashic interpretation.

(24) V. Glos. דְּבַר הַקָּרְבֵּנַּה שֵׁנֵהַֽוָּה הָאָבוֹתָיָה the word analogy between the expression ‘name’ in the two cited texts.

(25) So that despite the ordinary meaning of the text, the child born from the levirate union need not be named after the deceased.

(26) About the name.

(27) Consequently. name in this text could not possibly have borne its ordinary meaning, but must have that given to it in the exposition supra. viz., that Beth din are instructed to hand over the inheritance of the deceased to the levir who married his widow. An objection against Raba!

(28) The child that will be born.

(29) The levir’s.

(30) Neither when there is, nor when there is not, a firstborn.

(31) Lit., ‘why to me’.

(32) He would in any case have been excluded since he was not the firstborn.

(33) Of the ‘wife of a brother who was not his contemporary’.

(34) Who was the paternal brother of the deceased.

(35) That a mother's firstborn should be regarded as the legal firstborn in respect of the levirate marriage.

(36) Hence there was no need to exclude him. The exclusion consequently indicates that by firstborn, in this context, any elder brother was meant.

(37) Either by the firstborn or by any other of the brothers, and that for this reason the exclusion of ‘a brother who was not his contemporary’ was necessary.

(38) At all; by any brother.

(39) Deut. XXV, 5, which refers to all cases, even to that where there were Only two brothers.

(40) Since the text does not specify any particular case.

(41) Lit., ‘and say’.

(42) Were it as suggested this exclusion would be unnecessary. Cf. supra p. 145, nn. 6 and 13.

(43) Married before the Beth din could prevent him.

(44) Of the levirate marriage.

(45) Deut. XXV. 5.

(46) All brothers must be equal in respect of the levirate marriage.

(47) If the other brothers refused to marry the widow it should be his duty to marry her.

(48) Not being the firstborn it is no more his duty to marry the widow than it is that of his brothers.

(49) I.e., all the brothers are approached in the order of seniority. V. Tosaf. s.v. מִתְּכַּנְנָא, a.l., and cf. Rashi a.l.
I.e., when the youngest of all has also refused to marry the widow.

Now, since the brothers are approached, in the order of seniority, it is obvious that it is always the eldest, not necessarily the firstborn, upon whom the duty of the levirate marriage devolves!

V. supra p. 144, n. 3.

Of his deceased brother.

The ordinary brother.

Deut. XXV, 6.

Hence any brother who marries the widow is entitled to the inheritance of the deceased.

And not merely ‘the elder’ or ‘the eldest’.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 24b

what practical ruling was thereby intended? — To impair his rights; As a firstborn does not take a double portion in his father's prospective property in the same way as he does in that which is already in his possession, so does this one take no [double] portion in [his father's] prospective property as he does in that which is already in his possession.

MISHNAH. IF A MAN IS SUSPECTED OF [INTERCOURSE] WITH A SLAVE WHO WAS LATER EMANCIPATED, OR WITH A HEATHEN WHO SUBSEQUENTLY BECAME A PROSELYTE, LO, HE MUST NOT MARRY HER. IF, HOWEVER, HE DID MARRY HER THEY NEED NOT BE PARTED. IF A MAN IS SUSPECTED OF INTERCOURSE WITH A MARRIED WOMAN WHO, [IN CONSEQUENCE,] WAS TAKEN AWAY FROM HER HUSBAND, HE MUST LET HER GO EVEN THOUGH HE HAD MARRIED HER.

GEMARA. This implies that she may become a proper proselyte. But against this a contradiction is raised. Both a man who became a proselyte for the sake of a woman and a woman who became a proselyte for the sake of a man, and, similarly, a man who became a proselyte for the sake of a royal board, or for the sake of joining Solomon's servants, are no proper proselytes. These are the words of R. Nehemiah, for R. Nehemiah used to Say: Neither lion-proselytes, nor dream-proselytes nor the proselytes of Mordecai and Esther are proper proselytes unless they become converted at the present time. How can it be said, 'at the present time'? — Say 'as at the present time'! Surely concerning this it was stated that R. Isaac b. Samuel b. Martha said in the name of Rab: The halachah is in accordance with the opinion of him who maintained that they were all proper proselytes. If so, this should have been permitted altogether! - On account of [the reason given by] R. Assi. For R. Assi said, Put away from thee a froward mouth, and perverse lip's etc.

Our Rabbis learnt: No proselytes will be accepted in the days of the Messiah. In the same manner no proselytes were accepted in the days of David nor in the days of Solomon. Said R. Eleazar: What Scriptural [support is there for this view]?-Behold he shall be a proselyte who is converted for my own sake, he who lives with you shall be settled among you, but no other.

IF A MAN IS SUSPECTED OF INTERCOURSE WITH A MARRIED WOMAN etc. Rab said: [This must be confirmed] by witnesses. Said R. Shesheth: It seems that Rab made this statement while he was sleepy and about to doze off; for it was taught: ‘If a man is suspected of intercourse with a married woman who, in consequences was taken away from her husband and was subsequently divorced by another man, he need not part with her once he has married her’. Now, how is this to be understood? If it is a case where witnesses are available, of what avail is it that another man stepped in and checked the rumour? [Must we] not then [conclude that this is a case] where there were no witnesses, and the reason is because another man stepped in and checked the rumour, but had that not happened she would have been taken away from him — Rab. can answer you: The same law, that where witnesses are available she is taken away from him and that where no witnesses are available she is not taken away, applies also to the case where no other man stepped in and checked the rumour, but this it is that was meant: ‘Even if another man stepped in and checked the rumour it is not proper for him to marry her’.

An objection was raised: This has been said in the case only where she had no children, but if she has children she must not be divorced. If, however, witnesses to the seduction presented themselves, she must go away from him even if she had ever so many children - Rab explains our Mishnah as dealing with the case where she has children and witnesses against her are available.

What, however, impels Rab to explain our Mishnah as dealing with a case where she has children and where witnesses against her are available, and to give as the reason why she is to be taken away, because witnesses are available, and [to imply that] if witnesses are not available she is not taken away; let him rather explain [our Mishnah as dealing with the case] where she has no children [and has to be taken away] even though no witnesses are available! Raba replied: Our Mishnah presented a difficulty to him. What point was there [he argued] for using the expression ‘WAS TAKEN AWAY’? It should have been stated ‘he parted from her’; but any such expression as ‘was taken away’ implies ‘by the Beth din’ and the Beth din take away Only where witnesses are available.

If you prefer I may say that that Baraitha represents the view of Rabbi; for It was taught: When a pedlar leaves a house and the woman within is fastening her sinnar, since the thing is ugly she must, said Rabbi, go. If spittle is found on the upper part of the curtained bed, since the thing is ugly, she must, said Rabbi, go.

(1) For all practical purposes, as it has been shewn, the elder or eldest brother has the same privileges as the firstborn; why, then, was the expression רַעִית (firstborn) used instead of נָדֵר (elder or eldest) which would have included the firstborn?

(2) Property which was not in his father's possession at the time of his death.

(3) At the time he died.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 25a

if shoes¹ lie under the bed, since the thing is ugly,² she must, said Rabbi, go.³ ‘Shoes’?⁴ One can surely see whose they are! — Say rather the marks⁵ of shoes.⁶

The law is in accordance with the view of Rab,⁷ and the law is in accordance with the view of Rabbi.⁸
This, then, represents a contradiction between one law and the other! — There is no contradiction. One refers to a rumour that had ceased; the other, to a rumour that had not ceased. Where the rumour has not ceased, though no witnesses are available, [the law is] according to Rabbi; where the rumour has ceased but witnesses are available [the law is] according to Rab.

For how long [must a rumour continue in order to be regarded] as uninterrupted? Abaye replied: Mother told me that a town rumour [must remain uncontradicted for] a day and a half. This has been said Only in the case where It was not interrupted in the meantime. If, however, it was interrupted in the meantime, well, it was interrupted. This, however, has been said only in the case where no enemies are about, but where enemies are about, well, it must have been the enemies who published the rumour.

We learned elsewhere: If a man divorced his wife because of a bad name, he must not remarry her; if on account of a vow he must not remarry her. Rabbah son of R. Huna sent to Rabbah son of R. Nahman: Will our Master Instruct us as to whether he must part with her if he did remarry her? The other replied: We have learnt It: IF A MAN IS SUSPECTED OF INTERCOURSE WITH A MARRIED WOMAN WHO [IN CONSEQUENCE] WAS TAKEN AWAY FROM HER HUSBAND HE MUST LET HER GO EVEN THOUGH HE HAS MARRIED HER! He said to him: Are these two cases at all alike? Here she was taken away; here he had let her go. And Rabbah son of R. Nahman: — In our Mishnah also we learned, ‘He let her go’. But even now, are they at all alike? Here it is the husband; there is the seducer. — The other replied: They are indeed alike. For here the Rabbis said, ‘he must not marry her, and if he did marry he must let her go’ and there also the Rabbis would Say, ‘he must not remarry her and if he did remarry he must let her go’. This, however, is not [much of an argument]. There he lends colour to the rumour, while here it might well be assumed that he investigated the rumour and found it to be groundless. MISHNAH. A MAN WHO BRINGS A LETTER OF DIVORCE FROM A COUNTRY BEYOND THE SEA AND STATES, ‘IT WAS WRITTEN IN MY PRESENCE AND IT WAS SIGNED IN MY PRESENCE’, MUST NOT MARRY THE [DIVORCER’S] WIFE. R. JUDAH SAID: [IF THE STATEMENT IS], ‘KILLED HIM’, THE WOMAN MAY NOT MARRY ANYONE; [IF, HOWEVER, IT IS], ‘WE KILLED HIM’, THE WOMAN MAY MARRY AGAIN.

GEMARA. The reason then is because he came FROM A COUNTRY BEYOND THE SEA, in which case we have to entirely upon him; but [had he come] from the Land of Israel, in which case we need not depend upon him. would he have been allowed to marry the divorcer’s wife? But, surely, when the Statement is, ‘HE DIED’, in which case we do not depend entirely upon him since a Master said, ‘a woman makes careful inquiry before she marries’ and yet it was stated, HE MUST NOT MARRY HIS WIFE! — There, no document exists, but here a document does exist. For thus we have learned: Wherein lies the difference between [the admissibility of] a letter of divorce and [that of evidence of] death? In that the document supplies the proof.

[SIMILARLY, IF HE STATES], ‘HE DIED’, ‘I KILLED HIM’, OR ‘WE KILLED HIM’, HE MUST NOT MARRY HIS WIFE. Only he, then, must not marry his wife, she, however, may be married to another man? But, surely, R. Joseph said: [If a man stated], ‘So-and-so committed pederasty with me against my will’, he and any other witness may be combined to procure his execution; [if, however, he said], ‘with my consent’ he is a wicked man concerning whom the Torah said, Put not thy hand with the wicked to be an unrighteous witness! And were you to reply that matrimonial evidence is different because the Rabbis have relaxed the law in its case, surely, [it may be pointed out], R. Manasseh stated:

(1) So MSS. Cur. edd. add. ‘overturned’.
(2) The shoes indicating the presence of an unknown stranger on the bed.
(3) Even if there were no witnesses that misconduct took place.
(4) So MSS. Cur. edd. add. ‘overturned’.
(5) Lit., ‘place of’, i.e., the shoes have left marks on the floor.
(6) Cur. edd. contain the following addition. ‘Overtaken under the bed, said Rabbi, since the thing is ugly she shall go’. All this with the exception of the first word is enclosed in parentheses. Cf. Rashal.
(7) That no rumour or suspicion is to be relied upon in forbidding a wife to her husband. Only the evidence of witnesses may be acted upon.
(8) Cf. supra p. 150, n. 7.
(9) The law according to Rab.
(10) I.e., when a contradictory rumour obtained currency.
(11) His foster-mother. V. Kid. 31b.
(12) רַמְסָל, ‘suspicion’ or ‘gossip’.
(13) And it cannot any more be regarded as ‘an uninterrupted rumour’.
(14) The force of the rumour is not thereby impaired.
(15) That an uninterrupted rumour is relied upon.
(16) Suspected immorality.
(17) V. Git., Sonc. ed. pp. 200ff, q.v. notes.
(19) Who divorced his wife ‘because of a bad name’.
(20) [So MS.M. in conformity with the text of our Mishnah. Cur. edd.: and he had let her go.]
(21) So also in the case under discussion, though he married her, he must part from her.
(22) In our Mishnah.
(23) By the Beth din acting on the evidence of witnesses.
(24) Her husband at his own discretion.
(25) And the prohibition to remarry her is only Rabbinical. Hence it is possible that once he has remarried her he need not part from her.
(26) How can he draw a comparison between two dissimilar cases?
(27) Though there were no witnesses. Consequently, the woman is forbidden to her paramour Rabbinically only on the ground of suspicion (cf. supra p. 148. n. 10) and yet it was stated that he must part with her, which proves that even where the prohibition to marry is Rabbinical only (cf. supra note 9) the woman must be parted from the man.
(28) Rabbah b. R. Huna's enquiry.
(29) Whose remarriage of his former wife is obviously not suggestive of any immorality.
(30) Our Mishnah.
(31) Whose marriage with the woman undoubtedly lends colour to the rumoured suspicion. In such circumstances it is quite reasonable to order their separation. How can this, however, be used as an example for the case in the enquiry? (Cf. supra n. 13).
(32) Since the prohibition in both cases is only Rabbinical.
(33) Her paramour.
(34) The woman's former husband.
(35) Lit., ‘he enforces the rumour’. Cf. supra n. 15.
(36) מָדְיִנָה דָּוָא, lit., ‘country of the sea’, a term applied to all countries of the world exclusive of Palestine and Babylonia.
(37) Since the validity of the divorce 15 entirely dependent on his word (v. infra n. 6) he may be suspected of giving false evidence with a view to marrying the woman himself. As, however, a woman 15 permitted to marry even if only a single witness had testified to the death of he husband, she is allowed to marry any other man.
(38) Having admitted murder he cannot any longer be regarded as a reliable witness.
This is explained infra.

Why the man who brings the letter of divorce may not marry the divorcer's wife.

The divorce not being valid unless the carrier of the letter of divorce can testify that it was written and signed in his presence. (V. Git. 20).

Reliance being placed on the qualified scribes of Palestine, there is no need for the carrier of a letter of divorce to declare that he witnessed the writing and the signing of it.

Ab death of whose husband is attested by one witness Only.

And for this reason is allowed to remarry. Infra 53 b, 115a. 116b.

In the case of evidence of death.

Divorce.

I.e., why are certain relatives accepted as legally qualified. carriers of a letter of divorce but not as witnesses to the death of a husband?

V. Git. 23b, infra 117a.

The two together forming a pair of witnesses, the minimum required for bringing about a man's condemnation by a court of law.

Was the crime committed.

Ex. XXIII, which shews that a man who admitted a criminal offence may not act as a witness at all!

In allowing a woman to marry on the evidence of the death of her husband.

In other cases two witnesses are required and in this case one is sufficient.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 25b

One who is Rabbinically regarded as a robber is eligible to be a witness in matrimonial matters; one, however, who is Biblically regarded as a robber is ineligible to act as witness in matrimonial matters; would it then be necessary to assume that R. Manasseh holds the same opinion as R. Judah? - R. Manasseh can answer you: My statement may be reconciled even with the view of the Rabbis, but the reason of the Rabbis here is the same as that of Raba. For Raba said, ‘A man is his own relative and consequently no man may declare himself wicked’.

Must it then be assumed that R. Joseph is of the same opinion as R. Judah? — R. Joseph can answer you: ‘My Statement may be in agreement even with the view of the Rabbis, but matrimonial evidence is different, since the Rabbis relaxed the law in its case; and it is R. Manasseh who adopted the view of R. Judah’.

‘I KILLED HIM’ etc., ‘WE KILLED HIM ... MAY MARRY etc. What is the practical difference between ‘I killed him’ and ‘we killed him’? — Rab Judah said: [Our Mishnah speaks of the case] where he said, ‘I was present together with his murderers’ — Has it not, however, been taught: They said to R. Judah, ‘It once happened that a robber when led out to his execution in the Cappadocian Pass said to those present, “Go and tell the wife of Simeon b. Kohen that I killed her husband when I entered Lud” [others Say: When he entered Lud], and his wife was permitted to marry again’! He answered them: Is there any proof from there? [It was a case] where he said, ‘I was present together with his murderers’. But it was stated, ‘a robber’! — He was apprehended on account of robbery. But it was stated, ‘led out to his execution’! — [He was sentenced by] a heathen court of law who executed without due investigation.

MISHNAH. A SAGE WHO HAS PRONOUNCED A WOMAN FORBIDDEN TO HER HUSBAND BECAUSE OF A VOW MUST NOT MARRY HER HIMSELF. IF, HOWEVER, A WOMAN MADE A DECLARATION OF REFUSAL OR PERFORMED HALIZAH IN HIS PRESENCE, HE MAY MARRY HER, SINCE HE [WAS BUT ONE OF THE] BETH DIN.

GEMARA. This implies that if he had disallowed her vow, be would have been permitted to marry her! If [he acted] alone, could one disallow a vow? Surely R. Hiyya b. Abin said in the name of R. Amram that it was taught: The disallowance of vows is to be carried out by three! If, however, three were Present, would they be suspected? Surely we learned, IF, HOWEVER, A WOMAN MADE A DECLARATION OF REFUSAL OR PERFORMED HALIZAH IN HIS PRESENCE, HE MAY MARRY HER, SINCE HE [WAS BUT ONE OF THE] BETH DIN!-The fact is that [he acted] alone, and as R. Amram said in the name of R. Johanan, ‘By a fully qualified individual’, so here also it is a case of one fully qualified individual.

IF A WOMAN MADE A DECLARATION OF REFUSAL, OR PERFORMED HALIZAH etc. The reason, then, is because [he was one of a] Beth din, but had he been one of a group of two only. would he not [have been permitted]? Wherein, then, does this case differ from the following concerning which it was taught: If witnesses signed on [a document relating to] a purchased field or on a letter of divorce, the Rabbis do not apprehend such collusion! — It is this very thing that he taught us, viz., that the opinion of him who said that a declaration of refusal may be made in the presence of two is to be rejected and that one is to infer that a declaration of refusal must be made in the presence of three.

The question was raised: If he married her must he part from her? R. Kahana said: Though he married, he must part from her. R. Ashi said: Once he has married, he need not part from her.

R. Zuti at the School of R. Papa recited [a teaching] in accordance with the opinion of him who said that if he married her he need not part from her. Said the Rabbis to R. Ashi: Is this a tradition or a matter of opinion? He answered them: It is a Mishnah: If a man is suspected of intercourse with a slave who was subsequently emancipated, or with a heathen who subsequently became a proselyte, lo, he must not marry her; if, however, he did marry her the marriage need not be dissolved. Which proves

(2) V. note 4.
(3) Which proves that even in matrimonial matters a murderer (a man Biblically regarded as wicked) is not eligible as a witness.
(4) Who in our Mishnah rejected the evidence of the man who admitted murder. The halachah being according to the Rabbis who are the majority, would R. Manasseh ignore the majority in favour of a minority?
(5) For admitting the evidence of a man who announced himself as a murderer.

(16) V. n. 10. He was Only present during the robbery.
(17) The condemned man, however, was not a murderer.
(18) Which the woman made. If she vowed, for instance, to derive no benefit from her husband, and he did not annul her vow; and on consulting the Sage and finding no ground for the remission of her vow (v. Ned. 22b), her vow was not disallowed and her husband was consequently forbidden to her.
(19) To avoid the suspicion that his motive in forbidding the woman to marry him was to marry her himself.
Declarations of refusal and the performance of halizah, unlike the disallowance or confirmation of vows, must always take place in the presence of a court of three; and a court of three would not be suspected.

If her husband subsequently divorced her or died.

As to the difficulty of the implication that one individual should be in a position to disallow vows.

Which consists of no less than three members.

Cur. edd., we learned'.

Lit., 'this thing'. They do not, as a precaution against collusion, forbid the witnesses the subsequent purchase of the field from the buyer, or the marriage with the woman n whose divorce they assisted. This obviously shews that even a group of two is not to be suspected!

By mentioning Beth din which implies three members.

From the mention of Beth din in our Mishnah.

And not, as has been assumed, that only three are not to be suspected. Two also are above suspicion.

The Sage referred to in our Mishnah (Rashb. and Asheri). The Sage or the man who delivered a letter of divorce mentioned in the previous Mishnah (Rashi and Maimonides). V. Wilna Gaon, Glosses, a.l.

The woman who was forbidden to her husband or the one divorced (v. previous note).

The statement R. Ashi made.

MISHNAH. IF ALL THESE¹ HAD WIVES² WHO [SUBSEQUENTLY] DIED, [THE OTHER WOMEN]³ ARE PERMITTED TO MARRY THEM.⁴ IF THEY⁵ WERE MARRIED TO OTHERS⁶ AND WERE [SUBSEQUENTLY] DIVORCED,⁷ OR WIDOWED, THEY MAY BE MARRIED TO THESE.⁸ THESE⁹ ARE ALSO PERMITTED TO THEIR¹⁰ SONS OR BROTHERS.¹¹

GEMARA. Only if they¹² died¹³ but not if they were divorced.¹⁴ Said R. Hillel to R. Ashi: Surely, it was taught: Even if they were divorced! — This is no difficulty: The one¹⁵ refers to the case where they led¹⁶ a quarrelsome life;¹⁷ the other,¹⁸ where they¹⁹ had no quarrels.²⁰ If you prefer I might say that the one as well as the other [refers to the case] where there were no quarrels, and yet there is no difficulty: The former¹⁶ is a case where the husband had led on [to the divorce];¹⁹ in the latter,²⁰ she led on to the divorce.

IF THEY WERE MARRIED etc. It was now assumed that death²¹ has reference to the case of death,²² and divorce²³ to that of divorce.²⁴ Must it then be said that our Mishnah²⁵ is in disagreement the delivery of the letter of divorce by the messenger, or the evidence of the man who testified to their husbands’ deaths. with the view of Rabbi? For had it been in agreement with Rabbi, [a third marriage would not have been allowed], for he said that two occurrences constitute a hazakah.²⁶ — No;²⁷ death²⁸ [has reference] to divorce,²⁹ and divorce²⁸ to death.³⁰

THESE ARE ALSO PERMITTED TO THEIR SONS OR BROTHERS. Wherein is this different from the following where it was taught:³¹ A man who is suspected of intercourse with a woman is forbidden to marry her mother, her daughter and her sister.³² -It is the usual thing for women to pay frequent visits to other women;³³ it is not usual, however, for men to pay frequent visits to other men.³⁴ Or [this] also:³⁵ Women who do not cause one another to be forbidden by their cohabitation³⁶ that [once a woman was married she] is not taken away because of a mere rumour; and so here also [the woman married] is not to be taken away because of a rumour.

— This is no difficulty: The one refers to the case where they led a quarrelsome life; the other, where they had no quarrels. If you prefer I might say that the one as well as the other refers to the case where there were no quarrels, and yet there is no difficulty: The former is a case where the husband had led on [to the divorce]; in the latter, she led on to the divorce.

— No; death [has reference] to divorce, and divorce to death. No, death has reference to divorce, and divorce to death. — No; death [has reference] to divorce, and divorce to death.
do not particularly mind one another; men, however, who do cause one another to be forbidden by their cohabitation do mind one another. If so, the same law should also [apply to] one's father. The meaning is, 'There is no need', [thus]: There is no need [to state that the law is applicable to] one's father before whom a son is shy; but [in the case of] one's son before whom a father is not shy it might have been assumed [that this law was] not [to be applied], hence we were informed [that the same law was applicable to a son also].

CHAPTER III

MISHNAH. [IN THE CASE OF] FOUR BROTHERS, TWO OF WHOM WERE MARRIED TO TWO SISTERS, IF THOSE WHO WERE MARRIED TO THE SISTERS DIED, BEHOLD. THESE MUST PERFORM HALIZAH BUT MAY NOT BE TAKEN IN LEVIRATE MARRIAGE [BY THE BROTHERS]. IF THEY HAD ALREADY MARRIED THEM, THEY MUST DISMISS THEM. R. ELIEZER SAID: BETH SHAMMAI HOLD THAT THEY MAY RETAIN THEM, AND BETH HILLEL HOLD THAT THEY MUST DISMISS THEM.

IF ONE OF THE SISTERS WAS FORBIDDEN TO ONE [OF THE BROTHERS] UNDER THE PROHIBITION OF INCEST, HE IS FORBIDDEN TO MARRY HER BUT MAY MARRY HER SISTER, WHILE TO THE SECOND BROTHER BOTH ARE FORBIDDEN.

[IF ONE SISTER WAS FORBIDDEN BY VIRTUE OF A COMMANDMENT OR BY VIRTUE OF HOLINESS SHE MUST PERFORM THE HALIZAH BUT MAY NOT BE TAKEN IN LEVIRATE MARRIAGE.

IF ONE OF THE SISTERS WAS FORBIDDEN TO ONE BROTHER UNDER THE LAW OF INCEST AND THE OTHER SISTER WAS FORBIDDEN TO THE OTHER UNDER THE LAW OF INCEST, SHE WHO IS FORBIDDEN TO THE ONE IS PERMITTED TO THE OTHER AND SHE WHO IS FORBIDDEN TO THE OTHER IS PERMITTED TO THE FIRST. THIS IS THE CASE CONCERNING WHICH IT HAS BEEN SAID: WHEN HER SISTER IS HER SISTER-IN-LAW SHE MAY EITHER PERFORM HALIZAH OR BE TAKEN IN LEVIRATE MARRIAGE.

GEMARA. This then implies that a levirate bond exists; for if no levirate bond exists, observe this point: These widows come from two different houses, let one brother take in levirate marriage the one and the other brother the other! — As a matter of fact it may still be assumed that no levirate bond exists [but the levirate marriage is nevertheless forbidden] because he is of the opinion that it is forbidden to annul the precept of levirate marriage, it being possible that while one of the brothers married one of the widowed sisters the other brother would die, and the precept of levirate marriage would be annulled. If so, [the same applies to] three [brothers] also! — This may be regarded as the case of 'There is no need etc.', [thus: There is no need to state three, since the precept of levirate marriage would inevitably have to be annulled, but [in the case of] four [it might have been assumed that] one need not take precautions against [possible] death, hence we were informed [that even in such a case levirate marriage is forbidden].

(1) Lit., 'and all of them'. The Sage, the messenger who brought a letter of divorce and the man who testified to the death of a husband. (V. previous two Mishnahs, supra 250, 25b).
(2) At the time of their action which resulted in enabling the women there mentioned to marry.
(3) I.e. the women concerned in their respective actions. V. previous note.
(4) Having had their own wives at the time they were engaged in the other women's affairs they are not to be suspected of any ulterior motives. Cf. supra p. 153, n. 2 and p. 155. n. 12.
(5) After the decision of the Sage.
(6) By their second husbands.
Cf. supra p. 157, n. 6.

V. p. 157, n. 8.

The prohibition being limited to themselves.

The wives of the Sage, messenger and witness (cf. supra p. 157, n. 6).

Lit., ‘they died, yes’; only then is it permissible for the husbands to marry the women whom they had helped to obtain permission to marry.

It being possible that their action in favour of the women and the subsequent divorces were dictated by the same ulterior motive.

The Baraitha quoted by R. Hillel.

Before their respective husbands had acted in favour of the other women.

With their husbands. It is consequently obvious that the divorces were due to the domestic differences, and that the husband’s subsequent actions were not dictated by ulterior motives.

That implied in our Mishnah.

V. supra note 5.

As husbands and wives lived in peace until the former had met the other women, there is good reason to suspect that the divorces were due to these meetings.

Hence there is cause for suspicion.

V. supra note 8.

Of the second husbands with whom marriage had taken place in the meanwhile.

In the second clause of the Previous Mishnah but one (supra 25a), where evidence was given that the woman’s first husband had died or was killed.

Cf. supra n. 16.

Where a letter of divorce was brought by a messenger, (v. the first clause of the Mishnah supra 25a).

Which allows a woman to marry a third husband though her first two husbands had died or divorced her.

Glos. An established characteristic or defect in the woman, physical or moral, which confirms her as the cause of the death of her husbands or as the cause of the divorces. Hence, she should not have been permitted ever to marry again.

Our Mishnah does not differ from Rabbi.

V. p. 158, n.16. .

V. p.158,n.19.

V. supra p. 158. n. 17. Hence no two husbands died or divorced the same woman, and no hazakah could, therefore, have been constituted.

Cur. edd., ‘we learned’.

Because there is reason to suspect that the marriage was planned by the man as a mere means of bringing him into closer association and intimacy with his paramour. Why, then, is this suspicion disregarded in the case of our Mishnah?

Misconduct may, therefore, occur and suspicion (v. previous note) is justified.

And suspicion that any intimate intercourse might take place would, therefore, be groundless.

May be said in reply.

With one another’s husbands. The husband is not forbidden to his wife if cohabitation occurred between him and another woman.

V. note 8.

With one another’s wives. The wife of one with whom the other cohabited is forbidden to her husband.

That men are watchful of one another, and that consequently there is no ground for suspicion.

Permitting the marriage of any of the women in question.

Why, then, does our Mishnah mention sons and brothers only?

Lit., ‘it is not required he said’.

And would not venture to be too intimate with his wife.

Or brother.

The sisters.

The reason is explained in the Gemara, infra.

Lit., ‘anticipated’ (the ruling of the court).

In the case mentioned in the first paragraph of our Mishnah.

E.g., as a mother-in-law.
Who is not forbidden on account of her rival since the latter is biblically forbidden to the levir and cannot be regarded as his zekukah (v. Glos.).

The term is used in the Mishnah supra 20a and discussed in the Gemara loc. cit.

The wife of her husband's brother.

The first clause of our Mishnah.

Between the widow of a deceased childless brother and his surviving brothers, in consequence of which each widow being a zekukah (v. Glos.), is forbidden as the sister of a zekukah.

They are the widows of two different husbands and neither of them stands in any marital relationship with any of the surviving brothers (v. previous note).

A levirate bond then obviously does exist. That being so, why has the question of the existence of a levirate bond remained a matter of dispute in Ned. 742 and supra 17b?

The author of our Mishnah.

And thus be prevented from marrying the other widow.

Because the surviving brother would then not be able either to marry, or to participate in the halizah with the second widow who by that time will have become his wife's sister. If, however, halizah only is performed with one brother and the death of the other should occur before the second widow had performed halizah with him, no difficulty would arise, since the first brother may then participate in the halizah of the second also.

That the reason for the prohibition of the levirate marriage with the widowed sisters is not the existence of a levirate bond but the endeavour to prevent the annulment of the precept of levirate marriage.

If two of them died childless and both their widows become subject to the levirate marriage or halizah of the third. In this case the third brother must only participate in halizah; for, should he marry one of the sisters, the other would be forbidden, as the sister of his wife, either to marry him or to perform halizah with him.

Lit., 'it is not required, do we say'.

That where one of three brothers survived, no levirate marriage must take place.

Were he to marry one of the widows. Cf. supra p. 162, n. 8.

Brothers, two of whom survived.

And that consequently one brother should marry one of the widows and the other brother the other.

Because provision must always be made against possible death.

v. previous note.

---

The same applies to five brothers also! -The possibility that two might die need not be taken into consideration.

Rabbah son of R. Huna said in the name of Rab: If three sisters who are sisters-in-law fell to the lot of two brothers who are their brothers-in-law, one of the brothers participates in her halizah with one, and the other brother participates in the halizah with the other, but the third, requires halizah from both. Said Rabbah to him: Since you say that the third widow requires submission to halizah by both brothers, you must be holding the opinion that a levirate bond exists and that the halizah is of an impaired character, and that as an impaired halizah it must go the round of all the brothers; but if so, [the same should apply to] the first [two sisters] also! — If they had become subject [to the levirs] at the same time the law would indeed have been so; [the statement of our Mishnah, however,] was required only in the case where they become subject [to the levirs] one after another. When the first sister became subject to the obligation of the levirate marriage. Reuben participated in her halizah; when the second came Under the obligation. Simeon participated in her halizah; when the third came under the obligation. If the one brother participated in her halizah he removed his own levirate bond, and when the other participated in the halizah he likewise removed his own levirate bond. But, surely. Rab said that no levirate bond exists! — This statement he made in accordance with the opinion of him who maintains that a levirate bond does exist.
Samuel, however, stated that one brother participates in the halizah with all of them. But consider: We have heard Samuel say that a proper halizah is required for Samuel said:

(1) Two of whom who were married to two sisters died and three survived. In this case also, if provision is to be made against the possibility of death, no levirate marriage should be allowed to any of the three survivors, since it might happen that two of the survivors would also die and the last and only surviving brother would be precluded from levirate marriage and halizah because the widows would then be his wife's sisters.

(2) Lit., ‘for the death of two’.

(3) So Emden. Cur. edd., ‘Raba’.

(4) Lit., ‘the middle one’.

(5) V. supra p. 162, n. 3’

(6) Since each brother may only participate in halizah with the widow but may not, as she is the sister of his haluzah (v. Glos.), marry her. Such a halizah is not of the same validity as one which is the alternative of a permitted levirate marriage.

(7) The levirate bond between the widow and the other brothers cannot be dissolved by such a halizah with one of them. [Me'iri seems to have had a shorter and smoother text: . . . that a levirate bond exists and that an impaired halizah must go the round of all the brothers’.]

(8) Since they, like the third, are subject to the levirate bond, and with them also only halizah, but not levirate marriage may take place, and their halizah also is consequently of an impaired character.

(9) All the three sisters.

(10) Halizah would have had to be performed by every one of them with every brother.

(11) I.e., the first brother. Reuben was Jacob's first son (Gen. XXIX, 32).

(12) This was a proper halizah since at that time he could have married her if he wished.

(13) I.e., the second brother. Simeon was the second son of Jacob. (Cf. Gen. XXIX, 33’)

(14) This also was a proper halizah since he could marry her if he wished. She is no longer the sister of his zekukah (v. Glos.) since the first brother had already performed with that zekukah proper halizah and had thereby severed the levirate bond between her and Simeon as well as between her and himself.

(15) Levirate marriage is no more possible since, in the case of each brother, she is the sister of his haluzah, while exemption from halizah cannot be granted because the prohibition to marry the sister of one's haluzah is only Rabbinical and cannot supersede the Biblical precept which requires halizah where no levirate marriage takes place.

(16) Which otherwise could not have been severed. V. previous note.

(17) Supra 17b.

(18) Reported supra by Rabbah b. R. Huna.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 27a

if he participated in the halizah with the sisters, the rivals are not exempt; how then should Reuben, where the halizah of Simeon has the force of a valid halizah, participate in an impaired halizah? — By saying, ‘One brother participates in the halizah with all of them’ he also meant ‘the third widow’. But surely, ‘All of them’ was stated! - As the majority is on his side it may be described as ‘All of them’. If you prefer I might say: Only in respect of exempting one's rival did Samuel say that proper halizah was required; as regards exempting herself, however, [any halizah] sets her free.

[To turn to] the main text, Samuel said: If he participated in the halizah with the sisters, the rivals are not exempt; ff with the rivals, the sisters are exempt. If he participated in the halizah with the one who had been divorced, her rival is not thereby exempt; if with the rival the divorced woman is exempt — If he participated in the halizah with one to whom he addressed a ma'am'ar, her rival is not thereby exempt; if with the rival, the widow to whom the ma'am'ar had been addressed is exempt.

In what respect are the sisters different that [by their halizah] the rivals should not be exempt?
Apparently because [each one of them] is ‘his wife's sister’ through the levirate bond;[26] [but for this very reason] the sisters also, if he participated in the halizah with their rivals, should not be exempt, since those are the rivals of ‘his wife's sister’ through the levirate bond!27 — Samuel holds the opinion that no levirate bond exists. But, surely, Samuel said that a levirate bond did exist!28 -He was here speaking in accordance with the view of him who maintains that a levirate bond does not exist. If so,29 why are not the rivals exempt when he participated in the halizah with the sisters? One can well understand why Rachel's30 rival is not exempt; for, as he had already participated in the halizah of Leah31 and only subsequently participated in the halizah of Rachel, Rachel's halizah is a defective one;32 but Leah's rival should be exempt!33 -When he34 said that ‘The rivals are not exempt’, he meant indeed the rival of Rachel. But, surely, he used the expression ‘rivals’!35 -Rivals generally. If so,36 how could the sisters be exempt if he participated in the halizah with their rivals? Is Rachel exempt by the halizah of her rival!37 Surely we learned: A man is forbidden to marry the rival of the relative of his halizah38 — Samuel also [is of the same opinion] but draws a distinction according to the manner in which39 one began or did not begin: If one began with the sisters40 he must not finish with the rivals,41 for we learned, ‘A man is forbidden to marry the rival of the relative of his haluzah’;42 but if he began with the rivals he may finish even with the sisters,44 for we learned, ‘A man is permitted to marry the relative of the rival of his haluzah’.45

R. Ashi said: Your former assumption46 may still be upheld, and [yet no difficulty47 arises] because the levirate bond is not strong enough to make the rival equal to the forbidden relative herself.48

It was taught in agreement with the view of R. Ashi: If the levir participated in the halizah with the sisters, their rivals are not thereby exempt; but if with the rivals, the sisters are thereby exempt. What is the reason? Obviously49 because he is of the opinion that a levirate bond exists and that that bond is not strong enough to make the rival equal to the forbidden relative herself.

R. Abba b. Memel said: Who is the author of this?50 Beth Shammai; for we learned: Beth Shammai permit the rivals to the [surviving] brothers.51 If so,52 let them53 be taken in levirate marriage also!54 [This is] in agreement with R. Johanan b. Nuri who said: Come, let us issue an ordinance that the rivals perform the halizah but do not marry the levir.55 But did not a Master say that they had hardly time to conclude the matter before confusion set in?56 — R. Nahman b. Isaac replied: After him57 they re-ordained it.

The question was raised:

(1) A levir whose two deceased childless brothers were survived by two widows who were sisters, each of whom had also a rival.
(2) Because the halizah with the sisters is defective, the levir not being in a position to marry either of them. Cf. supra p. 263, n. 11,
(3) Cf. supra note 2,
(4) cf. note 4.
(5) Simeon, having participated in no halizah, the second sister is not the sister of his haluzah.
(6) In the case of Reuben who had already participated in the halizah of one sister, the halizah with the second is a halizah performed by the sister of his haluzah, which is not a completely valid operation.
(7) I.e., the second brother, after he participated in the halizah with the second widow, also participates in the halizah with he third (who is now the sister of his as well as of his brother's haluzah): and there is no need, according to Samuel, for a defective halizah to go the round of all the surviving brothers.
(8) How-then could the expression ‘all’ refer to the second and third widows only?
(9) Simeon having participated in the halizah of two widows out of the three.
(10) As he actually said, ‘The rivals are not exempt’.
(11) Even a defective one.
In the case of the three widows mentioned above, where there are no rivals, the defective halizah is, therefore, valid even according to Samuel.

As the prohibition to marry the rivals is not so severe as that of the sisters, the halizah with the former is of greater validity and force than that with the latter. Cf. supra p. 163,n.11.

The levir.

Of two sisters-in-law, widows of the same brother.

By the levir prior to the halizah.

A halizah after a divorce is defective, since the levirate bond had already been partially severed by the divorce that preceded it.

Since no letter of divorce was given to her.

Infra 51a.

Since the halizah alone does not in this case exempt the widow; a divorce also, owing to the ma'amor, being required.

To whom no ma'amor had been addressed.

infra 53a.

In consequence of which he may marry neither of them and the halizah in which he participates is for this reason of a defective character.

A rival taking the place of a forbidden relative, being subject to the same restrictions as the relatives, is also forbidden to be taken in levirate marriage.

Supra 18b.

That no levirate bond exists and the halizah with the sisters is consequently perfectly valid.

I.e., the sister who was second to perform the halizah. Rachel was Jacob's second, Leah his first wife (v. Gen. XXIX, 23-28).

I.e., the first sister. Cf. previous note.

Because Rachel cannot any more be married to him owing to her being the sister of his haluzah.

Leah's halizah having been perfect, since the levir could have married her if he wished.

Samuel.

The plural.

That the expression of 'rivals' refers only to rivals of the sister who was second to perform the halizah and not to those of the first also.

Would the sister of a haluzah be exempt by the halizah of her rival?

Infra 40b. As he cannot marry the rival of Rachel who is his haluzah's sister, his halizah with her would be of a defective character which, consequently, could not exempt Rachel.

Lit., 'he said'.

Participated in the halizah with one of them.

By participating in the halizah with the rival of the second sister. Such halizah would not exempt the sister.

Much more so the relative herself. The halizah, therefore, being defective, would have to be performed by both the second sister and her rival.

If he participated in the halizah with the rival of the first sister.

He may participate in halizah not only with the rival of the second sister and thus exempt the sister herself, but also with the second sister and thus exempt her rival.

Rachel (the second sister), being the relative of Leah (the first sister) who is the 'rival' of the haluzah, is consequently permitted to marry the levir, and her halizah is, therefore, perfectly valid and exempts also her rival.

That the rivals are not exempted by the halizah of the sisters, owing to its defectiveness which is due to the existence of the levirate bond (cf. supra p. 164, n. 21).

As to why the halizah of the rival of the relative of a haluzah should be more valid than that of the relative of the haluzah herself (v. supra p. 266, n. 2).

The Rabbis who forbade the marriage of a zekukah owing to the levirate bond did not extend the prohibition to her rival. The halizah of the latter is, therefore, more valid and exempts also the former.
The Baraitha quoted.

(51) Supra 132, ‘Ed. Iv, 8; as marriage with the rivals is permitted, their halizah also (cf. supra p. 163, n. 11) is perfectly valid.

(52) That the Baraitha quoted represents the view of Beth Shammai.

(53) The rivals.

(54) Why then was only halizah mentioned?

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 27b

Between the one who was given a letter of divorce and the other to whom a ma'amhar had been addressed who is to be preferred? Is she who was divorced to be preferred or is, perhaps, she to whom the ma'amhar had been addressed to be preferred since she is nearer to him in respect to intercourse? — R. Ashi replied, Come and hear: R. Gamaliel, however, admits that a letter of divorce after a ma'amhar and a ma'amhar after a letter of divorce is valid. Now, if a letter of divorce has the preference, the ma'amhar after it should have no validity; and if the ma'amhar has the preference, the divorce after it should have no validity. Consequently it must be concluded that they have both equal validity. This proves it.

R. Huna said in the name of Rab: If two sisters who were sisters-in-law became subject to one levir, the one is permitted when he has participated in her halizah; and the other is permitted when he has participated in her halizah. If the first died he is permitted [to marry] the second, and there is no need to state that if the second died the first is permitted, since, as a sister-in-law who was permitted, then forbidden and then again permitted, she returns to her former state of permussibility. R. Johanan, however, said: If the second died he is permitted to marry the first, but if the first died he is forbidden to marry the second. What is the reason? Because any sister-in-law to whom the injunction. Her husband's brother shall go in unto her cannot be applied at the time of her coming under the obligation of the levirate marriage is, indeed, like the wife of a brother who has children and is, consequently, forbidden. But does not Rab hold the same view? Surely Rab said: Any woman to whom the injunction, Her husband's brother should go in unto her cannot be applied at the time of her coming under the obligation of the levirate marriage is, indeed, like the wife of a brother who has children and is, consequently, forbidden! That statement applies only to the case where the woman is faced with the prohibition of 'a wife's sister', which is Pentateuchal; here, however, the prohibition due to the levirate bond is only Rabbinical.

R. Jose b. Hanina raised the following objection against R. Johanan: IN THE CASE OF FOUR BROTHERS, TWO OF WHOM WERE MARRIED TO TWO SISTERS, IF THOSE WHO WERE MARRIED TO THE SISTERS DIED, BEHOLD, THESE MUST PERFORM HALIZAH BUT MAY NOT BE TAKEN IN LEVIRATE MARRIAGE. But why? Let one of the brothers take on the duty of participating in the halizah with the second widow, and thus place the first widow, in relation to the second, in the category of a deceased brother's wife that was permitted- then forbidden, and then again permitted, and thus she would return to her former state of permussibility! — The other replied: I do not know who was the author of the statement concerning the sisters. But let him rather reply that the meaning of the expression of MUST PERFORM THE HALIZAH, which had been used, indeed signifies that only one is to perform the halizah. -The expression used was THEY MUST PERFORM THE HALIZAH. Then let him reply that the expressions THEY MUST PERFORM THE HALIZAH refers to women generally who perform the halizah! It was stated, BEHOLD THESE. Let him, then, reply that [this is a case] where halizah was already performed by the first\footnote{\textsuperscript{40}} -[The expression] THESE MUST PERFORM HALIZAH

\begin{enumerate}
\item Of two widows of the same husband who was survived by one brother.
\item By the surviving brother.
\item In respect of the halizah, if that halizah is to exempt the rival. None of these widows may be taken in levirate marriage: the one, because a letter of divorce was given to her, and the other, because she is the rival of the former. The only question is, which of the two should perform the halizah and which should thereby be exempt.
\item I.e., shall she perform the halizah and thus exempt her rival? Cur. edd. add., ‘because he began with her with halizah’. Rashal (Glosses. a.l.) reads, ‘divorce’ for ‘halizah’. Both additions are absent in MSS, v. Tosaf. s.v. \textit{חלה}.

\item Given first to the other.
\item Infra 51a. Lit., ‘there is’. If the ma'amor was made first, the subsequent divorce forbids the marriage of the second and also that of the first, the ma'amor to her not being regarded as actual marriage, and if the divorce was first and the ma'amor afterwards, the second widow also requires a divorce, the divorce of the first not having the force of halizah to invalidate the ma'amor addressed to the second.

\item The widow of the brother who died after the first, and who became subject to the levirate marriage after the subjection of the first.
\item To the levir. At the time she became subject to him there was no other zekukah.
\item When her sister's husband died.
\item When her sister died.
\item V. note 2, because at the time she became subject to the levirate marriage she was permitted to him.

\item That had been advanced by R. Johanan.
\item Infra 30a, 111b.
\item Of Rab, just quoted.
\item As in the case of three brothers two of whom were married to two sisters (infra 30a) in connection with which Rab made his statement.
\item And is, therefore, removed as soon as one of the sisters dies.
\item The same objection applies to Rab also (Rashi). Cf. however, Tosaf. s.v. \textit{חלה} a.l.
\item V. supra2 p. 169, nn. 7, 11.

\item Which implies the two spoken of.
So that the other, who is not exempted by that of the first, must also perform halizah.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 28a

is an instruction as to what it is the proper thing to do.¹ Let him reply that it² was a preventive measure against the possibility of the levir's participating first in the halizah of the first¹³ — It was stated, BUT MAY NOT BE TAKEN IN LEVIRATE MARRIAGE, i.e., the law of the levirate marriage is not applicable here at all.⁴ Let him, then, reply that it⁵ was a preventive measure in case he⁶ might die,⁷ it being forbidden to annul the precept of levirate marriage¹⁸ — R. Johanan makes no provision against possible death.⁹ Then let him reply that it⁵ is the ruling of R. Eleazar¹⁰ who said that so long as she remained forbidden to him for one moment she is forbidden to him for ever¹¹¹ — Since the latter clause [represents the view of] R. Eleazar,¹² the first clause cannot represent his view. Then let him reply that it¹³ is a case where they¹⁴ fell under the obligation¹⁵ at the same time, and that it represents the opinion of R. Jose the Galilean who maintains that it is possible to ascertain simultaneity¹⁶ — The Tanna would not have recorded an anonymous Mishnah in agreement with the view of R. Jose the Galilean. Let him reply [that it¹³ is a case] where it is not known which¹⁷ came under the obligation¹⁵ first!¹¹¹ — If that were the case¹⁹ how could it have been stated,²⁰ EVEN IF THEY HAD ALREADY MARRIED THEM THEY MUST DISMISS THEM! In the case of the first,²¹ at least, one can understand [the reason],²² since he can be told, ‘Who permitted her to you’?²³ In the case, however, of the second,²⁴ the levir²⁵ could surely claim, ‘My friend²⁶ has taken the second in levirate marriage²⁷ and I take the first ‘²⁸ This, then,²⁹ is the reason why he³⁰ said to him,³¹ ‘I do not know who was the author of the statement concerning the sisters’³².

We learned: IF ONE OF THE SISTERS WAS FORBIDDEN TO ONE [OF THE BROTHERS] UNDER THE PROHIBITION OF INCEST,³³ HE IS FORBIDDEN TO MARRY HER BUT MAY MARRY HER SISTER, WHILE TO THE SECOND BROTHER BOTH ARE FORBIDDEN. It was now assumed that his mother-in-law³⁴ came under the obligation³⁵ first.³⁶ Now, why [should both sisters be forbidden]?³⁷ Let the son-in-law undertake the duty of marrying first that sister who is not his mother-in-law,³⁸ and his mother-in-law, in relation to the other levir, would thereby come into the same category as a sister-in-law that was permitted,³⁹ then forbidden,⁴⁰ and then permitted again,⁴¹ who returns to her former state of permissibility! R. Papa replied: [They are forbidden] in a case where she who was not his mother-in-law came under the obligation⁴² first.⁴³

R. ELIEZER SAID: BETH SHAMMAI HOLD etc. The following was taught: R. Eliezer said: Beth Shammai hold that they may retain them, and Beth Hillel hold that they must dismiss them. R. Simeon said: They may retain them. Abba Saul said: Beth Hillel uphold in this matter the milder rule, for it was Beth Shammai who said that the women must be dismissed while Beth Hillel said they may be retained.⁴⁴

Whose view does R. Simeon represent?⁴⁵ If that of Beth Shammai,⁴⁶ he is merely repeating R. Eliezer; if that of Beth Hillel,⁴⁶ he is repeating Abba Saul! It was this that he meant: In this matter there is no dispute at all between Beth Shammai and Beth Hillel.

IF ONE OF THE SISTERS etc. But we have learned this already: When her sister is her sister-in-law she may either perform halizah or be taken in levirate marriage!⁴⁷ — [Both are] necessary. For had the law been stated there⁴⁸ it might have been assumed [to apply to that case alone],⁴⁹ because there is no need to enact a preventive measure against a second brother,⁵⁰ but not [to the case] here where it might be advisable to issue a preventive measure against a second brother.⁵⁰ And had the law been stated here,⁵¹ it might have been assumed [to apply to this case alone] because there is a second brother who proves it⁵² but not [to that case] where no second brother exists.⁵³ [Hence were both] required.
BY VIRTUE OF A COMMANDMENT etc. But we have [already] learned this also:

(1) And not as to what is to be done in certain eventualities. Lit., ‘for as at the beginning, it was taught’.
(2) The provision that both widows are to perform halizah and that none may be taken in levirate marriage.
(3) And then he would marry the second, in his erroneous assumption that, as he may participate in the halizah of the second and marry the first, so he may participate in the halizah of the first and marry the second. This, however, does not imply that if he already did participate in the halizah of the second he may not, after her death, marry the first. In this latter case the reason for the marriage with the first would be obvious and would leave no room for erroneous conclusions.
(4) Even if halizah was first performed by the second.
(5) The provision in our Mishnah that both widows must perform halizah and none of them may be taken in levirate marriage.
(6) One of the surviving brothers who intended to marry one of the widowed sisters.
(7) After the second brother had married the second widow and had thus become disqualified from marrying or participating in the halizah of the other — who is now forbidden to him as the sister of his wife.
(8) And this only is the reason for the prohibition of the levirate marriage with either of the sisters. Had this prohibition been due to the levirate bond, as suggested, the first would certainly have been permitted to marry the levir after halizah with the second, which had severed the levirate bond, had taken place. Consequently, in the case discussed by R. Johanan, where the second died, and the preventive measure is not applicable. the first may indeed be taken in levirate marriage!
(9) The ruling in our Mishnah could not, therefore, be due to a preventive measure.
(10) Bah a.l. reads, ‘Eliezer’ throughout the context.
(11) Infra 1092; while R. Johanan, agreeing with the Rabbis, may disregard this individual opinion.
(12) His authorship being specifically stated there.

(16) supra 19a, Bek. 92a
(17) Of the two widowed sisters.
(18) So that there is no known ‘second’ widow with whom to participate in the halizah.
(19) That the prohibition in our Mishnah to marry the two widowed sisters is entirely due to the fact that it is not known which of them was the first to become a widow and which was second; and that, had the fact been known, the first would have been permitted to be taken in the levirate marriage.
(20) Lit., ‘(is it) that why it was stated’!
(22) Why the woman must be dismissed.
(23) Before the marital bond between him and her sister was severed she was forbidden to him as the sister of his zekukah. Hence he must rightly dismiss her.
(24) Levir (v. Bah) who married after his brother had married one of the widows. Cur. edd. read, ישני ישני ל for ישני ישני ל.
(25) When he is ordered to divorce the woman.
(26) The levir who married first.
(27) I.e., the sister who became widow second; and naturally no one could disprove his contention.
(28) Who became permitted to him owing to the previous marriage of her sister who, he claims, was the second widow. The marriage of the second sever the marital bond between the sister and the levis, and thus liberates the first from the prohibition of ‘the sister of one's zekukah’ and brings her under the category of ‘permitted, forbidden and permitted again’.
(29) Since this last suggested answer is also untenable.

(35) Of the levirate marriage.
(36) I.e., her husband died before the other brother.
(37) To marry the other levir.
(38) That widow is permitted to him, because she is neither his forbidden relative nor the sister of his zekukah, since a forbidden relative is not a zekukah.

(44) Tosef. v.
(45) Lit., ‘R. Simeon like whom’. He could not possibly advance a view of his own, since he is not sufficiently great to disagree either with Beth Shammai or with Beth Hillel.
(46) I.e., if he maintains that what he said was their view.
(47) Supra 20a, which Implies the law here stated, viz, that he is forbidden to marry the forbidden relative but may marry her sister.
(48) And not here.
(49) Where one brother only is involved.
(50) Who might marry a sister of his zekukah by mistaking the reason for the levirate marriage of his brother.
(51) And not there.
(52) That there is a special reason why his brother may marry one of the sisters. The fact that he himself does not marry either of the sisters is sufficient proof that the sister of a zekukah is forbidden.
(53) And people might erroneously infer that the sister of a zekukah is always permitted.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 28b

If she is forbidden by virtue of a commandment or by virtue of holiness she must perform halizah and may not be taken in levirate marriage!1 -There it is a question of one forbidden by virtue of a commandment alone,2 but here [it is a case of one] forbidden by virtue of a commandment and [by virtue of] her sister.3 Since it might have been assumed that the prohibition by virtue of a commandment shall take the same rank as the prohibition by the law of incest4 and [her sister] should, therefore, be taken in levirate marriage, hence we were taught [that the law is not so].

But how could she6 possibly be taken in levirate marriage? Since Pentateuchally she6 is to submit to him,7 he would come in contact with the sister of his zekukah8 -It might have been thought that such provision9 was made by the Rabbis for the sake of the precept,10 hence we were taught [that it was not so].

IF ONE OF THE SISTERS etc. What need was there again for this statement? Surely, it is precisely identical [with the one before]!11 For what difference is there whether [a woman is forbidden] to one or to two?- [Both are] required. For had the former only12 been stated, it might have been assumed [that the law was applicable there only] because there exists a second brother to indicate the cause,13 but not here where there is no second brother to indicate it.14 And if the statement had been made here only it might have been assumed on the contrary that both brothers afford proof in regard to each other,15 but not in the other case;16 [hence both were] required.

THIS IS THE CASE CONCERNING WHICH IT HAS BEEN SAID etc. What is the expression, THIS IS intended to exclude?17 -To exclude the case [where one sister was forbidden by] Virtue of a commandment to the one [brother], and [the other sister was forbidden] by virtue of a commandment to the other. But what need was there for this [additional statement]? Surely it is precisely identical [with that mentioned before];18 for what difference is there whether it relates to one or to two! — It might have been thought that only where there is the necessity of providing for a preventive measure against a second brother do we not say that the prohibition by a commandment takes the same rank as a prohibition by the law of incest, but that where there is no necessity to provide against a second brother we do say that in the case of the one brother the prohibition by a commandment is to be given the same force as the prohibition by the law of incest, and that also in the case of the other brother the prohibition by a commandment is to be given the same force as the prohibition by the law of incest, and that the sisters may consequently be taken in levirate marriage; hence we were taught [that such an assumption is not to be made].

Rab Judah said in the name of Rab and so did R. Hiyya teach: In the case of all these it may happen that she who is forbidden to one brother may be permitted to the other, and her sister who is forbidden to one brother may be taken in the levirate marriage, and Rab Judah interpreted it [as referring to those] from one's mother-in-law onward but not to the first six categories. What is the reason? Because this is only possible in the case of a daughter born from a woman who had been outraged but not in that of a daughter born from a legal marriage [and the author of that Mishnah] deals only with cases of legal matrimony and not with those of outraged women.

Abaye, however, interpreted it as referring also to a daughter from a woman that had been outraged. Because, since [the application of Rab's statement] is quite possible in her case, it matters not whether she was born from a woman who was legally married or from one that had been outraged; but not to the ‘wife of a brother who was not his contemporary’ since this is possible only according to the view of R. Simeon and not according to that of the Rabbis and he does not deal with any matter which is a subject of controversy. But R. Safra interpreted [it] as referring also to the ‘wife of a brother who was not his contemporary’, and this is possible in the case of six brothers in accordance with the view of R. Simeon. And your mnemonic is, ‘died, born, and performed the levirate marriage; died, born, and performed the levirate marriage’ [Suppose, for instance]. Reuben and Simeon were married to two sisters, and Levi and Judah were married to two strangers. When Reuben died, Issachar was born and Levi took the widow in levirate marriage. When Simeon died, Zebulun was born and Judah took [the second widow] in levirate marriage. When Levi and Judah subsequently died without issue and their widows fell under the obligation of the levirate marriage before Issachar and Zebulun, she who is forbidden to the one is permitted to the other while she who is forbidden to the other is permitted to the first.

In the example of ‘her sister who is her sister-in-law’, what need was there for Judah to contract the levirate marriage? Even if Judah did not contract any levirate marriage it is also possible — Owing to the rival. This satisfactorily explains the case of the rival, what can be said, however, in respect of the rival's rival? — If, for instance, Gad and Asher also subsequently married them.

Mishnah. If two of three brothers were married to two sisters, or to a woman and her daughter, or to a woman and her daughter's daughter, or to a woman and her son's daughter, behold, these must perform the halizah but may not be taken in levirate marriage. R. Simeon, however, exempts them.

If one of them was forbidden to him by the law of incest, he is forbidden to marry her but is permitted to marry her sister. If, however, the prohibition is due to a commandment or to holiness, they must perform the halizah but may not be taken in levirate marriage.

Gemara. It was taught: R. Simeon exempts both from the halizah and the levirate marriage. for it is said in the Scriptures, And thou shalt not take a woman to her sister, to be a rival to her: when they become rivals to one another, you may not marry even one of them.

IF ONE OF THEM WAS etc. What need was there again for this statement? Surely it is the same! - It was necessary because of the opinion of R. Simeon: As it might have been assumed that, since R. Simeon had said that two sisters were neither to perform halizah nor to be taken in levirate marriage. A preventive measure should be enacted against two sisters generally. hence we were taught [that it was not so].

IF, HOWEVER, THE PROHIBITION IS DUE TO A COMMANDMENT etc.

(1) Supra 202, Sanh. 532.
(2) Only one sister-in-law being concerned.
(3) Since two sisters, the widows of the two brothers, are here involved, and one of them is forbidden not only as the sister of his zekukah but also by virtue of a commandment.
(4) As the one is not regarded as a zekukah so neither is the other.
(5) The sister of one forbidden by virtue of a commandment.
(6) The sister-in-law forbidden by virtue of a commandment.
(7) To levirate marriage; her prohibition being only Rabbinical.
(8) Which cannot obviously be permitted. What need, then. was there for a law that is so obvious.
(9) The permission to marry the sister of his zekukah.
(10) Of the levirate marriage. In order that this precept may be fulfilled they may have removed the prohibition of the marital bond, which is only Rabbinical, in cases where the woman is not forbidden by the law of incest but by virtue of a commandment only.
(11) Where one sister-in-law is similarly forbidden to one levir, and he is permitted to marry her sister.
(12) Lit., ‘there’.
(13) Since one brother is forbidden to marry either sister it will be obvious that the brother was permitted to marry one of the sisters for a special reason.
(14) Since both brothers marry respectively the two sisters, it might be assumed that any levir may marry the sister of his zekukah.
(15) Since each brother is permitted to marry only one particular sister and not the other, it is obvious that the other is forbidden to him. The law of zekukah could not consequently be mistaken.
(16) Where there is only one brother, and no other brother to indicate that there is a special reason why the sister of his apparent zekukah. should be permitted to be taken in levirate marriage.
(17) THIS IS implies this and no other.
(18) In our Mishnah: [IF ONE SISTER] WAS FORBIDDEN BY VIRTUE OF A COMMANDMENT... SHE MUST PERFORM THE HALIZAH AND MAY NOT BE TAKEN IN LEVIRATE MARRIAGE.
(19) V. supra p. 174. n. 6.
(20) The fifteen forbidden categories enumerated in the Mishnah, supra 2af.
(21) As a forbidden relative under the law of incest.
(22) With whom she is not so closely related.
(23) The prohibition of the one under the law of incest removes the marital bond, and her sister who, in consequence, is no longer the ‘sister of a zekukah’, may, therefore, be married to, or perform the halizah with the levir to whom the former is forbidden.
(24) Rab's statement.
(25) Of the fifteen relatives enumerated in the Mishnah mentioned.
(26) That two sisters shall be the daughters of two brothers, and that the one forbidden to one brother shall be permitted to the other brother. V. n. 8.
(27) If, of four brothers, A, B, C and D, A had a daughter from a woman he had outraged. and B had a daughter from the same woman whom he outraged after A, and these daughters of A and B, who are maternal sisters, married their father's brothers, C and D, who subsequently died without issue, A's daughter is permitted to B (who is her brother-in-law but otherwise a complete stranger) and is forbidden to A her father. For similar reasons A's daughter is permitted to A and forbidden to B. Thus it is possible for two sisters to marry the two levirs respectively because each one of them is a daughter of the other levir to whom she is forbidden by the law of incest.
(28) Since the mother of such a daughter would be forbidden to marry her husband's brother, even though she had been divorced by her husband after the birth of that daughter.
(29) Supra 2a, which is now under discussion.
(30) And since the case of a daughter could not be included (v. supra nn. 8 and 9), the other five cases which also bear on a daughter had equally to be excluded.
(31) V. supra p. 176, n. 7.
(32) Supra 18b. V. also R. Safra's interpretation and notes, Infra.
(33) Rab or R. Hiyya.
(34) Rab's statement.
(35) Who in certain circumstances permits the marriage of the ‘widow of a brother who was not his contemporary’. V.

(36) v. infra, when (a) death, (b) birth and (c) marriage occurred in this order in the case of both groups of brothers.
(37) Jacob's sons, the sequence of whose births is known (v. Gen. XXIX. 32-XXX, 20), are taken here as an illustration of the possibility of the application of Rab's statement in certain circumstances of birth, death and marriage.
(38) The widow of Levi.
(39) To Issachar, because he was born before the marriage of Levi had removed the levirate bond between Reuben's widow and the other brothers, and thus came under the prohibition of marrying 'the wife of his brother who was not his contemporary'.
(40) To Zebulun who was born after she had married Levi and the levirate bond between her and the other brothers had been removed.
(41) The wife of Judah.
(42) To Zebulun, to whom the widow of Simeon stands in the same relation as the widow of Reuben to Issachar. (V. supra note 9).
(43) Issachar who was Simeon's contemporary.
(44) Supra.
(45) In R. Safra's interpretation.
(46) For one sister to be forbidden to one brother and permitted to the other, and vice versa. Suppose Reuben died, and then Issachar was born, and Levi married the widow; then Simeon died, Zebulun was born, and Levi died; and the widows of Simeon and Levi came under the obligation of the levirate marriage with Issachar and Zebulun. Levi's widow is forbidden to Issachar owing to the levirate bond originating from her first husband, Reuben, (v. supra p. 177, n. 9) and is permitted to Zebulun (v. p. 177, n. 10), while Simeon's widow is forbidden to Zebulun (v. p. 177, n. 12) and permitted to Issachar (v. p. 177. n. 13). Now, since the point may be illustrated by five brothers, why was it necessary to bring in six?
(47) As the Mishnah under discussion (supra 2af) speaks of the rivals it was desired to give an illustration which may be applicable to rivals as well as to the forbidden relatives, and this could only be done by assuming that Judah married Simeon's widow. Had he not married her, the rival would have had to be not Judah's but Simeon's wife who would thus be forbidden to Zebulun not as 'rival’ but as ‘the wife of his brother who was not his contemporary’.
(48) The illustration with the six brothers.

rival's rival should be forbidden to the other brother and permitted to the first?
(50) The first wives of Levi and Judah (the rivals of their second wives, the widows of Reuben and Simeon). If Gad who married, say. the widow of Judah, and Asher who married, say. the widow of Levi died subsequently without issue and were survived by their wives who are now subject to the levirate marriage with Issachar and Zebulun the surviving brothers, Gad's first wife, the rival of his second wife (the widow of Judah) who was the rival of Simeon's wife, is forbidden to Zebulun as the rival's rival of the wife of Simeon who was not his contemporary, but is permitted to Issachar. Similarly Asher's first wife is forbidden to Issachar and permitted to Zebulun.
(51) The women enumerated.
(52) If their husbands, the two brothers, died without issue.
(53) With the third surviving brother.
(54) By that brother; since both are related to him by the ‘levirate bond’ and each is forbidden to him as the consanguineous relative of the woman connected with him by such bond.

(55) Even from the halizah. V. Gemara infra.

(56) The sisters.

(57) Lev. XVIII, 18.

(58) The levirate bond which subjects both to the same levir causing them to be rivals.

(59) As that which had been taught in an earlier Mishnah in the case of four brothers, supra 26a.

(60) Forbidding levirate marriage even where the prohibition of one is due to the law of incest.

(61) Lit., ‘of the world’. If permission to marry one of the sisters were given where one is forbidden by the law of incest, it might be mistakenly concluded that levirate marriage is allowed even when none was forbidden by the law of incest.

(62) By the statement in our Mishnah that one IS PERMITTED TO MARRY HER SISTER.

(63) The similar statement in the earlier Mishnah (supra 262) does not prove this point as far as R. Simeon is concerned, since it refers to the view of the Rabbis according to whom the marriage of the sister of a zekukah is only Rabbinically forbidden and no preventive measure is obviously required against a possible infringement of such a prohibition. According to R. Simeon, however, who regards the marriage of a sister of a stekukah as incest, a preventive measure might have been expected had not our Mishnah proved the contrary.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 29a

But did not R. Simeon state that two sisters are neither to perform the halizah nor to be taken in levirate marriage? — This is a preventive measure against any other case where the prohibition is due to a commandment. This is a satisfactory explanation in respect of herself; what, however, can be said in respect of her sister? The provision was made in the case of her sister as a preventive measure against herself. But, surely, no such preventive measures were made in the case where one was forbidden as incest! — A case of incest is different because people are well acquainted with it and it is well known.

MISHNAH. IF TWO OF THREE BROTHERS WERE MARRIED TO TWO SISTERS AND THE THIRD WAS UNMARRIED, AND WHEN ONE OF THE SISTERS HUSBANDS DIED, THE UNMARRIED BROTHER ADDRESSED TO HER A MA'AMAR, AND THEN HIS SECOND BROTHER DIED, BETH SHAMMAI SAY: HIS WIFE REMAINS WITH HIM WHILE THE OTHER IS EXEMPT AS BEING HIS WIFE'S SISTER. BETH HILLEL, HOWEVER, MAINTAIN THAT HE MUST DISMISS HIS WIFE BY A LETTER OF DIVORCE AND BY HALIZAH, AND HIS BROTHER'S WIFE BY HALIZAH. THIS IS THE CASE IN REGARD TO WHICH IT WAS SAID: WOE TO HIM BECAUSE OF HIS WIFE, AND WOE TO HIM BECAUSE OF HIS BROTHER'S WIFE.

GEMARA. What was THIS IS meant to exclude? — To exclude the statement of R. Joshua, [and to indicate] that we do not act In accordance with his view but either in accordance with that of R. Gamaliel or that of R. Eleazar.

R. Eleazar said: It must not be assumed that a ma'amor according to Beth Shammai constitutes a perfect kinyan, so that, if he wishes to dismiss her, a letter of divorce is sufficient; but rather that, according to Beth Shammai, a ma'amor constitutes a kinyan only so far as to keep out the rival. Said R. Abin: We also have learned the same thing: Beth Shammai said, ‘They may retain them’, which implies that they may only retain them but [that they may] not [marry them] at the outset.

(1) Who are both subject to levirate marriage.

(2) Owing to the levirate bond which Pentateuchally binds both sisters to the levir. Why, then, should halizah be performed here where Pentateuchally both sisters are subject to the levirate marriage and each is, consequently, forbidden as the sister of a zekukah?

(3) The provision that halizazh shall be performed.

(4) Were halizazh to be discarded in this case, an erroneous conclusion might be formed that it is to be discarded in all cases where the prohibition is due to a commandment (as if it had been due to the Pentateuchal laws of incest). even if the question of the sister of a zekukah did not arise.

(5) The sister forbidden by a commandment.

(6) Why is she not exempt from the halizah as the sister of a zekukah?

(7) הַלּוּחַ רֶדוֹדָה ‘her ill-luck’. Others render, ‘company’. As the sister who is forbidden by a commandment is subject to halizah (as a preventive measure, for the reason previously stated) so must her sister (so that one case be not mistaken for the other) be also subject to the same measure.

(8) V. our Mishnah: HE IS FORBIDDEN TO MARRY HER BUT IS PERMITTED TO MARRY HER SISTER, and no preventive measure against the sister was enacted.

(9) And would know that one sister was forbidden because of incest.

(10) The cause why the second sister is taken in levirate marriage.

(11) Lit., ‘it has a voice’. And no one would in consequence permit elsewhere the marriage of the sister of another zekukah who is not forbidden by the laws of incest.

(12) חֹלָה ‘empty’.

(13) The widow.

(14) V. Glos.

(15) The sister-in-law to whom he addressed the ma'amar though he had not actually married her. A ma'am'ar, according to Beth Shammai, constitutes legal marriage in this respect. V. infra.

(16) From levirate marriage and halizah.

(17) Since her sister is regarded as legally married she is no more the sister of the levir's zekukah but of his wife.

(18) Cf. supra n. 4.

(19) Since the ma'am'ar is partially regarded as marriage.

(20) A ma'am'ar, according to Beth Hillel, does not constitute a proper marriage, and she is now the sister of a zekukah. V. following note.

(21) v. previous note. As the ma'am'ar did not constitute a proper marriage with her sister she is the sister of a zekukah who may not contract levirate marriage but must perform halizah.

(22) V. infra 109a. The second widow who becomes subject to him through the levirate law is not only herself forbidden to marry him (cf. note 10) but deprives him also of the first widow, his virtual wife. (Cf. note 9)-

(23) THIS IS implying this but not other cases.

(24) Lit., ‘that’.

(26) V. Glos., i.e., perfect marriage.

(27) The levir.

(28) I.e., her rival who is her sister does not cause her to be forbidden to the levir as the ‘sister of a zekukah’.

(29) Supra 26a, in the case where the levirs married the sisters-in-law before consulting the Beth din as to the permissibility of their action.

(30) If they had already married them.

(31) Because each one is the sister of a zekukah. Lit., ‘they may retain, yes; for as at the start, not’.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 29b

Now, if it could be assumed that a ma'am'ar, according to Beth Shammai, constitutes a perfect kinyan, let it be the one levir address a ma'am'ar\(^1\) and constitute thereby a kinyan,\(^2\) and let the other also address a ma'am'ar\(^1\) and thereby constitute a kinyan.\(^3\) What then? [Is it your inference that] it\(^4\) keeps the rival completely out?\(^5\) Let then one levir address a ma'am'ar\(^1\) and keep her out\(^6\) and let the other levir also address a ma'am'ar\(^1\) and keep her out!\(^7\) What, however, may be said in reply? That a permitted ma'am'ar\(^8\) does keep the rival out, while a forbidden ma'am'ar\(^9\) does not keep her out; so also here, even according to him who maintains that a ma'am'ar constitutes a perfect kinyan, only a permitted ma'am'ar\(^10\) constitutes a kinyan. but a forbidden one\(^8\) does not.

R. Ashi taught it\(^11\) in the following manner: R. Eleazar said: It must not be assumed that a ma'am'ar, according to Beth Shammai, keeps the rival\(^12\) completely out, and that she does not require even halizah; but rather it keeps her out and still leaves [a partial bond]. Said R. Abin: We also have learned the same thing: Beth Shammai said, ‘they may retain them’, which implies that they may only retain them but [that they may] not [marry them] at the outset. Now, if it could have been assumed that a ma'amăr, according to Beth Shammai, keeps a rival out completely. let the one levir address a ma'amăr, and thus keep her out. and let the other also address a ma'amăr and so keep her out. But surely, it was taught. BETH SHAMMAI SAY: HIS WIFE [REMAINS] WITH HIM WHILE THE OTHER IS EXEMPT AS HIS WIFE'S SISTER! — The fact is, a yebamah who is eligible for all is also eligible for a part; a yebamah who is not eligible for all is not eligible for a part.

Rabbah inquired: Does a ma'amăr, according to Beth Shammai, constitute marriage or betrothal? — Said Abaye to him: On what practical issue [does this question bear]? Shall I say on [the issue] of inheriting from her, defiling himself to her or annulling her vows? surely. [it could be answered that] seeing that in the case of ordinary betrothal R. Hyya taught, that where the wife has only been betrothed the husband is neither subject to the laws of onan nor may he defile himself for her, and she in his case is likewise not subject to the laws of onan nor may she defile herself for him, and that if she dies he does not inherit from her though if he dies she collects her kethubah, is there any need [to speak of the case where] a ma'amăr had been addressed? Rather, [the question is] in respect of introduction into the bridal canopy: Does it constitute a marriage and, therefore, no introduction into the bridal canopy is required? or does it perhaps constitute betrothal and, consequently, introduction into the bridal canopy is required? The other replied: If where he did not address to her any ma'amăr it is written [in Scripture]. Her husband's brother shall go in unto her, but also was required; consequently, introduction into the bridal canopy is required. What then is the decision? — Come and hear: In the case of a widow awaiting the decision of the levir, whether there be one levir or two levirs, R. Eliezer said. he may annul [her vows]. R. Joshua said: Only where she is waiting for one and not for two. R. Akiba said: Neither when she is waiting for one nor for two. Now we pondered thereon: One can well understand R. Akiba, since he may hold that no levirate bond exists even in the case of one; according to R. Joshua, the levirate bond may exist where there is one levir but not where there are two levirs. According to R. Eliezer, however, granted that a levirate bond exists, one can understand why, in the case of one, he may annul, but why also in the case of two? And R. Ammi replied: Here it is a case where he addressed to her a ma'amăr, and the statement represents the opinion of Beth Shammai who maintain that a ma'amăr constitutes a perfect kinyan. Now, if it be granted that it constitutes a marriage, it is quite intelligible why he may annul her vows. If, however, it be assumed that it constitutes only a betrothol, how could he annul her vows? Surely we learned: The vows of a betrothed girl may be annulled by her father in conjunction with her husband. -Said R. Nahman b. Isaac: What is meant by annulment? Jointly.

According to R. Eleazar, however, who holds that a ma'amăr, In the opinion of Beth Shammai, constitutes a kinyan only so far as to keep out the rival, how could the annulment be effected even jointly? — R. Eleazar can answer you: When I said that it constitutes a kinyan so far only as to keep out the rival, [I meant to indicate] that a letter of divorce was not sufficient but that halizah also was required; did I say anything, however, as regards the annulment of vows! And if you prefer I might say. R. Eleazar can answer you: Is it satisfactorily explained according to R. Nahman b. Isaac? Surely it was not stated ‘they may annul’ but ‘he may annul’! Consequently this must be a case where he appeared before a court and a specified sum for alimony was decreed for her out of his estate; and [this is to be understood] In accordance with the statement R. Phinehas made in the name of Raba. For R. Phinehas stated in the name of Raba: Any woman that utters a vow does so on condition that her husband will approve of it.
To one of the sisters-in-law; since such an action is not forbidden.

(2) v. Glos. i.e., perfect marriage.

(3) The prohibition 'as sister of a zekukah' would consequently be removed and both levirs could properly marry the respective sisters-in-law.

(4) The ma'am'ar.

(5) V. supra p. 181, n. 17.

(6) v. p. 181, n. 17.

(7) V. supra p. 181, n. 17, and supra n. 6. Why, then, was levirate marriage with the two sisters forbidden!

(8) One addressed to a sister-in-law in a case where levirate marriage with her was permissible at the time.

(9) When two sisters were subject to the levirate marriage before the ma'am'ar had been addressed.

(10) V. note 11.

(11) The previous statement of R. Eleazar and R. Abin etc.

(12) The sister-in-law who, like her sister (the other sister-in-law), is subject to the levirate bond.

(13) The ma'am'ar.

(14) So that she cannot cause the prohibition of the other to whom the ma'am'ar had been addressed.

(15) Which necessitates her performing the halizah if she wishes to marry a stranger before he levir had properly married her sister.

(16) V. supra p, 182, n. 1.

(17) V. supra p. 182, n. 3.

(18) v. supra p. 182, n. 4.

(19) Cf. supra p. 181, n. 17.

(20) Consequently it must be concluded that a ma'am'ar still leaves a partial bond, and that before the other sister had performed the halizah the first is forbidden as the sister of one's zekukah.

(21) Which shews that no halizah at all is required!

(22) For both levirate marriage and halizah, as in the case of our Mishnah where the ma'am'ar was addressed to one sister before the death of the husband of the other had subjected that other also to the same levir.

(23) To the ma'am'ar which, in such circumstances, completely keeps out the other when she also, through her husband's subsequent death, comes under the obligation.

(24) As in the Mishnah, supra 26a, where both widows were equally subject to the levirs at the time the ma'am'ar had been addressed, and none was eligible for both the levirate marriage and the halizah.

(25) I.e., for the ma'am'ar which, in such a case, does not keep out the sister.

(26) As a husband who is the heir of his wife.

(27) If he is a priest who may defile himself by attending on the dead bodies of certain relatives of whom a wife is one.

(28) A husband may annul the vows of his wife. v. Num. XXX. 7ff

(29) Lit., 'now'.

(30) Lit., 'a betrothed in the world', i.e., ordinary betrothal which is pentateuchally valid.

(31) But not yet married.

(32) A mourner prior to the burial of certain relatives is called onan (v. Glos.) and is subject to a number of restrictions.

(33) She also is allowed to partake of holy things.

(34) During a festival when not only priests but also Israelites and women are forbidden to attend on the corpses of those who are not their near relatives. (V. R.H. 16b). Others render. 'nor need she defile etc'. Cf. Tosaf. a.l., s.v. שומר יבמ.

(35) v. Glos.,in a case where such a document was given to her at the betrothal, prior to the marriage (v. Keth. 89b).

(36) A ma'am'ar is only a Rabbinical enactment. If Pentateuchal betrothal has not the force of a marriage in respect of the laws mentioned, how much less the Rabbinical ma'am'ar!

(37) The ma'am'ar.

(38) She being regarded as his wife even if connubial intercourse took place against her will, and should he wish to part with her, a Get will suffice without additional halizah.

(39) Deut. XXV, 5-

(40) Where there is, in addition to his claim as levir, the force of the ma'am'ar.

(41) So Bah. a.l.

(42) V. Glos. s.v. shomereth yabam.
Any one of the levirs.

In the latter case neither of the levirs is entitled to annul her vows.

Hence a levir is never entitled to the privilege of a husband in respect of the annulment of vows.

Since it is not known to which of them she is really subject, the bond between them and the widow is necessarily a weak one.

Only both together, but not one only, should be allowed to annul her vows.

In the case of a yebamah to whom a ma'amahr had been addressed.

If he did not wish to marry her.

Who holds that the father and husband jointly annul the vows of the widow to whom a ma'amahr has been addressed.

The reading is רפ"ה (sing.), not רפ"ה (plur.). How, then, could he state that two jointly annul her vows!

This proves, said R. Nahman, that no levirate bond exists even in the case of one brother.

GEMARA. The reason is because he had addressed to her a ma'amahr; had he, however, not addressed a ma'amahr to her, the stranger also would have had to be taken in levirate marriage. This proves, said R. Nahman, that no levirate bond exists even in the case of one brother.

MISHNAH. IF TWO OF THREE BROTHERS WERE MARRIED TO TWO SISTERS AND THE THIRD WAS MARRIED TO A STRANGER, AND WHEN THE BROTHER WHO WAS MARRIED TO THE STRANGER DIED, ONE OF THE SISTERS' HUSBANDS MARRIED HIS WIFE AND THEN DIED HIMSELF, THE FIRST IS EXEMPT IN THAT SHE IS HIS WIFE'S SISTER, AND THE OTHER IS EXEMPT AS HER RIVAL. IF, HOWEVER, HE HAD ONLY ADDRESSED TO HER A MA'AMAR AND DIED, THE STRANGER MUST PERFORM HALIZAH BUT MAY NOT BE TAKEN IN LEVIRATE MARRIAGE.

GEMARA. What need was there again [for the law in this Mishnah]? Surely it is the same. If there, where the wife's sister is only a rival to the stranger it has been said that the stranger is forbidden, how much more so here where the stranger is the rival to a wife's sister. -The Tanna had taught first this,\(^2\) while the other\(^2\) was regarded by him as a permissible case, and so he permitted her.\(^3\) Later, however, he came to regard it as a case that was to be forbidden;\(^4\) and, as it was dear to him,\(^5\) he placed it first; while the other Mishnah\(^6\) was allowed to stand in its original form.\(^7\)

MISHNAH. IF TWO OF THREE BROTHERS WERE MARRIED TO TWO SISTERS AND THE THIRD WAS MARRIED TO A STRANGER, AND WHEN ONE OF THE SISTERS’ HUSBANDS DIED THE BROTHE R WHO WAS MARRIED TO THE STRANGER MARRIED HIS WIFE, AND THEN THE WIFE OF THE SECOND BROTHER DIED, AND AFTERWARDS THE BROTHE R WHO WAS MARRIED TO THE STRANGER DIED ALSO, BEHOLD, SHE IS FORBIDDEN TO HIM\(^8\) FOR ALL TIME, SINCE SHE WAS FORBIDDEN TO HIM FOR ONE MOMENT.\(^9\)

GEMARA. Rab Judah said in the name of Rab: Any yibamah to whom the instruction Her husband’s brother shall go in unto her\(^10\) cannot be applied at the time she becomes subject to the levirate marriage, is indeed like the wife of a brother who has children, and is consequently forbidden.\(^11\) What new thing does he\(^12\) teach us? Surely we have learned, SHE IS FORBIDDEN TO HIM FOR ALL TIME SINCE SHE WAS FORBIDDEN TO HIM FOR ONE MOMENT! — It might have been assumed that this\(^13\) applies only to the case where she\(^14\) was not suitable for him\(^15\) at all during the period of her first subjection;\(^16\) but that where she\(^17\) was at all suitable for him\(^18\) during her first subjection\(^19\) it might have been assumed that she\(^20\) should be permitted, hence, he\(^21\) taught us [that It was not so].

But we have learned this also: If two brothers were married to two sisters, and one of the brothers died and afterwards the wife of the second brother died, behold, she\(^22\) is forbidden to him for all time, since she was forbidden to him for one moment!\(^23\) — It might have been assumed [that this law is applicable] only there because she was completely forced out of that house;\(^24\) but here, where she was not entirely forced out of that house,\(^25\) it might have been said that as she is suitable for the brother who married the stranger she is also suitable for the other brother,\(^26\) hence he\(^27\) taught us [that she was not].

MISHNAH. IF TWO OF THREE BROTHERS WERE MARRIED TO TWO SISTERS AND THE THIRD WAS MARRIED TO A STRANGER, AND ONE OF THE SISTERS’ HUSBANDS DIVORCED HIS WIFE, AND WHEN THE BROTHE R WHO WAS MARRIED TO THE STRANGER DIED HE WHO HAD DIVORCED HIS WIFE MARRIED HER AND THEN DIED HIMSELF- THIS IS A CASE CONCERNING WHICH IT WAS SAID: AND IF ANY OF THESE DIED OR WERE DIVORCED. THEIR RIVALS ARE PERMITTED.\(^28\) GEMARA. The reason\(^29\) is because he\(^30\) had divorced [his wife first] and [his brother]\(^31\) died afterwards,\(^32\) but [if the other]\(^33\) had died [first] and he\(^34\) divorced [his wife] afterwards,\(^35\) she\(^36\) is forbidden.\(^37\) Said R. Ashi: This proves that a levirate bond exists,\(^38\) even where two brothers are involved.\(^39\)

But as to R. Ashi’s [inference] does not that of R. Nahman\(^40\) present a difficulty? — R. Ashi can answer you: The same law, that the stranger is to perform the halizah and that she is not to be taken in levirate marriage is applicable\(^41\) even to the case where no ma’amor had been addressed; and the only reason why ma’amor was at all mentioned\(^42\) was in order to exclude the ruling of Beth Shammai. Since they maintain that a ma’amor constitutes

---

(1) Widow, who is now also the widow of the second deceased brother.
(2) From levirate marriage and halizah with the surviving brother.
(3) The first widow.
(4) With the surviving brother.
(5) Why the stranger is not to be taken in levirate marriage.
Since our Mishnah makes the stranger's exemption dependent on the ma'amor, whereby she became the first widow's rival.

Despite the fact that the first widow is also subjected to the levir for the levirate marriage.

Between the widow of the deceased brother and the levirs.

As here, where only one brother could possibly marry her, she being forbidden to the other as his wife's sister. Even in such a case the mere subjection of the widow to the levir (to be taken in levirate marriage or to perform the halizah) does not constitute a levirate bond to attach her to him as if she had been his actual wife.

Wife of the second deceased brother.

From marriage and halizah with the surviving brother.

The stranger, whom the second deceased brother had taken in levirate marriage.

To the stranger.

With the surviving brother.

As the law implied in the previous Mishnah.

In the previous Mishnah.

Who was the first and proper wife.

To be taken in levirate marriage.

Should the stranger be forbidden to be taken in levirate marriage.

Who was the first and proper wife.

The second Mishnah.

Mishnah, which is now the first.

I.e., allowed the stranger to be taken in levirate marriage by the surviving brother, because the prohibition that arose from her husband's 'wife's sister' was imposed upon her later, after she had been lawfully married to her husband and after a period during which, had he died without issue, she would have been permitted to be taken in levirate marriage by his brother. It was not the Tanna's Intention, therefore, to include this case in a Mishnah at all.

Since her rival was, after all, the surviving brother's wife's sister.

Owing to its novelty.

The second Mishnah.

Lit., 'did not move from its place'. though in the light of the newly added Mishnah it had obviously become superfluous.

The wife of the first brother.

The surviving brother.

Lit., 'hour'. When her husband died she was forbidden to his brother who was married to her sister as his 'wife's sister'. This prohibition remains permanently in force and is not removed even when her sister subsequently dies and she is no longer the levir's 'wife's sister'.

Deut. XXV, 5'

Even later when the cause of the prohibition is removed. Cf. our Mishnah.

Rab.

The law in our Mishnah.

The widow of the first brother.

The brother who was married to the second sister.

I.e., if her sister, the wife of the second brother, did not die until after she had married the brother whose wife was the stranger.

The widow of the first brother.

The brother who was married to the second sister.

If her sister died before she (the first widow) had married the other brother.

Rah.

The widow of the first brother.

Infra 32a.

When her husband died and she was not permitted to marry his only surviving brother whose wife's sister she was, her connection with her husband's family had been completely severed, she remaining free to marry any stranger.

Since she was still under the obligation of marrying the third brother who was married to the stranger.

Thanks to the levirate bond with a member of her deceased husband's family.
Who was the husband of her sister, now that the latter is dead.

The stranger who was taken in levirate marriage was never the rival of the sister of the wife of the surviving brother, since the sister had been divorced before the levirate marriage with the stranger had taken place.

Why the stranger who was taken in levirate marriage by one of the husbands of the sisters is permitted to the last surviving brother.

The brother who divorced his wife.

The first husband of the stranger.

So that the stranger was not even for one moment the rival of one of the sisters, either through marriage or through the levirate bond of subjection.

In which case the stranger came for a certain period under the levirate bond in respect of the husbands of the two sisters.

The stranger.

To marry the last surviving brother. Since she was, for a period at least, the rival of one of the sisters, through the levirate bond, she may never be married to the husband of that sister's sister (being forbidden to him as the rival of his wife's sister) even if the sister whose rival she was had been subsequently divorced and ceased to be her rival.

Between the widow of a deceased childless brother and the levirs.

Since, in the case under discussion, the widow whose husband died before one of the sisters had been divorced was subject to two levirs and is, nevertheless, regarded as the rival of the divorced sister, in consequence of which she is forbidden to the last surviving brother.

From a Mishnah supra, that no levirate bond exists even in the case of one brother.

Contrary to R. Nahman's inference.

In that Mishnah.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 30b

a perfect kinyan, he taught us that [the halachah is] not in accordance with Beth Shammai.

But then as to R. Nahman's [inference] does not that of R. Ashi present a difficulty? And should you reply that the same law, that her rival is permitted, is also applicable to the case where he died first and the other brother divorced his wife afterwards, what [it could be objected] would THIS IS exclude? It might exclude the case where he married her first and then divorced his wife. This might be a satisfactory explanation if he holds the view of R. Jeremiah who said, ‘Break it up: He who taught the one did not teach the other,’ [for, if this is so] one Tanna may hold the opinion that it is death that causes the subjection while the other might be of the opinion that it is the original marriage that causes the subjection, and THIS IS would thus exclude the case where he first married and then divorced; if, however, he is of the same opinion as Raba who said, ‘Both statements may in fact represent the views of one Tanna, it being a case of "this and there is no need to state that"’, what does THIS IS exclude? — He has no alternative but to adopt the view of R. Jeremiah.

And according to Raba, the explanation would be satisfactory if he held the View of R. Ashi, for then, THIS IS would exclude the case of one who died without first divorcing his wife; if, however, he holds the same view as R. Nahman, what would THIS IS exclude? - He has no alternative but to accept the view of R. Ashi. MISHNAH. [IF IN THE CASE OF ANY ONE OF ALL THESE THE BETROTHAL OR DIVORCE WAS IN DOUBT, BEHOLD, THESE RIVALS MUST PERFORM THE HALIZAH BUT MAY NOT BE TAKEN IN LEVIRATE MARRIAGE. WHAT IS MEANT BY DOUBTFUL BETROTHAL? IF WHEN HE THREW TO HER A TOKEN OF BETROTHAL? IF THEN, THIS IS WOULD EXCLUDE THE CASE OF ONE WHO DIED WITHOUT FIRST DIVORCING HIS WIFE; IF, HOWEVER, HE HOLDS THE SAME VIEW AS R. NAHMAN, WHAT WOULD THIS IS EXCLUDE? - HE HAS NO ALTERNATIVE BUT TO ACCEPT THE VIEW OF R. ASHI. MISHNAH. [IF IN THE CASE OF ANY ONE OF ALL THESE THE BETROTHAL OR DIVORCE WAS IN DOUBT, BEHOLD, THESE RIVALS MUST PERFORM THE HALIZAH BUT MAY NOT BE TAKEN IN LEVIRATE MARRIAGE. WHAT IS MEANT BY DOUBTFUL BETROTHAL? IF WHEN HE THREW TO HER A TOKEN OF BETROTHAL? IT WAS UNCERTAIN WHETHER IT FELL NEARER TO HIM OR NEARER TO HER, THIS IS A CASE OF DOUBTFUL BETROTHAL. DOUBTFUL DIVORCE? IF HE WROTE A LETTER OF DIVORCE IN HIS OWN HANDWRITING AND IT BORE NO SIGNATURES OF WITNESSES, OR IF IT BORE SIGNATURES BUT NO DATE, OR IF IT BORE A DATE BUT THE SIGNATURE OF ONLY ONE WITNESS, THIS IS A CASE OF DOUBTFUL DIVORCE.

GEMARA. In the case of divorce, however, It is not stated IT WAS UNCERTAIN WHETHER IT FELL NEARER TO HIM OR NEARER TO HER; what is the reason?\(^32\) Rabbah replied: This woman\(^33\) is in a state of permissibility to all men;\(^34\) would you forbid her [marriage] because of a doubt?\(^35\) You must not forbid her because of a doubt!\(^36\) Said Abaye to him: If so, let us also in the matter of betrothal say: This woman\(^37\) is in a state of permissibility to the levir;\(^38\) would you forbid her because of a doubt? You must not forbid her because of a doubt! — There\(^40\) [it leads] to a restriction.\(^41\) But it is a restriction which may lead to a relaxation! For, sometimes, he would betroth her sister\(^42\) by betrothal that was not uncertain, or it might occur that another man would betroth her also by a betrothal that was not uncertain and, as the Master has forbidden her rival to be taken in levirate marriage, it would be assumed that the betrothal of the first\(^43\) was valid and that that of the latter was not!\(^44\)

Where it is not in his own handwriting.

Why should not even halizah on the part of the rival, be required in such a case?

The rival.

Lit., 'to the market', i.e., the public. The rival of a forbidden relative, not being subject to levirate marriage or halizah, is permitted to marry any one she desires.

The possibility that the forbidden relative's divorce was valid.

The doubt here being whether the forbidden relative was divorced at all. In the three cases of divorce mentioned in our Mishnah, however, the prohibition is not due to doubtful divorce but to a defect or an irregularity in the document itself.

The rival.

Had her husband died childless before he married the forbidden relative.

To be taken in levirate marriage.

The case of doubtful betrothal.

The prohibition to marry the levir.

The sister of the one whose betrothal was doubtful.

Since her rival is forbidden.

Because, in the first case, he betrothed his wife's sister; and, in the second, he betrothed a married woman. In the latter case, the betrothal being regarded as invalid, the woman might illegally marry another man. In the former case, should he die without issue, his maternal brother might illegally marry her, believing her never to have been the wife of his brother.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 31a

— Since she is required to perform halizah it is sufficiently known that it is a mere restriction. If so, let him, in the case of divorce also, state it, and require her to perform halizah, and it will be sufficiently known that it was a mere restriction! — Were you to say that she was to perform halizah it might also be assumed that she may be taken in levirate marriage. But here also, were you to say that she is to perform halizah, she might also be taken in levirate marriage! — Well, let her be taken in levirate marriage and it will not matter at all since thereby she only retains her former status.

Abaye raised the following objection against him: If the house collapsed upon him and upon his brother's daughter, and it is not known which of them had died first, her rival must perform halizah but may not contract the levirate marriage. But why? Here also it may be said, 'This woman finds herself in the status of permissibility to all, would you forbid her [marriage on the basis] of a doubt? You must not forbid her [on the basis] of a doubt!' And should you suggest that here also the prohibition is due to a restriction, [it may be retorted that] it is a restriction which may result in a relaxation, for should you say that she is to perform the halizah she might also be taken in levirate marriage! — In respect of divorce which is of frequent occurrence the Rabbis enacted a preventive measure, in respect of the collapse of a house which is not of frequent occurrence the Rabbis did not enact any preventive measure. Or else: In the case of divorce, where the forbidden relative is demonstrably alive, were her rival to be required to perform halizah, it might have been thought that the Rabbis had ascertained that the letter of divorce was a valid document, and the rival might, therefore, be taken in levirate marriage. In the case of a house that has collapsed, however, could the Rabbis have ascertained [who was first killed] in the ruin?

Have we not learned a similar law in the case of divorce? Surely we learned: If she stood in a public domain, and he threw it to her, she is divorced if it fell nearer to her; but if nearer to him she is not divorced. If it was equidistant, she is divorced and not divorced. And when it was asked, ‘What is the practical effect of this’,²⁵ [the reply was] that if he was a priest she is forbidden to him;²⁶ and if she is a forbidden relative, her rival must perform the halizah.²⁷ We do not say, however, that were you to rule that she must perform halizah she might also be taken in levirate marriage!²⁸—Concerning this statement, surely, it was said: Both Rabbah and R. Joseph maintain that here we are dealing with two groups of witnesses, one of which declare that it²³ was nearer to her and the other declares that it²³ was nearer to him, which creates a doubt involving a Pentateuchal [prohibition] —²⁹ Our Mishnah, however, speaks of one group.³⁰ where the doubt involved is only Rabbinical.³¹

Whence is it proved that our Mishnah speaks of one group? — On analogy with betrothal:³² As in betrothal only one group is involved so also in divorce³³ one group only could be involved. Whence is it known that in betrothal itself only one group is involved? Is it not possible that it involves two groups of witnesses! — If two groups of witnesses had been involved, she would have been allowed to contract the levirate marriage, and no wrong would have been done.³⁴ Witnesses stand and declare that it³⁵ was nearer to her,³⁶ and you say that she may be taken in levirate marriage and no wrong will be done³⁷ Furthermore, even where two groups of witnesses are involved the doubt is only Rabbinical, since it might be said ‘Put one pair against the other and let the woman retain her original status’!²⁸ This indeed is similar to [the incident with] the estate of a certain lunatic. For a certain lunatic once sold some property, and a pair of witnesses came and declared that he had affected the sale while in a sound state of mind, and another pair came and declared that the sale was affected while he was in a state of lunacy. And R. Ashi said: Put two against two Mishnah).

(14) Infra 67b. Since the man was killed first and the rival remained forbidden to the levir as the rival of his daughter.
(15) v. supra p. 192, n. 12.
(16) That wherever the divorce is doubtful the rival must not perform halizah in order that this performance might not lead also to levirate marriage.
(17) It may be replied.
(18) The scholars or experts who dealt with the case.
(19) And the forbidden relative was no more the wife of the deceased.
(20) It would be obvious, therefore, that the requirement of halizah was a mere restriction.
(21) The wife.
(22) The husband.
(23) The letter of divorce.
(24) Lit., ‘half on half’.
(25) The statement that she is divorced and not divorced.
(26) A priest must not marry or continue to live with a divorced woman.
Which shews that even in the case of divorce no preventive measure has been enacted.

As two witnesses declare that the letter of divorce was nearer to the woman, and as evidence of two witnesses is Pentateuchally valid, the possibility that her rival is no more the rival of a forbidden relative must be taken into consideration, and she cannot be permitted to marry a stranger without previous halizah with the levir.

One witness of which is contradicting the other. Hence, in the matter of betrothal, where the rival enjoyed the status of permissibility to the levir, the law that halizah is required in the case of contradictory evidence could well be applied, since she cannot be deprived of her status by the evidence of the single witness who states that the token of betrothal was nearer to her. In the case of divorce, however, where the rival has the status of permissibility to marry any stranger, the law that halizah is required in the case of contradictory evidence of two single witnesses could not be applied. since the evidence of one witness is not sufficient to deprive her of that right, particularly as it can also be claimed that were she required to perform halizah she might be taken in levirate marriage also.

Divorce and betrothal being mentioned side by side in this Mishnah. Had it been included in our Mishnah. Since the evidence of one pair would have been sufficient to confirm the rival in her status of permissibility to the levir. Hence, as levirate marriage was forbidden it cannot be a case of two groups of witnesses. The token of betrothal. Thus presenting a Pentateuchal doubt (cf. supra p. 195. n. 9). This, surely, might result in the breach of a Pentateuchal law! Why, then, even in the case of divorce itself, when the two groups of witnesses cancel each other, should the rival, who was hitherto in a state of permissibility to marry anyone, be required to perform halizah!

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 31b

and let the land remain in the possession of the lunatic! — Rather, said Abaye. Its friend telleth concerning it: that which was taught in connection with betrothal is also to be applied to divorce, and what was taught in connection with divorce is also to be applied to betrothal.

 Said Raba to him: If its friend telleth concerning it what was the object of stating THIS IS? -Rather, said Raba, whatever is applicable to betrothal is also to be applied to divorce, but certain points are applicable to divorce, which cannot be applied to betrothal. And THIS IS which was mentioned in the case of divorce is not to be taken literally. as THIS IS was used in connection with betrothal only because it was also used in connection with divorce.

What was THIS IS mentioned in connection with betrothal meant to exclude? — To exclude the question of date which is inapplicable to betrothal. And wherefore was no date ordained to be entered in [documents of] betrothal? This may well be satisfactorily explained according to him who holds [that the date is required In a letter of divorce] on account of the usufruct, since a betrothed woman has no [need to reclaim] usufruct. According to him, however, who holds [that it was ordained] on account of one's sister's daughter, the insertion of a date should have been ordained [in the case of betrothal also] — Since some men betroth with money and others betroth with a document the Rabbis did not ordain the inclusion of a date.

 Said R. Aha son of R. Joseph to R. Ashi: What about the case of a slave of whom some acquire possession by means of money and others by means of a deed, yet the inclusion of a date has nevertheless been ordained by the Rabbis! — In that case acquisition is generally by means of a deed; here, it is generally by means of money. If you prefer I might say: Because it is impossible. For how should one proceed? Were it to be left with her, she might erase it. Were it to be left with him, it might happen that the betrothed might be his sister's daughter and he would shield her. Were it to be left with the witnesses-well, if they remember they could come and tender their evidence; and if they do not, they may sometimes consult the document and then come and tender evidence, while the All Merciful said, ‘out of their mouth’\(^{28}\) but not out of their writing. If so, let the same argument\(^{29}\) be applied to divorce also! — There,\(^{30}\) it\(^{31}\) comes to save her,\(^{32}\) here,\(^{33}\) it\(^{31}\) comes to condemn her.\(^{34}\)

MISHNAH. IN THE CASE WHERE THREE BROTHERS WERE MARRIED TO THREE WOMEN WHO WERE STRANGERS [TO ONE ANOTHER]. AND ONE OF THEM HAVING DIED\(^{35}\) THE SECOND BROTHER ADDRESSED TO HER\(^{36}\) A MA’AMAR\(^{37}\) AND DIED, BEHOLD, THESE\(^{38}\) MUST PERFORM HALIZAH\(^{39}\) BUT MAY NOT BE TAKEN IN LEVIRATE MARRIAGE; FOR IT IS SAID. AND ONE OF THEM DIED [ETC.] HER HUSBAND’S BROTHER SHALL GO IN UNTO HER.\(^{40}\) ONLY SHE WHO IS BOUND TO ONE LEVIR\(^{41}\) BUT NOT SHE WHO IS BOUND TO TWO LEVIRS.\(^{42}\) R. SIMEON SAID: HE MAY TAKE IN LEVIRATE MARRIAGE WHICHEVER OF THESE HE WISHES\(^{43}\) AND THEN PARTICIPATE IN THE HALIZAH WITH THE OTHER.\(^{44}\)

GEMARA. If, however, the levirate bond with two levirs\(^{45}\) is Pentateuchal,\(^{46}\) even halizah should not be required! — But it\(^{47}\) is only Rabbinical,\(^{48}\) a preventive measure having been enacted against the possible assumption that two sisters-in-law coming from the same house\(^{49}\) may both be taken in levirate marriage. Then let one be taken in levirate marriage and the other be required to perform halizah! — A preventive measure has been enacted against the possible assumption that one house was partially built

(30) In the case of divorce.

(31) The document.

(32) Unless she produced it, were she ever to be accused of adultery. she would certainly be condemned since she was known as a married woman. The letter of divorce being her sole protection, it being the sole proof that her married state had ended, she should in her own interest carefully preserve it intact for fear that should she tamper with it, the deed may be declared invalid. (Cf. Tosaf. s.v. הַלִּזָּה, a.l.).

(33) The case of betrothal.

(34) The document is proof that she had passed out of her unmarried state and that henceforward she is forbidden to all men except her betrothed. She (or any friend of hers) is not anxious to preserve such a document; and, should an accusation of adultery ever be brought against her, she could either destroy it or erase the date and claim her previously confirmed status of an unmarried woman. Hence no date was ordained to be included.

(43) v. supra 19a. If the ma'am'ar has the validity of marriage, the surviving levir is marrying his second brother's wife, and if a ma'am'ar is invalid he is marrying either the wife of his first brother or the wife of the second.

(44) The levirate marriage of the one cannot exempt the other from the halizah, since it is possible that a ma'am'ar is invalid and the two widows are consequently of different brothers. He may not marry the two, since a ma'am'ar may be valid and he would thus be marrying two widows of the same brother.

and partially pulled down. — Well, let the assumption be made! Had he first contracted the levirate marriage and then participated in the halizah, no objection could be raised — The preventive measure, however, has been enacted against the possibility of his participating in the halizah first and contracting the levirate marriage afterwards and thus placing himself under the prohibition of That doth not build up, the All Merciful having said, ‘Since he had not built he must never again build’.

Raba said: If he gave a letter of divorce in respect of his ma'amor, her rival is permitted; but she herself is forbidden, because she might be mistaken for one who is the holder of a letter of divorce. Others say that Raba said: If he gave a letter of divorce in respect of his ma'amor even she herself becomes permitted. What is the reason? — Because what he has done to her he has taken back.

MISHNAH. IF TWO BROTHERS WERE MARRIED TO TWO SISTERS, AND ONE OF THE BROTHERS DIED, AND AFTERWARDS THE WIFE OF THE SECOND BROTHER DIED, BEHOLD, SHE IS FORBIDDEN TO HIM FOREVER, SINCE SHE WAS FORBIDDEN TO HIM FOR ONE MOMENT.

GEMARA. Is not this obvious? If there, where she was not entirely excluded from that house it has been said, ‘No’, how much more so here where the widow is completely excluded from that house! - The Tanna had taught first this, while the other was regarded by him as a permissible case, and so he permitted it — Later, however, he came to regard it as a case that was to be forbidden; and, as it was dear to him he placed it first; while our Mishnah was allowed to remain in its original form.

Our Rabbis learned: If he had intercourse with her, he is guilty on account of both ‘his brother's wife’ and ‘his wife's sister’; so R. Jose. R. Simeon said: He is guilty on account of ‘his brother's wife’ only. But, surely, it was taught that R. Simeon said: He is guilty on account of ‘his wife's sister’ only! — This is no difficulty: There, it is a case where the surviving brother had married first and the deceased had married afterwards; here it is a case where the deceased had married first and the surviving brother afterwards. As to R. Simeon, in the case where the deceased had married first and the surviving brother married afterwards, let her, since the prohibition of wife's sister cannot take effect, be permitted even to contract the levirate marriage! — R. Ashi replied: The prohibition of wife's sister remains suspended, and as soon as the prohibition of brother's wife is removed the prohibition of wife's sister comes into force; hence It cannot be treated as non-existent.

Does, then, R. Jose hold the view that one prohibition may be imposed upon another? Surely, it was taught: A man who committed a transgression which involves two death penalties is punished by the severer one. R. Jose said: He is to be dealt with in accordance with that prohibition which came into force first. And it was taught: How is one to understand R. Jose's statement that sentence must be in accordance with the prohibition which came into force first? [If the woman was first] his mother-in-law and then became also a married woman, he is to be sentenced for [an offence against] his mother-in-law; if she was first a married woman and then became his mother-in-law, he is to be sentenced for [an offence against] a married woman!
To the third surviving brother if the second also died without issue. The two widows are no longer rivals since the divorce has annulled the ma'amor, and they, being the widows of two different brothers, are now coming from two different houses.

That was given to her in respect of the levirate bond as well as of the ma'amor, v. infra 52b. Such a sister-in-law is forbidden under the prohibition of That dot h not build up (v. supra and notes 3, 4 and 5)' since in her case the levirate bond also had been severed.

V. note 6.

And she is thus subject to the third brother as the widow of the first.

The ma'amor by which he bound her he has himself annulled.

The surviving brother.

Prior to his wife's death and after the death of her husband, however short that period may have been, she was forbidden to him as his wife's sister.

The third Mishnah, on fol. 30a supra, where there were three brothers involved, two of whom were married to two sisters and one to a stranger.

The widow of the first brother.

For though she had been forbidden to the second brother, who was married to her sister, she was permitted to the third and she remained in the family.

i.e.; she has been forbidden to the second brother, after the death of the third brother who had married her, owing to the original prohibition which may have lasted one moment only. even after his wife (her sister) had died.

Our Mishnah where only two brothers are involved.

When her husband died there was not a single brother whom she was permitted to marry. What need, then, was there for our Mishnah?

v. note 1.

Since, there, she was not entirely forced out of the family.

Hence he did not consider it necessary to enunciate It 10 a Mishnah.

As, after all, in the case of the second brother, the levirate marriage was for a time forbidden to her.

Owing to its novelty and its wider range.

Lit. — 'did not move from its place'. Though in the presence of the other Mishnah it is indeed superfluous.

The levir.

The widow (v. our Mishnah), while his wife was still alive.

Since she is exempt from the levirate marriage she is forbidden to the levir as any widow of a brother who has issue.

So that if the offence was committed unwittingly he is liable to bring two sin.offerings.

One of the sisters; and thus the prohibition of 'wife's sister' came into force first.

The other sister. The added prohibition of 'brother's wife' could not take effect where one prohibition was already in force.

Cf. previous two notes mutatis mutandis.

lit., 'to split', hence removed'.

Lit., 'it is not removed'. The levirate marriage is consequently forbidden.

Intercourse, for instance, with a mother-in.law (which is punishable by burning) who was at the time a married woman (the penalty for which Is strangulation).

Tosef. Sanh. XII, Sanh. 81a.

Having been a widow or divorcee at the time of his marriage.

Though the penalty in this case (strangulation) is lighter than that for an offence against a mother-in-law (burning).

This proves that one prohibition may not be imposed upon another. Had it been otherwise, the severer penalty should have been inflicted though the prohibition which had caused it came into force later.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 32b

— R. Abbahu replied: R. Jose admits where the latter prohibition is of a wider range.

This is satisfactory in the case where the surviving brother had married first and the deceased had married afterwards, since the prohibition. having been extended in the case of the brothers, had also been extended in his own case. What extension of the prohibition is there, however, where the deceased had married first and the surviving brother had married afterwards? And were you to reply: Because thereby he is forbidden to marry all the sisters, [it may be retorted that] such is only a comprehensive prohibition!

The fact is, said Raba, he is deemed to have committed two offences, but is liable for one only.

Similarly when Rabin came he stated in the name of R. Johanan: The offender is deemed to have committed two offences, but he is only liable for one. What practical difference does this make? That he must be buried among confirmed sinners.

This is a question on which opinions differ. For It was stated: A common man who performed some Temple service on the Sabbath, is. R. Hiyya said, liable for two offences. Bar Kappara said: He is only liable for one. R. Hiyya jumped up and took an oath, ‘By the Temple’, [he exclaimed]. ‘so have I heard from Rabbi: two’! Bar Kappara jumped up and took an oath, ‘By the Temple. thus have I heard from Rabbi: one’! R. Hiyya began to argue the point thus: Work on the Sabbath was forbidden to all [Israelites,] and when it was permitted in the [Sanctuary], it was permitted to the priests, hence it was permitted to the priests only, but not to common men. Here, therefore, is involved the offence of Temple service by a common man, and that of the desecration of the Sabbath. Bar Kappara began to argue his point thus: Work on the Sabbath was forbidden to all [Israelites], but when it was permitted in the Sanctuary, it was permitted [to all], hence only the offence of Temple service by a common man is here involved.

A priest having a blemish who performed [some Temple] services while unclean is. R. Hiyya said, guilty of two offences. Bar Kappara said: He is guilty of one offence only. R. Hiyya jumped up and took an oath, ‘By the Temple. thus have I heard from Rabbi: two’! Bar Kappara jumped up and took an oath, ‘By the Temple. thus have I heard from Rabbi: one’! R. Hiyya began to reason: [Temple service during one’s] uncleanness was forbidden to all; and when it was permitted in the Sanctuary, it was permitted to priests who had no blemish — Hence it must have been permitted only to priests who had no blemish, but not to those who had. Consequently. both the offence of service being done by one with a blemish and that of service during one’s uncleanness are here involved. Bar Kappara began to reason thus: [Temple service during] uncleanness was forbidden to all. When it was permitted at the Sanctuary, was [universally] permitted. Consequently. only one offence, that of service by one who had a blemish, is involved.

A common man who ate melikah is. R. Hiyya said, guilty of two offences. Bar Kappara said: He is guilty only of one. R. Hiyya jumped up and took an oath, ‘By the Temple. thus have I heard from Rabbi: two’! Bar Kappara jumped up and took an oath, ‘By the Temple. thus have I heard from Rabbi: one’! R. Hiyya began to reason thus: Nebelah was forbidden to all; and when it was permitted in the Sanctuary, it was permitted in the case of the priests. Hence it must be permitted to priests only and not to common men. Consequently. both the offence of consumption by a common man, and that of melikah are here involved. Bar Kappara began to reason: Nebelah was forbidden to all; and when it was permitted in the Sanctuary it was [universally] permitted — Consequently. only the offence due to consumption by a common man is here involved.

(1) That one prohibition may be imposed upon another.
(2) ‘א’nit., ‘a prohibition which adds’, i.e., one which causes an object (or a person) to be forbidden to others to whom it was not previously forbidden. Hence he admits the imposition of the prohibition of ‘brother’s wife’ upon that of ‘wife’s sister’, even where the latter prohibition was already in force, because the former, unlike the latter, is applicable not only to him alone but to the other brothers also. In the case, however, of a married woman who became... his mother-in-law where the first prohibition was of a wider range (the woman being forbidden to all men except her husband) and the later one (forbidden to him only) of a restricted range, the second prohibition cannot be imposed upon the first. The reason why in the case of a mother-in-law who became a married woman the sentence is to be that for an offence against a mother-in-law is not because the latter (which is of a wider range) cannot be imposed upon the former, but because wherever two penalties are to be inflicted the severer one (burning) supersedes the lighter one (strangulation).

(3) One of the sisters.
(4) The other sister.
(6) Bringing into force the prohibition of brother's wife which is applicable to all brothers.
(7) Adding the prohibition of wife's sister which, being applicable to himself only, is of a more restricted range, and cannot consequently be imposed on that of brother's wife, which preceded it.
(8) By marrying the other sister.
(9) While before this marriage the widow only was forbidden.
(10) lit., 'a prohibition which includes'. The additional prohibition includes the widow in the same manner only as it does the other sisters but, unlike an issur mosif (the prohibition of the wider range, v. supra p. 202, n. 9), it does not place any additional restriction as far as the widow herself is concerned upon any other men.
(11) Lit., 'I bring upon him'.
(12) I.e., in this sense only is R. Jose's statement, that he is guilty of two offences (supra 32a), to be understood.
(13) Because R. Jose, in fact, does not admit the imposition of one prohibition upon another.
(14) From Palestine to Babylon. (13) The fact that he is theoretically guilty of two offences.
(15) The Beth din had at its disposal two burial places, and offenders who were executed or died were buried in the one or the other according to the degree of their respective offences. (V. Sanh. 46a). The reference here will consequently be to an intentional transgression.
(16) Whether one act involving two transgressions is deemed to be one offence or two offences.
(17) lit., 'a stranger', I.e., a non-priest.
(18) This is explained infra.
(19) Lit., 'the (Temple) service'.
(20) R. Judah the Prince, compiler of the Mishnah.
(21) Such as that connected with the rites of a congregational offering which may be performed in certain circumstances by priests (v. Yoma 6b). even when they are unclean, provided they are physically fit.
(22) Cf. previous note.
(23) v. p. 204, n’ 7.
(24) Even to a priest afflicted with a blemish.
(25) lit., 'to pinch'), applied to the meat, of a fowl whose head was 'pinched off', in accordance with Lev. I, 15.
(26) ‘a corpse’. ‘carrion’, applied also to animals that have not been ritually slaughtered and the consumption of which is forbidden.
(27) Melikah being permitted to the priests.
(28) Of sacrificial meat.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 33a

What is the point at issue between them? R. Jose's view with regard to a comprehensive prohibition. R. Hiiyya is of the opinion that in the case of a comprehensive prohibition R. Jose deems the transgressor guilty of two offences, while Bar Kappara is of the opinion that he deems him guilty of one offence only. But what comprehensive prohibition is here involved? In the case of a common man this may well be understood, since at first he was permitted to do ordinary work though forbidden to perform the Temple service, and when Sabbath came in, as he was now forbidden to do any other work so he was also forbidden to perform the Temple service. [Similarly with a priest] who had a blemish, since he was at first permitted to eat [of sacrificial meat] though forbidden to perform the Temple service, now that he became defiled, as he was forbidden to eat of sacrificial meat\(^{13}\) so he was also forbidden to perform the Temple service.\(^{14}\) Mehhah, however, is only an illustration\(^{15}\) of prohibitions that set in simultaneously\(^{16}\) but not of a comprehensive prohibition!\(^{17}\) -Rather, the point at issue between them\(^{18}\) is that of simultaneous prohibitions’ and R. Jose's view\(^{19}\) regarding them. R. Hiyya is of the opinion that in the case of simultaneous prohibitions R. Jose deems the transgressor guilty of two offences,\(^{20}\) while Bar Kappara is of the opinion that he deems him guilty of one offence only.\(^{21}\) But how are here simultaneous prohibitions possible?\(^{22}\) — In the case of a common man who performed the Temple service on the Sabbath, when, for instance, he grew two hairs\(^{23}\) on the Sabbath, so that the prohibitions of Temple service by a common man and of work on the Sabbath have simultaneously arisen.\(^{24}\) In the case of a priest who had a blemish, also, when, for instance, he grew two hairs,\(^{23}\) while he was unclean, so that [his disability as] a man with a blemish and his uncleanness\(^{25}\) have simultaneously arisen.\(^{26}\) Or else, if a man cut his finger with an unclean knife.\(^{27}\)

Now according to [the statement of] R. Hiyya it is quite possible to explain\(^{28}\) that he\(^{29}\) was taught\(^{30}\) in accordance with the view of R. Jose, and that Bar Kappara was taught in accordance with the view of R. Simeon.\(^{31}\) According to [the statement of] Bar Kappara, however,\(^{32}\) did R. Hiyya swear falsely?\(^{33}\) -Rather, the question at issue between them\(^{34}\) is that of simultaneous prohibitions, and the view of R. Simeon\(^{35}\) on the subject.

One can well understand why R. Hiyya took an oath. He did it in order to weaken the force\(^{36}\) of R. Simeon's view.\(^{37}\) What need, however, was there for Bar Kappara to take an oath? — This is a difficulty.

Now according to [the statement of] Bar Kappara, it is possible to explain\(^{38}\) that when Rabbi taught him he was enunciating the opinion of R. Simeon,\(^{39}\) and that when he taught R. Hiyya he was enunciating the opinion of R. Jose.\(^{40}\) According to [the statement of] R. Hiyya, however,\(^{41}\) did Bar Kappara\(^{42}\) tell a lie?\(^{43}\) R. Hiyya can answer you: When Rabbi taught him, he taught him two instances\(^{45}\) only where the transgressor is exempt\(^{46}\)

(1) R. Hiyya and Bar Kappara.
(2) Who maintains supra that in certain circumstances a prohibition may be imposed upon a prohibition which is already in force.
(3) ריסור בֵּית מילא Cf. supra p. 203. n. 8.
(4) Nebelah and melikah. V. supra. no. 3 and 4.
(5) And R. Jose's statement supra that the transgressor is guilty of two offences is, according to Bar Kappara, applicable only where the surviving brother had married one of the sisters before the deceased had married the other. (V. supra p. 203. nn.1ff and relevant text). R. Simeon's statement, (supra 32a) that 'he is guilty on account of brother's wife only’, which has been interpreted as referring to the case where the deceased had married prior to the surviving brother, is according to Bar Kappara, to be deleted from the Baraitha.
(6) Who performed some Temple service on the Sabbath.
(7) That a comprehensive prohibition is involved.
(8) Before the Sabbath.
(9) Owing to Sabbath.
(10) The prohibition being ‘comprehensive’ in that it included both ordinary work and Temple service. It is not a ‘prohibition of a wider range’ since the prohibition of Temple service itself was in no way extended.
(11) Cf. supra, n. 2.
(12) Prior to his defilement.
(13) Owing to his uncleanness.
(14) The prohibition comprehending the Temple service as well as the consumption of sacrificial meat. Cf. supra. n’ 5’
(15) Lit., ‘it is found’.
(16) יִתְנַחְנֶה יָשָׁה ‘at once’, ‘at the same moment’. Before the head of the fowl was pinched off there was only the prohibition of nebelah (v. Glos.) which included also priests. The two prohibitions of nebelah and melikah as far as common men are concerned had set in simultaneously at the moment of the pinching off of the fowl's head.

(17) Since both have been simultaneous. How then could the dispute on melikah be dependent on the principle of a ‘comprehensive prohibition’?

(18) R. Hiyya and Bar Kappara.

(19) V. supra p. 205. n. 8.

(20) R. Jose's statement (supra 32a). that the transgressor is guilty of the offences of (a) brother's wife and (b) wife's sister, is taken to refer to the case where the two brothers appointed an agent to betroth for them the two sisters, who in turn appointed an agent to act on their behalf. At the moment the agents carried out their mission both prohibitions had set in.

(21) Cf. supra p. 205, n. 11.

(22) As has been shewn, the instances mentioned, with the exception of melikah, are ‘comprehensive prohibitions!’

(23) The marks of puberty.

(24) In this particular case, since prior to the manifestation of the marks of puberty he was considered a minor, and not subject to legal penalties.

(25) i.e., his liability to penalties for performing Temple service under such conditions.

(26) Cf. note 4, mutatis mutandis.

(27) Which act caused both the blemish and the uncleanness to set in at the very same Instant.

(28) To reconcile the contradictory statements made by R. Hiyya and Bar Kappara both in the name of Rabbi.

(29) R. Hiyya.

(30) By Rabbi. Lit., 'when he taught him (it was)'.

(31) And that Bar Kappara may have misunderstood Rabbi to give him the opinion of R. Jose.

(32) Who asserts that Rabbi recognizes one offence only according to R. Jose.

(33) If R. Jose allows the lighter punishment, how much more so R. Simeon. If R. Hiyya. then, made the statement that Rabbi taught him that a double offence had been committed he could not have spoken the truth since according to Bar Kappara no authority ever held such a view.

(34) R. Hiyya and Bar Kappara.

(35) R. Hiyya maintains that R. Simeon subjected the transgression to one offence only in the case of a ‘comprehensive prohibition’; but that in a ‘simultaneous prohibition’ he admits, like R. Jose, a double offence. Bar Kappara, on the other hand, maintains that R. Simeon disagrees with R. Jose even in regard to simultaneous prohibitions, always admitting one offence only.

(36) By his oath he affirmed that R. Simeon is in favour of the lighter course only in the case of a ‘comprehensive prohibition’ but not in that of ‘simultaneous prohibitions’.

(37) Which is known to favour the lighter penalty.

(38) I.e., to reconcile the contradictory statements. v. supra, p. 205. n. 8.

(39) Favouring the lighter penalty.

(40) Who imposes the heavier penalty; but R. Hiyya mistook him to be reporting R. Simeon and thus the discrepancy arose.

(41) Who submitted that the heavier penalty was imposed even by R. Simeon, much more so by R. Jose.

(42) Who submitted that Rabbi taught him that the lighter penalty only was to be imposed.

(43) He could not have spoken the truth if R. Hiyya's report was at all correct. v. note 6.

(44) Bar Kappara did not tell a lie.

(45) The first two—of a non-priest who performed the Temple service on the Sabbath and that of a priest who had a blemish and performed the Temple service while he was unclean.

(46) From one of the penalties.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 33b

. and [thereby he, in fact.] taught him the law of comprehensive prohibition¹ in accordance with the view of R. Simeon. Bar Kappara. however, considered the case of a common man who ate melikah and, as it seemed to be similar to the others, he treated it like the others.² When, later, he examined it³ and found it to be possible only as a case of simultaneity of prohibitions. he imagined that as this one³ is a case of simultaneity so are also the others cases of simultaneity;⁴ and as the others are cases where the transgressor is exempt\(^5\) so [he assumed] is this also one in which the transgressor is exempt.\(^5\)

An objection was raised: If a common man performed some Temple service on the Sabbath, or if a priest having a blemish performed Temple service while he was levitically unclean, the offences of service by a common man and the desecration of the Sabbath or those of service by a man with a blemish and levitical uncleanness are here respectively involved. These are the words of R. Jose. R. Simeon who said: Only the offence of service by a common man or that of service by a man with a blemish respectively is here involved.\(^6\) [The case of] melikah, however, is here omitted.\(^7\) Now, on account of whom was it omitted? If it be suggested, on account of R. Jose\(^9\) [it may be retorted], if R. Jose subjects one to two penalties where the prohibition is comprehensive, how much more so when it is simultaneous. Consequently It must have been on account of R. Simeon\(^10\) who thus grants exemption only where the prohibition is comprehensive\(^14\) but imposes both penalties when the prohibitions are simultaneous — This, then, is a refutation against Bar Kappara!\(^16\) This is indeed a refutation.

‘If a common man performed some Temple service on the Sabbath’. Of what nature? If slaughtering, slaughtering is permitted by a common man.\(^17\) If reception\(^18\) or carriage.\(^19\) this involves only a mere movement.\(^20\) If burning,\(^21\) surely R. Jose said, ‘The prohibition of kindling a fire [on the Sabbath]\(^22\) was mentioned separately\(^23\) in order to [indicate that its transgression is] a prohibition only’\(^24\) — R. Aha b. Jacob replied: The slaughtering of the bullock of the High Priest ,\(^25\) and in accordance with the view of him who stated that the slaughtering of the bullock of the High priest on the Day of Atonement by a common man Is Invalid.\(^26\) If so, what reason is there for mentioning a common man? Even a common priest would have been equally forbidden!\(^27\) -What was meant was one who is a common man as far as It Is concerned.\(^31\)

R. Ashi demurred: Was any mention made of sin-offerings or of negative precepts?\(^29\) Surely, only forbidden acts were spoken of\(^30\) — The point at issue is whether he is to be buried among confirmed sinners.\(^31\)

THEY MUST BE KEPT APART\(^37\) FOR THREE MONTHS, SINCE IT IS POSSIBLE THAT THEY ARE PREGNANT.\(^38\) IF THEY WERE MINORS INCAPABLE OF BEARING CHILDREN, THEY MAY BE RESTORED\(^39\) AT ONCE. IF THEY WERE PRIESTLY WOMEN THEY ARE DISQUALIFIED FROM THE PRIESTHOOD.\(^40\)

GEMARA. THEY EXCHANGED?\(^41\) Are we discussing wicked men!\(^42\) Furthermore, [there is the difficulty] of the statement made by R. Hiyya. that sixteen sin-offerings\(^43\) are here [involved]. Is any sacrifice brought\(^46\) where the act\(^47\) was wilful?\(^48\) Rab Judah replied: Read THEY WERE EXCHANGED.\(^49\) This\(^50\) may also be proved by logical reasoning. For in the latter clause it was stated, IF THEY WERE MINORS INCAPABLE OF BEARING CHILDREN THEY MAY BE RESTORED AT ONCE. Now, if the act\(^47\) had been wilful, would [this\(^51\) have been] permitted! — This is no difficulty. The seduction of a minor is deemed to be an outrage, and an outraged woman is permitted to an Israelite.\(^42\) But, then, what of that which is stated, that THEY MUST BE KEPT
APART FOR THREE MONTHS, SINCE IT IS POSSIBLE THAT THEY ARE PREGNANT, implying that if they were not pregnant they would be permitted. Now if the act had been wilful would she be permitted! Consequently, the reading must have been THEY WERE EXCHANGED. This may be taken as proved.

(1) Though when the prohibitions in these cases should happen to be simultaneous, the double penalty would undoubtedly be imposed.
(2) Lit., ‘mixed it up with them’; as those are cases where the transgressor is exempt from one of the penalties, so’ he thought, was that of melikah.
(3) Melikah.
(4) I.e., the same law is applicable to them whether the case is that of a comprehensive prohibition or, like melikah, one of ‘simultaneous prohibitions’.
(5) From one of the penalties.
(6) Tosef. Yeb. V.
(7) Implying that there is no difference of opinion regarding the case where a common man ate of melikah.
(8) I.e., who agrees with whom in this case that it should be excluded from the dispute.
(9) I.e., that R. Jose agrees in the case of melikah with R. Simeon.
(10) Lit., ‘now’.
(11) Lit., ‘is it required (to be stated)”?
(12) Lit., ‘but (is it) not’.
(13) Who, despite his opinion that in the two cases mentioned only one penalty is involved, agrees with R. Jose that in melikah two penalties are involved.
(14) As in the two cases mentioned.
(15) As in melikah, v. supra.
(16) Who maintained supra that even in simultaneous prohibitions R. Simeon exempts from one of the penalties.
(17) Hence no prohibition of ‘service by a common man’ is here involved.
(18) Of the sacrificial blood in a basin for sprinkling purposes.
(19) Bringing the blood near the altar.
(20) ‘moving an object from place to place’; and such movement on the Sabbath is no punishable offence.
(21) Of the sacrifices.
(22) In Ex. XXXV, 3.
(23) Lit., ‘went out’.
(24) Shab. 702, Sanh. 35b, 62a, supra 6b. A ‘prohibition’, i.e., a negative commandment that does not involve any of the death penalties of stoning or of kareth.
(25) On the Day of Atonement (v. Lev. XVI, 3ff) which happened to fall on a Sabbath.
(26) V. Yoma 42a. As it is invalid it is also forbidden on the Sabbath under the death penalties of stoning or kareth which are incurred by the performance of certain kinds of manual labour on the Sabbath.
(27) Lit., ‘also’, since the opinion that disqualifies the common man for this service disqualifies also the common priest.
(28) Lit., ‘who is a stranger to it’, i.e., the particular service, including here even a common priest.
(29) Which entail flagellation.
(30) Since no actual penalty, either of a sin offering or flagellation, is involved, what matters it whether the two offences are regarded as one or as two? V. next note.
(31) V. supra p. 204, n. 1. [Aliter: Since no actual penalty is involved the reference might indeed be to ‘burning’, the practical point at issue being whether he is to be buried among confirmed sinners.]
(32) The men if they had intercourse with the women.
(33) The men if they had intercourse with the women.
(34) Lev. XVIII, 18.
(35) The women.
(36) Lev. XVIII, 19.
(37) Away from their husbands.
(38) Children from such a union are bastards and precaution must be taken that they are not allowed to pass as legitimate children.
To their husbands.

So Rashal. Cur. edd. ‘terumah’.

Hif., 3rd plural.

Who had deliberately exchanged their wives.

Lit., ‘that which he taught’.

Lit., ‘behold’.

Four offerings, (one for each transgression enumerated) by each of the four persons mentioned.

Lit., ‘is there?’

In this case the exchange.

V. supra notes 9 and 10. For wilful transgression other penalties are prescribed!

(B.H. upkjv), Hof., i.e., accidentally.

That the exchange was not a wilful act.

In this case the exchange.

Lit., ‘but not’.

Lit., ‘infer from this’.

v. supra p. 211, n. 17.

And who is this Tanna that admits the force of a ‘comprehensive prohibition’, a ‘prohibition of a wider range’ and ‘simultaneous prohibitions’? –Rab Judah replied in the name of Rab: It is R. Meir; for we learnt: A man may sometimes consume one piece of food and incur thereby the penalty of four sin-offerings and one guilt-offering. [If. e.g., a man levitically] unclean ate suet that remained over from holy sacrifices, on the Day of Atonement R. Meir said: If this happened on the Sabbath and [the consumer] carried out [the suet] in his mouth, liability is incurred [for this act also].

They said to him: This is an offence of a different character.

Whose view, however, IS R. Meir following? If he follows R. Joshua, surely the latter had said that he who made a mistake in respect of a commandment is exonerated! — Rather he follows the view of R. Eliezer. If you prefer I might say: He may, in fact, follow the view of R. Joshua, for R. Joshua's statement, that he who made a mistake in respect of a commandment is exonerated, may only be applicable to the case of the children, where one is pressed for time, but not in such a case as this, where time is not pressing.

What about terumah, where one is not pressed for time, and he nevertheless exonerates! For we learnt: In the case of a priest who was In the habit of eating terumah and it then transpired that he was the son of a divorced woman or of a haluzah, R. Eliezer imposes payment of the principal and of a fifth, and R. Joshua exonerates! — Surely, in relation to this it was stated that R. Bibi b. Abaye said: We are here speaking of terumah on the Eve of Passover when time is pressing.

If you prefer I might say: [Our Mishnah speaks] of simultaneous prohibitions, and may represent even the View of R. Simeon.

All these, it may well be conceded, may occur [simultaneously] where [the brothers] appointed an agent and [the sisters also] appointed an agent and one agent met the other; but how could such [simultaneity] occur with menstruation? - R. Amram in the name of Rab replied: When the women's menstrual discharge continued from the men's thirteenth, until after their thirteenth [birthday], when these become subject to legal punishments; and from their own twelfth, until after their twelfth [birthday], when they themselves become subject to punishments.

THEY MUST BE KEPT APART. Surely, no woman conceives from the first contact R. Nahman replied in the name of Rabbah b. Abuha: Where contact was repeated. Why, then, did R.
Hiyya state, ‘Behold sixteen offerings are here involved’,\(^{36}\) when, in fact,\(^{37}\) there should be thirty-two?\(^{38}\) And according to your line of reasoning, following the opinion of R. Eliezer who deems they are guilty for every sexual effort, are there not more?\(^{39}\) But [your own answer would be] that he only takes into consideration the first effort. Well, here also, only the first contact is taken into consideration.

Said Raba to R. Nahman:

---

(1) In our Mishnah.
(2) Lit., ‘to whom there is’.
(3) Wherever they can all be applied to the same person. If, e.g., A the brother of B betrothed C the sister of D, C is forbidden to B as ‘his brother's wife’ and as ‘a married woman’, both prohibitions having come into force simultaneously. If B subsequently betrothed D, her sister C becomes forbidden to him, by the comprehensive prohibition of ‘his wife's sister’, (comprehending all the sisters of D inclusive of C). When C becomes a menstruant she is forbidden to B as a menstruant also, this last being a prohibition of a wider range extending as it does the prohibition of the woman to A also.
(4) Cur. edd., ‘it was taught’.
(5) Lit., ‘there is one eating’.
(6) Forbidden fat.
(8) The four sin-offerings are due for the eating of (a) holy food while the man is levitically unclean, (b) forbidden fat, (c) nothar and (d) food on the Day of Atonement; while the guilt-offering (asham me'iloth) is incurred for the benefit the consumer (even though he were a priest) had from holy things which were to be burnt on the altar.
(9) Lit., ‘it was’.
(10) Carrying on the Sabbath.
(11) Thus it is shewn that R. Meir recognizes the validity of the three kinds of prohibition: When the animal was consecrated, the prohibition of having any benefit from any part of it has been added to that of eating its suet (wider range). and when a piece of the suet became nothar (since it is thereby forbidden to be offered up on the altar, which is an added restriction) the prohibition of nothar has also been imposed in respect of its consumption by the priests (again wider range). When the priest becomes unclean and is consequently forbidden to consume any holy meat he is also forbidden to consume the nothar (comprehensive), and with the advent of the Day of Atonement the prohibition of the consumption of food generally on that day falls also on the nothar (again comprehensive). Finally, at the moment Sabbath sets in two more prohibitions are imposed (simultaneous) that of carrying on the Sabbath and that of eating on the Day of Atonement (Rashi) or those of carrying on the Sabbath and on the Day of Atonement (Tosaf., s.v. מעדן a.l.).
(12) Lit., ‘it is not from the (same) designation’. Shab. 102a, Shebu. 24b, Ker. 13b.
(13) Who, as has been shown, is represented by the Tanna of our Mishnah who admits the imposition of one prohibition upon another even where the performance of a commandment (e.g.. marriage) was intended.
(14) Who is at variance on a similar question with R. Eliezer (Shab. 1370). Both R. Joshua and R. Eliezer were R. Meir's teachers.
(15) I.e., if his intention was to fulfil a precept and, through an error, his act resulted in a transgression. Cf. the case in our Mishnah and v. supra n. 1 —
(16) While our Mishnah declares the men guilty!
(17) v. supra. n. 2.
(18) One of whom had to be circumcised on the Sabbath and by mistake another child was circumcised who was born a day later. Only circumcision which takes place on the eighth day of birth is permitted on the Sabbath. Any other is forbidden like all manual labour.
(19) One is anxious to perform the commandment at its proper time, and one's anxiety that the day shall not pass without its performance may easily result In an error.
(20) Marriage. spoken of in our Mishnah.
(21) One may contract marriage during any time of his life.
(22) V. Glos.
R. Joshua.

The disqualified priest, having consumed terumah which was forbidden to him, must pay compensation as any layman, as prescribed in Lev. V, 16.

Ter. VIII, 1; Pes. 72b, Mak. 11b.

Containing leaven or any other hamez.

After a certain hour on that day all hamez would have to be burnt.

Who agrees with R. Meir that simultaneous prohibitions do rank as equal in force, and both may be imposed.

Prohibitions, enumerated in our Mishnah.

To betroth the women on their behalf.

To accept on their behalf the tokens of betrothal.

So that all prohibitions took effect at the very same moment.

Which would naturally occur either before, and thus prevent the other three prohibitions from coming into force; or after, and thus be prevented itself from coming into force.

A male becomes legally liable to punishments on the termination of his thirteenth, and a female on that of her twelfth year of age. If the respective agents of the two parties who were of the same age to a day, met sometime prior to the conclusion of the last day of the year (twelfth of the females and thirteenth of the males), and arranged for the betrothals to take effect on the following day when both parties become of age (as otherwise the betrothals would not be valid) the betrothals and the prohibitions simultaneously come into force.

What, then, is the need for the precaution?

Supra 33b.

Since our Mishnah represents the view of R. Eliezer (or Eleazar).

Sixteen for each contact. V. infra 92a, Ker. 15a.

Sin-offerings involved.

Surely Tamar conceived from a first contact! The other answered him: Tamar exercised friction with her finger; for R. Isaac said: All women of the house of Rabbi who exercise friction are designated Tamar. And why are they designated Tamar? — Because Tamar exercised friction with her finger. But were there not Er and Onan? — Er and Onan indulged in unnatural intercourse.

An objection was raised: During all the twenty-four months one may thresh within and winnow without; these are the words of R. Eliezer. The others said to him: Such actions are only like the practice of Er and Onan! Like the practice of Er and Onan, and yet not [exactly] like the practice of Er and Onan: ‘Like the practice of Er and Onan’, for it is written in Scripture, And it came to pass, when he went in unto his brother's wife, that he spilt it on the ground; and ‘not [exactly] like the practice of Er and Onan’, for whereas there it was an unnatural act, here it is done in the natural way.

[The source for] Onan's guilt may well be traced, for it is written in Scripture, That he spilt it on the ground; whence however, [that of] Er?-R. Nahman b. Isaac replied: It is written, And He slew him also, he also died of the same death.

[The reason for] Onan's action may well be understood, because he knew That the seed would not be his; but why did Er act in such a manner? — In order that she might not conceive and thus lose some of her beauty.

Our Rabbis taught [The woman also] with whom [a man shall lie], excludes a bride; so R. Judah. But the Sages say: This excludes unnatural intercourse.

Said Hon son of R. Nahman to R. Nahman: Does this imply that R. Judah is of the opinion that the Torah had consideration for the bride's make-up? — The other replied: Because no woman conceives from her first contact — On what principle do they differ? — The Rabbis are of opinion. that ‘carnally’\(^{11}\) excludes the first stage of contact, and ‘with whom’\(^{11}\) excludes unnatural intercourse; but R. Judah is of the opinion that the exclusion of unnatural intercourse and the first stage of contact may be derived from ‘carnally’.\(^{11}\) while ‘with whom’\(^{11}\) excludes a bride.

When Rabin came\(^{15}\) he stated in the name of R. Johanan: A woman who waited ten years after [separation from] her husband, and then remarried, would bear children no more. Said R. Nahman: This was stated only in respect of one who had no Intention of remarrying: if, however, one's intention was to marry again she may conceive.

Raba said to R. Hisda's daughter:\(^{16}\) The Rabbis are talking about you. She answered him: I had my mind on you.

A woman once appeared before R. Joseph, and said to him: Master, I remained unmarried after [the death of] my husband for ten years and now I gave birth to a child — He said to her: My daughter, do not discredit the words of the Sages. She thereupon confessed, 'I had intercourse with a heathen'.\(^{17}\)

Samuel said: All these women,\(^{18}\) with the exception of a proselyte and an emancipated slave who were minors, must wait three months.\(^{19}\) An Israelitish minor, however, must wait three months. But how [was she separated]?\(^{20}\) If by a declaration of refusal,\(^{21}\) surely. Samuel said that she\(^{22}\) need not wait!\(^{23}\) And if by a letter of divorce, surely Samuel has already stated this once! For Samuel said: If she' formally refused him\(^{21}\) she need not wait three months; if he gave her a letter of divorce she must wait three months!\(^{24}\) -[It\(^{25}\) was] rather in respect of unlawful intercourse,

the Rabbis having made the provision\(^1\) in the case of a minor\(^2\) as a precaution against one who is of age.\(^3\) But is provision made in the case of a minor as a precaution against one who is of age? Surely we learnt, IF THEY WERE MINORS INCAPABLE OF BEARING CHILDREN THEY MAY BE RESTORED AT ONCE! — R. Giddal replied: This\(^4\) was a special ruling.\(^5\) Does this imply that such a case had actually occurred?! — Rather [this is the meaning:] It\(^4\) was like a special ruling, since the exchange of brides is an unusual occurrence.\(^7\)

[Others adopt] a different reading: Samuel said: All these women\(^8\) with the exception of a proselyte and an emancipated slave who were of age. must wait three months.\(^9\) An Israelitish minor, however, need not wait three months. But how [was she separated]? If by a declaration of refusal, Surely Samuel has already stated this one! And if by a letter of divorce, Samuel surely stated that she’ must wait! For Samuel said: If she exercise her right of refusal against him, she need not wait three months; if he gave her a letter of divorce she must wait three months! [It was] rather in respect of harlotry. and harlotry with a minor\(^8\) an unusual occurrence.\(^7\)

Let, however, a preventive measure\(^10\) be made in respect of a proselyte and an emancipated slave with whom harlotry is not unusual! — He holds the same view as R. Jose. For it was taught: Proselytes,\(^11\) captives\(^1\) or slaves\(^11\) who were redeemed, or embraced the Jewish faith or were emancipated, must wait three months; so R. Judah. R. Jose permits immediate betrothal and marriage.\(^12\) Rabbah said: What is R. Jose's reason? He is of the opinion that a woman who plays the harlot makes use of an absorbent in order to prevent conception.\(^12\)

Said Abaye to him: This\(^13\) is intelligible in the case of a proselyte; as her intention is to embrace the Jewish faith she is careful\(^14\) in order to know the distinction between the seed that was sown in holiness and the seed that was sown in unholiness. It\(^13\) is also [intelligible In the case of] a captive and a slave; since on hearing from their masters\(^15\) they exercise care.\(^16\) How is this\(^13\) to be applied. however, in the case of one who is liberated through the loss of a tooth or an eye?\(^17\) And were you to suggest that wherever something unexpected happens! R. Jose admits,\(^19\) surely it was taught: A woman who had been outraged or seduced must wait three months; so R. Judah. R. Jose permits immediate betrothal and marriage! — Rather, said Abaye,\(^22\) a woman playing the harlot turns over in order to prevent conception.\(^23\) And the other?\(^24\) -There is the apprehension that she might not have turned over properly.\(^25\)

IF THEY WERE PRIESTLY WOMEN etc. Only\(^26\) priestly women but not an Israelitish woman?\(^27\) -Read, ‘If they were the wives of priests’;\(^28\) Only’ ‘priests’ wives;\(^29\) but not Israelites’ wives?\(^30\) Surely R. Amram said, ‘The following statement was made to us by R. Shesheth who threw light on the subject\(^31\) from our Mishnah: An Israelite's wife\(^33\) who was outraged, though she is permitted to her husband, is disqualified from the priesthood.\(^34\) — Raba replied: It is this that was meant: IF THEY WERE PRIESTLY WOMEN\(^36\) married to Israelites THEY ARE DISQUALIFIED from eating terumah at their parents’ home.\(^37\)

\(^{(1)}\) That three months must be allowed to pass.

CHAPTER IV

MISHNAH. IF A LEVIR PARTICIPATED IN HALIZAH WITH HIS DECEASED BROTHER'S WIFE who was subsequently found to be pregnant, and she gave birth, he is, wherever the child is viable, permitted to marry her relatives and she is permitted to marry his relatives, and he does not render her unfit for the priesthood; but wherever the child is not viable, he may retain her. If it is doubtful whether it is a nine-months child of the first [husband] or a seven-months child of the second [husband], she must be divorced, and

MISHNAH. IF A LEVIR MARRIED HIS DECEASED BROTHER'S WIFE who is found to have been pregnant, and she gave birth, he, wherever the child is viable, must divorce her. And both are under the obligation of bringing an offering; but if the child is not viable, he may retain her. If it is doubtful whether it is a nine-months child of the first [husband] or a seven-months child of the second [husband], she must be divorced, and
THE CHILD IS LEGITIMATE,\(^9\) BUT THEY ARE UNDER THE OBLIGATION OF AN ASHAM TALUI.\(^{10}\) GEMARA. It was stated: In the case of a levir who participated in halizah with a pregnant woman who subsequently miscarried, R. Johanan said, She need not perform the halizah with the brothers; and Resh Lakish said: She must perform halizah with the brothers. ‘R. Johanan said, She need not perform halizah with the brothers’, because the halizah of a pregnant woman\(^{11}\) is deemed to be proper halizah and marital contact with a pregnant woman is deemed to be proper marriage.\(^{12}\) ‘Resh Lakish said: She must perform halizah with the brothers’, because the halizah with a pregnant woman is not deemed to be a proper halizah, nor is marital contact with a pregnant woman deemed to be a proper marriage. On what principle do they\(^{13}\) differ? — If you wish I might say: In the interpretation of a Scriptural text. And if you prefer I might say: On a logical point. ‘If you wish I might say: In the interpretation of a Scriptural text’;\(^{14}\) R. Johanan is of the opinion that the All Merciful said, And have no child,\(^{15}\) and this man\(^{16}\) surely has none; while Resh Lakish is of the opinion that And have no [en lo] child\(^{17}\) implies. ‘Hold an inquiry concerning him’.\(^{19}\) ‘And if you prefer I might say: On a logical point’; R. Johanan argues: Had Elijah\(^{20}\) appeared and announced that the woman would miscarry. would she not have been subject to halizah or levirate marriage?\(^{21}\) Now also\(^{22}\) the fact is established retrospectively. And Resh Lakish maintains that a fact cannot be said to have been established retrospectively.

R. Johanan raised an objection against Resh Lakish: WHEREVER THE CHILD IS NOT VIABLE THE LEVIR IS FORBIDDEN TO MARRY HER RELATIVES AND SHE IS FORBIDDEN TO MARRY HIS RELATIVES, AND HE RENDERS HER UNFIT TO MARRY A PRIEST. This is quite correct according to my view: Since I maintain that the halizah of a pregnant woman is a proper halizah he, consequently, renders her unfit. According to you, however, who maintain that the halizah of a pregnant woman is not proper halizah, why does he render her unfit to marry a priest? — The other answered him: It\(^{23}\) is only Rabbinical and it is a mere restriction.\(^{24}\)

Others say: Resh Lakish raised an objection against R. Johanan: WHEREVER THE CHILD IS NOT VIABLE THE LEVIR IS FORBIDDEN TO MARRY HER RELATIVES AND SHE IS FORBIDDEN TO MARRY HIS RELATIVES, AND HE RENDERS HER UNFIT TO MARRY A PRIEST. This is quite correct according to my view; since I maintain that the halizah of a pregnant woman is not a proper halizah it was justly stated as a restriction,\(^{25}\) that HE RENDERS HER UNFIT TO MARRY A PRIEST but not that ‘she requires no halizah from the brothers’;\(^{26}\) according to you, however,\(^{27}\) it should have been stated that ‘she requires no halizah from the brothers’!\(^{128}\) — The other replied: It should have been indeed;\(^{29}\) only because in the first clause it was stated, HE DOES NOT RENDERS HER UNFIT\(^{30}\) it was also\(^{31}\) stated in the latter clause, HE RENDERS HER UNFIT.\(^{32}\)

R. Johanan raised an objection against Resh Lakish: IF THE CHILD IS NOT VIABLE, HE MAY RETAIN HER. This is quite correct according to my view; since I maintain that the halizah of a pregnant woman is a proper halizah and marital contact\(^{33}\) with a pregnant woman is a proper marriage. it was rightly stated HE MAY RETAIN HER.\(^{34}\) According to you, however, who maintain that the halizah of a pregnant woman is not a valid halizah and the marital contact\(^{35}\) with a pregnant woman is not a valid marriage, it should have been stated, ‘He must repeat contact and only then he may retain her’! — The meaning of HE MAY RETAIN HER is that he must repeat contact and then HE MAY RETAIN HER, but not otherwise.\(^{36}\)

Others say: Resh Lakish raised an objection against R. Johanan: IF THE CHILD IS NOT VIABLE HE MAY RETAIN HER. This is quite correct according to my view; since I maintain that the halizah of a pregnant woman is not a valid halizah and marital contact with a pregnant woman is not a valid marriage, it was rightly stated HE MAY RETAIN HER, [meaning that] he must repeat contact and then HE MAY RETAIN HER, since otherwise this\(^{37}\) would not have been permitted.\(^{38}\) According to you,\(^{39}\) however, it should have been stated, ‘If he wishes he may divorce her and if he prefers he may continue to live with her’! — It should have been indeed;\(^{40}\) only because in the earlier clause it was stated HE MUST DIVORCE HER, it was also stated in the latter clause HE MAY RETAIN HER.

An objection was raised: ‘Where a levir married his yebamah who was found to be pregnant, her rival may not be married, since it is possible that the child would be viable’. On the contrary! If the child were viable her rival would be exempt! But read: Since it is possible that the child would not be viable. Now, if it could be imagined that marital contact with a pregnant woman is to be regarded as a valid marriage, why may not her rival be married? She should be exempted through the marital contact of her associate! — Abaye replied: Both agree that by marital contact she does not exempt [her rival]; they differ only on the question of halizah. R. Johanan is of the opinion that the halizah of a pregnant woman is a valid halizah, though marital contact with a pregnant woman is not a valid marriage, while Resh Lakish is of the opinion that marital contact with a pregnant woman is no valid marriage, nor is halizah with a pregnant woman a valid halizah. Said Raba: Whatever is your opinion? If marital contact with a pregnant woman is a valid marriage, the halizah of a pregnant woman should be a valid halizah; or if marital contact with a pregnant woman is no valid marriage, the halizah of a pregnant woman also should be no proper halizah; for we have an established rule

(1) Whose husband died without issue.
(2) Although the child died soon after.
(3) Since a viable child was born the halizah is rendered void.
(4) She, unlike any other haluzah, may marry a priest. V. n. 3 supra.
(5) I.e., if it was of a premature birth.
(6) Prior to the levirate marriage.
(7) Since the levirate marriage should not take place where the deceased brother has had any issue.
(8) A sin-offering for their unwitting transgression in contracting a forbidden marriage (one's brother's wife) where the precept of the levirate marriage did not apply. V. supra n. 7.
(9) Since in either case he has been born from a lawful union: If he is a nine-months child he is the legitimate offspring of the deceased brother; and if he is a seven-months child of the surviving brother, the deceased had died without issue and the marriage between the widow and the surviving brother was accordingly lawful.

(19) The prophet, who could predict the future.
(20) Of course she would.
(21) That she has actually miscarried, though after the halizah or levirate marriage.
(22) The prohibition for the woman to marry a priest.
(23) One not knowing the circumstances of this particular case would erroneously assume that any other haluzah may also be married to a priest.
(24) V. supra n. 2. Had not this been specifically stated it might have been assumed that, as the halizah is invalid, she is not rendered unfit at all.
(25) Because she does.
(26) Who regard the halizah as valid.
(27) And the prohibition to marry each other's relatives and his rendering her unfit for a priest would be inferred as self-evident.
that whosoever is subject to the obligation of levirate marriage is also subject to halizah, and whosoever is not subject to the obligation of the levirate marriage is not subject to halizah! Rather, said Raba, it is this that was meant: Where a levir married his yebamah who was found to be pregnant, her rival may not be married, because it is possible that the child would be viable, and marital contact with a pregnant woman is no proper marriage, nor is the halizah of a pregnant woman proper halizah, while the child does not bring exemption until he is actually born.

It was taught in agreement with the view of Raba: Where a levir married his yebamah who was found to be pregnant, her rival may not be married, because it is possible that the child may be viable, and neither marital contact nor halizah but only the child brings exemption; and the child brings exemption only after he is born.

The reason, then, is because it is possible that the child might be viable, but where the child is not viable her rival is exempt; does this imply an objection against Resh Lakish? — Resh Lakish can answer you [that the Baraitha] is thus to be interpreted: Where a levir married his yebamah who was found to be pregnant, her rival may not be married; since it is possible that the child may not be viable, and the halizah of a pregnant woman is no valid halizah nor is the marital contact with a pregnant woman a proper marriage; and were you to suggest that one should be guided by the majority of women, and the majority of women bear healthy children, [it could be retorted that] a child brings no exemption until he is actually born.

Said R. Eleazar: Is it possible that there should exist [such a ruling as] that of Resh Lakish and that we should not have learnt it in a Mishnah? When he went out he carefully considered the matter and found one. For we learned: If people came to a woman whose husband and rival had gone to a country beyond the sea and told her, ‘Your husband is dead’, she may neither be married nor be taken in levirate marriage until she has ascertained whether her rival is pregnant. One can well understand why she may not be taken in levirate marriage, since it is possible that the child may be viable and [the levir] would thus infringe the Pentateuchal prohibition against marrying a brother's wife: but why should she not perform the halizah? It is possible to understand the reason why she must not perform the halizah within the nine months and also contract a marriage within nine months, since such [procedure would naturally be forbidden on account of the] doubt; but let her perform the halizah within the nine months¹⁶ and be married after the nine months!¹⁸ — But even in accordance with your view,¹⁹ let her perform the halizah and be married after the nine months!²⁰ The fact, however, is that nothing may be inferred from this;²¹ for both Abaye b. Abin²² and R. Hinena b. Abin²² stated:²³ It is possible that the child²⁴ might be viable²⁵ and you would then subject her to the necessity of an announcement²⁶ in respect of the priesthood.²⁷ — Well, let her be subjected!²⁸ — It may happen that someone would be present at the halizah and not at the announcement,²⁶ and would form the opinion that a haluzah was permitted to a priest.

Said Abaye to him: Was it stated, ‘She shall neither perform halizah nor be taken in levirate marriage’? The statement, surely, was, ‘She shall neither be married nor be taken in levirate marriage’²⁹ without halizah; if halizah, however, had been performed³⁰ she would indeed have been permitted!³¹

It was taught in agreement with Resh Lakish: Where a levir participated in the halizah with a pregnant woman who subsequently miscarried, she is required to perform halizah with the brothers.

Raba said: The law is in accordance with the views of Resh

!!

If on the other hand, a viable child had been born, exemption took effect at his birth, and subsequent marriage would consequently be lawful. As the Mishnah, however, forbids halizah and marriage even after the nine months, unless definite information about the rival had been received, it must be assumed to represent the view of Resh Lakish who deems a halizah invalid wherever the child is not viable and the ceremony took place during pregnancy. Lakish in the following three rulings.³² One is the ruling just spoken of. Another is his ruling in connection with the following Mishnah:³³ If a man³⁴ distributed his property verbally³⁵ and gave to one [son] more and to another less, or if he assigned to the firstborn a share equal to that of his brothers,³⁶ his arrangements are valid.³⁷ If, however, he said, ‘As an inheritance’,³⁸ his instructions are disregarded.³⁹ If he wrote⁴⁰ either at the beginning or the end or the middle, ‘as a gift’,⁴¹ his instructions are valid.⁴²

(17) It being uncertain whether the child would be viable or not. Should he be viable, neither the halizah nor the marriage would be valid, while exemption on his account would not come into force until his actual birth.
(18) This should be permitted according to the view of R. Johanan at all events: If the rival had been pregnant and miscarried or had not been pregnant at all, the halizah was, surely, valid.
(19) That halizah is forbidden because of the possibility that the rival was pregnant at the time halizah took place.
(20) When all doubt as to pregnancy would have been removed. Why, then, has it been stated that she may not marry until she had ascertained (even though many years have passed), whether her rival had been pregnant.

(37) Lit., ‘his words stand’, because a man is entitled to dispose of his property, as a gift, in any manner that may appeal to him.
(38) I.e., if he distributed the shares as portions of an inheritance and not as gifts.
(39) Lit., ‘he said nothing’. One has no right to give instructions which are contrary to the law of the Torah which entitled every son to a portion and the firstborn to a double portion in the father's estate.
(40) In disposing of his property in a written will.

If he wrote, for instance, let a certain field (a) be presented to X that he may inherit it (beginning), or (b) inherited by X and be presented to him that he may inherit it (middle), or (c) be inherited by X and be presented to him (end).
(42) B.B. 126b. V. supra note 6. So long as the expression of ‘gift’ was used, the other expression of ‘inheritance’ that may have been coupled with it, does not in any way affect the validity of the testator's instructions.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 36b

And [in connection with this] Resh Lakish stated: No possession is ever acquired, unless the testator had said, ‘Let X and Y inherit this and that particular field which I have assigned to them as a gift, so that they may inherit them’. And the third is his ruling in connection with the following Mishnah: If a man assigned all his estate, in writing, to his son after his death, the father may not sell it because it is assigned to the son, and the son may not sell it because it is in the possession of the father. If the father sold the estate, the sale is valid until his death. If the son sold it, the buyer has no claim whatsoever upon it until the father's death. And it was stated: If the son sold the estate during the lifetime of his father, and died while his father was still alive, R. Johanan said: The buyer does not acquire ownership; and Resh Lakish said: The buyer does acquire ownership.

BUT IF THE CHILD IS NOT VIABLE etc. A Tanna taught: It has been said in the name of R. Eliezer that he must put her out by means of a letter of divorce.

Said Raba: R. Meir and R. Eliezer taught the same law. R. Eliezer, in the ruling just mentioned, R. Meir [in the following Baraitha] wherein it was taught: A man shall not marry the pregnant, or nursing wife of another; and if he married, he must put her out and never remarry her; so R. Meir.
But the Sages said: He shall let her go.\(^{20}\) and at the proper time\(^{21}\) he may marry her again.\(^{22}\)

Abaye said to him:\(^{23}\) How do you arrive at such a conclusion which may possibly be wrong?\(^{24}\) R. Eliezer's ruling might extend to the present case only because the levir is encroaching upon the prohibition of 'brother's wife', which is Pentateuchal,\(^{27}\) but there,\(^{28}\) where the prohibition is only Rabbinical,\(^{29}\) he may hold the same view as the Rabbis. Alternatively, it is possible that R. Meir's ruling extends only to that case because the prohibition is Rabbinical,\(^{29}\) and the Sages have given more force to their provisions than to those which are Pentateuchal,\(^{30}\) but not to the case here,\(^{31}\) where the prohibition is Pentateuchal,\(^{26}\) and people as a rule keep away from it.\(^{32}\)

Raba said: Even according to the ruling of the Rabbis\(^{33}\) he must let her go from him by means of a letter of divorce.\(^{34}\) Said Mar Zutra: This may also be deduced, since the expression used was 'he shall put her out'\(^{35}\) and not 'he shall let her part'.\(^{36}\) This proves it.

R. Ashi said to R. Hoshaia son of R. Idi: 'Elsewhere it was taught.\(^{37}\) "R. Simeon b. Gamaliel said: Any human child that survived for thirty days cannot be regarded as a miscarriage.\(^{38}\) Had he not lived so long,\(^{40}\) however, he would have been a doubtful case.\(^{41}\) But it was also stated: Where he died within thirty days\(^{43}\) and she was subsequently betrothed,\(^{46}\) Rabina said in the name of Raba that if she was the wife of an Israelite\(^{47}\) she must perform the halizah\(^{48}\) and if she was the wife of a priest\(^{49}\) she must not perform the halizah.\(^{50}\) R. \(^{1}\) Where two fields were given to two persons and the expression of 'inheritance was used together with that of 'gift'.

\(^{2}\) Both acquire possession of the respective fields because the testator had used the expression, ‘which I have assigned to them as a gift’, implying that the gift was made before it was assigned as an ‘inheritance’ (v. R. Gershom, B.B. 129a).

\(^{3}\) Lit., ‘and the other’, the third ruling of Resh Lakish, which is an accepted halachah.

\(^{4}\) Lit., ‘because we learned’.

\(^{5}\) Inserting the formula ‘From this day and after my death’. The law that follows applies also to a gift made by any other person.

\(^{6}\) The sons.

\(^{7}\) The testator's.

\(^{8}\) Either the land or its produce.

\(^{11}\) Assigned to him by his father for possession after his death.

\(^{12}\) Even after the father's death, since the estate has never come into the son's possession.

\(^{13}\) After the death of the father, as the representative of the son, who, were he alive, would have been entitled to the inheritance.

\(^{14}\) Since the usufruct was in the ownership of the father, the capital, i.e., the soil, is also regarded as being in his possession, and the son, therefore, during the lifetime of his father is not entitled to transfer it to the buyer.

\(^{15}\) B.K. l.c., B.B. 136af. The soil, therefore, was the undisputed property of the son who, consequently, was fully entitled to transfer it to the buyer.

\(^{16}\) Contrary to the law of our Mishnah which allows the levir to continue his connubial association with his sister-in-law wherever the child is not viable.

\(^{17}\) Though the death of the child has proved retrospectively that the levirate marriage was lawful, divorce is imposed upon such a union as a penalty for contracting it at a time when, owing to the uncertainty of the result of the pregnancy, it was of doubtful legality.

\(^{18}\) Lit., ‘said one word’, that the penalty of divorce is imposed upon any union the legality of which was doubtful at the time the marriage was contracted.

\(^{19}\) Though she is now a widow or divorced.

(23) Raba.

(24) Lit., ‘from what? perhaps it is not (so)’.

(25) Lit., ‘R. Eliezer did not so far say (his ruling) here’.

(26) It being possible that the child would be viable.

(27) For such a serious offence a penalty is rightly imposed.

(28) Marriage with an expectant or nursing mother.

(29) Biblically one need not wait twenty-four months before marrying her.

(30) As people might be lax in the observance of a Rabbinical law it was necessary to impose a penalty for its non-observance.

(31) Marriage with an expectant yebamah.

(32) Or ‘her’, i.e., from marrying an expectant yebamah. No penalty, therefore, need be imposed upon an occasional offender.

(33) Who permit marriage after the period of twenty-four months had elapsed.

(34) Mere separation is not enough.

(35) הָיָה לְמַלְאָכָה ‘to go out’.

(36) לְגָּדוֹל ‘to separate’.

(37) Cf. Tosaf. Hul. 87b, s.v. הָיָה לְמַלְאָכָה and Bek. 49a s.v. הָיָה לְמַלְאָכָה. Cur. edd., ‘we learned’.

(38) Of doubtful premature birth. Lit., ‘among man’, opp. to cattle mentioned in the final clause.

(39) Tosef. Shab. XVI, Shab. 135b, Nid. 44b, infra 80b; and consequently exempts his mother from levirate marriage and halizah. In the case of a mature birth (cf. prev. note) the child exempts his mother on the first day of his birth. (V. Nid. 43b).

(41) And his mother would have had to perform halizah only, but would not have been allowed to contract the levirate marriage.

(42) The child of a sister-in-law whose husband had died without having left any other issue.

(43) Of his birth.

(44) His mother, the widow of his deceased father.

(45) Lit., ‘stood up.’

(46) To a stranger; believing that the birth of the child was sufficient to exempt her from the obligations of the levirate marriage and the halizah.

(47) I.e., if the man who betrothed her was an Israelite who may marry a haluzah.

(48) With the levir.

(49) Cf. supra 8. A priest may not marry a haluzah.

(50) Were she to perform it. her husband could not subsequently be allowed to live with her. Hence she is granted exemption from halizah by virtue of the child's birth alone.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 37a

Raba said so¹ in the evening, but on the following morning he retracted.² The other exclaimed, "So you have permitted;³ would that you permitted also abdominal fat!"⁴ Now, what is the law here in respect of the pregnant, or nursing wife of another man who was married to a priest? Did the Rabbis make any provision for a priest⁵ or not? — The other⁶ replied:⁷ What a comparison!⁸ [The distinction]⁹ is well justified there;¹⁰ since the Rabbis differ from R. Simeon b. Gamaliel in maintaining that the child is deemed to be sound even though he did not live long enough,¹¹ we may, in the case of a priest's wife, where no other course is open,¹² act in accordance with the view of the Rabbis.¹³ Here,¹⁴ however, in accordance with whose view could we act? If in accordance with that of R. Meir, he surely stated that he¹⁵ must put her out and never remarry her! And if in accordance with the view of the Rabbis, they, surely, stated [that she must be sent away] by means of a letter of
It was stated: [The case of the man who] betrothed a woman within the three months and fled, is one concerning which R. Aha and Rafram are at variance. One holds that the man is to be placed under the ban, but the other holds that his flight is sufficient. Such an incident once happened, and Rafram ruled, ‘His flight is sufficient’.

IF IT IS DOUBTFUL WHETHER IT IS A NINE-MONTHS CHILD etc. Said Raba to R. Nahman. Let the ruling be that one is to go by the majority of women, and the majority of women bear at nine months — The other replied: Our women bear at seven months. ‘Are your women’, the first retorted, ‘the majority of the world!’ — ‘What I mean’, the other replied, ‘is this: Most women bear at nine months and a minority at seven, and the embryo in the case of every woman who bears at nine is recognizable after a third of the period of her pregnancy, and in the case of this woman, since her embryo was not recognized after a third of the period of her pregnancy, [her presumption to belong to] the majority is impaired’.

If in the case of every woman, however, who bears at nine the embryo is recognizable after a third of the period of her pregnancy. it is obvious that with this [woman], since her embryo had not been recognized after a third of the period of her pregnancy, it must be a seven-months child of the second husband! — But say rather: When a woman bears at nine months, her embryo in most cases is recognizable after a third of her pregnancy. and with this woman, since her embryo was not recognized after a third of the period of her pregnancy, [her presumption to belong to] the majority is impaired.

Our Rabbis taught: The first [child] is fit to be a High priest, and the second is deemed a bastard owing to his doubtful origin. R. Eliezer b. Jacob said: He is not of doubtful bastardy. What does he mean? — Abaye replied: It is this that he meant, ‘The first child is fit to be a High priest while the second is one of doubtful bastardy and is consequently forbidden to marry a bastard’. R. Eliezer b. Jacob said: He is not one of doubtful bastardy but an assured bastard, and is consequently permitted to marry a bastard’. Raba replied: It is this that was meant: ‘The first is fit to be a High priest and the second, on account of his doubtful origin, is deemed to be an assured bastard and is consequently forbidden to marry a bastard’. And they differ in [the interpretation of a ruling] of R. Eleazar. For we learned: ‘R. Eleazar said, persons of confirmed illegitimacy may [intermarry] with others of confirmed illegitimacy, but those of confirmed illegitimacy may not intermarry with those of doubtful illegitimacy; nor those of doubtful, with those of confirmed illegitimacy; nor those of doubtful, with others of doubtful illegitimacy. And the following are of doubtful legitimacy: The shethuki, the asufi and the Samaritan. And [in connection with this] Rab Judah stated in the name of Rab, ‘The halachah is in accordance with the ruling of R. Eleazar, but when I stated this in the presence of Samuel he said to me, "Hillel taught that the following ten different genealogical classes went up from Babylon: priests, Levites, Israelites, profaned priests, proselytes, emancipated slaves, bastards, nethinim, shetkuki and asufi, and all these may inter marry", and you state that the halachah is in accordance with the ruling of R. Eleazar!’ Now Abaye upholds the opinion of Samuel who stated that the halachah is in agreement with the ruling of Hillel and consequently brings the ruling of R. Eliezer b. Jacob into harmony with the halachah so that there may be no contradiction between the one halachah and the other. Raba, on the other hand, upholds the opinion of Rab who stated that the halachah is in agreement with the ruling of R. Eleazar, and so he brings the ruling of R. Eliezer b. Jacob into harmony with the halachah in order that there may be no contradiction.

\(1\) That halizah must be performed even where the husband is a priest (R. Mesharsheya's version).
(2) Exempting the widow from halizah where a priest is involved (Rabina's version).

(3) Var. lec. ‘permitted it’.

(4) Shab. 136af.

(5) That temporary separation until the twenty-four months had elapsed shall suffice and that, unlike an Israelite, the priest shall not be required to give a divorce. If an Israelite gives a divorce in such circumstances he may remarry the woman after the lapse of the forbidden period. A priest, however, being forbidden to marry a divorced woman, would never again be allowed to remarry her once she had been divorced.

(14) Where the levir married his sister-in-law while she was an expectant, or nursing mother.

(15) The levir.

(16) V. supra 36b and cf. p. 229, nn. 16 and 17.

(17) An expectant, or nursing mother who was a widow or divorcée.

(18) After she became a widow or divorcée.

(19) Until he consents to divorce the woman.

(20) He need not be compelled to give her a divorce, and no penalty need be imposed upon him, since his flight may be taken as an indication that it was not his intention to live with her before the lapse of a period of twenty-four months after the birth of a child.

(21) Lit., ‘said to them’.

(22) The child would consequently be deemed to be the son of the first husband, and the marriage of his mother with the levir would be a forbidden union. The levir who thus married unlawfully his brother's wife should bring a sin-offering and not, as stated in our Mishnah, an asham talui.

(23) Lit., ‘her days’.

(24) Lit., ‘last’.

(25) Born from the levirate marriage, and in respect of whom it is doubtful whether he is a nine-months child of the deceased or a seven-months one of the levir.

(26) His legitimacy is beyond all doubt. If he is the son of the deceased brother he is legitimate, though the subsequent levirate marriage is a forbidden one; and if be is the son of the levir, the levirate marriage itself is a lawful union.

(27) Any child after the first, born from the levirate marriage.

(28) It being possible that the first child was the son of the deceased, and that the levirate marriage was consequently forbidden under the penalty of kareth. Children born from such a union are bastards.

(29) Cur. edd., ‘There is no bastard on account of doubt’.

(30) R. Eliezer b. Jacob.

(38) Abaye and Raba in their differing explanations of the Baraitha cited.

(39) Since it is possible that a person of doubtful legitimacy may in fact be legitimate, and by marrying one whose illegitimacy is established a bastard, contrary to Pentateuchal law, would be ‘admitted into the congregation’. (V. Deut. XXIII, 3).

(40) ר"א ס"ל (rt. ס"ל, ‘to be silent’), he who knows his mother but does not know who was his father (v. Kid. 6); who ‘keeps silent’ about his origin.
(41) נִקְלֵי (rt. נִקְלֵי ‘to gather’) a child picked up in the street, and whose fatherhood and motherhood are unknown (v. Kid. l.c.); ‘a foundling’.

(42) Kid. 74a. In all these cases the legitimacy is doubtful: in the first two, because the father is unknown; and in the last, because the Samaritans did not observe all the laws of betrothal, and any Samaritan might be the issue of an illicit union between his father and a woman who had been legally betrothed to another man.

(49) The halachah is always determined by the teachings of R. Eliezer h. Jacob whose information was well sifted and authoritative. (V. Git. 67a).

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 37b

between one halachah and the other.

Said Abaye: Whence do I infer that R. Eliezer b. Jacob treats any doubtful case as a certainty? — [From] what was taught: R. Eliezer b. Jacob said, ‘Behold, when a man has intercourse with many women and does not know with which particular woman he had intercourse, and, similarly, when a woman with whom many men had intercourse does not know to which particular man her conception is due, the consequences are that a father will be marrying his daughter and a brother his sister, and the whole world will be filled with bastards, and concerning this it was said, And the land became full of lewdness’. And Raba: — He can answer you: It is this that was meant, ‘What might be the result’?

More than that was said by R. Eliezer b. Jacob: A man shall not marry a wife in one country and then proceed to marry one in another country, since [their children] might marry one another and the result might be that a brother would marry his sister.

But, surely, this could not be [the accepted ruling], for Rab, whenever he happened to visit Dardeshir, used to announce, ‘Who would be mine for the day’! So also R, Nahman, whenever he happened to visit Shekunzib, used to announce, ‘Who would be mines for the day’! — The Rabbis came under a special category since they are well known.

But did not Raba say: A woman who had an offer of marriage and accepted must allow a period of seven ritually clean days to pass! — The Rabbis sent their representatives and these presented the announcements to the women. And if you prefer I might say: The Rabbis only had them in their private rooms; for the Master said, ‘He who has bread in his basket cannot be compared to him who has no bread in his basket’.

A Tanna taught: R. Eliezer b. Jacob said: A man must not marry a woman if it is his intention to divorce her, for it is written, Devise not evil against thy neighbour, seeing he dwelleth securely by thee.

If the ‘doubtful son’ and the levir came to claim a share in the estate of the deceased, the ‘doubtful son’ pleading, ‘I am the son of the deceased and the estate is mine’, while the levir pleads, ‘You are my son and you have no claim whatsoever upon the estate’, it is a case of money of doubtful ownership, and money the ownership of which is doubtful must be divided.
Where the ‘doubtful son’ and the sons of the levir came to claim their share in the estate of the deceased, the ‘doubtful son’ pleading, ‘I am the son of the deceased and the estate is mine while the sons of the levir plead, ‘You are our brother and you have only a share equal to ours’, it was the intention of the Rabbis to submit to R. Mesharsheya that this was a case [identical with that of] a Mishnah wherein we learned, ‘He does not inherit from them but they inherit from him’, since here the case is just the reverse. There they tell him, ‘produce proof and take [your share]’ while here he tells them, ‘produce proof and take your share’. R. Mesharsheya, however, said to them, ‘Are [the two cases] equal? There, their claim is a certainty while his is doubtful, while here both are doubtful’. If, however, a case is to be compared to a Mishnah it is to the following: That of a ‘doubtful son’ and the sons of the levir who came to claim shares in the estate of the levir himself, where they can say to him: produce proof that you are our brother and take your share.

If a ‘doubtful son’ and the sons of the levir came to claim their shares in the estate of the levir after the levir had received his share in the estate of the deceased, the sons of the levir pleading, ‘produce proof that you are our brother and you will receive [your share]’, the ‘doubtful son’ can tell them, ‘Whatever you wish: If I am your brother, give me a share among you; and if I am the son of the deceased, return to me the half which your father received when he shared the estate with me’.

Said R. Abba in the name of Rab: The judgment must stand. R. Jeremiah said: The judgment is to be reversed.

May it be suggested that they differ on the same principle as that which underlies the dispute between Admon and the Rabbis? For we learned: If a man went to a country beyond the sea and [in his absence] the path to his field was lost, he shall, Admon said, use the shortest cut; but the Sages said: He must purchase a path even though it will cost him a hundred maneh or else fly in the air. And in discussing this [Mishnah it was pointed out] against the Rabbis that Admon was perfectly right; and Rab Judah replied in the name of Rab that here it is a case where [the fields of] four persons surrounded it on its four sides. But [it was asked] what is Admon's reason? And Raba replied: Where four persons derive their rights of possession from four persons or where four persons derive it from one all agree that these can refuse him; the dispute only concerns one person who derived his rights from four. Admon is of the opinion that he can tell him, ‘At all events my path is in your fields’, while the Rabbis hold that the other can answer him, ‘If you will keep quiet, well and good; and if not, I will return the deeds to their original owners whom you will have no chance to call to law’. May it, then, be suggested that R. Abba holds the view of the Rabbis and R. Jeremiah that of Admon? R. Abba can tell you: I may even hold the view of Admon; he made his ruling there only because he can say to him, ‘Whatever you wish to plead, Similarly, the consciousness of the presence of one’s own wife mitigates the sensual desires.

(20) A son of whom it is not known whether he was a nine-months child of the deceased, or a seven-months one of the levir. (V. our Mishnah).

(21) Lit., ‘to divide’, or ‘to dispute’.

(25) Lit., ‘that man’.

(26) The son concerning whom it is uncertain whether he was a nine months child of his mother's first, or a seven-months child of her second husband. Cf. supra n. 2.

(27) Neither from the sons of his mother's first, nor from those of her second husband. As his claim is indefinite, since he cannot possibly know who his father really was, each group of heirs, whose claim to the estate of their respective fathers is definite and certain, can plead that he is not the son of their father.

(28) Infra 100b. When he dies, the two groups of brothers, since they have exactly equal claims upon his estate, are entitled to equal shares in it.

(29) While in the Mishnah cited their claim is certain and his is not, in this case his claim is certain while theirs is not. His claim is certain since at all events he is entitled either to all the estate (if he is the son of the deceased) or to a part at least (if he is the son of the levir), their claim, however, is doubtful since it is possible that he is the son of the deceased and they, as the sons of the levir, have no claim whatsoever upon the estate.

(30) Cf. supra note 9.

(31) Cf. supra p. 236, n. 11.

(32) They know exactly whose children they are and by virtue of whose rights they advance their claims.

(33) He is not sure whose son he is.

(34) He himself whose claim to heirship is certain is also in doubt as to who exactly his father was and by virtue of whose rights he is entitled to the estate.

(35) V. supra p. 236, n. 2.

(36) V. loc. cit. n. 3.

(37) Here, as in the Mishnah, one claim is a certainty (that of the sons of the levir) while the other (that of the ‘doubtful son’) is not.

(38) And the half he already received he would return. This, of course, applies to the case only where one share in the levir's estate exceeds half the estate of the first deceased brother.

(39) Once the levir received a half of the estate of his deceased brother it cannot again be taken away from his heirs. The second claim of the ‘doubtful son’ is, therefore, invalid.

(40) The sons of the levir must either return to the ‘doubtful son’ the half which their father had received or allow him in their father's estate a share equal to theirs.

my only path lies in your fields’, but could such a plea be advanced here! And R. Jeremiah can tell you: I may uphold even the view of the Rabbis, for the Rabbis made their ruling there only because he can tell him, ‘If you keep silence, well and good, and if not I will return the deeds to their original owners and you will have no chance to call them to law’, but could such a plea be advanced here!

Where a ‘doubtful son’ and a levir came to claim their shares in the estate of the grandfather, the former pleading, ‘I am the son of the deceased and half of the estate belongs, therefore, to me’, while the levir pleads, ‘You are my own son and you have, therefore, no share whatsoever’, the levir’s claim being a certainty and that of the ‘doubtful son’ a doubtful one, doubt may not supersede a certainty.

Where the ‘doubtful son’ and the sons of the levir came to claim their shares in the estate of their grandfather, the former pleading, ‘I am the son of the deceased and half of the estate is, therefore, mine’ while the sons of the levir plead, ‘You are our brother and you have a share like one of us’, they receive the half which he concedes to them while he receives the third which they concede to him, and thus a sixth remains, which, being property of uncertain ownership, is to be equally divided.

Where the grandfather and the levir [claim their shares] in the estate of the ‘doubtful son’ or where the grandfather and the ‘doubtful son’ [claim their shares] in the estate of the levir, the estate is to be regarded as money of uncertain ownership and is to be equally divided. (25) In the Gemara it is explained that this refers to the melog property only. In respect to the kethubah Beth Shammai agree with Beth Hillel.
(26) It being a matter of doubt whether the levirate bond with the levir constitutes such a close relationship as that of an actual marriage, the right of heirship as between her husband's heirs and hers cannot be definitely determined and the property must, therefore, be equally divided between them.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 38b
and the levirate bond of a married woman renders her ‘doubtfully married’.1 ‘The levirate bond of a betrothed woman renders her doubtfully betrothed’, for were we to assume that she is regarded as definitely betrothed, [how could both] BETH SHAMMAI AND BETH HILLEL AGREE THAT SHE MAY SELL IT OR GIVE IT AWAY AND THAT HER ACT IS LEGALLY VALID when we learned: If she came into the possession of property while she was betrothed, Beth Shammai said, she may sell it, and Beth Hillel said, she may not sell it, but both agree that if she had sold or had given it away her act is legally valid!2 Consequently3 it must be inferred that the levirate bond of a betrothed woman renders her ‘doubtfully betrothed’.4 ‘The levirate bond of a married woman renders her doubtfully married’, for had it been possible to assume that she is regarded as definitely married, [how could] Beth Shammai state that THE HEIRS OF HER HUSBAND ARE TO SHARE IT WITH THE HEIRS OF HER FATHER when we learned: If she came into the possession of property while she was married, both5 agree that, if she had sold or given it away, her husband may seize it from the hand of the buyers!6 Consequently it must be inferred that the levirate bond of a married woman renders her ‘doubtfully married’.7

Said Rabbah to him:8 Why, then, do they9 dispute on [the question of the estate] itself after the death [of the widow]? Let them rather dispute on the question of the usufruct while she is alive! No, said Rabbah, both clauses deal with property which came into her possession while she was married; and the levirate bond of a married woman stamps her as doubtfully married. In the first clause, therefore, where she is alive, she is the certain possessor10 while they are only doubtful possessors, and doubt cannot override a certainty.11 In the final clause, however, where she is dead, both groups come equally as heirs12 and are, therefore,13 to take equal shares.14

Abaye pointed out an objection against him:15 Cannot a doubt, in accordance with the view of Beth Shammai, override a certainty? Surely we learned: [In the case where] a16 house collapsed upon a man17 and his father or upon a man17 and those whose heir he was,18 and that man had against him the claim of his wife's kethubah19 or that of a creditor,20 [and in the first case], the heirs of the father plead that the son died first and the father afterwards,21 while the creditor pleads that the father died first and the son afterwards,22 Beth Shammai hold [that the amount in dispute is] to be divided,23 and Beth Hillel hold that the estate is to remain in its former status.24 Now here, surely, [the claim of] the heirs of the father is a certainty25 and that of the creditor is only a doubt26 and yet27 the doubtful claim overrides the certainty!27 — Beth Shammai are of the opinion that a bond of indebtedness which is due for repayment is regarded as [already] repaid!28

And whence do you derive this?29 — [From] what we learned: If their husbands30 died before they drank,31 Beth Shammai rule that they are to receive their kethuboth32 and that they need not drink,33 and Beth Hillel rule that they either drink33 or they do not receive their kethuboth.34 [But how can it be ruled,] ‘They either drink’, when the All Merciful said, Then shall the man bring his wife,35 and he is not there! Consequently [the meaning must be that] as they do not drink they are not to receive their kethuboth.32 Now here, surely, it is a matter of doubt, it being uncertain whether she did play the harlot36 or not,37 and yet the doubt overrides the certainty.38 Consequently39 it must be inferred that a bond of indebtedness which is due for repayment is regarded as already repaid.40

Abaye,41 then,42 should have raised his objection from this!43 — [The law of] a wife's kethubah might be different owing to considerations of courtesy.44

Then let him45 raise his objection from the law of the kethubah in our Mishnah!46 They47 do not dispute this point.48

But do they not? Surely we learned,49 IF SHE DIED, WHAT SHALL BE DONE WITH HER KETHUBAH AND WITH PROPERTY THAT COMES IN AND GOES OUT WITH HER? BETH SHAMMAI SAID: THE HEIRS OF HER HUSBAND ARE TO SHARE IT WITH THE HEIRS OF HER FATHER; BETH HILLEL SAID: THE PROPERTY IS TO REMAIN WITH THOSE IN WHOSE POSSESSION IT IS! — It is this that was meant: IF SHE DIED, WHAT SHALL BE DONE WITH HER KETHUBAH? and then [the enquiry] was abandoned. As to PROPERTY THAT COMES IN AND GOES OUT WITH HER, BETH SHAMMAI SAID: THE HEIRS OF HER HUSBAND ARE TO SHARE WITH THE HEIRS OF HER FATHER AND BETH HILLEL SAID: THE PROPERTY IS TO REMAIN WITH THOSE IN WHOSE POSSESSION IT IS.

Said R. Ashi: The inference from the expressions in our Mishnah leads to the same conclusion; for it was stated, THE HEIRS OF HER HUSBAND ARE TO SHARE WITH THE HEIRS OF HER FATHER and it was not stated ‘the heirs of the father [are to share it] with the heirs of the husband’. This proves it.

[Reverting to the previous question,] Abaye replied: The first clause [deals with property] that came into her possession while she was awaiting [the decision of] the levir, and the latter clause [with such] as came into her possession while she was still with her husband.

(1) Cf. supra n. 3.
(2) Keth. 78a., Sonc. ed. pp. 490ff q.v.
(3) Since in the case of a definite betrothal Beth Hillel, contrary to the opinion of Beth Shammai do not allow the widow the right of sale or gift, while in the first clause of our Mishnah they do.
(4) Hence Beth Shammai, who concede to the widow the right to sell and to give away even where her betrothal was certain, with all the more reason concede such rights to the widow spoken of in the first clause of our Mishnah where her betrothal is only doubtful. Beth Hillel, too, since in the case of a definite betrothal they agree that a sale or gift that had already taken place is valid, may rightly concede to the widow in the case of doubtful betrothal the full rights of selling and giving away.
(5) Beth Shammai and Beth Hillel.
(6) Keth. loc. cit.
(7) And so both Beth Shammai and Beth Hillel, who in the case of a definite marriage recognize the husband's right to seize from the buyers even property that his wife had already sold, agree that in the case of our Mishnah, the status of marriage being a matter of doubt, the husband's rights are also a matter of doubt. Hence Beth Shammai might well maintain that the property which is of doubtful ownership should be equally divided between the rival claimants, while Beth Hillel may maintain that the widow's right of possession is to be given priority since she came into the possession of the property at a time when her married status was a matter of uncertainty.
(8) ‘Ulla.
(9) Beth Shammai and Beth Hillel.
(10) Since the property is in any case hers.
(11) Hence Beth Shammai as well as Beth Hillel agree that she is fully entitled to sell the property or to give it away.
(12) Lit., ‘those come to inherit’ (bis). Had the levirate bond borne the same force as marriage the estate would undoubtedly have become the property of the levir only. Had it not borne the same force as marriage the estate would have been given to her father's heirs only, and the levir would have had no claim whatsoever. The claims of either group are consequently evenly balanced.
(13) Since the claim of either is equally doubtful.
(14) According to Beth Shammai. Beth Hillel's view, on the other hand, may be justified on the ground that the widow's father's heirs are her certain relatives and are, therefore, entitled to inherit that which was in her possession. No such claim, however, could be advanced by the husband's relatives since the husband himself was never for one moment in definite and undisputed possession of the property in question.

(17) Lit., ‘upon him’.
(18) Brothers, for instance, or other relatives, who had no other heirs but him.
V. Glos.

And he left no other money or possessions wherewith to meet his obligations, while those whose heir he was did leave possessions.

The son did not consequently inherit from his father whose estate would, therefore, belong to the surviving heirs.

And the son had, therefore, inherited his father's estate which may consequently be seized in payment of the son's debts.

Between the creditor and the heirs, their respective claims being regarded by Beth Shammai as of equal force.

B.B. 157a; With the heirs of the father. The claim of the heirs is regarded by Beth Hillel as a certainty, since they are in possession of the estate either as heirs of the father or as heirs of the son, while the claim of the creditor, being dependent on his being put into possession of the estate by the court, is of doubtful validity, and 'doubt cannot override a certainty'.

v. supra n. 8.

According to Beth Shammai.

Lit., 'and doubt comes and takes away from the hands of certainty'. V. supra n. 8.

The amount of the debt is deemed to be in the virtual possession of the creditor. The claims respectively of the heirs and the creditor are, consequently, of equal force. If the father died first his son inherited his estate and the creditor had immediately come into the legal possession of a share of the estate equal to the amount of his debt. If the son died first the heirs come into possession of the entire estate. As it is not known who died first the claims of the two parties are equally doubtful and of equal validity.

That Beth Shammai hold the opinion just attributed to them.

Of women suspected of illicit intercourse with strangers after they had been warned by their husbands. V. Glos. s.v. sotah.

Pl. of kethubah, v. Glos.

Sot. 25a. The amount of the debt is deemed to be in the virtual possession of the creditor. The claims respectively of the heirs and the creditor are, consequently, of equal force. If the father died first his son inherited his estate and the creditor had immediately come into the legal possession of a share of the estate equal to the amount of his debt. If the son died first the heirs come into possession of the entire estate. As it is not known who died first the claims of the two parties are equally doubtful and of equal validity.

Since the rule is that 'doubt cannot override certainty's

The kethubah is, therefore, deemed to have been collected as soon as the husband died, and the widow is consequently deemed to be the virtual possessor of such a portion of his estate as would cover the amount of her kethubah.

Whose objection to Rabbah, supra, was based on a Mishnah from Baba Bathra.

Since the principle of virtual possession did not occur to him as the reason for allowing a doubtful claim in face of certain one.

The Mishnah just cited which is embodied in the Tractates of Sotah and Kethuboth both of which belong to the same order as our Tractate. Since the principles in both Mishnahs are identical, why did Abaye resort to a Mishnah in another order when one was available in our order of Nashim.

(tk52b ‘gracefulness’, ‘loveliness’. It is possible that in order that pleasant and cordial relations may exist between husband and wife the law has been enacted that, despite the general rule that 'doubt cannot override a certainty', a woman shall be privileged to collect her kethubah even when her own claim is of a doubtful character and that of her litigants is a certain one. No objection could, therefore, be put forward from such a special case; and Abaye had consequently to resort to a Mishnah in Nezikin. Other explanations of המשון והנש (% v. Jast.): ‘In order to make her attractive’, ‘that women may be willing to marry’.

Abaye.

Where, according to Beth Shammai, the heirs of the father (by virtue of his being heir to his daughter, the widow), though their claim is of a doubtful nature, share the amount of the kethubah with the heirs of the husband whose rights to the amount of the kethubah (as the heirs of the husband) are certain. At the moment it is assumed that Beth Shammai's disagreement with Beth Hillel extends to the KETHUBAH as well as to the PROPERTY THAT COMES IN AND GOES OUT WITH HER; and ‘considerations of courtesy’ could not, of course, apply when the woman is dead and the claimants are her male heirs. Cf. Keth. 97b.

(50) That Beth Shammai’s disagreement with Beth Hillel does not extend to the question of the kethubah.

(51) I.e., the former take a share in that which is virtually in the possession of the latter, viz., the melog property which belongs to the heirs of the wife’s father.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 39a

And Abaye\(^1\) maintains that a husband's rights\(^2\) have the same force as his wife's.\(^3\) Said Raba to him:\(^4\) If she came into possession of property while she was still With her husband, no one\(^5\) would dispute the view that his rights are superior to hers.\(^6\) Both [clauses of our Mishnah], however, [deal with property] which came into her possession while she was awaiting [the decision of] the levir; the first clause speaking of one to whom a ma'amor had not been addressed,\(^7\) and the final clause, of one to whom a ma'amor had been addressed.\(^8\) And Raba is of the opinion that a ma'amor, according to Beth Shammai, renders [the widow] definitely betrothed and doubtfully married. She is deemed to be definitely betrothed in respect of excluding her rival;\(^9\) and she is deemed to be doubtfully married in respect of taking a share in the property.\(^10\)

A statement was made in the name of R. Eleazar in agreement with Raba and a statement was made in the name of R. Jose son of R. Hanina in agreement with Abaye. Could R. Eleazar, however, have made such a statement? Surely R. Eleazar said: A ma'amor, according to Beth Shammai, constitutes a kinyan in so far only as to keep out the rival!\(^11\) — Reverse [the statements]. If you prefer I might say: There is really no need to reverse [them, for] R. Eleazar can tell you, ‘What I said [amounted to this]: that a letter of divorce alone is not enough\(^12\) but that she requires also halizah; did I state, however, that the ma'amor constitutes no kinyan even in respect of taking a share in her property’!\(^13\)

Said R. Papa: The inference from our Mishnah is in agreement with the opinion of Abaye,\(^14\) although ‘IF SHE DIED’ presents a difficulty.\(^15\) Seeing that it was stated PROPERTY THAT COMES IN AND GOES OUT WITH HER, what is meant by COMES IN and what by GOES OUT? Obviously,\(^16\) ‘COMES INTO the possession of her husband’\(^17\) and ‘GOES OUT from the possession of her husband into the possession of her father’\(^18\).

‘Although IF SHE DIED presents a difficulty’: Why should they\(^19\) dispute [on the question of the property] itself, which can arise only in the event of the woman's death\(^20\) , let them rather dispute on the question of the usufruct which arises even when the woman is still alive!\(^21\) The fact is that no further objection [can be raised].\(^22\)

WHERE HE MARRIED HER, SHE IS DEEMED etc. For what practical law [was this statement needed]? — R. Jose b. Hanina replied: To indicate that he may divorce her by means of a letter of divorce\(^23\) and that he may remarry her.

‘He may divorce her by means of a letter of divorce’; Is not this obvious?\(^24\) — It might have been assumed that, since the All Merciful said\textsuperscript{25} And perform the duty of a husband's brother unto her,\textsuperscript{26} she retains the obligation of the first levirate relationship\textsuperscript{27} and so may be set free\textsuperscript{28} only through halizah but not through a letter of divorce, hence it was necessary to teach us [that the law is not so].

‘He may remarry her’; Is not this obvious?\textsuperscript{29} — It might have been assumed that since he\textsuperscript{30} has already performed\textsuperscript{31} the commandment which the All Merciful has imposed upon him, she shall now be forbidden to him as the wife of his brother, hence it was necessary to teach us [that he may nevertheless remarry her]. Might it not be suggested that the law is so indeed?\textsuperscript{32} — Scripture stated, And take her to him to wife;\textsuperscript{33} as soon as he has taken her she is deemed to be his wife in every respect.

SAVE THAT HER KETHUBAH etc. What is the reason? — A wife has been given\textsuperscript{34} to him\textsuperscript{35} from heaven.\textsuperscript{36} If, however, she is unable nothing more’. The inference from our Mishnah is undoubtedly in agreement with the view of Abaye, the only difficulty being the one mentioned. to obtain her kethubah from her first [husband], provision was made that she [is to receive it] from the second\textsuperscript{37} in order that it may not be easy for him to divorce her.\textsuperscript{38}

MISHNAH. THE DUTY OF THE LEVIRATE MARRIAGE IS INCUMBENT UPON THE ELDEST [OF THE SURVIVING BROTHERS].\textsuperscript{39} IF HE DECLINES, ALL THE OTHER BROTHERS ARE APPROACHED IN TURN.\textsuperscript{40} IF THEY ALL DECLINE, THE ELDEST IS AGAIN APPROACHED AND HE IS TOLD, ‘THE DUTY IS INCUMBENT UPON YOU; EITHER SUBMIT TO HALIZAH OR PERFORM THE LEVIRATE MARRIAGE.

IF HE\textsuperscript{41} WISHED TO SUSPEND ACTION\textsuperscript{42} UNTIL A MINOR\textsuperscript{43} BECOMES OF AGE, OR UNTIL THE ELDEST\textsuperscript{43} RETURNS FROM A COUNTRY BEYOND THE SEA OR [UNTIL A BROTHER WHO WAS] DEAF\textsuperscript{44} OR AN IMBECILE [SHOULD RECOVER],\textsuperscript{45} HE IS NOT TO BE LISTENED TO, BUT IS TOLD, ‘THE DUTY IS INCUMBENT UPON YOU; EITHER SUBMIT TO HALIZAH OR PERFORM THE LEVIRATE MARRIAGE.

GEMARA. It was stated: [On the relative importance of] the intercourse of a younger, and the halizah of an elder brother there is a difference of opinion between R. Johanan and R. Joshua b. Levi. One holds that the intercourse of the younger is preferable and the other holds that the halizah of the elder is preferable. ‘One\textsuperscript{46} holds that the intercourse of the younger is preferable,’ because the commandment, surely, is to perform the levirate marriage;\textsuperscript{47} and ‘the other\textsuperscript{46} holds that the halizah of the elder is preferable’, because in the presence of an elder brother the intercourse of the younger is valueless.\textsuperscript{48}

We learned, IF HE DECLINED, ALL THE OTHER BROTHERS ARE APPROACHED IN TURN. Does not this mean that he declined to contract the levirate marriage but [was willing] to submit to the halizah? And yet it was stated, ALL THE OTHER BROTHERS ARE APPROACHED IN TURN, which proves\textsuperscript{49} that the intercourse of a younger brother is preferred! — No; he wished neither to submit to halizah nor to perform the levirate marriage. Similarly, then, in the case of the other brothers, [the meaning is that] they declined both halizah and levirate marriage;\textsuperscript{50} why, then, is THE ELDEST AGAIN APPROACHED with the object of bringing pressure upon him? Let pressure be brought to bear upon them!\textsuperscript{51} — As the duty\textsuperscript{52} is incumbent upon him, pressure also must be used against him.

We learned, IF HE WISHED TO SUSPEND ACTION UNTIL A MINOR BECOMES OF AGE ... HE IS NOT TO BE LISTENED TO. But if the intercourse of a minor is to be preferred, why IS HE NOT TO BE LISTENED TO? Let us rather wait, since on becoming of age he might contract the levirate marriage! — Following your view [it might similarly be objected], why [if he wished to wait] UNTIL THE ELDEST RETURNS FROM A COUNTRY BEYOND THE SEA . . . HE IS NOT TO BE LISTENED TO? Let us rather wait, since on his return he might contract the levirate marriage! The fact is that the performance of a commandment must not be delayed.

(1) Since he explains the latter clause to be dealing with property that came into the wife's possession while her husband was still alive.

(2) To his wife's melog property.

(3) Lit., 'his hand is like her hand'. The husband's rights, according to Beth Hillel, he maintains, are in no way superior to those of his wife. Hence, when he dies and the widow comes only under the levirate bond, the levir's rights, which cannot have the same force as those of a husband, are inevitably inferior to those of the widow. The property, therefore, must remain in the possession of herself or her heirs. Beth Shammai, on the other hand, maintain that a husband's rights have more force than those of his wife. When he dies and the levir steps in by virtue of the levirate bond, the latter's rights, though inferior to those of the husband, are of equal force with those of the widow whose rights also are inferior to those of her husband.

(4) Abaye.

(5) Lit., all the world', even Beth Hillel.

(6) Lit., 'his hand is better than her hand', and the husband's heirs would consequently have been entitled to the property.

(7) By the levir, before the property came into her possession. The levirate bond alone is not sufficient to effect a transfer of the property to the levir.

(8) And after that the property came into her possession. As the ma'amor, according to Beth Shammai, is regarded as virtual marriage (v. supra 29a), the levir also is entitled to the property. Hence it must be divided. Beth Hillel, on the other hand, not regarding a ma'amor as marriage, deny the levir all rights upon the property which is, therefore, to remain with the heirs of the woman.

(9) Her sister who does not cause her to be forbidden to the levir as 'his zekukah's sister'. V. supra 29a.

(10) The levir is not entitled to all the property as if he had actually married the widow, but only to a share of it.

(11) Supra 29a, Ned. 74a.

(12) When a ma'amor had been addressed to the widow.

(13) Certainly not. Consequently his statement in agreement with the view of Raba may be perfectly authentic.

(14) That the final clause deals with property that came into the woman's possession while she was still living with her husband.

(15) This is explained infra.

(16) Lit., 'not?'

(17) At the time they came into her possession.

(18) When she dies. The property must consequently have come into her possession when she was still living with her husband, as Abaye maintains.

(19) Beth Shammai and Beth Hillel.

(34) Lit., 'they caused him to acquire'.
The levir.

He has neither chosen her nor has he undertaken any obligations towards her. She was imposed upon him by the divine law of the levirate marriage. The claim of her kethubah must, therefore, be a charge upon the estate of her first husband whose choice she had been.

Brother.

in Rabbinic literature usually signifies one who is deaf from birth. Hence ‘a deaf-mute’.

[Tosaf.: He referred her to a deaf brother etc.].

Lit., ‘he who’.

Halizah being merely a substitute for it.

Since the duty is, in the first instance, incumbent upon the elder.

Since the younger brothers are asked to contract the levirate marriage when the elder expressed his willingness to submit to halizah.

Since the same expression of unwillingness is used.

If the eldest had only refused marriage but was willing to submit to halizah, as has first been assumed, one could explain our Mishnah to mean that ‘THE ELDEST IS AGAIN APPROACHED with a view to halizah’; he being the eldest, halizah also is first offered to him. If, however, he refused both halizah and marriage, as has now been explained, and the object of approaching him is coercion, why should the Beth din be troubled to summon him again in order to coerce him when any of the brothers who happens to be near at hand might just as well be coerced?

Of the levirate marriage. V. our Mishnah.

And this is the only reason why his request is not granted.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 39b

Some say: As regards intercourse all agree that the intercourse of a younger brother is preferred. They only differ on the halizah of a younger brother. And the statement ran thus: [On the relative importance of] the halizah of a younger, and the halizah of an elder brother there is a difference of opinion between R. Johanan and R. Joshua b. Levi. One holds that the halizah of the elder is preferable, and the other holds that both are of equal importance. ‘One holds that the halizah of the elder is preferable because the commandment surely, is incumbent upon the elder. And the other [maintains that] the statement, ‘the commandment is incumbent upon the elder’, [was made] in respect of the levirate marriage; in respect of the halizah, however, they are both of equal importance.

We learned, IF THEY ALSO DECLINE, THE ELDEST IS AGAIN APPROACHED. Does not this mean that they declined to contract the levirate marriage but [were willing] to submit to halizah? And yet it was stated, THE ELDEST IS AGAIN APPROACHED, which proves that the halizah of the elder is preferred! — No; they declined the halizah as well as the levirate marriage.

Similarly, in the case of the eldest brother, he declined the halizah as well as the levirate marriage; why, then, IS THE ELDEST AGAIN APPROACHED with the object of coercing him? Let coercion be used against them! — As the duty is incumbent upon him, coercion also must be used against him.

Come and hear: IF HE WISHES TO SUSPEND ACTION . . . UNTIL THE ELDEST RETURNS FROM A COUNTRY BEYOND THE SEA . . . HE IS NOT TO BE LISTENED TO. But if the halizah of the eldest is preferable why IS HE NOT TO BE LISTENED TO? Let us rather wait, since it is possible that when he returns he will submit to halizah! — Following your view [it might similarly be objected], why [if he wishes to postpone action] UNTIL A MINOR BECOMES OF AGE . . . HE IS NOT TO BE LISTENED TO? Let us rather wait, since, on becoming of age, he might contract the levirate marriage? The fact is that the performance of a commandment must not be delayed.9

We learned elsewhere: At first, when the object was the fulfilment10 of the commandment, the precept of the levirate marriage was preferable to that of halizah; now, however, when the object is not the fulfilment of the commandment, the precept of halizah, it was laid down, is preferable to that of the levirate marriage.11 Rab said: But no coercion12 may be used.13

When they14 came before Rab he addressed them thus: ‘If you15 wish, submit to halizah; if you prefer, contract the levirate marriage; the All Merciful has given you the choice.16 And if the man like not to take his brother's wife,17 implying, if he likes he may, whenever he wishes, submit to halizah or, if he prefers, contract the levirate marriage.’

Rab Judah also is of the opinion that no coercion may be applied; since Rab Judah has ordained [the following formula] for a deed of halizah: ['We certify] that So-and-so daughter of So-and-so brought before us into court her brother-in-law So-and-so, and we have ascertained him to be the paternal brother of the deceased. We told him, "If you wish to contract the levirate marriage, contract it, and if not, incline18 towards her your right foot". He inclined19 towards her his right foot and she removed his shoe from off his foot and spat out before him, a spittle which has been seen by the court upon the ground’.

R. Hiyya b. Iwya in the name of Rab Judah concluded20 as follows: ‘And we read before them [the relevant passage] that is written in the Book of the Law of Moses’.

‘We ascertained him’. On this, R. Aha and Rabina are in dispute. One says: Through [qualified] witnesses. The other says: Even a relative and even a woman21 [may tender the evidence].

The law is that it22 is a mere intimation, and that even a relative and even a woman [may tender the evidence].

‘At first, when the object was the fulfilment of the commandment, the precept of the levirate marriage was preferable to that of halizah; now, however, when the object is not the fulfilment of the commandment, the precept of halizah, it was laid down, is preferable to that of the levirate marriage’. Said Rami b. Hama in the name of R. Isaac: It was re-enacted that the precept of the levirate marriage is preferable to that of halizah.

Said R. Nahman b. Isaac to him: Have the generations improved in their morals? — At first they held the opinion of Abba Saul, and finally they adopted that of the Rabbis. For it was taught: Abba Saul said, ‘If a levir marries his sister-in-law on account of her beauty, or in order to gratify his sexual desires or with any other ulterior motive, it is as if he has infringed the law of incest; and I am even inclined to think that the child [of such a union] is a bastard’. But the Sages said, ‘Her husband's brother shall go in unto her,23 whatever the motive’.24

Who is the Tanna of the following statement which our Rabbis taught: ‘Her husband's brother shall go in unto her,23 is a commandment; for originally25 she stood in relation to him in the status of permissibility, then26 she was forbidden to him, and then again27 permitted; consequently it might have been assumed that she reverts to her original status of permissibility, hence it was specifically stated, Her husband's brother shall go in unto her,23 it is a commandment’. — Who, now, is the Tanna? — R. Isaac b. Abdimi replied. It is [the statement of] Abba Saul, and it is this that he meant:

Her husband's brother shall go in unto her,\(^{23}\) is a commandment; for originally\(^{25}\) she stood in relation to him in the status of permissibility; he could have married her, if he wished, on account of her beauty and he could have married her, if he wished, in order to gratify his sexual desires; then\(^{28}\) she was forbidden to him, and then again\(^{29}\) permitted; consequently it might have been assumed that she reverts to her original status of permissibility,\(^{30}\) hence it was specifically stated, Her husband's brother shall go in unto her\(^{31}\) only with the intention of performing the commandment.\(^{32}\)

Raba said: You may even say [that the authorship\(^{33}\) is that of] the Rabbis,\(^{34}\) and it is this that was meant: Her husband's brother shall go in unto her,\(^{31}\) is a commandment; for originally\(^{35}\) she was in the status of permissibility; he could have married her if he wished and, if he preferred, he could have abstained from marrying her; then\(^{28}\) she was forbidden to him, and then again\(^{29}\) permitted; consequently it might have been assumed that she was to revert to her original status of permissibility, so that, if he wished, he might marry her and, if he preferred, he could abstain from marrying her. [You say,] ‘If he preferred he could abstain from marrying her’? Surely she is tied to him;\(^{36}\) can she be set free by no act whatever! — Say rather: [It might have been assumed that] if he wished he might marry her, and, if he preferred, he might submit to halizah, hence it was specifically stated her husband's brother shall go in unto her,\(^{31}\) it is a commandment.\(^{37}\)

Read, then,\(^{38}\) the first clause: ‘It shall be eaten without leaven in a holy place,\(^{39}\) is a commandment; for originally¹ its status in relation to him was one of permissibility; then² it was forbidden, and again³ permitted; consequently one might assume that it reverts to its first status of permissibility, hence it was specifically stated, It shall be eaten without leaven in a holy place,⁴ it is a commandment'. Now, according to Raba who said that it⁵ represents the view of⁶ the Rabbis, one could well explain that what is meant here⁷ is this: It shall be eaten without leaven in a holy place⁴ is a commandment, for at first⁸ its status in relation to him was one of permissibility since, if he desired, he could eat it and, if he preferred, he could abstain from eating it; then⁹ it was forbidden, and again³ permitted; consequently it might be assumed that it reverts to its first status of permissibility⁴ so that, if he wished, he could eat it and, if he preferred, he could abstain from eating it. — [You say,] ‘If he preferred he could abstain from eating it’? Surely it is written in the Scriptures, And they shall eat those things wherewith atonement was made¹¹ which teaches that the priests must eat them, and that the owner attains thereby atonement! Say rather: [it might be assumed that] if he wished, he¹² may eat it¹³ himself and, if he preferred, another priest may eat it, hence it was specifically stated, It shall be eaten’ without leaven in a holy place,¹⁴ it is a commandment.¹⁵ According to R. Isaac b. Abdimi, however, who said that it¹⁶ [represents the view of] Abba Saul, what two alternatives¹⁷ exist here?¹⁸ And were you to suggest¹⁹ that if he wished he could eat it¹³ to appease his appetite and, if he preferred, he could devour it gluttonously [it may be retorted] be described as proper eating? Surely Resh Lakish said, ‘He who eats gluttonously on the Day of Atonement²⁰ is exempt [from kareth],²¹ since [Scripture has stated], Shall not be afflicted!²² [Were you to suggest], however,²³ that if he wished he could eat it²⁴ unleavened and, if he preferred, he could eat it unleavened and, if he preferred, he could devour it gluttonously [it may be retorted] it is written in Scripture, It shall not be baked with leaven! Again [Were you, to suggest,]²⁵ that if he wished he could eat it²⁶ unleavened and, if he preferred, he could eat it as a dumpling,²⁷ how [it could be retorted] is one to imagine [such a dumpling]? If it is unleavened, well, then it is unleavened;²⁸ and if it is not unleavened, the All Merciful, surely, has said without leaven!²⁹ — No;³⁰ it³¹ may indeed be assumed to be unleavened, but the object of the exposition of the Scriptural text³² was to forbid it.³³ In respect of what practical issue, then,³⁴ has it been stated that a dumpling may be regarded as unleavened bread? — [The statement was made] to indicate that a man may perform with it³¹ his duty³⁵ on the Passover. Though he made it first into a dumpling, it is nevertheless designated the ‘bread of affliction’, since he subsequently baked it in an oven. Consequently a man may perform with it his duty³⁵ on the Passover. MISHNAH. IF A LEVIR PARTICIPATED IN HALIZAH WITH HIS DECEASED BROTHER’S WIFE HE IS REGARDED AS ONE OF THE OTHER BROTHERS IN RESPECT OF INHERITANCE.³⁶ IF, HOWEVER, THE FATHER³⁷ WAS LIVING,³⁸ THE ESTATE BELONGS TO THE FATHER.³⁹

HE WHO MARRIES HIS DECEASED BROTHER'S WIFE GAINS POSSESSION OF HIS BROTHER'S ESTATE. R. JUDAH SAID: IN EITHER CASE, IF THE FATHER WAS LIVING THE ESTATE BELONGS TO THE FATHER.

GEMARA. Is not this obvious? — It might have been presumed that halizah takes the place of the levirate marriage and he receives, therefore, all the estate, hence it was taught [that he does not]. If so, why was it stated that HE IS REGARDED AS ONE OF THE OTHER BROTHERS when it should have been stated, he is to be regarded only as one of the brothers! — In truth [this is the purpose of our Mishnah]: It might have been assumed that because he deprived her [of levirate marriage] he shall be penalized, hence we were taught [that he does receive a share].

IF, HOWEVER, THE FATHER WAS LIVING, [THE ESTATE BELONGS TO HIM], for a Master said that a father takes precedence over all his lineal descendants.

HE WHO MARRIES HIS DECEASED BROTHER'S WIFE etc. What is the reason? — The All Merciful said, Shall succeed in the name of his brother, and behold he has succeeded.

R. JUDAH SAID etc. Said 'Ulla: The halachah is in agreement with R. Judah, and R. Isaac Nappaha likewise said: The halachah is in agreement with R. Judah.

‘Ulla, furthermore, (others say, R. Isaac Nappaha) said: What is R. Judah's reason? — Because it is written in Scripture, And it shall be, that the firstborn that he beareth, [he is] like the firstborn; as the firstborn has nothing while his father is alive, so has this one also nothing while his father is alive. If [one were to suggest that] as the firstborn receives a double portion after his father's death so shall this one also receive a double portion after his father's death, [it might be retorted]: Is it written, ‘Shall succeed in the name of his father'? It is written, surely, ‘Shall succeed in the name of his brother', not ‘in the name of his father'. Might it be suggested that, where the father is not alive to receive the inheritance, the law of the levirate marriage should be carried out, but where the father is alive [and the levir] does not receive the inheritance the law of the levirate marriage shall not be carried out? — Has the All Merciful in any way made the levirate marriage dependent on the inheritance? The levir must contract the levirate marriage in any case, and if any inheritance is available he receives it; if not, he does not receive it.

The Bible teacher, R. Hanina, once sat before R. Jannai, and as he sat there he stated: The halachah is in agreement with R. Judah. The other called out to him: Go out, read Biblical verses outside; the halachah is not in agreement with R. Judah.

A tanna recited in the presence of R. Nahman: The halachah is not in agreement with R. Judah. The other said to him: In agreement with whom, then? In agreement with the Rabbis? This is surely obvious, [since in a dispute between] one individual and a majority the halachah is in agreement with the majority! — ‘Shall I’, the first asked him, ‘reject it'? The other replied, ‘you were taught [that] the halachah is [in agreement with R. Judah] which, presenting to you a difficulty, you reversed, and in so far as you reversed it your wording is well justified.

MISHNAH. IF A LEVIR PARTICIPATED IN HALIZAH WITH HIS DECEASED BROTHER'S WIFE HE IS FORBIDDEN TO MARRY HER RELATIVES AND SHE IS FORBIDDEN TO MARRY HIS RELATIVES.

(1) Before its ingredients were consecrated.
(2) When its ingredients were consecrated as a meal-offering.
(3) When the ‘handful’ (v. Lev. VI, 8) had been offered up upon the altar.
The first clause of the Baraitha cited.

Lit., ‘this, whose’.

In the second clause which presumably represents the views of the same authors.

Before its ingredients were consecrated.

When its ingredients were consecrated as a meal-offering.

Cur. edd. enclose ‘then it was forbidden . . . permissibility’ in parentheses.

Ex. XXIX, 33.

The priest who performed the ceremonial.

The meal-offering.

Lev. VI, 9, dealing with the laws of the meal-offering.

Masala. That the first priest (v. supra n. 10) shall eat it.

The first clause of the Baraitha cited.

Analogous to those in the first clause.

Acting (a) with, and (b) without the intention of fulfilling the commandment, which are the alternatives in the case of the levirate marriage in the first clause, are obviously inapplicable here, since whatever be the motive of one's eating, no prohibition, such as is the case with levirate marriages, is thereby infringed.

As the two alternatives.

When eating is prohibited.

V. Glos.

And whatsoever soul it be that shall not be afflicted in that same day, he shall be cut off from his people (Lev. XXIII, 29). An excessive meal being injurious to the body is deemed to be an affliction. Now, since such a meal is not regarded as eating in the case of the Day of Atonement, how could it be regarded as proper eating in the case of a meal offering?

As the two alternatives.

The meal-offering.

Lev. VI, 20.

That of the priests, the remnants of the meal-offering.

(27) קמל(Chm. to mix’), a paste prepared by stirring flour in hot water.

And is not forbidden at all.

Take the meal-offering . . . and eat it without leaven (Lev. X, 12); what need then was there for repeating the same prohibition in Lev. VI, 9?

The eating of the meal-offering with leaven is not one of the alternatives.

The dumpling.

In the first clause of the Baraitha cited.

Lit., ‘to prevent’. A meal-offering may not be prepared in the form of a dumpling even though that paste is unleavened.

Since a meal-offering which must be unleavened may not be prepared in the form of a dumpling.

Of eating unleavened bread. Cf. Ex. XII, 18.

Of the estate of the deceased brother.

Lit., ‘if there is’.

A father takes precedence over a brother in respect of inheritance. V. B.B. 115a and infra.

Whether the levir married, or submitted to the halizah from his sister-in-law.

That participation in the halizah does not deprive the levir of his share in his brother's estate.

The object of our Mishnah is not to state that the levir is entitled to a share but that he is not entitled to all the estate.

That the object of our Mishnah is to indicate his disadvantage. V. supra n. 7.

Halizah with him has placed the widow under the prohibition of marrying any of the brothers.

And shall receive no share at all.

B.B. 115a. V. supra note 4.

Deut. XXV, 6.

The levir who, according to Rabbinic interpretation (v. supra 24a), is the subject of shall succeed.
Deut. XXV, 6.

The levir.

His own and his brother's.

Ibid.

And since he is not entitled to a double portion at the time he steps into the place of his brother he cannot subsequently claim such a portion when he ultimately becomes entitled to a share in the same estate only by virtue of his succession to his father.

Which consequently passes over into the possession of the levir.

V. Keth., Sonc. ed. p. 328, n, 7.

As a superfluous addition.

How could the halachah be in agreement with an individual against the rule of a majority?

Stating, ‘the halachah is not in agreement with R. Judah.

Lit., ‘you reversed well’. [He, however, forgot that he had reversed it; cf, supra 33b, v. Strashun].

All relatives that are Biblically forbidden to husband and wife respectively are Rabbinically forbidden to levir and haluzah respectively.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 40b

HE IS FORBIDDEN TO MARRY HER MOTHER, HER MOTHER'S MOTHER AND HER FATHER'S MOTHER; HER DAUGHTER, HER DAUGHTER'S DAUGHTER AND HER SON'S DAUGHTER; AND ALSO HER SISTER WHILE SHE IS ALIVE. THE OTHER BROTHERS, HOWEVER, ARE PERMITTED. SHE IS FORBIDDEN TO MARRY HIS FATHER AND HIS FATHER'S FATHER; HIS SON AND HIS SON'S SON; HIS BROTHER AND HIS BROTHER'S SON.

A MAN IS PERMITTED TO MARRY THE RELATIVE OF THE RIVAL OF HIS HALUZAH BUT IS FORBIDDEN TO MARRY THE RIVAL OF THE RELATIVE OF HIS HALUZAH.

GEMARA. The question was raised: Were relatives of the second degree forbidden in the case of a haluzah as a preventive measure, or not? Did the Rabbis forbid marriage with relatives of the second degree, as a preventive measure, only in respect of a relative who is pentateuchally forbidden, but in respect of a haluzah the Rabbis did not forbid relatives of the second degree as a preventive measure, or is there perhaps no difference?

— Come and hear: HE IS FORBIDDEN TO MARRY HER MOTHER AND HER MOTHER'S MOTHER, but ‘her mother’s mother’ is not mentioned!

[No.] It is possible that the reason why this relative was omitted is because it was desired to state in the final clause, THE OTHER BROTHERS, HOWEVER, ARE PERMITTED, and, were ‘her mother's mother's mother’ also mentioned it might have been presumed that the brothers are permitted [to marry] her mother's mother's mother only but not her mother's mother or her mother.

Then let ‘her mother's mother's mother’ be mentioned, and let it also be stated: The brothers are permitted to marry all of them! — This is a difficulty.

Come and hear: SHE IS FORBIDDEN TO MARRY HIS FATHER AND HIS FATHER'S FATHER. ‘His father's father,’ at any rate, was mentioned. Is not this due to the levir who participated in the halizah, through whom she is the daughter-in-law of his son?

— No; this is due to the deceased through whom she is his father-in-law of his son.

Come and hear: AND HIS SON'S SON, Is not this due to the levir who participated in the halizah through whom she is the wife of his father's father?

— No; it is due to the deceased through whom she is his father's father's brother's wife.

But, surely, Amemar permitted the marriage of one's father's father's brother's wife! — Amemar interprets that to refer to the son of the grandfather. If so, [HIS SON, AND SON'S SON] are the same as HIS BROTHER AND HIS BROTHER'S SON! — Both his paternal brother and his maternal brother were specified.
Come and hear what R. Hyya taught: Four [categories of relatives are forbidden] and four Rabbinically. His father and his son, his brother and his brother's son are Pentateuchally forbidden; his father's father and his mother's father, his son's son and his daughter's son are forbidden Rabbinically. ‘His father's father’, at any rate, is mentioned here. Is not this due to the levir who participated in the halizah through whom she is his son's daughter-in-law? — No; it is due to the deceased whose son's daughter-in-law she is.

Come and hear: ‘His mother's father’. Is not this due to the levir who participated in the halizah through whom she is his daughter's daughter-in-law? — No; it is due to the deceased through whom she is his daughter's daughter-in-law. Come and hear: ‘And his son's son’. Is not this due to the levir who participated in the halizah through whom she is his father's father's wife? — No; it is due to the deceased through whom she is his father's father's brother's wife. But, surely, Amemar permitted the marriage of one's father's brother's wife! — Amemar explains that to be due to the levir who participated in the halizah, but is of the opinion that relatives of the second degree were forbidden as a preventive measure even in respect of a haluzah.

Come and hear: ‘And the son of his daughter’. Is not this due to the levir who participated in the halizah through whom she is his mother's father's wife? — No; it is due to the deceased through whom she is his mother's father's brother's wife. But, surely, no prohibition as a preventive measure was made in respect of the second degrees of incest! Consequently, it must be due to the levir who participated in the halizah, and thus it may be inferred that relatives of the second degree were forbidden as a preventive measure even in the case of a haluzah. This proves it.

A MAN IS PERMITTED etc. R. Tobi b. Kisna said in the name of Samuel: Where a man had intercourse with the rival of his haluzah the child [born from such a union] is a bastard. What is the reason? — Because she remains under her original prohibition.

Said R. Joseph: We also have learned: A MAN IS PERMITTED TO MARRY THE RELATIVE OF THE RIVAL OF HIS HALUZAH. Now, if you grant that the rival is excluded one can well understand why the man is permitted to marry her sister. If it be maintained, however, that the rival has the same status as the haluzah, why [should her sister] be permitted [to him]?

May it be suggested that this furnishes an objection against R. Johanan who stated: Neither he nor the other brothers are subject to kareth either for [the betrothal of] a haluzah or for [the betrothal of] her rival? — R. Johanan can answer you: Do you understand it? Is the sister of a haluzah Pentateuchally forbidden? Surely Resh Lakish said: Here it was taught by Rabbi that the prohibition to marry the sister of a divorced wife is Pentateuchal and that that of the sister of a haluzah is Rabbinical!

Why is there a difference [in the law] between the one and the other?

(1) The haluzah (v. Glos.).
(2) To marry the enumerated relatives of the haluzah.
(3) Bomberg ed. adds, ‘and his mother's father’.
(4) E.g., the haluzah's mother's mother or her father's mother's mother (Rashi). Cf. supra 21a.
(5) Rabbinically.

no proof in respect of our enquiry which is concerned with a preventive measure against an infringement of a Rabbinical law.

(48) V. supra n. 4.

(49) How then could such a case be included among forbidden relatives?

(50) ‘Son's son’ in R. Hyya's Baraita.

(51) The prohibition being that of ‘his father's father's wife’, as first assumed.

(52) According to those, however, who, contrary to the opinion of Amemar, forbid marriage with a father's father's brother's wife, the prohibition in R. Hyya's Baraita might still be attributed to the deceased (v. supra n. 7), and the original enquiry as to whether relatives of the second degree were forbidden in the case of a haluzah still remains unanswered.

(53) How then could it be suggested that the prohibition is due to the fact that the haluzah is the ‘wife of the mother's father's brother’ of the deceased?

(54) Lit., ‘what, not’?

(55) The prohibition being that of ‘his mother's father's wife’ who is a relative of the second degree.

(56) The rival.

(57) Of ‘brother's wife’, which is subject to the penalty of kareth. Children born from a union that is forbidden under such a penalty are deemed to be bastards.

(58) [Lit., ‘outside’. Rashi reads: ‘Stands outside’.] From the restrictions of the haluzah, the latter not being regarded as her agent or representative.

(59) Since she herself remains forbidden to the levir as ‘brother's wife’, her sister is not the ‘sister of a haluzah’.

(60) She should be forbidden as the sister of a haluzah! As she is permitted, however, it must be granted that the rival of a haluzah remains under the original prohibition of ‘brother's wife’, which entails the penalty of kareth. (V. supra n. 5).

(61) The inference from our Mishnah. (V. supra n. 8 second clause).

(62) The levir who submitted to halizah.

(63) Supra 10b; while from the inference of our Mishnah, as has been proved, the penalty for contracting a union with the rival of a haluzah is kareth!

(64) R. Joseph's argument.

(65) As R. Joseph implies by his assumption that if the rival had the same status as the haluzah her sister would be forbidden.

(66) In the following Mishnah to which he refers.

(67) The reason why the sister of a rival of a haluzah is permitted is not that assumed by R. Joseph. but the following: As the prohibition of the sister of a haluzah herself is only Rabbinical, the prohibition was not extended to the sister of the rival of the haluzah also.

(68) The first and second case of the final clause of our Mishnah. THE RIVAL OF THE RELATIVE OF HIS HALUZAH is surely as much of a stranger to him as THE RELATIVE OF THE RIVAL OF HIS HALUZAH.

GEMARA. What [is meant by] SIMILARLY?\(^{14}\) — Read: BUT WHERE A MAN DIVORCED.

Resh Lakish said: Here\(^{15}\) it was taught by Rabbi\(^{16}\) that [the prohibition to marry the] sister of a divorced wife is pentateuchal [and that of] the sister of a haluzah is Rabbinical.

HAD BETROTHED [THE SISTER OF THE] WIDOW WHO WAS AWAITING THE LEVIR'S DECISION etc. Samuel said: The halachah is in agreement with the view of R. Judah b. Bathrya.\(^{17}\)

The question was raised: If his wife\(^{18}\) died may he marry his sister-in-law?\(^{19}\) — Both Rab and R. Hanina stated: If his wife died he is permitted to marry his sister-in-law. But both Samuel and R. Assi stated: If his wife died he is forbidden to marry his sister-in-law. Said Raba: What is Rab's reason? — Because she is a deceased brother's wife who was permitted\(^{20}\) then forbidden\(^{21}\) and then again permitted\(^{22}\) and who consequently reverts to her first state of permissibility.

R. Hammuna raised an objection: If two of three brothers were married to two sisters and the third was unmarried, and when one of the sisters' husbands died the unmarried brother addressed to the widow a ma'amaron, and then the second brother\(^{23}\) died,\(^{24}\) and after him his wife also died,\(^{25}\) that sister-in-law must perform halizah but may not be taken in levirate marriage.\(^{26}\) But why?\(^{27}\) Let her be regarded\(^{28}\) as a deceased brother's wife who was permitted\(^{29}\) then forbidden,\(^{30}\) and then again permitted\(^{32}\) who reverts to her former state of permissibility!\(^{31}\) He remained silent. After the other went out he said: I should have told\(^{33}\) him that it\(^{34}\) represents the view of R. Eleazar who maintains that once she has been forbidden to him for one moment she is forbidden to him for ever! Subsequently he remarked: It might be contended that R. Eleazar held that view only where she was not fit\(^{34}\) at the time she became subject to the levirate marriage;\(^{35}\) did he express such an opinion, however, in the case where she was fit\(^{34}\) at the time she became subject to the levirate marriage?\(^{36}\) Subsequently however, he said: Yes,\(^{37}\) for, surely, it was taught: R. Eleazar said: If his yebamah died, his wife is permitted to him; if his wife died, that yebamah must perform halizah but may not be taken in levirate marriage.

Must it then be assumed that Samuel and R. Assi are of the same opinion as R. Eleazar?\(^{39}\) — The may be said to be in agreement even with the Rabbis. For the Rabbis differed from R. Eleazar\(^{40}\) only because from the time she became subject to the levirate marriage and onward she was no longer forbidden to him.\(^{41}\) Here,\(^{42}\) however,where she was so forbidden\(^{43}\) even the Rabbis agree.\(^{44}\)

MISHNAH. THE DECEASED BROTHER'S WIFE\(^{45}\) SHALL NEITHER PERFORM THE HALIZAH NOR CONTRACT LEVIRATE MARRIAGE BEFORE THREE MONTHS HAVE PASSED.\(^{46}\) SIMILARLY ALL OTHER WOMEN\(^{47}\) SHALL BE NEITHER BETROTHED NOR MARRIED BEFORE THREE MONTHS HAVE PASSED\(^{48}\) WHETHER THEY WERE VIRGINS OR NON-VIRGINS, WHETHER DIVORCEES OR WIDOWS, WHETHER MARRIED OR BETROTHED.

R. JUDAH SAID: THOSE WHO WERE MARRIED MAY BE BETROTHED [FORTHWITH], AND THOSE WHO WERE BETROTHED MAY EVEN BE MARRIED [FORTHWITH], WITH THE EXCEPTION OF THE BETROTHED WOMEN IN JUDAEA, BECAUSE THERE THE BRIDEGROOM WAS TOO INTIMATE\(^{49}\) WITH HIS BRIDE.\(^{50}\)
R. JOSE SAID: ALL [MARRIED] WOMEN\(^{51}\) MAY BE BETROTHED [FORTHWITH] EXCEPTING THE WIDOW\(^{52}\)

---

1. The prohibition to marry the rival of the relative of one's Haluzah.

2. I.e., her sister whom she takes with her to court when she goes to perform the halizah. The public, not being aware which of the sisters is the haluzah, might subsequently mistake the one for the other. Hence the rival of the sister was forbidden to the levir who participated in the halizah in order that people might not think that he married the rival of the haluzah herself.

3. The widow does not take her rival with her when she goes to court to perform halizah.

4. Since no one is likely to mistake the rival for the haluzah. Hence the law that the relative of the rival is permitted.

5. Without issue.

6. Being the sister of a haluzah.

7. The sister of a haluzah is (a) Pentateuchally permitted but (b) Rabbinically forbidden. Because of (a) she is subjected to the levirate bond and requires halizah, and because of (b) she is forbidden to contract the levirate marriage. (8) This expression is discussed in the Gemara infra.

9. From the halizah as well as from the levirate marriage. The sister of a divorced wife is Pentateuchally forbidden to the divorcee.

10. With the consummation of the marriage.

11. I.e., until he had either contracted the levirate marriage or submitted to halizah. Before such action the sister of the widow is forbidden to him, as to all the other brothers, as the sister of their zekukah.

12. Being the only surviving brother and, consequently, the only one to whom the widow is subject.

13. Being the sister of his divorced wife she is not permitted to contract with him the levirate marriage. (Cf. supra p. 264, n. 11.)

14. Seeing that the clause introduced by this expression is not at all similar to the previous one.

15. In the first two clauses of our Mishnah.

16. R. Judah the Prince, Redactor of the Mishnah.

17. That the levirate bond between the widow and all the surviving brothers remains in force until one of the brothers has contracted the levirate marriage or has submitted to halizah.

18. The sister of the widow of his deceased brother.

19. I.e., the widow whose deceased sister is now no more his wife.

20. When her husband died without issue.

21. When the brother had betrothed her sister.

22. When her sister died.

23. Of the two who married the two sisters.

24. And his widow, the sister of the first widow to whom the ma'amor had been addressed by the third brother, had thus come under the levirate bond and consequently caused her sister's prohibition to the third brother as 'the sister of his zekukah'.

25. When the first widow, the surviving sister, is no more the 'sister of his zekukah'.

27. If Rab's reason as given by Raba is to be accepted, why should not the widow, now that her sister had died, be permitted to enter into levirate marriage?

28. On the analogy of Rab's reasoning.

29. When her husband died and the unmarried brother addressed a ma'amor to her.

30. When the second brother, the husband of the other sister, died.

31. Why then was it stated that she may not contract the levirate marriage and that she is restricted to halizah only?

32. Lit., 'why did I not tell'.

33. The Baraita cited by R. Hamnuna.

34. To be married by the levir.

35. R. Eleazar's view was expressed in connection with a woman who had been divorced (and had thus become forbidden to the levir as the 'divorsee of his brother'), and then was remarried, and finally, on the death of her husband, became subject to the levir as the wife of his deceased childless brother (v. infra 108bf). In this case, when the widow became subject to the levirate obligations, she had been already, for a time, forbidden to the levir as the 'divorsee of his brother’.

(36) As is the case in the Baraitha cited by R. Harnuna. The prohibition there arose after she had become subject to the obligations of the levirate.

(37) I.e., R. Eleazar forbids levirate marriage for ever, if the widow was unfit for such a marriage for one single moment, even if at the time when she became subject to the levirate obligations she (the widow) was quite fit to contract the marriage.

(38) The levir’s, who betrothed the sister of his yebamah.

(39) Who is in a minority, against that of the Rabbis. Would they agree with a minority against the ruling of the majority?

(40) In the case of a woman who had been divorced and then remarried and then became subject to the levirate obligation, infra 108b. Cf. supra p. 266, n. 16.

(41) The prohibition having ceased with the death of her husband when the obligation of the levirate had arisen.

(42) The case cited by R. Harnuna.

(43) Because after she became subject to the levirate obligations he was for a time, owing to the death of his second brother, forbidden to him as the sister of his zekukah.

(44) That only halizah must be performed, levirate marriage being forbidden.

(45) Whose husband died without issue, and who became subject to the levirate obligations.

(46) From the date of her husband’s death. The reasons are discussed in the Gemara infra.

(47) Whose husbands have died.

(48) The distinctions between these classes are discussed in the Gemara.

(49) Lit., ‘his heart is bold’, and cohabitation might have taken place.

(50) Cf. Keth. 12a,

(51) Whose husbands have died.

(52) Who must allow a period of thirty days to pass.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 41b

OWING TO HER MOURNING.

GEMARA. It is quite reasonable that she\(^2\) shall not be taken [forthwith] in levirate marriage, since the child [whom she might bear] may be viable,\(^3\) and the levir would thus infringe the prohibition of marrying a brother's wife, which is Pentateuchal; but why should she not [forthwith] perform the halizah?\(^4\) Does this,\(^5\) then, present an objection against R. Johanan who said that the halizah of a pregnant woman is deemed to be a valid halizah?\(^6\) But has not an objection against R. Johanan once been raised?\(^7\) — [The question is whether] it may be assumed that an objection arises from here also?\(^8\) — No; here, the reason\(^9\) is this: The child might be viable;\(^10\) and you would in consequence subject her to the need for an announcement\(^11\) in respect of the priesthood.\(^12\) Well, let her be subjected!\(^13\) — It may happen that some people would be present at the halizah but would not be present at the announcement, and they would consider her ineligible to marry a priest.

This quite satisfactorily explains the case of a widow; what can be said, however, in respect of a divorced woman?\(^14\) — Because she would thereby\(^15\) lose her maintenance.\(^16\) This provides a quite satisfactory explanation in the case of a married woman; what can be said, however, in respect of a betrothed divorcee?\(^17\) — The reason\(^18\) is rather the ruling of\(^19\) R. Jose. For it was taught: A man once appeared before R. Jose and said to him; ‘May halizah be performed within three months’? The master replied, ‘She must not perform the halizah’. — ‘Let her perform the halizah! What would she lose’?\(^20\) Thereupon he recited for him this Scriptural text: If the man like not,\(^21\) [implying] that if he likes he may contract the levirate marriage; whosoever may go up\(^22\) to contract the levirate marriage may also go up to perform the halizah etc.\(^23\)

R. Hinena raised an objection: In doubtful cases halizah is performed and no levirate marriage may be contracted. Now, what is meant by ‘doubtful cases’? If it be assumed to mean doubtful betrothal? why, indeed, should no levirate marriage be contracted? Let the widow be taken in levirate marriage since no objection could possibly be raised! Consequently, the doubt must consist in the betrothal of two sisters when the man is uncertain which of them he betrothed; and yet it was stated that halizah was to be performed. — How now! There, if Elijah were to come and point out the sister that was betrothed, she would be eligible for both halizah and levirate marriage; here, however, were Elijah to come and declare that the widow was not pregnant, would anyone heed him and allow her to contract the levirate marriage? Surely even a minor who is incapable of pregnancy must wait three months!

Our Rabbis taught: A yebamah is maintained during the first three months out of the estate of her husband. Subsequently she is not to be maintained either out of the estate of her husband or out of that of the levir. If, however, the levir appeared in court and then absconded, she is maintained out of the estate of the levir. If she became subject to a levir who was a minor she receives nothing from the levir. Does she, however, receive her maintenance] from her husband's estate? — On this question, R. Aha and Rabina are in dispute. One holds that she receives and the other holds that she does not. And the law is that she receives nothing; for her penalty comes from heaven.

Our Rabbis learned: A yebamah, with whom the brothers had participated in halizah within the three months, must wait three months.

(1) Which terminates on the thirtieth day.
(2) The deceased brother's wife spoken of in our Mishnah.
(3) And the levirate obligations would thereby be removed.
(4) Marriage with an outsider could thus take place after three months, if she is found to be without child or if she miscarried.
(5) The implication that halizah is forbidden because it is possible that the woman will miscarry after the ceremony and, believing the halizah to have been valid, would remarry without performing the ceremony again while, in fact, the law is that the halizah of a pregnant woman is not valid.
(6) Supra 35b.
(7) V. n. 11; why then doubt it?
(8) So that if the first objection should ever be removed the second would still remain.
(9) Why halizah also must be postponed until three months have passed.
(10) And his birth would render the halizah invalid, and his mother would consequently be permitted to marry a priest whom, as a haluzah, she would not have been allowed to marry.
(11) That the halizah was invalid and that the widow is eligible to marry a priest.
(12) V. p. 268 n. 15.
(13) To the necessary announcement. What loss could such an announcement cause her?
(14) I.e., who had been a divorcee prior to her marriage with the deceased brother. Having been divorced once, she is forever ineligible to marry a priest, even though she were no haluzah. Why, then, should she be forbidden to perform the halizah forthwith?
(15) By performing the halizah before the three months have passed.
(16) Which she receives from her deceased husband's estate for a period of three months. This would cease with the performance of the halizah. [On this view the Mishnah does not state a prohibition but a piece of sound advice (Tosaf.)]
(17) A woman who has been betrothed whilst she was a divorcee and became a widow before the marriage took place. As a betrothed she is not entitled to maintenance from the dead man's estate, and as a divorcee she is not eligible to marry a priest. Why, then, should she not be allowed forthwith to perform the halizah?
(19) Lit., ‘because of’.
(20) Lit., ‘and what in it’.
(21) Deut. XXV, 7.
(22) Se. to the gate (cf. loc. cit.) i.e., to court.
(23) ‘And whosoever may not go up to contract the levirate marriage may not go up to perform the halizah’ (v. supra 20a, 36a, infra 44a). Since the widow may not contract levirate marriage within three months, she may not perform halizah either. This, however, presents no objection to R. Johanan's ruling since, though it is improper to arrange a halizah within the three months, if halizah had actually taken place it is valid.

(24) Such as are dealt with in the Mishnah and subsequent Gemara supra 30b.

(25) Lit., ‘and there is nothing in it’. If the widow's betrothal by the deceased was valid, the levirate marriage is also valid; and if it was not valid, the so-called widow is in reality an unmarried woman and may be married as a stranger.

(26) Lit., ‘but not?’

(27) And he died without issue.

(28) Though no levirate marriage may be contracted owing to the doubt in the case of each sister that she might be the ‘sister of a zekukah’. How, then, could it be said that halizah may be performed only where levirate marriage also is possible?

(29) Where it is uncertain which sister was betrothed.

(30) Each sister may consequently be regarded as virtually fit for the levirate marriage.

(31) A widow within the first three months after her husband's death.

(32) As levirate marriage is thus absolutely forbidden for the time being, the halizah also must be postponed until the time when levirate marriage would be permitted. [Where, however, the prohibition to contract levirate marriage is absolute, as, for example, in the case of a sister of a haluzah (supra 41a) halizah may be performed (Rashi).]

(33) Who awaits halizah or levirate marriage which is not to take place before three months have passed.

(34) Lit., ‘from now and onwards’.

(35) In response to the widow's claim that he should contract levirate marriage or submit to halizah.

(36) V. p. 270, n. 10.

(37) Dating from her husband's death, and may contract marriage after that period.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 42a

If [the halizah was performed] after the three months, she need not wait three months. Thus it may be inferred that the three months spoken of are [to be dated] from the time of the husband's death and not from the time of the levir's halizah.

Why [is the law here] different from that of a letter of divorce where Rab maintains [that the waiting period is to date] from the time of the delivery and Samuel maintains [that it is to date] from the time of writing? — Raba replied: A minori ad majus, if you permitted marriage where a prohibition under the penalty of kareth is involved, how much more so [should marriage be permitted where only] an ordinary prohibition is involved!

SIMILARLY ALL OTHER WOMEN. The case of a sister-in-law one can well understand, as has just been explained, but why ALL OTHER WOMEN? — R. Nahman replied in the name of Samuel: Because Scripture said, To be a God unto thee and unto thy seed after thee, a distinction must be made between the seed of the first husband and the seed of the second.

Raba raised an objection: Hence must a male proselyte and a female proselyte wait three months. Now, what distinction is there to be made here? — Here also there is the distinction to be made between seed that was sown in holiness and seed that was not sown in holiness.

Raba said: This is a preventive measure against the possibility of his marrying his paternal sister, contracting levirate marriage with the wife of his maternal brother, setting his mother free to marry anybody and releasing his sister-in-law to all the world.

R. Hanania raised an objection: In all these I read a provision against incest, but here it is a provision in favour of the child. Now, if this is tenable, all would be due to a provision against incest! — The meaning of ‘a provision in favour of the child’ is that the child might not infringe a prohibition of incest.
It is easy to understand why [a divorcee or widow] shall not marry after waiting a period of just two months because that would create a doubt as to whether the child is a nine-months one of the first or a seven-months one of the second. Let her wait, however, one month only and then marry, so that, should she give birth at seven months, the child would be a seven-months one of the last husband, and should she give birth at eight months the child would obviously be a nine-months one of the first. — Even if she gave birth at eight months it might still be assumed to be the child of the last husband since it may be that her conception was delayed one month.

Let her, then, wait two months and a half and marry, so that, were she to give birth at seven months, the child would obviously be a seven-months one of the last, and were she to give birth at six months and a half, the child would naturally be a nine-months one of the first; for had he been the son of the last he would not be viable as a six-and-a-half-months child. — Even according to him who said that a woman who bears at nine months does not give birth before the full number of months has been completed, a woman who bears at seven months ‘does give birth before the full number of months has been completed’ for it is stated in Scripture, And it came to pass, after the cycles of days, the minimum of ‘cycles’ is two, and the minimum of ‘days’ is two. Let her, then, wait a little and marry, and when the three months will have been fulfilled she might be examined! — R. Safra replied: Married women are not examined, in order that they may not become repulsive to their husbands. Then let her be examined by her walk! — Rami b. Mama replied: A woman conceals the fact in order that her child may inherit his share in her [second] husband's estate. Where, however, it has been ascertained that she was pregnant, let her be permitted to marry! Why then was it taught: A man shall not marry the pregnant, or nursing wife of another, and if he married, he must divorce her and never again remarry her! — This is a preventive measure against the possibility of turning the foetus into a sandal. If so, [this should apply in the case] of one's own wife also — If according to him who said, ‘With an absorbent’, she uses an absorbent; and if according to him who said, ‘Mercy will be shewn from heaven’, mercy will be shewn from heaven. Here also [it could be argued]: If according to him who said, ‘With an absorbent’, she uses an absorbent; if according to him who said, ‘Mercy will be shewn from heaven’, mercy will be shewn from heaven! — [The prohibition] is due, rather, to [the danger of abdominal] pressure. If so, [this applies in the case] of one's own wife also! — A man has consideration for his own. Here also one would have consideration for the child! — [The reason is] rather because a pregnant woman is usually expected to breast-feed her child [and were she to marry during pregnancy] she

That any widow or divorced woman shall not marry before three months have passed after her husband's death or divorce respectively.

The son born from a widow or divorcee who married within the three months, and who is a nine-months child of her first husband but is assumed to be a seven-months child of the second.

A daughter of the first husband from another wife, believing her to be a stranger.

He, if his mother bore a son to her second husband, and that son died childless, would be contracting levirate marriage with his widow in the belief that he is the paternal brother while in fact he is his maternal brother whose wife is, therefore, forbidden to him under the penalty of kareth.

Lit., ‘to the market’. Should his mother's second husband die without having had any other children his mother would be deemed to be free from the levirate obligations on the assumption that he was the son of the second husband.

Lit., ‘to the market’. If his brother (the son of his mother's first husband from another wife) dies childless and is survived by no other known brother his widow would be released to marry any stranger on the assumption that he had no surviving brother, while in reality the widow is bound to him by the levirate bond.

prohibitions to marry or to contract levirate marriage.

The law of a three months' period of waiting before any widow or divorcee is permitted to marry.

This is assumed to mean: In order that it be known whose child he is.

Raba's explanation.

Prohibitions to marry or to contract levirate marriage.

In the other cases the man and the woman themselves might encroach on the prohibition of incest.

Husband.

Had he been an eight-months child of the first husband he would not have been viable.

And the child is one of seven months.

The year is divided in four cycles (tekufoth), each consisting of three months. The represents no less than two, hence six months.

The text, speaking of Hannah's conception and the birth of Samuel, implies that a viable child may be born after a pregnancy of six months and two days.

A week or two.

Dating from the time of her first husband's death or divorce.

If she is found to be pregnant it will be obvious that the child's father was the first husband; if not, the father of the child born subsequently will be the second husband. After three months of conception the marks of pregnancy may be distinguished.

A pregnant woman, walking on soft soil or loose earth, leaves a deeper impression than a non-pregnant woman (Responsa of the Geonim, Cf. Rashi a.l.).

Lit., ‘covers herself’. She makes every effort to conceal all signs of pregnancy which might lead to the discovery that the child's father was her first husband.

might conceive again, her milk would become turbid, and she might thereby cause the death of the child. If so, [this applies in the case] of the man's own child also! — His own child she would sustain with eggs and milk. Would she not sustain her own child also with eggs and with milk? — Her husband would not give her the means. Let her claim it from the heirs! — Abaye replied: A woman would shrink from going to court and would rather let her child die.

WHETHER THEY WERE VIRGINS OR NON-VIRGINS. Who are the VIRGINS and who are the BETROTHED? Who are NON-VIRGINS and who are MARRIED women? — Rab Judah replied, It is this that was meant: WHETHER VIRGINS OR NON-VIRGINS who became widows or were divorced either after betrothal or after marriage.

R. Eleazar did not go one day to the Beth Hamidrash. On meeting R. Assi he asked him, ‘What did the Rabbis discourse at the Beth Hamidrash’? The other replied ‘Thus said R. Johanan: The halachah is in agreement with R. Jose’. — Does this, then, imply that only individual opinion is against him? — Yes; and so it was taught: A [married woman] who was always anxious to spend her time at her paternal home, or who had some angry quarrel at her husband's home, or whose husband was in prison or was old or infirm, or who was herself infirm, or had miscarried after the death of her husband, or was barren, old, a minor, incapable of conception or in any other way incapacitated from procreation, must wait three months. These are the words of R. Meir. R. Judah permits immediate betrothal and marriage.

R. Hyya b. Abba said: R. Johanan retracted. Said R. Joseph: If he retracted, he did so on account of what has been taught at the Vineyard. For it was taught: R. Ishmael son of R. Johanan b. Beroka said: I heard from the mouth of the Sages in the Vineyard of Jabneh that all women must wait three months.

Said R. Jeremiah to R. Zerika: When you visit R. Abbahu point out to him the following contradiction: Could R. Johanan have said, ‘The halachah is in agreement with R. Jose’ seeing that he stated elsewhere ‘the halachah is in agreement with the anonymous Mishnah’, and we learned, ALL OTHER WOMEN SHALL BE NEITHER MARRIED NOR BETROTHED BEFORE THREE MONTHS HAVE PASSED, WHETHER THEY WERE VIRGINS OR NON-VIRGINS! The other replied, ‘The one who pointed out to you this contradiction did not care much for [the quality of] flour. This is an anonymous Mishnah that was followed by a dispute, where the halachah does not agree with the anonymous Mishnah; for R. Papa or, some say, R. Johanan stated: When a disputed ruling is followed by an anonymous one, the halachah is in agreement with the anonymous ruling; when, however, an anonymous ruling is followed by a dispute, the halachah is not in agreement with the anonymous ruling.

R. Abbahu once walked leaning upon the shoulder of his attendant, R. Nahum, whilst gathering from him information as to traditional rulings. He inquired of him: What is the halachah where a dispute is followed by an anonymous statement? The other replied: The halachah is in agreement with the anonymous statement. ‘What is the halachah’, the first enquired, ‘when an anonymous statement is followed by a dispute’? The other replied: The halachah is not in agreement with the anonymous statement. ‘What if the anonymous statement occurs in a Mishnah and the dispute in a Baraita’? The other replied: The halachah is in agreement with the anonymous statement. ‘What if the dispute is in the Mishnah and the anonymous statement in the Baraitha’? The other replied:

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 43a

If Rabbi\(^1\) has not taught it,\(^2\) whence would R. Hiyya\(^3\) know it! The first said to him: Surely we learned: A hackle for flax, whose teeth were broken off and two remained, is [susceptible to levitical] uncleanness, but [if only] one [tooth remained,⁴ it is levitically] clean.⁵ All the teeth, however, if they were removed one by one are individually [susceptible to levitical] uncleanness.⁶ A wool [comb] whose alternate teeth⁷ are broken off is levitically clean.⁸ If three consecutive⁹ teeth, however, remained, it is susceptible to levitical uncleanness. If one of these was a side tooth,¹⁰ [the comb] is levitically clean.¹¹ If two [teeth] were removed and someone used them as pincers, they are susceptible to levitical uncleanness. One [tooth also] that was adopted for [snuffing] the light,¹² or as a spool,¹³ is susceptible to levitical uncleanness.¹⁴ And we have it as a traditional ruling that the halachah is not in agreement with this Mishnah¹⁵ — The other replied, ‘With the exception of this;¹⁶ for both R. Johanan and Resh Lakish stated: This is not [an authoritative] Mishnah’.

What is the reason? — R. Huna b. Manoah replied in the name of R. Ida son of R. Ika: Because the first clause is in contradiction to the second one. For at first it was stated that ‘a wool comb whose alternate teeth are missing is levitically clean’ from which it follows that if two consecutive teeth did remain it would be susceptible to uncleanness, while immediately afterwards it was stated, ‘If three consecutive teeth, however, remained it is susceptible to levitical uncleanness’ from which it follows that only three but not two! — What difficulty is this? It is possible that one refers to the internal,¹⁸ and the other¹⁹ the external teeth!²⁰

The contradiction, however, arises from the following²¹ It was taught first, ‘all the teeth, however, if they were removed one by one are individually susceptible to levitical uncleanness’ [implying], even though each tooth was not adapted [for the purpose] . Now read the final clause: ‘One tooth that was adapted for snuffing the light, or as a spool, is susceptible to levitical uncleanness’, [implying,] only when he adapted it but not when he did not adapt it! — Abaye replied: What is the difficulty? It is possible that the one [refers to a tooth] with a handle²² and the other [to a tooth] without a handle! R. Papa replied: What is the difficulty? It is possible that the one refers to small,²³ and the other to thick teeth.²⁴ [The reason]²⁵ is rather because accurate scholars add this conclusion: ‘These are the words of R. Simeon’.²⁶

R. Hiyya b. Abin sent the following message: Betrothal may take place within the three months, and the practice [of the Sages]²⁷ is also in accordance with this ruling. And R. Eleazar, too, taught us the same law in the name of R. Hanina the Great: The greater part of the first month, the greater part of the third one, and the full middle month.²⁸

Amemar permitted betrothal on the ninetieth day.²⁹ Said R. Ashi to Amemar: But, surely, both Rab and Samuel stated that the widow must wait three months exclusive of the day on which her husband died and exclusive of the day of her betrothal! — This ruling was stated in connection with a nursing mother; for both Rab and Samuel stated: She must wait twenty-four exclusive of the day on which the child was born and exclusive of the day of her betrothal.³⁰ Did not, however, a man once arrange a betrothal feast on the ninetieth days³¹ and Raba spoilt his feast!³² — That was a wedding feast.

The law is that [a nursing mother] must wait twenty-four months, exclusive of the day on which the child was born and exclusive of the day on which she is to be betrothed. Similarly. One [who is not a nursing mother] must wait three months, exclusive of the day on which her husband died and exclusive of the day on which she is to be betrothed.

EXCEPTING THE WIDOW etc. R. Hisda said: [Cannot the law³³ be deduced by inference] from major to minor³⁴ If when washing of clothes is forbidden,³⁵ betrothal is permitted, how much more should betrothal be permitted when the washing of clothes is permitted!³⁶ What is it³⁷ — We learned: During the week in which the Ninth of Ab occurs it is forbidden to cut the hair and to wash clothes. On the Thursday, however, this is permitted in honour of the Sabbath.³⁸ And [in connection with this Mishnah] it was taught: Before this time³⁹ the public must restrict their activities in commerce, building and plantings but it is permissible to betroth though not to marry, nor may any betrothal feast be held\(^40\) — That was taught in respect of the period before that time.\(^41\) Said Raba, Even in respect of the ‘period before that time’\(^42\) [the law might be arrived at by inference from] major to minor: If where it is forbidden to trade it is permitted to betroth, how much more should betrothal be permitted where trade also is permitted! — Do not read, R. JOSE SAID: ALL [MARRIED] WOMEN\(^43\) MAY BE BETROTHED but read, ‘ALL MARRIED WOMEN\(^43\) may be married’.

\(^{1}\) The Redactor of the Mishnah and teacher of R. Hiyya.
\(^{2}\) As an anonymous ruling which is to represent the established halachah.
\(^{3}\) Rabbi’s disciple, who compiled Baraithas and the reputed author of the Tosefta. (11) Since the hackle can still be used even though only two teeth remained, דְַּלְַּקְיָה ‘vessels’ (v. Lev. XI, 32ff) by which all kinds of implements and instruments are understood, are susceptible to levitical uncleanness so long only as they are useable. Broken ‘vessels’ which cannot be put to any further use are always levitically clean.

(4) The hackle thus becoming unusable.

(5) V. supra p. 277. n. 11 last clause.

(6) Since each single broken tooth can be used for some purpose. V. infra.

(12) V. Jast.; or ‘for picking a candlestick’, v. Rashi a.l.

(14) Kelim XIII, 8.

(15) Though it is anonymous.

(16) Only here has the anonymous Mishnah been disregarded.

(17) The first clause which implies that if only two teeth remained the comb is still susceptible to uncleanness.

(18) With two teeth of which the comb may still be used.

(19) The final clause, implying that if only two teeth remained the comb is no more susceptible to uncleanness.

(20) Two of which are useless. A wool comb had two sets of teeth, external and internal. The former were used for the main work, and no less than three were required. The latter served only the purpose of holding up the wool, and two of these were quite sufficient for that purpose. It should be noted that the ‘side tooth’ mentioned in the Baraitha does not refer to these but to the first or last tooth of the row (v. supra p. 278, n. 7).

(21) Lit., ‘but from here’.

(22) When a part of the wooden base of the comb was broken off together with the tooth. In this case no adaptation is necessary.

(23) Small teeth require a handle without which they cannot be used.

(24) Which can be used without any adaptation.

(25) Why the halachah is not in agreement with that Mishnah.

(26) The Mishnah thus is not at all anonymous.

(27) Which he witnessed (v. Rashi a.l.).

(28) Constitute the required period of three months. Three full months are not necessary.

(29) After divorce or husband’s death.

(32) By forbidding the betrothal on that day.

(33) On a widow’s betrothal within the period of the thirty days of mourning.

(34) In a way contrary to the ruling of R. Jose.

(35) During the week in which the fast of the Ninth of Ab occurs.

(36) A mourner may wash his clothes before the period of the thirty days of mourning has passed— the prohibition extending to the first week of mourning only.
Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 43b

Does not R. Jose, then, hold the view that it is necessary to make a distinction? — If you wish I might say that he does not. And if you prefer I might say that he does, in fact, hold [this view]. But read, ‘R. Jose said: All betrothed women who were divorced may be married’. If so, it is the same view as that of R. Judah — The point at issue between them is the question of the betrothal of a married woman. R. Judah maintains that a married woman may be betrothed, while R. Jose maintains that a married woman may not be betrothed. But is R. Jose of the opinion that a married woman is forbidden betrothal? Surely it was taught, ‘R. Jose said: All women may be betrothed, excepting the widow, owing to her mourning. And how long does her mourning continue? Thirty days. And all these must not marry before three months have passed’! — What an objection is this! If it be argued: Because it was stated, ‘R. Jose said: All women may be betrothed’, is this [it may be retorted] of greater force than our Mishnah? As that was interpreted to mean that ‘betrothed women who were divorced may be married’ so here also [it might be interpreted to mean], ‘All betrothed women who were divorced may be married’! — [The objection, however, [arises from] the final clause where it was stated, ‘And all these must not marry before three months have passed’, [implying that] only marriage is forbidden to them but they may well be betrothed! — Raba replied: Explain and reconstruct it as follows: R. Jose said: Betrothed women who were divorced may be married, excepting the widow owing to her mourning. And how long does her mourning continue? Thirty days. And married women may not be betrothed before three months have passed. But is any mourning to be observed by an erusin widow? Surely R. Hiyya b. Ammi taught: In the case of a betrothed wife, the husband is neither subject to the laws of onan nor may he defile himself for her; nor may she defile herself for him; if she dies he does not inherit from her, though if he dies he collects her kethubah! — The fact, however, is that this is a question in dispute between Tannaim. For it was taught: From the first day of the month until the fast, the public must restrict their activities in trade, building and planting, and no betrothals or marriages may take place. During the week in which the Ninth of Ab occurs it is forbidden to cut the hair, to wash clothes; and others say that this is forbidden during the entire month. R. Ashi demurred: Whence is it proved that betrothal means actual betrothal! Is it not possible that it is only forbidden to give a betrothal feast but that betrothal itself is permitted? — If so, does ‘no marriage may take place’ also mean that the giving of a wedding feast is forbidden but marriage itself is permitted! — How now! In the case of a marriage without a feast there is still sufficient rejoicing; in the case of betrothal, however, is there any rejoicing when no feast is held? The fact is, said R. Ashi, that recent mourning is different from ancient mourning, and public mourning is different from private mourning. WHERE FOUR BROTHERS WHO WERE MARRIED TO FOUR WOMEN DIED, THE ELDEST MAY, IF HE DESIRES, CONTRACT LEVIRATE MARRIAGE WITH ALL OF WHERE A MAN WHO WAS MARRIED TO TWO WOMEN DIED, COHABITATION OR HALIZAH WITH ONE OF THEM EXEMPTS HER RIVAL.

(1) Between a child of the first, and one of the second husband. (V. supra 42a). If he does, how could he permit marriage within the three months?

(2) V. Bah a.l. Wanting in cur. edd.

(3) He admits the necessity for a distinction between the children of the two husbands.

(4) Forthwith. In such cases the question of pregnancy does not arise. Hence, immediate marriage is permitted except in the case of mourning (v. our Mishnah final clause).

(5) R. Jose's view.

(6) Who stated, THOSE WHO WERE BETROTHED MAY EVEN BE MARRIED FORTHWITH.

(7) Forthwith.

(8) Even married women.

(9) The point of the objection is explained infra.

(10) How, then, could R. Jose say here that betrothal is forbidden.

(11) The second Baraitha cited.

(12) Lit., 'and say thus'.

(13) R. Jose in the Baraitha, in thus forbidding betrothal, advances the same opinion as R. Jose in our Mishnah in accordance with the interpretation supra.

(14) V. Glos.

(15) Before her marriage has taken place.

(16) A mourner for certain relatives prior to their burial (v. Glos.) who is subject to a number of restrictions.

(17) If he is a priest who is forbidden to come in contact with dead bodies except those of very near relatives among whom a wife is included. Aliter: 'nor need he defile himself'; v. supra 29b.

(18) A 'betrothed wife' not being regarded as being as near of kin as a married wife.

(19) During a festival when Israelites and women (and not only priests) are forbidden to attend on a dead body (unless they are engaged in its burial) if they are not near relatives (cf. R.H. 16b). Others render, 'nor need she . . . him'. (V. Rashi a.l. and Tosaf. supra 29b s.v.).

(20) V. Glos. in a case where the document was given to her at the betrothal. Supra 29b, B.M. 18a, Keth. 53a. The reference in the Mishnah hence cannot be to an erusin widow but to the prohibition of the betrothal of a widow within thirty days, which brings us back to the original question of R. Hisda.

(21) Whether betrothal is forbidden or permitted before the Fast of Ab.

(22) Lit., 'but it'.

(23) Of Ab.

(24) On the ninth of the month.

(25) Ta'an. 26b.

(26) Cut. edd. insert in parentheses, ‘and it is forbidden to betroth’.

(27) Ta'an. 29b. The Tanna of this Baraitha thus forbids betrothal before the Ninth of Ab though the Tanna of the Baraitha previously cited (supra 43a) permits it. The objection against R. Jose raised by R. Hisda from the first Baraita is, therefore, untenable, since R. Jose may disagree with that Tanna and follow the view of the one in the second Baraitha, who forbids betrothal. R. Jose's statement in our Mishnah may consequently be read and interpreted as originally assumed, viz., that ALL (MARRIED) WOMEN MAY BE BETROTHED, the point at issue between him and R. Judah being the question of mourning during which in the opinion of the first betrothal is, and in the opinion of the latter is not forbidden.

(28) Lit., ‘to make’.

(30) Hence it is quite conceivable that marriage, even though no wedding feast is held, should be forbidden.

(31) It is quite possible, therefore, that the ‘betrothal’ forbidden is only one celebrated with the holding of a festive meal, while betrothal alone is permitted. The second Baraitha would thus be in agreement with the first. How, then, could R. Jose, contrary to the rulings of the two Baraithas maintain that betrothal during mourning is forbidden?
After a personal bereavement. That before the Fast of Ab in commemoration of historical events. Personal and recent grief is more poignant, and is subject to more stringent regulations than those of public mourning which is less rigid. Hence there need be no contradiction between R. Jose's ruling concerning the prohibition of betrothal during the widow's personal mourning and the permission of betrothal in the Baraithas which speak of public mourning. Consequently the assumption that the two Baraithas are in disagreement and that R. Jose follows the latter is no longer necessary. Both Baraithas, in fact, may permit betrothal before the Fast of Ab, and R. Jose also may share the same view.

Surviving brother; v. Gemara.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 44a

GEMARA. FOUR BROTHERS? Is this conceivable! — Read, FOUR of the BROTHERS.

MAY. And is he allowed? Surely it was taught: Then the elder's of his city shall call him, but not their representative; 'and speak unto him' teaches that he is given suitable advice. If he, for instance, was young and she old, or if he was old and she was young, he is told, 'What would you with a young woman'? or ‘What would you with an old woman’? ‘Go to one who is [of the same age] as yourself and create no strife in your house’ — This is applicable to that case only where he can afford it. If so, even more wives also! — Sound advice was given: Only four but no more, so that each may receive one marital visit a month.

WHERE A MAN WHO WAS MARRIED etc. Let him contract levirate marriage with both! — R. Hiyya b. Abba replied in the name of R. Johanan: Scripture stated, That doth not build up his brother's house, he builds one house but does not build two houses. Then let him submit to halizah from both of them! — Mar Zutra b. Tobia replied: Scripture stated, The house of him who had his shoe drawn off he submits to the drawing off of the shoe in respect of one house but must not submit to the drawing off of the shoe in respect of two houses. Then let him submit to halizah from one and contract levirate marriage with the other! — Scripture stated, That doth not build, as he has not built he must never again build. Then let him contract levirate marriage with one and submit to halizah from the other! — Scripture states, If he like not, if, however, he liked, he may contract levirate marriage; whosoever may go up to contract levirate marriage, may also go up to perform halizah and whosoever may not go up may not go up to perform halizah. Furthermore, in order that it be not said that the same house is partially ‘built’ and partially ‘drawn off’. But let them say! — If he had first contracted levirate marriage and then submitted to halizah this would have been so indeed; it is possible, however, that he may submit to halizah and subsequently contract levirate marriage and thus place himself under the prohibition of that doth not build.

Might it be suggested that where there is only one the law of the levirate marriage shall be observed, but that where there are two, the law of levirate marriage shall not be observed! — If so, what need was there for the All Merciful to prohibit marriage with the rival of a forbidden relative? If any two rivals, it has been said, are not both subject to halizah and the levirate marriage, was there any need [to mention the exemption of] a rival of a forbidden relative! Why not? It is certainly needed! For it might have been assumed that the forbidden relative stands excluded, and her rival may, therefore, be taken in levirate marriage, hence it was taught that she also was forbidden! — But in fact [this is the proper explanation:] The repetition of his brother's wife widened the scope.
IF ONE OF THEM, HOWEVER, WAS ELIGIBLE. Said R. Joseph: Here it was taught by Rabbi that a man should not pour the water out of his cistern while others may require it.

MISHNAH. A MAN WHO REMARRIED HIS DIVORCED WIFE, OR MARRIED HIS HALUZAH, OR MARRIED THE RELATIVE OF HIS HALUZAH MUST DIVORCE HER, AND THE CHILD IS A BASTARD; THESE ARE THE WORDS OF R. AKIBA. BUT THE SAGES SAID: THE CHILD IS NOT A BASTARD. THEY AGREE, HOWEVER, THAT WHERE A MAN MARRIED THE RELATIVE OF HIS DIVORCEE THE CHILD IS A BASTARD.

GEMARA. Does R. Akiba hold the view that the child of a man who MARRIED THE RELATIVE OF HIS HALUZAH is a bastard? Surely Resh Lakish stated: Here it was taught by Rabbi that the prohibition to marry the sister of a divorced wife is Pentateuchal and that that of the sister of a haluzah is Rabbinical! — Read, THE RELATIVE OF HIS divorcee. This view may also logically be supported. For it was stated in the final clause, THEY AGREE, HOWEVER, THAT WHEN A MAN MARRIED THE RELATIVE OF HIS DIVORCEE THE CHILD IS A BASTARD. Now, if you grant that her case was under discussion one can well see the reason why the expression of THEY AGREE had been used; if you contend, however, that her case was not under discussion what is the purport of THEY AGREE?

Is it not possible that we were informed that the [offspring of a union] of those who are subject to the penalty of kareth is a bastard? — This surely is taught below: ‘Who is a bastard? [The offspring of a union with] any consanguineous relative with whom cohabitation is forbidden; so R. Akiba. Simeon the Temanite said: [The offspring of any union] the penalty for which is kareth at the hands of heaven. And the halachah is in agreement with his view. But is it not possible that the Tanna intended to indicate by his anonymous statement that the halachah is according to Simeon the Temanite? — If so, he should have stated, ‘Others who are subject to the penalty of kareth’, why then [specify] THE RELATIVE OF HIS DIVORCEE? Consequently it must he inferred that this case was under discussion. But is it not indeed possible to maintain that it was not under discussion, but because THE MAN WHO REMARRIED HIS DIVORCED WIFE OR MARRIED HIS HALUZAH OR THE RELATIVE OF HIS HALUZAH was spoken of, he also introduced THE RELATIVE OF his divorcee?

Would consequently [the offspring of a union with] the RELATIVE OF HIS HALUZAH, according to R. Akiba, be a bastard? — R. Hiyya b. Abba replied in the name of R. Johanan, This is R. Akiba's reason: Because Scripture stated, The house of him that had his shoe drawn off; Scripture thus called it his house.

R. Joseph stated in the name of R. Simeon b. Rabbi: All agree that, where a man remarried his divorced wife,

(10) When he possesses the means.
(11) Should be allowed. Why then were FOUR only mentioned.
(12) Once a week, on Friday evenings, is the time when scholars in moderate health should pay their marital visits (Keth 62b). More than four wives would reduce each one's visits to less than one per month.

(29) R. Judah the Prince, Redactor of the Mishnah.

(30) Though the levir himself would lose nothing by disqualifying the widow from marriage with a priest, he must not be the cause of her disqualification out of consideration for a priest who might wish to marry her.

(31) After she had been married to another man.

(32) The offspring of any such union.

(33) In the Mishnah supra 41a to which Resh Lakish refers.

(34) The Redactor of the Mishnah.

(35) Supra 40b, 41a. The offspring of a union that is only Rabbinically forbidden would not be a bastard.

(36) In R. Akiba's statement in our Mishnah.

(37) That of the relative of a divorcée.

(38) One does not AGREE in respect of a case that never was in dispute!

(39) By the use of the expression AGREE.

(40) I.e., the Rabbis AGREE in this case because it involves kareth, though they maintain that the offspring of those who are subject to the penalty of flogging only is not a bastard, AGREE would consequently provide no proof that R. Akiba spoke of the relative of a divorcée!

(41) Cur. edd. add ‘R’.

(42) Infra 49a. The halachah must obviously be in agreement with the Rabbis who form the majority. Consequently there was no need for the Rabbis to state the same halachah in our Mishnah also. THEY AGREE must, therefore, imply that R. Akiba also spoke of the relative of a divorcée.

(43) Of our Mishnah.

(44) Hence the repetition in Our Mishnah of the one infra 49a. Cf. supra n. 5 second clause.

(45) The case of the relative of one's divorcée.

(46) And on which the Rabbis disagreed with R. Akiba. In the case of the RELATIVE OF HIS HALUZAH, however, R. Akiba, it might still be contended, regards the child as a bastard.

(47) In whose case the Rabbis agree with R. Akiba.

(48) Since the expression RELATIVE OF HIS HALUZAH in R. Akiba's statement is not amended to 'RELATIVE OF HIS divorcée’.

(49) On what ground could R. Akiba maintain such an opinion?

(50) Deut. XXV, 10.

(51) The relative of a haluzah, according to R. Akiba, is consequently, like that of a divorcée, forbidden Pentateuchally. The offspring of a union with such a relative is, therefore, a bastard.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 44b
the child\(^1\) is tainted in respect of the priesthood.\(^2\) Who [is meant by] ‘All agree’? — Simeon the Temanite. For although Simeon the Temanite stated that the offspring of a union forbidden under the penalty of flogging is not a bastard, he agrees that, though he is not a bastard, he is nevertheless tainted.\(^3\) This is deduced a minori ad majus from the case of a widow: If in the case of a widow married to a High Priest, the prohibition of whom is not applicable to all,\(^4\) her son\(^1\) is tainted,\(^5\) how much more should the son of a divorcee be tainted, whose prohibition is equally applicable to all.\(^5\) [This argument, however], may be refuted: A widow's case may well be different\(^6\) because she herself becomes profaned and;\(^7\) and, furthermore, it is written in Scripture, She is an abomination,\(^8\) ‘she’\(^9\) only is an abomination but her children are not an abomination. — Furthermore, it was taught: Where a man remarried his divorced wife, or married his haluzah, or married the relative of his haluzah, R. Akiba said, his betrothal of her is not valid,\(^10\) she requires no divorce from him, she is disqualified,\(^11\) her child is disqualified,\(^12\) and the man is compelled to divorce her. And the Sages said: His betrothal of her is valid, she requires a divorce from the man, she is fit, and her child is fit. Now, in respect of what?\(^13\) Obviously in respect of the priesthood!\(^14\) — No; in respect of entering the congregation.\(^13\)

If so, in respect of whom is she\(^15\) fit? If it be suggested ‘in respect of entering the congregation’, is not this [it may be retorted] obvious? Has she become ineligible to enter the congregation because she played the harlot!\(^16\) Consequently it must mean in respect of the priesthood. Now, since she is [untainted] in respect of the priesthood, her child also must be [untainted] in respect of the priesthood!\(^14\) — Is this an argument? The same term may bear different interpretations in harmony with its respective subjects.\(^17\) This\(^18\) is also logically sound. For in the first clause\(^19\) it was stated, ‘She is disqualified and her child is disqualified’. Now, in respect of what is ‘she disqualified’? If it be suggested, ‘in respect of entry into the congregation’, does she [it may be retorted] become disqualified for entry into the congregation because she played the harlot!\(^20\) Consequently it must mean ‘in respect of the priesthood!’ Now, again, in respect of what is ‘her child disqualified’? If it be suggested, ‘in respect of the priesthood’ thus implying that he is permitted to enter the congregation, surely [it may be objected] R. Akiba stated that the child is a bastard!\(^21\) Obviously then ‘in respect of entry into the congregation’.\(^22\) And, as in the first clause the same term bears different interpretations in harmony with its respective subjects, so may the same term in the final clause bear different interpretations in agreement with its respective subjects.\(^23\) Also as to the expression\(^24\), This is an abomination it [may be interpreted]: ‘She is an abomination but her rival is no abomination’.\(^25\) Her children, however, are an abomination.\(^26\)

The objection, however, from the ‘widow’ [still remains, thus]: ‘A widow's case may well be different\(^27\) because she herself becomes\(^28\) profaned!’\(^29\) — But [the fact is that] if any statement was made\(^30\) it was as follows:\(^31\) R. Joseph stated in the name of R. Simeon b. Rabbi, ‘All agree that where a man cohabited with any of those who are subject to the penalty of kareth\(^32\) the child\(^33\) is tainted’.\(^34\) Who [is referred to by] ‘All agree’? — R. Joshua. For although R. Joshua stated that the offspring of a union forbidden under the penalty of kareth is not a bastard, he agrees that, though he is no bastard, he is nevertheless tainted.\(^35\) This is deduced a minori ad majus from the case of a widow: If in the case of a widow married to a High Priest, the prohibition of whom is not applicable to all,\(^36\) her son\(^37\) is tainted,\(^38\) how much more should the son of this woman be tainted whose prohibition is equally applicable to all.\(^38\)

And were you to object: A widow's case may be different\(^39\) because she herself becomes profaned,\(^40\) [it may be retorted that], here also, as soon as the man had any connubial relations with her he stamped her as a harlot.\(^41\)

Rabbah b. Bar Hana said in the name of R. Johanan: All agree that where a slave or an idolater had intercourse with a daughter of an Israelite the child is a bastard. Who is meant by ‘All agree’? —
Simeon the Temanite. For although Simeon the Temanite stated that the offspring of a union forbidden under the penalty of flogging is not a bastard, his statement applies only

(1) The offspring of such a union.

(2) imperfect. If a male he is disqualified from the priesthood: and if a female she is ineligible to marry a priest. [Rashi reads simply: ‘the child is tainted’, so MS.M.]

(3) And disqualified for the priesthood.

(4) A widow is forbidden to a High Priest only, but not to an ordinary priest or an Israelite.

(5) No one, priest or Israelite, may remarry his divorced wife after she had been married to another man.

(6) i.e., her son may indeed be tainted.

(7) Having once married a High Priest unlawfully, she may not marry after his death even an ordinary priest (v. Kid. 77a), and if she is a priest's daughter she loses her privilege to eat terumah (v. infra 68a). In the case of a remarried divorcée these restrictions do not apply, since she is permitted to eat terumah if she is a priest's daughter (v. infra 69a) while her prohibition to marry a priest is not due to her remarriage, but to her previous divorce.

(8) Deut. XXIV, 4.

(9) rendered by E.V., it; lit, ‘she’, is taken to refer to the woman. The Talmudic text here is not very clear. (V. supra 11b for a smoother text and further notes, and cf. Bah a.l.).

(10) Unions subject to the penalty of flogging are in his opinion invalid.

(11) May not marry a priest.

(12) Being deemed a bastard.

(13) Is the child regarded as fit. I.e. fit to marry a proper Israelite; v, Deut. XXIII, 1ff.

(14) Which is contrary to the conclusion arrived at by the argument a minori ad majus!

(15) The remarried divorcée.

(16) i.e., contracted a forbidden marriage.

(17) Lit., ‘that as it is and that etc.’. The term ‘untainted’ in the case of the woman may have reference to priesthood, but in the case of the child it may refer to entry into the congregation; while in respect of the priesthood the child may well be regarded as tainted.

(18) The thesis that the interpretation of the same term may vary in harmony with its respective subjects though both appear in the same context.

(19) Of the cited Baraitha.

(20) i.e., contracted a forbidden marriage.

(21) Who may not enter into the congregation. (V. Deut. XXIII, 3).

(22) Although the same term, in the same context, when applied to the mother, referred to the priesthood.

(23) V. supra p. 289. n. 10, for lit. meaning.

(24) From which it has been sought to prove supra that the inference from the case of a widow married to a High Priest cannot be upheld.

(25) i.e., the exclusion refers to her rival who may contract levirate marriage.

(26) i.e., disqualified from the priesthood. as has been inferred supra.

(27) i.e., her son may indeed be tainted.

(29) Which leads to the conclusion that no inference a minori ad majus may be drawn from the case of the widow. How, then, could R. Joseph state in the name of R. Simeon, supra, that all agree that the child is disqualified?

(30) By R. Joseph in the name of R. Simeon, on the subject under discussion.

(31) Lit., ‘thus it was said’.

(32) For that cohabitation.

(33) The offspring of such a union.

(34) V. supra p. 282, no. 8ff.

(35) And disqualified for the priesthood.

(36) A widow is forbidden to a High Priest only, but not to an ordinary priest or Israelite.

(37) The offspring of such a union.

(38) No one, priest or Israelite, may remarry his divorced wife after she had been married to another man.

(39) i.e., her son may indeed be tainted.

Because of the forbidden union, and she, like the widow who was married to a High Priest, is in consequence forbidden to marry even a common priest.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 45a

to the offspring of a union forbidden under the penalty of flogging, since the betrothal in such a case is valid but here, in the case of an idolater and a slave, since betrothal in their case is invalid, they are like those whose union is subject to the penalty of kareth.

An objection was raised: If a slave or an idolater had intercourse with the daughter of an Israelite the child [born from such a union] is a bastard. R. Simeon b. Judah said: A bastard is only he who [is the offspring of a union which] is forbidden as incest and is punishable by kareth! — No, said R. Joseph, who [is referred to by] ‘all cable only according to the view of R. Akiba who regards a haluzah as a forbidden relative’, while he himself does not share the same view, he agrees in the case of an idolater and a slave. For when R. Dimi came he stated in the name of R. Isaac b. Abudimi in the name of our Master, ‘If an idolater or a slave had intercourse with the daughter of an Israelite the child [born from such a union] is a bastard’.

R. Aha, the governor of the castle, and R. Tanhum son of R. Hyya of Kefar Acco once redeemed some captives who were brought from Armon to Tiberias. [Among these] was one who had become pregnant from an idolater. When they came before R. Ammi he told them: It was R. Johanan and R. Eleazar and R. Hanina who stated that if an idolater or a slave had intercourse with the daughter of an Israelite the child born is a bastard.

Said R. Joseph: Is it a great thing to enumerate persons? Surely it was Rab and Samuel in Babylon and R. Joshua b. Levi and Bar Kappara in the Land of Israel — (others say, ‘Bar Kappara’ is to be altered to the ‘Elders of the South’) who stated that if an idolater or a slave had intercourse with a daughter of an Israelite, the child born is untainted! — No, said R. Joseph, it is [the opinion of] Rabbi. For when R. Dimi came he stated in the name of R. Isaac b. Abudimi that it was reported in the name of our Masters that if an idolater or a slave had intercourse with the daughter of an Israelite the child [born from such a union] is a bastard.

R. Joshua b. Levi said: The child is tainted. In respect of what? If it be suggested in respect of entry into the congregation, surely [it may be retorted] R. Joshua b. Levi stated that the child was fit! It must be then in respect of the priesthood, for all Amoraim who declare the child fit admit that he is ineligible for the priesthood. This is inferred by deduction from the case of a widow a minori ad majus. If in the case of a widow who was married to a High priest whose prohibition is not equally applicable to all her son is tainted, how much more should the son of this woman be tainted whose prohibition is equally applicable to all. The case of a widow who was married to a High Priest may be different, since she herself becomes profaned! — Here also, as soon as cohabitation occurred the woman is disqualified; for R. Johanan stated in the name of R. Simeon: Whence is it inferred that if an idolater or a slave had intercourse with the daughter of a priest, of a Levite or of an Israelite, he disqualified her? It was stated But if a priest's daughter be a widow, or divorcée, Only in the case of a man in relation to whom widowhood or divorce is applicable an idolater and a slave are consequently excluded since in relation to them no widowhood or divorce is applicable.

Said Abaye to him: What reason do you see for relying upon R. Dimi? Rely rather on Rabin! For when Rabin came he reported that R. Nathan and R. Judah the Prince ruled that such a child is legitimate, and R. Judah the Prince is, of course, Rabbi!
And Rab also ruled that the child is legitimate. For once a man appeared before Rab and asked him, ‘What [is the legal position of the child] where an idolater or a slave had intercourse with the daughter of an Israelite?’ ‘The child is legitimate’, the Master replied. ‘Give me then your daughter’ said the man. ‘I will not give her to you’ [was the Master's reply]. Said Shimi b. Hiyya to Rab. ‘People say that in Media a camel can dance on a kab; here is the kab, here is the camel and here is Media, but there is no dancing’ Had he been equal to Joshua the son of Nun I would not have given him my daughter’, the Master replied. ‘Had he been like Joshua the son of Nun’, the other retorted, ‘others would have given him their daughters, if the Master had not given him his; but with this man, if the Master will not give him, others also will not give him’. As the man refused to go away he fixed his eye upon him and he died. R. Mattena also ruled that the child is legitimate. For when one came before Rab Judah, the latter told him, ‘Go and conceal your identity or marry one of your own kind’. When such a man appeared before Raba he told him, ‘Either go abroad or marry one of your own kind’. The men of Be-Mikse sent [the following enquiry] to Rabbah: What [is the law in respect of the legitimacy of the child of] one who is a half slave and half freed man who cohabited with the daughter of an Israelite? — He replied: If [the child of] one who is fully a slave has been declared legitimate, is there any need [to question the case of the child of one who is only] a half slave!

R. Joseph said: The author of this traditional ruling

(3) The offspring from which is a bastard.
(4) Now this Tanna, whose view is exactly the same as that of Simeon the Temanite, indicates quite clearly that the offspring of a union with an idolater or slave is not a bastard! (V. supra n. 10). (12) That cohabitation with a deceased brother's wife after halizah with her rival has not the force of marriage and no divorce is required. The child from such a union would consequently be deemed a bastard.
(5) Infra 52b.
(6) But maintains that the child of such a union is no bastard.

(16) The ruling that the child is a bastard.
(17) And it is Rabbi's fame and position, and not the number of comparatively minor authorities (v. supra n. 9), that imparted the force of law to this view.
(18) Born from a union between a Jewish woman and an idolater or a slave.
(19) Is the child deemed tainted. This applies to a female child who is disqualified from marrying a priest. A male child, being the son of an idolater or slave, cannot obviously ever be himself a priest.
(20) V. supra note 2.
(21) A widow is only forbidden to marry a High Priest but not an Israelite or an ordinary priest.
(22) Born from her union with the High Priest.
(23) If a male; and if a female she is ineligible to marry a priest.
(24) Who had intercourse with an idolater or a slave.
The daughters of priests, of Levites and of Israelites are all equally forbidden to marry an idolater or a slave.

Where intercourse took place between a Jewess and an idolater or a slave.

From ever marrying a priest.

Others, 'Ishmael'. V. Bah. a,l.; and Tosaf., infra 68b, s.v. קמה.

From eating terumah if she is the daughter of a priest. If the daughter of a Levite or an Israelite who was married to a priest and left with children after her husband's death, she loses her right to the eating of terumah (to which she was entitled by virtue of her children) and, of course, becomes ineligible to marry a priest, as soon as Intercourse with the idolater or slave had taken place.

Lev. XXII, 13. The conclusion of the verse reads, And is returned unto her father's house . . . she shall eat of her father's bread (i.e., terumah),

I.e., an Israelite. Only then does she regain her right of eating her father's bread. V. n. 14.

Their very betrothal and marriage having no validity.

Who, on the authority of Rabbi supra, declared the child to be a bastard.

Who, also on the authority of Rabbi, does not regard such a child as a bastard.

From Palestine to Babylon.

Lit., 'rule concerning it towards permissibility'.

Lit., 'and who'.

Cf. supra n. 6.

The offspring of union between a Jewess and an idolater.

I.e., in foreign lands where wonders occur, (Golds.).

The kab is a small measure of capacity equal to four log or a sixth of a se'ah.

I.e., Rab had displayed originality and marvelous courage by his ruling, and yet stops short of carrying it into practice.

V. Bah a,l.

They would regard the Master's refusal as an indication that the man is really illegitimate.

Lit., 'rule concerning it towards permissibility'.

The issue of a union between a Jewess and an idolater.

I.e., 'go to a place where you are unknown and where you might in consequence pass as a legitimate Israelite and be allowed to marry a Jewess'. Since Rab Judah counselled him to marry a Jewess if he could, by concealing his origin, it is obvious that in his opinion the man was legitimate. A bastard would not have been allowed marriage with a Jewess under any circumstances.

V. infra n. 3.

Cf. supra p. 294, n. 7.

I.e., a woman born from a similar union. Raba did not allow him, however, to marry a bastard or a slave; which proves that in his opinion the man was legitimate and therefore forbidden to marry either a bastard or a slave,

That the offspring of a union between a Jewess and an idolater or slave is legitimate.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 45b

is, of course, Rab Judah. But surely Rab Judah had explicitly stated: Where one who is a half slave and half freed man cohabited with the daughter of an Israelite the child born from such a union can have no redress! — Rab Judah's ruling was made only in the case where he betrothed the daughter of an Israelite, in consequence of which his partial slavery cohabits with a married woman.

But did not the Nehardeans state in the name of R. Jacob that according to him who regards [the offspring] as illegitimate, the child is so regarded even [where cohabitation had taken place] with an unmarried woman; and according to him who regards [the child] as legitimate, the child is so regarded even [if the cohabitation had taken place] with a married woman! And the deduction by both was made from none other than the wife of one's father. He who regards the child as illegitimate is of the opinion that as with the wife of one's father, betrothal with whom is invalid, the child is a bastard. So is the child a bastard in the case of all those betrothal with whom is invalid. And he who regards the child as legitimate is of the opinion [that the comparison is]: As with the wife of one's father, betrothal with whom is invalid in the case of the son only, but is valid in the case of others; an idolater and a slave betrothal with whom is in all cases invalid are consequently excluded!

Hence the statement of R. Judah must have been made in respect of one who had intercourse with a married woman, so that his emancipated side cohabits with a married woman.

Rabina said: R. Gaza told me, ‘R. Jose b. Abin happened to be at our place when an incident occurred with an unmarried woman and declared the child to be legitimate; [and when it occurred] with a married woman he declared the child to be illegitimate’.

R. Shesheth said: R. Gaza told me that it was not R. Jose b. Abin but R. Jose son of R. Zebida, and that he declared the child to be legitimate, both in the case of the married, as well as in that of the unmarried woman.

R. Aha son of Raba said to Rabina: Amemar once happened to be in our place and he declared the child to be legitimate in the case of a married, as well as in that of an unmarried woman.

And the law is that if an idolater or a slave had cohabited with the daughter of an Israelite the child [born from such a union] is legitimate, both in the case of a married, and in that of an unmarried woman.

Raba declared R. Mari b. Rache to be a legitimate Israelite and appointed him among the pursers of Babylon. And although a Master said: Thou shalt in any wise set him king over thee . . . one from among thy brethren, all appointments which you make must be made only ‘from among thy brethren’, [means that] such a man, since his mother was a descendant of Israel, may well be regarded as ‘one from among thy brethren’.

The slave of R. Hiyya b. Ammi once made a certain idolatress bathe for a matrimonial purpose. Said R. Joseph: I could declare her to be a legitimate Jewess and her daughter to be of legitimate birth. In her case, in accordance with the view of R. Assi; for R. Assi said, ‘Did she not bathe for the purpose of her menstruation’? In the case of her daughter, because when an idolater or a slave has intercourse with a daughter of an Israelite, the child [born of such a union] is legitimate.

A certain person was once named ‘son of the female heathen’. Said R. Assi, ‘Did she not bathe for the purpose of her menstruation’?

A certain person was once named ‘son of the male heathen’. Said R. Joshua b. Levi, ‘Did he not bathe in connection with any mishap of his’?

R. Hama b. Guria said in the name of Rab: If a man bought a slave from an idolater and [that slave] forestalled him and performed ritual ablution with the object of acquiring the status of a freed man, he acquires thereby his emancipation. What is the reason?

(1) Lit., ‘who is it’?
(2) So that Rabbah's decision in the case of the half slave is based on a ruling of Rab Judah.
(3) I.e., he is a bastard, and may never marry a Jewess, How, then, could Rabbah regard the child of such a union as legitimate?

(4) That he can have no redress.

(5) The half slave.

(6) Not merely cohabited without betrothal.

(7) The betrothal, as far as his partial status of a slave is concerned, is invalid, while in respect of his partial state of emancipation it is valid. The Jewess is consequently his legal wife.

(8) The slave in him having cohabited with the woman who is legally betrothed to the emancipated part of him causes the offspring of the union to be deemed a bastard, as is the case with the offspring of any union between a betrothed or married woman and a stranger, be the latter Israelite, idolater or slave. If, however, cohabitation only between the half slave and a Jewess took place, ‘without previous betrothal, the woman is not the legal wife of the ‘half freed man’ and the child born from the union is the child of an unmarried woman and is consequently legitimate, as Rabbah ruled. In the case of a full slave the question of betrothal does not arise since even if betrothal did take place it is invalid and the woman is legally deemed to be unmarried.

(9) Of a union between a Jewess and an idolater or a slave.

(10) He who regards the child as legitimate and the other who regards him as illegitimate.

(11) Betrothal of whom by the son is invalid and the offspring of any union between them is a bastard.

(12) Such as an idolater or a slave.

(13) Lit., ‘to him’.

(14) So in all such cases, A child born from such unions only is illegitimate.

(15) The cases of these being different from that of ‘father's wife’, the child born from a union between a Jewess and any of these must be deemed to be legitimate. The father is entirely eliminated and the child is ascribed to the mother. Now, since the statement of the Nehardeans proves that there is no difference between an unmarried and a married (or betrothed) woman, the distinction drawn supra between cohabitation after a betrothal and one in the absence of betrothal is obviously untenable. The objection then against Rabbah’s ruling remains!

(16) That the child has no redress.

(17) The half slave and half freed man spoken of.

(18) Which has the same status as that of an Israelite,

(19) Cf. supra p. 295, n. 14. As the offspring of a union between an Israelite and a married woman is a bastard, so is that of the union between the semi-emancipated (cf. supra n. 10) and a married woman.

(20) A child was born from a union between a slave and a Jewess.

(21) For the reason given supra Cf. supra p. 296, nn. 6. 7 and text.

(22) So Emden a.l, Cur. edd., ‘Rabbah’.

(23) Cf. supra n. 1.

(24) Rachel was one of Mar Samuel’s captive daughters, who, while in captivity, was married to an idolater and gave birth to Mari, Issur, the father of the child, embraced Judaism while Rachel was still in her pregnancy, and he is several times referred to in the Talmud as Issur the proselyte. (V. Keth. 23a; B.B. 149a. Sonc. ed. p. 644, and notes a.l.).

(27) R. Mari.

(28) The slave wished to take her as wife. Lit., ‘wife’, or ‘wifehood’. He made her take a ritual bath in accordance with the requirements prescribed for the menstruant before she can be permitted connubial intercourse.

(29) Though the bath was taken for menstrual purification yet since an idolatress takes no such baths, it may be regarded as one for the purpose of her conversion also. Usually, before he may be admitted as a legitimate proselyte, the convert must both be circumcised and bathe in a ritual bath for the specific purpose of the conversion. V, infra 46b.

(30) Born from the slave and herself,

(31) Though she is the offspring of a union between a slave and a woman who, at the time of giving birth to her, had already enjoyed the status of a Jewess.

(32) So long as she bathed for one purpose she may be deemed to have bathed for the other also. (V. infra).

(33) For the reason given supra. Cf. supra p. 296. on. 6, 7 and text.

(34) Because his mother did not take a ritual bath at the time of her conversion to Judaism.

(35) Cf. note 6 mutatis mutandis.
— The idolater has no title to the person [of the slave]¹ and he can transfer to the Israelite only that which is his. And [the slave], since he forestalled him and performed ritual ablution for the purpose of acquiring the status of a freed man, has thereby cancelled the obligations of his servitude, in accordance with the ruling of Raba. For Raba stated: Consecration,² leavened food³ and manumission⁴ cancel a mortgage.⁵

R. Hisda raised an objection: It happened with the proselyte Valeria⁶ that her slaves forestalled her and performed ritual ablutions⁷ before her. And when the matter came before the Sages they decided that the slaves had acquired the status of freed men.⁸ [From here it follows that] only if they performed ablution before her,⁹ but not if after her¹⁰ — Raba replied: ‘Before her’ they acquire their emancipation whether the object of their bathing had, or had not been specified,¹¹ ‘after her’ emancipation is acquired only when the object had been specified,¹² but not when it had not been specified.¹³

R. Iwya said: What has been taught¹⁴ applies only to one¹⁵ who buys¹⁶ from an idolater; but the idolater himself¹⁷ may well be acquired;¹⁸ for it is written in Scripture, Moreover from the children of the strangers that do sojourn among you, of them may ye buy:¹⁹ you may buy of them but they may not buy of you, nor may they buy of one another.²⁰ ‘But they may not buy of you’. — What can this refer to? If it be suggested [that it refers] to one's manual labour, may not an idolater, [it may be asked,] buy an Israelite to do manual labour? Surely it is written, Or to the offshoot of a stranger's family,²¹ and a Master said that by ‘stranger's family’ an idolater was meant²² Consequently it must refer to his person;²³ and the All Merciful said, ‘You may buy of them,²⁴ even their persons’. R. Aha objected: It²⁵ might be said [to refer to acquisition] by means of money and ritual ablution!²⁶ — This is a difficulty.

Samuel said: He²⁷ must be firmly held²⁸ while he is in the water;²⁹ as [was done with] Menjamin, the slave of R. Ashi who wished to perform ritual ablution,³⁰ and was entrusted to Rabina and R. Aha son of Raba. ‘Note’, [R. Ashi] said to them, ‘that I shall claim him from you’.³¹ They put a chain³² round his neck, and loosened it and again tightened it. They loosened it in order that there might be no interposition,³³ They then tightened it again in order that he might not forestall them and declare,³⁴ ‘I perform the ablution in order to procure thereby the status of a freed man’. While he was raising his head from the water they placed upon it a bucket full of clay and told him, ‘Go, carry it to your master's house.

R. Papa said to Raba: The master must have observed the men of Papa b. Abba's house who advance sums of money on people's accounts in respect of their capitation taxes,³⁵ and then force them into their service. Do they,³⁶ when set free, require a deed of emancipation or not? He replied: Were I now dead I could not have told you of this ruling. Thus said R. Shesheth: The surety for these people³⁷ is deposited in the king's archive, and the king has ordained that whosoever does not pay his capitation tax shall be made the slave of him who pays it for him.³⁸

R. Hiyya b. Abba once came to Gabla³⁹ where he observed Jewish women who conceived from proselytes who were circumcised but had not performed the required ritual ablution;⁴⁰ he also noticed that idolaters were serving⁴¹ Jewish wine and Israelites were drinking it,⁴² and he also saw that idolaters were cooking lupines and Israelites ate them;⁴³ but he did not speak to them on the matter at all. He called, however, upon R. Johanan who instructed him: Go and announce that their children are bastards; that their wine is forbidden as nesek wine;⁴⁴ and that their lupines are forbidden as food cooked by idolaters, because⁴⁶ they⁴⁶ are ignorant of the Torah.

‘That their children are bastards’, R. Johanan ruling in accordance with his view. For R. Hiyya b. Abba stated in the name of R. Johanan: A man cannot become a proper proselyte unless he has been circumcised and has also performed ritual ablation; when, therefore, no ablation has been performed he is regarded as an idolater; and Rabbah b. Bar Hana stated in the name of R. Johanan that if an idolater or a slave cohabited with the daughter of an Israelite the child [born from such a union] is a bastard.

‘That their wine is forbidden as nesek wine’, because a nazirite⁴⁷ is told, ‘Keep away; go round about; approach not the vineyard’.⁴⁸

‘That their lupines are forbidden as food cooked by idolaters, because they are ignorant of the Torah’. [Would their lupines have been] permitted if the men had been acquainted with the Torah? Surely R. Samuel b. R. Isaac stated in the name of Rab, ‘Any foodstuff that may be eaten raw does not come under the prohibition of food cooked by idolaters’, and since lupines cannot be eaten raw the prohibition of food cooked by idolaters should apply!⁴⁹ — R. Johanan holds the view as expressed in a second version. For R. Samuel b. R. Isaac stated in the name of Rab, ‘Whatever is not served on a royal table as a dish to be eaten with bread is not subject to the prohibition of food cooked by idolaters The reason, therefore,⁵⁰ is because they were ignorant of the Torah;⁵¹ for had they been acquainted with the Torah [their lupines would have been] permitted.

Our Rabbis taught: ‘If a proselyte was circumcised but had not performed the prescribed ritual ablation, R. Eliezer said, ‘Behold he is a proper proselyte; for so we find that our forefathers⁵² were circumcised and had not performed ritual ablation’. If he performed the prescribed ablation but had not been circumcised, R. Joshua said, ‘Behold he is a proper proselyte; for so we find that the mothers⁵³ had performed ritual ablation but had not been circumcised’. The Sages, however, said, ‘Whether he had performed ritual ablation but had not been circumcised or whether he had been circumcised but had not performed the prescribed ritual ablation, he is not a proper proselyte, unless he has been circumcised and has also performed the prescribed ritual ablation.

Let R. Joshua also infer from the forefathers, and let R. Eliezer also infer from the mothers! And should you reply⁵⁴ that a possibility⁵⁵ may not be inferred from an impossibility,⁵⁶ surely [it may be retorted] it was taught: R. Eliezer said, ‘whence is it deduced that the paschal lamb⁵⁷ of later generations⁵⁸ may be brought from hullin⁵⁹ only? Those in Egypt were commanded to bring⁶⁰ a Paschal lamb and those of later generations were commanded to bring a Paschal lamb; as the Paschal lamb spoken of in Egypt could be brought from hullin⁵⁹ only, so may also the paschal lamb which had been commanded to later generations be brought from hullin only’. Said R. Akiba to him, ‘may a possibility be inferred from an impossibility!’⁶¹ The other replied, ‘Although an impossibility, it is nevertheless a proof of importance and deduction from it may be made’!⁶² — But

(1) As will be explained infra, no idolater may acquire the person of another idolater.
(2) For the altar, of a pledged animal,
(3) Which is pledged to a non-Israelite but kept in the possession of an Israelite when the time for its destruction on the Passover Eve arrived. No leavened food may be kept in Jewish possession (though pledged to a non-Jew) from midday of Passover Eve until the conclusion of the Passover festival.
(4) Of a mortgaged slave, v, Git. 40b.
(5) Similarly here, the ritual ablation of the slave, for the purpose of procuring his manumission, cancelled his obligations to his idolatrous master, and ipso facto to his Jewish master who is only the representative of the former and can lay no greater claim to the slave than he.
(6) Heb. בֵּית רֵויָם.
(7) For the purpose of conversion to Judaism, and thereby procuring their manumission.

(8) Infra 66b, Keth, 59b, Git, 40b, Ned, 86b, B.K. 89b.

(9) Are they manumitted; because, in that case, they were already proselytes while she was still an idolatress with no title to them.

(10) Lit., ‘before her, yes: after her, no’. Thus it has been shewn that if the owner is an Israelite, ritual ablution does not procure the slave's manumission, which is in contradiction to what R. Hama stated in the name of Rab!

(11) Lit., ‘whether specified or unspecified’.

(12) When the slave specifically stated that his ablution was performed for the purpose of procuring his manumission: cf. the statement of R. Hama b. Guria.

(13) Lit., ‘by specified, yes: by unspecified. no’.

(14) That by ritual ablution a slave procures his emancipation.

(15) Lit., ‘they did not teach but’.

(16) A slave.

(17) If he sold his own person.

(18) And a ritual ablution does not procure his liberation.

(19) Lev, XXV, 45.

(20) Git. 37b.

(21) Lev. XXV, 47.

(22) How then could it be suggested that an Israelite may not sell his manual labour to an idolater!

(23) An idolater cannot acquire the person of an Israelite,

(24) Of then, may ye by, Lev, XXV, 45.

(25) The authorization to buy the person of an idolater.

(26) As a slave of a Jew. A heathen, bought as a slave by a Jew, had to submit to circumcision and ritual ablution and thereby acquired partly the status of a Jew: in respect of observances he was on the same footing as Jewish women and minor sons. What proof, however, is there that an idolater does not acquire his freedom if he performed ritual ablution with the specific object of procuring thereby his manumission?

(27) An idolatrous slave who is performing his ablution on his initiation into Judaism as a slave of a Jew.

(28) To indicate that he is performing his ablution as a slave.

(29) Unless some outward mark of slavery accompanied the ablution the slave can procure his manumission by making a declaration, while he is in the water, that he performs his ablution for the purpose of procuring thereby his freedom.

(30) On his initiation as the slave of a Jew.

(31) If, while in the water, he will declare that his ablution was performed for the purpose of procuring his emancipation.

(33) Between his body and the water. In all cases of ritual ablution the water must come in direct contact with every external part of the body.

(34) So Bah. Cur. edd., add, ‘to them’.

(35) Which they themselves are unable to pay to the government when due.

(36) These temporary slaves who were heathens.

(37) מַעְרֵשְׁרִים (cf. Gr.  Lat. misceo). lit., ‘to mix’, sc. wine with water or spices, also signifies ‘to fill the cup, ‘to serve’.

(38) The temporary service is consequently regarded as proper slavery, and a deed of emancipation is necessary should such slaves ever desire to embrace Judaism and to be permitted to marry a Jewess.

(39) Gebal of Ps. LXXXIII, 8. i.e., the northern part of Mt. Seir.

(40) Ritual ablution is an essential part of the ceremonial of initiation into Judaism.

(41) The verb לֵאָל (cf. Gr.  Lat. misceo), lit., ‘to mix’, sc. wine with water or spices, also signifies ‘to fill the cup, ‘to serve’.

(42) Wine that has been touched by an idolater suspected of dedicating it to idolatrous purposes is forbidden to an Israelite.

(43) Although an Israelite is forbidden to eat of the food which an idolater has cooked.

(44) ‘wine of libation’, applied to wine that has been, or is suspected of having been dedicated as a ‘drink offering’ to an idol or idolatrous purpose.

(45) The reason applies to the prohibition of the lupines. v. infra.
The men of Gabla.

V. Num. VI, 2ff.

I.e., a man must be so careful in the observance of a commandment that he must not only keep away from a prohibition itself but also from that which is permitted but might lead to an infringement of a prohibition. A nazirite who is forbidden to drink wine must not even approach a vineyard. Similarly nesek wine is forbidden only when an idolater has actually touched it; but as a preventive measure it has been forbidden, as here, even when contact was indirect.

What need then was there to give as a reason, ‘because they are ignorant of the Torah’?

Why the lupines of the men of Gabla were forbidden,

The restriction having been imposed upon them as a preventive measure against their possible laxity in the general laws concerning food cooked by idolaters; cf. parallel passage ‘A.Z. 59a.

Those who departed from Egypt as heathens and received the Torah on Mount Sinai when they were, so to speak, converted to Judaism.

V. supra p. 302, n. 6.

To the second query.

It is possible to circumcise a male proselyte.

The mothers who left Egypt may have been admitted to Judaism by ritual ablution only because the other rite was in their case an impossibility.

V. Ex. XII, 3ff.

Subsequent to the generation that brought the first Paschal lamb in Egypt.

Lit., ‘it was said’.

The Paschal lamb in Egypt could not possibly have been brought from consecrated animals. V. supra n. 7, second clause.

Men. 82a, which proves that even from an impossibility an inference may be drawn. The difficulty, therefore, remains, why does not R. Eliezer, like R. Joshua, infer from the mothers?

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 46b

all agree¹ that ritual ablution without circumcision is effective; and they differ only on circumcision without ablution. R. Eliezer infers from the forefathers,² while R. Joshua [maintains that] in the case of the forefathers also ritual ablution was performed. Whence does he³ deduce it?⁴ If it be suggested, ‘From that which is written, Go unto the people, and sanctify them to-day and to-morrow, and let them wash their garments,’ if where washing of the garments is not required⁶ ablution is required,⁷ how much more should ablution be required where washing of the garments is required’⁸ [it may be retorted that] that⁹ might have been a mere matter of cleanliness.¹⁰ — It is rather from here:¹¹ And Moses took the blood, and sprinkled it on the people,¹² and we have a tradition that there must be no sprinkling without ritual ablution.¹³

Whence does R. Joshua infer that the mothers performed ritual ablution? — It is a logical conclusion, for, otherwise,¹⁴ whereby did they enter under the wings of the Shechinah!¹⁵

R. Hiyya b. Abba stated in the name of R. Johanan: A man can never become a proselyte unless he has been circumcised and has also performed the prescribed ritual ablution.¹⁶ Is not this obvious? [In a dispute between] an individual and a majority the halachah is, surely, in agreement with the majority¹⁷ — The expression ‘Sages’ is in fact meant for¹⁸ ‘R. Jose’. For it was taught: If [a proselyte] came and stated, ‘I have been circumcised but have not performed ritual ablution’ he is permitted to perform the ablution¹⁹ and [the proper performance of the previous circumcision] does not matter;²⁰ so R. Judah.

R. Jose said: He is not to be allowed ablution;²¹ Hence²² it is permissible for a proselyte²³ to perform the prescribed ablution on the Sabbath;24 so R. Judah. R. Jose, however, said: He is not to be allowed to perform the ablution.25

The Master said, ‘Hence it is permissible for a proselyte to perform the prescribed ablution on the Sabbath; so R. Judah’.26 Seeing that R. Judah stated that one27 suffices is it not obvious that, if circumcision has been performed in our presence, he is permitted to perform ablution! Why then, ‘Hence’?28 — It might have been assumed that in the opinion of R. Judah, ablution forms the principal [part of the initiation],29 and that ablution is not to take place on the Sabbath because, thereby, a man is improved;30 hence we were taught31 that R. Judah requires either the one or the other.32

‘R. Jose, however, said: He is not to be allowed to perform the ablution’. Is not this obvious? Since R. Jose said that both33 are required [ablution must be forbidden as] the improvement of a man34 may not be effected on the Sabbath! — It might have been assumed that in the opinion of R. Jose circumcision forms the principal [part of the initiation] and that the reason there35 is because the circumcision had not been performed in our presence36 but where the circumcision had taken place in our presence37 it might have been assumed that a proselyte in such circumstances38 may perform the prescribed ablution even on the Sabbath, hence we were taught39 that R. Jose requires both.33

Rabbah stated: It happened at the court of R. Hiyya b. Rabbi(and R. Joseph taught: R. Oshaia b.40 Rabbi;41 and R. Safras taught: R. Oshaia b. Hiyya)41 — that there came before him a proselyte who had been circumcised but had not performed the ablution.42 The Rabbi told him, ‘Wait here until tomorrow43 when we shall arrange for your ablution’. From this incident three rulings may be deduced. It may be inferred that the initiation of a proselyte requires the presence of three men;44 and it may be inferred that a man is not a proper proselyte unless he had been circumcised and had also performed the prescribed ablution; and it may also be inferred45 that the ablution of a proselyte may not take place during the night.

Let it be said that from this incident it may also be inferred that qualified scholars are required46 — Their presence might have been a mere coincidence.47

R. Hiyya b. Abba stated in the name of R. Johanan: The initiation of a proselyte requires the presence of three men; for law48 has been written in his case.49

Our Rabbis taught: As it might have been assumed that if a man came and said, ‘I am a proselyte’ he is to be accepted,50 hence it was specifically stated in the Scriptures With thee,51 only when he is well known to thee. Whence is it inferred that if he came, and had his witnesses with him, [that his word is accepted]? — It was specifically stated in Scripture, And if a proselyte sojourn . . . in your land.52

(1) Even R. Eliezer.
(2) Who, he maintains, did not perform any ritual ablution when they were admitted to Judaism.
(3) R. Joshua.
(4) That the forefathers had performed ritual ablution.
(5) Ex. XIX, 20,
(6) E.g., after nocturnal pollution; keri. v. Glos.
(7) V. Lev. XV, 26,
(8) As was the case when Israel received the Torah and were thus admitted into Judaism. (V. Ex, XIX, 10).
(9) The washing of the garments.
(10) And had no reference to Levitical purity. Such washing, therefore, can have no bearing on the question of the ritual ablution of proselytes.
(11) Is R. Joshua’s deduction made.
(12) Ex. XXIV, 8.
(13) Ker, 9a.
(14) Lit., ‘for if so’, if even ablution was not performed.
(15) V. Glos. They could not have been initiated without any ceremomial whatsoever.
(16) Ber. 47b.
(17) And this view is held (supra 46a) by the Sages who obviously form a majority against the individual or joint opinions of R. Eliezer and R. Joshua.
(18) Lit., ‘who are the Sages’?
(19) And by this act alone he is admitted as a proper proselyte.
(20) Lit., ‘and what is there in it’. Whether the circumcision had been valid, having been performed for the specific ritual purpose of the proselyte's initiation into Judaism, or whether it had been invalid because it was carried out as a mere surgical operation or as a non-Jewish sectarian rite, is of no consequence, since the present performance of the ritual ablution is alone sufficient for the initiation.
(21) Because both circumcision and ablation are required. As the validity of the former is in doubt (v. supra note 1) the latter most nut be allowed unless some act of circumcision (causing a few drops of blood to flow) had again been carried out specifically for the purpose of the initiation.
(22) Since according to R. Akiba one act, either ablation or circumcision, suffices.
(23) Who had been circumcised on Sabbath Eve in the ritually prescribed manner.
(24) The ablation being of no consequence (v. supra on. 3 and 4), the proselyte's person in no way being improved by it, it is an act which is permitted on the Sabbath.
(25) The ablation completes the initiation and thus effects the proselyte's improvement, which is an act forbidden on the Sabbath. Thus it has been shewn that the author of the view that both ablution and circumcision are required, given supra as the opinion of ‘the Sages’, is in fact R. Jose.
(26) V. Bah. Cur. edd. omit the last three words.
(27) Either circumcision or ablation.
(28) — Hence etc.’. There is no need, surely, to state the obvious.
(29) Since circumcision he stated supra does not matter.
(30) V. supra note 6.
(31) By the addition of ‘Hence etc,’.
(32) Either circumcision or ablation.
(33) Circumcision and ablation,
(34) Which is completed by the ablation (v. supra p. 305, n. 6).
(35) Supra. Where a proselyte who declared, ‘I have been circumcised but have not performed ritual ablution’ is not to be allowed ablution.
(36) And may be presumed to have been invalid.
(37) And is known to us to have been carried out in accordance with the requirements of the law.
(38) Lit., ‘this’.

(41) Was also present.
(42) Requesting that he be allowed to perform the prescribed ablution, so as to complete his initiation.
(43) The incident having occurred during the night.
(44) Since R. Safra insisted that three scholars (R. Hiyya and the two R. Oshaias) were present at the time the proselyte's request for his initiation was dealt with.
(45) Since the ablation was postponed till the following morning.
(46) To witness the initiation of a proselyte, as was the ease here where all the three were qualified men, v, Glos. s.v. Mumhe.
(47) And provides no proof that in all other cases the presence of qualified scholars is essential.
(48) Num, XV, 16, One law . . . for the proselyte 72 (E.V. ‘Stranger’).
(49) As no point of law can be authoritatively decided by a court of less than three men who constitute a Beth din, so may no initiation of a proselyte take place unless it is witnessed by three men.
(50) As a legitimate proselyte, and he should require no initiation ceremonial.
Lev. XIX, 33. And if a proselyte (םָּלֶּךְ E.V., ‘stranger’) sojourn with thee.

Ibid., i.e., as long as he is in your land even if he is not well known to you. Cf. n. 4, supra. Cur. edd. include here ‘with thee’ which should be omitted since the phrase has been previously employed as proof to the contrary that the proselyte must be well known.
From this I only know [that the law is applicable] within the Land of Israel, whence is it inferred [that it is also applicable] within the countries outside the Land? — It was specifically stated in Scripture, With thee, i.e., ‘wherever he is with thee’. If so, why was the Land of Israel specified? — In the Land of Israel proof must be produced; outside the Land of Israel no such proof need be produced; these are the words of R. Judah. But the Sages said: Proof must be produced both within the Land of Israel and outside the Land.

‘If he came and had witnesses with him,’ what need is there for a Scriptural text? R. Shesheth replied: Where they state, ‘We heard that he be came a proselyte at a certain particular court’. As it might have been taught that we are not to believe them, we were taught [that we do believe them].

‘In your land’ from this I only know [that the law is applicable] within the Land of Israel, whence is it inferred [that it is also applicable] within the countries outside the Land? — It was specifically stated in Scripture, With thee, i.e., wherever he is with thee’. But this surely, had been expounded already! — One is derived from With thee and the other from With you.

‘But the Sages said: Proof must be produced both within the Land of Israel and outside the Land’. But, it is written, surely, in your land! — That expression is required [for the deduction] that proselytes may be accepted even in the Land of Israel. As it might have been assumed that there they become proselytes only on account of the prosperity of the Land of Israel, and at the present time also, when there is no prosperity, they might still be attracted by the Gleanings, the Forgotten Sheaf, the Corner and the Poor Man's Tithe, hence we were taught [that they may nevertheless be accepted].

R. Hiyya b. Abba stated in the name of R. Johanan, ‘The halachah is that proof must be produced both in the Land of Israel and outside the Land’. Is this not obvious? [In a dispute between] an individual and a majority the halachah is, of course, in agreement with the majority! — It might have been suggested that R. Judah's view is more acceptable since he is supported by Scriptural texts, ‘A hence we were taught [that the halachah is in agreement with the Sages].

Our Rabbis taught: And judge righteously between a man and his brother, and the proselyte that is with him; from this text did R. Judah deduce that a man who becomes a proselyte in the presence of a Beth din is deemed to be a proper proselyte; but he who does so privately is no proselyte.

It once happened that a man came before R. Judah and told him, ‘I have become a proselyte privately’. ‘Have you witnesses’? R. Judah asked. ‘No’, the man replied. ‘Have you children’? — ‘Yes’, the man replied. ‘You are trusted’, the Master said to him, ‘as far as your own disqualification is concerned but you cannot be relied upon to disqualify your children.

Did R. Judah, however, state that a proselyte is not trusted in respect of his children? Surely it was taught: He shall acknowledge implies, ‘he shall be entitled to acknowledge him before others? From this did R. Judah deduce that a man is believed when he declares, ‘This son of mine is firstborn’, And as a man is believed when he declares, ‘This son of mine is firstborn’ so is he believed when he declares, ‘This son of mine is the son of a divorced woman’ or ‘the son of a haluzah’. But the Sages say: He is not believed! — R. Nahman b. Isaac replied: It is this that he really told him, ‘According to your own statement you are an idolater, and no idolater is eligible to tender evidence’.

Rabina said: It is this that he really told him, ‘Have you children’? [And when the other replied] ‘Yes’ [he asked] ‘Have you grandchildren’. [The reply being again] ‘Yes’, he told him ‘You are trusted so far as to disqualify your own children but you cannot be trusted so far as to disqualify your grandchildren’.

Thus it was also taught elsewhere: R. Judah said, ‘A man is trusted in respect [of the status of] his young son but not in respect of that of his grown-up son; and R. Hiyya b. Abba explained in the name of R. Johanan that ‘young’ does not mean actually a minor and ‘grown-up’ does not mean one who is actually ‘of age’, but any young son who has children is regarded as of age while any grown-up son who has no children is deemed to be a minor. And the law is in agreement with R. Nahman b. Isaac. But, surely, [a Baraitha] was taught in agreement with Rabina — That statement was made with reference to the law of acknowledgement.

Our Rabbis taught: If at the present time a man desires to become a proselyte, he is to be addressed as follows: ‘What reason have you for desiring to become a proselyte; do you not know that Israel at the present time are persecuted and oppressed, despised, harassed and overcome by afflictions’? If he replies, ‘I know and yet am unworthy’, he is accepted forthwith, and is given instruction in some of the minor and some of the major commandments. He is informed of the sin [of the neglect of the commandments of] Gleanings, the Forgotten Sheaf, the Corner and the Poor Man's Tithe. He is also told of the punishment for the transgression of the commandments. Furthermore, he is addressed thus: ‘Be it known to you that before you came to this condition, if you had eaten suet you would not have been punishable with kareth, if you had profaned the Sabbath you would not have been punishable with stoning; but now were you to eat suet you would be punished with kareth; were you to profane the Sabbath you would be punished with stoning’. And as he is informed of the punishment for the transgression of the commandments, so is he informed of the reward granted for their fulfilment. He is told, ‘Be it known to you that the world to come was made only for the righteous, and that Israel at the present time are unable to bear either too much prosperity, or too much suffering’. He is not, however, to be persuaded or dissuaded too much.¹ If he accepted,² he is circumcised forthwith. Should any shreds³ which render the circumcision invalid remain, he is to be circumcised a second time. As soon as he is healed arrangements are made for his immediate ablution, when two learned men must stand by his side and acquaint him with some of the minor commandments and with some of the major ones.⁴ When he comes up after his ablution he is deemed to be an Israelite in all respects.

In the case of a woman proselyte, women make her sit in the water up to her neck, while two learned men stand outside and give her instruction in some of the minor commandments and some of the major ones.
The same law applies to a proselyte and to an emancipated slave; and only where a menstruant may perform her ablution may a proselyte and an emancipated slave perform this ablution; and whatever is deemed an interception in ritual bathing is also deemed to be an interception in the ablutions of a proselyte, an emancipated slave and a menstruant.

The Master said, ‘If a man desires to become a proselyte . . . he is to be addressed as follows: “What reason have you for desiring to become a proselyte . . .” and he is made acquainted with some of the minor, and with some of the major commandments’. What is the reason? — In order that if he desire to withdraw let him do so; for R. Helbo said: Proselytes are as hard for Israel to endure as a sore, because it is written in Scripture. And the proselyte shall join himself with them, and they shall cleave to the house of Jacob.

‘He is informed of the sin [of the neglect of the commandment of] Gleanings, the Forgotten Sheaf, the Corner and the Poor Man’s Tithe’. What is the reason? — R. Hiyya b. Abba replied in the name of R. Johanan: Because a Noahide would rather be killed than spend so much as a perutah which is not returnable.

‘He is not, however, to be persuaded, or dissuaded too much’. R. Eleazar said: What is the Scriptural proof? — It is written, And when she saw that she was steadfastly minded to go with her, she left off speaking unto her. ‘We are forbidden’, she told her, ‘[to move on the Sabbath beyond the] Sabbath boundaries’! — ‘Whither thou goest’ [the other replied] ‘I will go’.

‘We are forbidden private meeting between man and woman’ — ‘Where thou lodgest. I will lodge’.

‘We have been commanded six hundred and thirteen commandments’! — ‘Thy people shall be my people’.

‘We are forbidden idolatry’! — ‘And thy God my God’.

‘Four modes of death were entrusted to Beth din’! — ‘Where thou diest, will I die’.

‘Two graveyards were placed at the disposal of the Beth din’! — ‘And there will I be buried’. Presently she saw that she was steadfastly minded etc.

‘If he accepted, he is circumcised forthwith’. What is the reason? — The performance of a commandment must not in any way be delayed.

‘Should any shreds which render the circumcision invalid remain etc.’, as we learned: These are the shreds which render the circumcision invalid: Flesh which covers the greater part of the corona, [a priest having been so circumcised] is not permitted to eat terumah; and R. Jeremiah b. Abba explained in the name of Rab: Flesh which covers the greater part of the height of the corona.

‘As soon as he is healed arrangements are made for his immediate ablution’. Only after he is healed but not before! What is the reason? — Because the water might irritate the wound.

‘When two learned men must stand by his side’. Did not R. Hiyya, however, state in the name of R. Johanan that the initiation of a proselyte requires the presence of three? — But, surely. R. Johanan told the tanna: Read, ‘three’.

‘When he comes up after his ablution he is deemed to be an Israelite in all respects’. In respect of what practical issue? — In that if he retracted and then betrothed the daughter of an Israelite he is regarded as a non-conforming Israelite and his betrothal is valid.33

‘The same law applies to a proselyte and to an emancipated slave’. Assuming this34 to apply to the acceptance of the yoke of the commandments,35 the following contradiction may be pointed out: This36 applies only to a proselyte. but an emancipated slave need not accept.37 — R. Shesheth replied: This is no contradiction, One statement is that of R. Simeon; the other, that of the Rabbis. For it was taught: And bewail her father and her mother etc. This only applies when she did not accept,38 but if she did accept,39 her ablution may be arranged, and he is permitted to marry her forthwith. R. Simeon b. Eleazar said: Even though she did not accept39 he may force her to perform one ablution as a mark of her slavery and a second ablution as a mark of her emancipation, and having liberated her

(8) The water must come in direct contact with the bather. Should any foreign matter intervene between his body and the water the ablution is thereby rendered invalid.
(9) Although the purpose of these ablations is not, like that of the usual ablations, to qualify for the eating, or the handling of, levitically clean things. The ablations of the proselyte and the slave are only a part of their initiation ceremonial, while that of the menstruant has for its object the woman's permissibility to her husband.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 48a

he is permitted to marry her forthwith. ¹

Raba said: What is R. Simeon b. Eleazar's reason?² — Because it is written, Every man's slave that is bought for money;³ [could it mean] the slave of a man and not the slave of a woman?⁴ But [this is the implication]: The slave⁵ of a man may be forcibly circumcised but no son of a man⁶ may be forcibly circumcised. And the Rabbis?⁷ — ‘Ulla replied: As you, admittedly, may not by force circumcise the son of a man⁸ so you may not forcibly circumcise the slave of a man. But, surely, there is the Scriptural text, Every man's slave!⁹ — That text is required for a deduction made by Samuel. For Samuel stated: If a man declared his slave to be ownerless that slave acquires thereby his freedom and requires no deed of emancipation; for it is stated in Scripture. Every man's slave that is bought for money;³ [could it mean] the slave of a man and not the slave of a woman?¹⁰ But [the meaning is that] a slave who is under his master's control is a proper¹¹ slave but he who is not under his master's control is not a proper¹¹ slave.¹²

R. Papa demurred: It might be suggested that the Rabbis were heard¹³ in respect of a woman of goodly form¹⁴ only,¹⁵ because she¹⁶ is under no obligation to observe the commandments; but that in respect of a slave,¹⁷ who is under the obligation of observing commandments, even the Rabbis agree!¹⁸ For it was indeed taught, ‘Both a proselyte and a slave bought from an idolater must make¹⁹ a declaration of acceptance’.²⁰ Thus it follows²¹ that a slave bought from an Israelite need not make a declaration of acceptance.²⁰ Now, whose view is this? If that of R. Simeon b. Eleazar, he, surely, had stated that even a slave bought from an idolater need make no declaration of acceptance²² Consequently it must be the view of the Rabbis; and so it may be inferred that only a slave bought from an idolater is required to make a declaration of acceptance²⁰ but a slave bought from an Israelite is not required to make a declaration of acceptance.²³ But then the contradiction from the statement ‘The same law applies to a proselyte and to an emancipated slave’²⁴ remains! — That²⁵ was taught only with reference to the ablution.²⁶

Our Rabbis taught: And she shall shave her head, and do²⁷ her nails,²⁸ R. Eliezer said, ‘She shall cut them’.²⁹ R. Akiba said, ‘She shall let them grow’. R. Eliezer said:³⁰ An act³¹ was mentioned in respect of the head, and an act was mentioned in respect of the nails;³² as the former signifies removal, so does the latter also signify removal. R. Akiba said:³⁰ An act³¹ was mentioned in respect of the head and an act was mentioned in respect of the nails;³² as disfigurement is the purpose of the former so is disfigurement the purpose of the latter. The following, however, supports the view of R. Eliezer: And Mephiboseth the son of Saul came down to meet the king, and he had neither dressed his feet, nor had he done³³ ‘his beard;³⁴ by ‘doing’³⁵ removal was meant.
Our Rabbis taught: And bewail her father aid her mother;\textsuperscript{36}

(1) Thus it has been shown that while the first Tanna requires the slave's acceptance of the obligation of Judaism, R. Simeon maintains that acceptance is not required, the ablution for the purpose of the emancipation is alone sufficient, even though its performance had been forced upon the slave.

(23) Having previously served an Israelite he has even without any declaration on his part become subject to the laws of Judaism. (Cf. supra p. 315, n. 16). This confirms R. In respect of acceptance of the laws of Judaism, however, they come under different categories. While the former's initiation is not complete without his formal acceptance of the laws of Judaism, that of the latter (v. supra p. 323. n. 16) requires no acceptance at all on his part, the ablution alone being sufficient.

\textbf{Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 48b}

R. Eliezer said: ‘Her father’ means her actual father; ‘Her mother’, her actual mother. R. Akiba said: ‘Her father and her mother’ refer to idolatry; for so Scripture says, Who say to a stock;\textsuperscript{1} ‘Thou art my father’, etc.2 A full month, ‘month’ means thirty days. R. Simeon b. Eleazar said: Ninety days. For ‘month’ means thirty days; ‘full’,3 thirty days; ‘and after that’ thirty days. Rabina demurred: Might it not be suggested that ‘month’ means thirty days; ‘full’, thirty days; ‘and after that’ as many again!4 — This is a difficulty.

Our Rabbis taught: Uncircumcised slaves may be retained; this is the opinion of R. Ishmael. R. Akiba said: They may not be retained.5 Said R. Ishmael to him: Behold it is written, And the son of thy handmaid may be refreshed!6 ‘This text’, the other replied, speaks of a slave that has been bought at twilight,7 when there was not time enough to circumcise him.8

All at any rate agree that And the son of thy handmaid may be refreshed6 was written in respect of an uncircumcised slave; whence may this be inferred? — From what has been taught: And the son of thy handmaid may be refreshed,6 Scripture speaks of an uncircumcised slave. You say. ‘Of an uncircumcised slave’; perhaps it is not so9 but of a circumcised slave? Since it has been stated ‘That thy man-servant and thy maid-servant may rest as well as thou,10 the circumcised slave has already been spoken of; to what then is one to apply ‘And the son of thy handmaid may be refreshed?911 Obviously to an uncircumcised slave. And the stranger12 refers to a domiciled proselyte.13 You say. ‘It refers to a domiciled proselyte’; perhaps it is not so,14 but to a true proselyte?15 Since it was stated, No’ thy strange’ that is with its thy gates,10 the true proselyte has already been mentioned; to what then is one to apply, and the stranger?12 Obviously, to the domiciled proselyte.

R. Joshua b. Levi said: If a man bought a slave from an idolater, and the slave refused to be circumcised, he may bear with him for twelve months. [If by that time he had] not been circumcised, he must re-sell him to idolaters.

The following was said by the Rabbis in the presence of R. Papa: In accordance with whose view?16 Obviously not in accordance with that of R. Akiba, since he17 stated [that uncircumcised slaves] may not be retained.18 R. Papa answered them: It may be said to be the view even of R. Akiba; for this19 applies when no definite consent has ever been given;20 but where definite consent21 had once been given,22 his original decision is taken into consideration.23

R. Kahana stated: I mentioned this reported discussion in the presence of R. Zebid of Nehardea and he said to me: If so, instead of R. Akiba replying24 that ‘[the text speaks] of a slave that has been bought at twilight’, he should rather have given this reply!25 — He gave him one of the two available solutions.

Rabin sent a message in the name of R. Il'ai, [adding]. ‘All my masters have so reported in his name’: Who is an uncircumcised slave that may be retained? He who was bought by his master with the intention of not having him circumcised.

The Rabbis argued the following in the presence of R. Papa; In accordance with whose view?26 Obviously not in accordance with that of R. Akiba, since he27 stated that [uncircumcised slaves] may not be retained! R. Papa answered: It may be said to be the view even of R. Akiba, for this28 applies where he had made no stipulation with him,29 but where a stipulation29 was made, that stipulation must be taken into consideration.30

R. Kahana said: When I mentioned the reported discussion in the presence of R. Zebid of Nehardea, he said to me: If so, instead of R. Akiba having recourse to the answer31 [that ‘the text speaks] of a slave who has been bought at twilight when there was not time enough to circumcise him’ he should rather have given this reply!32

But even if your argument is admitted he should rather have given that reply!33 But [the fact is], he mentioned one of two or three solutions.

R. Hanina b. Papi, R. Ammi, and R. Isaac Nappaha once sat in the ante-chamber of R. Isaac Nappaha, and while there, they related: There was a certain town in the Land of Israel where slaves refused to be circumcised, and after bearing with them for twelve months they re-sold them to idolaters. In accordance with whose view? — In accordance with that of the following Tanna. For it was taught: If one bought a slave from an idolater, and the slave refused to be circumcised, he bears with him for twelve months. [If by that time] he has not been circumcised, he re-sells him to idolaters. R. Simeon b. Eleazar said: In the Land of Israel he must not be kept owing to [possible] damage to levitically clean foodstuffs, and in a town which is near the frontier he must not he kept at all, since he might overhear some secret and proceed to report it to a fellow idolater. It was taught: R. Hanania son of R. Simeon b. Gamaliel said: Why are proselytes at the present time oppressed and visited with afflictions? Because they had not observed the seven Noahide commandments.

R. Jose said: One who has become a proselyte is like a child newly born. Why then are proselytes oppressed? — Because they are not so well acquainted with the details of the commandments as the Israelites.

Abba Hanan said in the name of R. Eleazar: Because they do not do it out of love but out of fear. Others said: Because they delayed their entry under the wings of the Shechinah. Said R. Abbahu, or it might be said R. Hanina: What is the Scriptural proof? — The Lord recompense thy work, and be thy reward complete from the Lord, the God of Israel, under whose etc. thou art come to take refuge.

(3) ימים lit., ‘days’.
(4) Lit., ‘like these’, i.e., equal to the sum of these two numbers, sixty: the meaning of the text being: And after another one like that, i.e., after the completion of another period equal in duration to the former (a total of a hundred and twenty days) thou mayest go in unto her etc. (Deut. XXI, 23).
(5) Even for one day.
(6) Ex. XXIII, 12. This text, as will be explained infra, deals with an uncircumcised slave.
(7) On the Sabbath Eve.
(8) Circumcision in such a case being forbidden on the Sabbath. Only a circumcision which takes place on the eighth day of a child’s birth, מילה מולדת, may be performed on the Sabbath. Since circumcision of the slave could not be performed until after the Sabbath, Scripture indicated by the injunction And the son of thy handmaid may be refreshed that oven on the first Sabbath on which he is still uncircumcised he must observe the Sabbath rest.

(46) Ruth II, 22. ‘Thou art come’ before ‘to take refuge’ implies haste. Ruth was given credit for the haste she made in entering under the divine wings. Delay in such action is culpable.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 49a

IF A MAN'S WIFE DIED, HE IS PERMITTED TO MARRY HER SISTER. IF HE DIVORCED HER AND THEN SHE DIED HE IS PERMITTED TO MARRY HER SISTER. IF SHE WAS4 MARRIED TO ANOTHER MAN AND DIED, HE IS PERMITTED TO MARRY HER SISTER.
IF A MAN'S SISTER-IN-LAW DIED, HE MAY MARRY HER SISTER. IF HE SUBMITTED TO HER HALIZAH AND THEN SHE DIED, HE IS PERMITTED TO MARRY HER SISTER. IF SHE WAS MARRIED TO ANOTHER MAN AND THEN DIED HE IS PERMITTED TO MARRY HER SISTER.

GEMARA. What is R. Akiba’s reason? — Because it is written A man shall not take his father's wife and shall not uncover his father's skirt, he shall not uncover the skirt which his father saw; and he holds the same opinion as R. Judah who said that this Scriptural text speaks of a woman whom his father had outraged, and who is classed among those forbidden to him under the penalty for a negative precept; and since close to this text occurs the commandment, A bastard shall not enter the assembly of the Lord, it is obvious that the offspring of any such union is deemed to be a bastard. According to R. Simai also who includes any other union that is forbidden by a negative precept even though the offenders are not consanguineous relatives, and according to R. Yeshebab who includes even the offspring of a union forbidden under a positive commandment, the deduction is made from And . . . not.

And Simeon the Temanite? — He holds the same opinion as the Rabbis who stated that the text speaks of a woman awaiting the levirate decision of his father, the union with such a woman being forbidden under the penalty of kareth; and since close to this text appears, A bastard shall not enter, it proves that the offspring of a union forbidden under the penalty of kareth is deemed to be a bastard.

And R. Joshua? — The All Merciful should have written ‘Shall not uncover’ only! What need was there for ‘Shall not take’? Must it not, consequently, be concluded that it is this that was meant? [The offspring of a union with her who is explicitly mentioned between ‘Shall not take’ and ‘Shall not uncover’ is deemed to be a bastard, but no others are to be regarded as bastards.

Abaye said: All agree that if one cohabited with a menstruant

(1) V. Deut. XXIII, 2.
(2) Under the penalty of flogging (incurred for the infringement of a negative precept).
(3) Such a union is punishable by death at the hands of Beth din.
(4) After her divorce.
(5) The widow of his brother who died without issue.
(6) After the halizah.
(7) Deut. XXIII, 1.
(8) R. Akiba.
(9) Not his lawful wife. Infra 97a.
(10) Flogging (v. supra note 1).
(11) Deut. XXIII, 3.
(12) Forbidden under the penalty for a negative precept (v. supra p. 321, n. 1).
(13) In R. Akiba’s category of bastards.
(14) Keth, 29b, Kid. 68a, the marriage, e.g., with one's divorced wife.
(15) The union, e.g., with an Edomite or an Egyptian (v. Deut. XXIII, 8-9) the prohibition of which is derived from the positive precept. The third generation that are born unto then, may enter into the assembly of the Lord (ibid. 9) from which it follows that only the third generation may enter; but not the first, or the second generation. Any prohibition that is derived from a positive precept has only the force of a positive precept and does not involve the penalty of flogging, much less that of kareth. V. Keth. 29b.
(16) That these categories are also classed as bastards.
(17) Deut. XXIII, 1b.
(18) Whence, in view of R. Akiba’s deduction, does he derive his ruling in our Mishnah?
(19) Whose husband died without issue.
(20) Who most decide whether to contract with her the levirate marriage or to submit to halizah from her.

(21) As one's father's brother's wife.

(22) Whence does he derive his ruling in out Mishnah?

(23) If the text of Deut. XXIII, 1b speaks of a woman outraged by one's father (as R. Judah maintains) or of a widow awaiting the decision of the levir (as Simeon the Temanite asserts).

(24) From which text alone R. Judah and the Rabbis could have deduced their respective rulings, while the case of one's father's wife would follow logically by inference a minori ad majus.

(26) By the addition of the text Shall not take.

(27) I.e., one's father's wife, forbidden under the death penalty at the hands of Beth din.

(28) The offspring of unions which are forbidden under the penalty of kareth or flogging.

(29) The proximity of Deut, XXIII, 3 (the text relating to the bastard) to that of v. 1, according to R. Joshua, beats on the case of a father's wife only (v. 2a). The mention of ‘shall not uncover’ (v. 1b) implies, if it refers to one's father's brother's widow awaiting the levir's decision (the view of the Rabbis and Simeon the Temanite), that cohabitation with her is forbidden to the levir's sun by two negative precepts, those of Lev. XVIII, 24 and Deut. XXIII, 1b; and if it refers to a woman whom one's father has outraged (the view of R. Akiba and R. Judah). the text is required to lay down this very prohibition.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 49b

or with a sotah, the child [born from either union] is no bastard. ‘A menstruant’, since betrothal with her is valid because it is said, And her impurity be upon him, even at the time of her menstruation betrothal with her is valid. ‘A sotah’ also, since her betrothal is valid. It has been taught likewise: All agree that if one cohabited with a menstruant or with a sotah or with a widow awaiting the decision of a levir, the child [born from any such union] is no bastard. And Abaye? — He was in doubt in the case of a widow awaiting the decision of the levir as to whether [the law is] in agreement with Rab or with Samuel.

SAID R. SIMEON B. AZZAI etc. [A tanna] recited: Simeon b. ‘Azzai said, ‘I found a roll of genealogical records in Jerusalem and therein was written "So-and-so is a bastard [having been born] from a forbidden union with] a married woman" and therein was also written "The teaching of R. Eliezer b. Jacob is small in quantity but thoroughly sifted". And in it was also written, "Manasseh slew Isaiah"'.

Raba said: He brought him to trial and then slew him. He said to him: Your teacher Moses said, ‘For men shall not see Me and live’ and you said, ‘I saw the Lord sitting on a throne, high and lifted up’. Your teacher Moses said , ‘For what [great nation is there, that hath God so nigh unto them], as the Lord our God is whenssoever we call upon him’, and you said, ‘Seek ye the Lord when he may be found’. Your teacher Moses said, ‘The number of thy days I will fulfil’ but you said, ‘And I will add on to your days fifteen years’. ‘I know’, thought Isaiah, ‘that whatever I may tell him he will not accept; and should I reply at all, I would only cause him to be a wilful [homicide]’. He thereupon pronounced [the Divine] Name and was swallowed up by a cedar. The cedar, however, was brought and sawn asunder. When the saw reached his month he died. [And this was his penalty] for having said, ‘And I dwell in the midst of a people of unclean lips’. [Do not] the contradictions between the Scriptural texts, however, still remain? — ‘I saw the Lord’, [is to be understood] in accordance with what was taught: All the prophets looked into a dim glass, but Moses looked through a clear glass. As to ‘Seek ye the Lord when he may be found [etc.] one [verse] applies to an individual, the other to a congregation. When [is the time for] an individual? — R. Nahman replied in the name of Rabbah b. Abbuha: The ten days between the New Year and the Day of Atonement. Concerning the number of thy days I will fulfil, Tannaim are in disagreement. For it was taught: The number of thy days I will fulfil.

refers to the years of the generations. If one is worthy one is allowed to complete the full period; if unworthy, the number is reduced; so R. Akiba. But the Sages said: If one is worthy years are added to one's life; if unworthy, the years of his life are reduced. They said to R. Akiba: Behold, Scripture says, And I will add unto your days fifteen years! He replied: The addition was made of his own. You may know [that this is so] since the prophet stood up and prophesied: Behold, a son shall be born to the house of David, Josiah by name, while Manasseh had not yet been born. And the Rabbis! — Is it written ‘from Hezekiah’? It is surely written, ‘To the house of David’; he might be born either from Hezekiah or from any other person.

IF A MAN'S WIFE DIED etc. IF A MAN'S SISTER-IN-LAW DIED etc. R. Joseph said: Here Rabbi taught an unnecessary Mishnah.

CHAPTER V

MISHNAH. R. GAMALIEL SAID: THERE IS NO [VALIDITY IN A] LETTER OF DIVORCE AFTER ANOTHER LETTER OF DIVORCE, NOR IN A MA'AMAR AFTER ANOTHER MA'AMAR NOR IN AN ACT OF COHABITATION AFTER ANOTHER ACT OF COHABITATION, NOT IN A HALIZAH AFTER ANOTHER HALIZAH. THE SAGES, HOWEVER, SAID: A LETTER OF DIVORCE HAS VALIDITY AFTER ANOTHER LETTER OF DIVORCE, AND A MA'AMAR AFTER ANOTHER MA'AMAR; BUT THERE IS NO VALIDITY IN ANY ACT AFTER COHABITATION OR HALIZAH.

HOW [IS THE RELEASE FROM THE LEVIRATE BOND EFFECTED]? — IF A LEVIR ADDRESSED A MA'AMAR TO HIS SISTER-IN-LAW AND SUBSEQUENTLY GAVE HER A LETTER OF DIVORCE, IT IS NECESSARY FOR HER TO PERFORM THE HALIZAH WITH HIM. IF HE ADDRESSED TO HER A MA'AMAR AND PARTICIPATED IN THE HALIZAH, IT IS NECESSARY FOR HER TO OBTAIN FROM HIM A LETTER OF DIVORCE. IF HE ADDRESSED TO HER A MA'AMAR AND THEN COHABITED WITH HER, BEHOLD THIS IS IN ACCORDANCE WITH THE PRESCRIBED PRECEPT.

IF THE LEVIR GAVE HER A LETTER OF DIVORCE AND THEN ADDRESSED TO HER A MA'AMAR, IT IS NECESSARY FOR HER TO OBTAIN [A SECOND] LETTER OF DIVORCE AND TO PERFORM THE HALIZAH. IF HE GAVE HER A LETTER OF DIVORCE AND THEN COHABITED WITH HER, IT IS NECESSARY FOR HER TO OBTAIN A LETTER OF DIVORCE AND TO PERFORM THE HALIZAH. IF HE GAVE HER A LETTER OF DIVORCE AND THEN SUBMITTED TO HALIZAH, THERE IS NO VALIDITY IN ANY ACT AFTER HALIZAH HAD BEEN PERFORMED.

IF THE LEVIR SUBMITTED TO HALIZAH AND THEN ADDRESSED TO HER A MA'AMAR, GAVE HER A LETTER OF DIVORCE, OR COHABITED WITH HER; OR IF HE COHABITED WITH HER AND THEN ADDRESSED TO HER A MA'AMAR, GAVE HER A LETTER OF DIVORCE, OR SUBMITTED TO HER HALIZAH, NO ACT IS VALID AFTER HALIZAH.

(1) The span of life allotted to every human being at his birth.
(2) The meaning of fulfil is addition to the allotted span of life.
(3) II Kings XX, 6.
(4) Emphasis on add.
(5) Years which were originally allotted to him and then curtailed.
(6) That the years added were only those allotted to Hezekiah at his birth and reduced at his illness.
(7) In the days of Jeroboam, long before the birth of Hezekiah.
(8) I Kings XIII, 2.
(9) From whom Josiah descended.
(10) At the time of Hezekiah's illness. Manasseh, in fact, was born three years after his father's illness (v. II Kings XXI, 2); and since the birth of his sun Josiah was prophetically announced long before the birth of his father Hezekiah, it is obvious that the years allotted to Hezekiah at his birth extended beyond the year of his illness (to include the year of Manasseh's birth). Consequently, the original number must have been reduced at his illness; and, at his recovery, only that was added which was first reduced.
(11) How could they, in view of the argument advanced, maintain that view years were added to Hezekiah's life?
(12) Josiah.
(13) Of the house of David.
(14) Since the laws therein enumerated are self-evident. Lev. XVIII, 18, from where the prohibition of marrying the sister of one's wife originates, distinctly limits the prohibition to the wife's life-time: And thou shalt not take a woman to her sister . . . in her life-time. V. Rashi al. According to Tosaf (s.v. ונהלפיי עמה q.v.) the unnecessary Mishnah is only that portion which relates to the sister-in-law whose case could be inferred from that of the wife a minori ad majus.
(15) Given in succession by one levir to two sisters-in-law, i.e., the widows of a deceased childless brother, or by two levis to one sister-in-law. (The term sister-in-law used throughout this chapter is to be understood in the sense defined). The second divorce is invalid and the relatives of the second widow are, therefore, permitted to the levir, and so are the relatives of the one widow to the second levir. Whether the first divorce is valid or not, the second is at all events valueless. For if the first is valid the levirate bond with both the widows is thereby severed and the second widow (in the case of one levir) or the one widow (in the case of two Levirs) when receiving the second letter of divorce, is a complete stranger to the levir. If, on the other hand, the first divorce was invalid, the second also, for the same reason, is invalid.

(16) Addressed in succession (a) by one levir to two sisters-in-law or (b) by two levirs to one sister-in-law. The first ma'amār has satisfied all the requirements of the levirate obligations and, consequently, (a) the second widow, or (b) the one widow to whom the second ma'amār was addressed, requires no letter of divorce from (a) the one levir or (b) the second levir respectively. The second widow, moreover, does nor cause the prohibition to the levir of the first widow, and her relatives also are permitted to the levir as are those of the one widow to the second levir.

(17) The second act by the one levir with the second widow or by the second levir with the one widow respectively, is deemed to be one of mere adultery and has no matrimonial validity to cause the prohibition of her relatives to the levir.

(18) Cf. supra n. 2. The first halizah has finally severed the levirate bond between the levir or the levirs and the widow or the widows. The second halizah is, therefore, valueless.

(19) The relatives of the second widow are, therefore, forbidden to the levir (as relatives of his legal divorcee), and the relatives of the one widow are similarly forbidden to the second levir. The first letter of divorce, the Sages maintain, is only partially valid since halizah also is required. The levirate bond consequently is not thereby completely severed and the second divorce brings the widow under the category of a divorced woman. Cf supra 327 n. 1.

(20) The first ma'amār effected only partial matrimony and the levirate obligations were not fully satisfied before the consummation of the marriage took place. The second ma'amār, since it was made before consummation had taken place, is, therefore, valid.

(21) Either of these acts satisfies fully all the requirements of the levirate obligations. The former effected complete union; the latter final severance. No act in connection with the levirate obligations that follows either of these can, therefore, have any validity.

(22) Between one levir and one sister-in-law. This section has no reference to the dispute in the previous section. V. Gemara infra.

(23) But no levirate marriage may now be contracted. The ma'amār alone has not completely satisfied the requirements of the levirate obligations (cf. supra n. 1), hence the need for halizah. Since, however, a divorce had been given the levir had placed himself under the prohibition of Deut. XXV, 9 ‘That doth not build’: if he once refused to build he must never again build (v. supra 10b), hence the prohibition of the levirate marriage.

(24) To annul the ma'amār which, in some respects, has the force of a betrothal. The halizah alone is not enough since it only severs a levirate bond but does not annul a ma'amār.

(25) This is discussed in the Gemara infra.

(26) Even according to R. Gamaliel. The divorce is required to annul the ma'amār since it is possible that the first divorce was invalid and the ma'amār had, therefore, been valid. According to the Sages, who regard the divorce as partially valid, the ma'amār also is partially valid and a divorce is required to annul that part.

(27) In order to sever thereby the levirate bond. Levirate marriage, however, must not take place now after the delivery of the first letter of divorce (v. supra p. 325, n. 4 final clause).

(28) Levirate marriage is forbidden owing to the first divorce (v. supra p. 325, n. 4, final clause), a letter of divorce is required owing to the act of cohabitation, while halizah is necessary to sever the levirate bond.

(29) Whether it be the addressing of a ma'amār or cohabitation. The levirate bond has completely disappeared.

(30) Cf. supra n. 3. This refers to the cases where halizah was performed first. With reference to the last three cases, where cohabitation took place first, the expression should be ‘no act is valid after cohabitation’. V. Gemara infra.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 50b

AND THE LAW IS THE SAME WHETHER THERE IS ONE SISTER-IN-LAW TO ONE LEVIR OR TWO SISTERS-IN-LAW TO ONE LEVIR.

OTHER, BOTH REQUIRE LETTERS OF DIVORCE\(^8\) AND [ONE MUST PERFORM] THE HALIZAH.\(^9\) IF HE Addressed A MA'AMAR TO ONE AND SUBMITTED TO HALIZAH FROM THE OTHER, IT IS NECESSARY FOR THE FIRST TO OBTAIN A LETTER OF DIVORCE.\(^10\)

IF THE LEVIR SUBMITTED TO HALIZAH FROM THE ONE AND FROM THE OTHER, OR SUBMITTED TO HALIZAH [FROM ONE] AND Addressed [TO THE OTHER] A MA'AMAR, GAVE HER A LETTER OF DIVORCE, OR COHABITED WITH HER; OR IF HE COHABITED WITH THE ONE AND WITH THE OTHER, OR COHABITED [WITH THE ONE] AND Addressed [TO THE OTHER] A MA'AMAR, GAVE HER A LETTER OF DIVORCE, OR SUBMITTED TO HER HALIZAH, NO ACT IS VALID AFTER THE HALIZAH.\(^15\) [THERE IS NO DIFFERENCE IN THE LAW] WHETHER THERE WAS ONE LEVIR TO TWO SISTERS-IN-LAW OR TWO LEVIRS TO ONE SISTER-IN-LAW.\(^16\)

[IF THE LEVIR,\(^17\) SUBMITTED TO HALIZAH AND THEN Addressed TO HER\(^18\) A MA'AMAR, GAVE HER A LETTER OF DIVORCE, OR COHABITED WITH HER; OR IF HE COHABITED WITH HER AND THEN Addressed TO HER A MA'AMAR, GAVE HER A LETTER OF DIVORCE, OR SUBMITTED TO HALIZAH, NO ACT IS VALID AFTER THE HALIZAH, WHETHER [IT WAS PERFORMED] IN THE BEGINNING, IN THE MIDDLE,\(^19\) OR AT THE END.\(^20\) IN THE CASE OF COHABITATION, IF IT TOOK PLACE FIRST NO ACT THAT FOLLOWS IT HAS ANY VALIDITY; IF IT OCCURRED, HOWEVER, IN THE MIDDLE\(^21\) OR AT THE END\(^22\) SOMETHING VALID\(^23\) STILL REMAINS.\(^24\) R. NEHEMIAH SAID: WITH COHABITATION AS WITH HALIZAH, WHETHER IT TOOK PLACE IN THE BEGINNING, IN THE MIDDLE, OR AT THE END, THERE IS NO VALIDITY IN ANY ACT THAT FOLLOWS IT.\(^25\)

GEMARA. Their difference\(^26\) concerns only a letter of divorce after another letter of divorce and a ma'amor after another ma'amor, but one letter of divorce to one sister-in-law or one ma'amor to one sister-in-law is valid.\(^27\)

Why did the Rabbis say that a letter of divorce to one sister-in-law is valid?\(^28\) — Because it is also valid elsewhere.\(^29\) For should you suggest that it is not valid,\(^30\) it might be argued that since a letter of divorce serves to release a woman and halizah serves to release a woman, as the letter of divorce is of no effect,\(^31\) so is the halizah also of no effect, and thus one would come to consummate marriage after halizah.\(^32\)

And why did the Rabbis say that a ma'amor with one sister-in-law is valid?\(^33\) — Because it is valid elsewhere.\(^34\) For should you say that it is not valid,\(^35\) it might be argued that since a ma'amor serves the purpose of acquisition\(^34\) and cohabitation serves the purpose of acquisition,\(^36\) as a ma'amor is of no effect,\(^37\) so is cohabitation also of no effect and one would thus consummate marriage after an act of cohabitation.\(^40\)
And why did the Rabbis say that after an invalid cohabitation something lingers? — It might be replied that if it is a cohabitation after a letter of divorce, a preventive measure was made against cohabitation after halizah; and if it is a cohabitation after a ma'amor, a preventive measure had to be made against cohabitation after cohabitation.

And why did the Rabbis say that after the invalid halizah nothing lingers? — It may be replied: What kind of preventive measure could have been enacted! Should halizah after a letter of divorce be forbidden as a preventive measure against halizah after halizah? Under such circumstances, surely, halizah might well be indefinitely continued! And should halizah after a ma'amor be forbidden as a preventive measure against halizah after cohabitation? Surely [it may be replied] is not in the case of halizah after a ma'amor, a letter of divorce required in respect of one's ma'amor? So also in the case of halizah after cohabitation, a letter of divorce is required in respect of one's cohabitation.

Raba said:

(1) How are the obligations of the levirate carried out where there is one levir and two sisters-in-law?
(2) Sister-in-law.
(3) One for each woman, in accordance with the view of the Sages in our Mishnah that a ma'amor after a ma'amor is valid.
(4) With either. The halizah with one exempts her rival.
(5) Levirate marriage, however, is now forbidden since one must not build two houses’. V. supra.
(6) Marriage with her must not be consummated on account of the divorce of the second; hence the necessity for a divorce to annul the ma'amor which the halizah cannot do.
(7) To sever thereby the levirate bond which a letter of divorce cannot do.
(8) On account of the ma'amor and the cohabitation respectively. The second widow may not be retained in matrimony owing to the bond of the ma'amor with the first.
(9) The other becoming thereby exempt from the levirate obligations. The divorce alone does not set the second free because the cohabitation with her was not the performance of a legal commandment but an unlawful act.
(10) The halizah of this second cannot annul the force of the ma'amor of the first.
(11) The halizah is performed by one who thereby exempts the other. V. Gemara infra.
(12) She is forbidden to the levir on account of the divorce of the first.
(13) Divorce alone is not enough since the cohabitation was unlawful (cf. supra note 3).
(14) The halizah is performed by one who thereby exempts the other. V. Gemara infra.
(15) She is forbidden to the levir on account of the divorce of the first.
(16) Divorce alone is not enough since the cohabitation was unlawful (cf. supra note 3).
(17) Hence, in the first case (v. supra n. 7), the relatives of the last widow are forbidden to him, and in the second case (v. supra n. 8), halizah is required, since the levirate bond cannot be severed by a letter of divorce.
(18) If he divorced one, addressed a ma'amor to the other, and then cohabited with one of them. V. supra n. 7.
(19) The halizah of this second cannot annul the force of the ma'amor of the first.
(20) If he divorced one, addressed a ma'amor to the other, and then cohabited with one of them. V. supra n. 7.
(21) The same sister-an-law.
(22) Of the levirate bond.
(23) Hence, in the first case (v. supra n. 7), the relatives of the last widow are forbidden to him, and in the second case (v. supra n. 8), halizah is required, since the levirate bond cannot be severed by a letter of divorce.
(24) After cohabitation a letter of divorce without halizah is enough, and betrothal of the other after cohabitation with the first is invalid.
The divorce prevents subsequent levirate marriage under the prohibition of ‘that doth not build’ etc. (v. supra p. 328, n. 4, second clause); and the ma'am'ar prevents the levirate marriage of a rival under the injunction, ‘a levir may build one house but not two houses’, and necessitates also a letter of divorce should it be desired to cancel the ma'am'ar.

In the Pentateuch, surely, only halizah was prescribed and the prohibition under ‘that doth not build’ should apply to the prescribed ceremony only!

In the release of all married women.

And that the levir may marry the widow even after he gave her a letter of divorce.

v. supra n. 4.

And thus infringe a Pentateuchal prohibition.

Forbidding levirate marriage with her rival. Since, according to the Pentateuch, acquisition of the sister-in-law is effected by the consummation of the levirate marriage, that consummation only should have had the force of forbidding marriage with the rival.

The usual betrothal between man and woman, which is as binding as the consummation of marriage.

And that after a ma'am'ar had been addressed to a sister-in-law her rival may be married.

Cf. supra n. 7.

Without subsequent cohabitation.

Unless there was also a ma'am'ar.

With a rival.

With one of the widows. Such a marriage, however, would infringe (v. supra note 1) a Pentateuchal prohibition.

Of the levirate bond.

Halizah being required in the case of the second widow in addition to the letter of divorce. V. supra p. 330, nn. 6 and 7.

With one sister-in-law.

To the other.

V. p. 332, n. 16.

Were a letter of divorce alone, without halizah, permitted, it might have been assumed that as unlawful cohabitation is so effective it might also be effective enough to annul a previous halizah.

It might have been assumed that as unlawful cohabitation has the force of validity even after a ma'am'ar which is a legal kinyan, it has also the same force after a kinyan that had been effected through lawful cohabitation. Acting on this argument one would infringe the prohibition of marriage with one's brother's wife.

Performed after a divorce or a ma'am'ar.

Should the levir subsequent to such a halizah address a ma'am'ar or give a letter of divorce to a third sister-in-law his act would have no validity whatsoever.

So that a levir does not submit to the halizah of two sisters-in-law in succession, and two levirs do not submit in succession to the halizah of one sister-in-law.

And none will be the worse for it.

That it be not assumed that halizah without a letter of divorce is sufficient after an act of cohabitation.

The implication of ‘nothing lingers after an unlawful halizah’ is the invalidity of all subsequent acts. Any previous act such as ma'am'ar or cohabitation is valid, and a letter of divorce to annul it is certainly required.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 51a

What is R. Gamaliel's reason? — Because he was in doubt whether a letter of divorce does, or does not set aside [the levirate bond, and whether] a ma'am'ar does, or does not effect a kinyan. Whether a letter of divorce does, or does not set aside the levirate bond’: If the first does set aside [the levirate bond], what purpose could the latter serve? If the first does not set aside [the levirate bond], the latter also does not set it aside. ‘Whether a ma'am'ar does, or does not effect a kinyan’: if the first does effect a kinyan, what purpose could the latter serve? And if the first effects no kinyan, the latter also does not.

Abaye raised the following objection against him: R. Gamaliel, however, admits that ‘there is [Validity in] a letter of divorce after a ma'amor, in a ma'amor after a letter of divorce, in a ma'amor after cohabitation and a ma'amor, and in a ma'amor after cohabitation and a letter of divorce. Now, if R. Gamaliel was in doubt, the cohabitation should be regarded as if it had taken place at the beginning, and thus constitute a kinyan; for surely we have learnt, in the case of cohabitation, if it took place first, no act that follows it has any validity!

But, said Abaye, though obvious to R. Gamaliel that a letter of divorce does set aside the levirate bond and that a ma'amor does effect a kinyan, the Rabbis have nevertheless ruled that with the sister-in-law a letter of divorce is partially valid and a ma'amor is partially valid. Consequently, a letter of divorce after another letter of divorce does not set aside the levirate bond since this was already set aside by the first, and a ma'amor after a ma'amor does not constitute a kinyan since this kinyan has already been constituted by the first, with a letter of divorce after a ma'amor, and a ma'amor after a letter of divorce, however, the one act sets aside while the other effects a kinyan. (And the Rabbis — [They hold that] the Rabbis have instituted for every levir a letter of divorce and a ma'amor in respect of every sister-in-law.)

But as to an invalid cohabitation [according to R. Gamaliel] it is [in one respect] of superior force to a ma'amor and [in another respect] of inferior force to a ma'amor. It is superior to a ma'amor, since whereas a ma'amor after another ma'amor is not effective, an act of cohabitation after a ma'amor is effective. It is inferior to a ma'amor, for whereas a ma'amor after a letter of divorce constitutes a kinyan of all that the letter of divorce has left, cohabitation after a letter of divorce does not constitute a kinyan of all that the divorce has left.

Our Rabbis taught: How are we to understand R. Gamaliel's statement that there is no validity in a letter of divorce after another letter of divorce? If two sisters-in-law have fallen to the lot of one levir, and he gave a letter of divorce to one as well as to the other, he submits, in accordance with R. Gamaliel's statement, to halizah from the first, and is forbidden to marry her relatives, though the relatives of the second are permitted to him. But the Sages said: If he gave a letter of divorce to one and to the other, he is forbidden to marry the relatives of both and he submits to halizah from either of them. And the same law applies where there are two levirs and one sister-in-law.

What did R. Gamaliel mean by his statement that there is no validity in a ma'amor after another ma'amor’? If two sisters-in-law have fallen to the lot of one levir, and he addressed a ma'amor to the one as well as to the other, he gives, according to R. Gamaliel, a letter of divorce to the first, submits also to her halizah, and is in consequence forbidden to marry her relatives, though the relatives of the second are permitted to him. The Sages, however, said: He gives letters of divorce to both, and the relatives of both are forbidden to him, while he submits to halizah from one of them. And the same law is to be applied where there are two levirs and one sister-in-law.

The Master said, ‘If he gave a letter of divorce to one as well as to the other, he submits, according to R. Gamaliel's statement, to halizah from the first and is forbidden to marry her relatives, though the relatives of the second are permitted to him’. Must this be assumed to present an objection against a ruling of Samuel, since Samuel stated, ‘If he submitted to halizah from the one who had been divorced, her rival is not thereby exempt’! — Samuel can answer you: What I said was in agreement with him who maintains that a levirate bond exists, while R. Gamaliel holds the opinion that no levirate bond exists.

Since R. Gamaliel, however, is of the opinion that no levirate bond exists,

(1) In our Mishnah, v. supra p. 327, nn. 1 and 2.
(2) To constitute a legal marriage.
Letter of divorce.

Obviously none. Consequently it is valueless.

Ma'amor.

If the ma'amor was addressed to one of the widows and the letter of divorce was subsequently given to the other, the first also is forbidden levirate marriage, while the relatives of both are forbidden to the levir.

If a letter of divorce was given to one of the widows first, and a ma'amor was subsequently addressed to the second, a letter of divorce must also be given to the second in order to annul thereby the force of the ma'amor.

Which was addressed to one of the widows prior to the cohabitation with the second that preceded the letter of divorce to the third. The validity of the letter of divorce causes the prohibition to the levir of the relatives of the third widow.

Given to one of the widows prior to the cohabitation with the second that preceded the ma'amor addressed to the third. The ma'amor constitutes a kinyan, and the relatives of the third widow are forbidden to the levir, while she herself can be released by a letter of divorce only.

As to the validity of a letter of divorce and a ma'amor given or addressed respectively to a sister-in-law.

Which took place between the other two acts.

And the act that follows it, whether it be the delivery of a letter of divorce or the addressing of a ma'amor, should in any case be invalid: In the case of a ma'amor, cohabitation, and divorce, if the ma'amor with the first was valid and effected kinyan, the cohabitation with the second was obviously invalid and much more so the letter of divorce that was given to the third. If, on the other hand, the ma'amor to the first was invalid, the cohabitation with the second widow that followed was obviously valid and there could consequently be no validity in the letter of divorce that was subsequently given to the third. Similarly in the case of divorce, cohabitation and ma'amor, if the letter of divorce given to the first widow was valid the cohabitation that followed had no validity and much more so the ma'amor that came last. If, on the other hand, the letter of divorce given to the first widow was invalid, the cohabitation with the second widow that followed was obviously valid and consequently there could be no validity in the ma'amor that was subsequently addressed to the third widow. In both cases, then, cohabitation which took place between the other two acts should be as valid as if it had taken place at the beginning.

Cohabitation, therefore, that follows either of these acts cannot have the same force as cohabitation that takes place first.

Whatever part of the levirate bond a divorce can set aside.

And the second can add nothing to it.

As far as a ma'amor has the force of constituting it.

The divorce.

Partially.

The ma'amor.

V. supra n. 4. In the case of a divorce after a ma'amor, that part of the levirate bond with the first widow which the ma'amor did not effect is set aside by the letter of divorce that was given to the second. Similarly, where there are two levirs and one widow, whatever was not covered by the kinyan of the ma'amor of the first levir is set aside by the letter of divorce of the second. So also in the case of a ma'amor after a letter of divorce, whatever part of the levirate bond remained after the letter of divorce had been given to the first widow (or to one widow by the first levir) is brought under the kinyan constituted by the ma'amor that has been addressed to the second widow (or to the one widow by the second levir).

The Sages in our Mishnah. How, in view of what has just been explained — can they maintain that A LETTER OF DIVORCE HAS VALIDITY AFTER ANOTHER LETTER OF DIVORCE, AND A MA'AMAR AFTER ANOTHER MA'AMAR?

The divorce or ma'amor of one levir does not in any way affect the validity of that of any other levir, nor does any of these acts, performed by a levir in respect of one sister-in-law, affect his performance of these acts in respect of another sister-in-law. The divorce or ma'amor in respect of the first sister-in-law does not, therefore, affect that of the second, and the performance of the same acts by the first levir in respect of one sister-in-law does not invalidate the performance of these acts in respect of the same sister-in-law by the other levir. Hence the opinion of the Rabbis in our Mishnah.

That which was preceded by divorce or ma'amor.

Who stated that a letter of divorce following a cohabitation which followed a ma'amor, and a ma'amor following a cohabitation which followed a letter of divorce are valid.

(25) As has been stated supra.

(26) As may be inferred from the ruling concerning ‘a letter of divorce after cohabitation and a ma'am'ar’, which implies that cohabitation after a ma'am'ar is valid (Rashi). Cf. Tosaf. s.v. לוטיפאא אינאא ואווימא. ווטיפאא אינאא ואווימא.

(27) For should a ma'am'ar, subsequent to the first, be addressed to a third widow it would be altogether invalid, R. Gamaliel invariably admitting no ma'am'ar after another ma'am'ar whether the first one was, or was not preceded by a letter of divorce.

(28) A ma'am'ar being valid even if it was addressed after an act of cohabitation that followed a letter of divorce.

(29) Though he could certainly submit to halizah from the second, the letter of divorce to whom is invalid, and thereby exempt the first also. He is advised, however, to submit to halizah from the first because by so doing he averts the prohibition to him of the second widow's relatives who, had he submitted to her halizah, would have become forbidden to him as the ‘relatives of his haluzah’. The prohibition to him of the relatives of the first as ‘relatives of his haluzah’ is of no practical consequence since they are already, owing to the divorce he had given her forbidden to him as the ‘relatives of his divorcee.

(30) They being the relatives of both his divorcee and his haluzah. Cf. supra p. 336, n. 7.

(31) Because she is neither his haluzah nor his divorcee, the halizah not having been performed by her and the letter of divorce that was given to her being invalid.

(32) Both divorces being valid.

(33) And each of them gave a letter of divorce to the one sister-in-law. According to R. Gamaliel, halizah is performed with the first levir and the second levir is permitted to marry her relatives; while according to the Rabbis her relatives are forbidden to both levirs and the halizah is performed with either of them.

(34) Lit., ‘how’.

(35) As the ‘relatives of his haluzah’.

(36) Since she is neither his wife nor his haluzah nor his divorcee.

(37) Cf. supra n. 4.

(38) The Heb. uses here the present participle instead of the perfect used supra in the original.

(39) Of two sisters-in-law, the widows of his deceased childless brother.

(40) By him, prior to the performance of the halizah.

(41) Who had not been divorced and whose levirate bond has consequently still its full force.

(42) Supra 27a. A halizah performed by one whose levirate bond had been weakened by divorce cannot sever the levirate bond of the other which had never been weakened by divorce and had retained therefore its full force (v. supra n. 2). This is contradictory to R. Gamaliel's view according to which the halizah of the first, though it followed her divorce which had weakened her levirate bond, is effective enough to exempt her rival whose levirate bond retained its full force, since her divorce was invalid and might be regarded as never having taken place.

(43) Between the levir and the sister-in-law. This levirate bond can only be severed by a halizah which is free from all objection.

(44) V. infra 109a. Hence, even a halizah which is not free from objection is effective enough to sever it.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 51b

the Rabbis are presumably of the opinion that a levirate bond does exist, and yet it was stated in the final clause, ‘And the same law applies where there are two levirs and one sister-in-law’! Must it then be said that this represents an objection to a statement made by Rabbah son of R. Huna in the name of Rab? For Rabbah son of R. Huna stated in the name of Rab: A halizah of an impaired character must go the round of all the brothers! — Rabbah son of R. Huna can answer you: Both according to the view of R. Gamaliel and that of the Rabbis no levirate bond exists, and their difference here extends only to the question of a divorce that followed another divorce and a ma'am'ar that followed another ma'am'ar.

The Master said, ‘If he addressed a ma'am'ar to the one as well as to the other, he gives, according to R. Gamaliel, a letter of divorce to the first, submits also to her halizah, and is in consequence forbidden to marry her relatives, though the relatives of the second are permitted to him’. Now, consider! Since R. Gamaliel holds that there is no [validity in a] ma'am'ar that follows another ma'am'ar, the first [sister-in-law] should even be permitted to contract the levirate marriage! A preventive ordinance had to be made against the possibility of the levir's marrying the second.

R. Johanan said: R. Gamaliel, Beth Shammai, R. Simeon b. ‘Azai and R. Nehemiah are all of the opinion that a ma'am'ar constitutes a [fairly] perfect kinyan.

As to R. Gamaliel, there is the statement already mentioned.

Beth Shammai? — For we learned: If two of three brothers were married to two sisters and the third was unmarried, and when one of the sisters’ husbands died, the unmarried brother addressed to her a ma'am'ar and then his second brother died, Beth Shammai say: His wife [remains] with him while the other is exempt as being his wife's sister. cannot have any validity if, however, the cohabitation of the first has no validity, then that of the second also has no validity. Now, the cohabitation of one who is nine years of age has been given by the Rabbis the same force as that of a ma'am'ar and yet R. Simeon stated that such cohabitation has no validity.

Ben ‘Azai? — For it was taught: Ben ‘Azai stated, ‘A ma'am'ar is valid after another ma'am'ar where it concerns two levirs and one sister-in-law, but no ma'am'ar is valid after a ma'am'ar where it concerns two sisters-in-law and one levir.

R. Nehemiah? — For we learned, R. NEHEMIAH SAID: WITH COHABITATION AS WITH HALIZAH WHETHER IT TOOK PLACE AT THE BEGINNING, IN THE MIDDLE, OR AT THE END, THERE IS NO VALIDITY IN ANY ACT THAT FOLLOWS IT. Now, an invalid cohabitation has been given by the Rabbis the same force as a ma'am'ar, and yet it was stated, THERE IS NO VALIDITY IN ANY ACT THAT FOLLOWS IT.

HOW . . . IF A LEVIR ADDRESSED A MA'AMAR etc.

1. It is now assumed that, as the Rabbis disagreed with R. Gamaliel on the question of a divorce that followed another divorce, they disagreed also on that of the levirate bond.
2. According to which the Rabbis maintain that either levir may submit to the halizah (v. supra p. 337, n. 4) and the performance of this impaired halizah exempts the other brother.
3. V. supra 26b. The performance of it by one brother does not exempt any of the others!
4. While Rabbah son of R. Huna himself does not follow this view but that of the authority who maintains that a levirate bond does exist.
5. Since the ma'am'ar to the second had no validity at all.
6. That levirate marriage shall not be contracted with the first.
7. V. Rashi, a.l.
8. I.e., it is regarded as a perfect kinyan in some, though not in all respects. Cf. Tosaf. s.v. ליה זד supra 19a.
9. Supra, that a ma'am'ar is invalid after another ma'am'ar, because the first had already constituted an kinyan.
10. I.e., the widow to whom he had addressed the ma'am'ar.
11. Because the ma'am'ar he had addressed to her constituted a kinyan and she is regarded as his wife. Her sister, when she subsequently became subject to the levirate marriage through the death of her husband, could no more be married to him since at that time she was already ‘his wife's sister’.
12. Even from halizah.
13. ‘Ed. IV, 9, supra 29a. (10) Of two young levirs of the ages of nine years and one day. According to the Rabbis, if two levirs of such an age cohabited successively with their sister-in-law, the widow of their deceased brother, their acts have the same force as that of a ma'am'ar that followed a ma'am'ar. As with a ma'am'ar the second has also the validity of a betrothal and causes the prohibition of the sister-in-law to the first, so with cohabitation, the act of the second levir causes the sister-in-law to be forbidden to the first levir also. R. Simeon, however, regards the first act only as a valid kinyan. The other consequently is invalid. V. infra 96b. (11) Effecting a kinyan.
The kinyan of the first would not admit it. Infra 96b. V. supra p. 339, n. 10. By the second levir. Obviously because the kinyan had been effected by the cohabitation of the first. Thus it follows that a ma'amor also (cohabitation and ma'amor having equal validity) effects kinyan. Each one of whom had addressed to the widow only one ma'amor. Since each levir is entitled to a ma'amor. V. supra 51a. The second ma'amor has no validity, because by the first ma'amor the levir had already effected the kinyan of the sister-in-law to whom he had addressed it. Since in both cases, divorce alone is not enough to sever the levirate bond, halizah also being required. Obviously because the cohabitation like a ma'amor had constituted a kinyan.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 52a

Is this an illustration of a letter of divorce after a letter of divorce? Rab Judah replied it is this that was meant: [The illustration of] A LETTER OF DIVORCE AFTER ANOTHER LETTER OF DIVORCE and OF A MA'AMAR AFTER ANOTHER MA'AMAR is as stated; but HOW IS THE RELEASE [FROM THE LEVIRATE BOND EFFECTED] where there is one levir and one sister-in-law? — IF A LEVIR ADDRESSED A MA'AMAR TO HIS SISTER-IN-LAW AND SUBSEQUENTLY GAVE HER A LETTER OF DIVORCE, IT IS NECESSARY FOR HER TO PERFORM THE HALIZAH WITH HIM.

IF HE ADDRESSED TO HER A MA'AMAR AND THEN COHABITED WITH HER, BEHOLD THIS IS IN ACCORDANCE WITH THE PRESCRIBED PRECEPT. Might it be suggested that this provides support for R. Huna? For R. Huna stated: The precept of marriage with a sister-in-law is properly performed when the levir first betroths, and then cohabits with her. — One might read, THIS IS also IN ACCORDANCE WITH THE PRESCRIBED PRECEPT. Is not this obvious? — It might have been presumed that since a Master stated, ‘If the levir addressed a ma'amor to his sister-in-law, the levirate bond disappears, and he comes under the bond of betrothal and marriage’, he is not performing the commandment, hence we were taught [that he does].

[To turn to] the main text. ‘R. Huna said: The precept of marriage with a sister-in-law is properly performed when the levir first betroths and then cohabits with her. If he cohabited with her, and then addressed to her a ma'amor a kinyan is nevertheless constituted.’ ‘If he cohabited with her and then addressed to her a ma'amor is so obvious, since he had acquired her by the cohabitation! — Read, rather, ‘If he cohabited with her without previously addressing to her a ma'amor a kinyan is nevertheless constituted’. But was it not taught that the penalty of flogging is inflicted upon him? Chastisement was meant, which is a Rabbinical penalty. For Rab ordered the chastisement of any person who betrothed by cohabitation, who betrothed in the open street, or who betrothed without previous negotiation; who annulled a letter of divorce, or who made a declaration against a letter of divorce; who was insolent towards the representative of the Rabbis, or who allowed a Rabbinical ban upon him to remain for thirty days and did not come to the Beth din to request the removal of that ban; and of a son-in-law who lives in his father-in-law's house. [You say,] only if he lives, but not if he only passes by? Surely, a man once passed by the door of his father-in-law's house, and R. Shesheth ordered his chastisement! — That man was suspected of immoral relations with his mother-in-law. The Nehardeans stated: Rab ordered the chastisement of none of these except him who betrothed by cohabitation without preliminary negotiation. Others say: Even with preliminary negotiation; because [such a practice is sheer] licentiousness. Our Rabbis taught: How is betrothal effected with a ma'amor? — If he gave her some money or anything of value. And how is it effected by a deed? — ‘How is it effected by a deed?’ Surely as has been stated; if he wrote for her on a piece of paper or on a sherd, although it was not worth even a perutah. Behold thou art be trothed unto me'. Abaye replied, It is this that was meant: How is the deed of the kethubah in a levirate marriage [to be drawn up]? He writes for her. 'I, So-and-so, son of So-and-so, undertake to feed and maintain in a suitable manner my sister-in-law So-and-so, provided that her kethubah remains a charge upon the estate of her first husband'. If, however, she is unable to obtain it from her first husband, provision was made by the Rabbis [that she is to receive it] from the second, in order that it may not be easy for him to divorce her.

Abaye enquired of Rabbah: What is the law if he gave her a letter of divorce and said, 'Behold thou art divorced from me, but thou art not permitted to any other man'? The divorce of a sister-in-law being Rabbinically valid, [shall I say that] only a divorce which is valid in the case of a married woman is valid in the case of a sister-in-law, but a divorce which is invalid in the case of a married woman is also invalid in the case of a sister-in-law, or [had provision to be made here against] the possibility of mistaking it for an unqualified divorce? — The other replied: Provision has to be made against the possibility of mistaking it for an unqualified divorce.

Rabbah b. Hanan demurred: Now then, had he given her a mere scrap of paper would he also have disqualified her? The other replied: There [the scrap of paper] does not cause the woman to be unfit for a priest; here, however, [the qualified divorce] does cause the woman to become unfit for a priest, for it was taught, Neither shall they take a woman put away from her husband, and that is what was meant by the 'scent of the divorce' that causes a woman's unfitness for a priest.

Rami b. Hama said: It has been definitely stated that if a man said to a scribe, 'Write a letter of divorce for my betrothed so that when I have married her I may divorce her' the letter of divorce is valid, because it was in his power to divorce her.

(1) The Sages speak of a letter of divorce another letter of divorce, while the illustration which follows describes a ma'amar that was followed by a letter of divorce!

(2) In the Baraitha supra 51a, ‘Our Rabbis taught: How . . . R. Gamaliel's statement etc.’ The Mishnah, however, provides no explanation of illustration of these cases, and proceeds to another point.

(3) This is the meaning of what follows.

(5) And ma'amar and betrothal are essentially the same form of kinyan

(8) Because of the ma'amor he had addressed.

(9) Of the levirate marriage, even though cohabitation had taken place subsequently.

(10) That a kinyan had been effected.

(11) What need then was there to state the obvious?

(12) Malkoth (v. Glos.) inflicted for the transgression of Pentateuchal negative precepts.

(13) For the omission of the ma'amor, prior to his cohabitation, A ma'amor is consequently (v. supra n. 9) a Pentateuchal requirement. How, then, could it be said that a kinyan may be constituted though the ma'amor had been omitted?

(15) For offences that are not Pentateuchal.

Cases, enumerated supra.

The levir to the sister-in-law.

And addressed to her the ma'amár in the prescribed form: ‘Be thou betrothed unto me by this levirate ma'amár. Though betrothal with money in the case of an ordinary union constitutes perfect kinyan, in the case of betrothal by a levir (to whom a sister-in-law is ordinarily forbidden, and betrothal with whom is consequently invalid) betrothal alone, even when it concerns a levirate union, is not sufficient to constitute a kinyan until consummation of the marriage has taken place.

In the case of any other betrothal that is effected by means of a deed.

V. Glos.

Kid. 9a. As betrothal by money in the case of a levirate union takes the same form as that of an ordinary betrothal so should betrothal by deed!

By ‘deed’ the kethubah (v. Glos.) was meant and not the ‘deed of the ma'amár’.

The deceased brother (supra 38a) because ‘a wife has been given to him from heaven’ (v. supra 39a and notes).

The levir who married her.

Cf. supra 39a.

The levir to the sister-in-law.

Does such a qualified divorce effect the prohibition of the widow to the levir and to his brother as if an unqualified divorce had been given to her? In the case of a married woman no divorce can release her unless it was free from all qualifying conditions.

Hence there is no validity in this divorce, and the sister-in-law remains permitted to the levirs as if no divorce had ever been given.

That the divorce is valid despite its qualification (v. supra n. 7).

Were the widow to be permitted to the levir after a qualified divorce she might erroneously be permitted even after an unqualified, and valid, divorce.

If provision has to be made against mistaking a valid, for an invalid document.

From subsequently marrying the levir.

Having no validity whatsoever it could never be mistaken for a proper divorce.

A priest causes his wife to be forbidden to him even if the divorce he gave her was only a qualified one.

Lev. XXI, 7.

I.e., if she was given a qualified divorce which does not set her free to marry any other man.

Since such a divorce has the validity of causing the woman's prohibition to her husband who is a priest it might easily be mistaken for a valid divorce. Hence the provision mentioned.

Git. 82b, infra 94a.

Lit., ‘behold’.

If he gave it to her after marriage.

At the time the letter of divorce was written.

As his betrothed.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 52b

if⁴ for any other woman, the letter of divorce has no validity,² because it was not in his power to divorce her.³ Rami b. Hama inquired, however, what is the law if⁴ for one's sister-in-law?⁵ Is she, because she is bound to him,⁶ regarded as his betrothed⁷ or perhaps, since he addressed no ma'amár to her, she is not so regarded. This is undecided.⁸

R. Hanania inquired: What is the law if he⁹ wrote a letter of divorce in respect of his levirate bond but not in respect of his ma'amár, or in respect of his ma'amár and not in respect of his levirate bond?¹⁰ Is the ma'amár imposed upon the levirate bond,¹¹ so that the levir's action¹² is like that of divorcing half a woman,¹³ and when a man divorces half a woman his action, surely, has no validity at all; or do they remain independent of one another?¹⁴ — Might not this enquiry be solved by reference to Raba's ruling? For Raba ruled: If he¹⁵ gave her a letter of divorce in respect of his ma'amár, her rival¹⁶ is permitted!¹⁷ — This was obvious to Raba; to R. Hanania, however, it was a matter of doubt. What, then, is the decision? — This remains undecided. 18

IF THE LEVIR SUBMITTED TO HALIZAH AND THEN ADDRESSED TO HER A MA'AMAR. Rab Judah said in the name of Rab: This is the view of R. Akiba who holds that betrothal with those whose intercourse involves the penalties of a negative precept is of no validity; the Sages, however, maintain that there is some validity in acts after halizah. But how can you ascribe it to R. Akiba? In the first section, surely, it was stated, IF THE LEVIR GAVE HER A LETTER OF DIVORCE AND THEN ADDRESSED TO HER A MA'AMAR, IT IS NECESSARY FOR HER TO OBTAIN A SECOND LETTER OF DIVORCE AND TO PERFORM THE HALIZAH, while if [this Mishnah represented the view of] R. Akiba would a ma'amhar to her be valid after a letter of divorce had already been given to her? Surely it was taught: R. Akiba said, ‘Whence is it deduced that if a man gives a letter of divorce to his sister-in-law she is thereby forbidden to him for ever? Because it was stated Her former husband, who sent her away, may not [take her again to be his wife], [i.e., immediately] after sending her away’ R. Ashi replied: A divorce given by levirs is only Rabbinically valid, and the Scriptural text is a mere prop. Likewise it was also taught: Rabbi said, this statement was made only in accordance with the view of R. Akiba who treated a halizah as a forbidden relative; the Sages, however, maintain that there is some validity in acts after halizah; and I say, ‘When is betrothal after halizah valid?’ Only when he betrothed her as in ordinary matrimony, but if he betrothed her for levirate union, there is no validity in any such act after the halizah. It was taught elsewhere: If a man submitted to halizah from his sister-in-law and then betrothed her, Rabbi said, ‘If he betrothed her as in ordinary matrimony it is necessary for her to obtain from him a letter of divorce, but if as for a levirate union there is no need for her to obtain from him a letter of divorce’. The Sages, however, said: ‘Whether he betrothed her as in ordinary matrimony or as for the levirate union it is necessary for her to obtain from him a letter of divorce’.

Said R. Joseph: What is Rabbi’s reason — It was given the same legal force as that of the action of a person digging in the estate of a proselyte believing it to be his own, which constitutes no kinyan. Said Abaye to him: Are the two cases alike? There had no intention at all of acquiring possession, but here his intention, surely, was to acquire possession! This, indeed, could only be compared to the case of a person who digs in the estate of one proselyte and believes it to be that of another, where he does acquire possession! No, explained Abaye, here we are dealing with a case where the levir said to her, ‘Be thou betrothed unto me by the bond of the levirate union’. Rabbi is of the opinion that the ma'amhar can only be imposed upon the levirate bond, but here the halizah had already previously removed the levirate bond. The Rabbis, however, are of the opinion that the one is independent of the other. If, then, the levir had said to her at first, ‘Be thou betrothed unto me by this ma'amhar of the levirate union’, would not his kinyan have been valid? Consequently it is now also valid.

Raba said: Had he said to her, ‘By the ma'amhar of the levirate union’, there would be no disagreement [among the authorities] that it is valid; but here we are dealing with a case where the levir said, ‘Be thou betrothed unto me by the bond of the levirate union’. Rabbi is of the opinion

(1) The scribe was asked to write the letter of divorce.
(2) Even if it was given to the woman after he had married her.
(3) Since at that time she was to him a complete stranger.
(4) The scribe was asked to wrote the letter of divorce.
(5) The letter of divorce having been written before the levirate marriage, and delivered to the widow after it had taken place.
(6) By the levirate bond.
(7) And the divorce is consequently valid.
A levir after he addressed a ma'amor to his sister-in-law.

Is she thereby forbidden to him as if a valid divorce had been given to her?

And becomes united with, and inseparable from it.

In severing the bond or annulling the ma'amor.

Since the divorce in respect of his one connection with the woman has no validity in respect of his other connection which forms together with the first one complete whole.

Lit., ‘that stands alone’ (bis). The ma'amor and the levirate bond constitute separate and independent connections between the levir and the widow. Hence, if the divorce was for the levitate bond alone, the widow is forbidden to the levir who gave her the divorce (under the prohibition ‘that doth not build etc.’) as well as to his brothers (the levirate bond saving been severed); and if the divorce was for the ma'amor only, the widow, though forbidden to the levir who gave her the divorce (for the reason stated), is nevertheless permitted to his brothers, since the levirate bond has never been severed.

The second of three brothers who had addressed a ma'amor to the first brother's widow. V. Mishnah supra 31b.

The second brother's first wife who, while the ma'amor remained in force, was forbidden to the third brother.

To the third surviving brother if the second brother also died without issue. The two widows, owing to the divorce which had annulled the ma'amor, are no longer rivals; and being now the widows of two different brothers, are in fact both permitted to the third brother. The widow to whom the divorce had been given is forbidden only as a preventive measure (v. supra 32b). From the fact, however, that the second brother's first wife is permitted to the third surviving brother it follows that the divorce (a) annuls the ma'amor and (b) does not sever the levitate bond. Had it not annulled the ma'amor, the widow would have been forbidden owing to the levitate bond emanating from two levirs; while if the levirate bond also had been severed she would have been forbidden to the third brother as ‘brother's wife’. Why then was R. Hanania doubtful on the point?

That no act is valid after halizah.

The quoted section of our Mishnah, and presumably all our Mishnah.

Deut. XXIV, 4.

Even before she had been married to a second husband. (V. Deut, XXIV, 2-4). The superfluous expression ‘who sent her away’ implies that divorce in a certain case, viz., in that of a sister-in-law, causes the permanent prohibition of the divorced woman to the man who divorced her immediately after divorce had taken place. Now, since betrothal of a sister-in-law by a levir who divorced her is forbidden by the negative precept of Deut. XXIV, 4, how could a ma'amor addressed to her after divorce have any validity?

Pentateuchally it has no validity at all.

Since the prohibition is not Pentateuchal the ma'amor is obviously valid.

That no act is valid after halizah.

As no act of betrothal is valid in the case of the latter so is no such act valid in that of the former.

By a form of betrothal prescribed in ordinary cases other than those of a levir. Such betrothal is valid even where it involves the transgression of a negative precept.

By addressing to her a ma'amor.

The halizah having severed the levirate bond, there is no room any more for the levirate betrothal. The action of any levir using it is consequently null and void.

For regarding as invalid a betrothal for a levirate union, when ordinary betrothal with the same woman would have been valid.

Who was survived by no Jewish heirs. Anyone digging in such ownerless property with the intention of acquiring it gains thereby full legal title thereto.

It having been situated in close proximity to his own estate.

As the digging (though a legal form of kinyan) is invalid because there was no intention to constitute a kinyan thereby, so also betrothal (though a legal kinyan) is invalid because the levir's intention was not to constitute an ordinary betrothal (which would indeed have been valid) but a levirate betrothal which after a halizah has no validity.

R. Joseph.

Digging in the estate of a proselyte.

The digger.

Since he believed the field to be his own.
Betrothal by the levirate formula.

Of his sister-in-law as his legal wife.

Since his intention was to execute by his act a legal kinyan, the mistake he made as to its owner is of no consequence. Similarly, here, the mistake in the nature of the union he was contracting should not affect the legality of the kinyan which he at all events intended.

Only where the levirate bond is still in force has the ma'amor the required validity.

Where halizah had been performed.

Hence the invalidity of the ma'amor.

A ma'amor is consequently valid even where no levirate bond exists.

Before the performance of the halizah.

Certainly it would. The force of the ma'amor irrespective of the levirate bond (v. supra n. 2) would have executed the kinyan.

After the introductory formula, 'Be thou betrothed unto me'.

The dispute between Rabbi and the Rabbis.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 53a

that a levirate bond does exist but the halizah had previously removed that [levirate] bond. The Rabbis, however, hold that no levirate bond exists. If, then, he had said to her at first, ‘Be thou betrothed unto me by the bond of the levirate’ would not his word have been valid? Consequently it is now also valid.

R. Sherabia said: Had a proper halizah been performed all would agree that if he said to her, ‘Be thou betrothed unto me by the bond of the levirate’, there is no validity in his betrothal. Here, however, the dispute relates to a halizah of an impaired character. One Master holds that a halizah of an impaired character provides [all the necessary] exemption, and the Masters hold that a halizah of an impaired character provides no exemption.

R. Ashi said: [No:] All agree that a halizah of an impaired character provides no exemption. Here, however, the dispute centres round the question whether a condition may affect the validity of halizah. The Masters hold that a condition does affect the validity of a halizah and the Master holds that no condition may affect the validity of a halizah.

Rabina said: [No:] All agree that a condition does affect a halizah. Here, however, the dispute is dependent on the question of the doubled condition. The Master holds that a doubled condition is essential and the Masters hold the opinion that a doubled condition is unnecessary.

IF THE LEVIR SUBMITTED TO HALIZAH AND THEN ADDRESSED TO HER A MA'AMAR, GAVE HER A LETTER OF DIVORCE, OR COHABITED WITH HER etc. It should also have been stated, 'No act is valid after cohabitation'! — Both Abaye and Raba replied: Read, 'NO ACT IS VALID AFTER cohabitation'. But our Tanna? — [The statement regarding the permissibility of the sister-in-law to marry anyone was preferred by him.

THE LAW IS THE SAME WHETHER THERE IS ONE SISTER-IN LAW . . . OR TWO SISTERS-IN-LAW. Our Mishnah is not in agreement with the ruling of Ben 'Azzai. For it was taught: Ben 'Azzai stated: A ma'amor is valid after another ma'amor where it concerns two levirs and one sister-in-law, but no ma'amor is valid after a ma'amor where it concerns two sisters-in-law and one levir. HOW? . . . A MA'AMAR TO THE ONE etc. May it be suggested that this provides support to a ruling of Samuel, Samuel having stated that if the levir had participated in the halizah with her to whom he addressed a ma'amor, her rival was not thereby exempt; and an objection to the ruling of R. Joseph? — Does it state: He may participate in the halizah? What it states is ‘had participated’, implying a fait accompli.
A LETTER OF DIVORCE TO THE ONE AS WELL AS TO THE OTHER etc. May it be suggested that this provides support to Rabbah son of R. Huna. For Rabbah son of R. Huna stated, 'A halizah of an impaired character must go the round of all the brothers'? — By IT IS NECESSARY FOR BOTH, widows generally were meant.

IF HE GAVE A LETTER OF DIVORCE TO ONE AND SUBMITTED TO HALIZAH FROM THE OTHER. May it be suggested that this provides support to the ruling of Samuel and presents an objection against the ruling of R. Joseph — Does it state: He may participate in the halizah? What it states is ‘had participated’, implying a fait accompli.

IF THE LEVIR SUBMITTED TO HALIZAH FROM THE ONE AND FROM THE OTHER, OR SUBMITTED TO HALIZAH etc. It should also have been stated, ‘No act is valid after cohabitation’! Both Abaye and Raba replied: Read, ‘no act is valid after cohabitation’.

But our Tanna — [The statement on] the permissibility of the sister-in-law marrying anyone was preferred by him.

THERE IS NO DIFFERENCE IN THE LAW WHETHER THERE WAS ONE LEVIR TO TWO SISTERS-IN-LAW etc. According to R. Johanan who ruled that the whole house stands under the prohibition of a negative precept, it is intelligible why it was necessary to inform us that betrothal with those whose intercourse involves the penalties of a negative precept is invalid; according to Resh Lakish, however, who ruled that all the house is subject to the penalty of kareth, was there any need to inform us that betrothal with those whose intercourse involves kareth is invalid? — Resh Lakish can answer you: And even according to your conception was it necessary to tell us in the final clause, which speaks of the case where the LEVIR COHABITED WITH HER AND THEN ADDRESSED TO HER A MA'AMAR, that there was no validity in a betrothal with a married woman?

But the fact is that as he taught concerning the permissibility of one levir and one sister-in-law, he also taught concerning two sisters-in-law and one levir. And since he taught concerning two sisters-in-law and one levir, he also taught concerning two levirs and one sister-in-law.

---

(1) I.e., the validity of such a formula elsewhere is absolutely dependent on the existence of the levirate bond. (2) Hence the invalidity of the formula that followed it. (3) The levirate bond does not in any way add to, or subtract from the force of the formula. (4) Before the performance of the halizah. (5) V. supra note 4. (6) After the halizah, for instance, which has been performed after a divorce. (7) Rabbi. (8) The original bond remains and the halizah is altogether disregarded. Hence the validity of the formula after an improper halizah. (9) The dispute between Rabbi and the Rabbis. (10) Made by the levir. If, e.g., he submitted to the halizah on the understanding that the widow would give him a certain sum of money or render him some service. (11) Where the condition had not been fulfilled. (12) As the halizah is invalid (v. supra n. 3) the original bond remains and the formula is consequently valid. (13) Rabbi. (14) Even if the condition was not fulfilled the halizah remains valid. Hence there could be no force in the formula that follows it. (15) נזון מנה a stipulation and its alternative. The classical example is the condition made by Moses with the children of Gad and Reuben: If they passed the Jordan, the land of Gilead would be given to them; if they did not pass the Jordan, they would take their share in the land of Canaan. V. Num. XXXII, 29f.
As the levir's condition was not a 'doubled one' it has no validity. The halizah is consequently valid and the formula following it is invalid.

The condition being valid, the halizah depending on it, where it is unfulfilled, is invalid. Hence the validity of the levirate formula.

Since that section of our Mishnah deals not only with (a) certain acts after halizah but also with (b) certain acts after cohabitation.

[Var. lec., ‘Both Abaye and Raba read’. The reading that follows actually occurs in Tosef. Yeb. VII. Cf. הוספת ישים]

Why did he omit the mention of cohabitation?

I.e., the permissibility though halizah.

Hence halizah only was mentioned. After cohabitation the sister-in-law is permitted to one man (the levir) only. As the Tanna preferred the case of halizah to that of cohabitation and as the invalidity of any acts after cohabitation may be inferred from the invalidity of those after halizah, the Tanna did not consider it necessary to mention cohabitation at all.

Which admits the validity of a ma'amar after another ma'amar in the case of two sisters-in-law and one levir,

Each one of whom in turn addressed a ma'amar to the sister-in-law.

Each levir being entitled to a ma'amar. V. supra 51a.

The second ma'amar, contrary to the ruling of our Mishnah, has no validity because by the first ma'amar, in the opinion of Ben 'Azzai, the levir had exhausted all his rights.

The statement, THE ONE REQUIRES A LETTER OF DIVORCE AND THE OTHER, but not the first to whom the ma'amor had been addressed, MUST PERFORM THE HALIZAH because, obviously, halizah with the first does not exempt the second, her rival.

Who stated, supra 44a, 'A man should not pour the water out of his cistern while others may require it', i.e., a levir shall not cause the disqualification, by halizah, of the widow who is not otherwise disqualified, when the halizah could well be performed by the other widow who was in any case disqualified. In our Mishnah, contrary to R. Joseph's ruling, halizah is performed by the second who would in consequence be disqualified from marrying a priest, and not by the first who is already disqualified by the divorce she had been given.

The proper procedure, however, might still be for the halizah to be performed by the widow to whom the ma'amor had been addressed.

The statement in our Mishnah that HALIZAH IS NECESSARY FOR BOTH, which seems to imply that each widow must perform halizah where there is only one levir and, since the Mishnah also stated THAT THERE IS NO DIFFERENCE IN THE LAW WHETHER THERE WAS ONE LEVIR AND TWO SISTERS-IN-LAW OR TWO LEVIRS AND ONE SISTER-IN-LAW, that where there are two levirs and one sister-in-law halizah must be performed with both levirs.

Supra 26b, 51a.

In similar circumstances,

But in every case the halizah is performed by one widow only and the other is thereby exempt. V. supra p. 330, n. 5.

The ruling that halizah is performed by the second widow and not by the first to whom the divorce had been given.

Who stated, supra 27a, that if the levir had participated in the halizah with her whom he had divorced, her rival is not thereby exempt. Consequently, as was stated in our Mishnah, the halizah is to be performed by the second.

V. p. 350, n. 6.

Cf. supra p. 350, n. 7.

Cf. p. 349, n. 11.

Cf. p. 349, n. 12.

I.e., all the brothers of the deceased including the levir who submitted to the halizah.

Both the levir and the other brothers (v. supra n. 13) are forbidden by the negative precept ‘that doth not build’ to marry the halizah or her rival. V. supra 10b.

By the statement that a ma'amor is invalid after halizah.

Had not this been indicated it might have been assumed that a betrothal of a woman forbidden only by a mere negative precept is legally valid.
If any one of the brothers married the rival of the haluzah, or if any of them (other than the levir who participated in the halizah) married the haluzah herself; the prohibition in all these cases being that of marriage with ‘a brother's wife’ which is punishable by kareth. The prohibition of the levir who participated in the halizah to marry the haluzah herself is, of course, even according to Resh Lakish, only that of a negative precept (v. supra 10b).

Such a ruling is surely obvious!

I.e., that there is no validity in the betrothal.

A ruling which was necessary, even according to Resh Lakish, since he also, like R. Johanan, subjects the marriage between the levir who submitted to the halizah and the haluzah to the penalty of a negative precept only (v. supra n. 3).

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 53b

IF THE LEVIR SUBMITTED TO HALIZAH AND THEN ADDRESSED TO HER A MA'AMAR [and] GAVE etc. One can well understand why it was necessary [to lay down a rule where] THE LEVIR SUBMITTED TO HALIZAH AND THEN ADDRESSED TO HER A MA'AMAR; since it might have been assumed that provision was to be made for a ma'amur that followed halizah as a preventive measure against a ma'amur that preceded halizah, it was consequently necessary to tell us that no such preventive measure was to be made. What need, however, was there for the ruling where THE LEVIR SUBMITTED TO HALIZAH AND THEN GAVE HER A LETTER OF DIVORCE? — Read, then, according to your own view, the final clause, IF HE COHABITED WITH HER AND THEN ADDRESSED TO HER A MA’ AMAR or if he cohabited with her and then GAVE HER A LETTER OF DIVORCE. One can well understand [it might be argued here also] why it was necessary [to lay down a ruling where] the levir cohabited with her and then GAVE HER A LETTER OF DIVORCE; since it might have been assumed that provision was to be made for a divorce that followed cohabitation as a preventive measure against a divorce that preceded cohabitation, it was consequently necessary to tell us that no such preventive measure was required. But what need was there [for the ruling where] HE COHABITED WITH HER AND THEN ADDRESSED TO HER A MA'AMAR? But [the fact is that] as he taught, IF THE LEVIR SUBMITTED TO HALIZAH AND THEN GAVE HER A LETTER OF DIVORCE; since it might have been assumed that provision was to be made for a divorce that followed cohabitation as a preventive measure against a divorce that preceded cohabitation, it was consequently necessary to tell us that no such preventive measure was required. But what need was there [for the ruling where] HE COHABITED WITH HER AND THEN ADDRESSED TO HER A MA'AMAR?

And as to your possible objection that provision should be made where cohabitation followed a letter of divorce as a preventive measure against cohabitation that followed a halizah, it may be replied that as halizah is a Pentateuchal law it is well known. And as to your objection that provision should be made where cohabitation followed a ma'amur as a preventive measure against cohabitation that followed another cohabitation, it may also be replied that as kinyan by cohabitation is a Pentateuchal law it is certainly well known. And Abba Jose b. Hanan, again, holds the same view as the Rabbis who ordained a preventive measure in the case of cohabitation and he made similar provision in the case of halizah as a preventive measure against cohabitation.
Mishnah. If a man cohabited with his deceased brother's wife, whether in error or in presumption, whether under compulsion or of his own free will, even if he acted in error and she in presumption, or he in presumption and she in error, or he under compulsion and she not under compulsion, or she under compulsion and he not under compulsion, whether he passed only the first, or also the final stage of contact, he constitutes thereby a kinyan, irrespective of the nature of the intercourse.

Similarly, if a man had intercourse with any of the forbidden relatives enumerated in the Torah, or with any of those who are ineligible to marry him as, for instance, a widow with a high priest, a divorced woman or a haluzah with a common priest, a bastard or a nethinah with an Israelite or the daughter of an Israelite with a bastard or a nathin, he has thereby rendered her ineligible, irrespective of the nature of the intercourse. Gemara. What is the purport of even? — [The formula of] ‘It is not necessary’ is thereby to be understood: It is not necessary [to state that a kinyan is constituted where] he acted in error and her intention was the performance of the commandment or where he acted in presumption and her intention was the performance of the commandment, but even if he acted in error and she in presumption, or he in presumption and she in error, so that the intention of neither of them was the fulfilment of the commandment, a kinyan is nevertheless effected.

R. Hyya taught: Even if both acted in error, both in presumption, or both under compulsion. How is one to understand the action under compulsion in our Mishnah? If it be suggested that idolaters compelled him to cohabit with her, surely [it may be pointed out] Raba stated: There can be no compulsion in sexual intercourse since erection depends entirely on the will! But when he slept? Surely Rab Judah ruled

(1) That there is no validity in the ma'amār.
(2) Even according to R. Akiba.
(3) By giving to the ma'amār the force of a valid betrothal and by subjecting the sister-in-law, in consequence, to the necessity of a divorce.
(4) Were the former to be regarded as invalid, the latter also might erroneously be so regarded.
(5) That there is no validity in the divorce where there is only one levir and one sister-in-law. (V. supra p. 331, n. 3).
(6) What possible consequences could ensue from the presumed validity of such a divorce that are not already in force as a result of the halizah? The halizah, like a divorce, causes the prohibition of the widow to the levir, and her relatives also are thereby forbidden as the relatives of his haluzah!
(7) That nothing of the levirate bond remains after cohabitation and that, consequently, the divorce alone is a valid act and there is no need for halizah also.
(8) By requiring halizah in addition to the divorce.
(9) Were halizah to be dispensed with in the former case it might erroneously be presumed that as a letter of divorce alone is valid enough in this case it is also valid in the latter case, and thus divorce might be allowed to supersede the halizah of any sister-in-law.
(10) That there is no validity in the ma'amār.
(11) Of what consequence could the ma'amār be after cohabitation whereby the woman had become the levir's proper wife?
(12) Which was certainly necessary, as has just been explained.
(13) Lit., ‘in the time when it is’.
(14) For an explanation of this term v. notes on our Mishnah supra.
(15) Since something of the levirate bond remains after an improper cohabitation.
(16) Hence he ruled that only when cohabitation had taken place at the beginning (but not when in the middle or at the end) does the levirate bond completely disappear.
(17) Because in his opinion even an improper halizah is valid in all respects.
(18) Maintaining as he does that nothing of validity remains either after halizah or after cohabitation.
(19) Were the former to be regarded as valid the latter also might be so regarded.
(20) And no one would draw comparisons between the two.
(21) Abbreviation of ‘Johanan’.
(22) In our Mishnah.
(23) V. supra 50b.
(24) The widow of his deceased childless brother.
(25) Not knowing that she was his sister-in-law.
(26) To gratify his passions and with no intention of fulfilling the precept of the levirate marriage.
(27) Lit., ‘he acquires her’. The widow is deemed to be his legal wife. He is entitled to the heirship of her estate; and she can be released only by a letter of divorce.
(28) Lit., ‘and he made no distinction’.
(29) Whether it was natural or unnatural.
(30) In any of the circumstances mentioned.
(32) To marry a priest, and to eat terumah even if she had previously been eligible to eat of it. This, of course, does not apply to the bastard and nethinah who are from birth ineligible either to marry a priest or to eat terumah. Their inclusion among the others merely serves the purpose of indicating that in their case also the penalty for illicit intercourse is imposed whether it was ONLY IN THE FIRST, OR ALSO IN THE FINAL STAGE.
(33) Not knowing that she was his sister-in-law.
(34) Of the levirate marriage.
(35) In such cases the validity of the kinyan is obvious.
(36) Cf. supra p. 355, n. 3.
(37) So Bah a.l. Cur. edd. omit ‘or he . . . error’.
(38) Of the levirate marriage.
(39) Kinyan is nevertheless constituted.
(40) COMPULSION implying unconsciousness of action.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 54a

that one in sleep cannot acquire his sister-in-law!1 But when accidental insertion occurred?2 Surely Rabbah stated: One who fell from a roof and his fall resulted in accidental insertion, is liable to pay an indemnity3, for four things,4 and if the woman was his sister-in-law no kinyan is thereby constituted!5 — It is6 when, for instance, his intention was intercourse with his wife and7 his sister-in-law seized him and he cohabited with her.

How is one to understand, ‘Both under compulsion’, taught at the School of R. Hiyya? — When, for instance, his intention was intercourse with his wife and idolaters seized him,8 brought him and her9 into close contact and he cohabited with her.

Whence these words?10 — From what our Rabbis taught: Her husband's brother shall go in unto her11 is a commandment.12 Another interpretation: Her husband's brother shall go in unto her whether in error or in presumption, whether under compulsion or of his own free will.13 But, surely, deduction has already been made from this text that it14 is a commandment!15 — That it14 is a commandment16 may be inferred from And if the man like not17 which implies that if he likes he contracts the levirate marriage16 so that the other text11 may serve the purpose of deducing,18 ‘whether in error or in presumption, whether under compulsion or of his own free will’.19
Another Baraitha taught: Her husband's brother shall go in unto her, in the natural way; and take her, even though in an unnatural way; and perform the duty of a husband's brother unto her, only the cohabitation consummates her marriage, but neither money nor deed can consummate her marriage; and perform the duty of a husband's brother unto her, even against her will.

The Master said: ‘Another interpretation: Her husband's brother shall go in unto her whether in error etc.’ But, surely, deduction has been made from this text that it must be in the natural way! — This may be deduced from To raise up unto his brother a name, [i.e.,] only where a name is raised up; so that the other text may be employed for the deduction ‘whether in error or in presumption, whether under compulsion or of his own free will.’

[To turn to] the main text. ‘Rab Judah ruled that one in sleep cannot acquire his sister-in-law, for Scripture stated, Her husband's brother shall go in unto her, only when the cohabitation was intentional.’ But, surely, it was taught: Whether he was awake or asleep! — Read: Whether she was awake or asleep. But, surely, it was taught: Whether he was awake or asleep; or whether she was awake or asleep! — This statement refers to one who was in a state of drowsiness. What state of drowsiness is hereby to be understood? R. Ashi replied: When a man is half asleep and half awake as, for instance, when he answers on being addressed but is unable to give any sensible reply, and when he is reminded of anything he can recall it.

[To turn to] the main text. Rabbah stated: One who fell from a roof, and his fall resulted in accidental insertion, is liable to pay an indemnity for four things, and if the woman was his sister-in-law no kinyan is thereby constituted. [He must pay her for] bodily injury, for pain inflicted, for enforced unemployment, and for medical expenses; but he is not liable to indemnify her for indignity, for a Master said, ‘One is not liable to pay any indemnity for indignity unless it was intentionally caused’.

Raba said: If a levir's intention was to shoot against a wall and he accidentally shot at his sister-in-law, no kinyan is thereby constituted; if he intended, however, to shoot at a beast and he accidentally shot at his sister-in-law, kinyan is thereby constituted, since some sort of intercourse had been intended.

WHETHER HE PASSED ONLY THE FIRST . . . STAGE. ‘Ulla stated: Whence is it proved that the first stage of contact is pentateuchally forbidden? — It is said, And if a man shall lie with a menstruant woman, and shall uncover her nakedness, he hath made naked her fountain it is deduced from this text that the first stage of contact is pentateuchally forbidden. Thus the case of a menstruant has been arrived at; whence that of other forbidden unions? And were you to suggest that [their case] might be inferred from that of the menstruant, [it might be retorted] the menstruant is different since she causes the defilement of the man who cohabited with her. — Rather the deduction is made from ‘a brother’s wife’ concerning whom it is written, And if a man shall take his brother's wife, she is a menstruant. Now is a brother's wife always menstruant? But [the meaning is] ‘like a menstruant as with a menstruant the first stage constitutes the offence, so does the first stage constitute an offence with a brother's wife. But a brother's wife [it may be objected] is different since it is in his power to increase the number, for should he wish, he could go on betrothing as many as a thousand! — The deduction is rather made from the ‘father's sister’ and ‘the mother's sister’. For it is written in Scriptures And thou shalt not uncover the nakedness of thy mother's sister, nor of thy father's sister, for he hath made naked his near kin. But it may be objected that a father's sister and a mother's sister come under a different category, since the prohibition in their case is natural. — If it cannot be deduced from one category then let it be deduced from the two categories.
From which however shall deduction be made? Were it made from a brother's wife and a father's sister and a mother's sister, it might be objected that those stand in a different category, since the prohibition of these is due to relationship — Deduction is rather made from the menstruant and a father's sister and a mother's sister. Those however are in a different category since the prohibition is natural — The deduction is rather made from the menstruant and a brother's wife; since no objection can be raised [against the two].

R. Aha son of R. Ika demurred: A menstruant and a brother's wife are different, since marriage with them cannot be permitted during the lifetime of the man who caused their prohibition! Would you, then, apply [their restrictions] to a married woman who might be permitted to marry even during the lifetime of the man who caused her prohibition?

Said K. Aha of Difti to Rabina: Are a menstruant and a brother's wife forbidden to marry only during the lifetime of the man who caused their prohibition but permitted after that? With a menstruant, surely,

(1) An unconscious act having no legal validity.
(2) When in a state of erection the levir fell from a raised bench upon his sister-in-law who happened to be below (v. Rashi).
(3) To the woman with whom the accidental contact had taken place.
(4) Bodily injury, pain, medical expenses and unemployment during illness. The damages or indemnity must be paid even if the injury was inflicted accidentally or under compulsion (v. B.K. 85b). An indemnity for the indignity caused by the injury is payable only when the act was wilful. V. infra.

rendered by E.V. ibid., having her sickness.

Lev. XX, 18.

(first stage) is of the same rt. as he hath made naked (ibid.). That with the other relatives also, or with any woman one is forbidden to marry, the first stage constitutes the offence.

He, like herself, remains levitically unclean for seven days (v. Lev. XV, 24). As the restrictions of the menstruant are more rigid in respect of the defilement of the man they may also be more rigid in respect of the first stage of contact. What proofs however, is this that prohibition of the first stage of contact extends to other forbidden unions?

Lev. X, 21. E.V., it is impurity.

Surely not. Why then was she so described?

The brother's. The number of relatives forbidden through marriage may be indefinitely increased. Hence only such relatives (e.g., a father's wife, daughter-in-law, mother-in-law) may be inferred from a brother's wife who also is a relative forbidden through marriage. What proof, however, does this provide that restrictions applicable to these are also applicable to relatives forbidden from birth (e.g, a mother, sister, daughter) whose number it is not in one's power to increase?

v. supra note 3.

Lev. XX, 19.

I.e., they are relatives forbidden from birth. What proof, however, does this supply in the case of relatives by marriage? (Cf. supra p. 359, n. 8).

Either from that of relatives from birth or from that of relatives by marriage.

Cur. edd. insert in square brackets ‘one’.

Any objection that might be raised against the one could not possibly apply to the other. (Cf. p. 359, nn. 8 and 11).

Particular case or cases in the categories mentioned.

A relative by marriage.

A relative from birth.

No proof would consequently be available that the same restriction is applicable to intercourse, for instance, with any married woman who is neither a relative from birth nor by marriage.

V. supra p. 359, n. 3.

Who may be a stranger.

It is not due to any human act.

Lit., ‘for what’.

A brother's wife is a relative forbidden through marriage and consequently the second objection (v. supra p. 359. n. 1) cannot be advanced; while the first objection (v. supra p. 359, n. 8) and the third objection (v. supra n. 7) cannot be raised in view of the law of the menstruant.

From the other women one is forbidden to marry.

I.e., her husband, if he divorced her.

When the man died.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 54b

the prohibition depends on the number of days, and with a brother's wife the All Merciful made her prohibition dependent on the birth of children! — But the objection may be raised thus: A menstruant and a brother's wife are different, since the man who caused them to be forbidden cannot cause them to be permitted. Would you [then] apply their restrictions to a married woman whose permissibility is brought about by the man who caused her to be forbidden? But, said R. Johanan, or as some say, R. Huna son of R. Joshua, Scripture stated, For whosoever shall do any of these abominations, even the souls that do them shall be cut off, all forbidden unions were compared to the menstruant; as the first stage constitutes the offence with the menstruant so does the first stage constitute the offence with all the others.
What need, then, was there to mention the menstruant in the context of brother's wife? — For an inference like that of R. Huna. For R. Huna stated: Whence in the Torah may an allusion to the sister-in-law be traced? [You ask.] ‘Whence’? Surely it is written in Scripture, Her husband's brother shall go in unto her! — [The query is] rather, whence the allusion that a sister-in-law is forbidden during the lifetime of her husband? But surely this is a logical inference: Since the All Merciful said that she is permitted to marry after the death of her husband, it is only optional? Or else, [though] indeed, only after the death of the husband, and not during the lifetime of her husband; yet being a negative commandment it has only the force of a positive commandment! — Scripture stated: And if a man shall take his brother's wife, she is a menstruant. Now is a brother's wife always a menstruant? But the meaning is, ‘like a menstruant’: as a menstruant, although permitted afterwards, is forbidden under the penalty of kareth during the lifetime of her husband.

What need, however, was there to mention the first stage in connection with a father's sister or a mother's sister? — For an inference like that mentioned in the following question which Rabina addressed to Raba: What is the law if a man passed the first stage in pederasty? [You ask.] ‘What is the law in pederasty’? Surely it is written, As with womankind! — But the query is, what is the law when one passed the first stage with a beast? The other replied: No purpose is served by the text in [forbidding] the first stage in the case of a father's sister and a mother's sister, since in their case the prohibition is arrived at by the comparison of R. Jonah, apply that text to the first stage with a beast.

Observe! Intercourse with a beast is among the offences subject to the death penalties of a Beth din; why then was the first stage in relation to it enumerated among offences that are subject to the penalty of kareth? It should rather have been written among those which are subject to the death penalty of the Beth din, and thus one offence that is subject to the death penalty of a court would be inferred from a similar offence that is subject to the death penalty of a court! — Since the entire context was to serve the purpose of exposition, this thing was also included that it may serve the purpose of exposition.

What is the exposition? — It was taught, Thou shalt not uncover the nakedness of thy father's sister, whether she is paternal or maternal. You say, ‘Whether she is paternal or maternal’, perhaps it is not so, but only when she is paternal and not when maternal? — This is only logical: A man is subject to a penalty in this case and he is also subject to penalty in the case of his sister; as with his sister it is the same whether she is paternal or maternal, so here also it is the same whether she is paternal or maternal. But might it not be argued in this way: A man is subject to a penalty in this case and is also subject to a penalty in the case of his aunt; as his aunt is forbidden only when she is paternal but not when maternal, so here also when she is paternal and not when maternal! — Let us consider whom it more closely resembles. A prohibition which is natural ought to be inferred from a prohibition which is also natural but let no proof be adduced from an aunt whose prohibition is not natural. But might it not be argued thus: The relatives of a father should be inferred from the relatives of a father but let no proof be adduced from a sister who is one's own relative! Hence it was stated, Thou shalt not uncover the nakedness of thy father's sister, implying whether paternal or maternal, and Thou shalt not uncover the nakedness of thy mother's sister, implying also whether paternal or maternal.

What need was there to write it in respect of a father's sister and also in respect of a mother's sister? — R. Abbahu replied: Both are required. For had the All Merciful written it in respect of a father's sister [it might have been assumed to apply to her alone] because her relationship is legally recognized, but not to a mother's sister. And had the All Merciful written it in respect of a mother's sister [it might have been assumed to apply to her alone] because her relationship is certain, but not to her father's sister. [Hence both were] required.

As to one's aunt concerning whom the Tanna had no doubt that she must be paternal and not maternal, whence does he derive it? Raba replied: It is arrived at by a comparison between the words 'His uncle' [in two passages]: Here it is written, He hath uncovered his uncle's nakedness, and there it is written, Or his uncle or his uncle's son may redeem him, as there he must be paternal and not necessarily maternal, so here also, he must be paternal and not necessarily maternal. And whence is it proved there? — Scripture stated, Of his family may redeem him, and only a father's family may be called the proper family, but the mother's family cannot be called the proper family.

But surely we learned: If a man was told, 'Your wife is dead', and he married her paternal sister; [and when he was told] 'She also is dead', he married her maternal sister; 'She too is dead', and he married her paternal sister; 'She also is dead', and he married her maternal sister, he is permitted to live with the first, third and fifth who also exempt their rivals; but he is forbidden to live with the second and the fourth, and cohabitation with one of these does not exempt her rival. If, however, he cohabited with the second after the death of the first, he is permitted to live with the second and with the fourth who also exempt their rivals, but he is forbidden to live with the third and with the fifth.

(1) Even after the death of her husband she remains forbidden to marry anyone until the prescribed number of seven unclean days has passed.
(2) If she gave birth to any child she remains forbidden to her husband's brothers even after his death.
(3) From the other women one is forbidden to marry.
(4) The former is dependent on the prescribed number of days and the latter on the absence of any issue. And thus the original question remains: Whence is deduced the prohibition of the first stage of contact in the case of all forbidden unions?
(5) Through divorce.

Infra 96a.

From this it clearly follows that a wife's sister, whether she is paternal or maternal, is forbidden. Whence, however, is this derived? — Deduction is made from one's sister; as a sister [is forbidden] whether she is paternal or maternal, so here also whether she is paternal or maternal. But let the deduction be made from one's aunt; as one's aunt [is forbidden only when she is] paternal and not when maternal, so here also [the prohibition should apply when she is] paternal and not when maternal! — It stands to reason that the deduction should be made from one's sister, since [laws concerning] his own relatives [should be inferred] from [laws concerning others of] his own relatives. On the contrary! Deduction should have been made from one's aunt, since a relationship effected through betrothal [should be inferred] from one effected through betrothal! — The deduction is rather made from a brother's wife, since her relationship is through betrothal, and she is of his own relatives.

Whence, however, is [the law concerning] a brother's wife herself derived? — From what was taught: Thou shalt not uncover the nakedness of thy brother's wife, whether he is paternal or maternal. You say, 'Whether he is paternal or maternal', perhaps it is not so, but only when paternal and not when maternal? This is a matter of logical argument: He is subject to a penalty here and he is also subject to penalty [for intercourse] with his sister; as [the prohibition of] his sister applies whether she is paternal or maternal, so here also [the prohibition applies] whether he was paternal or maternal. But might it not be argued thus: He is subject to a penalty here and he is also subject to penalty [for intercourse] with his aunt. As therefore [the prohibition of] his aunt applies only when she is paternal and not when maternal, so here also [the prohibition applies only when he is] paternal and not when maternal! Let us observe whom the case more closely resembles. Deduction concerning one's own relatives should be made from one's own relatives, and let no proof be adduced from one's aunt whose relationship is due to his father. But might it not be argued as follows: Deduction should be made concerning a relationship which is due to betrothal from a relationship that is due to betrothal, but let no proof be adduced from a sister the prohibition of whom is natural! — For this reason it was specifically stated in Scriptures, It is thy brother's nakedness, implying whether he is paternal or only maternal.

Might it not be suggested that the one as well as the other speaks of the wife of a paternal brother, the one referring to a brother's wife who had children during the lifetime of her husband, while the other refers to a brother's wife who had no children during the lifetime of her husband! — The case of one who had no children during the lifetime of her husband may be deduced from the statement of R. Huna.

Might not both still speak of the wife of a paternal brother, the one referring to a brother's wife who had children during the lifetime of her husband and the other to one who had children after the death of her husband! — The case of one who had children after the death of her husband requires no Scriptural text; for since the All Merciful said that she who had no children was permitted, it is obvious that if she had children she is forbidden.

Is it not possible that she who has no children is forbidden to all men but permitted to the levir while she who has children is permitted both to all men and to the levir! Or else: If she has no children it is a commandment\textsuperscript{26} but if she has children it is optional! Or else: [Though indeed] the levir may marry her if\textsuperscript{27} she has no children but he may not if she has children, yet [as the prohibition\textsuperscript{28} is] a negative commandment that is derived from a positive one\textsuperscript{29} it has only the force of a positive commandment!\textsuperscript{30} — For this reason Scripture wrote another text,\textsuperscript{31} He hath uncovered his brother's nakedness.\textsuperscript{32} But might it be said that the wife of a maternal brother is like the wife of a paternal brother, and that as the wife of a paternal brother is permitted\textsuperscript{33} after the death of her husband, so is also the wife of a maternal brother\textsuperscript{34} permitted after the death of her husband! — Scripture said, She is,\textsuperscript{35} she retains her status.\textsuperscript{36}

What need was there to specify the penalty of kareth for intercourse with one's sister\textsuperscript{37} — To infer a ruling like that of R. Johanan. For R. Johanan stated: If one committed all these offences\textsuperscript{38} in one state of unawareness, he is liable for every one of them.\textsuperscript{39} According to R. Isaac, however, who stated, ‘All those who are subject to the penalty of kareth were included in the general rule; and why was the penalty of kareth for [intercourse with] a sister stated separately? In order to indicate that his\textsuperscript{40} penalty is kareth and not flogging’,\textsuperscript{41} whence is the division\textsuperscript{42} deduced? — It is deduced from, And unto a woman . . . as long as she is impure by her uncleanness,\textsuperscript{43} that guilt is incurred for every single woman.\textsuperscript{44}

For what purpose did the All Merciful write, They shall be childless\textsuperscript{45} in the case of one's aunt?\textsuperscript{46} — It is required for an exposition like that of Rabbah. For Rabbah pointed out the following contradiction: It is written, They shall be childless,\textsuperscript{45} and it is also written, They shall die childless!\textsuperscript{47} How [are these two versions to be reconciled]? If he has children he will bury them; if he has no children, he will be childless.\textsuperscript{48}

And it was necessary to write They shall be childless,\textsuperscript{45} and it was also necessary to write, They shall die childless.\textsuperscript{47} For had the All Merciful written only, They shall be childless,\textsuperscript{45} it might have been assumed to refer to those born subsequent to the offence,\textsuperscript{50} hence the All Merciful wrote, They shall die childless.\textsuperscript{47} And had the All Merciful written, They shall die childless,\textsuperscript{47} it might have been assumed to refer to those born subsequent to the offence,\textsuperscript{51} but not to those who were born previously,\textsuperscript{50} [hence both texts were] required.

Whence [is the prohibition of] the first stage among those who are subject to the penalty of negative commandments\textsuperscript{52} to be inferred? — As the All Merciful specified carnally\textsuperscript{53} in the case of a designated\textsuperscript{54} bondmaid,\textsuperscript{55} it may be inferred that among all the others who are subject to the penalty of negative commandments,\textsuperscript{56} the first stage by itself constitutes the offence.\textsuperscript{57} On the contrary! As the All Merciful specified the first stage in the case of those who are subject to the penalty of kareth,\textsuperscript{58} it may be inferred that among those who are subject to the penalty of negative commandments consumption only constitutes the offence! — R. Ashi replied: If so,\textsuperscript{59} Scripture should have omitted [the reference]\textsuperscript{60} in the case of the designated handmaid.\textsuperscript{61}

Whence [is the prohibition of] the first stage inferred in the case of offences for which priests alone are subject to the penalty of negative commandments?\textsuperscript{62} — This is arrived at by an analogy between the expressions of ‘taking’.\textsuperscript{63}

Whence [is the prohibition\textsuperscript{64} in respect of] those who are subject\textsuperscript{65} to the penalty of a positive commandment\textsuperscript{66} inferred?

\begin{itemize}
  \item (1) Since the third, the maternal sister of the second, is permitted only on account of the illegality of the marriage of the second, but is forbidden where the marriage with the second is legal.
  \item (2) A wife's sister is forbidden.
  \item (3) In respect of a wife's sister.

The penalty for the transgression of which is not that of kareth!

Which, in view of the texts from Lev. XVIII, 16a and b, is superfluous.

Lev. XX, 21, to indicate that the prohibition is to apply to all cases whether that of a paternal or only that of a maternal brother.

To marry the levir if her husband died without issue.

Who died childless.

E.V. 'it is'. Lev. XVIII, 16, which speaks also, as deduced supra, of the wife of a maternal brother.

As she was forbidden to the levir during the lifetime of her husband she remains so after his death.

Her case, surely, is included in Lev. XVIII, 29, among all the others with whom intercourse is forbidden under the penalty of kareth!

Of forbidden intercourse.

Mak. 14a, Ker. 2b. Because the penalty of kareth was specifically mentioned in the case of intercourse with a sister who is taken as an example for all the others included in the general statement in Lev. XVIII, 29. This is in accordance with the principle that if any case is included in a general rule and is then made the subject of a special statement, that which is predicated of it is to be applied to the whole of the general rule. Had not the sister been mentioned separately it might have been assumed that as all the offences were included in the general prohibition, and as they were all committed in one state of unawareness, one liability only is incurred for all.

The brother's.

Even though he had been duly warned.

That liability is incurred for every single offence even though all were committed in one state of unawareness.

2. Ibid. 20.

3. V. infra nn. 5ff.

4. The expression shall be childless would have been taken to imply that the children born prior to the offence would die as a result of the offence. The parents, however, would not die childless because the children born after the offence would live.

5. Who would live. V. supra note 5.

6. Shall die childless, being preceded by They shall bear their sin (Lev. XX, 20), implying that the penalty would affect only those children who were born after the sin had been committed.

7. I.e., to flogging but not to kareth.

8. Lev. XIX, 20, implying the second stage of consummation.

9. This form of the kinyan by a Jewish slave of a Canaanitish bondwoman takes the place of the ordinary betrothal of a free woman.

10. Intercourse with whom is forbidden by a negative commandment and is consequently subject to the penalty of flogging, in addition to the prescribed guilt-offering (v. Lev. XIX, 21f).

11. Such as a bastard and an undesignated bondmaid.

12. As only the designated bondmaid must pass the second stage in order to constitute an offence for which liability to a guilt-offering is incurred, it follows that in all the other cases, where no guilt-offering is ever incurred, the offence is constituted with the first stage alone.

14. That with all the others who are subject to the penalty of negative commandments the offence is not constituted unless, as with the designated bondmaid, the second stage was passed.

15. ‘Carnally’. Lit., ‘let the text keep silence.’

16. Since, however, the second stage was specifically postulated in her case, it follows that with all the others the first stage by itself constitutes the offence.

17. From the designated maid supra only such prohibitions may he inferred as are applicable to all and not to priests only.

18. The expression of ‘taking’ is used in the case of intercourse with a sister (Lev. XX, 17) which is punishable by kareth, and a similar expression is used in the case of marriages forbidden to priests under the penalty of a negative commandment (Lev. XXI, 7).

19. Of the first stage.

20. For intercourse with an Israelite's daughter.

21. An Egyptian or an Edomite, for instance, (v. Deut. XXIII, 8, 9) whose prohibition to marry an Israelite's daughter is based on the positive precept, The third generation . . . shall (E.V. may) enter into the assembly of the Lord, which implies that the first and second generations must not. A negative precept derived from a positive one has the force of a positive precept.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 55b

— It is arrived at by an analogy between the two expressions of ‘coming’.¹

Whence [the prohibition of a yebamah]² to a stranger?³ — If [one follows] him who holds that it⁴ is a negative precept,⁵ [it would be subject to the same restrictions as any other] negative precept;⁶ if [one follows] him who holds that it⁷ is a positive precept,⁸ [it would be subject to the same restrictions as any other] positive precept.⁹ Whence, however, [its¹ force¹ in respect of] the yebamah and the levir? — It is arrived at by the analogy between the two expressions of ‘coming’¹¹

Whence [its¹ force¹² in respect of the kinyan], between husband and wife? — It is arrived at by comparison between the expressions of ‘taking’.¹³

Raba said: For what purpose did the All Merciful write ‘carnally’ in connection with the designated bondmaid,¹⁴ a married woman,¹⁵ and a sotah?¹⁶ That in connection with the designated bondmaid [is required] as has just been explained. That in connection with a married woman excludes intercourse with a relaxed membrum. This is a satisfactory interpretation in accordance with the view of him who maintains that if one cohabited with forbidden relatives with relaxed membrum he is exonerated; what, however, can be said, according to him who maintains that for such an act one is guilty? — The exclusion is rather that of intercourse with a dead woman. Since it might have been assumed that, as [a wife], even after her death, is described as his kin, one should be guilty for [intercourse with] her [as for that] with a married woman, hence we were taught [that one is exonerated]. What was the object of that of the sotah? — Such as was taught: Carnally excludes [the case where the husband's warning was] concerning something else. What is meant by ‘something else’? R. Shesheth replied: The exclusion is the case where he warned her concerning unnatural intercourse. Said Raba to him: The text reads, As with womankind! Rather, said Raba, the exclusion is the case where the husband's warning concerned lecherous contact of her limbs. Said Abaye to him: Has the All Merciful forbidden [a wife to her husband] because of obscenity? — Rather, said Abaye, the exclusion is the case where the husband's warning was concerning superficial contact. This is a satisfactory explanation according to him who maintains that the first stage of contact is the insertion of the corona; what can be said, however, according to him who maintains that it is the superficial contact! — The exclusion is rather the case where he warned her concerning lecherous contact of her limbs; but it was necessary [to state it, because] it might have been assumed that, as the All Merciful has made the prohibition dependent on the objection of the husband, the woman should here be forbidden since he objected, hence we were taught [that such a case is excluded].

Samuel stated: The first stage is constituted by superficial contact. This may be compared to a man who puts his finger to his mouth; it is impossible for him not to press down the flesh. When Rabbah b. Bar Hana came he stated in the name of R. Johanan: Consummation in the case of a designated bondmaid is constituted by the insertion of the corona.

R. Shesheth raised an objection: ‘Carnally implies that guilt is incurred only when intercourse was accompanied by friction’; does not this refer to friction of the membrum! — No; friction of the corona.

When R. Dimi came he stated in the name of R. Johanan: The first stage is constituted by the insertion of the corona. They said to him: But, surely, Rabbah b. Bar Hana did not say so! — He replied: Then either he is the story-teller or I.

When Rabin came he stated in the name of R. Johanan, ‘The first stage is constituted by the insertion of the corona’. He is certainly in disagreement with the report of Rabbah b. Bar Hana. Must it be said, however, that he differs also from Samuel? — No; [the entire process] from the superficial contact until the insertion of the corona is described as the first stage.

When R. Samuel b. Judah came he stated in the name of R. Johanan, ‘The first stage is constituted by the insertion of the corona; and the final stage, by actual consummation.

(1) The expression of ‘coming’ is used with a case that is forbidden by a negative precept (Deut. XXIII, 3) as well as with those whose prohibition is derived from a positive precept (ibid. 9) and whose penalty is kareth. Cf. note 9 supra.

(25) Lit., ‘kissing’.

(38) Who regards this act as consummation.

(39) Who reported that superficial contact alone constitutes the first stage.

(40) On this both Samuel and Rabin agree; the one mentioning the beginning of the process and the other the conclusion.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 56a

Beyond this, the act is no more than superficial contact and one is exonerated in regard to it’. He thus differs from Samuel.

WHETHER HE PASSED ONLY THE FIRST, OR ALSO THE FINAL STAGE OF CONTACT HE CONSTITUTES THEREBY A KINYAN. In what respect is kinyan constituted? — Rab replied: Kinyan is constituted in all respects;¹ and Samuel replied: Kinyan is constituted only in respect of the things specified in the section,² viz., to inherit the estate of his brother³ and to exempt her⁴ from the levirate marriage. If she became subject to the levir after her marriage she may, according to the view of all, eat terumah, since she has been eating it before. They differ only [where she became subject to the levir] after betrothal. Rab maintains that she may eat, since the All Merciful has included cohabitation in error, [giving it the same validity] as when done presumptuously. But Samuel maintains that the All Merciful has included it in so far only as to put him in the same position as the husband, but not to confer upon him more power than upon the husband. And [in giving this ruling] Samuel is consistent with his own view, for R. Nahman stated in the name of Samuel: wherever the husband entitles her to eat, the levir also entitles her to eat; and wherever the husband does not entitle her to eat the levir also does not entitle her to eat.

An objection was raised: ‘If the daughter of an Israelite, capable of bearing, was betrothed to a priest capable of hearing, who became deaf before he had time to marry her, she may not eat terumah. If he died and she became subject to a deaf levir, she may eat; and in this respect the power of the levir is superior to that of the husband’. Now, according to Rab, this statement is perfectly satisfactory. According to Samuel, however, a difficulty arises! Samuel can answer you: Read thus... who became deaf before he had time to marry her, she may not eat terumah; if, however, he married her and then became deaf she may eat it; if he died and she became subject to a deaf levir, she may eat it.’ Then what is meant by ‘in this respect’? — While if the husband had been deaf before, she would not have been entitled to eat, if the levir had been deaf before she may eat.

Others say: If she became subject to the levir after her betrothal all agree that she may not eat terumah, since ‘she was not allowed to eat it during the lifetime of her husband. They differ only [when she became subject to the levir] after her marriage. Rab maintains that she may eat, since she has been eating before; but Samuel maintains that she may not eat, because the All Merciful has included cohabitation in error, [giving it the same force] as cohabitation in presumption, only in respect of the things that were enumerated in the section, but not in all other respects. But surely R. Nahman stated in the name of Samuel, ‘Wherever the husband entitles her to eat the levir also entitles her to eat’! — Read: Every cohabitation whereby a husband entitles her to eat also entitles her to eat if performed by the levir, and every cohabitation whereby the husband does not entitle her to eat, does not entitle her to eat if performed by the levir.

An objection was raised: ‘If the daughter of an Israelite capable of hearing was betrothed to a priest capable of hearing, who became deaf before he had time to marry her, she may not eat terumah. If a son was born to her she may eat. If the son died, R. Nathan said, she may eat; but the Sages said: She may not eat. What is R. Nathan’s reason? Rabbah replied: Because she was eating before. Said Abaye to him: What now? would the daughter of an Israelite who was married to a priest who subsequently died be entitled to eat terumah because she was eating it before? But [the fact is that] as soon as [her husband] died his sanctity is withdrawn from her; so here also as soon as [the son] died his sanctity is withdrawn from her! — Rather, said R. Joseph, R. Nathan holds that marriage with a deaf priest does entitle the woman to eat terumah, and that no prohibition is to be made in respect of the marriage of a deaf priest as a preventive measure against the betrothal of a deaf priest. Said Abaye to him: If so, what need was there [to state] ‘If a son was born to her’? — Because of the Rabbis! Then R. Nathan should have expressed his disagreement with the Rabbis in the first clause! — He allowed the Rabbis to finish their statement and then expressed his disagreement with them. If so, the statement should have read, ‘If the son died she may not eat; R. Nathan said: She may eat’ — This is a difficulty.

SIMILARLY, IF A MAN HAD INTERCOURSE WITH ANY OF THE FORBIDDEN RELATIVES. R. Amram said: The following statement was made to us by R. Shesheth

1. The yebamah may even eat of terumah if the levir was a priest.
2. Deut. XXV, 5ff, which deals with the obligations and privileges of the levir and the yebamah.
3. Inferred from v. 6 in the section.
4. If he died without issue from her but had children from another wife, or if he divorced her.
5. The first stage having the same validity as actual marriage.
6. The sister-in-law upon whom one of the forms of kinyan, including cohabitation in error, spoken of in our Mishnah had been executed.
7. With her husband, the levir's deceased brother.
8. Rab and Samuel.
9. If the levir was a priest.
10. While she was still with her husband.
11. Cohabitation in error.
12. The levir.
13. He is entitled to confer upon his sister-in-law the same rights that had been conferred upon her by her husband. Hence, if she was married and entitled to eat terumah the levir also may confer upon her this privilege.
14. As her husband's priesthood did not entitle her to eat terumah during the period of their betrothal, since only actual marriage can confer this privilege, the levir also cannot now confer this privilege upon her.
15. If the kinyan was in one of the imperfect forms spoken of in our Mishnah.
16. Even after their marriage. The reason will be explained infra.
17. After the marriage.
18. After the levirate marriage. The cohabitation of a deaf levir is considered to be no less valid to constitute a kinyan than the imperfect forms of kinyan mentioned in our Mishnah which constitute kinyan in the case of any levir.
19. Because he regards an imperfect cohabitation which in ordinary cases constitutes no kinyan as valid in the case of the levir.
20. According to him, imperfect cohabitation confers no more rights through the levir than through the husband; and here it is stated that the levir entitles her to eat terumah though her husband could not confer this privilege upon her!
21. Because she was entitled to the same privilege during the lifetime of her husband,
22. If she is only entitled to the privilege she enjoyed during the lifetime of her husband, in what respect is ‘the power of the levir superior to that of the husband’?
23. He married her.
25. V. loc. cit., n. 7.
27. V. loc. cit., n. 2.
28. How then could Samuel maintain that ‘she may not eat’ even though she had enjoyed that privilege while her husband was alive?
29. V. supra p. 374, n. 16.
30. V. loc. cit., n. 17.
32. Though he maintains (according to the second version) that the levir does not confer any privileges that were not previously conferred by the husband.
33. The statement just cited that she may eat terumah if the levir is deaf though she was not permitted to eat it while her husband was alive.
34. I.e., the explanation given supra, in reply to the objection raised against Samuel, may now be given as a reply to the objection against Rab, viz., that the clause, ‘If however, he married her and then became deaf she may eat it’, is to be inserted before ‘If he died and she became subject to a deaf levir, she may eat’, the last clause thus referring to a married woman that was permitted to eat terumah during the lifetime of her husband.

(35) Since, in his opinion (according to the second version), the deaf levir (whose kinyan has the same validity as that effected through the imperfect forms mentioned in our Mishnah) does not confer the privilege of eating terumah even if the woman had enjoyed the privilege while her husband was alive.

(36) V. supra p. 374. n. 16.

(37) The terumah; by virtue of her son, as deduced from Lev. XXII, 11, infra 67a.

(38) But was survived by his father.

(39) By virtue of her husband.

(40) Why may she eat now by virtue of her husband while in the previous case, where she never had a son, her husband could not confer that privilege upon her?

(41) V. supra note 9.

(42) Not being survived by any son.

(43) Since the law is that she may not.

(44) How, then, could R. Nathan allow her to continue to eat terumah?

(45) Where the betrothal took place while he was still capable of hearing.

(46) Because Pentateuchally the betrothal confers the privilege upon her. Its postponement until after the marriage is merely a preventive measure Rabbinically instituted (v. Keth. 57b). which is, of course, not applicable here where marriage with the deaf man had already taken place.

(47) Against the woman's eating of terumah.

(48) V. supra note 3.

(49) There is no need to provide against the possibility of mistaking betrothal for marriage and for thus allowing a woman to eat terumah immediately after betrothal, since it is well known that the betrothal of a deaf man has no validity. The Rabbis who forbid the woman to eat terumah even after the marriage, it may be explained, provided against the possibility of mistaking such a marriage which followed a betrothal that took place while the priest was still capable of hearing (which Pentateuchally entitles the woman to the privilege) for one which followed a betrothal that took place when he was already deaf and which is Pentateuchally invalid.

(50) If according to R. Nathan it is the marriage, even though there was no son, that entitles the woman to the terumah.

(51) Who in such a case only agree with R. Nathan that the woman may eat terumah.

(52) Since he maintains that after the marriage, though there was no son, the woman is entitled to the privilege.

(53) Where the woman is prohibited to eat terumah even after the marriage.

(54) With their views in both the first and the final clause.

(55) That R. Nathan reserved his opinion until the Rabbis had finished their full statement.

(56) Which would have concluded the statement of the Rabbis.

(57) I.e., R. Nathan's view would thus have come at the very end. As, however, his opinion is inserted before 'she may not eat' which is the statement of the Rabbis, it cannot he maintained any more that he was waiting until they had concluded their full statement, and the original difficulty consequently arises again.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 56b

who enlightened us on the subject from our Mishnah. ‘An Israelite's wife who was outraged, though she is permitted to her husband, is disqualified from the priesthood; and so it was taught by our Tanna: SIMILARLY, IF A MAN HAD INTERCOURSE WITH ANY OF THE FORBIDDEN RELATIVES ENUMERATED IN THE TORAH, OR WITH ANY OF THOSE WHO ARE INELIGIBLE TO MARRY HIM; now, what is the purport of SIMILARLY? Does it not mean, WHETHER IN ERROR OR IN PRESUMPTION, WHETHER UNDER COMPULSION OR OF HIS OWN FREE WILL? And yet it was stated, HE HAS THEREBY RENDERED HER INELIGIBLE'. — No; SIMILARLY might refer to the FIRST STAGE. ‘To the first stage’ with whom? If it be suggested, ‘With one of the forbidden relatives’, does this then imply [it might be retorted] that the case of the forbidden relatives is derived from that of the sister-in-law? On the contrary, the case of the sister-in-law was derived from the forbidden relatives, since the original prohibition of the first stage was written in connection with the forbidden relatives! — Rather, SIMILARLY refers to Unnatural intercourse with forbidden relatives. On the contrary; the original prohibition of the various forms of intercourse with a woman was written in connection with the forbidden relatives\(^{10}\) — Rather, SIMILARLY refers\(^{8}\) to unnatural intercourse with those [cohabitation with whom is] subject to the penalty of negative precepts.\(^{11}\)

Rabbah\(^{12}\) stated: If the wife of a priest had been outraged, her husband suffers the penalty of flogging on her account\(^{13}\) for [cohabiting with] a harlot.\(^{14}\) Only for [cohabiting with] a harlot, but not for ‘defilement’?\(^{15}\) — Read, ‘Also for [cohabitation with] a harlot’.\(^{16}\)

R. Zera raised an objection: And she be not seized,\(^{17}\) she is forbidden; if, however, she was seized\(^{18}\) she is permitted.\(^{19}\) But there is another woman who is forbidden\(^{19}\) even though she was seized.\(^{18}\) And who is that? The wife of a priest. Now, a negative precept\(^{20}\) that is derived from a positive one\(^{21}\) has only the force of a positive precept!\(^{22}\) — Rabbah replied: All\(^{23}\) were included in the category of harlot.\(^{24}\) When, therefore, Scripture specified in the case of the wife of an Israelite that only if she be not seized\(^{17}\) she is forbidden but if she was seized\(^{18}\) she is permitted, it may be inferred that the wife of a priest retains her forbidden status.\(^{25}\)

Others say: Rabbah stated, If the wife of a priest had been outraged, her husband suffers for her the penalty of flogging\(^{26}\) on account of ‘defilement’.\(^{27}\) Only on account of ‘defilement’ but not for [connubial relationship with] a harlot. Thus it is obvious that [when the woman acted] under compulsion she is not to be regarded as a harlot. R. Zera raised an objection: ‘And she be not seized,\(^{28}\) she is forbidden; if, however, she was seized\(^{29}\) she is permitted. But there is another woman who is forbidden\(^{30}\) even though she was seized.\(^{29}\) And who is that? The wife of a priest’. Now, a negative precept\(^{31}\) that is derived from a positive one\(^{32}\) has only the force of a positive precept!\(^{33}\) — Rabbah\(^{34}\) replied: All\(^{35}\) were included in [the prohibition to live with her] after that she is defiled.\(^{36}\) When, therefore, Scripture specified in the case of the wife of an Israelite that only when she be not seized\(^{37}\) she is forbidden, but if she was seized\(^{38}\) she is permitted, it may be inferred that the wife of a priest retains her forbidden status.\(^{39}\)

MISHNAH. THE BETROTHAL OF A WIDOW TO A HIGH PRIEST AND OF A DIVORCED WOMAN OR A HALIZAH TO A COMMON PRIEST\(^{40}\) DOES NOT CONFER UPON THEM THE RIGHT TO EAT TERUMAH.\(^{41}\) R. ELEAZAR AND R. SIMEON, HOWEVER, DECLARE THEM ELIGIBLE.\(^{42}\) IF THEY BECAME WIDOWS OR WERE DIVORCED AFTER MARRIAGE THEY REMAIN INELIGIBLE;\(^{43}\) IF AFTER BETROTHAL THEY BECOME ELIGIBLE.\(^{44}\)

GEMARA. It was taught: R. Meir said, [this\(^{45}\) may be arrived at by an inference] a minori ad majus: If permissible betrothal\(^{46}\) does not confer the right of eating terumah, how much less forbidden betrothal.\(^{47}\) They, however, replied: No; if you have said it\(^{48}\) in respect of permissible betrothal\(^{46}\) where the man may never confer the right of eating,\(^{49}\) would you also say it\(^{48}\) in respect of sinful betrothal\(^{47}\) where the [priest], in other circumstances,\(^{50}\) is entitled to confer the right of eating?\(^{51}\)

R. Eleazar stated in the name of R. Oshaia: In the case where a priest who was wounded in the stones\(^{52}\) betrothed a daughter of an Israelite,\(^{53}\) we have a difference of opinion between R. Meir and R. Eleazar and R. Simeon. According to R. Meir who holds that a woman awaiting a pentateuchally forbidden cohabitation\(^{54}\) may not eat terumah, this woman also\(^{55}\) may not eat; but according to R. Eleazar and R. Simeon who maintain that a woman awaiting a pentateuchally forbidden cohabitation\(^{54}\) may eat

(1) Lit., ‘and lit up our eyes’.
(2) Supra 35a. She may not marry a priest even after the death of her husband.
(3) In our Mishnah אֵָּּנְָּה הָָּלָּחָּאָה == our Tanna (Rashi). אֵָּּנְָּה הָָּלָּחָּאָה == and our Tanna also taught so. Others render אֵָּּנְָּה ‘confirmation: אֵָּּנְָּה אֵָּּנְָּה == and the Tanna is (or provides) confirmation (v. Jast.). [Or, אֵָּּנְָּה אֵָּּנְָּה]

(4) To marry a priest. Since a married woman is subject to the same restrictions as the ‘forbidden relatives’, she being included in the penalty of incestuous unions in Lev. XVIII (v. verse 20), it follows that whatever renders the forbidden relatives in our Mishnah ineligible to marry a priest renders a married woman also ineligible. As ‘outrage’ or ‘intercourse under compulsion’ is included, our Mishnah must be in agreement with the ruling of R. Shesheth.

(5) Lit., ‘what’.

(6) I.e., as in the previously mentioned cases so in the following, the first stage has the same force as consummation. The ineligibility of an outraged woman, therefore, does not at all come within the purview of our Mishnah.

(7) Since the law in the latter is made to apply by comparison also to the former.

(8) Lit., ‘what’.

(9) The meaning being that as with the sister-in-law so with the other forbidden relatives kinyan is constituted IRRESPECTIVE OF THE NATURE OF THE INTERCOURSE, even if it was unnatural. Cf. supra p. 378, n. 6 second clause.

(10) The case of the sister-in-law is derived from them; not theirs from hers.

(11) Cf. supra p. 378, n. 6 and supra n. 2 mutatis mutandis.

(12) Cur. edd., ‘Raba’.

(13) If he has intercourse with her.

(14) Who is forbidden to a priest (v. Lev. XXI, 7) whether her adultery was committed willingly or under compulsion. It is in the case of an Israelite only that a distinction is made between a woman's voluntary and compulsory adultery.

(15) If to an Israelite she is forbidden on account of her defilement when her act was voluntary (v. supra 11b), she should be forbidden to a priest on the same account even when her act was under compulsion!

(16) He suffers for both.

(18) I.e., if she acted under compulsion.

(19) To her husband.

(20) That a priest must not live with his outraged wife.

(21) An Israelite only may live with such a wife.

(22) It is not punishable by flogging. How then could Rabbah subject the husband to such a penalty?

(23) Married women who played the harlot whether willingly or under compulsion.

(24) Who is forbidden to her husband by a negative precept.

(25) Her prohibition to the priest, even if she acted under compulsion, is consequently derived from the original negative precept, and not, as had been assumed, from the positive precept relating to an Israelite.

(26) If he has intercourse with her.

(27) V. supra p. 379, n.8.

(29) I.e., if she acted under compulsion.

(30) To her husband.

(32) An Israelite only may live with such a wife.

(33) V. supra p. 379, n. 15.

(35) V. supra p. 379, n. 16.

(36) Deut. XXIV, 4.

(37) Num. V, 13, E.V., neither she be taken in the act.

(38) I.e., if she acted under compulsion.

(39) Cf. supra note 1.

(40) Since such betrothal is unlawful.

(41) If they were the daughters of Israelites. If they were the daughters of priests, their right to the eating of terumah which they enjoyed prior to their betrothal, ceases with the forbidden betrothal. (V. Rashi s.v. הִקְנָה אֲדוֹר a.l.) According to Tosaf. (s.v. מַתָּא הָעָדָה a.l.) the Mishnah refers to the daughters of priests only. Cf. also תִּפְּלֵית הַיָּנוּר a.l.

(42) During the period of betrothal, so long as actual marriage has not taken place.

(43) Since, in the case of priests’ daughters, marriage caused their permanent profanation, and in that of others the privilege had never been conferred upon them.
(44) Even according to the first Tanna. Priests’ daughters lose the privilege only during the period of betrothal. As soon as the betrothal period ends either through death or divorce they may again eat terumah; and in the case of widowhood they may also marry a common priest. Daughters of Israelites are entitled to the same privileges except that of eating of terumah to which, of course, they had never been entitled.
(45) The ruling that the betrothals spoken of in our Mishnah do not confer upon the daughter of an Israelite the privilege of eating terumah (v. Rashi, second explanation).
(46) When an Israelite betroths the daughter of an Israelite.
(47) Of which our Mishnah speaks. [Var. lec.: ‘If permissible betrothal renders her ineligible (a priest's daughter is not allowed to eat terumah after her betrothal to an Israelite), how much more forbidden betrothal’. This reading — a reading which it must be confessed appears more feasible — is adopted by Tosaf. in view of their interpretation (v. supra p. 380, n. 17) that the Mishnah refers only to daughters of priests].
(48) That betrothal does not confer the privilege of eating terumah.
(49) An Israelite is neither himself entitled to the eating of terumah nor can he confer the right upon others.
(50) If he married a woman permitted to him.
(51) Obviously not. Hence the ruling in our Mishnah that the betrothals confer the privilege.
(52) One so incapacitated is not permitted to marry even the daughter of an Israelite, v. Deut. XXIII, 2.
(53) [Var. lec.: ‘a daughter of a priest’. A reading adopted by Tosaf. on their interpretation (cf. n. 6)].
(54) I.e., if she was betrothed to a man whom she is forbidden to marry.
(55) Who married the incapacitated priest.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 57a

this woman also may eat.¹

Whence [is this² proved]? Is it not possible that R. Eleazar and R. Simeon maintain [their opinion] only there because in other circumstances³ he is entitled to confer the right of eating, but not here where he is never entitled to confer the right of eating!⁴ And were you to reply that here also he⁵ is entitled to confer upon the daughter of proselytes⁶ the right of eating, surely [it may be retorted] this very question was addressed by R. Johanan to R. Oshaia⁷ who gave him no answer!⁸

It was stated.⁹ Abaye said,¹⁰ Because¹¹ he is entitled to confer upon [his wife]¹² the right to eat [terumah] so long as he does not cohabit with her.¹³ Raba said,¹⁰ Because¹¹ he may confer the right of eating¹⁴ [terumah] upon his Canaanitish bondmen and bondwomen.¹⁵

Abaye did not give the same explanation as Raba because matrimonial kinyan may be inferred from matrimonial kinyan, but matrimonial kinyan may not be inferred from the kinyan of slaves. And Raba does not give the same explanation as Abaye because there¹⁶ it is different, since she has already been eating it previously.¹⁷ And Abaye:¹⁸ — [The argument], ‘since she has already been eating’ cannot be upheld;¹⁹ for should you not admit this,²⁰ a daughter of an Israelite who was married to a priest who subsequently died should also be allowed to eat terumah since she has already been eating it!²¹

And Raba:²² — There,²³ his kinyan had completely ceased;²⁴ here, however, his kinyan did not cease.²⁵

[To turn to] the main text. R. Johanan enquired of R. Oshaia: If a priest who was wounded in the stones married the daughter of proselytes does he confer upon her the right of eating terumah? The other remained silent and made no reply at all. Later, another great man came and asked him a different question which he answered. And who was that man? Resh Lakish. Said R. Judah the Prince to R. Oshaia: Is not R. Johanan a great man?²⁶ The other replied: [No reply could be given] since he submitted a problem which has no solution.
In accordance with whose view? If according to R. Judah, she is not entitled to eat terumah whether he does or does not retain his holiness. For if he retains his holiness she may not eat since the Master said, ‘The daughter of a male proselyte is like the daughter of a male who is unfit for the priesthood’ and if he does not retain his holiness she may not eat either, since it has been said that the assembly of proselytes is called an ‘assembly’! If, however, according to R. Jose, she is entitled to eat terumah whether he does or does not retain his holiness. For if he retains his holiness she may eat, since he stated that even when a proselyte married a proselyte his daughter is eligible to marry a priest; and if he does not retain his holiness, she may also eat since he said that the assembly of proselytes is not called an ‘assembly’! It must rather be in accordance with the view of the following Tanna. For we learned: R. Eliezer b. Jacob said, ‘A woman who is the daughter of a proselyte must not be married to a priest unless her mother was of Israel’.

Come and hear: When R. Aha b Hinena arrived from the South, he came and brought a Baraitha with him: Whence is it deduced that if a priest, who is wounded in the stones, married the daughter of proselytes, he confers upon her the right to eat terumah? For it was stated, But if a priest buy any soul, the purchase of his money etc., he may eat of it. Now, in accordance with whose view? If it be suggested, ‘according to R. Judah’, surely he stated that whether he does or does not retain his holiness she is not permitted to eat. And if ‘in accordance with the view of R. Jose’, what need was there for a Scriptural text? Surely, he stated that whether he does or does not retain his holiness she is permitted to eat! Must it not be assumed that it is in accordance with the view of R. Eliezer b. Jacob? And so it may be inferred that only her eligibility had been increased and that she is consequently permitted to eat. This proves it.

It was stated: Rab said,

(1) Since through the kinyan of the betrothal the woman becomes the priest's acquisition and is, therefore, like himself, entitled to eat terumah so long as she does not become profaned (a halalah) through actual marriage.
(2) The ruling according to R. Eleazar and R. Simeon just deduced.
(3) If he married a woman permitted to him.
(4) Since he is not permitted to marry any woman.
(5) The incapacitated priest, since he is only forbidden to enter into the assembly of the Lord (Deut. XXIII, 2), i.e., to marry a Jewess, but he is permitted to marry a proselyte.
(6) Who is not included in the assembly of the Lord. V. supra n. 7.
(7) Infra.
(8) As to whether such an incapacitated priest may confer upon the daughter of a proselyte the right of eating terumah. Since no answer was given, there is no proof that the right may be conferred at all. The difficulty consequently remains: How could the case of the incapacitated priest who can never confer the right upon others be inferred from the case of one who is, in certain circumstances, entitled to confer such a right?
(9) In reply to the difficulty raised. V. supra n. 10.
(10) The incapacitated priest is entitled to confer upon the woman he betrothed the right to eat terumah.
(11) In certain other circumstances.
(12) Whom he married before he had been incapacitated.
(13) After becoming incapacitated (v. infra 70a). Since he may confer the privilege of eating terumah in this case he may also confer it where the betrothal was unlawful, so long as the woman had not been profaned by him through marriage.
(14) מ"ה so MS.M. (Cur. edd מ"ה 'enables her to eat').
(15) As he may confer the privilege in that case he may also confer it upon the woman he betrothed.
(16) Where the incapacity occurred after marriage.
Prior to the man's incapacity. This, therefore, provides no proof that a man who is already incapacitated can also confer the privilege.

How does he reconcile the difference in two cases?

Lit., 'we do not say'.

But insist on upholding Raba's distinction.

Prior to her husband's death. As in this case the argument is obviously untenable so it is untenable in the case of the incapacitated priest.

How can he advance an argument that is untenable in the case cited?

Where the priest died.

As soon as the priest died, leaving no sons, their marital relationship was completely severed.

He is still her husband.

And so entitled to a reply.

Did R. Johanan ask his question.

Who, in Kid. 77a, differs from R. Jose on the question of the daughter of a proselyte.

The incapacitated Priest.

R. Judah.

halal. As he may not consequently marry a proselyte's daughter she is obviously forbidden to eat of the terumah.

And the priestly sanctity is consequently no reason for her prohibition to marry a halal.

An ‘assembly of the Lord’ into which an incapacitated person may not enter. (Cf. supra p. 382, nn. 7 and 8). The marriage is consequently forbidden and, therefore, confers upon the woman no right to the eating of terumah.

Did R. Johanan ask his question.

R. Jose. [So MS.M. cur. edd., 'a Master said'].

Kid. 77a. Hence she is not inferior in this respect to the daughter of an Israeliite.

The marriage with her being consequently permissible, the right of eating terumah should obviously be conferred upon her.

R. Johanan raised his question.

Bik. I,5.

Where her mother was of Israel.

I.e., is she, if her mother was of Israel, thereby only enabled to marry a priests but is not regarded as a proper daughter of Israel to be included in the ‘assembly of the Lord’, so as to be forbidden to one incapacitated.

In any ease. Even if the incapacitated priest is holy he may marry her. And, as she is not included in the ‘assembly’ (v. supra n. 13), she is not forbidden to marry him.

And she is thus included in the ‘assembly’ and hence forbidden to marry one incapacitated.

Since the marriage was a forbidden one.

Lev. XXII, 11.

The Heb. "udu in the original seems to be a mistake for tuv which is the only word omitted from the Scriptural quotation.

Which is contrary to the Baraitha which permits it.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 57b

‘The bridal chamber constitutes kinyan with ineligible women’ and Samuel said, ‘The bridal chamber does not constitute kinyan with ineligible women’. Said Samuel: Abba agrees with me in the case of a girl who is under three years of age and one day; since cohabitation with her
Raba said, We also learned a similar Baraita: A girl who is three years of age and one day may be betrothed by cohabitation; if a levir cohabited with her, he has thereby acquired her; one incurs through her the guilt of intercourse with a married woman; she defiles her cohabitor in respect of his imparting defilement to the lower, as well as to the upper couch; if she was married to a priest she may eat terumah, and anyone ineligible who cohabited with her causes her ineligibility. Thus only a girl of the age of three years and one day, who is rendered ineligible by cohabitation, is also rendered ineligible through the bridal chamber; but a girl younger than three years and one day, who is not rendered ineligible by cohabitation, is not rendered ineligible through the bridal chamber either. This proves it.

Rami b. Hama stated: [In regard to the question whether the bridal chamber constitutes kinyan with ineligible women, we arrive at a difference of opinion between R. Meir and R. Eleazar and R. Simeon.

1. Lit., ‘there is huppah’ (v. Glos.), even if it was unaccompanied by any other form of betrothal such as money, deed, or cohabitation (Rashi). On huppah v. Kid., Sonc. ed. p. 5, n. 7,
2. To deprive the woman of her right to eat terumah where, as the daughter of a priest, she had previously been entitled to this privilege.
3. Whom one is not permitted to marry; a widow, e.g., to a High Priest or a divorcée to a common priest. [On Rashi’s interpretation which is followed here, both Rab and Samuel hold with R. Huna (v. Kid. 3a) that huppah by itself constitutes kinyan. They differ, however, in the case of ineligible women, Samuel being of the opinion that huppah with them constitutes no kinyan, since it does not allow them to enter into marital union. Rabbenu Tam, on the other hand, explains huppah here as having been preceded by kiddushin and with reference to the last clause of our Mishnah, the point at issue being whether with ineligible women it is considered nissu’in disqualifying the widow, or erusin; v. Tosaf s.v. הֻנָּה].
4. If unaccompanied by any other forms of matrimonial kinyan. V. supra n. 11.
5. I.e., Rab, whose proper name was Abba. The former name (Rab == Master) was a title of honour conferred upon him as the Master par excellence of his time. According to Rashi, a.l., ‘Abba’ was a term of respect synonymous with ‘prince’ and ‘master’ by which Samuel, his younger contemporary, referred to Rab.
7. Which constitutes kinyan only where cohabitation is possible, but which is not the case with a child under the age mentioned.
8. From which the ruling on which Rab and Samuel are in agreement may he inferred.
9. She is deemed to be his legal wife,
10. During her period of menstruation.
11. If he lies on a number of couches (coverlets, bed-spreads, and the like) resting one upon the other, he imparts levitical defilement to all, though he comes in direct contact with the uppermost one only.
12. A bastard, for instance,
15. V. p. 385, n. 11.
17. V. loc. cit., n. 13.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 58a

According to R. Meir who holds that the betrothal causes ineligibility, the bridal chamber also causes ineligibility, while according to R. Eleazar and R. Simeon who maintain that betrothal causes no ineligibility the bridal chamber also causes no ineligibility. But whence [is this proved]? Is it not possible that R. Meir advanced his view only there, in respect of betrothal, whereby kinyan is effected, but not in respect of the bridal chamber whereby no kinyan is effected! Or else: R. Eleazar and R. Simeon may have advanced their view there only, in respect of betrothal, since it is not close to the act of intercourse; but the bridal chamber which is close to the act of intercourse, may well cause ineligibility.

But if anything can be said it is, that the question depends on the dispute between the following Tannaim: For it was taught, ‘This class or that, [viz.,] eligible or ineligible women, who were married [to a priest], or who only entered [with him] into the bridal chamber without any intercourse having taken place, are entitled to sustenance from his estate and are also permitted to eat terumah’. ‘Who only entered [etc.]’ implies that ‘were married’ means that they were actually married! Must it not [consequently be concluded that the meaning is], ‘as, for instance, when they entered the bridal chamber without any intercourse having taken place’? And yet it was stated that ‘they are entitled to sustenance from his estate and are also permitted to eat terumah’. R. Ishmael son of R. Johanan b. Beroka said: Any woman whose cohabitation entitles her to the eating of terumah is also entitled to the eating of it through her entry into the bridal chamber, and any woman upon whom cohabitation does not confer the right to eat terumah is not entitled through her entry into the bridal chamber also to the eating of it.

Whence, [however, the proof]? Is it not possible that R. Ishmael son of R. Johanan b. Beroka is of the same opinion as R. Meir, who maintains that through betrothal alone a woman is not entitled to eat! — Instead, then, of the statement ‘Any woman upon whom cohabitation does not confer the right to eat terumah is not entitled through her entry into the bridal chamber also to the eating of it’, the statement should have run, ‘Any woman upon whom cohabitation does not confer the right to eat terumah, is not entitled through her money also to the eating of terumah’. But is it not possible that as the first Tanna spoke of the bridal chamber he also spoke of the bridal chamber!

R. Amram stated, The following ruling was given to us by R. Shesheth and he threw light on the subject from a Mishnah: The bridal chamber constitutes kinyan with ineligible women. And the following Tanna taught the same thing: Amen that I have not gone aside as a betrothed, as a married woman, as one awaiting the decision of the levir or as one taken [by the levir]. Now, how is one to imagine the case of the ‘betrothed’? If it be suggested that she was one who was warned while she was betrothed, and then she secluded herself and is now made to drink while she is still only betrothed; is a betrothed [it may be asked] subject to the drinking? Surely we learned: A betrothed or one awaiting the decision of a levir neither drinks nor receives a kethubah! Should it, however, [be suggested that she is one] who was warned while she was betrothed, and then she secluded herself and is now made to drink when she is already married; do the waters [it may be asked] test her? Surely it was taught: And the man shall be clear from iniquity, only when the man is ‘clear from iniquity’ do the waters test his wife; when, however, the man is not ‘clear from iniquity’ the waters do not test his wife. Consequently [she must be one] who was warned while she was betrothed and then she secluded herself and subsequently entered the bridal chamber but there was no cohabitation. Thus it may be inferred that the bridal chamber alone constitutes kinyan with ineligible women. Said Raba: Do you think that this is an authenticated statement? Surely when R. Aha b. Hanina arrived from the South, he came and brought a Baraita with him: Besides thy husband, only when the cohabitation of the husband preceded that of the adulterer, but not when the cohabitation of the adulterer preceded that of the husband! Rami b. Hama replied: This is possible where, for instance, he cohabited with her while she was only betrothed and still in the house of her father. Similarly in respect of the woman awaiting the decision of the levir [it must obviously be a case] where the man cohabited with her in the house of her father-in-law.

(1) Even in the absence of betrothal.
(2) The bridal chamber alone without the additional kinyan of money, deed, or cohabitation is of no validity. V. Kid. 5a.
(3) On the lines of Rami b. Hama's statement.

(4) Whether the bridal chamber constitutes kinyan with ineligible women. (Cf. supra p. 385, nn. 11 and 13).

(5) Otherwise both expressions would have meant exactly the same classes. But this meaning is impossible in view of the fact that after actual marriage it is unanimously agreed that the woman is ineligible to eat terumah!

(6) I.e., the expression ‘or’, לְשׁוֹנָה is to be understood as the equivalent of ‘as for instance’ תנין בה, and the clause following is an illustration of the preceding one.

(7) Which proves that, even where the union was a forbidden one, the entry into the bridal chamber alone does not deprive a woman of the right of eating terumah if she was previously entitled to it.

(8) If she was the daughter of an Israelite (v. Keth. 57a). As the bridal chamber and cohabitation are in this case placed on the same level, it follows that in the case of the daughter of a priest also, if she loses her right to the terumah by cohabitation, she also loses it by entry into the bridal chamber. Thus it has been shewn that the question referred to by Rami b. Hama is a matter of dispute between the first Tanna and R. Ishmael son of R. Johanan b. Broka.

(9) The token of betrothal.

(10) Lit., ‘and he lit up our eyes’.

(12) לְשׁוֹנָה. v. supra p. 378, n. 3.

(13) As the term was repeated (v. Num. V, 22) it includes all the following.

(14) I.e., the sotah who confirms the declaration (v. Num. V, 19).

(15) ‘Have not been faithless’. Cf. ibid. vv. 19, 20.

(16) Where the levir suspects her of infidelity, v. Sotah 18a, Kid. 27b.

(17) That she must not hold secret meetings with a certain man.

(18) With the man. V. Bah. Cur. edd. omit, ‘and then . . . herself’.

(20) The ‘water of bitterness’ (cf. Num. V, 18 and ibid. 17.

(21) If she secluded herself with the suspected man and if, in consequence of this, she is divorced by her husband. V. Sotah 23b, Kid. 27b, Sifre, Nasso.

(22) With the suspected man, during the period of her betrothal.

(24) As in this case where he married her, despite her intimacy with the suspected man during her betrothal which had caused her prohibition to him.

(25) Sotah 28a, 47b, Shebu. 5a, Kid. 27b.

(26) The betrothed spoken of,

(27) Since the woman is subjected to the test of the water though no cohabitation had taken place.

(28) In the absence of cohabitation. Had not the bridal chamber constituted the kinyan, which brought the woman within the category of marriage, she would not have been subject to the test to which a married woman only must submit. (Cf. Num. V, 19, being under thy husband).

(29) Among whom the Sotah is, of course, included. Cf. supra n. 5.

(31) מִתָּרְאֵה (rt. מִתָּרָא, ‘to be right’), a version the correctness of which has been upheld by refuting all objections raised against it.

(32) Cf. supra 57a where the reading is ‘Hinena’.

(34) The Mishnah cited by R. Shesheth.

(35) The husband.

(36) Since in her case also the cohabitation of the levir must precede that of the adulterer. Alternatively: Since she also is not subject to the test of the water.

(37) So that his cohabitation took place prior to that of the suspected adulterer, which was also preceded by the warning of the levir and followed by the bridal chamber but by no cohabitation; and the woman is submitted to the test of the water of bitterness in respect of her suspected act during her betrothal! Alternatively: Since in her case, unlike that of the betrothed, the kinyan of the bridal chamber is not applicable.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 58b
Why then, do you call her ‘a woman awaiting the decision of the levir’ [when such a woman] is in fact his proper wife, since Rab had stated, ‘kinyan is constituted in all respects’?1 — [The Mishnah is] in accordance with the view of Samuel who stated, ‘Kinyan is constituted only in respect of the things specified in the section’.2

Is not this3 adduced only as a reason and support for the opinion of Rab?4 And Rab, surely, had said that ‘Kinyan is constituted in all respects’?5 — Here we are concerned with a case where for instance he6 addressed to her a ma'amam,7 and it3 represents the view of Beth Shammai who maintain that a ma'amam constitutes a perfect kinyan.8 If so, she would be identical with the ‘betrothed woman’?9 — And according to your view, has not a ‘married woman’ and ‘one taken [by the levir]’ the same status?10 But [the explanation must be that] ‘a married woman’ refers to one's own wife, and ‘one taken [by the levir]’ refers to that of another man.11 So here also ‘betrothed’ means his own and ‘a woman awaiting the decision of the levir’, that of another.11

R. Papa said: It12 represents the view of the following Tanna.13 For it was taught: It is not permissible to warn a betrothed woman in order that she may be made to drink14 while she is betrothed. She may, however, be warned in order that she may be made to drink when she is already married.15 R. Nahman b. Isaac explained: By implication.16

R. Hanina sent [an instruction] in the name of R. Johanan: A levir who addressed a ma'amam to his yebamah, while he has a living brother, causes her disqualification from the eating of terumah17 even if he is a priest and she the daughter of a priest.18 According to whom?19 If it be suggested, according to R. Meir, it is possible [it might be objected that] R. Meir said that one that is subject to an illegitimate cohabitation20 is not permitted to eat terumah [only when the cohabitation is] Pentateuchally forbidden;21 did he, however, say [that the same law holds when the prohibition is only] Rabbinical? [Is it], however, [suggested that it was made] according to R. Eleazar and R. Simeon? [It may be objected]: If the eating of terumah is permitted to one who is subject to a cohabitation which is Pentateuchally forbidden, is there any need to speak of one which is only Rabbinically forbidden! When Rabin, however, came22 he stated: Where a levir addressed a ma'amam to his yebamah, all23 agree that she is permitted to eat terumah. If he has a profaned brother,24 all23 agree that she is not permitted to eat.25 They only differ where he26 gave her27 a letter of divorce.28 R. Johanan maintains that she may eat, and Resh Lakish maintains that she may not eat. ‘R. Johanan maintains that she may eat’, for even the statement of R. Meir who holds that she may not eat applies only to one subject of a Pentateuchally forbidden cohabitation; where, however, it is only Rabbinically forbidden she may eat. ‘And Resh Lakish maintains that she may not eat’ for even the statement of R. Eleazar and R. Simeon, who hold that she may eat, applies only to one who has elsewhere the right29 to confer the privilege of eating, but not in this case,30 since he has no right31 to confer the privilege elsewhere. And should you suggest that here also he has the right31 to confer the privilege of eating in the case where she returns,32 [it may be retorted that] one who returns32 severs her connection with him and resumes her relationship with her father's house;33 but this woman34 remains bound to him.35

IF THEY BECAME WIDOWS OR WERE DIVORCED etc. R. Hiyya b. Joseph enquired of Samuel: If a High priest betrothed a minor, who became adolescent36 during her betrothal with him,37

(1) supra 56a, and the woman is regarded as his wife even if the cohabitation was not intended to serve as a legal matrimonial kinyan.
(2) Cf. loc. cit. and notes.
(3) The Mishnah cited by R. Shesheth.
(4) Who, contrary to the opinion of Samuel, maintains that the bridal chamber does constitute kinyan with ineligible women (supra 57b).

(5) V. supra note 3.

(6) The levir.

(7) And then cohabited with her adulterously in her father-in-law's house, with no intention of effecting a legal kinyan. Alternatively: Only a ma'amor was addressed to her but no cohabitation at all took place. The cohabitation of the adulterer which, according to this interpretation, precedes that of the levir does not affect the legality of the water test since in any case the cohabitation of the first husband (the deceased brother) preceded.

(8) Supra 29b. The sister-in-law thus loses entirely her former status of ‘widow of a deceased brother’ and assumes that of a ‘betrothed woman’. Subsequent intercourse with her unless accompanied by the entry into the bridal chamber does not, therefore, change her status, as is the case where no ma'amor had been addressed, to that of a married woman. Her description, consequently, can only be that of ‘one awaiting the decision of the levir’.

(9) Whose case had been specifically mentioned. Why should the same law be mentioned twice?

(10) And both were nevertheless specified.

(11) I.e., his brother's widow whom he married.

(13) It being a case where the warning was given during betrothal, and the seclusion with the man took place after marriage and cohabitation. The water test is applied on the basis of that warning. Alternatively: The warning was given during betrothal and it was followed by the seclusion with the man, the test being applied after marriage. The previously cited deduction, that when the husband is not clear from iniquity the test is not admissible, is not accepted by this authority.

(14) The water of bitterness.

(15) Sotah 25a. The man in such a case is clear from iniquity. No proof may consequently be adduced from the Mishnah cited by R. Shesheth that the bridal chamber constitutes kinyan. Alternatively: This Tanna does not accept the deduction in respect of the husband's clearness from iniquity. (V. supra n. 4, end).

(16) מְכֻבָּד , v. Kid. 27b. The oath the woman is made to take at the drinking of the water of bitterness in respect of the days of her betrothal is not a direct oath but one added to that which she takes in connection with a suspected act after her marriage.

(17) Until marriage had been consummated.

(18) Because (v. infra) his brother might cohabit with her and thus cause her prohibition to marry either of them (v. supra 50b).

(19) Was R. Johanan's statement made.

(20) As, e.g., in this case, where either brother might marry her, while the cohabitation of one of them is Rabbinically forbidden.

(21) E.g., a widow to a High Priest.

(22) From Palestine to Babylon.

(23) R. Johanan as well as Resh Lakish.

(24) Halal (v. Glos.) whose cohabitation would disqualify her.

(25) Even though she is the daughter of a priest and even where the ma'amor had been addressed to her by a qualified priest, she is forbidden to eat terumah, owing to her being subject at least to one Pentateuchally forbidden cohabitation. Even R. Eleazar and R. Simeon who allow terumah in the case of a widow to a High priest do not allow it here since, unlike the High Priest who in cases other than that of the widow and the like is entitled to confer the right, the halal can never confer such a privilege upon anyone.

(26) A levir who was a priest.

(27) His yebamah who was the daughter of a priest.

(28) Which Rabbinically causes her prohibition to the levir, while Pentateuchally she is still awaiting cohabitation with him. She is thus awaiting a cohabitation which is Rabbinically forbidden.

(29) Through a similar act of betrothal.

(30) Where a letter of divorce was given.

(31) By means of a similar act of divorce.

(32) To the house of her father, if she was the daughter of a priest. Cf. Lev. XXII, 13.

(33) Her regaining the privilege of eating terumah is due to her relationship not with him but with her father's family.

(34) To whom the letter of divorce was given.
(35) Since a letter of divorce does not sever the levirate bond.

(36) v. infra p. 394 n. 7; perhaps of advanced age, when she is no more in possession of her full virgin powers (cf. Golds. a.l.). Such a woman is forbidden to a High priest by deduction from Lev. XXI, 13 And he shall take a wife in her virginity.

(37) Lit., ‘under him’.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 59a

what [is the law]: 1 Are we guided by the marriage or by the betrothal? — The other replied to him: You have learned it: IF THEY BECAME WIDOWS OR WERE DIVORCED AFTER MARRIAGE THEY REMAIN INELIGIBLE; IF AFTER BETROTHAL THEY BECOME ELIGIBLE. 4 The first said to him: With reference to rendering her a halalah, 5 I have no doubt that it is the forbidden cohabitation 6 that causes her to be a halalah. My question is only: What is implied by, And he shall take a wife in her virginity: 7 Is the ‘taking’ of betrothal required, 8 or is it the ‘taking’ of marriage that is required? 9 The other replied, You have learned this also: [A priest who] betrothed a widow, and was subsequently appointed to be a High Priest, may consummate the marriage 10 — There it is different because it is written, Shall he take to wife. 11 Here also it is written wife! 12 — Only one 13 but not two. And what is the reason? 14 — In the case of the one, 15 her body has undergone a change; 16 in that of the other her body underwent no change.

MISHNAH. A HIGH PRIEST SHALL NOT MARRY A WIDOW 17 WHETHER SHE BECAME A WIDOW AFTER A BETROTHAL OR AFTER A MARRIAGE. HE SHALL NOT MARRY ONE WHO IS ADOLESCENT. 18 R. ELEAZAR AND R. SIMEON PERMIT HIM TO MARRY ONE WHO IS ADOLESCENT, 18 BUT HE MAY NOT MARRY ONE WHO IS WOUNDED. 19

GEMARA. Our Rabbis taught: A widow . . . shall he not take, 17 whether she became a widow after a betrothal or after a marriage. Is not this obvious? 20 — It might have been assumed that [the meaning of] widow 21 is to be inferred from widow 22 in the case of Tamar; as there 22 it was one after marriage, so here 21 also it is one after marriage; hence we were taught [that any widow was meant]. But might it not be suggested that it is indeed so? 23 — [It is compared] to a divorced woman: 24 As ‘divorced woman’ 24 [includes any divorcee] whether after betrothal or after marriage, 25 so also ‘widow’ 24 [includes any widow] whether after betrothal or after marriage.

HE SHALL NOT MARRY ONE WHO IS ADOLESCENT. Our Rabbis taught: And he shall take a wife in her virginity 26 excludes one who is adolescent, whose virginity is ended; so R. Meir. R. Eleazar and R. Simeon permit the marriage of one who is adolescent. On what principle do they differ? — R. Meir is of the opinion that virgin 27 implies even [one who retains] some of her virginity; her virginity 28 implies only one who retains all her virginity; 29 in her virginity 30 implies only [when previous intercourse with her took place] in the natural manner, 31 but not when in an unnatural manner. 32 R. Eleazar and R. Simeon, however, are of the opinion that virgin would have implied a perfect virgin; her virginity implies even [one who retains] only part of her virginity; 33 in her virginity implies only one whose entire virginity is intact, 34 irrespective of whether [previous intercourse with her was] of a natural or unnatural character. 35

Rab Judah stated in the name of Rab: A woman who was subjected to unnatural intercourse is disqualified from marrying a priest. 36 Raba raised an objection: And she shall be his wife, 37 applies to a woman eligible to marry him. This excludes [the marriage of] a widow 38 to a High Priest, 39 of a divorced woman 38 and a haluzah 38 to a common priest. Now, how is one to understand [the outrage]? 40 If it be suggested that it was one of natural intercourse, what [it may be asked] was the object of pointing to her widowhood 41 when [her prohibition] could be inferred from the fact that she had had carnal intercourse with a man? 42 Must it not consequently [be assumed to be] a case of unnatural intercourse; and the only reason 43 [why the woman is forbidden 44 is] because she is a widow, and not because she had had carnal intercourse!45

(1) May he marry her despite her advanced age?
(2) When she was already of age and consequently forbidden to him.
(3) When she was still permitted.
(4) From which it appears that, in respect of those who are ineligible to marry priests, marriage is the main factor. Had not the marriage to be taken into consideration a widow, for instance, who was betrothed to a High Priest would also be ineligible after his death.
(5) ‘Profaned’ and forbidden to a priest.
(6) i.e., the consummation of marriage.
(7) Lev. XXI, 13.
(8) And as at that time she was eligible he may now marry her.
(9) As by that time she is already forbidden, he may not marry her, despite their permitted betrothal.
(10) Infra 61a, which proves that betrothal is the main factor.
(11) Lev. XXI, 14. From the superfluous word wife it is deduced (v. infra 61a) that in the case mentioned the High Priest may consummate the marriage. This, however, supplies no answer to the question under consideration.
(13) Deduction may be made from the term ‘wife’.
(14) Lit., ‘what do you see’? Why should the deduction be made to permit the marriage of the widow to a High Priest and not that of the minor who became adolescent?
(15) The minor who became of age.
(16) And she may, therefore, be regarded as a different person.
(17) V. Lev. XXI, 14.
(18) one over twelve years and six months of age. Cf. supra p. 393, n. 5.
(19) lit., ‘struck by wood’, one who lost her hymen as the result of a blow.
(20) The expression widow surely does not imply any distinction between the one and the other!
(21) Spoken of in connection with a High Priest (Lev. XXI, 14).
(22) Gen. XXXVIII, 11.
(23) That only one after marriage was meant, as in the case of Tamar.
(24) Spoken of in the same context in connection with a High Priest (Lev. XXI, 14).
(25) So Yalkut. Cur. edd. reverse the order.
(27) , one over twelve years and six months of age. Cf. supra p. 393, n. 5.
(28) lit., ‘struck by wood’, one who lost her hymen as the result of a blow.
(29) Which excludes the one who is adolescent, whose virginity has ended.
(30) , (Lev. XXI, 13).
(31) Is she forbidden to a High Priest.
(32) The superfluous ה (= in), in , excludes unnatural intercourse, whereby ‘virginity’ is not affected.
(33) Which includes the one who is adolescent.
(34) Is permitted to be married by a High priest.
(35) Even if it was unnatural she is forbidden, unless her virginity remained completely intact. Cf. supra n. 7. As, according to R. Eleazar and R. Simeon, one who is adolescent is permitted it was necessary to have the Scriptural text to exclude this case. According to R. Meir, however, who excludes one who is adolescent, there is no need any more to exclude this case which is easily inferred a minori ad majus from the former.
(36) i.e., a High Priest who is permitted to marry a virgin only.
(37) Deut. XXII, 29, referring to a virgin who had been outraged.
(38) After her betrothal.
(39) If it was he who committed the outrage.
(40) If committed by a High Priest.
(41) Lit., ‘on account of widow’.
(42) With the High Priest himself, who is forbidden to marry an outraged or seduced woman even if he himself had committed the offence.
To the High Priest.

Which proves that unnatural intercourse does not cause a woman to be forbidden to marry a High Priest. How then could Rab state that a woman in such circumstances is forbidden?

_Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 59b_

— This represents the view of R. Meir, while Rab holds the same view as R. Eleazar. If [Rab holds the same view] as R. Eleazar, what was the object of pointing to her previous carnal intercourse when [her prohibition] could have been inferred from the fact that she was a harlot? R. Eleazar having stated that an unmarried man who cohabited with an unmarried woman with no matrimonial intention renders her thereby a harlot — R. Joseph replied. When, for instance, the woman was subjected to intercourse with a beast, where the reason of ‘previous carnal intercourse may be applied but not that of harlot. If she is a be’ulah she must also be a harlot; and if she is not a harlot she cannot be a be’ulah either! And were you to reply: This case is similar to that of a wounded woman, [it may be pointed out] that if [the disqualification should be extended to] unnatural intercourse also, you will find no woman eligible to marry a [High Priest] since there is not one who has not been in some way wounded by a splinter! No, said R. Zera, in respect of a minor who made a declaration of refusal.

R. Shimi b. Hiyya stated: A woman who had intercourse with a beast is eligible to marry a priest. Likewise it was taught: A woman who had intercourse with that which is no human being, though she is in consequence subject to the penalty of stoning, is nevertheless permitted to marry a priest.

When R. Dimi came he related: It once happened at Haitalu that while a young woman was sweeping the floor a village dog covered her from the rear, and Rabbi permitted her to marry a priest. Samuel said: Even a High Priest. But was there a High Priest in the days of Rabbi? — Rather, [Samuel meant]: Fit for a High Priest.

Raba of Parzakaia said to R. Ashi: Whence is derived the following statement which the Rabbis made: Harlotry is not applicable to bestial intercourse? — It is written, Thou shalt not bring the hire of a harlot, or the price of a dog, and yet we learned that the hire of a dog and the price of a harlot are permitted because it is said, Even both these, two only but not four.

Our Rabbis taught: [A High Priest] shall not marry the woman he himself has outraged or seduced. If, however, he married her, the marriage is valid. He shall not marry a woman whom another man has outraged or seduced. If he did marry her, the child, said R. Eliezer b. Jacob, is profaned: but the Sages said: The child is legitimate.

‘If, however, he married her, the marriage is valid’. Said R. Huna in the name of Rab: But he must put her aside by a letter of divorce. What, then, is the explanation of the statement ‘If, however, he married her, the marriage is valid’? — R. Aha b. Jacob replied: It was meant to imply

2. Lit., ‘this, according to whom’?
5. As a reason for prohibition.
6. Who is forbidden not only to a High Priest but also to a common priest (v. Lev. XXI, 7). Why, then, did Rab refer to a High Priest only?
Rab's reason of 'previous carnal intercourse was necessary. A term which is not applicable to bestial intercourse. V. infra.

Rab's reason of 'previous carnal intercourse' was necessary.

Mema'enet, v. Glos. Unnatural intercourse with her by her husband places the minor in the status of be'ulah (v. Glos.) but not in that of harlot, while her refusal to live with him does not give her the status of divorcee or widow but that of mema'enet. Hence the necessity for Rab's statement that such a minor also is forbidden to marry a High Priest.

Even a High Priest, The result of such intercourse being regarded as a mere wound, and the opinion that does not regard an accidentally injured hymen as a disqualification does not so regard such an intercourse either.

that he pays no fine\(^1\) in the case of a seduced woman.\(^2\)

R. Gebiha of Be Kathi\(^3\) came and repeated the reported ruling\(^4\) in the presence of R. Ashi, whereupon the other said to him: Surely both Rab and R. Johanan stated ‘[a High Priest] must not marry a woman who is adolescent\(^5\) or "wounded",\(^6\) but if he married her, the marriage is valid’, which clearly proves [that he may continue to live with the woman because in any case] she would ultimately have become adolescent and would ultimately have been ‘wounded’ by living with\(^7\) him; here also\(^8\) [she should be permitted to live with him because] ultimately she would have become a be'ulah by living with\(^7\) him! — This is a difficulty.

‘He shall not marry a woman whom another man has outraged or seduced. If he did marry her, the child, said R. Eliezer\(^9\) b.Jacob, is profaned; but the Sages said: The child is fit’.\(^10\) Said R. Huna in the name of Rab: The halachah is in agreement with R. Eliezer b. Jacob; and so said R. Giddal in the name of Rab: The halachah is in agreement with R. Eliezer b. Jacob. Others say: R. Huna stated in the name of Rab. What is R. Eliezer b. Jacob's reason?\(^11\) — He is of the same opinion as R.
Eleazar. But is the former of the same opinion as the latter? Surely we have an established tradition that ‘the teaching of R. Eliezer b. Jacob is small in quantity, but select’, while in this case R. Amram stated that the halachah is not in accordance with R. Eleazar! — This is a difficulty.

R. Ashi explained: They differ [on the question whether the offspring] of a union forbidden by a positive commandment is deemed to be a halal. R. Eliezer b. Jacob is of the opinion [that the offspring] of a union forbidden by a positive commandment is deemed to be a halal while the Rabbis are of the opinion that the offspring of a union forbidden by a positive commandment is no halal. What is R. Eliezer b. Jacob's reason? — Because it is written, A widow, or one divorced, or a profaned woman, or a harlot, these shall he not take,’ but a virgin etc., and this is followed by the Scriptural injunction, And he shall not profane his seed among his people, which refers to all. And the Rabbis? — [By the expression] these the context is broken up. But R. Eliezer b. Jacob maintains that the expression, these, serves the purpose of excluding the menstruant.

Whose view is represented in the following statement wherein it was taught: [Only the offspring] of these is to be regarded a halal but no offspring of a menstruant is to be deemed a halal. — Whose view? That of R. Eliezer b. Jacob. But on the view of R. Eliezer b. Jacob, the expression these should have been written at the end! — This is a difficulty.

Our Rabbis taught: For a betrothed sister, R. Meir and R. Judah said, [a common priest] may defile himself. R. Jose and R. Simeon said: He may not defile himself for her. For [a sister who was] outraged or seduced, all agree that he may not defile himself. As to one ‘wounded’, R. Simeon says he may not defile himself for her; for R. Simeon maintains that he may defile himself for one who is fit for a High Priest, but he may not defile himself for one who is not fit for a High Priest. For one who is adolescent, all agree that he may defile himself.

What is R. Meir's and R. Judah's reason? — They make the following exposition: And for his sister a virgin excludes one who had been outraged or seduced. It might be assumed that one who was ‘wounded’ is also to be excluded. Hence it was specifically stated, That hath had no husband, only she whose condition is due to a man [is excluded] but not one whose condition is not due to a man. That is near, includes a betrothed [sister]; unto him, includes a sister who is adolescent.

What need was there for a Scriptural text in this case? Surely R. Meir stated, ‘virgin implies even [one who retains] some of her virginity’! — It was required, because it might have been assumed that the expression of virgin shall be deduced from virgin elsewhere; as there it refers to a na'arah only, so here also it refers to a na'arah only, hence we were taught [that the case here is different]. And what are the reasons of R. Jose and R. Simeon? — They make the following exposition: And for his sister a virgin excludes one who has been outraged, seduced or wounded; that hath had no, excludes one who is betrothed; that is near, includes a betrothed who had been divorced; unto him, includes one who is adolescent. ‘That is near, includes a betrothed who had been divorced’;

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 60b

but, surely, R. Simeon said, ‘He may defile himself for one who is fit for a High Priest, but may not defile himself for one who is not fit for a High Priest’! — There it is different, because the All Merciful has included her [by the expression] near. If so, the ‘wounded’ also should be included! — Near implies one and not two. And what [reason for this] do you see? — To the body of the one something had been done while to that of the other nothing had been done.

As to R. Jose, since his colleague\(^6\) had left him,\(^6\) it may be inferred that in respect of the ‘wounded’, he himself is of the same opinion as R. Meir.\(^7\) Whence, however, does he derive it? — From That hath had no man. But deduction,\(^8\) surely, had already been made\(^6\) from this text! — One\(^8\) is deduced from That hath had no and the other\(^10\) from man.\(^11\)

"Unto him", includes one who is adolescent’. But surely R. Simeon stated that ‘virgin’ implied a perfect virgin!\(^12\) — His reason there is also derived from here, because he makes the following exposition: since [the Scriptural text], ‘unto him’, was required to include one who is adolescent, it is to be inferred that ‘virgin’ implies a perfect virgin.

It was taught: R. Simeon b. Yohai stated: A proselyte who is under the age of three years and one day is permitted to marry a priest,\(^13\) for it is said, But all the women children that have not known man by lying with him, keep alive for yourselves\(^14\), and Phinehas\(^15\) surely was with them. And the Rabbis?\(^16\) — [These were kept alive] as bondmen and bondwomen.\(^17\) If so,\(^18\) a proselyte whose age is three years and one day\(^19\) should also be permitted! — [The prohibition is to be explained] in accordance with R. Huna. For R. Huna pointed out a contradiction: It is written, Kill every woman that hath known man by lying with him,\(^20\) but if she hath not known, save her alive; from this it may be inferred that children are to be kept alive whether they have known or have not known [a man]; and, on the other hand, it is also written. But all the women children, that have not known man by lying with him, keep alive for yourselves,\(^14\) but do not spare them if they have known. Consequently\(^21\) it must be said that Scripture speaks of one who is fit\(^22\) for cohabitation.

It was also taught likewise: And every woman that hath known man;\(^20\) Scripture speaks of one who is fit\(^23\) for cohabitation. You say, ‘Of one who is fit for cohabitation’; perhaps it is not so but of one who had actual intercourse? — As Scripture stated, But all women children, that have not known man by lying with him,\(^24\) it must be concluded that Scripture speaks of one who is fit for cohabitation.\(^23\)

Whence did they know?\(^25\) — R. Hana\(^26\) b. Bizna replied in the name of R. Simeon the Pious: They were made to pass before the frontplate.\(^27\) If the face of anyone turned pale\(^28\) it was known that she was fit for cohabitation; if it did not turn pale\(^28\) it was known that she was unfit for cohabitation.

R. Nahman said: Dropsy is a manifestation of lewdness.

Similarly, it is said, And they found among the inhabitants of Jabesh-gilead four hundred young virgins, that had not known man by lying with him;\(^29\) whence did they know it?\(^30\) R. Kahana replied: They made them sit upon the mouth of a wine-cask. [Through anyone who had] had previous intercourse, the odour penetrated; through a virgin, its odour did not penetrate. They should have been made to pass before the frontplate!\(^31\) — R. Kahana son of R. Nathan replied: It is written, for acceptance,\(^32\) for acceptance but not for punishment. If so, the same should have applied at Midian also!\(^33\) R. Ashi replied: It is written, ‘unto them’, implying unto them\(^34\) for acceptance but not for punishment; unto idolaters,\(^35\) however, even for punishment\(^36\)

R. Jacob b. Idi stated in the name of R. Joshua b. Levi: The halachah is in agreement with R. Simeon b. Yohai.\(^37\) Said R. Zera to R. Jacob b. Idi: Did you hear this\(^37\) explicitly or did you learn it by a deduction? What [could be the] deduction? — As R. Joshua b. Levi related: There was a certain town in the Land of Israel the legitimacy of whose inhabitants was disputed, and Rabbi sent R. Romanos who conducted an enquiry and found in it the daughter of a proselyte who was under the age of three years and one day,\(^38\) and Rabbi declared her eligible to live with a priest.\(^39\) The other\(^40\) replied: I heard it explicitly. And what [matters it] if it\(^42\) was learned by deduction?\(^43\) — It is possible that there it was different; since the marriage had already taken place he sanctioned it; for, indeed, both Rab and R. Johanan stated: A priest may not marry one who is adolescent or ‘wounded’, but if already married, he may continue to live with her. How now! There it is quite correct [to sanction the marriage since in any case] she would ultimately become adolescent while she will be with him, and she would also ultimately become a be'ulah while with him; but here, would she ultimately become a harlot while with him? R. Safra taught [that he arrived at it] by deduction, and, having raised the difficulty, answered it in the same way.

A certain priest married a proselyte who was under the age of three years and one day. Said R. Nahman b. Isaac to him: What [do you mean by] this? — The other replied: Because R. Jacob b. Idi stated in the name of R. Joshua b. Levi that the halachah is in agreement with R. Simeon b. Yohai. 'Go', the first said, ‘and arrange for her release, or else I will pull R. Jacob b. Idi out of your ear’.

It was taught: And so did R. Simeon b. Yohai state

The incident in Palestine.

Even if she were now virgo intacta.

The union is consequently allowed to remain.

Which is the prohibition under which a priest may not marry the proselyte mentioned.

Obviously not. Hence, it may well be concluded that were she not allowed to marry a priest, the union would have had to be dissolved even after marriage had taken place.

Mentioned supra. that an ex post facto may be different.

Had it not been permitted originally the marriage would have had to be annulled even ex post facto.

I.e., on what authority did you contract the marriage.

V. supra p. 403. n. 13.

He would place him under the ban and thus compel him to carry out his decision which is contrary to that of R. Jacob b. Idi.

that the graves of idolaters do not impart levitical uncleanness by an ohel, for it is said, And ye My sheep the sheep of My pasture, are men; you are called men but the idolaters are not called men.

An objection was raised: And the persons were sixteen thousand! — This is due to [the mention of] cattle. Wherein are more than six-score thousand persons that cannot discern between their right and their left hand! — This is due [to the mention of] cattle. Whosoever hath killed any person, and whosoever hath touched any slain, purify yourselves! — One of the Israelites might have been slain. And the Rabbis — [Scripture states]. There lacketh not one man of us. And R. Simeon b. Yohai? — There lacketh not one man of us, through indulgence in sin.

Rabina replied: Granted that Scripture excluded them from imparting uncleanness through an ohel, because of the written text, When a man dieth in the tent, did Scripture also exclude them from [imparting uncleanness by] touch and carriage?

Mishnah. [A priest who betrothed a widow, and was subsequently appointed high priest, may consummate the marriage. It once happened with Joshua b. Gamala that he betrothed Martha the daughter of Boethus, and the king appointed him high priest, and he, nevertheless, consummated the marriage.

If one awaiting the decision of the levir became subject to a common priest who was subsequently appointed high priest, [the latter], though he already addressed to her a ma'amar, must not consummate the marriage.

Gemara. Our Rabbis taught: Whence is it deduced that [a priest] who betrothed a widow and was afterwards appointed High Priest may consummate the marriage? It is specifically stated in Scripture, Shall he take to wife. If so, [the same law should apply to] a yebamah awaiting the
IT ONCE HAPPENED TO JOSUA etc. He APPOINTED HIM but he was not elected! Said R. Joseph: I see here a conspiracy; for R. Assi, in fact, related that Martha the daughter of Boethus brought to King Jannai a tarkab of denarii before he gave an appointment to Joshua b. Gamala among the High Priests.

MISHNAH. A HIGH PRIEST WHOSE BROTHER DIED MUST SUBMIT TO HALIZAH BUT MAY NOT CONTRACT THE LEVIRATE MARRIAGE.

GEMARA. He lays down a general rule implying that there is no difference whether [the yebamah became a widow] after betrothal or after marriage! One can well understand [the case of the widow] after marriage, [since marriage with her is forbidden by] a positive as well as by a negative commandment, and no positive commandment may override a negative and a positive commandment; but [in the case of a widow] after betrothal, the positives should override the negative commandment! — The first act of cohabitation was forbidden as a preventive measure against the second act of cohabitation.

MISHNAH. A COMMON PRIEST SHALL NOT MARRY A WOMAN INCAPABLE OF PROCREATION UNLESS HE HAD ALREADY A WIFE OR CHILDREN. R. JUDAH SAID: EVEN THOUGH HE HAS HAD A WIFE AND CHILDREN HE SHALL NOT MARRY A WOMAN INCAPABLE OF PROCREATION, SINCE SUCH [IS INCLUDED IN THE TERM OF] HARLOT MENTIONED IN THE TORAH BUT THE SAGES SAID: THE TERM HARLOT IMPLIES ONLY A FEMALE PROSELYTE, FREED BONDMAID AND ONE WHO HAS BEEN SUBJECT TO MERETRICIOUS INTERCOURSE. GEMARA. Said the Exilarch to R. Huna: What is the reason? Obviously because of the duty of the propagation of the race; are, then, only priests commanded concerning the propagation of the race while Israelites are not commanded? The other replied: Because it was desired to state in the final clause, R. JUDAH SAID: EVEN THOUGH HE HAS HAD A WIFE

(3) (Adam), in respect of levitical uncleanness by ohel. The expression is also used in the Pentateuchal text dealing with the laws of the uncleanliness of objects found in a tent in which lay a corpse. V. Num, XIX, 14ff. [This is held by R. Simeon b. Yohai to denote, as distinct from the other terms for ‘man’ (א軟, נבר, נון), only an Israelite who, as a worshipper of the true God, can be said to have been like Adam created in the image of God. (Cf. Gen. I, 27 and V, I, where the Heb. text has in each case Adam for ‘man’). Idol worshippers having marred the Divine image forfeit all claim to this appelation. V. also B.M. (8) Num. XXXI, 19, speaking of the slain Midianites; which proves that the corpses of idolaters also impart levitical uncleanness!

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 61b

AND CHILDREN HE SHALL NOT MARRY A WOMAN INCAPABLE OF PROCREATION, SINCE SUCH [IS INCLUDED IN THE TERM OF] HARLOT MENTIONED IN THE TORAH. Since priests only were commanded concerning the harlot while Israelites were not so commanded, therefore PRIEST only was mentioned.

Said R. Huna: What is R. Judah’s reason? — Since it is written, And they shall eat, and not have enough, they shall commit harlotry and shall not increase,^1 any cohabitation which results in no increase is nothing but meretricious intercourse.

It was taught: R. Eliezer stated, A priest shall not marry a minor. Said R. Hisda to Rabbah: Go and consider this matter,^2 for in the evening R. Huna will question you on the subject. When he went out he considered the point [and came to the conclusion that] R. Eliezer was of the same opinion as R. Meir and also of the same Opinion as R. Judah. ‘He is of the same opinion as R. Meir’ who takes exceptional cases^3 into consideration;^4 and ‘also of the same opinion as R. Judah’, who holds that a woman incapable of procreation is regarded as a harlot. But does he^5 hold the same opinion as R. Meir? Surely it was taught: A minor, whether male or female, may neither perform, nor submit to halizah, nor contract levirate marriage; so R; Meir. They said to R. Meir: You spoke well [when you ruled], may neither perform, nor submit to halizah’, since in the Pentateuchal section\(^7\) man was written,\(^8\) and we also draw a comparison between woman and man.\(^9\) What, however, is the reason why they may not contract levirate marriage? He replied: Because a minor male might be found to be a saris;\(^10\) a minor female might be found to be incapable of procreation; and thus the law of incest would be violated.\(^11\) And it was also taught: A minor female may contract the levirate marriage\(^12\) but may not perform halizah;\(^13\) so R. Eliezer!\(^14\)

And does he hold the same opinion as R. Judah? Surely it was taught: Zonah\(^15\) implies, as her name [indicates, a faithless wife];\(^16\) so R. Eliezer. R. Akiba said: Zonah implies one who is a prostitute.\(^17\) R. Mathia b. Heresh said: Even a woman whose husband, while going\(^18\) to arrange for her drinking,\(^19\) cohabited with her on the way,\(^20\) is rendered a zonah. R. Judah said: Zonah implies one who is incapable of procreation.\(^21\) And the Sages said: Zonah is none other than a female proselyte, a freed bondwoman, and one who has been subjected to any meretricious intercourse. R. Eleazar\(^22\) said: An unmarried man who had intercourse with an unmarried woman, with no matrimonial intent, renders her thereby a zonah!\(^23\) No, said R. Adda b. Ahabah, the reference here\(^24\) is to\(^25\) a High Priest. For when does he acquire her [as his lawful wife]? Only when she grows up;\(^26\) but, then, she is already a be’ulah.\(^27\) Said Raba:\(^28\) What thoughtlessness!\(^29\) If her father had arranged her betrothal, then [the High Priest] would have acquired her from that very moment;\(^30\) and if she herself had accepted the betrothal, is this\(^31\) then the view of R. Eliezer only\(^32\) and not that of the Rabbis!\(^33\) No, explained Raba, it\(^34\) refers indeed to a common priest, but [the prohibition to marry the minor] is a precaution against the possibility of her seduction\(^35\) while living with him. If so, [the same should apply to] an Israelite also! — The seduction of a minor is regarded as an outrage, and an outraged woman is permitted in the case of an Israelite.\(^36\) R. Papa replied: [It\(^34\) speaks] of a High Priest, and it represents the opinion of the following Tanna. For it was taught: A virgin;\(^37\) as one might assume it to mean a minor, it was explicitly stated wife. If only ‘wife’ [had been written], it might have been assumed to mean one who is adolescent,\(^38\) hence it was explicitly stated, ‘a virgin’. How, then [is the text to be understood]? One who has emerged from her minority but has not yet attained adolescence.\(^39\)

R. Nahman b. Isaac explained.\(^40\) It is the opinion of the following Tanna. For it was taught: A virgin;\(^37\) the only meaning of ‘virgin’ is damsel;\(^41\) and so it is said in Scripture, And the damsel was very fair to look upon, a virgin.\(^42\) ‘R. Eleazar said: An unmarried man who had intercourse with an unmarried woman, with no matrimonial intent, renders her thereby a zonah.’ R. Amram said: The halachah is not in agreement with the opinion of R. Eleazar.

MISHNAH. A MAN SHALL NOT ABSTAIN FROM THE PERFORMANCE OF THE DUTY OF THE PROPAGATION OF THE RACE\(^44\) UNLESS HE ALREADY HAS CHILDREN. [AS TO THE NUMBER]. BETH SHAMMAI RULED: TWO MALES, AND BETH HILLEL RULED: MALE AND A FEMALE, FOR IT IS STATED IN SCRIPTURE, MALE AND FEMALE CREATED HE THEM.\(^45\)

GEMARA. [This implies] if he has children, he may abstain from performing the duty of propagation but not from that of living with a wife.\(^46\) This provides support for a statement R. Nahman made in the name of Samuel who ruled that although a man may have many children he must not remain without a wife, for it is said in the Scriptures, It is not good that the man should be alone.\(^47\)

Others read: [This\(^48\) implies] if he has children he may abstain from performing the duty of propagation and also from that of living with a wife. May it, then, be said that this presents an objection against the statement R. Nahman made in the name of Samuel?\(^49\) — No; if he has no children he must marry a woman capable of procreation; and if he has children he may marry a woman who is incapable of procreation. What is the practical difference? — In respect of selling a Scroll of the Law for the sake of children. BETH SHAMMAI Ruled: TWO MALES. What is Beth Shammai's reason? We make an inference from Moses, in connection with whom it is written, The sons of Moses: Gershom and Eliezer. And Beth Hillel? — We infer from the creation of the world. Let Beth Shammai also infer from the creation of the world! — The possible cannot be inferred

(12) Though the act of a minor has no validity, she may contract the marriage, since the commandment of the levirate marriage will be fulfilled as soon as she becomes of age.
(13) Since her action has no validity and cannot, therefore, set her free to marry a stranger.
(14) How then, could R. Eliezer be said to hold the same view as R. Meir?
(15) E.V. harlot (Lev. XXI, 7) who is forbidden to marry a priest (ibid.).

As regards the duty of marriage. In either case one must not remain single.

Only a man who has no children must sell even such a precious object if thereby he is enabled to marry a woman capable of procreation. If he has children such a sale is forbidden, and he must contract a less expensive marriage with an old or sterile woman.

I Chron. XXIII, 15.
from the impossible.¹ Let Beth Hillel, then, make the inference from Moses! — They can answer you: Moses did it with His consent.² For it was taught: Moses did three things on his own initiative and his opinion coincided with that of the Omnipresent. He separated himself from his wife,³ broke the Tables of Testimony⁴ and added one day.⁵

‘He separated himself from his wife’; what exposition did he make?⁶ — He said, ‘If to the Israelites, with whom the Shechinah spoke only for a while and for whom a definite time was fixed, the Torah nevertheless said, Come not near a woman,⁷ how much more so to me, who am liable to be spoken to at any moment and for whom no definite time has been fixed’. And his view coincided with that of the Omnipresent; for it is said, Go say to them: Return ye to your tents; but as for thee, stand thou here by Me.⁸

‘He broke the Tables of Testimony’; what exposition did he make?⁹ — He said, ‘If of the Paschal lamb, which is only one of the six hundred and thirteen commandments, the Torah said, There shall no alien eat thereof,¹⁰ how much more should this apply to the entire Torah when all Israel are apostates’. And his view coincided with that of the Omnipresent; for it is written, Which thou didst break¹¹ and Resh Lakish explained: The Holy One, blessed be He, said to Moses, ‘I thank you for breaking them’.¹²

‘He added one day’ on his own initiative. What exposition did he make?¹³ — ‘As it is written, And sanctify them to-day and to-morrow¹⁴ [It implies that] to-day shall be the same as to-morrow; as to-morrow includes the previous night¹⁵ so to-day must include the previous night. As, however, to-day's previous night has already passed away,¹⁶ it must be inferred that two days exclusive of to-day must be observed’. And his view coincided with that of the Omnipresent, for the Revelation did not take place¹⁷ before the Sabbath.

It was taught: R. Nathan stated: Beth Shammai ruled: Two males and two females;¹⁸ and Beth Hillel ruled: A male and a female.¹⁹ Said R. Huna: What is the reason which R. Nathan assigns for the opinion of Beth Shammai? Because it is written, And again she bore his brother Abel [which implies:] Abel and his sister; Cain and his sister.²⁰ And it is also written, For God hath appointed me another seed instead of Abel;²¹ for Cain slew him.²² And the Rabbis? She was merely expressing her gratitude.²³

Elsewhere it was taught: R. Nathan stated that Beth Shammai ruled: A male and a female;²⁴ and Beth Hillel ruled: Either a male or a female.²⁵

Said Raba: What is the reason which R. Nathan assigns for the view of Beth Hillel? — Because it is said, He created it not a waste, He formed it to be inhabited,²⁶ and he has obviously helped it to be inhabited.

It was stated: If a man had children while he was an idolater and then he became a proselyte, he has fulfilled, R. Johanan said, the duty of propagation of the race; and Resh Lakish said: He has not fulfilled the duty of propagation of the race. ‘R. Johanan said: He has fulfilled the duty of propagation’, since he had children. ‘And Resh Lakish said: He has not fulfilled the duty of propagation’ because one who became a proselyte is like a child newly born.

And they²⁸ follow their views.²⁹ For it was stated: If a man had children while he was an idolater and then he became a proselyte, he has, R. Johanan said, no firstborn in respect of inheritance,³⁰ since he already had the first-fruits of his strength.³¹ Resh Lakish, however, said: He has a firstborn son in respect of inheritance, for a man who became a proselyte is like a child newly born.
And [both statements were] necessary. For if the first only had been stated [it might have been assumed that] only in that statement did R. Johanan maintain his view, since formerly he was also subject to the obligation of propagation, but in respect of inheritance, since [the proselyte's former children] are not entitled to heirship, it might have been presumed that he agrees with Resh Lakish. And were only the second stated [it might have been assumed that] only in that did Resh Lakish maintain his view but that in the former he agrees with R. Johanan. [Hence both were] necessary.

R. Johanan raised an objection against Resh Lakish. At that time Berodach-baladan the son of Baladan, King of Babylon etc. — The other replied: While they are idolaters they have legally recognized ancestry, but when they become proselytes they have no longer any legally recognized ancestry.

Rab said: All agree that a slave has no legally recognized relatives, since it is written, Abide ye here with the ass, people who are like the ass.

An objection was raised: Now Ziba had fifteen sons and twenty servants! — R. Aba b. Jacob replied: Like a young bullock. If so, [the same reply could be given] there also! — There it is different, since Scripture mentioned his own name as well as his father's name, while here [the son's names] were not specified. If you prefer I might say: They were elsewhere ascribed to their father and their father's father; as it is written, And King Asa sent them to Ben-hadad, the son of Tabrimmon, the son of Hezion, the King of Aram, that dwelt at Damascus, saying.

It was stated: If a man had children and they died, he has fulfilled, said R. Huna, the duty of propagation. R. Johanan said: He has not fulfilled it. ‘R. Huna said: He fulfilled’ because [he follows the tradition] of R. Assi. For R. Assi stated: The Son of David will not come before all the souls in Guf will have been disposed of, since it is said, For the spirit that unwrappeth itself is from Me etc. And ‘R. Johanan said: He has not fulfilled the duty of propagation’ because we require [the fulfilment of the text] He formed it to be inhabited, which is not the case here. An objection was raised:

(1) It would have been impossible for the human race to propagate had not one of each sex been created. For the preservation of the race, however, it is not necessary for every man to have children of both sexes.
(2) God approved of Moses’ action. No inference for other people may be drawn from an exceptional case.

day which was incomplete.

(54) The children being dead.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 62b

Grandchildren are like children! — This was taught only in respect of supplementing.

An objection was raised: Grandchildren are like children. If one of them died or was found to be a saris the father has not fulfilled the duty of propagation. Is not this a refutation against R. Huna? — It is indeed a refutation.

‘Grandchildren are like children’. Abaye intended to say: A grandson for a son and a granddaughter for a daughter, and certainly a grandson for a daughter; but not a granddaughter for a
But Raba said to him: We only require [the fulfilment of the text] He formed it to be inhabited, which is the case here.

All, at any rate, agree that two children of one are not sufficient. But [are they] not? The Rabbis surely said to R. Shesheth, ‘Marry a wife and beget children’, and he answered them, ‘My daughters’ children are mine’! — There he was merely putting them off, because R. Shesheth became impotent owing to the long discourses of R. Huna.

Said Rabbah to Raba b. Mari: Whence the statement made by the Rabbis that grandchildren are like children? If it be suggested that it is deduced from the Scriptural text, The daughters are my daughters and the children are my children, would then [it may be objected] the same [meaning be given to the text] And the flocks are my flocks? But [the meaning there is obviously] ‘which you have acquired from me’, so here also [the meaning may be], ‘which you have acquired from me’! The deduction is rather made from the following: And afterwards Hezron went to the daughter of Machir the father of Gilead, . . . and she bore him Segub. Out of Machir came down lawgivers, and furthermore it is written, Judah is my lawgiver.

Our Mishnah cannot represent the opinion of R. Joshua. For it was taught: R. Joshua said, If a man married in his youth, he should marry again in his old age; if he had children in his youth, he should also have children in his old age; for it said, In the morning sow thy seed and in the evening withhold not thine hand; for thou knowest not which shall prosper, whether this or that, or whether they shall both be alike good. R. Akiba said: If a man studied Torah in his youth, he should also study it in his old age; if he had disciples in his youth, he should also have disciples in his old age. For it is said, In the morning sow thy seed etc. It was said that R. Akiba had twelve thousand pairs of disciples, from Gabbatha to Antipatris, and all of them died at the same time because they did not treat each other with respect. The world remained desolate until R. Akiba came to our Masters in the South and taught the Torah to them. These were R. Meir, R. Judah, R. Jose, R. Simeon and R. Eleazar b. Shammua; and it was they who revived the Torah at that time. A Tanna taught: All of them died between Passover and Pentecost. R. Hama b. Abba or, it might be said, R. Hiyya b. Abin said: All of them died a cruel death. What was it?-R. Nahman replied: Croup.

R. Mattena stated: The halachah is in agreement with R. Joshua.

R. Tanhum stated in the name of R. Hanilai: Any man who has no wife lives without joy, without blessing, and without goodness. ‘Without joy’. for it is written. And thou shalt rejoice, thou and thy house. ‘Without blessing’, for it is written, To cause a blessing to rest on thy house. ‘Without goodness’, for it is written, It is not good that the man should be alone.

In the West it was stated, Without Torah and without a [protecting] wall. ‘Without Torah’, for it is written. Is it that I have no help in me, and that sound wisdom is driven quite from me. ‘Without a [protecting] wall’, for it is written, A woman shall encompass a man.

Raba b. ‘Ulla said, Without peace, for it is written, And thou shalt visit thy habitation and shalt miss nothing.

R. Joshua b. Levi said: Whosoever knows his wife to be a God-fearing woman and does not duly visit her is called a sinner; for it is said, And thou shalt know that thy tent is in peace etc. Is this deduced from...
And thy desire shall be to thy husband teaches that a woman yearns for her husband when he sets out on a journey! — R. Joseph replied: This was required only in the case where her menstruation period was near. And how near? Rabbah replied: Twelve hours. And this applies only when the journey is for a secular purpose, but when for a religious purpose it does not apply, since then people are in a state of anxiety. Our Rabbis taught: Concerning a man who loves his wife as himself, who honours her more than himself, who guides his sons and daughters in the right path, and arranges for them to be married near the period of their puberty, Scripture says, And thou shalt know that thy tent is in peace. Concerning him who loves his neighbours, who befriends his relatives, marries his sister's daughter, and lends a sela’ to a poor man in the hour of his need, Scripture says, Then shalt thou call, and the Lord will answer; thou shalt cry and He will say: ‘Here I am’.²

(Mnemonic: Woman and land help this two shoots, tradesmen inferior.)³

R. Eleazar said: Any man who has no wife is no proper man; for it is said, Male and female created He them and called their name Adam.⁴

R. Eleazar further stated: Any man who owns no land is not a proper man; for it is said, The heavens are the heavens of the Lord; but the earth hath he given to the children of men.⁵

R. Eleazar further stated: What is the meaning of the Scriptural text, I will make him a help meet for him?⁶ If he was worthy she is a help to him;⁷ if he was not worthy she is against him.⁸ Others say: R. Eleazar pointed out a contradiction: It is written kenegedo⁹ but we read kenegedo!¹⁰ — If he was worthy she is meet for him;¹⁰ if he was not worthy she chastises him.⁹

R. Jose met Elijah and asked him: It is written, I will make him a help;¹¹ how does a woman help a man? The other replied: If a man brings wheat, does he chew the wheat? If flax, does he put on the flax?¹² Does she not, then, bring light to his eyes and put him on his feet!

R. Eleazar further stated: What is meant by the Scriptural text, This is now bone of my bones, and flesh of my flesh?¹³ This teaches that Adam had intercourse with every beast and animal but found no satisfaction until he cohabited with Eve.

R. Eleazar further stated: What is meant by the text, And in thee shall the families of the earth be blessed?¹⁴ The Holy One, blessed be He, said to Abraham, ‘I have two goodly shoots to engraft on you: Ruth the Moabitess and Naamah the Ammonitess’.¹⁵ All the families of the earth,¹⁴ even the other families who live on the earth are blessed only for Israel's sake. All the nations of the earth,¹⁷ even the ships that go from Gaul to Spain are blessed only for Israel's sake.

R. Eleazar further stated: There will be a time when all craftsmen will take up agriculture;¹⁸ for it is said, And all that handle the oar, the mariners, and all the pilots of the sea, shall come down from their ships; they shall stand upon the land.

R. Eleazar further stated: No occupation is inferior to that of agricultural labour; for it is said, And they shall come down.

R. Eleazar once saw a plot of land that was ploughed across its width. ‘Wert thou to be ploughed along thy length also’, he remarked, ‘engaging in business would still be more profitable’. Rab once entered among growing ears of corn. Seeing that they were swaying he called out to them, ‘Swing as you will, engaging in business brings more profit than you can do’.

Raba said: A hundred zuz in business means meat and wine every day; a hundred zuz in land, only salt and vegetables. Furthermore it causes him to sleep on the ground and embroils him in strife.

R. Papa said, ‘Sow but do not buy, even if the cost is the same; there is a blessing in the former. Sell out to avoid disgrace; but only mattresses, [not] however, a cloak, [since one] might not always again obtain [a suitable one]. Stop up and you will need no repair; repair and you will not need to rebuild; for whosoever engages in building grows poor. Be quick in buying land; be deliberate in taking a wife. Come down a step in choosing your wife; go up a step in selecting your shoshbin.

R. Eleazar b. Abina said: Punishment comes into the world only on Israel's account; for it is said, I have cut off nations, their corners are desolate; I have made their streets waste, and this is followed by the text, ‘I said: Surely thou wilt fear Me, thou wilt receive correction’.

Rab was once taking leave of R. Hiyya. The latter said to him, ‘May the All Merciful deliver you from that which is worse than death’. ‘But is there anything that is worse than death?’ When he went out he considered the matter and found: And I find more bitter than death the woman etc.

Rab was constantly tormented by his wife. If he told her, ‘Prepare me lentils’, she would prepare him small peas; [and if he asked for] small peas, she prepared him lentils. When his son Hiyya grew up he gave her [his father's instruction] in the reverse order. ‘Your mother’, Rab once remarked to him, ‘has improved!’ ‘It was I’, the other replied, ‘who reversed [your orders] to her’. ‘This is what people say’, the first said to him, ‘Thine own offspring teaches thee reason’; you, however, must not continue to do so’ for it is said, They have taught their tongue to speak lies, they weary themselves etc.

R. Hiyya was constantly tormented by his wife. He, nevertheless, whenever he obtained anything suitable wrapped it up in his scarf and brought it to her. Said Rab to him, ‘But, surely, she is tormenting the Master!’ — ‘It is sufficient for us’, the other replied, ‘that they rear up our children and deliver us from sin’.

Rab Judah was reading with his son R. Isaac the Scriptural text, And I find more bitter than death the woman. When the latter asked him, ‘Who, for instance?’ — ‘For instance, your mother’. But, surely, Rab Judah taught his son R. Isaac, ‘A man finds happiness only with his first wife; for it is said, Let thy fountain be blessed and have joy of the wife of thy youth’, and when the latter asked him, ‘Who for instance?’ [he answered:] ‘For instance, your mother’! — She was indeed irascible but could be easily appeased with a kindly word.

How is one to understand the term a ‘bad wife’? Abaye said: One who prepares for him a tray and has her tongue also ready for him. Raba said: One who prepares for him the tray and turns her back upon him.

R. Hama b. Hanina stated: As soon as a man takes a wife his sins are buried, for it is said: Whoso findeth a wife findeth a great good and obtaineth favour of the Lord.

In the West, they used to ask a man who married, ‘findeth or find?’ Findeth, because it is written, Whoso findeth a wife, findeth a great good; Find, because it is written, And I find more bitter than death the woman.

Raba said: [If one has] a bad wife it is a meritorious act to divorce her, for it is said, Cast out the scoffer, and contention will go out; yea, strife and shame will cease.

Raba further stated: A bad wife, the amount of whose kethubah is large, [should be given] a rival at her side; as people say, ‘By her partner rather than by a thorn’.

Raba further stated: A bad wife is as troublesome as a very rainy day; for it is said, A continual dropping in a very rainy day and a contentious woman are alike.

Raba further stated: Come and see how precious is a good wife and how baneful is a bad wife. ‘How precious is a good wife’, for it is written: Whoso findeth a wife findeth a great good. Now, if Scripture speaks of the woman herself, then how precious is a good wife whom Scripture praises. If Scripture speaks of the Torah, then how precious is a good wife with whom the Torah is compared. ‘How baneful is a bad wife’, for it is written, And I find more bitter than death the woman. Now, if Scripture speaks of herself, then how baneful is a bad wife whom Scripture censures. If Scripture speaks of Gehenna, then how baneful is a bad wife with whom Gehenna is compared.

Behold I will bring evil upon them, which they shall not be able to escape. R. Nahman said in the name of Rabbah b. Abbuha: This refers to a bad wife, the amount of whose kethubah is large.

The Lord has delivered me into their hands against whom I am not able to stand. R. Hisda said in the name of Mar ‘Ukba b. Hiyya: This refers to a bad wife the amount of whose kethubah is large. In the West it was taught: This refers to one whose maintenance depends on his money.

Thy sons and thy daughter's shall be given unto another people. R. Hanan b. Raba stated in the name of Rab: This refers to one's father's wife.

I will provoke them with a vile nation. R. Hanan b. Raba stated in the name of Rab: This refers to a bad wife the amount of whose kethubah is large.

R. Eliezer stated: This refers to the Sadducees; for so it is said, The fool has said in his heart: ‘There is no God’ etc. In a Baraitha it was taught: This refers to the people of Barbaria and the people of Mauretania who go naked in the streets; for there is nothing more objectionable and abominable to the Omnipresent than the man who goes naked in the streets. R. Johanan said: This refers to the Parsees.
When R. Johanan was informed that the Parsees had come to Babylon, he reeled and fell.

They issued three decrees as a punishment for three [transgressions]: They decreed against ritually prepared meat, because the priestly gifts were neglected. They decreed against the use of baths, because ritual bathing was not observed. They exhumed the dead, because rejoicings were held on the days of their festivals; as it is said, ‘Then shall the hand of the Lord be against you, and against your fathers,’ and Rabbah b. Samuel said that that referred to the exhumation of the dead, for the Master said, ‘For the sins of the living the dead are exhumed’.

Said Raba to Rabbah b. Mari: It is written, ‘They shall not be gathered, nor be buried, they shall be for dung upon the face of the earth,’ but it is also written, ‘Death shall be chosen rather than life’ — The other replied: ‘Death shall be chosen’ for the wicked, in order that they may not live in this world and thus sin and fall into Gehenna. It is written in the book of Ben Sira: —

A good wife is a precious gift; she will be put in the bosom of the God-fearing man. A bad wife is a plague to her husband. What remedy has he? — Let him give her a letter of divorce and be healed of his plague.

A beautiful wife is a joy to her husband; the number of his days shall be double.

Turn away thy eyes from thy neighbour's charming wife lest thou be caught in her net. Do not turn in to her husband to mingle with him wine and strong drink; for, through the form of a beautiful woman, many were destroyed and a mighty host are all her slain.

Many were the wounds of the spice-peddler, which lead him on to lewdness like a spark that lights the coal.

As a cage is full of birds so are the harlots' houses full of deceit.

Do not worry about to-morrow's trouble, for thou knowest not what the day may beget. To-morrow may come and thou wilt be no more and so thou hast worried about a world which is not thine.

Keep away many from thy house; and do not bring everyone into thy house.

Many be they that seek thy welfare; reveal thy secret only to one of a thousand.

R. Assi stated: The son of David will not come before all the souls in Guf are disposed of; since it is said, ‘For the spirit that enwrappeth itself is from Me, and the souls which I have made.’ It was taught: R. Eliezer stated, He who does not engage in propagation of the race is as though he sheds blood; for it is said, ‘Whoso sheddeth man's blood by man shall his blood be shed,’ and this is immediately followed by the text, And you, be ye fruitful and multiply.

It was taught: R. Eliezer stated, He who does not engage in propagation of the race is as though he sheds blood; for it is said, ‘For in the image of God made he man,’ and this is immediately followed by, ‘And you, be ye fruitful and multiply.’ Ben Azzai said: As though he has diminished the Divine Image; since it is said, ‘For in the image of God made he man,’ and this is immediately followed by, ‘And you, be ye fruitful and multiply.’

They said to Ben Azzai: Some preach well and act well, others act well but do not preach well; you, however, preach well but do not act well! Ben Azzai replied: But what shall I do, seeing that my soul is in love with the Torah; the world can be carried on by others.
Another [Baraita] taught: R. Eliezer said, Anyone who does not engage in the propagation of the race is as though he sheds blood; For it is said, Whoso sheddeth mans's blood, and close upon it follows, And you, be ye fruitful etc. R. Eleazar b. Azariah said: As though he diminished the Divine Image. Ben 'Azzai said etc. They said to Ben 'Azzai: Some preach well etc.

Our Rabbis taught: And when it rested, he said: ‘Return O Lord unto the ten thousands and thousands of Israel’,

Teaches that the Divine Presence does not rest on less than two thousand and two myriads of Israelites. Should the number of Israelites happen to be two thousand and two myriads less one, and any particular person has not engaged in the propagation of the race, does he not thereby cause the Divine Presence to depart From Israel! Abba Hanan said in the name of R. Eliezer: He deserves the penalty of death; for it is said, And they had no children, but if they had children they would not have died. Others say: He causes the Divine Presence to depart from Israel; for it is said, To be a God unto thee and to thy seed after thee;³ where there exists ‘seed after thee’ the Divine Presence dwells [among them]; but where no ‘seed after thee’ exists, among whom should it dwell! Among the trees⁴ or among the stones? MISHNAH. IF A MAN TOOK A WIFE AND LIVED WITH HER FOR TEN YEARS AND SHE BORE NO CHILD, HE MAY NOT ABSTAIN [ANY LONGER FROM THE DUTY OF PROPAGATION].⁵ IF HE DIVORCED HER SHE IS PERMITTED TO MARRY ANOTHER, AND THE SECOND HUSBAND MAY ALSO LIVE WITH HER [NO MORE THAN] TEN YEARS.⁶ IF SHE MISCARRIED [THE PERIOD OF TEN YEARS] IS RECKONED FROM THE TIME OF HER MISCARRIAGE.

GEMARA. Our Rabbis taught: If a man took a wife and lived with her for ten years and she bore no child, he shall divorce her and give her her kethubah,⁷ since it is possible that it was he who was unworthy to have children from her.⁸ Although there is no definite proof for this statement⁹ there is nevertheless a [Scriptural] allusion to it: After Abram had dwelt ten years in the land of Canaan.¹⁰ This¹¹ teaches you that the years of his stay outside the Land¹² were not included in the number.¹³ Hence, if the man or the woman was ill, or if both were in prison, [these years] are not included in the number.¹⁴

Said Raba to R. Nahman: Let deduction be made from Isaac, concerning whom it is written, And Isaac was forty years old when he took Rebecca etc.¹⁵ and it is also written, And Isaac was threescore years old when she bore them!¹⁶ — The other replied: Isaac was barren.¹⁷ If so,¹⁸ Abraham also was barren!¹⁹ — That text²⁰ is required For a deduction in accordance with the statement of R. R. Isaac stated: Our father Isaac was barren; for it is said, And Isaac entreated the Lord opposite²² his wife.²³ It does not say ‘for his wife’ but opposite. This teaches that both were barren.²⁴ If so, And the Lord let Himself be entreated of him²³ should have read, And the Lord let Himself be entreated of them!²⁵ — Because the prayer of a righteous man the son of a righteous man is not like the prayer of a righteous man the son of a wicked man.²⁶

R. Isaac stated: Why were our ancestors barren? — Because the Holy One, blessed be He, longs to hear the prayer of the righteous.

R. Isaac further stated: Why is the prayer of the righteous compared to a pitchfork?²⁷ As a pitchfork turns the sheaves of grain from one position to another, so does the prayer of the righteous turn the dispensations of the Holy One, blessed be He, from the attribute of anger to the attribute of mercy.

whence you were hewn1 and to the hole of the pit2 whence you were digged,3 and this is followed by the text, Look unto Abraham your father, and unto Sarah that bore you.4

R. Nahman stated in the name of Rabbah b. Abbuha: Our mother Sarah was incapable of procreation; for it is said, And Sarai was barren; she had no child,5 she had not even a womb.6

Rab Judah son of R. Samuel b. Shilath stated in the name of Rab: That7 was taught only in respect of the early generations who lived many years. In respect of the later generations, however, whose years of life are few, only two years and a half, corresponding to three periods of pregnancy8 [are allowed].9

Rabbah stated in the name of R. Nahman: Three years [must elapse]9 corresponding to three remembrances;10 For a Master said: Sarah, Rachel and Hannah11 were remembered on New Year's Day.12

Rabbah ruled: These general principles13 are to be disregarded.14 For consider: Who compiled our Mishnah? Rabbi, of course; but the years of life were already reduced in the days of David. For it is written, The days of our years are threescore years and ten.15

With regard to the assumption that ‘it is possible that it was he who was unworthy to have children from her’,16 is it not possible that it was she who was unworthy?17 — Since she is not commanded to fulfil the duty of propagation she is not so punished.18 But surely it is not so!19 For the Rabbis once said to R. Abba b. Zabda, ‘Take a wife and beget children’, and he answered them, ‘Had I been worthy I would have had them from my first wife!’ — There he was merely evading the Rabbis; for, in fact, R. Abba b. Zabda became impotent through the long discourses of R. Huna.20

R. Giddal became impotent through the discourses of R. Huna;20 R. Helbo became impotent through the discourses of R. Huna, and R. Shesheth also became impotent through the discourses of R. Huna.

R. Aha b. Jacob was once attacked by dysuria, and when he was supported on the college cedar tree a discharge issued like a green palm shoot.

R. Aha b. Jacob stated: We were a group of sixty scholars, and all became impotent through the long discourses of R. Huna, with the exception of myself who followed the principle, Wisdom preserveth the life of him that hath it.

IF HE DIVORCED HER SHE IS PERMITTED etc. Only a second husband but not a third, whose view, then, is represented by our Mishnah? — It is that of Rabbi. For it was taught: If she circumcised her first child and he died, and a second one who also died, she must not circumcise her third child; so Rabbi. R. Simeon b. Gamaliel, however, said: She circumcises the third, but must not circumcise the fourth child. But, surely, the reverse was taught, now which of these is the latter? — Come and hear what R. Hiyya b. Abba stated in the name of R. Johanan: It once happened with four sisters at Sephoris that when the first had circumcised her child he died; when the second [circumcised her child] he also died, and when the third [circumcised her child] he also died. The fourth came before R. Simeon b. Gamaliel who told her, ‘You must not circumcise [the child]’. But is it not possible that if the third sister had come he would also have told her the same? — If so, what could have been the purpose of the evidence of R. Hiyya b. Abba? [No]. It is possible that he meant to teach us the following: That sisters also establish a presumption!

Raba said: Now that it has been stated that sisters also establish a presumption, a man should not take a wife either from a family of epileptics, or from a family of lepers. This applies, however, only when the fact had been established by the occurrence of three cases.

What is the decision? — When R. Isaac b. Joseph came he related: Such a case was once submitted to R. Johanan in the Synagogue of Ma’on on the Day of Atonement which fell on a Sabbath. A woman, it happened, had circumcised her child who died; her second [sister circumcised her child] and he also died, and her third sister appeared before him. He said to her, ‘Go and circumcise him’. Said Abaye to him: See, you have permitted a forbidden and a dangerous act.

Abaye, however, relying upon this statement married Homa the daughter of Isi son of R. Isaac the son of Rab Judah, although Rehaba of Pumbeditha had married her and died, and R. Isaac son of Rabbah b. Hana had subsequently married her and also died. And after he had married her, he himself died also.

Said Raba: Would any one else have exposed himself to such danger? Surely he himself had said that Abin was reliable but that Isaac the Red was not a person to be relied upon; that Abin was well acquainted with any change [in the views of R. Johanan] but Isaac the Red was not acquainted with any such changes! Furthermore, it might be said that their dispute extended only to the case of circumcision; do they, however, differ also in the case of marriage? — Yes; for so it was taught: If a woman was married to one husband who died, and to a second one who also died, she must not be married to a third; so Rabbi. R. Simeon b. Gamaliel said: She may be married to a third, but she may not be married to a fourth.

In the case of circumcision, one can well understand [why the operation is dangerous with some children and not with others] since the members of one family may bleed profusely while those of another family may bleed little; what, however, is the reason in the case of marriage? — R. Mordecai answered R. Ashi: Thus said Abimi from Hagronia in the name of R. Huna, ‘The source is the cause'. But R. Ashi stated: ‘[The woman's] ill luck is the cause’. What practical difference is there between them? — The difference between them is the case where the man only betrothed her and died, or also when he fell off a palm-tree and died.

SAID R. JOSEPH SON OF RABA to Raba: I enquired of R. Joseph whether the halachah is in agreement with Rabbi, and he replied in the affirmative. [I asked] whether the halachah is in agreement with R. Simeon b. Gamaliel, and he again replied in the affirmative. Was he thereby merely ridiculing me?’ — The other replied: No; there are several anonymous statements [in the Mishnah] and he informed you [that in the matter of] marriage and flogging [the anonymous Mishnah] agrees with Rabbi, and that in the matter of menstrual periods and the ox [whose owner has been] fore-warned [the anonymous Mishnah] agrees with R. Simeon b. Gamaliel.

As to marriage, there is the statement just discussed. ‘Flogging’? — As we learned: A man upon whom the penalty of flogging had been repeatedly inflicted is to be placed under confinement and fed on barley, until his stomach bursts.

‘The menstrual periods’? — As we learned: A woman may not

(27) The latter version of a statement is regarded as the more reliable, since the author may have recognized his error and changed his view.
(28) This incident must have occurred in the latter days of R. Simeon b. Gamaliel, since it was witnessed by R. Johanan who already belonged to the first generation of Amoraim. As the ruling in this incident clearly shews, R. Simeon b. Gamaliel held at that time the view attributed to him in the first cited Baraitha which must consequently be regarded as representing the later, and the more reliable version.

(29) And, consequently, the second Baraitha might represent the later version!

(30) That R. Hiyya b. Abba's statement was not intended to testify that a presumption can only be established by the threefold repetition of an act.

regard her menstrual periods as regular\(^1\) unless the recurrence had been regular three times. Nor is she released from the restrictions of an established regular period unless it has varied three\(^2\) times.\(^3\)

‘And the ox [whose owner has been] forewarned’? — As we learned: An ox is not deemed a mu'ad unless [its owner] has been forewarned three times. Our Rabbis taught: A woman who had been married to one husband and had no children and to a second husband and again had no children, may marry a third man only if he has children. If she married one who has had no children she must be divorced without receiving her kethubah.

The question was raised: Where she married a third husband and bore no children, may her first two husbands reclaim [the respective amounts of her kethubah]? Can they plead, ‘It has now been proved that you were the cause’, or can she retort, ‘It is only now that I have deteriorated’? — It stands to reason that she may plead, ‘It is only now that I have deteriorated’.

The question was raised: If she married a fourth husband and gave birth to children, may she claim her kethubah from her third husband? — We advise her: ‘Your silence is better than your speech’; for could tell her, ‘I would not have divorced you in such circumstances’. R. Papa demurred: Even if she keeps silence, should we remain silent? The divorce, surely, is annulled, and her children are bastards! In truth, the fact is, that it is assumed that she has now been restored to health.

If the husband pleads, ‘The fault is hers’ and the wife pleads, ‘The fault is his’, R. Ammi ruled: In private matrimonial affairs the wife is believed. And what is the reason? — She is in a position to know whether emission is forceful, but he is not in a position to know it.

If the husband states that he intends taking another wife to test his potency. R. Ammi ruled: ‘He must in this case also divorce [his present wife] and pay her the amount of her kethubah; for I maintain that whosoever takes in addition to his present wife another one must divorce the former and pay her the amount of her kethubah.’

Raba said: A man may marry wives in addition to his first wife; provided only that he possesses the means to maintain them.

(1) To be deemed levitically clean until that period actually arrives. A woman of irregular periods is regarded as unclean for twenty-four hours prior to the monthly date on which her previous discharge occurred (v. Nid. 2a). Should a woman, the regularity of whose periods had been established omit to examine her body when menstruation is due, and subsequently find a discharge, we assume her retrospectively to have become unclean at the beginning of her period, while a woman whose periods are irregular cannot, of course, be subject to such restriction.

(2) If the change of date occurred no more than twice the restrictions remain in force (v. supra n. 8 last clause).

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 65b

If the husband pleads\(^1\) that his wife had miscarried within the ten years,\(^2\) and she states, ‘I had no miscarriage’, \(^3\) R. Ammi ruled: She is believed in this case also; for if she had really miscarried she would not herself have sought to acquire the reputation of a barren woman.

A woman who miscarried, and then miscarried a second, and a third time, is confirmed as one subject to abortions.\(^4\)

If he\(^5\) said, ‘She miscarried two’\(^6\) and she said, ‘three’?\(^7\) — R. Isaac b. Eleazar stated: Such a case was dealt with at the college, and it was ruled that she was to be believed; for if she had not miscarried\(^8\) she would not herself have sought to acquire the reputation of producing only miscarriages.

MISHNAH. A MAN IS COMMANDED CONCERNING THE DUTY OF PROPAGATION BUT NOT A WOMAN. R. JOHANAN B. BEROKA, HOWEVER, SAID: CONCERNING BOTH OF THEM\(^9\) IT IS SAID, AND GOD BLESSED THEM; AND GOD SAID UNTO THEM: ‘BE FRUITFUL, AND MULTIPLY.’\(^10\) GEMARA. Whence is this deduced? R. Ile'a replied in the name of R. Eleazar son of R. Simeon: Scripture stated, And replenish the earth, and subdue it;\(^11\) it is the nature of a man to subdue but it is not the nature of a woman to subdue. On the contrary! And subdue it\(^12\) implies two!\(^13\) R. Nahman b. Isaac replied: It is written, And thou subdue it.

R. Joseph said: Deduction\(^16\) is made from the following. I am God Almighty, be thou fruitful and multiply,\(^17\) and it is not stated, ‘Be ye fruitful and multiply’.\(^18\)

R. Ile'a further stated in the name of R. Eleazar son of R. Simeon: As one is commanded to say that which will be obeyed,\(^19\) so is one commanded not to say that which will not be obeyed.\(^20\) R. Abba stated: It\(^20\) is a duty; for it is said in Scripture, Reprove not a scorner, lest he hate thee; reprove a wise man and he will love thee.\(^21\)

R. Ile'a further stated in the name of R. Eleazar son of R. Simeon: One may modify a statement in the interests of peace; for it is said in Scripture, Thy father did command etc. so shall ye say unto Joseph: Forgive, I pray thee now, etc.\(^22\) R. Nathan said: It\(^23\) is a commandment; for it is stated in Scripture, And Samuel said: ‘How can I go? If Saul hear it, he will kill me’, etc.\(^24\)

At the School of R. Ishmael it was taught: Great is the cause of peace. Seeing that for its sake even the Holy One, blessed be He, modified a statement; for at first it is written, My lord being old,\(^25\) while afterwards it is written, And I am old.

R. JOHANAN B. BEROKA, HOWEVER, SAID. It was stated: R. Johanan and R. Joshua b. Levi [are at variance]. One stated that the halachah is in agreement with R. Johanan b. Beroka, and the other stated that the halachah is not in agreement with R. Johanan b. Beroka. It may be proved that it was R. Johanan who stated that the halachah is not [in agreement etc.]. For R. Abbahu was once sitting [at the college] and reported in the name of R. Johanan that the halachah [was in agreement etc.], and R. Ammi and R. Assi turned away their faces.\(^27\) Others say: R. Hiyya b. Abba made the report,\(^28\) and R. Ammi and R. Assi turned away their faces. Said R. Papa: According to him who maintains that R. Abbahu made the statement\(^28\) it is easy to understand that it was out of respect for the royal house that they said nothing to him. According to him, however, who maintains that R. Hiyya b. Abba made the statement, they should have told him that R. Johanan did not say so!

Now, what is the decision? — Come and hear what R. Aha b. Hanina stated in the name of R. Abbahu in the name of R. Assi: Such a case once came before R. Johanan at the Synagogue of Caesarea, and he decided that the husband must divorce her and also pay her the amount of her kethubah. Now, if it be suggested that a woman is not subject to the commandment, how could she have any claim to a kethubah? — It is possible that this was a case where she submitted a special plea; as was the case with a certain woman who once came to R. Ammi and asked him to order the payment of her kethubah. When he replied, ‘Go away, the commandment does not apply to you’, she exclaimed, ‘What shall become of a woman like myself in her old age!’ ‘In such a case’, the Master said, ‘we certainly compel [the husband]’.

A woman once came before R. Nahman. When he told her, ‘The commandment does not apply to you’, she replied, ‘Does not a woman like myself require a staff in her hand and a hoe for digging her grave’? ‘In such a case’, the Master said, ‘we certainly compel [the husband]’.

Judah and Hezekiah were twins. The features of the one were developed at the end of nine months, and those of the other were developed at the beginning of the seventh month. Judith, the wife of R. Hiyya, having suffered in consequence agonizing pains of childbirth, changed her clothes and appeared before R. Hiyya. ‘Is a woman’, she asked, ‘commanded to propagate the race’? — ‘No’, he replied. And relying on this decision, she drank a sterilizing potion. When her action finally became known, he exclaimed, ‘Would that you bore unto me only one more issue of the womb!’ For a Master stated: Judah and Hezekiah were twin brothers and Pazi and Tawi

(1) When, having lived with his wife for ten years without begetting any issue, he is ordered to divorce her and to pay her the amount of her kethubah. V. supra.
(2) And, consequently, he claims the right to continue to live with her until a period of ten years has passed from the date of the miscarriage (v. our Mishnah).
(3) I.e., she was always sterile.
(4) And, consequently, she must be divorced; but is entitled to her kethubah.
(5) Refusing to pay her kethubah.
(6) And, consequently, her proneness to miscarry is not established.
(7) I.e., that she miscarried three times and has thus established a reputation for miscarriage.
(8) Three times, as she pleaded.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 66a

But does not the commandment apply to women? Surely, R. Aha b. R. Kattina related in the name of R. Isaac: It once happened in the case of a woman who was half slave and half free, that her master was compelled to emancipate her! R. Nahman b. Isaac replied: People were taking liberties with her.

CHAPTER VII

MISHNAH. IF A WIDOW [WHO MARRIED] A HIGH PRIEST, OR IF A DIVORCED WOMAN OR A HALUZAH [WHO MARRIED] A COMMON PRIEST BROUGHT IN TO HER HUSBAND MELOG SLAVES AND ZON BARZEL SLAVES. THE MELOG SLAVES MAY NOT EAT TERUMAH BUT THE ZON BARZEL SLAVES MAY EAT OF IT.

THE FOLLOWING ARE MELOG SLAVES: THOSE WHO, IF THEY DIE, ARE THE WIFE'S LOSS AND, IF THEIR VALUE INCREASES, ARE HER PROFIT. THOUGH IT IS THE HUSBAND'S DUTY TO MAINTAIN THEM, THEY MAY NOT EAT TERUMAH.
